Kennedy and the first lady drove through a drizzle to the noon Mass at the Middleburg Community Center. The President is scheduled to return to Washington Monday.

At the urging of reporters, Father Pereira revealed that he has been working for two weeks to bring about equal treatment of Negroes in the town's eating places.

He said that John Eisenhard, editor of the Fauquier - Democrat, asked his help with an effort to avoid sit-in demonstrations obviously tied to President Kennedy's presence in the area.

The priest said the first test was run by two Negro students from Howard University in Washington about two weeks ago. They were refused service at a lunch counter.

The students then went to William McKay Jackson, the local representative of the National Association For the Advancement of Colored People and asked him to organize a full -scale sit -in.

Jackson decided to first try peaceful diplomacy and asked Father Pereira to act as mediator. The priest then met with the Negro people of the community -about one - third of the population—and, as he put it "listened."

He also contacted Mayor Edwin C. Ramer, officials of the Chamber of Commerce and the owners of the Tally Ho Inn, the Middleburg Pharmacy and Anderson's Sandwich Shop. He said he spent all day Thursday talking to them and "preached them a little sermon."

Father Pereira, whose home is in Newport News, Va., was pastor at a Negro Catholic parish and school in Portsmouth, Va., for seven years. He said he gained an understanding of their problems "by working with them."

In his sermon Sunday he said there is reason to "rejoice today that the first bridge of understanding between the races has been crossed gracefully."

The Miami Herald

MIDDLEBURG, Va. — (UPI) — Sit-in demonstrations scheduled during President Kennedy's weekend visit here were averted by community leaders, through desegregation of three eating places, it was disclosed Sunday.

The President knew nothing of either the racial problem or its quiet solution until he attended church services, where the Rev. Albert F. Pereira publicly praised local officials and businessmen for their efforts.

Town officials said Pereira himself played a key role in persuading owners of the establishments to begin serving Negroes. The racial bars were first lowered Saturday.

President Unknowing Pawn In Quiet Mixing Incident

The Montgomery Advertiser

Montgomery, Ala.

Mon. 4-10-61

MIDDLEBURG, Va. (AP) — President Kennedy learned Sunday through a prayer at Mass of the quiet racial integration of three Middleburg lunch counters. And the President himself figured unknowingly in the event.

Negroes were served for the first time Saturday at two of the counters. Had they been refused service, town authorities said, they had planned sit-in demonstrations timed to coincide with Kennedy's presence in town, and reportedly were ready to picket at the church services the President attended.

It was the President's pastor, the Rev. Albert F. Pereira, who served as arbitrator between Negro spokesmen and proprietors of a sandwich shop and two drug stores with lunch counters. Father Pereira mentioned the settlement in his prayer Sunday and in the church bulletin.

While the President and Mrs. Kennedy listened with bowed heads, the priest read a carefully worded prayer that said: "Eastertide is a time for joy, joy in our unity by baptism in Christ. Hence it is so appropriate that we rejoice today that the first bridge of understanding between the races has been crossed gracefully."

Father Pereira told reporters Kennedy knew nothing of the three weeks of maneuvering and negotiating that preceded the agreement to integrate the lunch counters or of the outcome of the arbitration.

Some Middleburg residents say the town was chosen by Washington Negroes for an integration attempt because the President has a retreat just outside. They feel the integrationists reasoned that Middleburg merchants would be reluctant to embarrass the chief executive by provoking sit-in demonstrations or picketing at the Communtiy Center which is used for Catholic services.

4 New Arrests in Lynchburg

The Washington Post

LYNCHBURG, Va., Feb. 21 (AP)—Four Negro men, including two ministers, were arrested and charged with trespass after a sit-in demonstration at the segregated lunch counter at Patterson's Drug Store here Tuesday.

Among the four was the Rev. Virgil Wood, 29, an integration leader and pastor of the Diamond Hill Baptist Church.

Othres were listed at the police lockup as Samuel Trimar, 26; Bates Ford, 40, and the eRv. William Roberts, 23.

It was another in a series of sit-in demonstrations and picketing at the store whose management has refused to desegregate the lunch counter.

One such demonstration late last year brought the arrest of six students attending colleges here and their conviction on trespass charges. The students—four white and two Negroes—now are serving 30-day terms in the city jail.

Seven Negroes arrested a week ago on similar charges will be given hearings Wednesday in Municipal Court here.

When the four men appeared at Patterson's Tuesday and sought to be served, William Patterson, a company official, told the group he was within his rights in serving whomever he wished.

The group refused to leave, and aPtterson called police who explained the State's trespass law. The men still refused to leave and were arrested. They were taken to police lockup in a patrol wagon.

The new arrests came in the wake of new rules of order for Municipal Court by Judge Joseph P. McCarron, which call for segregation of spectators and warn against demonstrations of any kind.

8 more arrested in Lynchburg sitdown

The Afro-American Baltimore Md.

LYNCHBURG, Va.—Eight new demonstrators were arrested Monday following 2 sit - ins at the lunch counter of Pattersons Drug Store.

Monday's arrests of seven students and a young married woman, the mother of two children, boosted the number arrested in Lynchburg sit - ins to 14.

Six students, four white and two colored, are now serving the second week of 30 - day jail sentences meted out to them on charges of trespassing in the same drug store.

Two of the eight arrested Monday, Miss Mandoline Thompson, 16, of Amherst, Va., and Mrs. Randolph Gordon, 28, a Lynchburg housewife and mother, were released later in the day on $1,000 bond each.

THE OTHER six, who were placed in a different jail from the one where the first group of sit-inners are serving their sentences are:

William Roberts, 21, Elija Regulus, 19; Ralph Reavis, 21; James Tucker, 23; Jon Crawford, 25, and Lankford Hankins, 25, all students at Virginia Theological Seminary and College.

While the participants in the two demonstrations at Patterson's Drug Store were being arrested Monday, another group of three colored persons was served at a People's Drug Store a block away.

The manager of the People's store, John T. Dalton, called the district office of the chain in Roanoke and was told to serve the group. One of them, the Rev. Virgil T. Wood, president of the Lynchburg Improvement Association, carried a Bible.

THE FIRST group of six which entered Patterson's was ignored for about a half hour by the four white waitresses and the counterman. Then William Patterson, manager of the store, asked each individually to leave.

They refused, and Patterson called two colored members of the Lynchburg Biracial Committee who told Patterson they could do nothing unless given assurances that the store would change its policy in the future.

Seven policemen entered the store about an hour after the sit - in began, and Capt. W. S. Gillan told the group to leave — then arrested them when they refused.

Negro Girl Sit-In Gets 30 Days; Sentenced as Adult in Lynchburg

The Washington Post p. 3
Washington D.C.

LYNCHBURG, Va., Feb. 23 A 16-year-old Negro girl received a 30-day jail sentence here today for protesting discrimination at Patterson's drug store lunch counter.

Juvenile Court Judge O. Raymond Cundiff, in setting the sentence, said he had no alternative but to treat her as an adult since she had not shown repentance.

She "cannot be tried and rehabilitated as a juvenile," he declared.

Attorney S. W. Tucker, of Emporia, Va., appealed the case. The girl, Mandeline Thompson, was released on $1000 bond for the March term of Corporation Court.

She was charged with violating Virginia's trespass laws in the Feb. 13 "sit-in" at the drug store. Seven adults who also demanded service at the lunch counter the same day received 60-day sentences yesterday in Municipal Court. One has appealed.

Earlier six college students, four white and two Negro, were given 30-day sentences for a similar protest.

During today's informal hearing in the Juvenile Court Judge's chambers, Tucker questioned the right of the state to use its police powers to enforce segregation.

Tucker also questioned William Patterson, manager of the store, on company policy in serving customers.

Patterson said the store has followed a custom of serving white patrons seated at the lunch counter and Negroes at a stand-up section where they can take orders out.

The store manager said that in the past he has asked white persons also to leave his store. When Tucker asked him if that was not because they had been disorderely, Patterson refused to answer.

The Negro attorney moved that the case be dismissed on the grounds that Miss Thompson was denied service solely on the grounds of her race.

In support of his motion, Tucker said Patterson can deny service to anyone he wants to, but when the state uses its police power to support a policy of segregation it is doing indirectly what it cannot do directly.

This, he said, violates the Constitution.

Tucker further argued that a case involving a juvenile is stronger than one involving an adult. Patterson's business, he said, is open to the public.

"You cannot explain to a child," he said, "that he is not one of the public merely because he is black."

In denying the motion to dismiss the case, Judge Cundiff declared that under common law a person can keep anyone out of his business establishment or home "for any reason."

Trespass laws are on the books, he said, and "no court has declared them unconstitutional as of this date."

Judge Cundiff said Juvenile Court is interested in rehabilitating juveniles who are sorry for breaking the law and give assurances there will be no repetition. No representation has been made, he said, that Miss Thompson was sorry and will not violate the law in the future.

The Judge warned that other juveniles who take part in lunch counter demonstrations will be "treated the same or harsher as the case demands."

"I am not going to have juveniles going out and doing something adults cannot do," he said.

Miss Thompson, a sophomore at Central High School, Amherst, Va., lives in Madison Heights, a Lynchburg suburb. Her father, Henry, is a contractor.

Last year she participated in picketing of Lynchburg stores by Negroes and was expelled briefly from Campbell County High School for circulating a petition urging students to boycott a store that discrimated against Negroes.

7 Negroes Get 60-Day Jail Terms After Standing Mute at Sit-In Trial

LYNCHBURG, Va. Feb. 22 Seven Negroes were given 60-day sentences for a lunch counter sit-in demonstration today after they refused to take part in a count hearing because the courtroom was segregated.

Their attorney, Leonard W. Holt of Norfalk, called the proceedings in Municipal Court "unlawful and unconstitutional."

Six of the seven are ministerial students at Virginia Theological Seminary and College. They chose not to appeal the sentences and were taken off to jail immediately. They wore dark suits and ministerial collars and carried Bibles.

The seventh, Essie Gordon, 28-year-old mother of two small children, appealed and was released under $1000 bond. Her appeal will come before Corporation Court during the March term.

The seven, along with a 16-year-old girl, were arrested Feb. 13 for protesting discrimination in two separate demonstrations at Patterson's Drug Store on Main st. The girl is scheduled to be given a hearing in Juvenile and Domestic Relations Court Thursday.

The sentences, handed down by Municipal Court Judge Joseph P. McCarron, were twice as severe as the 30-day terms given to four white and two Negro college students for an earlier demonstration at Patterson's store. They are now in jail.

Segregation in the courtroom figured in the trial of those six students. When they came before Judge McCarron last month, spectators ignored the previous practice of segregation. When the students later were brought before the Corporation Court, Judge S. DuVal Martin ordered segregated seating and a white minister was ejected when he indicated that he wished to sit with Negroes.

Judge McCarron issued orders Monday that his court would be segregated for today's hearing. All of the seats in the Negro section were filled and about 50 Negroes stood outside in the corridor.

Four Seminary students and Mrs. Gordon were tried first for participating in one demonstration, and then the other two were tried for taking part in a second demonstration on the same day. All were found guilty of violating Virginia's trespass laws.

So Pickets Picket Pickets

The Afro-American

Editor, Richmond AFRO

LYNCHBURG, Va. — A double line of pickets, one group against and the other for lunch counter desegregation, parades daily in front of Patterson's Drug Store, focusing national attention on the store which figured in 30-day jail terms for six college students, four of whom are white.

INSIDE LYNCHBURG

Baltimore, Md. Sat. 2-25-61

They are supported in the sitdowns and picketing by adult sympathizers of both races, working under direction of the Lynchburg Improvement Association headed by the Rev. Virgil A. Wood, pastor of Diamond Hill Baptist Church.

THE OPPOSING picket line showed up Tuesday afternoon when a mixed group of desegregation campaigners, including white girls from Sweet Briar College were parading in front of the store.

Other agitators gathered and mouthed obscenities and insults to the white girls, but order was maintained as uniformed policemen stood nearby.

By agreement with Police Chief R. O. Brooks, both the pickets and counterpickets are limiting their numbers to three each. This avoids congestion and lessens the chance of a disturbance.

On Feb. 6, the mixed group of students found guilty of trespass charges after a December sit-in at Pattersons, began 30-day jail terms.

Last Tuesday's picketing followed the arrest on Monday morning of six theological students, a 16-year-old girl and a 28-year-old housewife, all colored, who participated in the second sit-in at the store.

Pittsburgh Courier Feb.

DURING THIS TIME, W. E. Gordon and M. W. Thornhill Jr., two members of the city's Bi-Racial Commission, were called to see if they could persuade the demonstrators to leave.

The men agreed to go to the store, but only to talk with W. S. Patterson the vice - president, to see if desegregation could be effected.

The discussion with him proved fruitless. So the demonstrators were arrested on warrants when they refused to leave after having been asked to do so by Mr. Patterson.

Special police attention was focused on the teen-ager Mandeline E. Thompson, she being questioned repeatedly as to whether adults influenced her to participate in the demonstration.

Repeatedly she told the police and the press that she acted of her own volition and that "God is my only influence."

THE GROUP was arrested about 11 a.m., but Mandeline refused to accept the bail offered by her parents until seven hours later.

She explained that she remained in custody this long because "we were celebrating Lincoln's birthday, and we (the demonstrators) had to show our sympathy for the other students who are in jail."

She was referring to the four white and two colored students who began serving 30-day jail terms on Feb. 6 after pleading guilty to trespass charges growing out of their sit-in at the Patterson store last December.

Incarcerated at the City Jail, 9th and Clay Sts. these students are permitted Saturday afternoon visits from family and ministers only.

They are allowed to mail two letters a week, but they have been swamped with thousands of letters sent by well-wishers and sympathizers from across the country.

OF THE EIGHT persons taken in the Feb. 13 sit-in, Mandeline and Mrs. Randolph Gordon were released on $1000 bail that evening.

Their six companions, the theological students, voluntarily remained in jail until the next afternoon.

They are Jon E. Crawford, 25, of Chicago; Elijah G. Regulus, 19, of Waycross, Ga.; William G. Roberts, 21, of Alquippa, Pa.; James A. Tucker, 23, of Clifton Forge, Va.;

Ralph Reavis, 21, of Lawrenceville, Va.; pastor of Promised Land Baptist Church in Bedford, Va.; and Lanksford E. Hankins, 25, of Nathalie, Va., associate of New Mount Baptist Church in Arrington, Va.

MUNICIPAL COURT hearings for them and for Mrs. Gordon are set for Feb. 22. A Juvenile and Domestic Relations Court hearing for Miss Thompson is scheduled on or about Feb. 23.

The Lynchburg Improvement Association became active in supporting the student protest movement about a year ago.

Funds for the effort may be sent to the Rev. L. L. Moseley, secretary - treasurer of the association, at 907 Jackson St. He is pastor of Jackson son Street Methodist Church.

Asked if he could foresee early settlement of the drug-store issue, Mr. Patterson declined to discuss the situation with the AFRO. He said simply "I have no statement to make."

THE DEDICATION of the sit-down demonstrators was indicated by remarks of the Virginia Seminary students following their release on bail Tuesday.

One said "I would be back at that lunch counter today, if I weren't already out on bail."

And another said, "After I've served this jail term, Mr. Patterson is certainly going to see me again, if he hasn't changed his policy by then."

Four other target stores opened their dining facilities to all after successful negotiations with the eight-man Bi-Racial Commission appointed by the City Council.

These include Guggenheimer's Department Store where the tea room is now open to all; Peters News Stand, Kresge and Woolworth Variety Stores.

And last week, the Rev. Mr. Wood and friends were served without question at People's Service Drug Store which is only a block away from the Main St. location of the Patterson Drug Store.

W. E. Gordon, operator of a dry cleaning establishment; M. W. Thornhill Jr., mortician and president of the Lynchburg Voters League;

Dr. H. P. Weeden, a dentist and husband of Mrs. Polly Weeden, national president of the Links; and Dr. M. C. Allen, president of Virginia Theological Seminary and College.

WITH THE SUPPORT of the NAACP, headed by W. T. Johnson, the student segregation protests and picketing were inaugurated early last year.

Lynchburg has a total population of 57,000 of whom approximately 12,000 are colored. Colored qualified voters number about 1,700.

And they made their voting strength felt in the General election to fill three City Council seats last spring.

VOTING LEAGUE president Mr. Thornhill gives a great deal of credit for assistance in setting up the powerful organization to Dr. T. L. Spraggins and NAACP Vote Registration Director John M. Brooks, both of Richmond.

In any case, colored voters were the deciding factor when Mayor William C. Vaughan, seeking re-election to the Council, won the Primary Election nomination by a slim margin.

Considering a three - man slate for support in the General Election, the Voters League had decided on Mayor Vaughan, vice-mayor Abe Cohen and Charles L. Collins.

WHEN THE MAYOR failed to court their endorsement for the General Election, the Voters League dropped his name from its slate.

That resulted in League's candidate Cohen winning the top spot over the mayor who placed second in the City Council election. The other League-supported candidate, Mr. Collins, placed third.

Recognizing the power and influence of the Voters' League, the City Council approved two of its nominees, Messrs. Thornhill and Gordon for service on the Bi - Racial Commission.

Other members were selected at-large. The Commission held its first meeting last October, and meets regularly each month, call sessions being held when necessary.

Public opinion is that the Patterson Store management is smarting under the sit-ins and picketing ordeal, and may soon yield to the desegregation trend.

Lynchburg Also Receives a Penalty

Washington D.C.

By Elsie Carper

A YEAR AGO the Virginia General Assembly with extraordinary haste cleared legislation providing stiff penalties for trespassing or for encouraging or conspiring to trespass on private property. The bills were presented one day by Gov. J. Lindsay Almond Jr. as urgent legislation and signed into law the next.

Miss Carper

The Richmond Times Dispatch, commenting on the speed in which the bills were considered by the Senate, said: "From the time the bills were introduced until the time they were passed, 13 minutes elapsed. Ben Lacy, Senate clerk, said he'd never known any bills to get faster action."

The reason for the haste was equally clear. The enemy was at the gates. A few blocks from the State Capitol on Broad st., Negroes and some whites were picketing Thalhimers Department Store. Police with dogs were patroling the sidewalk in front of the store.

LAST AUGUST, Thalhimers, Miller & Rhoads and five chain variety and drug stores opened their counters and coffee shops. Even the segregationist Richmond News Leader editorially praised the action. Opening of the counters was the first step. Thalhimers and Miller & Rhoads began serving Negroes last month in tea rooms and dining rooms, completing desegregation of all facilities.

Both stores issued statements that the new policy was in line with similar action taken in many other Southern cities and was done in the best interests of the community.

The experience of the two Richmond stores has been repeated in city after city where there have been sit-in demonstrations, picketing and boycotts. Inevitably the counters are opened up.

Now Lynchburg is going through the same ordeal that Richmond experienced a year ago. The city has been unable to profit by the example of Richmond and unable to adapt to a new era. Within recent weeks eating facilities have been opened up in Norfolk and Roanoke. Lynchburg has become known as a city where armed police enforced segregated seating in the courtroom, where a white minister was manhandled by police when he protested and where college students of exceptional ability and character were sentenced to jail as trespassers.

Lynchburg made use of the trespass laws in sentencing the four white and two Negro students to 30-day terms for staging a protest at Patterson's drug store lunch counter. The penalty under the new laws could have been up to a year in jail and a thousand dollar fine, although trespass is a misdemeanor.

Corporation Court Judge S. DuVal Martin affirmed the Municipal Court sentence and sent the students off to jail. Leonard W. Holt, the Negro attorney who represented the students, did not seek a lighter sentence. The students, he said, were willing to accept the penalty of violating the law but felt that the law was unjust and wrong since it was designed to maintain segregation.

Some business leaders and church Judge Martin could have suspended the sentence and put the students on probation. men who have been working to improve race relations in the city were unsuccessful in efforts to have the students released. Judge Martin, who is 75 and retiring from the court this session after 19 years on the bench, remained inflexible.

Last week, the protest in Lynchburg widened. Eight Negroes were arrested when they sought service at Patterson's lunch counter. Students from Sweet Briar joined a picket line outside the store.

If the experience of other cities, including that of Richmond, the old Capital of the Confederacy, helds true in Lynchburg, desegregation at lunch counters will give way before economic and social pressures. Lynchburg, though, will bear for a long time the onus of having sent to jail students protesting social injustice.

Group Outside Jail Sings, Prays For Six Student 'Trespassers'

The Washington Post

By ELSIE CARPER
Staff Reporter

LYNCHBURG, Va., Feb. 12—Lynchburg is located in the rolling hills near the Blue Ridge Mountains. The morning mist had not yet lifted today when a small group began to gather outside the city jail at 8 o'clock.

Softly the singing began—"Must Jesus Bear the Cross Alone?"

Washington, D.C.

Singly and in groups of two and three others arrived until there were 60 Negroes and 15 white persons standing on the sidewalk.

2-13-61

Across the street an unmarked tan car was parked, its motor running. Two uniformed policemen were inside. Another police car patrolled the area.

Inside the jail lights that had been burning went out. Behind the windows in the yellow cement building four white and two Negro college students had been up for three hours.

Seventh Day in Jail

It was the seventh day in jail for the students arrested for protesting racial discrimination at a drug store lunch counter. Convicted of violating trespass laws the students were sentenced to 30 days.

In the group outside the jail were the parents of George Terrill Brumback Jr. of 127 N. Edgewood st., Arlington.

"Blessed are ye when men revile you and presecute you and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely for My sake . . . let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in Heaven."

Another Negro minister prayed: "Forgive the men who sit on the bench, forgive those who believe they are performing their duty and arrest us . . ."

He spoke of the stoning of Stephen, the martyrdom of Peter and of the German theologian Detrich Bonhoeffer.

"We pray that we may catch the spirit of all who choose to be free behind bars than to be enslaved on the outside."

Spirituals Sung

Then the group sang the Negro spiritual "I'll Overcome Someday." And as a bell tolled at a nearby church, the group sang "God Be With You When We Meet Again." Then the gathering broke up and walked away.

A few hours later the people of Lynchburg gathered for Sunday services. Although it was Race Relations Sunday, so designated by the National Council of Churches, and the jailing of the students has been a major topic of conversation, most white ministers chose other sermon topics.

The Rev. Richard Faris, associate minister of Centenary Methodist Church, speaking on the subject, said that the fields of sports and entertainment are putting churches to shame in promoting racial understanding.

Mr. and Mrs. Brumback have been in Lynchburg since Friday night to visit their son and seek ways of having the students released from jail.

More Arrested For Sit-In In Virginia

Jackson Advocate
Jackson, Miss.
2-18-61

Lynchburg, Va.—Three Negroes were served at a drug store lunch counter Monday, but six other Negroes, including a housewife and a high school girl, were jailed for seeking similar service at another drug store.

The Rev. Virgil A. Wood and two other Negroes were allowed to eat at People's Drug Store after the manager received permission to seat them from a superior in Roanoke, Va. The drug store became the fifth business establishment here to desegregate its lunch counter since the sit-in movement began.

An attempt to integrate the lunch counter at Patterson's Drug Store failed Monday, however, and six Negroes were arrested on trespass charges. The group included, James Tucker, 23, Clifton Forge, Va., Ralph Reavis, 21, of South Boston, Va., Elijah Regulas, 20, Waycross, Ga., and William Roberts, 21, Aliquippa, Pa., students from Virginia Theological Seminary, Essie Gordon, 28, a housewife and Madoline Thompson, 16, a student at Amherst County High School.

8 More Sit-In Protesters Arrested in Lynchburg

LYNCHBURG, Va., Feb. 13—Eight Negroes, five of them students and one the mother of two young children, were arrested today when they insisted on service at Patterson's Drug Store lunch counter.

The "sit-in" protest came a week after six other students, four whites and two Negro, were sentenced to 30 days in jail for protesting discrimination at the same store.

Meanwhile, efforts by the parents of George Terrill Brumback Jr., one of the white students, to have the six released ended in failure today after the second "sit-in." The Brumbacks returned to their home at 127 N. Edgewood st., Arlington, after visiting their son in the Lynchburg jail.

Their attorney, Arthur B. Davies 3d, president of the Lynchburg Bar Association, told the Brumbacks that because of the second demonstration he could do nothing.

Officials Hold Out Hope

The Brumbacks said they had talked with leading city officials who were cordial and had given them reason to hope that the students could be released. The students are from Randolph-Macon Woman's College, Lynchburg College and Virginia Theological Seminary and College.

The Brumbacks said they found their son in good spirits and reconciled to remaining in jail.

While today's "sit-in" was underway at Patterson's store on Main st., three Negroes were quietly served at People's Drug Store a block away. The manager, John T. Dalton, called the district office in Roanoke and was told to serve them.

Demonstrators Sing

In the lockup, six of today's demonstrators sang hymns, "Let Us Have a Little Talk With Jesus" and "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot." They were held on $1000 bond each.

Those six, well-dressed Negroes, walked into Patterson's store at 9:45 a.m. and took seats at the counter. They sat quietly and studied menus.

Four white waitresses and a white counter man did not serve them but continued to wait on whtie patrons at booths and tables.

After about 25 minutes, William Patterson, manager of the store, asked each of the Negroes individually to leave. They refused.

Before calling the police, he sent for two Negro businessmen, members of the Lynchburg Bi-racial Committee. They told Patterson they could do nothing unless he could give them assurance that store policy would change in the future.

Seven policemen entered the store about an hour after the "sit-in" began. Capt. W. S. Gillan first told them to leave and when they refused arrested them as trespassers.

As the six were ushered into a police wagon, one of the waitresses told a bystander: "We just aren't going to serve them. They can fill up the jails."

One of the students is a 16 year-old high school girl, Mandoline Thompson from nearby Amherst, Va. The other four students, from Virginia Theological Seminary and College, are William Roberts, 21, Elija Regulus, 19, Ralph Reavis, 21, and James Tucker, 23.

Later, two Negroes entered Patterson's and sought service. They were asked to leave and when they refused, they were arrested.

Police identified them as Jon Crawford and Lankford Hankins, both 25. They were reported to be students at Virginia Seminary College.

Also arrested was Mrs. Randolph Gordon 28, a Lynchburg housewife and the mother of two children.

Later, the girl and the woman were released on bond.

Lynchburg Arrests 8 Defying Trespass Law

LYNCHBURG, Va., Feb. 14 (AP).—Eight Negroes were arrested yesterday in renewed sit-in demonstrations at a drug-store here.

At another drug-store lunch counter three Negroes were served without incident.

Negro leaders announced at a prayer meeting Friday night that they may begin an all-out movement against racial segregation in Lynchburg.

The primary target was to be the Patterson Drug Store, where six college students now serving 30-day jail sentences were arrested during a sit-in demonstration last December.

The eight demonstrators arrested yesterday were charged under Virginia's anti-trespass law.

Two of the demonstrators, Mrs. Essie Ela Gordon, 28, a housewife, and a 16-year-old girl high school student, were freed on bonds, but the others—all students—remained in jail.

William S. Patterson, vice president of the drug store, called city officials when the Negroes sat down at the lunch counter. Two Negro members of the city's eight-member bi-racial committee, William E. Gordon, vice chairman, and M. W. Thornhill, went to the store. They were unsuccessful in persuading the demonstrators to leave.

All Six Defy Law

Mr. Patterson said he explained the trespass law to the six persons at the lunch counter and they refused to leave.

Arrested in the morning sit-ins were William G. Roberts, 21, of Aliquippa, Pa., a student teacher; James Andrew Tucker, 23, of Clifton Forge, Va.; Ralph Reavis, 19, of Lawrenceville, Va., and Elijah J. Regulus, 19, of Waycross, Ga., all students at Virginia Theological Seminary and College; Mrs. Gordon and the girl student.

Two others arrested later, both students at the Seminary, were Lanksford E. Hankins, 25, of Nathalie, Va., and Jon E. Crawford, 25, of Chicago.

The manager of the Peoples store said he checked with his regional manager at Roanoke and was told "to go ahead and serve them."

Brief Chattanooga Incident

Elsewhere in the South three Negro youths staged a brief sit-in at a downtown restaurant in Chattanooga, Tenn., the first since last spring's massive sit-in. Police were called but no arrests were made.

Shortly afterward Negro leaders said that "stand-ins, wade-ins, swim-ins and play-ins" probably will be forthcoming in Chattanooga.

In Atlanta four Negro sit-in demonstrators forced the closing of a downtown drug store lunch counter but no arrests were made.

STUDENT JAILED — Miss Barbara Thomas, freshman student at Virginia Seminary College was among six students, four of whom are white, who began serving 30-day jail terms in Lynchburg, Va. last week. They were convicted of trespassing during lunchcounter protests.

Denied Books, Sit-Ins Refuse Prison Food

LYNCHBURG, Va., Mar. 2 (AP). — Six Negro students serving jail terms for violating Virginia's anti-trespass laws have begun a hunger strike because they were denied textbooks.

The six, divinity students at Virginia Theological Seminary and College here, were sentenced to 60 days in jail February 22 on charges of trespassing during a sit-in demonstration protesting segregated eating facilities at Patterson's Drug Store.

A limited number of textbooks were permitted early last month to six college students, four white and two Negro, who were serving jail terms on conviction of similar charges.

Create a "Problem"

The students involved in the earlier demonstration also were allowed to request additional books, but a jailer said the practice developed into "too much of a problem" and a decision was made to deny textbooks.

He said the Negro students are given magaines and newspapers.

All the students have refused to eat the proffered food, the jailer said yesterday.

Hearings Postponed

Meanwhile, Municipal Court hearings for four Negroes arrested at a sit-in demonstration here last month have been postponed to March 9.

The defendants, including two ministers, asked for a coontinuance of their cases because their attorney was tied up elsewhere. Judge Joseph P. McCarron granted the request.

The four are free on $1,000 bond. They were arrested February 21 at Patterson's and charged with violating Virginia's anti-trespass law.

The Lynchburg Ministerial Association's executive committee yesterday heard the Rev. Virgil A. Wood, Lynchburg integration leader, who asked the group to back a proposal presented before city council Tuesday night.

The proposal was made by the Rev. W. W. Roberts one of two ministers charged in the February 21 sit-in case. He asked city council to lower integration barriers at all urban facilities.

'Jimcrow showdown' for Lynchburg

LYNCHBURG, Va. —The City Council has until Wednesday, March 8, to abolish racial segregation in public facilities or face legal action in Federal Court.

The warning was given the city by the Rev. W. W. Roberts of the Eighth Street Baptist Church and backed up by Virgil A. Wood, president of the Lynchburg Improvement Association.

Both men indicated that a suit would be filed asking the court to order the city to desegregate public swimming pools, municipal and corporation courts, public jails, public schools, public parks, city employment policies, public library, public armory and remove segregation signs from all public buildings.

Mayor William C. Vaughan said no action could be taken by the council on the request as the body does not meet until March 14.

WOOD IMMEDIATELY branded the mayor's statement "A poor excuse and a delaying tactic."

"We feel the City Council can get together any time it wants to," he declared.

Wood added that the Association intends to file the suit by the March 8 deadline if the council has not voted to end discrimination by then.

IN ANOTHER phase of desegregation activity here, picketing continues at the Patterson Drug store.

Two pickets, Lawrence Brown and Jack Anderson, were knocked down last Wednesday, by two unidentified white men who struck them from behind.

City Manager Robert B. Morrison said two detectives were put on the case. To date there has been no arrest.

Also, last week six theological students serving 60 days in the city jail because of sitdown activities staged a hunger strike when jailers refused to let them have textbooks.

HOWEVER, THEY have since ended the strike.

They are the Revs. James A. Tucker, Elijah J. Regulus, Lanksford Hankins, W. G. Roberts, Jon E. Crawford and Ralph Reavis.

Over 2,000 persons attended a protest mass meeting Friday night. The guest speakers were two of the four students recently released from jail after serving terms for sitdown demonstrations.

The Lynchburg NAACP launches its membership campaign March 19. The Voters League has started a 30-day campaign designed to bring the total of qualified voters to 3,000 or more.

Segregation Foes Plan New Lynchburg Drive

By JOHN LAWSON
Star Staff Writer

LYNCHBURG, Va., Feb. 25.—In front of a small, modern drugstore on Main street here two Negro pickets march doggedly for eight hours a day.

Signs worn front and back read: "Notice to Patterson's—We Won't Buy If We Can't Eat."

Patterson's Drug Store has become the focus of a battle against segregation which threatens to spread to other areas of this city of 60,000.

Already 18 persons have been arrested in Patterson's during three sit-in demonstrations and 12 of them have gone to jail. The others are free on bond awaiting trial.

Leaders of the movement now plan to extend their fight to segregation in city parks, swimming pools, courtrooms, the jail, the library, the cemetery and the schools.

Paradox Is Seen

The city, stunned by the sudden prominence the demonstrations have brought, is one of paradox in racial matters.

The public hospital has an integrated cafeteria and an integrated children's ward. The city employs Negro policemen and a Negro sits on the school board.

Buses and the bus terminal have long been integrated. In the past six months five downtown lunch counters have dropped racial barriers.

Yet in other areas—the parks, courtrooms, the library—strict segregation is the rule, and "colored" and "white" signs are scattered throughout the public buildings.

Leaders Concerned

Civic and business leaders have expressed increasing concern as the demonstrations and picketing have continued. "The city is stirred up," said one businessman. "Both white and Negro are upset about this thing."

"I'm terribly sorry that something like this had to happen," said John J. Wraneck, manager of Miller & Rhoads department store. "Whoever is right, the effect of a controversy like this is very unfortunate for the community."

One downtown merchant said many businessmen felt the Patterson management was "doing the right thing under the circumstances," since store officials have maintained they would not integrate "under pressure."

The protest movement began last fall with picketing and boycotting of downtown stores which operated segregated facilities. A bi-racial commission was set up shortly afterwards and guided desegregation of four downtown lunch counters.

Sit-In Started

Patterson's was not among them, and in December four white and two Negro college students conducted a sit-in demonstration there. They were arrested and pleaded guilty earlier this month to trespassing charges.

Yesterday they were released after serving 19 days of a 30-day jail sentence. Since their conviction on February 6, two other demonstrations have been conducted at the store and 12 persons—including two ministers—have been arrested.

Today, the drug store is quiet, and except for an occasional cat call or joustling of the pickets, there have been no incidents.

For awhile, the demonstrators sent several pickets at a time to the store. Then counter-pickets showed up, and police obtained agreements from both sides to limit their picketers to two. The segregationist pickets seldom appear.

"Pressure" Charged

Officials of Patterson's claim they are being pressured to give in to the demonstrators.

"The demonstrations are the last thing in the world we wanted," said Charles G. Patterson, jr., president, "but it's gotten to be a matter of principle."

"We're trying to run our business in the way we concluded it was best to do," he said. "If we can't do it peacefully, we have to get help from the law."

"We're not trying to be bullheaded. The way things are now, it would be almost impossible to work out a solution, even if we wanted to."

The Rev. Virgil A. Wood, leader of the protest movement and himself one of those arrested, argues that Patterson's policy is morally wrong even if legally justified.

A mass meeting is scheduled for Sunday at which a resolution is to be offered calling on the City Council to "act within the framework of your moral conscience" and abolish segregation in all public facilities.

Unless there is progress, Mr. Wood said, the group plans to file suits in Federal court to force desegregation.

"We will not let up until the walls of segregation come down," he said.

Jailed College Sit-Ins Freed in Lynchburg

By JOHN LAWSON
Star Staff Writer

LYNCHBURG, Va., Feb. 24.—Six students who were arrested when they protested against lunch counter segregation here were released today after 18 days in jail.

The students—four white and two Negro—left their cells picked up the watches and jewelry taken from them when they entered the city jail and walked to freedom shortly after 6 a.m.

They were met by a small group of friends, including Mrs. Mildred Hudgins, director of student religious life at Randolph-Macon Woman's College here. All six students said they plan to return to classes today.

Term Cut 12 Days

The six were sentenced to 30 days in jail on February 6, but released early on good behavior.

They are: George Terrill Brumback, jr., 20, of Arlington and James E. Hunter, 19, of Indianapolis, both students at Lynchburg College; Rebecca M. Owen, 20, of Saluda, Va., and Mary E. Bentley, 20, of Newark, N. J., both students at Randolph-Macon, and Barbara A. Thomas, 21, and Kenneth V. Greene, 28, both Negro students at the Virginia Theological Seminary and College, and residents of Lynchburg.

All appeared cheerful and said they had been treated well while in jail. They were permitted to meet as a group only on the few occasions when they talked with their lawyers.

Hundreds of letters from every part of the country were received by the students during their confinement, they said. Most were opened by jail authorities before the students saw them.

All of them, said Miss Thomas, "were from people who were concerned about the problem."

Spent Time Studying

The students, who wore uniforms during their stay in jail, spent most of their time studying, they said. Some of their professors were permitted to see them to give class assignments.

The six students were arrested in December when they walked into Patterson's Drug Store on Main street and asked to be served.

They were asked to leave, and when they refused, they were arrested under a trespass law passed by the General Assembly last year to cope with sit-in demonstrations.

They were found guilty in Municipal Court after a stormy hearing but appealed the conviction. When the appeal came up in Corporation Court on February 16 the students changed their pleas to guilty. A 30-day sentence imposed in Municipal Court was then affirmed.

A week after the students were jailed, eight Negroes staged another sit-in demonstration at the same drug store. Seven received 60-day jail sentences and the eighth, a juvenile, yesterday was sentenced to 30 days in jail, in Municipal Court.

Patterson's Drug Store is the only major downtown lunch counter which remains segregated. Five others were desegregated under the guidance of a bi-racial commission created following student boycots last year.

4 Negro Sit-Ins Face Trial In Lynchburg Court Today

LYNCHBURG, Va., March 8 (Special) — Four Negroes arrested in a sit-in demonstration at Patterson's Drug Store last month go on trial in Municipal Court Thursday on charges of violating Virginia's anti-trespass law.

Meanwhile, white and Negro ministers met tonight with the city's Interracial Committee, reportedly to confer on integration of churches and a threatened omnibus desegregation suit against the City Council.

The Lynchburg Improvement Association, a Negro group headed by the Rev. Virgil A. Wood, gave the Council an ultimatum last week: desegregate or face a Federal Court suit.

Wood, one of the four due to appear in Municipal Court Thursday, said the original deadline for the Council's reply—today—has been postponed to next Tuesday, the date of the Council's next meeting.

In other developments:

• It was learned that the bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of Southwest Virginia met here last night with local Episcopal leaders. The bishop, the Rt. Rev. William H. Marmion of Roanoke, declined to comment on reports that the meeting concerned the Rev. John H. Teeter, white vicar of an integrated Episcopal church and a leader in desegregation efforts in Lynchburg.

• The Improvement Association and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference announced that a mass meeting will be held at 7:30 p. m. Friday in the Court Street Baptist Church. Six Negro divinity students, now in jail for their part in sit-in actions, leave jail Friday and will speak at the meeting. The Rev. Wyatt T. Walker, Conference director, also will speak.

Sentence Six For Va. Sit-In

LYNCHBURG, Va. — (UPI — Six Negro seminary students, including a Chicagoan and a housewife were sentenced to 60 days in jail Wednesday for violating Virginia's trespass law during a sit-in protest at a drugstore's segregated lunch counter.

The seminary students began serving their terms immediately. The housewife, Mrs. Essie Gordon, 28, of Lynchburg, appealed to the city's corporation court and was released under $1,000 bond. She is the mother of two.

Negro S. C. Wants Arrested Fifth Time

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — A 41-year-old South Carolina Negro who once won a battle against extradition from New Jersey has been arrested in that state for the fifth time since the New Jersey governor refused extradition.

Police said in Newark Wednesday John Colier and another man have been arrested and charged with trying to pass counterfeit $20 bills.

Colier was arrested on a bad check charge in New Jersey in August of 1955. Police said then it was his fourth arrest since 1948.

6 Negro Sit-In Prisoners Again Refuse to Eat

LYNCHBURG, Va. (AP)— Six Negro students jailed while awaiting a hearing on anti-trespass charges in a sit-in demonstration refused again Thursday to eat.

The students started their hunger strike Tuesday because they were not allowed textbooks.

They were sentenced to 60 days in jail Feb. 22 on the charges arising from the demonstration in a downtown drug store.

City Deputy Sgt. Peyton C. Johnson, the jailer, said food was placed in front of the students Thursday, but none touched it.

He said the students are not showing any ill effects from their hunger strike. The six are students at Virginia Theological Seminary and College.

4 'SITTERS' SENTENCED

Two Negro Ministers Get Jail Terms in Virginia

LYNCHBURG, Va., March 9. —(AP)—Four Negroes, including two Baptist ministers, were sentenced to 60 days in jail Thursday for violating Virginia's anti-trespass laws in a drug store sit-in Feb. 21.

They are Rev. Virgil A. Wood, 29, president of the Lynchburg Improvement Association; Rev. William Walker Roberts, 23; Bates Huston Ford, 40, an employe of a Negro YMCA; and Samuel Walter Trimiar, 28, all of Lynchburg.

The four bring to 10 the number of Negroes jailed for sit-ins at the drug store. Six students are in custody awaiting an appeals trial March 14 on their 60-day sentences. A housewife and a high school student are also free pending appeals.

6 Students Deprived of Textbooks, Stage Lynchburg Jail Hunger Strike

By Elsie Carper
Staff Reporter

Six Negro theological students in jail in Lynchburg, Va., for a lunch counter sit-in demonstration began a hunger strike Tuesday when jailers refused to let them have textbooks.

Deputy City Sergeant Peyton Johnson confirmed a report by telephone that the students have refused all food taken to them.

"I don't know why they quit eating," Johnson said. "They haven't given any reason except that they wanted their textbooks."

The six students at Virginia Theological Seminary and College were arrested Feb. 13 for violating Virginia's trespass laws when they sought service at the lunch counter at Patterson's Drug Store.

They were sentenced in Municipal Court to 60 days in jail. Their appeal is pending in Corporation Court.

Another group of students, four white and two Negro, served terms for a sit-in demonstration at the same store. They were permitted to have textbooks and to study.

Johnson said yesterday that letting the students have books was "too much trouble."

"You can't run a school in jail," Johnson said.

The six theological students, he said, are being treated just like other prisoners and can have magazines to read.

The decision, Johnson, "was made by all of us." The reference was to City Sergeant Charles M. Watts, who is in charge of the jail, and his deputies.

Watts is elected to he position of city sergeant and operates the jail without supervision from the City Council.

4 Negroes Get 60 Days For Sit-ins

By Elsie Carper
Staff Reporter

LYNCHBURG, Va., March 9—The Rev. Virgil Wood, president of the Lynchburg Improvement Association, and three other Negroes were given 60-day sentences today for a sit-in demonstration at Patterson's Drug Store Feb. 21.

This was the third group protesting racial discrimination at the store's lunch counter to be sentenced since sit-in demonstrations began last December.

While the hearing was in progress two pickets marched outside city hall with signs protesting segregation in the courtroom and Patterson's policy of not serving Negroes.

William S. Patterson, vice president and manager of the store, testified that he told the four he wouldn't serve them and asked them to leave. When they refused, he called police.

Attorney Len W. Holt of Norfolk argued that the four were refused service solely on grounds of their race. When he sought to question Patterson about his policy, Judge McCarron ruled that Patterson did not have to give his motives.

"Certainly it was because they were Negroes," Judge McCarron said. "He does not have to explain that." The Judge said the issue involved was property rights.

Patterson said he was following the custom of all stores in Lynchburg up to seven months ago by not serving Negroes at lunch counters. Since that time five stores have desegregated eating facilities.

"All have seen the light but you," Holt told Patterson.

"We will not have our business jeopardized by threats, coercions, sit-ins, pickets or intimidation in any way," Patterson replied.

Sentenced in addition to Mr. Wood, 29-year-old pastor of the Diamond Hill Baptist Church, were the Rev. William Walker, 23, pastor of the Eighth Street Baptist Church; Bates Ford, 40, a YMCA employe, and Samuel Trimiar, 26, of Lynchburg.

Ford, the only one of the defendants to testify, was cut short by Judge McCarron when he started to discuss discrimination.

When Holt protested that Ford had a right to his day in court, Judge McCarran said "If he doesn't preach me a sermon, I will listen to him."

The latest jail terms came in the wake of a statement by 38 Lynchburg clergymen which called on the community to "view the present racial crisis as an opportunity for the positive and relevant witness of our judeo-christian faith."

The Lynchburg Retail Merchants Association yesterday voted to support the Citizens Inter-racial Committee which is exploring ways to provide for employment of Negroes in the retail field. The merchants adopted a resolution naming the committee as the "proper meediating body toward an amicable solution to all racial problems, including those pertaining to retail interests."

Following this action, the directors of the Lynchburg Liberties today issued a call to "white conservative people" to take appropriate action should the Lynchburg merchants bow to a desegregation-ist boycott threat.

Sit-Ins Step Up Action

Jailing of Girl, 16, Upsets Lynchburg Calm

LYNCHBURG, Va.—The sentencing to a 30-day jail term of a cute, 16-year-old Negro lass because she only wanted to eat in dignity at a lunch counter, has inflamed this town's Negro citizens and other fair-minded citizens.

And as a result, Lynchburg, which previously had a description of being a friendly, pleasant community where race relations were fair and basically sound for great advances, has gone the way of other Southern communities.

By the refusal of businesses to serve Negroes and the subsequent arrest and imprisonment of the young girl and seven others, Lynchburg's Dixie-thinking residents have chosen disorder.

LIKE OTHER Negroes throughout the country, Lynchburg Negroes now are, but definitely, solidified and on the move for equal rights.

The progression was rolling after a December, 1960 beginning, but added impetus has come from the jailing of Mandaline Thompson, the 16-year-old high school student.

Up to the present time, 18 persons have been arrested for the demonstration centering on Patterson's Drug Store in downtown Lynchburg.

In Louisville, Ky., there's a rumor that within one month, the conference of Negro leaders and city officials, will have downtown Louisville, "integrated."

In South Carolina following the arrest of a Negro minister in a wheelchair during a sit-in demonstration, the Justice Department was asked to look into police handling of segregation protests there and in Sumter.

In Houston, Tex., 14 Negroes became the first demonstrators there to be arrested.

Nonviolence institute scheduled in Lynchburg

LYNCHBURG, Va. — The Rev. Wyatt Tee Walker will be the principal speaker for an institute on nonviolence sponsored by the Lynchburg Improvement Association. The association is an affiliate of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference headed by Dr. Martin Luther King.

The two-day institute will open with a statewide mass meeting at Court Street Baptist Church. Len Holt, attorney, will conduct a workshop on "Legal and Illegal Non-violence." Mrs. Dorothy Cotton, educational consultant of SCLC will lead workshop on "Effective Community Protest."

A state board meeting of the Virginia Christian Leadership Conference will be held at Diamond Hill Baptist Church. Dr. Milton A. Reid is president of the state conference.

The Rev. Virgil Wood, head of the Lynchburg Improvement Association, would not indicate whether there would be any demonstrations or protests in Lynchburg during the institute period.

Mr. Wood was jailed recently, along with others, in the outgrowth of a demonstration.

7 Sit-In Negroes Jailed; Decline Court Defense

LYNCHBURG, Va., Feb. 23 (AP).—Sixty-day jail sentences were imposed on seven Negroes for violations of the State's anti-trespass law in a drug store sit-in demonstration.

The six men college students and a housewife refused to be sworn to testify because of segregated seating in the courtroom.

Leonard W. Holt, a Norfolk Negro attorney who represented the seven, declined to cross-examine witnesses for the same reason.

The six men were transferred to the city jail and began serving their term. Mrs. Essie Elva Gordon, 28, the mother of two children, noted an appeal and was released on bond.

The seven were arrested February 14 at the same drug store (Patterson's) where four white and two Negro college students also tried unsuccessfully to be served and later were jailed. The six were given 30-day jail terms in Lynchburg Corporation Court earlier this month, and are still serving their terms.

Motion Overruled

Mr. Holt, at the start of yesterday's Municipal Court hearing, asked that "the unconstitutional practice of enforcing racial segregation in the courtroom be prohibited."

The motion was overruled by Judge Joseph P. McCarron. The judge said the court always had been segregated except at the first sit-in hearing January 5, when spectators entered and were seated before the court's seating rules could be explained.

Judge McCarron said he allowed the mixed seating at the first hearing because he did not want to make an issue of the matter then. On Tuesday, Judge McCarron ordered segregated seating in the courtroom and the orders were read in open court.

2 Witnesses Heard

The six students sentenced yesterday, all undergraduates at the Virginia Theological Seminary and College here, wore dark suits and clerical collars and carried Bibles.

The only witnesses heard by the court were Police Capt. W. E. Gilliam and William S. Patterson, vice president of the drug company.

Mr. Holt told the court his clients had instructed him that they did not wish to participate any further in the hearing and would not be sworn in if segregated seating was required.

6 Students vs. Town Aligned in Sit-in Battle

By Elsie Carper
Staff Reporter

LYNCHBURG, Va., Jan. 15 — While students in Georgia have been rioting over the admission of Negroes to the State University, four white college students in Virginia have been fighting a jail term for taking a forceful stand against racial discrimination.

Two young women from Randolph-Macon College and two young men from Lynchburg College were arrested last month after insisting that a Negro man and woman who accompanied them to Patterson's drug store on Main st. be served at the lunch counter.

The six, who took seats at the counter, were told first by the store manager and then by the police to leave. When they refused, they were orderd into a patrol wagon and held three hours in jail before they were released on bail.

Early this month they were given 30-day sentences in the Lynchburg Municipal Court under Virginia's newly strengthened trespass law. A news story described the trial as "rowdy." White and Negro spectators, ignoring a custom to seat Negroes on one side and whites on the other, sat together. They cheered after a speech by a defense attorney on the brotherhood of man. Judge Joseph P. McCarron then cleared the courtroom.

"I am satisfied," the Judge declared in setting the sentences, "they knew exactly what they were doing. They courted arrest. To my way of thinking, this is a test case of some kind they are putting on."

$1000 Bail for Each

When an appeal was noted he set bail at $1000 each declaring that the students "were not Lynchburg people."

All six are natives of Virginia and three, the two Negroes and one white, were born in Lynchburg.

It came as a shock to Lynchburg as it has to other Southern cities that college students (especially college students from the South) will risk indignation over the treatment of Negroes.

Both newspapers, the morning News and the afternoon Daily Advance, have been sharply critical of the students in editorials declaring that they have set back racial relations in the city. A bi-racial committee was successful recently in opening up four lunch counters in this segregationist-minded city after Negroes set up picket lines.

Following the arrest, the Daily Advance wrote that the students "willfully defied and broke the law just as certainly as if they had robbed, stolen, committed assault and battery or more serious offenses."

'Stiff But Fair'

After the trial the News commented that "the penalty appears to be stiff . . . but it also appears to be fair and deserved."

The News also described the white students as outsiders and said it suspected that they had dragged in the Negroes "as necessary accutrements to the demonstration."

A whispering campaign has linked the students to a Communist conspiracy and there have been reports that the National Asosciation for the Advancement of Colored People is paying their legal costs.

The students are troubled by the editorials and the rumors and yet show a wry amusement over them.

Defense Fund Set Up

They rather wish that someone was paying the two lawyers, one white and one Negro, who represented them. Their friends have set up a student defense fund and are soliciting contributions.

The six are part of a larger group of about 100 students from the three colleges in Lynchburg and from nearby Sweet Briar who have been holding informal meetings for several months in homes and in Negro churches. The group has no officers and no name.

One student said that if the group can be said to have an objective it is to provide an opportunity for Negroes and whites "to know each other on some other level than a city bus."

The students have strong ethical and religious beliefs. Many have taken part in the various campus organizations that are affilitated with the National Student Christian Federation.

Inspiration has been drawn from "Motive," the publication of the Methodist Church for college students. The November issue of the magazine contains an article endorsing the "sit in" movement and tracing peaceful civil disobedience in this Nation.

Refer to Earlier Stands

The article states that a "study of history demonstrates unequivocally that public demonstration and civil disobedience are often a barometer of future social patterns."

"When dedicated people constantly demonstrate on an issue with increasing numbers, they can't help but be victorious in the long run," the article states.

The "sit in" at Patterson's Drug Store was the outgrowth of long discussions by the students on the "denial of human dignity" to Negroes in Lynchburg. Dissatisfied with the progress of the interracial committee in breaking down barriers at only four counters, the students decided to approach other stores and urge them to open up their counters. When the manager of Patterson's refused to meet with the students, the decision was made for a demonstration.

It was only by accident that students from Sweet Briar did not participate. They were tied up in classes at the time.

Girls Are Honor Students

The six students who did take part are thoughtful and articulate. The two young women from Randolph-Macon are both 20 years old, seniors and honor students who have been closely identified with religious life on the campus.

Rebecca Owen, a tall brunette from Saluda, Va., is the daughter of a bank official. A Phi Beta Kappa, she was described by a faculty member as "a girl held in high regard for her intellectual ability and her integrity." After completing a term as state president of the Virginia Methodist Student movement, she was a delegate last summer to the World Christian Student Federation meeting in Austria.

She came back with a strong impression that "the United States and the South are no longer in a position to continue to hold on to traditions so costly to us on the international scene."

Mary Bentley, a native of South Hill, is the daughter of a Methodist minister now serving a pastorate in Newark, N. J. She has lived in Virginia all her life. A music major, she plays the organ at the college chapel and was president last year of the Methodist Student Movement at Randolph-Macon.

Terrill Brumback, 20, and James E. Hunter, 19, are considered able boys. They have not taken much part in usual campus activities at Lynchburg College.

Brumback is from Arlington, Va. His father, an employe of the Agriculture Department, and his mother, a teacher at Sidwell Friends School, live at 127 North Edgewood st. Hunter was born in Lynchburg. His father, former dean of students at Lynchburg College, is now head of the social welfare department of the Christian (Disciples of Christ) Church with offices in Indianapolis.

The two Negro students, Kenneth Greene, 28, and Barbara Thomas, 21, were full participants in the decision to visit Patterson's Drug Store. Greene, A Korean War Veteran, said that he became aware of the "backwardness" of Lynchburg in race relations when he returned from the service.

Some faculty members and students applaud the action, others feel that the colleges have been hurt. Pressures to discipline the students, even to expel them, have been brought to bear on the colleges by patrons and alumni. Both colleges are in the midst of fund-raising drives to increase endowments, expand plants and raise faculty salaries.

Two on Probation

A joint faculty-student judiciary committee at Randolph-Macon has put the two students on a form of probation. No disciplinary measures were invoked, but the committee said a repeat would be regarded "in a far more serious way."

President William F. Quillian Jr., president of Randolph-Macon, expressed regret that the incident took place. "We do not look lightly upon it," Quillian said shortly after the arrests. "I respect a person who has deep convictions and thus in this sense I respect the students, while I am not condoning the action they have taken."

The two young men from Lynchburg College received a hearing also before a joint student - faculty committee. Recommendations are to be reviewed by the executive committee of the college's board of trustees before they are announced.

Anti-Trespass Laws Under Study

RICHMOND, Va. — (UPI) — A three-judge federal court took under study Friday, Jan. 6, an attack on Virginia's new anti-trespass laws designed to stop Negro "sit-in" campaigns against lunch counter segregation.

A group of 125 Negroes and whites convicted under the laws filed the appeal on the grounds that the state has no right to aid property owners in continuing racial segregation.

Bishop Disavows Stand On Sit-Ins by Lay Group

The Washington Post
Washington D.C.

ROANOKE, VA., Jan 14 (AP)—"Radical measures" advocated by the Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity (ESCRU) meeting at Williamsburg last week do not represent official policies of the diocese of Southwestern Virginia, the Rt. Rev. William H. Marmion, Bishop of the Diocese, said in a statement released last night.

The Society, which has no official standing in the Episcopal Church, last week advocated peaceful sit-ins and kneel-ins to break racial bars in church-affiliated institutions, gave its full approval to inter-racial marriages, and suggested Church members transfer to churches nearest their residences where the "congregation is of a color and culture other than their own."

P. 22-A

Bishop Marmion issued this release:

"The Episcopal Church believes in freedom of speech and freedom of assembly. Therefore, the ESCRU has a right to exist, and any member of this Church may join or not as he sees fit and he may agree or disagree with any stand taken by the group. however, two points should be made clear:

- The ESCRU is not an official organization of the Episcopal Church and cannot speak for the Church as a whole.
- The radical measures reportedly advocated by this group do not represent the official policies of the diocese of Southwestern Virginia."

Earlier this week two other Episcopal bishops in Virginia, the Rt. Rev. George P. Gunn, Bishop of the Episcopal Diocese of Southern Virginia and the Rt. Rev. David S Rose, Suffragan Bishop of the same Diocese stated that ESCRU's action represented no offical stand of the Episcopal Church.

125 Sit-Ins Defended In Richmond Court

The Courier
Pittsburgh Pa.
1-16-61

RICHMOND, Va.—An important challenge to trespass laws against "sit-in" demonstrators came before a three-judge Federal Court here last week.

Directly affected are 125 Negroes and whites arrested during "sit-ins" at Petersburg, Hopewell, and Lynchburg, Va. The whites include two young men from Lynchburg College and two students from Randolph-Macon Woman's College at Lynchburg.

The outcome of the case could also affect thousands of others arrested throughout the South in the last year, as well as millions of citizens now deprived of the right to eat, pray, sleep, swim, read, play, or see movies where they please.

At issue is a trespass law passed by the Virginia Legislature after sit-ins started last February. This law increased fines from $25 to $1,000 and fixed jail terms up to one year for persons refusing to leave a place of business when ordered to do so.

The demonstrators are also testing another Virginia law which provides the same penalties for persons encouraging others to take part in "sit-ins."

"Few issues will come before any court in this generation more important than the ones present in this case," the demonstrators declared in a brief submitted to the Federal Court.

'It would be error, gross error, to consider this a mere Virginia matter. It is an American matter. This court, by its decision, will declare to 9,000,000 Negroes of the South and to the world that the Federal judiciary stands ready to provide relief from oppressive actions of any state as it fosters an American version of South Africa's apartheid."

The judges were asked to provide immediate relief by halting the use of laws "which enforce racial discrimination at public lunch counters and require the observance of private policies of racial segregation and discrimination."

THE PETITIONERS contend that privately owned property loses its purely private nature when it is put to certain public uses.

This, the demonstrators argue, subjects lunch counters and similar places to the thrust of the 14th Amendment regarding racial discrimination in public functions.

The demonstrators are represented by Attys. Joe Jordan, Ed Dawley, and Len Holt, Norfolk Va.; Hank Jones, Washington D. C., and Jay Schwartz, Madison, Wis. They have asked various civil rights and civil liberties groups to aid in "what may be the most significant legal decision since the school segregation cases."

White Pastor Is Barred To Jailed Negro Sit-ins

LYNCHBURG, Feb. 8—Four white college students jailed for participation in an interracial sit-in demonstration at a drugstore lunch counter were reported to be in good spirits today.

2-9-61

The Rev. Trevor Turner, minister of the Peakland Methodist Church, visited the four students and said they bear no feeling of ill will.

15-A

A request by Mr. Turner to talk with the two Negro students also arrested for their part in the demonstration was turned down. He was informed that a Negro pastor would be allowed to see them.

They do not feel that they are criminals, Mr. Turner said. They believe that they were demonstrating their Christian faith.

The six were arrested last December when they sought service at the lunch counter in Patterson's Drug Store on Main st. They were found guilty under Virginia trespass laws and began 30-day sentences Monday.

Mr. Turner said the two young women are in a single cell with barred windows and are wearing jail uniforms of gray cotton. The young men are in with other prisoners and are wearing work uniforms of blue shirt and dungarees.

The students reported that they are well treated. Visitors have been strictly limited to miinsters and the students have been told they will be permitted to write only two letters a week.

6 Are Sentenced In Virginia Sit-In

LYNCHBURG, Va. (AP) — Six young college students — four white and two Negro—each were sentenced to 30 days in jail Thursday on charges of trespassing in the Dec. 14 sit-in demonstration at a downtown drug store.

They noted appeals and were freed on bond of $1,000 each pending appearances in Corporation Court Feb. 1.

Gov. Almond Subpoened to Sit-In Suit

RICHMOND, Jan. 3 (AP) Gov. J. Lindsay Almond Jr., Attorney General A. S. Harrison Jr. and Richmond newsman James Latimer today were subpoenaed to appear in a Federal Court case testing the constitutionality of Virginia's antitrespass laws.

The three were subpoenaed by Negro plaintiffs who assert the laws are in violation of the 14th Amendment and unconstitutional.

The laws were passed by the 1960 General Assembly during the first wave of lunch counter sit-ins in the state. Involved in the court case is the city of Hopewell and the proprietor of George's Drug Stores, where a series of sit-ins occurred.

A three-judge Federal Court will hear the case Friday.

Plaintiffs in the suit indicated earlier they would subpoena Almond.

RICHMOND, Va., Jan. 21 (AP)— A Negro group which for months has picketed Miller & Rhoads and Thalhimers department stores in downtown Richmond Saturday quit its activities.

The two stores served Negroes for the first time Friday night in two restaurants above the street level.

The protesting group, the Richmond Citizens Advisory Committee, said it had "moved officially to cease the picketing and boycotting . . . after having received a report that the management of both stores had announced desegregation of all eating facilities and agreed to serve all their customers equally."

Friday night's action followed months of private negotiations between the Negroes and the store managements.

Lynchburg Sit-in Brings Censure of 2

Lynchburg College has censured two students who took part in a "sit-in" demonstration at a drug store in downtown Lynchburg last December. Further demonstrations, the College said, will result in dismissals.

The action, recommended by a joint faculty-student committee, was approved by the executive committee of the Board of Trustees.

The statement, issued by the College, said that the demonstration was "unwise and ill advised." The joint committee concluded, though, that the students "acted basically for cause of conscience" and "from a sincere desire to have a part in a movement which they regard as leading toward the extension of democratic rights and Christian principles in the United States."

The students, Terrill Brumback and James Hunter, sought service at Patterson's Drug Store along with two other white students from Randolph Macon College for Women and two Negro students from Virginia Theological Seminary and College. When they refused to leave the store, they were arrested for trespass.

Early this month the six were found guilty in Lynchburg's Municipal Court and given 30-day sentences. The students are now back in school while the case is appealed.

Four Norfolk Stores End Segregation

NORFOLK, Va., Feb. 4 (AP) Three major downtown Norfolk department stores desegregated their dining rooms last night.

The three stores were Rice's, Ames & Brownley, and Smith & Welston. A spokesman for them issued a statement syinga:

"We believe this action to be in the best interest of the entire community in view of the fact that similar action has been taken in other Southern cities such as Nashville, Tenn., Richmond, and many others."

A party of Negroes had dinner at the department stores last night and later said they were courteously treated. There were no incidents.

A spokesman for the Negroes sai they had met with officials of the stores Thursday and the stores agreed to open their eating fcilities to all regardless of race.

Test Sit-In Arrests In Va. Federal Court

RICHMOND, Va — An important challenge to trespass laws against sit-in demonstrators came before a three-judge federal court here Jan. 6.

Affected are 125 Negro and white persons arrested during sit-ins at Petersburg, Hopewell, and Lynchburg, Va. The whites include two young men from Lynchburg college and two students from Randolph - Macon Woman's college at Lynchburg.

The outcome of the case could also affect thousands of others arrested throughout the South in the last year, as well as millions of citizens now deprived of the right to eat, pray, sleep, swim, read, play, or see movies where they please.

At issue is a trespass law passed by the Virginia Legislature after sit-ins started last February. This law increased fines from $25 to $1,000 and fixed jail terms up to one year for persons refusing to leave a place of business when ordered to do so.

TESTS COMPLICITY

The demonstrators are also testing another Virginia law which provides the same penalties for persons encouraging others to take part in sit-ins.

"Few issues will come before any court in this generation more important than the ones present in this case," the demonstrators declared in a brief submitted to the federal court.

"It would be error, gross error, to consider this a mere Virginia matter. It is an American matter. This court, by its decision, will declare to 9,000,000 Negroes of the South and to the world that the federal judiciary stands ready and willing to provide relief from oppressive actions of any state as it fosters an American version of South Africa's apartheid."

ASK RELIEF NOW

The judges were asked to provide immediate relief by invalidating the use of laws "which enforce racial discrimination at public lunch counters and require the observance of private policies of racial segregation and discrimination."

The brief for the demonstrators declared that police powers of the state may not be used to enforce segregation in private places and such use of police power is called a violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. Among Supreme Court decisions cited is one in which state enforcement of restrictive covenants in housing was declared unconstitutional.

"There are things valid when done by private individuals which reach unconstitutional results when state action gets involved," the demonstrators declared. "It is also established that the courts do not permit the state to accomplish indirectly, in terms of enforcing racial discrimination, that which it cannot do directly."

The petitioners also contended that "private property—'private' as far as ownership—loses its purely private nature when it is put to certain uses, public uses. Because these lunch counters are designed to serve the public, do serve the public, and are subject to regulation by reason of this service to the public, in law they must be treated as public institutions."

This, the demonstrators argue, subjects lunch counters and similar places to the thrust of the Fourteenth Amendment regarding racial discrimination in public functions.

The demonstrators are represented by attorneys Joe Jordan, Ed Dawley, and Len Holt, Norfolk, Va.; Hank Jones, Washington, D. C., and Jay Schwartz, Madison, Wis. They have asked various civil rights and civil liberties groups to aid in "what may be the most significant legal decision since the school segregation cases."

15 Negro Students Held in Seating Rob

HAMPTON, Va., Feb. 1 (AP) — Fifteen Negro students from Hampton Institute were arrested and charged with violating the state's segregated seating law today when they sat in a theater section usually reserved for white persons.

The students, part of a group of about 20 youths, were arrested for sitting in the segregated orchestra section of the Lee Theater.

The manager of the theater, apparently told of their intentions, informed the students they could leave, sit in the balcony section set aside for Negroes, or face arrest if they went to the orchestra area.

15 Hampton Students Are Jailed In Theatre Sit-In

Staff Correspondence

HAMPTON, Va. — Fifteen Hampton Institute students, including four juveniles, must stand trial here Feb. 8 on charges growing out of their attempt to use "white" accommodations at a Phoebus theatre.

The eleven adult students are free on $100 bond each posted by Paul Williams, a retired Hampton businessman and civic leader, and the four juveniles are in the custody of a college official pending trial.

They gathered at the theatre shortly after 1 p.m. and were sold tickets at 50 cents each They started to enter the downstairs section of the theatre, only to be blocked by William Sweeney, manager.

Mr. Sweeney told the students they would have to go to the "colored" balcony of the theatre or accept refund of their admissions.

The students said, through their leader, Hulbert James, that they would not accept the refunds, but would remain in the lobby until the manager reconsidered the matter. The student said the group would not leave the theatre to accept the refunds.

MANAGER SWEENEY accepted the tickets the students had purchased and they entered the downstairs section.

The students were not bothered for some 15 minutes, but were arrested after they refused to leave the theatre after being told by Police Capt. Tony Guyiddo: "If you refuse to move, we're going to have to place you under arrest."

AT THE Hampton Police headquarters, officials were hard-put to find a charge to prefer against the students. They finally settled on an article in the State Code (18.1-357) referring to "failure to take assigned space under hte State Law on segregation of the races."

At the trial on Feb. 8, the students will be represented by Attorneys W. L. Thompson and A. Smith, both counsel for the NAACP.

THE LOCAL demonstration was part of a nation - wide effort movement by the Students Non - Violent Coordinating Committee. Similar demonstrations took place last weekend in several North Carolina cities and students have also demonstrated against theatre segregation at Richmond, Nashville, Tenn. and in several Texas cities and towns.

Hampton students participated in sit - in demonstrations at lunch counters, but there were no arrests. A college spokesman said the students' actions were those of "voluntary, independent citizens."

6 Students Drop Trespass Appeal, Plead Guilty and Then Are Jailed

The Washington Post
Washington D.C.
Tues. 2-7-61

By Elsie Carper
Staff Reporter

LYNCHBURG, Va., Feb. 6—Four white and two Negro college students entered the city's jail today to begin 30-day sentences for protesting segregation at a downtown drug store lunch counter.

Corporation Court Judge Stephen DuVal Martin sentenced the students for violating Virginia's new trespass laws after they requested an appeal from an earlier conviction in Lynchburg Municipal Court be withdrawn. When the request was denied they entered pleas of guilty to the charges.

Shortly after the students entered the two-story yellow cement jail building a group of about 70 Negroes and whites gathered across the street, their heads bowed in prayer. They sang two Negro spirituals, "We Are Climbing Jacob's Ladder," and "I'll Overcome Someday."

The group which earlier appeared outside the courthouse and prayed in protest to segregated seating in the courtroom marched from a nearby Baptist church. In the church, plans were made for further demonstrations and boycotts of stores and theaters that practice segregation. The men in the group wore black mourning bands on the sleeves of their coats.

Leonard W. Holt, the Negro attorney who represented the six students in court, told the meeting "Let's not let their sacrifice be in vain."

After receiving their sentences, the students issued a statement which said:

"We have confidence that no person of good conscience will stand idly by—will remain silent—while we students who sought to speak against the destruction of human potential which results from racial discrimination are punished for completely implementing our faith in Christian-democratic principles."

The courtroom where the students were sentenced was strictly segregated with Negroes on one side of the center aisle and whites on the other.

A white minister, the Rev. John H. Teeter, was forcefully ejected from the court by three policemen when he sought to sit in the Negro section. Mr. Teeter is the pastor of the desegregated Episcopal Church of the Good Shepherd and is vice president of the Lynchburg chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Seven policemen had been deputized as assistant city sergeants to enforce the segregated seating and patrol the aisles of the small wood-paneled courtroom.

The students were arrested last December when they entered Patterson's Drug Store on Main st. and sought service at the lunch counter. They were found guilty in Municipal Court last month of violating the trespass laws and since have been out on bail.

All six are natives of Virginia and attend colleges in Lynchburg. They are members of an inter-racial discussion group in the city.

Rebecca Owen, 20, and Mary Edith Bentley, 20, honor students at Randolph-Macon College for Women, have played a prominent role in religious activities on the campus of the Methodist college.

Theo ther two white students are George Terrill Brumback, 20, and James E. Hunter, 19, who attend Lynchburg College, a school affiliated with the Christian (Disciples of Christ) Church. Brumback's home is at 127 N. Edgewood st., Arlington.

The two Negroes, Barbara A. Thomas, 21, and Kenneth V. Greene, 28, attend the Virginia Theological Seminary and College.

The request to withdraw the appeal came as a surprise to the court, which had expected to set only a date for trial.

The action was explained in the statement issued by the students. They pointed out that they are now participating in a suit pending in the U.S. District Court in Richmond, challenging the constitutionality of the trespass laws.

Called Moral Issue

The students said they felt the issue they had raised is "more largely a moral issue than a legal one."

They said they had sought to point up the injustice of a segregated society by the demonstration and were willing to to accept the consequences by going to jail. "We believe," they said, "if social injustice is to be righted, we who speak against it must be willing to accept personal discomfort and hardship."

Judge Martin turned down the request to withdraw the appeal because more than 10 days had elapsed since conviction.

The attorney was overruled three times by the judge when he sought to put before the court the reasons the students were willing to go to jail.

Holt said the students would appeal guilty to the charges of trespass against them on the books but had moral reservations about the law.

"Lord God Almighty doesn't need this court to enforce divine law," the judge declared.

Judge Disputes Attorney

Later the judge interrupted Holt when the attorney said the students had doubts about a law which they felt was designed to enforce racial segregation. The judge said that there was nothing in the statute to warrant such a view and that the trespass laws apply to all persons alike.

Judge Martin then affirmed the 30-day sentence of the lower court. A comparable sentence had shortly before been given to a woman found guilty of a repeated offense of passing bad checks.

After the students were sentenced they walked a block to the jail. Phil Moon, deputy city sergeant, turned away classmates and a Randolph-Macon faculty member who sought to deliver clothing that the students had packed for their stay in jail.

Moon first said the students wouldn't be needing anything. Later he allowed books, a change of underwear and toothbrushes to be sent to the students.

VICAR GETS HEAVE HO—Rev. John H. Teeter, vicar of the Episcopal Church of the Good Shepherd, is ejected forcibly from court at Lynchburg, Va. for refusing to abide by court-ordered segregation. Teeter was attending court session at which six college students were being sentenced for a sit-in offense. He was removed from court when he refused to obey judge's order that seating in court be segregated. Teeter also is Lynchburg vice president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The Rev. John H. Tetter, white pastor of the Episcopal Church of the Good Shepherd, was forcibly ejected from Corporation Court in Lynchburg, Va., yesterday for refusing to obey a judge's order that seating be segregated. He was attending a court session at which college students were being sentenced for sit-in activity.

Richmonders Hail Victory After 11 Months

Big Stores Open Tea Rooms To All

Special Correspondence

RICHMOND — The two top department stores in the one-time capital of the Confederacy Miller and Rhoads and Thalheimers, opened all of their eating facilities to Negroes and whites alike on Friday.

Officers of the Richmond Citizens Advisory Committee, which had kept up a campaign of picketing and "selective buying" against the stores since the Virginia Union University students' sit - ins last February, immediately called off the crusade.

THEY SAID they believed that this was the first time that department store tea rooms had become integrated any place in the South, and predicted that it would lead to similar action elsewhere.

Both stores opened eating facilities in their basements and their first floors in August, but reserved their tea rooms and other dining facilities for whites only.

Decision of the stores to end segregation came after months of negotiation.

THE RICHMOND Citizens' Advisory Committee is a federation of 36 organizations with the Rev. P. B. Walker, a Methodist minister, as chairman, and Dr. J. Rupert Picott executive secretary of the Virginia Teachers Association, as vice chairman.

Serving on its contact committee, which did the negotiating were the Rev. Irvin Elligan, a Presbyterian minister who formerly lived in Norfolk; Dr. Picott and Winfred Mundle.

THIS COMMITTEE never relented in its campaign to end all discrimination at eating facilities when partial desegregation was effected in August.

The committee had the active support of the Mayor's Committee of 12, which was named to work on the city's problems arising from the demand for the end of segregation.

COLORED MEMBERS of that committee are Mr. Mundle Dr. Picott, David Longley, Dr. Henderson, H. C. Terry and Dr. Felix J. Brown.

After the diners left the newly-integreted areas on Friday, Miller and Rhoads issued a statement saying that the change was made in the hope that it would bring harmony to the community.

Thalheimers said that it hoped the action would be in the best interests of the community.

Negro Boycott Wins Eat Rights

The Montgomery Advertiser 1-22-61 p8 c5

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) —Picketing and a sales boycott of two downtown Richmond stores were called off Saturday by a Negro group.

Montgomery, Ala.

The two Broad Street stores—Miller & Rhoads and Thalhimers—served Negroes for the first time Friday night in eating facilities previously reserved for white persons.

The Richmond Citizens Advisory Committee said the group had "moved officially to cease the picketing and boycotting ... after having received a report that the management of both stores had announced desegregation of all eating facilities and agreed to serve all their customers equally."

The pre-arranged action Friday night came after months of quiet negotiations by Negroes and management of the stores.

The move by the two stores means most downtown eating facilities in department and variety stores are open to Negroes. The two bus station restaurants have been desegregated. There has been no concerted action by Negroes to obtain service at other restaurants.

WASHINGTON The full nine - member bench of the U.S. Court Appeals was asked last week to reinstate a claim against Hot Shoppes, Inc., for refusing to serve Charles E. Williams in Alexandria.

Williams said he could prove, if given a chance, that a restaurant manager acted "under color of Virginia law" when excluding him in Nov. 1959.

A TREASURY Department attorney arguing his own case, Williams said it made no difference that State Attorney Gen. Albertis S. Harris Jr. later declared that Virginia's segregation laws did not apply to restaurants.

The point is that the manager thought the law applied, Williams said.

Williams complaint for $5,000 damages, which was dismissed in District Court, stated that the manager disavowed personal prejuidce but cited the Virginia law.

THIS KIND of discrimination, Williams said, is a form of "state action" barred by the 14th amendment and the Civil Rights Act of 1875.

Charles J. Steele, an attorney, said the manager was obeying the law as he understood it, not enforcing it on behalf of the state.

Virginia High Court Studies Sit-In Appeal

The Washington Post
Washington D.C.

The 34, all students at Virginia Union University here, were arrested and convicted on trespassing charges.

The 34 Negroes were arrested in February, 1960, as they congregated about a lunch counter and a fourth-floor restaurant reserved for white persons. They were each fined $20 in police court. Their convictions were upheld in Hustings court, from where they appealed to the Supreme Court.

The specific case being heard is that of a single student, Raymond Randolph. The outcome of his case will determine final disposition of the other 33.

Also today the court postponed until its April term arguments testing the validity of Virginia's new Blue Law.

The decision to postpone argument on the Blue Law means that it will probably be summer before a final adjudication will be made.

The case, contesting the validity of the 1960 General Assembly's Sunday closing law, was brought by several open-on-Sunday Richmond mechants.

The new law is more strict than the old one in limiting the number of items that can be sold on Sunday. Because a final ruling has not been made on the new law, the older less strict Blue Lew remains in force.

34 Students Seek Review

Richmond Sit-Ins Appeal to Court

Pittsburgh Courier 8-5-61

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The U. S. Supreme Court has been petitioned to review the cases of 34 Negro students who conducted a lunch counter "sit-in" in Richmond, Va.

In a petition for certiorari filed July 22, attorneys for the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund ask the nation's highest court to review an April 24 decision by the Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia, which upholds the students' convictions.

The students, who attended Virginia Union University, demonstrated at Thalhimer's, one of Richmond's largest department stores, on Feb. 20, and were arrested and fined $20 each.

They had attempted to obtain service at two lunch counters, a soup bar and a restaurant reserved for white people. The store maintains a lunch counter for Negroes in its basement.

During the demonstration, which was entirely peaceful, the Negro group was refused service and asked to leave the store. When they remained, police were called and the students were arrested.

THEIR CASES were tried in a Richmond police court, resulting in conviction under a Virginia statute which makes it a crime not to get off private property when ordered to do so by an owner, or by someone acting for the owner.

In subsequent appeals, the convictions were upheld by the Hustings Court in Richmond, and the aforementioned Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals.

The Legal Defense Fund petition contends that the Virginia arrests were motivated by segregation, maintained by state law, and "constituted state enforcement of racial discrimination, maintained by state law, and "constituted state enforcement of racial discrimination contrary to the due process and equal protection clauses of the 14th Amendment."

•"Thalhimer's," the attorneys argue, "as a great department store, is part of the public life of the community. . . . In choosing to exclude Negroes from some of its restaurants, and to expel from the store all who protest against this humiliation, Thalhimer's followed a policy of public racial discrimination."

Though the conviction of the students and their fines are still in effect, Thalhimer's, in January, dropped all color bars in all of its facilities, including lunch counters and restaurants.

NAACP Legal Defense Fund attorneys for the petitioners are Martin A. Martin and Clarence W. Newsome, both of Richmond, Va.; Thurgood Marshall, Jack Greenberg, and James M. Nabrit III, of New York City. Charles L. Black Jr., of New Haven, Conn., and Elwood H. Chisholm of Washington, D. C., also assisted in the preparation of the petition.

The Justice Department, through investigating FBI men, is seeking to learn if the civil rights of the Rev. John H. Teeter, white leader in interracial advancement circles, have been violated.

REV. MR. Teeter, pastor of the racially - desegretated Episcopal Church of the Good Shepherd, charges that his rights were, indeed, violated when he — in full clerical garb — was hustled out of the courtroom where a group of four white and two colored students had pleaded guilty to charges of "trespass" growing out of a sit - in demonstration.

Rev. Mr. Teeter had entered the courtroom of Judge S. Duval Martin in company of three colored citizens, one of them president of the local NAACP branch. The clergyman is vice - president.

WHEN THE clergyman attempted to sit with his companions, he was hustled out of the courtroom by local police officers who had been made deputies of the court by Judge Martin.

Rev. Mr. Teeter charges the rights violation because "I never had a chance to take a seat. . .I have violated no law."

The six students unexpectedly entered, "guilty" pleas in the case and asked that sentence (30 days in jail) of a lower court be upheld.

THE SIX ARE Misses Rebecca Owen, 20, and Mary Bentley, 20, both of Randolph-Macon Women's College: George Brumback, 20 and James Hunter, 19, both of Lynchburg College and Miss BARBARA Tomas, 21, and Kenneth V. Greene, 28, both of Virginia Theological Seminary and college.

Officials at the schools have indicated that the students college work would not be impaired by their incarceration, but the attitudes of jailers requested to apass books and other materials on to the students had been "somewhat uncooperative," during the first three days observers say. However, when it was learned that Federal authorities were interested in the case, there as turnabout on the part of jail officials. Now the students are receiving books and other materials.

ACTUALLY, THE Lynchburg case has presented a number of "turn - abouts." Judge Martin in a previous trial, did not object to desegregated seating in his court - room. A counsel for the defendents, in a firs trial, was forceful — almost being held in contempt. In the hearing last week, he was much subdued. The students had planned to plead "not guilty," but later changed their plea. One factor remains: the Lynchburg matter is still with the Hopewell and Petersburg cases in challenging the validity of the Virginia "trespass" laws on constitutional grounds. This challenge is now under advisement in Federal district Court.

Minister Seeks Justice, Gets Souvenir

Told U.S. can't help him in protest over ouster from court

By RUTH JENKINS

LYNCHBURG, Va. — The agitator pickets who are opposing the pickets urging desegregation of the lunch counter at Patterson's Drug Store carry a sign declaring that "St. Peter Is Looking For Teeter."

The reference of course is to the Rev. John H. Teeter, white Episcopal priest who was bodily ejected by police deputies from a Lynchburg Court House when he attempted to sit with colored friends on the 'colored side' of the segregated courtroom.

This incident occurred on Feb. 6 when six college students, four of them white, pleaded guilty before Judge S. Duval Martin and began serving 30 - day jail terms on trespass charges following their arrest in a Patterson, Drug Store sit - in last December.

LAST WEEK, the Rev. Mr. Teeter gave details of the humiliating experience to two FBI agents, one stationed in Lynchburg, and the other sent from Danville.

Then making an official protest to the Justice Department, the clergyman went to Washington and was granted a 15 - minute audience with John Seigenthaler, administrative assistant to Attorney-General Robert Kennedy.

However, he was advised that the Justice Department can institute proceedings on behalf of a private citizen only when his voting rights have been violated. The minister contends that he had been deprived of his civil rights.

Advised that the Justice Department has no jurisdiction over such a complaint, the vicar left however on a cordial note, with a highly-prized souvenir for his 11-year-old son, Mark.

THE REV. MR. TEETER is rector of the Chapel of the Good Shepherd, an integrated congregation which is in sympathy with the desegregation campaign. He is also vice - president of the Lynchburg NAACP.

For the Consolidated Court hearing of the six arrested students, Judge Martin had issued instructions that traditional segregated seating would be maintained. Seven policemen were on duty to maintain order and assign seats to courtroom spectators.

The courtroom seats only about 100 persons. For the hearing, defendants and witnesses were admitted first, then spectators were admitted single file.

IN THE SPECTATOR line, the Rev. Mr. Teeter followed Mrs. Maxine Patterson, whom he knew through the NAACP work. She was ushered toward a seat in the "colored section," and when the minister took a couple of steps behind her in that direction, he was stopped by two officers who asked "What color are you?'

The clergyman said that he was non-plussed by the question. Then he replied "White, colored or what - have - you, I want to sit with my friend.'

"Oh no, you don't," the minister said he was told as four other officers converged on him, and he was ousted from the court room and down the courthouse steps with the order "Don't come back again."

He said that he took this action as a personal affront inasmuch as he learned later that as the courtroom became crowded, other white spectators were permitted to fill up the back row of the "colored section."

A NATIVE of Ashland, O., the 35 - year - old Rev. Mr. Teeter is a graduate of Northwestern University and Seabury Western Theological Seminary in Evanston, Ill.

He has had 11 years experience as a newspaperman.

He worked three years as a reporter and copy reader with the Des Moines Register. Then he served for eight years as reporter and rewrite man on the national cable and city desk of the Chicago Tribune.

He took the pastorate of the Lynchburg 125 - member Good Shepherd chapel in August, 1959. He also serves another white parish nearby.

The Teeters have four children and are expecting a fifth.

SINCE THE publicity concerning the courthouse incident, the family has been subjected to some crank calls and personal harassment.

3 Norfolk Stores Drop Race Bars In Tea Rooms

Norfolk, Va.

Date 2-11-61

3 NORFOLK STORES Dc 30 Tea room facilities at three of Norfolk's leading department stores are now open to all patrons.

The stores — Ames and Brownley, Rice's and Smith and Welton — quietly desegregated facilities Friday, serving colored diners along with others as result of a request from the local chapter NAACP that use of the facilities be made available to all.

ROBERT D. Robertson, president of both the Norfolk and State chapters of the NAACP told the Guide that his organization had written two letters to each of the stores expressing belief that the time was right for the desegregation of the tea rooms.

Mr. Robertson said that officials of the stores had met to work out procedure for opening of the facilities.

Among the diners at Smith and Welton were Mr. and Mrs. Robertson, Mrs. W. T. Mason, the Rev. Richard B. Martin, James Gay, Mrs. Geraldine Rogers, and Miss Emma Gregg. At Ames and Brownley, diners included the Rev. W. L. Hamilton, Mrs. Anita Walker, Attorney and Mrs. Victor J. Ashe, Mrs. Ella Barco and Mrs. Ocie Shields. Among the diners at Rice's were Attorneys T. Ione Diggs and Bertha L. Douglass, the Rev. Noah Taylor, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Jones, Attorney J. Hugo Madison, Miss Joyce Gilliam and Miss Jean Davis.

A spokesman for the three stores issued a statement saying:

"WE BELIEVE this action to be in the best interest of the entire community in view of the fact that similar action has been taken in other southern cities such as Nashville and Richmond."

Mr. Robertson said W. G. Swartz, another of Norfolk's four leading department stores, did not reach an agreement with the NAACP group for the desegregation of its lunch facilities.

Counters Desegregated

LEESBURG, Va., April 30 (UPI)—Lunch counter desegregation began quietly here yesterday although a few white patrons left the community's four drugstores when Negroes were served.

The action followed a meeting of white and Negro leaders Friday at which a spokesman said racial issues were "frankly discussed."

2 Augusta Churches Staye Off Kneel-Ins

2 Negroes, One a Minister, Are Turned Back at Doors

AUGUSTA (AP) — Two Negro students, one an ordained Baptist minister, tried unsuccessfully to worship Sunday in two white Augusta churches.

The Rev. Roosevelt Green Jr., 21, and Paul Thompkins, 22, students at Paine College, first tried to enter the First Baptist Church. An usher denied them admittance, and they left without argument.

Crossing the street, Green and Thompkins sought to enter St. John's Methodist Church. Again they were rebuffed when the door was barred and church officials waved them on. The students stood quietly outside at the foot of the church steps and a group of about 50 gathered. Some parishoners entering the church made unfriendly remarks, others ignored the Negroes.

After waiting about 15 minutes, Marion Dasher, chairman of the church board, told the Negroes: "You are not welcome at this church."

Green replied: "Can I ask you a question."

Dasher answered: "No, not particularly. I told you what I had to and I would appreciate it if you move on because some people here wouldn't understand."

Green asked: "Are you asking us to leave?"

"Yes," said Dasher. The Negroes then left quietly.

Mayor Millard Beckum, a member of St. John's Church, was asked to comment and said: "This is not an integrated church and they'll not be permitted to enter. Of course if they do some disorderly conduct we can try a different approach."

Last month Green and another Negro tried to enter the First Baptist Church. Police were called and officers told the Negroes not to return.

Augusta is one of the few Georgia cities which has maintained almost total segregation.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH

KNEEL-INS

Episcopal Unit Urges Kneel-Ins To Fight Segregation in Church

The New York Times
New York

By GEORGE DUGAN

Special to The New York Times.

WILLIAMSBURG, Va., Jan. 11—The Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity ended its first annual meeting here today with a plea to its 1,500 members to combat actively the "abomination" of segregation within the church.

It particularly urged the use of "peaceful" sit-in and Kneel-in demonstrations to rid church institutions or agencies of racial exclusiveness.

Shortly before midnight last night the delegates approved a statement declaring that "there are neither theological nor biological barriers to marriage betwen persons of different color, and that laws forbidding such marriages are contrary to Christian teaching, natural law and the Constitution of this country."

At the same time the delegates approved a resolution urging President-elect John F. Kennedy to take the lead in a "crusade" for full citizenship rights for all persons without regard for race, color, class, religion or ethnic origin.

This morning's actions included a series of "directives" to society members. Among them were these:

¶Consistently express disapproval of discrimination within church-related agencies and strive diligently and prayerfully to refrain from participation in the operation of such institutions."

The society asserted:

"Our attention and our Christian concerns specifically are directed to church-sponsored schools, colleges, conference centers and camps where deep injury is inflicted upon Christian youth by exposure to unjust and un-Christian practices of segregation and other discriminations because of race and color."

The delegates also recommended that its board of directors consider the establishment of a "hardship fund" designed to aid individuals "who suffer imprisonment or deprivations in reprisal for their witness in the areas of racial and cultural unity."

They reaffirmed an earlier statement calling anti-Semitism a form of bigotry "totally incompatible with the program and goals of this society."

The Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity was formed a little more than a year ago in Raleigh, N. C. It has not official connection with the National Council of the Protestant Episcopal Church, the administrative arm of the denomination.

Its membership is drawn largely from "liberals" within the church who have become restive under what they regard as deliberate slowness on the part of their church in seeking the equality of races.

Sympathy caravan features kneel-ins

ROCK HILL, S.C. — Student-propelled church kneel-ins and a 100-plus automobile caravan carrying over 500 persons rocked this city on Sunday as well as part of York County.

The kneel-ins and motor caravan occurred amid mounting tension as out-of-town students and supporters of the sit-down movement flocked here. One incident which almost caused a reaction of violence was the kicking of a minister near the county prison. He is the Rev. John Copeland of Nashville, Tenn., pastor of Zion Baptist Church, who was kicked as he passed an unidentified white spectator.

The Rev. Mr. Copeland complained to Chief Pete Strom of the incident and was offered hospitalization but refused.

Parents of the jailed sit-downers, students and visitors were insulted and vilified by white spectators who lined the highway.

The kneel-ins occurred Sunday morning as students from out-of-town colleges and local Friendship College visited white churches. One group was admitted to the local Presbyterian Church but all others were turned away from Baptist churches.

A group of students, led by Joseph Winston of A. and I. University was told at one Baptist Church: "This is private property. If you don't leave, we will call the police."

At another Baptist church, Winston and two other students, one from National Baptist Seminary of Nashville, were told to go to "Negro churches."

A white churchman even offered to transport the students to a colored church. When they accepted, he got into his automobile and drove them across town to one of the Baptist churches.

The motorcade to the county prison, located 14 miles from here, ran into an avalanche of state highway patrolmen when it reached the prison. The officers barred all automobiles from the grounds and forced the motorists to park a mile away and walk back. There were approximately 50 state highway patrol cars parked on the prison grounds and along the highway. It was estimated that there were about 100 state officers and SLED (State Law Enforcement Division) agents. None of the visitors was permitted to visit the two girls at the York County jail, located about two miles from the county camp.

Visitors were told the girls had their quota of visitors for the day, five. However, a number of students were able to see the nine male prisoners at the camp, being permitted in groups of ten.

Following the caravan, there was a mass meeting which was attended by most of the students, local people and supporters of the sitdown movement.

Following a meeting with the local group, about 60 students in units of 20 each picketed three mid-town stores, Woolworth, McCrory's and Good's drug store.

The picketing continued the entire afternoon, marking the fourth day of protest since the arrest and conviction of four out-of-town youth leaders early last week.

THE STUDENTS who came on Saturday are from Nashville and represent Heharry Medical College, Tennessee State College and American Baptist Seminary.

Leo Lillard, leader of the group, said: "Our promise is to give moral as well as active support to the students of Friendship."

Thirty-two of the students made the trip via Greyhound Bus. Another contingent came from Murphy, N.C.

In addition to Lillard, the Tennessee students were accompanied by a minister, the Rev. John Copeland, pastor of Zion Baptist Church of Nashville.

The first group of out-of-town pickets was from Atlanta, representing Atlanta University and Spelman College.

'Kneel-In' Try Draws Rebuff

ORANGEBURG, S.C. (AP) — Two Negro students from Claflin College, a Methodist institution here, were turned away from St. Paul's Methodist Church at Orangeburg Sunday.

The two were told to "go worship with your people" by a man at the church entrance. Then Orangeburg Mayor Clyde S. Fair came out of the church and confirmed the refusal.

The students, who identified themselves as Dorothy Vann and Emmanuel Hixson, said the mayor told them, "This is a segregated church."

The Rev. T. E. Jones, pastor, said he did not know of the incident until told of it after the services were over, and he had no comment.

Episcopal Group Supporting Racial Unity Opens First Annual Talks in South

By GEORGE DUGAN
Special to The New York Times

WILLIAMSBURG, Va., Jan. 8—Church leaders who assembled here for the first annual meeting of the Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity regard the so-called "kneel-in" movement as a key weapon in combating segregation.

The movement started last August, when a small band of Negro students entered an all-white church in Atlanta to worship with fellow-Christians. Since then there have been at least 200 similar demonstrations over the country, a few in the North but most in the South.

On some occasions Negro worshipers have been barred at the church doors. Most times, however, the reaction of the white congregation appeared to be one of bewilderment rather than outright resistance.

Northern Segregation Cited

The Rev. John B. Morris, director of the society, defined the problem of interracial worship as not so much a question of enforced segregation as one of "separation by custom."

He said that kneel-ins were practical dramatizations of the Christian teaching that the church is not color conscious. As such, kneel-ins can become powerful educational instruments, he said.

Mr. Morris emphasized that the "separate but equal doctrine" in church life prevailed in the North as well as in the South.

Kneel-ins, he said, have an advantage over lunch-counter sit-ins because the legal question of property ownership cannot be readily invoked.

The Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity was formed a little more than a year ago in Raleigh, N. C. It is an independent body in that it has no official connection with the National Council of the Protestant Episcopal Church, the administrative arm of the denomination.

It has a nation-wide membership of 1,500 Episcopalians, including forty Bishops. It holds that more than pious protestations of goodwill are needed if the Christian church is to be truly interracial.

SAVANNAH PUBLIC LIBRARY INTEGRATED

Savannah Library Now Open to ALL

SAVANNAH, Ga.—Savannah's Public Library is open for use by all citizens, Mayor Malcolm MacLean said here.

The Mayor, in answering questions concerning use of the main library by Negroes, said city and library officials had agreed to follow the precedent set by other Southern cities by allowing free access to the library facilities to everyone.

Negroes have always used the reference room of the main branch whenever necessary, the Mayor said, and the city has defended itself in a U. S. District Court case brought by Savannah Negroes attempting to force integration of the library on grounds that Negroes have never been denied use of the facility.

Mayor McLean said other Southern cities, including Atlanta, Augusta, Macon, Jacksonville, Charlotte and Greenville, have integrated libraries, and local officials see no reason why Savannah should not follow their precedent.

Federal Judge Frank M. Scarlott took the case under advisement.

Geraldine Lemay, regional librarian, said there has been no recent increase in the use of the main library by Negroes.

Lawyer Asks Dismissal, Says Charges Are Faulty

BRUNSWICK (AP)—U.S. District Court Judge Frank M. Scarlett was asked Thursday to dismiss a suit of eight Negroes for integration of the Savannah Public Library.

Edwin J. Maner Jr., attorney for the Library Board of Managers, moved for dismissal at a hearing on a petition to enjoin the library from operating on a segregated basis.

The attorney argued that the petitioners have failed to state a claim on which relief can be granted. He claimed that the suit makes blanket allegations that laws are violated but does not name city ordinances, statutes, customs or usages as having been violated.

Opposing the motion was Negro attorney Donald L. Hollowell of Atlanta. He denied all of Maner's basic claims, saying he wondered if the library attorney actually had read the petition.

Speaking first, Maner said the petition never stated that any one of the eight plaintiffs has ever sought to use the library or has ever been denied use.

The petition also asks a declaratory judgment to bar the City of Savannah from enforcing any law or custom for segregation of public libraries. But, Maner contended, the petitioners have not shown that the city ever enforced any such law.

Maner entered a motion to strike a part of the suit in which the plaintiffs claim they wrote the Board of Managers asking permission to use the library. Citing a technicality, he said the letter was directed to the Board of Directors when no such body exists.

He said it appears that three separate public bodies should be named defendants. In addition to the Board of Managers, he listed the Board of Trustees of the Carnegie Library, which, he recited, is composed of 12 Negroes as provided by the city charter, and the City Council.

The library attorney argued that the action was brought without authorities ever having "any opportunity to dispose of this matter by local administrative action." He said not one of the eight plaintiffs had ever been refused services at the library.

38a 1961 MISSISSIPPI SIT- In LIBRARY

An Easter week-end—

Jackson braced for new incidents

The Birmingham News
P. 1 Col. 3-31-61 Birmingham Ala

BY HARRY MARSH, News staff writer

JACKSON, Miss., March 31—Mississippi's capital city is braced for a new anti-segregation action during the Easter week-end.

Negro leaders yesterday vowed to continue sit-in efforts and the city government promised to oppose them to maintain peace and order.

AGENTS OF THE Federal Bureau of Investigation are investigating three incidents: Mississippi's first sit-in at the municipal library, the conviction of nine Tougaloo College students for participating, and police action in dispersing about 100 Negroes near the courthouse with clubs and dogs as the Negroes began to clap and chant before the trial Wednesday.

Mayor Allen Thompson yesterday told newsmen city officials had ordered police to maintain order and act quickly to prevent racial strife. He said they did not tell the policemen how these orders should be carried out.

The press conference was called, he said, so he could explain the situation to the representative of a weekly news magazine.

He said Jackson offered more educational and occupational opportunities to Negroes than any other city in the nation.

AT A RALLY sponsored by the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, last night, the police action was described as "violence, brutal and cruel."

The Birmingham News
Mar 3-31-61

An estimated 1000 Negroes attended and contributed funds. They heard NAACP officials outline the following de-segregation efforts: non-violent demonstrations, white merchant boycotts, encouragement of federal investigation in the action, and further civil rights legislation.

The Rev. John D. Mangram said yesterday's action showed white Mississippi leadership lacked "the spiritual maturity we thought they had." He said "we will go on to prove that we are dissatisfied with second class citizenship and even though we be struck dead we will not strike back."

Dr. Aaron E. Henry of Clarkdale, state NAACP president, said FBI agents were investigating the situation "in this building tonight."

Mrs. Julia Wright, NAACP regional youth secretary, urged Jackson Negroes to stay out of the stores near where the police action took place.

DR. HENRY told the mass meeting that he had wired President Kennedy to "halt this savage attack on Negro people in Mississippi."

Henry said Mississippi Negroes have been handed a "good do-it-yourself kit" in the struggle for human dignity.

Rev. Mangram called for no violence by Negroes seeking equal rights.

"All the things which our white friends do to us can't prevent the forces that have been unleashed in this city and state," the minister said.

"Even though we be struck dead, we will not strike back. We must face what we have experienced and, in a measure, accept it. We must not become embittered at our white friends who have not the spiritual maturity we thought they had."

CLARENCE MITCHELL, director of the Washington bureau of the NAACP, said a telegram from his office to members of the Senate and House judiciary committees and the Justice Department asked for new civil rights laws to give Americans "the same kind of protection in Mississippi "that we seek to give humans in remote corners of the world."

"KEEPING ORDER" in Jackson, Miss., a policeman sicks a vicous German Shepherd on an unidentified man he thought was too slow in obeying his order to move away from in front of Police Court where nine students went on trial for trying to read research books in the public library. The man with the umbrella was bitten on his left arm.

FBI begins probe of attacks

(Special to AFRO)

JACKSON, Miss. — FBI agents here are continuing the probe launched, last week, as a result of a number of persons being beaten by police and bitten by two German Shepherd police dog.

As announced by the Justice Department, the purpose of the investigation is to determine if the violence employed by the police and use of the dogs were justified.

The FBI went into action after Medgar Evers, NAACP field secretary, called the Justice Department in Washington and complained of action by local police.

"AS FAR AS colored citizens are concerned, law enforcement here has broken down," Evers declared. He said policemen were "committing violence against colored citizens."

In ordering the investigation, Assistant U.S. Attorney General Burke Marshall said: "I'm trying to find out if it (the report) is true. If it is, it's a disgrace."

Evers reported that he was beaten about the head and shoulders with both a gun and police club.

The violence, he declared, erupted when a group of approximately 100 students gathered at the City Court building in an effort to attend the trial of nine college students arrested for going to the main public library here.

EVERS SAID he arrived at the scene with Miss Julie Wright, NAACP Youth Department secretary, of Charleston, S.C.

Police were lined up in front of the court building, he said. The crowd was ordered to go across the street where they waited until the accused students, who are enrolled at Tougaloo Southern Christian College, arrived.

The spectators applauded the students and the police charged into the crowd swinging clubs and turning the dogs upon a number of persons.

THE POLICE were under command of Det. Chief M. B. Pierce, the officer who on March 27 ordered the arrest of the students at the library.

Evers said Pierce gave the attack signal by saying: "That's it! Move 'em out! Get 'em!"

A number of persons were injured, including two ministers who were bitten by the dogs, and a man, 81, Willis Wrenn whose left arm was incapacitated as a result of a blow by a club swinging policeman.

Following the eruption outside, inside the court the nine students were found guilty of "breach of the peace" and fined $100 each and given 30-day suspended jail sentences.

ONE OF THE defense attorneys, Jess Brown, said notices of appeal have been filed and the case is to be heard in the Hinds County Court sometime after April 10.

The students, four girls and five boys, are Misses Evelyn Pierce, Janice Jackson, Ethel Sawyer and Geraldine Edwards, Albert Lassiter, Meridith Anding, Joseph Jackson, Alfred Cook and Sammy Bradford.

"If these defendants are convicted, on this evidence," he told Judge James L. Spencer, "then I fear for all of us. I could be arrested for walking into this public building."

FOLLOWING THE violence and conviction of the students, a mass meeting was held Thursday night at the Masonic Temple. More than 1,000 persons attended.

Clarence Mitchell, director of the Washington NAACP bureau, and AFRO columnist, was main speaker.

Mitchell said that while the U.S. is spending billions abroad in behalf of world democracy, Mississippi remains the only state in the Union where it is a crime to read a book in a public library.

Earlier he had called upon President John F. Kennedy to protect the constitutional rights of Mississippi citizens with every available law.

He asked Congress to enact stronger civil rights laws to empower the Justice Department to protect citizens against such attacks as occurred in Mississippi.

Other speakers at the mass meeting were Dr. Aaron Henry, president of the Mississippi NAACP, and the Rev. John D. Mangrum.

Dr. Henry said he had wired President Kennedy asking that the "the vicious attack on colored citizens be halted."

Later Wilkins revealed that the NAACP is going all out to "wipe out racial discrimination in Mississippi."

The NAACP executive said:

"Mississippi has a secret police system in its State Sovereignty Commission, a controlled press and is the only state in which White Citizens Councils members are elected public officials."

Mayor Pleads For Peace

JACKSON, Miss. — Police night sticks and two snarling dogs combined to break up a court house demonstration by 100 Negroes last week.

Meanwhile, Mayor Allen Thompson pleaded for racial peace, asking Jackson's Negro and white citizens to ignore "false prophets" who would lead them "down a road of conflict and strife."

His plea came as the Justice department announced in Washington that the FBI is investigating the outbreak of violence where nine Negroes were convicted for staging the first "sit-in" demonstration in Mississippi.

Growing disapproval of Jackson police brutality was voiced by 800 Negroes Friday who held anti - segregation demonstrations.

They sang, marched, prayed and cheered speeches by integration leaders including Clarence Mitchell, director of the NAACP's Washington bureau.

Mitchell was cheered by the crowd when he said:

"There is not enough power in the state of Mississippi to prevent the forward march of those determined to have their civil rights.

"I don't know how dictionaries in Mississippi define 'public' but those we use in Washington — and they're the ones which count — the public includes everybody, white and colored."

Aaron Henry of Clarksdale, State NAACP president, said, "I want to serve notice on the authorities: "You've got to use more than police, guns, clubs and dogs."

Police used these weapons to break up crowd of Negroes outside the courthouse while the "sit-in" demonstrators were being convicted inside."

Several persons reportedly were struck by club-swinging police who waded into the crowd.

The Justice department said that on the basis of reports it has received, "it appears that one Negro was beaten by a civilian — not a police officer." The civilian has been arrested and charged with assault and battery.

The mayor, a former president of the American Municipal association, said both races have "worked side by side" in Jackson for years.

OUTSIDE AGITATION

"I sincerely believe that our recent trouble would not have occurred had it not been planned and promoted by people beyond the borders of our city and state whose chief aim seems to be to create unrest and friction among our people and between the races."

"Let's not be led by false prophets down a road of conflict and strife," Thompson said. "Our people are dependent on each other."

Thompson and other city officials agreed to meet at least once every three months with local Negro leaders to discuss race relations.

The agreement was made when three Negro ministers visited the city officials. "If we intend to continue to live together in peace and harmony," said the Rev. E. A. Mays, "we must clear up certain grievances."

Arrested For Trying To Use City Library

The Louisiana Weekly
New Orleans, La.

JACKSON, Miss. (Special to the Louisiana Weekly) - History was recorded here Monday, when nine Negro students attempted to break the Jim Crow barrier of the last outpost (Mississippi), filed into the main branch of the Jackson public library and later refused a police request to leave.

The game nine were jailed by police later on charges of failing to move on when ordered by police.

Ref. 4-1-61

The students entered the library quietly and without demonstrations.

Officers said the youths from Tougaloo Southern Christian College for Negroes advised they had "no desire to call a lawyer" and made no effort to post bonds of $500 each. Members of the group said they had tried Negro branch libraries for information for term papers and were unable to get it.

The NAACP, which alerted newsmen of the march a few minutes before it began, said the nine were members of NAACP youth groups. Neither the youths nor the NAACP gave any reason for the march except a desire to use the library facilities.

There also was no word on whether the occurrence on the eve of the official opening of the Civil War Centennial in the state was by design. It was the first such move by a Negro group on public facilities, although two Negroes have sought to enter white colleges and a group of Negroes sought to move onto white beaches on the Gulf Coast last year.

About 200 students from Jackson State College staged a singing, chanting demonstration on the campus of the school Monday night in sympathy with the nine Tougaloo students. Dr. Jacob Reddix, president of Jackson State, and Jackson police quieted the demonstration and no arrests were made.

Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson declined comment and Gov. Ross Barnett was not available for comment.

Booked by police were: Alfred Lee Cook, 23, of Flint, Michigan; Evelyn Pierce, 19, of Buffalo, New York, Janice L. Jackson, 21, of Clarksdale, Miss.; Joseph Jackson, Jr., 23 of Memphis; Ethel Sawyer, 20 of Memphis, Tennessee; Jeraldin Edwards, 19, of Natchez, Miss.; James Cleo Bradford, 18, of Memphis; Meredith Coleman Anding Jr., 19, of Jackson; and Albert Earl Lassiter, 19, of Vicksburg.

New Orleans, La.

Police Arrive

Police Chief W. D. Rayfield and Chief of Detectives M. B. Pierce reached the library a few minutes after the Negroes arrived about 11 a.m.

Pierce asked, "who's in charge here?"

A girl student, who did not raise her face from her book, answered "No one," and Pierce said:

"All right, everyone of you get up and get out of here."

No one moved and he said: "The colored library is on Mill Street. You'll have to get up and get out."

When no one made any move, he said: "You're under arrest. Get up."

The students then got up and were taken to police cars for the trip to jail.

Nine policemen remained on duty in the library for about 15 minutes, then left the building. Three waited a few minutes longer in the front of the library before moving.

Three white men reading newspapers sat quietly through the entire incident, apparently undisturbed.

A library spokesman, asked what would happen if the Negroes had sought to check books out, said:

"You cannot check out a book without a card. To get a card you must live in Jackson, work in Jackson or go to school in Jackson. Tougaloo is not in Jackson."

The school, operated jointly by the Disciples of Christ Church and the Congregational - Christian Church, is located just north of the city.

Newsmen, on hand when the students arrived, had been alerted by Medgar Evers, state field secretary for the NAACP. Evers told The Associated Press youths were members of an NAACP youth group and that the march would be restricted to the Jackson library.

Atlanta Daily World
Atlanta, Ga.

JACKSON, Miss. — (UPI) — Nine young Negroes staged the first "sit-in demonstration in Mississippi capital city Monday and were arrested by police who mounted a guard to prevent a recurrence.

The demonstrators - students at Tougaloo Christian College -entered the main city library in downtown Jackson. Police arrived within 15 minutes, ordered them to leave and arrested them when they refused.

Dues, 3-28-61

Two policemen were ordered by Detective Chief M. B. Pierce to remain at the library for the rest of the day.

The Negroes refused to post bond. They were charged with violation of a 1960 law which provides maximum penalties of four months in jail plus a $200 fine for persons who refuse to leave a public facility when ordered to do so by a law enforcement officer.

The students began arriving at the library shortly before noon. A librarian asked one girl where she was from and what she wanted. The girl replied she was from Tougaloo Christian College and wanted to do research.

Most of the students went to tables on the library's first floor and began reading. Others checked the card catalog. One asked a library worker about a book and was answered courteously.

One of them, Evelyn Pierce, told United Press International her group was "doing research and this is the only library in town where we could get the material."

Only a few white persons were in the library, and they ignored the Negroes. There was no sign of violence. A librarian telephoned authorities and about six policemen rushed to the scene. They questioned a few of the students briefly.

Detective Pierce then announced "All right, everyone of you get up and get out of here. There's a colored library on Mill Street. You are welcome there."

The Negroes continued their library work. "You can hear, can't you?" Pierce said. He was ignored again.

"All right, everyone of you are under arrest," Pierce announced, and officers escorted the Negroes to police vehicles. The students did not protest.

While the five boys and four girls staged the sit-in another group of Negro students gathered in a store across the street. They scattered when police arrived.

9 Tougaloo Students Stay In Jail Until Trial

Memphis, Tenn.

From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., March 27.—Nine Negro students of Tougaloo Southern Christian College, six miles north of here, were arrested Monday for a Breach of the peace under a 1960 segregation law in a "read-in" demonstration at the white Municipal Library. They plan to remain in jail until their trial Wednesday.

Dues, 3-28-61

Medgar Evers, field secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said the students are members of his organization's youth movement. He had alerted newspapermen to the planned peaceful demonstration and they reached the library ahead of the students.

The "read-in" was peaceful. The students walked into the library just before noon and secured reference matesial from the files. They sait it was needed for papers due to be turned in Tuesday and which was not available at the two Negro libraries operated by the city.

However, police officials said they checked one of the Negro libraries and found that the needed material was available there. The demonstration followed Sunday's membership kickoff drive of the NAACP which was addressed by a white attorney of South Carolina, John Bolt Culbertson, a former FBI special agent.

There were five boys and four girls in the group. Three are from Memphis, one from Flint, Mich., one from Buffalo, N. Y., one from Clarksdale; one from Natchez; one from Vicksburg, and only one from Jackson. Their ages range from 18 to 23.

They face a fine of $200 and—or four months in jail.

Later, other students from Tougaloo College rode into Jackson in two cars and scattered over the business section. Several entered the H. L. Green Department Store and sat at a lunch counter momentarily, then green's Drugstore nearby and made purchases but did not try to enter the lunch room area.

Afterwards, the students met at the Continental Trailways Bus station and re-entered their automobiles. They drove by the police station and city hall to leave candy and cigarets they had purchased for their interned schoolmates.

The arrests are the first in Mississippi for attempts by Negroes to use segregated facilities.

Tougaloo Students Arrested For Entering White Library

Jackson Daily News

By W. C. SHOEMAKER
Daily News Staff Writer

Nine Negro college students marched into the main branch of the Jackson Municipal Library here yesterday and were arrested by police a few minutes later.

They were charged with creating a breach of the peace by failing or refusing to move on when ordered to do so by police.

Chief of Detectives M. B. Pierce said they could be released on $500 written bond each, but none applied for bond immediately.

They were identified as Alfred Lee Cook, 23, of Flint, Mich.; Evelyn Pierce, 19, of Buffalo, N. Y.; Janice L. Jackson, 21, of Clarksdale; Joseph Jackson Jr., 23, of Memphis; Ethel Sawyer, 20, of Memphis; Jeraldine Edwards, 19, of Natchez; James Cleo Bradford, 18, of Memphis; Meredith Coleman Anding Jr., 19, of 1248 Hattiesburg St., Jackson; and Albert Earl Lassiter, 19, of Vicksburg.

The "read-in" was the first move to mix public facilities in Jackson.

The nine students crossed the street in front of the library at 301 North State St., in a group about 11 a.m. and marched into the building.

Library workers questioned their purpose and they announced they were in search of research material for school work.

TAKE SEATS

She answered, "No one," without raising her face from the book she held.

"All right, everyone of you get up and get out of here," Pierce announced. Not one moved.

Again he called out "The colored library is on Mill St. You'll have to get up and get out."

Still nobody moved.

Then he announced, "You're under arrest. Get up."

Uniformed officers moved among the Negroes and led them to squad cars waiting outside.

BOOKED, JAILED

They were taken to police headquarters, booked and placed in cells.

None resisted police as the group was taken to jail. Several other Negro youths watched from across the street but made no move to join those arrested.

Pierce said he advised the nine they were entitled to notify attorneys but he said all told him they had "no desire to call a lawyer."

He said the group claimed they went first to Carver and College Park branch libraries for Negroes but were unable to secure the information they needed for schoolwork.

NOT ELIGIBLE

A library worker said most members of the group would have been unable to check out books from any city library.

Library rules require that persons removing books must live, work or attend school within the city limits.

Only one of the group gave an address within the city.

Medgar Evers of Jackson, field secretary for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said the students were members of an NAACP youth group.

He notified some members of the press in advance of the "read-in."

Three white men were in the same section of the library when the Negroes entered. They kept their seats. Several women patrons watched from near the door.

Gov. Ross Barnett was reported "in conference" and would not comment.

State Sovereignty Commission director Albert Jones, whose job it is to preserve segregation, said he was informed of the "read in" shortly after it took place and had no advance warning.

Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson declined comment.

Trials for the nine will probably be held before Municipal Judge James Spencer Wednesday afternoon.

The charge under which they were arrested was one of several laws passed by the 1960 legislature.

Affidavits police filed against them charged that "with intent to provoke a breach of the peace, did then and there wilfully and unlawfully congregate with others at, around and inside the Municipal Library, Main Branch, 301 North State St., Jackson, Miss. Same being a public building owned and operated by the City of Jackson."

They could receive fines of up to $500 and six months in jail.

Clubs, Dogs Used To Halt Negro Rally

By BEN MCCARTY

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Police waded into a crowd of Negroes with clubs and dogs Wednesday while the group waited outside City Court where nine Negro college students were convicted of disturbing the peace.

City Judge James L .Spencer fined the students $100 each and gave them 30-day suspended jail sentences for going to a white library. Negro attorney R. Jess Brown said they would appeal to Hinds County Court.

The incident outside the court led the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to demand of the governor of Mississippi in a telegram: "Call off the dogs . . . slavery is over."

Police attacked the Negro group shortly before the trial began. A group of whites and the Negroes lined a city block in front of the City Court building.

The more than 100 Negroes started clapping and singing and Chief of Detectives M. B. Pierce said: "That's it! Move 'em out. Get 'em!"

Many of the Negroes made a quick dash caross a parking lot to safety. Others who lingered were shoved roughly and clubbed on the head and back by police sticks.

The two dogs, brought in from the Vicksburg, Miss., Police Department since the library sit-in, fiercely attacked the crowd. Several people were bitten or had their clothes ripped.

Chief Pierce said police charged Red Hedrick, a Rankin County bootlegger, with assault and battery and carrying a concealed weapon after he pistol-whipped a Negro during the melee.

The white people at the s were given verbal orders to move out. They were not struck.

Police Move Fast To End Jackson Rally

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Police poised with trained dogs sprinted into and scattered a crowd of hand-clapping, shouting Negroes outside the Hinds County Courthouse Wednesday.

Inside the courthouse, a state judge opened the trial of nine Negro college students charged with trying to integrate a white public library.

Jackson police, moving sharply at the terse command of a sergeant, chased more than 100 Negroes from the area within seconds after the nine students entered the courthouse, a signal for the outburst of clapping and yelling.

"Get them," barked the police sergeant when the noise began the two dozen officers and two police dogs dashed across the street.

The nine students, all from Tougaloo Southern Christian College for Negroes staged a sit in at the white city library Monday and were arrested.

If convicted, they could be fined $200.

The demonstration, supported by the National Association for the Avancement of Colored People, touched off a student protest at Jackson State (Negro) College, a Jackson State student march through the business district that was broken up by the police; and an NAACP protest rally.

Police Stop Negro Parade In Jackson

Officers said they exploded one tear gas bomb and held the snarling dog in front of the students. They also used motorcycles and a police car to clear the street leading to downtown Jackson.

Chief of Detective M. B. Pierce said the students planned to parade, "But we weren't going to let them. They didn't have a permit."

Edgar Evers of Jackson, field secretary for the Mississippi Branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said the Negro students were peacefully marching down the street to protest the arrest of nine Tougaloo Southern Christian College students who participated in a sit-in at the white Jackson municipal library Monday. Tougaloo is a Negro college.

Evers said the police stopped the Jackson college students and turned loose police dogs. Tear gas was used to break up groups that wouldn't disperse, he said, adding that several Negroes were struck by club-carrying policemen but no one was injured seriously. At least one Negro was arrested, he said.

Clash Occurs at Courthouse in Mississippi Where 9 Students Are Convicted

The New York Times

JACKSON, Miss., March 29 (UPI) — Club-swinging police and two German Shepherd dogs today chased more than 100 Negroes from a courthouse where nine Negro students were convicted for staging Mississippi's first sit-in demonstration.

Several of the Negroes were struck by the clubs and at least one person was bitten by the dogs held on leashes by two policemen.

Medgar Evers, state National Association for Advancement of Colored People field representative, one of those hit by the police, said "women and children in the group were beaten unmercifully."

The incident occurred shortly before the trial of the students under a 1960 law making it a misdemeanor to refuse a policeman's order to disperse. The nine Negroes, arrested Monday when they refused to leave a public library, were fined $100 each and given suspended thirty-day jail sentences.

One side of the municipal courtroom had been reserved for Negroes and it was filled forty minutes before the trial began. Fourteen policemen and the two dogs lined the front steps of the courthouse and turned away other Negroes who tried to enter. Separate groups of Negroes and white gormed across the street.

Policemen, swinging nightsticks, and the dogs waded into the scattering Negroes.

The policemen then returned to the courthouse steps and asked the crowd of white persons—totaling about seventy—to disperse. Traffic in front of the building was blocked and bystanders were ordered to move on as the trial was conducted.

Jack Travis, city attorney, put two prosecution witnesses on the stand, both veteran police officers. Capt. J. L. Ray and Lieut. C. R. Wilson each testified they were called to the library Monday and saw the nine defendants there. They testified the youths refused orders to leave.

Both also expressed the opinion that the presence of the defendants in the library constituted a breach of peace.

The defense declared that the students conducted themselves orderly. But City Judge James L. Spencer said defense lawyers "overlooked pertinent parts" of the law under which the youths were charged. He said the youths were guilty because their conduct, although orderly, could have touched off a breach of the peace.

Defense attorneys served notice of appeal.

N. A. A. C. P. Aide Protests

Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the N. A. A. C. P., charged in a telegram to Gov. Ross Barnett of Mississippi yesterday that the police had directed an overflow crowd of peaceful citizens to an area across from the courthouse and then had attacked them with dogs.

According to a report, he said, a minister was bitten on the arm, and other men and women were clubbed and cursed by the police. He demanded that the Governor protect the citizens from police attacks.

FBI Investigates Police Rout In Jackson, Miss.

Atlanta Daily World

JACKSON, Miss — (UPI) —FBI agents assured that "no unnecessary force" will be used by local officers against Negroes protesting racial segregation, moved in Thursday to investigate a police rout of about 100 Negroes.

The Negroes were chased from the city courthouse Wednesday by 25 policemen brandishing night sticks and holding two snaring German police dogs.

They had gathered in front of a courtroom where nine youths were about to go on trial for staging Mississippi's first sit-in.

A Justice Department spokesman in Washington said "We are investigating the situation in Jackson and have received reports from the FBI and local leaders."

The Mississippi NAACP called a mass meeting Thursday night to protest "police brutality." Among the speakers was Clarence Mitchell, director of the NAACP's Washington bureau.

The state sovereignty commission, an offiical pro - segregation agency, met and announced "a close watch is being kept on recent disturbances in Jackson."

During the brief eruption of violence Wednesday, some of the Negroes were hit with police clubs and at least one was bitten by a dog. A Negro photographer, Thomas Armstrong, was pistol whipped by a white bystander.

Several hours later police arrested G. W. Red Hydrick, 55, an alleged bootlegger from nearby Rankin County, for the assault on Thompson.

The Justice Department said it had "receive dassurances from responsible leaders in Jackson that no unnecessary force will be used."

While the Negroes were being chased outside the courthouse, nine Negro college students inside were being convicted of staging a sit-in at the segregated library here. They were fined $100 each on breach of peace charges and immediately filed notice of appeal.

Utmost Care Used In Charging 'Miss. 9'

The Louisiana Weekly

New Orleans, La.

JACKSON, Miss. -- Authorities here exercised utmost care in "selecting the charge they would prefer against nine Negro students of Tougaloo College who used the facilities of a public library designated for whites here last week.

A brief outbreak of violence in front of the Municipal Court Building where the students' trial was held last Wednesday took the spotlight from the proceedings inside.

But these proceedings were considered by authorities to be very important in the fight to preserve racial segregation in Mississippi.

The students were convicted under one of many laws passed by the 1960 Mississippi Legislature as segregation safeguards. Specifically, they were charged under a statute making it unlawful for a group of persons to refuse orders to disperse by officers who believe the gathering amounts to a breach of the peace.

The youths had appeared at Jackson's segregated main library, they testified, to do research work, but their main purpose was to make possible a new court test of segregation laws.

Jackson has a city ordinance prohibiting Negroes from using the main library, and has another ordinance which prohibits white persons from using the George Washington Carver Library.

Authorities, sensing defeat if the race angle were used in the arrest and trial of the Negro students, selected the state statute to charge them with "refusing to move when ordered."

During the trial, the white policemen testified they ordered the students to move out because they felt the students' presence in the library would have brought on trouble.

Defense Attorneys R. Jess Brown and Jack H. Young did not deny that the students refused to move. They maintained that the officers had no grounds for believing a breach of the peace was involved.

The officers, when questioned on this point, were forced to admit that other library patrons were not paying any attention to the students. The officers were rather vague and cautious. They reportedly had been instructed not to mention the word "Negro" during their testimony in order that the case would not show up in the court's records as a race matter.

This strategy, authorities felt, would offset the contention by the defendants that their constitutional rights had been violated.

However, this question possibly will be established and when this is done, the matter will be subject to action by the U. S. Supreme Court as a final resort.

Presently, the students' case is scheduled to go to the Hinds County court where it will be re-tried. A state law provides that misdemeanor convictions made in county courts and upheld in circuit court cannot be appealed further unless there is a question of constitutional rights.

These were the facts which were obviously considered beforehand when authorities considered the arrest and conviction of the "Tougaloo Nine."

The Local Students Sit-In A Challenge To Adult Responsibility

The City of Jackson and the State of Mississippi got the first taste and what should be the last taste of Negro student sit-in demonstration here Monday, when students from Tougaloo Southern Christian College sit-in at the Jackson Municipal Library.

The student sit-ins goes far beyond the fact that somewhere along the line the use of students groups as a third force to expose and dramatize the conditions about which they complain, and from which they suffer, have been injected into the Negro struggle for the full benefits of American citizenship, while they expose and dramatize, they also cry out for the fulfillment of the highest ideals, and greatest promise of American Democracy to the United States as a great nation, as well as to the rest of the people of the world.

In the very first instance we would point out here that the sit-in phenomenon that has come to possess a certain kind of glamour and attraction for Negro students, adding a new type of coloring to the American scene, should best be left to run its full course here in Mississippi, and be handled with the greatest care by those who have the power of police and law enforcement authority less there be created such incidents that will serve the interest of forces who perhaps have more concern for continued student-sits than the winning of full rights of citizenship for American Negroes.

The students sit-ins here Monday have been the stimulation for a number of meetings in the Negro community and in all probability such meetings have resulted in the White Committee. However, as we have often pointed out here nothing constructive is ever going to happen, and the broken down lines of communication between the responsible white and Negro leaders of the community, with a crowd of Negroes off somewhere in a meeting talking about white folks, and a crowd of white folks off in a meeting talking about Negroes, and until, such meetings and working together of responsible white and Negro leaders for the correction of the conditions about which Negroes complain, and from which they suffer, the student sit-ins will continue as a great challenge to local adult responsibility.

Miss. integration efforts bring concern to both sides

The Afro-American

JACKSON, Miss. — As an aftermath of the first organized efforts to crack Mississippi's hard core segregation, both whites and nonwhites were speculating with concert last week about the future.

This organized move — a library sit - in involving nine colored college students — was followed by a chain of events which climaxed in a melee at City Court building where police, using nightsticks and vicious dogs dispersed a crowd of more than 100 demonstrators who had gathered for the trial.

This action was protested strongly by the NAACP. Roy Wilkins, NAACP executive secretary, in a telegram from New York to Mississippi Gov. Ross Barnett, said: "Call off the dogs, Legree. Slavery is over."

The nine students were convicted of disturbing the peace and given fines of $100 and suspended 30 - day sentences. The court action is expected to lay the groundwork for an appeal that could bring the segegatin laws and customs of the state into Feeral Court.

The court aspet of the case, however, is just one of several giving Mississippians an uneas[illegible] many people are sorried about continuance of integration efforts by colored leaders because they fear violence may result.

WHITES IN the state feel that colored leadership has been, for the most part, cautious in pressing integration efforts because of the deep feeling among segregationists.

There is an economic angle in the issue which faces both races: Almost all realize that regardless of who wins in a court battle or racial incident, everyone loses tranquility, security, and money.

Practically every area plagued by racial trouble has experienced a financial recession, in the aftermath of the trouble and no Mississippian can really afford a business recession.

Jackson Mayor Appeals For Racial Peace

The Louisiana Weekly New Orleans La.

JACKSON, Miss. (ANP) -- Several interesting developments have resulted from the recent arrest and conviction of nine Tougaloo College students who staged a sit-in at the white Municipal Library.

Observers in Oxford, Miss., last week, declared that as the drive for equal rights by Negroes moves forward the folly of segregation becomes more evident.

Here in Jackson, Mayor Allen Thompson employed the medium of television to urge racial peace in the wake of this city's first experience with the student movement. This was the mayor's first public pronouncement regarding several demonstrations which occurred following the library sit-in.

The latest twist in the racial wars was the charge by Mississippi State Representative Phillip D. Bryant at Oxford that the Sovereignty Commission was responsible for this state's first Negro sit-in at the Jackson "white" library.

Bryant blames the commission on grounds that its speakers tell northern audiences there is racial harmony in Mississippi with no sit-ins and no suits pending thereby provoking action by protest groups like the NAACP.

It was pointed out that the Sovereignty Commission, like the White Citizens' Council, is one of this state's chief anti-integration operations. Somehow the segregationists have apparently found a flaw in their white supremacy tactics.

Bryant, in his attack against the commission, called for an urgent re-appraisal of the organization, which the Legislature established to campaign for segregation.

He sharply criticized State Sen. Hayden Campbell of Hinds County for advocating more tax money to send segregation boosters to northern cities.

Such "boosters" are an "open invitation and a challenge to the NAACP," Bryant said.

"They have come into Mississippi and now try something just to save face. The best way to handle segregation is to keep our mouth shut. Every speaker who leaves Mississippi is just holding up a target for the NAACP to shoot at," he declared.

Bryant said the Legislature has "created a monster and it's going to be the job of all of us in the next session to put a harness on it."

Jackson's Mayor Allen Thompson last week made a 10-minute television appearance following an afternoon meeting with three Negro ministers in which he assured them city officials would meet with local Negro leaders at least once every three months to discuss race relations.

The Rev. E. A. Mays, one of the trio who visited City Hall, said "If we intend to continue to live together in peace and harmony, we must clear up certain grievances."

Meanwhile, Attorneys R. Jess Brown and Jack H. Young, who represented the "Tougaloo Nine," have appealed the $100 fines and 30-day suspended jail sentences which were imposed on their clients. The appeal has been set for the May term of the Hinds County Circuit Court.

F. B. I. Holds Inquiry; Negroes Launch Boycott

The Louisville Defender

Louisville, Ky.

JACKSON, Miss. — Negro citizens attending an NAACP mass meeting here recently, learned that the U. S. Justice Department is investigating violence used against them by police.

Clarence Mitchell, director of the Association's Washington Bureau, told the meeting that the Justice Department has been urged "to indicate to Congress whether any additional legislation" is needed to protect Negro Mississippians.

The meeting grew out of the mass clubbing and police dog attack upon an orderly crowd outside the courthouse where nine NAACP college students were tried for attempting to use the "white" library.

The crowd, numbering about 100, was standing across the street, having overflowed the courtroom, when the students arrived for trial. They applauded when the students appeared. Irritated, the police moved in on the peaceful crowd, dogs biting and blackjacks and clubs swinging.

Medgar Evers, NAACP field secretary in this state, said "Women and children in the group were beaten."

Secretary Beaten

Evers was struck around and about the head with a pistol and blackjacked. NAACP Assistant Youth Secretary Julie Wright, standing nearby, escaped injury.

Roy Wilkins, NAACP executive secretary, called on Gov. Ross Barnett "to provide protection for citizens and particularly for Secretary Evers. His wire said the Jackson police were "attackers rather than protectors".

NAACP Attorney Jack H. Young was stopped by a Mississippi policeman as he entered the court house to defend the youth. "Where you going, Shortie," demanded the peace officer. When the attorney paused, the peace officer bellowed, "I'll hit you!"

Another officer informed him of Young's identity and the attorney was allowed to enter. The students, from the Association's unit at Tougaloo Southern Christian College, were convicted, fined $100 each and given 30-day suspended sentences.

Meanwhile, outside, the melee raged and Rev. S. L. Whitney, pastor of Farish Street Baptist Church, the city's largest Negro church, was severely bitten by the dogs, as was Bishop David McPherson.

Persons, attending the rally Thursday evening, passed a resolution calling for a withholding of patronage campaign against Jackson's entire downtown shopping district.

Violence: A Way Of Life In Mississippi

At left, colored free-lance photographer, Thomas Armstrong, walks away from the courthouse at Jackson, Miss., where nine colored students were convicted last week on charges growing out of their request to use books at a public library. Mr. Armstrong disregards a snarling, vicious police dog barking at his heels as he obeys an order to "move on." Evidently his composure was too much to stomach for the white man, back to camera in right photo, who pulled a revolver and began chasing Mr. Armstrong. The man with the pistol caught up with the hapless cameraman and beat him about the head with the gun butt. With serious injuries, the victim was rushed to a doctor.

Several hours later a white man identified by UPI as G. W. "Red' Hydrick, 55-year-old convicted bootlegger from neighboring Rankin county, was arrested on charges of assault in connection with the violence.

Last night, 350 persons attended a rally sponsored by the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, protesting the arrests.

MEDGAR EVARS, field secretary of the NAACP in Mississippi urged the group to let the students "know we are with them" and attend the trial.

"There will be no demonstration; we had no demonstration the last time," he said.

He referred to the trial of nine Tougaloo Southern College students who attempted to integrate the municipal library. Outside the courthouse, a crowd of 100 Negroes applauded and chanted as the defendants entered. They were dispersed by policemen swinging night sticks, and two police dogs on leashes.

The group last night unanimously approved a resolution calling on Gov. Ross R. Barnett and Mayor Allen Thompson to "assure all citizens choosing to attend the trial Friday full protection of the law."

EVARS ALSO called on Negroes of the city to seek employment at firms with government contracts and vowed that all such firms refusing to employ Negroes would "be brought under the scrutiny" of the Kennedy administration.

He said Negroes should be employed as policemen and women, and firemen in Negro areas of the city, and as federal employes in the Internal Revenue Dept., postoffice and Veterans Administration Hospital.

He said 60 to 65 per cent of bus passengers in the city are Negro, but no Negro drivers are employed. He urged private car owners to pick up Negroes waiting at bus stops and take them where they are going until Negro bus drivers are employed.

Jackson newspapers were rapped by Evars for not reporting the time and place of NAACP meetings before they are held.

ABOUT 350 persons attending the meeting heard the Rev. John Mangram, chaplain at Tougaloo, warn that Negroes would not use "a gun, billy club or Nazi-trained police dogs in their struggle for racial equality."

The Negro minister said a great many people are concerned with the struggle for racial equality in Mississippi's capital city.

He denied a claim by Mayor Thompson that the demonstrations were influenced by outsiders.

"The charge is correct only if he (Thompson meant an outsider was anyone who might be a Negro," Mangrum said.

9 Miss. Sit-Ins Get $100 Fines

JACKSON, Miss. — While the Jackson police were moving quickly into a group of Negroes who were standing near the court house, the policemen swinging clubs and advancing upon them with dogs tearing and biting in every direction, nine Negro defendants, charged with a statutory crime of breaching the peace, walked into the city's hall of justice for trial.

Each was fined $100 and given 30 day suspended sentences.

After testimony was heard, in reply to the defense's contention that the state had failed to make the proper showing, the judge, in his decision, indicating that there was no proof of disorderly conduct, whatsoever, explained his position in finding the defendants guilty by stating;

"The actual conduct of the defendants is not the test under the statute," and that defense lawyers overlooked pertinent parts" of the law under which the youths were charged.

In brief, the facts reveal that on March 27, the defendants entered a public library previously maintained for whites, solely, took seats and acted in the same manner as others usually do, and upon being directed by the police to leave, refused to move. They were then arrested.

R. Jess Brown and Jack Young, attorneys for the nine, offered no witnesses, but claimed the nine were arrested because they went into the library,

Brown charged that arrest of the nine was illegal "whether in Mississippi or Soviet Russia." He said that under the terms of the arrest he would be fearful to walk into the court building or enter the bank to make a deposit, or to be present almost anywhere especially in any public building.

"Just to be present would be sufficient to be arrested," said Brown. Young argued "They had not broken a law."

Lawyers for the defendants immediately served notice of appeal, following the conviction. There was no mention of race during the trial.

Police use clubs, dogs to scatter Negro crowd

BY BEN McCARTY

JACKSON, Miss., March 30 — (AP) — Mississippi's capital city faced an uneasy quiet today after club-wielding policemen accompanied by trained dogs waded into a crowd of 100 Negroes outside a courtroom yesterday.

The police action preceded the trial of nine Negro college students charged with breach of the peace for a sit-in demonstration Monday at a public library. They were convicted and drew $100 fines and 30-day suspended jail sentences.

The Birmingham

THE NINE, all students at Tougaloo Southern Christian College on the northern outskirts of Jackson, staged the state's first mass anti-segregation demonstration.

A crowd of Negroes, many students or faculty members at three Negro colleges in the area—Tougaloo Southern Christian, Jackson State and Campbell—gathered outside the city court building, before the hearing.

As the defendants started up the steps of the building the spectators began clapping and singing.

An officer said: "That's it! Move 'em out! Get em!"

POLICE MOVED quickly into the Negro group, swinging their sticks and shoving. The German Shepherd dogs lunged at the crowd.

The younger Negroes quickly scattered through a parking lot to safety, but some of the slower ones were clubbed on the head and back. The dogs bit and ripped the clothing of several persons.

Chief of Police M. B. Pierce said G. W. (Red) Hydrick, a 55-year-old Rankin County white bootlegger, was charged with assault and battery and carrying a concealed weapon after he pistol whipped Negro Thomas Armstrong during the melee. Hydrick was the only person arrested.

Armstrong, who write for a Jackson newspaper and does free-lance photography, was chased from in front of the building before he was attack by Hydrick.

POLICE ORDERED the white people in the area to move out, but did not strike them.

"Call off the dogs . . . slavery is over," the president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People wired Gov. Ross Barnett.

The small court room was jammed during the hearing. Negroes sat on one side, white on the other. The defendants sat silently on the first two rows in the Negro section.

The Birmingham

IN HIS VERDICT City Judge James L. Spencer said the presence of the defendants in the white library could have resulted in a breach of the peace. He noted there was no actual disturbance.

Thurs. 3-30-61

Spencer said such sit-ins have caused breach of the peace in other areas. "Jackson has avoided any such incidents until now," he said. "By the grace of God, we will continue to avoid them."

Defense Attorney Jack Young said the only reason the students were arrested was "just because they were in there."

Young, a Negro, said the city offered no evidence of intent to commit a breach of the peace. He termed the arrests "police state" action.

NEGRO ATTORNEY R. Jess Brown said, "if these defendants are convicted on this evidence, then I fear for all of us. I could be convicted for walking into this public building."

Police Capt. J. L. Ray testified the group would have caused "trouble" if permitted to stay in the library. He said he did not see any actual disturbance.

"They were orderly," he said, "and created no disturbance when told they were under arrest."

Police Lt. C. R. Wilson testified "there could have been serious trouble from the presence of this group in the library."

THE DEFENSE claimed the state did not show evidence of breach of the peace and asked Spencer to rule the defendants not guilty. The motion was overruled.

Young said an appeal would be taken to the April term of Hinds County Court.

Moved Out Of Courthouse At Sit-In Trial Of Nine Students

By CLIFT SESSIONS

JACKSON, Miss., March 29.—Club-swinging police and two German shepherd dogs Wednesday chased more than 100 Negroes from a courthouse where nine Negro students were convicted for staging Mississippi's first sit-in demonstration.

The Memphis Press-Scimitar

Several of the Negroes were struck by the clubs and at least one person was bitten by police dogs held on leashes by two officers.

Thurs. 3-30-61

Medgar Evers, state field representative of the National Association for Advancement of Colored People, one of those hit by police, said "women and children in the group were beaten unmercifully."

Begin Clapping Hands

The incident occurred shortly before trial of the students under a 1960 law making it a misdemeanor to refuse an officer's order to disperse.

Scores of law officers surrounded the courthouse as the youths were tried for appearing in the city's main library Monday and refusing orders to leave.

City Judge James L. Spencer fined them $100 each and gave each a suspended 30-day jail sentence. Their attorneys said the convictions would be appealed.

One side of the municipal courtroom had been reserved for Negroes and it was filled 40 minutes before the trial began. Fourteen officers and the two dogs were on the front steps of the courthouse and turned away other Negroes who tried to enter. Separate groups of Negroes and whites formed across the street.

Shortly before court convened, the Negroes began clapping their hands and an officer yelled, "Move 'em out."

Police, swinging night-sticks, and the dogs waded into the Negroes.

Officers then returned to the courthouse steps and asked the crowd of white persons—totaling about 70—to disperse.

City Atty. Jack Travis put two prosecution witnesses on the stand, both veteran police officers. Capt. J. L. Ray and Lt. C. R. Wilson each testified they were called to the library Monday and saw the nine defendants there. They testified the youths refused orders to leave.

Both officers also expressed the opinion that the presence of the defendants in the library constituted a breach of the peace.

Capt. Ray said it was "unusual" for the students to be there and the lawyer, Jack Young, asked why. "I can't exactly tell you," said Ray.

Judge Explains Action

The defense put on no witnesses. But Mr. Young commented that, "unless I'm mistaken, we're not to the point where this is a police state." He said police officers "had no right" to ask the students to leave the library.

But Judge Spencer said defense lawyers "overlooked pertinent parts" of the law under which the youths were charged.

"The actual conduct of the defendants," he said, "is not the test under the statute."

He said the youths were guilty because their conduct, although orderly, could have touched off a breach of the peace.

Judge Spencer said such "violations" elsewhere had resulted in violence but "this community has avoided such things and by the grace of God will continue to do so."

Lawmaker Says Sovereignty Group Giving NAACP A Good Target

By LARRY SPEAKES

OXFORD, Miss., March 28.—A state legislator Tuesday put the blame for Mississippi's first Negro sit-ins "squarely and directly" on the state Sovereignty Commission.

Memphis 3-29-61

Representative Philip D. Bryant of Oxford said he is convinced the public library demonstrations Monday in the state capital were the "direct result" of the Sovereignty Commission's out-of-state speakers. "And I think an urgent appraisal of this program is long overdue," Mr. Bryant said.

P 15

He strongly criticized state Senator Hayden Campbell of Hinds County for advocating more funds for the speakers program in Northern cities. "Senator Campbell, I don't believe, has stopped to think about the far-reaching implications of his statement," the Lafayette County lawmaker said.

The Memphis Press-Scimitar

Seen As Challenge

"We send these speakers North and they tell their audiences glowing tales of racial harmony, with no sit-ins, no law suits pending, and the like," Mr. Bryant said. "What do we expect . . ."

He said the speeches were an "open invitation and a challenge" to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. "They have to come into Mississippi now and try something just to save face," he said.

Senator Campbell said Monday the speaker's bureau trips to the North to reach segregation are the "best bargain" ever in Mississippi. The bureau has spent more than $10,000 since it was begun last June.

"The best way to handle segregation is to keep our mouth shut," Mr. Bryant said. "Every speaker who leaves Mississippi is just holding up a target for the NAACP to shoot at."

He said speakers sent to northern areas were "often inefficient" in their talks. "But that's not the point," said Mr. Bryant, "we're building a glass house in Mississippi for the NAACP to cast stones at."

Calls It Monster

He criticized the Sovereignty Commission for doing what he termed the Legislature's job. "We've created a monster and it's going to be the job of all of us in the next session of the Legislature to put a harness on it."

Mr. Bryant said he "strongly favored" a curb on commission activities. "I'll be behind any move which will put them on the right track and get them doing the job for which they were intended," he said.

The state legislator two weeks ago criticized the commission's payment of state funds to the White Citizens Council, saying it was often used for "political purposes."

Dog, tear gas stop Jackson demonstration

By The Associated Press

A snarling police dog and a tear gas bomb stopped Negro students from parading in support of arrested sit-in demonstrations at Jackson, Miss.

"Police state tactics" were charged by the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People in protesting the use of city policemen to surround Jackson State College yesterday.

The developments followed Mississippi's first sit-in, when nine students from another Negro college were jailed for demanding service at the white city library.

A snarling police dog was held in front of the parading students and several Negroes were clubbed by policemen, the NAACP charged.

A Mississippi legislator, Rep. Philip D. Brant, blamed the sit-in on the segregation-minded State Sovereignty Commission, which he said sends speakers north to "tell their audiences glowing tales of racial harmony . . . the best way to handle segregation is to keep our mouths shut," he said.

Demonstrating Negro students chanted, "We want freedom."

IN WASHINGTON, Secretary of the Interior Stewart L. Udall said he meant business when he told the Washington Redskins to hire players without regard to race.

The next move, he said, is up to Owner George Preston Marshall, whose Redskins signed a 30-year contract to play in a new baseball stadium being built on land leased from the National Park Service.

New Jersey's Civil War Centennial Commission, which has a Negro member, decided to attend the national commission's assembly next month after the site of the meeting was changed from a segregated hotel to Charleston's U. S. Naval Base.

EARLIER, South Carolina State Rep. Nat Cabell and Executive Chairman Everett J. Landers of the New Jersey Commission heated up long distance telephone circuits in an argument over the segregation issue.

"We would prefer you did not come," Cabell told Landers. "We welcome visitors, but when they visit with us we think they should observe our laws and customs."

Cabell told newsmen, "I told him there would be no hostility but there would be an awful lot of ignoring done."

AT RENO, NEV., hymn-singing Negroes picketed gambling casinos after the state legislature rejected a bill to authorize damage suits in instances of racial discrimination, such as in housing.

The Negroes claimed Reno's gamblers were aligned with State Sen. James Slattery who led the successful fight against the bill.

Secretary Ted Lamb of the Little Rock School Board warned that unless the board speeds up desegregation, federal courts will force complete integration of the city's schools.

He pointed out that there are only seven Negroes in Little Rock's Central High School compared with nine in 1959.

A Federal Court of Appeals has ruled that Little Rock integration must be extended to junior high school.

Police Dispel Singing Mob As Court Convicts Negroes

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — City Court convicted nine Negro college students Wednesday of disturbing the peace by sitting in a white library. Earlier, police used clubs and dogs to disperse a crowd that gathered outside the court in protest.

City Judge James L. Spencer fined the nine students $100 each and gave them 30-day suspended jail sentences. Their attorney, R. Jess Brown, said they would appeal to Hinds County court.

As soon as the Negroes—approximately 100—started singing and clapping, Chief of Detectives M. B. Pierce said: "That's it! Move 'em out. Get 'em."

The police and dogs guarding the front of the building rushed at the crowds. Negroes who did not get out fast enough were clubbed on the head and back.

The crowd of whites were ordered to leave the area. They were not struck.

During the trial, Judge Spencer said the students who went into the white city library congregated with others in a public place, failed to move on orders from the police, and their presence could have resulted in a breach of the peace.

Two policemen testified they believed the presence of the Negroes in the library could have caused a disturbance.

Spencer said such sit-ins have caused breaches of the peace in other areas.

Defense attorney Jack Young said the only reason the students were arrested was "just because they were in there."

He said the city offered no evidence of intent to commit a breach of the peace.

NEGROES IN CLASH

Police Use Tear Gas, Clubs in Mississippi Protest

JACKSON, Miss., March 28 (UPI)—The police fired tear gas and wielded clubs today to break up a march by fifty Negro students toward the city jail to protest the arrests of Mississippi's first sit-in demonstrators.

No one was believed seriously injured although several students reported they had been struck by the police clubs.

The melee occurred when the students had marched about ten blocks from the Jackson State College campus and found their path blocked by police patrol cars and thirty policemen, deputy sheriffs and constables.

The police ordered the students to disband. The students, seeking to demonstrate in front of the city jail in protest against the arrests of nine Negroes who entered a white public library yesterday, ignored the order.

The police then began swinging night-sticks to disperse the students. Several tear gas bombs were fired and the group scattered.

About 50 students headed for the city jail, but were stopped about 10 blocks away.

Other officers had ringed the state Capitol, apparently to forestall a march on that building. They left, however, after the parading students were stopped by about 30 officers, including Hinds County deputies sheriff and constables.

Refuse To Disband

When the students refused to disband, police started swinging clubs. No one was believed seriously injured, although one student reported a lump of his back which he said was caused by a club.

One officer held the two police dogs on a leash. They growled and lunged toward the marching students, but were held in check.

Medgar Evers, field secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said the Negro students "were peacefully marching down the street to protest against the arrest of the nine Tougaloo students."

The student march preceded by several hours Tuesday night's "mass meeting" of Negroes called by the NAACP to protest the student arrests. The night meeting was held in a Negro Baptist church. Police patrolled the area.

Police had been alerted for an expected demonstration during Tuesday's Civil War Centennial commemoration program.

TRIAL SET TODAY FOR 'READ-INS'

Nine Face Charges Of Breaching Peace; Mass Meeting Held

By W. C. SHOEMAKER
Daily News Staff Writer

Nine Negro college students go on trial here today in the first organized attempt to force integration in public facilities in Jackson.

The nine, all students at Tougaloo Southern Christian College north of Jackson, face charges of creating a breach of the peace by conducting a "read-in" at the main branch of the Jackson Municipal Library at 301 North State St., Monday morning.

If convicted they face fines of $200 and jail terms of up to four months under one of several laws passed by the 1960 Legislature.

Meanwhile police spread word that officers will not allow groups to congregate in the area of police headquarters when the trials begin at 4 p.m. today.

Chief of Detectives M. B. Pierce said spectators will be allowed to fill available seats in the municipal courtroom for the first round of the test case. All unseated will be ordered to leave the area, he said.

300 AT MEETING

Last night about 300 Negroes, mostly students from Jackson State College and Campbell College of Jackson and Tougaloo, attended a meeting at College Hill Baptist Church on Florence St., in protest of the arrests.

"This is just a beginning," the Rev. John D. Mangram, chaplain at Tougaloo, told the crowd.

The nine students had been freed from city jail on bond an hour earlier and sat in the crowd.

Negro leaders made little attempt to free them until late yesterday when attorneys arranged for release on appearance bond pending trial this afternoon.

Bonds were signed by Robert L. T. Smith Sr., Robert L. T. Smith Jr., and John Dixon, all Jackson Negroes. The younger Smith is a participant in a lawsuit pending in federal court which seeks to halt payment of state funds by the Sovereignty Commission to the Citizens Councils.

Yesterday afternoon about 75 youths, mostly college students, began a flag-waving march from Lynch St., toward downtown Jackson. They said they planned a protest in behalf of their jailed schoolmates at police headquarters.

MARCH BLOCKED

Police met them on Pearl St., at Minerva, several blocks from the downtown section, and dispersed them.

Officers told the group they could not conduct a parade without a permit.

Jackson Mayor Flays Outsiders

Says Incidents Planned To Create Friction And 'Destroy Harmony'

By KENNETH TOLER

From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., March 31.—Mayor Allen Thompson said Friday night that recent anti-segregation demonstrations by Negroes were "planned and promoted by people beyond the borders of our city."

In a televised speech, Mayor Thompson asserted that the "chief aim" of those he accused of instigating the demonstrations "seems to be to create unrest and friction among our people and between the races."

"If outside influences are successful in creating misunderstanding and suspicion between our white people and our colored people, we will lose in a day our most valuable asset—the spirit of harmony that has been achieved during the past century," he said. "Let's not be led by false prophets down a road of conflict and strife."

Confers With Ministers

Several hours before the Mayor's address, three ranking Negro ministers conferred with him and other city officials at the city hall and were assured that the three-member council would meet "at least every three months with Negro leaders to hear a racial progress report."

Rev. E. A. Mays, pastor of Central Methodist Church, told the city officials that, "if we intend to continue to live together in peace and harmony, then we must clear up certain grievances."

The Negro ministers proposed a committee of their race leaders to meet with city officials and were assured by Mayor Thompson that "the doors of City Hall are always open to the Negroes of this city."

Others in the group were Bishop David McPherson of the Christ Temple Church, and Rev. T. B. Brown, pastor of Mount Helm Baptist Church, representing the all-Negro Interdenominational Ministers' Alliance.

Brutality Charged

They told officials they were investigating charges of police brutality to Negroes before the recent demonstrations.

Chief of Police W. D. Rayfield told the group that "we have received more complaints of police brutality from white people than Negroes."

Stating that "our people are dependent on each other," the Mayor said "let's not permit organized incidents created by outsiders who have no real interest in our welfare to destroy our mutual good will which we have built up over a period of a hundred years."

"This assurance I give to each of you—our laws will be strictly enforced," he said. "Any infraction of the law by either a white person or a colored person will be vigirously prosecuted. The rights and safety of every citizen will be protected."

Cites New Schools

Mayor Thompson pointed out that since 1950 16 new white schools and eight new Negro schools have been completed and that additions and improvements are being made to 14 other Negro schools.

He noted that there are two municipal libraries for Negroes. It was at the main white public library for whites that nine students of Tougaloo Southern Christian College for Negroes held a "read-in" demonstration last Monday and were arrested when they refused police orders to leave the building. It was the first racial demonstration in the city.

9 Library Sit-Ins Arrested

JACKSON, Miss., March 27 (UPI).—Nine young Negroes staged the first sit-in demonstration in Mississippi's capital city Monday and were arrested by police who posted guards to prevent a recurrence.

The demonstrators — students a. Tougaloo Christian College—entered the Main City Library in downtown Jackson. Police arrived within 15 minutes, ordered them to leave and arrested them when they refused.

Two policemen were ordered by Detective Chief M. B. Pierce to remain at the library for the rest of the day.

Several hundred students at Jackson State College for Negroes staged a campus demonstration Monday night in sympathy for those arrested. Chanting "We Want Freedom," the students demonstrated in front of the Administration Building for about 40 minutes before college president Jacob Reddix and about 20 policemen broke up the gathering.

The Negroes refused to post bond. They were charged with violation of a 1960 law which provides maximum penalties of four months in jail plus a $200 fine for persons who refuse to leave a public facility when ordered to do so by a law enforcement officer.

The few white persons in the library ignored the Negroes. There was no sign of violence. A librarian telephoned authorities and six policemen rushed to the scene. They questioned a few of the students briefly.

The Negroes continued their library work. "You can hear, can't you?" Pierce said. He was ignored again.

'Mississippi Nine' loses Lawyer as 'read-in' cases go on appeal

VICKSBURG, Miss. — Attorney R. Jess Brown has withdrawn as a lawyer for the nine students convicted in connection with a "read-in" at a so-called white branch of the Jackson (Miss.) Municipal Library last month.

In filing his letter of withdrawal with the Hinds County circuit court clerk, H. T. Ashford, simply wrote he is "no longer associated with this cause in any manner whatsoever."

IN A STATEMENT to the AFRO, however, Mr. Brown explained that he was retained only to represent the students in the city court. As a consequence, he said he had to notify the court that he no longer was associated with the case under the rules.

Brown, along with Attorney Jack Young of Jackson, represented the nine when they were tried in Municipal Court on breach of peace charges on March 27. They were convicted and fined $100 and given 30-day suspended sentences.

The county court is scheduled to meet this week for hearings and the appeal may be heard during this period. Mr. Young is expected to represent the students.

THE CASES have been appealed to Hinds County Court, apparently the first step in a long legal test of an anti-integration law passed by the 1960 Legislature.

Brown, who for several years has worked closely with the NAACP legal activities in Mississippi, was absent when Young defended four college students who went on trial in Municipal Court two weeks ago.

The four were convicted of breach of the peace charges under another of the 1960 laws after they took front seats on a city bus. Their sentences were identical to those levied in the library incident and the cases also have been appealed.

nearby Tougaloo Southern Christian College, received a $100 fine and a 30-day suspended jail sentence for disturbing the peace.

They refused orders to leave the main city library two weeks ago. Their arrests touched off several demonstrations by Negroes.

Jackson, Miss., March 29.—City Court convicted nine Negro college students Wednesday of disturbing the peace by sitting in a white library after police used clubs and dogs to disperse a crowd that gathered in protest.

City Judge James L. Spencer fined the nine students $100 each and gave them 30-day suspended jail sentences. Their attorney, R. Jess Brown, said they would appeal to Hinds County Court.

Negroes Clubbed

As soon as the Negroes—approximately 100—started singing and clapping, Chief of Detectives M. B. Pierce said: "That's it! Move 'em out! Get 'em!"

The police and dogs guarding the front of the building rushed at the crowds with their clubs swinging. Negroes who did not get out fast enough were clubbed on the head and back.

The crowd of whites was ordered to leave the area. They were not struck.

During the trial, Judge Spencer said the students who went into the white City library congregated with others in a public place, failed to move on orders from the police, and their presence could have resulted in a breach of the peace.

Two policemen testified they believed the presence of the Negroes in the library could have caused a disturbance.

Spencer said such sit-ins have caused breaches of the peace in other areas.

"Jackson has avoided any such incidents until now," he said. "By the grace of God, we will continue to avoid them."

Defense attorney Jack Young said the only reason the students were arrested was "just because they were in there."

He said the City offered no evidence of intent to commit a breach of the peace.

First Mississippi Sit-In Seek To Use Public Library

JACKSON, Miss. — (UPI) — Nine Negro college students appeared at the strictly-segregated main city library Monday and were arrested when they ignored police officers' orders to leave.

It was the first sit-in in race-conscious Mississippi although the sit-in movement is more than a year old.

Negroes have staged several demonstrations, however, at Mississippi Gulf coast beaches and several were beaten when they tried to swim at segregated beaches last year.

After several officers questioned a few of the students, Detective Chief M. B. Pierce announced "all right, everyone of you get up and get out of here. There's a colored library on Mill street. You are welcome there."

The students ignored his order and Pierce asked, "You can hear, can't you?"

"All right, everyone of you are under arrest," Pierce announced, and several officers took the students to police vehicles. The students did not protest their arrest.

Pierce, asked what the charges would be, said, "we will work that out."

The students, members of the NAACP Youth organization, began arriving about 11:10 a.m. and were generally ignored by the few persons in the library as they began going through the card catalog. A few of them inquired about books and library workers courteously answered them.

One of the girl demonstrators, Evelyn Prince, told United Press International her group was doing "research and this is the only library in town where we could get the material."

Negro Students Halted By Police In Mississippi

Officers said they exploded one tear gas bomb and held the snarling dog in front of the students. They also used motorcycles and a police car to clear the street leading to downtown Jackson.

Chief of Detectives M. B. Pierce said the students planned to parade, "But we weren't going to let them. They didn't have a permit."

Edgar Evers of Jackson, field secretary for the Mississippi Branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said the Negro students were peacefully marching down the street to protest the arrest of nine Tougaloo Southern Christian College students who participated in a sit-in at the white Jackson municipal library Monday. Tougaloo is a Negro college.

Nine Negro college students were arrested when they paraded in a public library at Jackson, Miss., in the first move of its kind in that Deep South state, long a segregation stronghold.

The arrest Monday of the young people from Tougaloo Southern Christian College sparked a singing, chanting sympathy demonstration on the campus of Jackson State College. And the NAACP scheduled a mass meeting in the Capitol city tonight.

Dr. Jacob Reddix, president of Jackson State, and Jackson police quieted the demonstrators at the Negro college and no arrests were made.

The nine Tougaloo students filed quietly into the library traditionally reserved for white persons. Member of the group said they wanted to use the facilities because they were unable to obtain information for term papers at Negro branch libraries.

They were booked on charges of failing to move on when ordered to do so by police, and declined to post bonds of $500 each. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People said the nine were members of NAACP youth groups.

Mississippi is one of three Southern states in which there is no desegregation at the public school or college level although two Negroes once sought to enter white colleges. In addition several Negrpes tried unsuccessfully to use beaches for white persons along the Gulf Coast.

Pupils boycotting Savannah, Ga. Negro schools have been warned they must apply for readmission by 6 p.m. Wednesday.

The Chatham County (Savannah) Board of Education issued the uitimatum and indicated pupils not meeting the deadline may face expulsion.

The boycott began a week ago after Alflorence Cheatham, principal of Sol C. Johnson High School, was notified his contract would not be renewed. The Board of Education gave no reason for the action but the NAACP said Cheatam had been active in a voter registration campaign.

In Atlanta, eight Negro dentist picketed the Thomas P. Hinman Southeastern dental meeting because they said membership in the American Dental Association apparently was used as an excuse to exclude them.

However, Dr. Arthur E. Anderson, general chairman of the meeting, said sessions were "not segregated but were open by regulation only to ADA members." He said some white dentists were turned away because they did not hold ADA membership.

Meanwhile, Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara in Washington ordered heads of the military services and other defense agencies to assure that Negroes and other minority groups are given equal employment opportunity.

In addition, the racial issue still clouded plans for the Charleston, S.C. Civil War centennial observance planned for April 11-12.

Gov. Ernest F. Hollings of South Carolina told a news conference he believed Yankee politics responsible for the situation. But he declined comment on how he felt about the decision to switch the National Centennial Commission's headquarters from a segregated Charleston hotel to the integrated Charleston Naval Base.

The Naticnal Commission made the change after President Kennedy pledged action toward providing Negroes with equal accommodations when they attend any Centennial Commission function in the South.

The New Jersey commission said it had not decided whether to attend the national meeting in Charleston. The commission originally boycotted the meeting when it learned a Negro member would be subjected to segregation. Several other states joined in the boycott.

Negro Group Attacked By Police With Dogs

JACKSON, Miss., Mar. 30 (AP).—Mississippi's Capital City faced an uneasy quiet today after club-wielding policemen, accompanied by trained dogs, waded into a crowd of 100 Negroes outside a courtroom yesterday.

The police action preceded the trial of nine Negro college students charged with breach of the peace for a sit-in demonstration last Monday at a for-whites-only public library. They were convicted and drew $100 fines and 30-day suspended jail sentences.

The nine, all students at Tougaloo Southern Christian College on the northern outskirts of Jackson, staged the State's first mass anti-segregation demonstration.

Crowd Gathers

A crowd of Negroes, many students or faculty members at three Negro colleges in the area—Tougaloo Southern Christian, Jackson State and Campbell—gathered outside the City Court Building, before the hearing.

As the defendants started up the steps of the building, the spectators began clapping and singing.

A policeman said: "That's it! Move 'em out! Get 'em!"

The police moved quickly into the Negro group, swinging their sticks and shoving. The German shepherd dogs lunged at the people.

The younger Negroes quickly scattered through a parking lot to safety, but some of the slower ones were clubbed on the head and back. The dogs bit and ripped the clothing of several persons.

Bootlegger Charged

Chief of Police M. B. Pierce said G. W. (Red) Hydrick, a 55-year-old Rankin County white bootlegger, was charged with assault and battery and carrying a concealed weapon after he pistol-whipped Negro Thomas Armstrong during the melee. Hydrick was the only person arrested.

Mr. Armstrong, who writes for a Jackson newspaper and does free-lance photography, was chased from in front of the building before he was attacked by the bootlegger.

Police ordered the white people in the area to move out, but did not strike them.

"Call off the dogs . . . slavery is over," the president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People wired Gov. Ross Barnett.

Courtroom Jammed

The small courtroom was jammed during the hearing. Negroes sat on one side, whites on the other. The defendants sat silently on the first two rows in the Negro section.

In his verdict City Judge James L. Spencer said the presence of the defendants in the white library could have resulted in a breach of the peace. He noted there was no actual disturbance.

Judge Spencer said such sit-ins have caused breach of the peace in other areas. "Jackson has avoided any such incidents until now," he said. "By the grace of God, we will continue to avoid them."

Defense Attorney Jack Young said the only reason the students were arrested was "just because they were in there."

Mr. Young, a Negro, said the city offered no evidence of intent to commit a breach of the peace. He termed the arrests "police state" action.

The defense placed no witnesses on the stand.

Mr. Young said an appeal would be taken to the April term of Hinds County Court.

Police Stop Negro Parade In Jackson

Officers said they exploded one tear gas bomb and held the snarling dog in front of the students. They also used motorcycles and a police car to clear the street leading to downtown Jackson.

Chief of Detective M. B. Pierce said the students planned to parade, "But we weren't going to let them. They didn't have a permit."

Edgar Evers of Jackson, field secretary for the Mississippi Branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said the Negro students were peacefully marching down the street to protest the arrest of nine Tougaloo Southern Christian College students who participated in a sit-in at the white Jackson municipal library Monday. Tougaloo is a Negro college.

Evers said the police stopped the Jackson college students and turned loose police dogs. Tear gas was used to break up groups that wouldn't disperse, he said, adding that several Negroes were struck by club-carrying policemen but no one was injured seriously. At least one Negro was arrested, he said.

The Justice Department announced yesterday that the FBI is investigating an outbreak of violence in Jackson, Miss., where nine Negroes were convicted for conducting sit-ins.

Jackson police, brandishing night sticks and holding two snarling dogs, broke up Wednesday's demonstration by about 100 Negroes in front of the city's Court House.

A Justice Department spokesman said: "We are investigating the situation in Jackson and have received reports from the FBI and local leaders."

Several Negroes outside the Court House reportedly were struck by club-swinging police, who waded into the crowd shortly before trial of the students on misdemeanor charges.

The Justice Department said, however, that on the basis of reports it has received, "it appears that one Negro was beaten by a civilian —not a police officer." The civilian has been arrested and charged with assault and battery, according to the Justice Department spokesman.

"We have received assurances from responsible leaders in Jackson that no unnecessary force will be used," the spokesman said.

The Birmingham World
Birmingham Ala.

JACKSON, Miss — (UPI) —FBI agents assured that "no unnecessary force" will be used by local officers against Negroes protesting racial segregation, moved in Thursday to investigate a police rout of about 100 Negroes.

The Negroes were chased from the city courthouse Wednesday by 25 policemen brandishing night sticks and holding two snarling German police dogs.

They had gathered in front of a courtroom where nine youths were about to go on trial for staging Mississippi's first sit-in.

A Justice Department spokesman in Washington said "We are investigating the situation in Jackson and have received reports from the FBI and local leaders."

The Mississippi NAACP called a mass meeting Thursday night to protest "police brutality." Among the speakers was Clarence Mitchell, director of the NAACP's Washington bureau.

The state sovereignty commission, an offiical pro - segregation agency, met and announced "a close watch is being kept on recent disturbances in Jackson."

During the brief eruption of violence Wednesday, some of the Negroes were hit with police clubs and at least one was bitten by a dog. A Negro photographer, Thomas Armstrong, was pistol whipped by a white bystander.

Several hours later ,police arrested G. W. Red Hydrick, 55, an alleged bootlegger from nearby Rankin County, for the assault on Thompson.

The Justice Department said it had "receive dassurances from responsible leaders in Jackson that no unnecessary force will be used."

While the Negroes were being chased outside the courthouse, nine Negro college students inside were being convicted of staging a sit-in at the segregated library here. They were fined $100 each on breach of peace charges and immediately filed notice of appeal.

9 Negroes Stage Sit-In In Mississippi Library

Birmingham Post Herald
Birmingham Ala.

JACKSON, Miss., March 27 (UPI) —Nine Negro college students staged Mississippi's first sit-in demonstration today and promptly went to jail.

3-28-61

The youths were arrested about 15 minutes after they entered the main city library in downtown Jackson.

They were charged with violating a segregation law passed by the 1960 Legislature which provides that members of crowds at public places must leave when ordered to do so by law officers.

Authorities said they declined to make bail and chose to remain in jail pending their trials later this week in city court. If convicted, each student would face a maximum penalty of four months in jail plus a $200 fine.

'Wanted to Do Research

The students began arriving at the library in groups of twos and threes shortly before noon. A librarian asked one Negro girl where she was from and what she wanted. The girl replied she was from nearby Tougaloo Christian College and wanted to do research.

Most of the students went to tables on the library's first floor and began reading. Others checked the card catalog.

One of them, Evelyn Pierce, told UP International her group was "doing research and this is the only library in town where we could get the material."

Only a few white persons were in the library and they ignored the Negroes. A Librarian telephoned authorities and about six policemen rushed to the scene. They questioned a few of the students briefly.

'Get Out Of Here'

M. B. Pierce, chief of detectives, then announced:: "All right, everyone of you get up and get out of here. There's a colored library on Mill Street. You are welcome there."

The Negroes continued their library work. "You can hear, can't you?" Pierce shouted. He was ignored again.

"All right, everyone of you are under arrest," Pierce announced and officers escorted the Negroes to police vehicles.

The demonstrators are students at Tougaloo Christian College, which is operated by the Congregation of Christian Church and the Disciples of Christ. They are members of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

MADISON- "STAY-IN"

State Capital 'Stay In' Demands Fair Housing

'Round-clock vigil staged by NAACP

MADISON, Wis. — Undeterred by failure of the State Legislature to act on a pending fair housing bill, the Wisconsin State NAACP prepared this weekend to continue its 24-hour, seven-day-a-week vigil in the State Capitol here until the legislation is enacted or the Legislature adjourns.

Lloyd A. Barbee, president of the State Conference of NAACP Branches and director of the stay-in demonstration, reports that nearly 300 colored and white NAACP members, acting in 16-person relays, have participated in the demonstration since it was initiated July 31.

Bearing a tag reading: "We're Here for Wisconsin Human Rights Legislation," a demonstrator is stationed at each of the 16 columns in the Capitol's high ceilinged rotunda. They are relieved periodically by a new group.

OBJECTIVE OF THE demonstration is enactment of a bill introduced by Assemblyman Coggs of Milwaukee banning racial or religious discrimination in the sale, lease or rental of housing or other real property.

The bill provides penalties of not less than $100 nor more than $500, or imprisonment for not more than six months or both.

All participants in the stay-in are given instructions about its purpose and methods. "Participants are expected to conduct themselves with quiet dignity," the instructions read. They "should refrain from loud talking and excessive moving around while they are engaged in the Capitol stay-in.

"Speak quietly, if at all; sit or stand straight at all times; use chairs or camp stools if available; otherwise sit on the floor or stand. When entering or leaving the Capitol, check with the NAACP officer."

There have been, thus far, no incidents, disturbances or arrests, Mr. Barbee reports. Nor, he adds, has there been any action by either House of the Legislature since the demonstration began. He anticipates that the Legislature will remain in session for at least another week.

Woman, 86, joins 'stay-ins' at capitol

MADISON, Wis. (ANP)— An 86-year old woman joined the 'stay-in' demonstration for civil rights legislation Wednesday.

"You have to do things like this," said Mrs. Anna K. Miller of Madison. "You can't get anything for nothing."

The demonstration, more than 108 hours old, started at 11 a.m. Monday when 16 persons walked into the capitol, set up folding chairs, and took places before the 16 pillars in the rotunda.

Mrs. Miller, who stayed two and a half hours, came to Wisconsin in 1902 and was married to William Miller who had been hired as a clerk by Gov. Robert La Follette, the Progressive Party leader who ran for president in 1924.

"WE MAY not do any good at all with this particular bill," Mrs. Miller said. "But you've just got to let people know about these things."

There has been no violence and no incidents as the 100 racially mixed volunteers, working in 16-person shifts, kept their vigil in the capitol rotunda.

There was also little evidence that their demonstration would speed committee approval of fair housing practices bills.

State Sen. Leo O'Brien, who heads the committee on governmental and veterans affairs which is considering the bills, said the stay-in would have no effect on the committee's operations.

LEADERS OF the "freedom lobbyists" had accused O'Brien of "bottling up" the bills. During the first night of their stay-in, the volunteers slept on the capitol's marble floor or on chairs surrounding the rotunda.

The "freedom lobbyists" said they would stay in the capitol, day and night, until the bills are passed or until the state legislator adjourns for the summer.

Bernard Mann, an accountant for the Wisconsin Highway Commission, said if the legislatuer adjourns without approving the bills, "We will be back for the next session."

tell truth, but you know Ala.

Baltimore, Md.

ANNISTON, Ala. — Although 36 witnesses testified they saw seven defendants on the scene where a bus carrying Freedom Riders was burned, an all - white, all-male jury failed to convict them.

U.S. District Judge H. H. Grooms declared a mistrial and dismissed the jury.

The case, tried before a courtroom crowded with whites, featured intimidation of at least one juror, hostile witnesses and even a prospective juror who admitted membership in the Ku Klux Klan.

The case started last May when a Greyhound bus was stopped inside Anniston and surrounded by a mob. Aboard the bus was AFRO City Editor Moses Newson who said that as the bus left the city, an obstruction in the road punctured a tire.

WHEN THE bus stopped this time, it was surrounded by a mob of howling whites, armed with clubs, tire-irons and chains, who threatened the occupants — some of whom were not connected with the Freedom Ride.

The bus was set afire and completely destroyed. Mr. Newson's camera was lost in the fire. He suffered slight injuries and smoke inhalation along with seven others.

Judge Grooms directed the jury to acquit the 41-year-old Adams because of insufficient evidence. The other defendants, however, were identified by eyewitnesses and through photographs taken at the scene.

ONE WITNESS, who testified she saw "something" being placed on the bus before the fire, said also that she was "all for it." She was Mrs. Harry Simms, wife of a state investigator.

Highway Patrolman M. A. Nunnelly admitted being on the scene but said "I didn't know anybody taking part. I didn't take any names and I didn't make any arrests."

As the jury was being empaneled, Judge Grooms announced: "I have been reliably informed that there is a systematic effort to contact jurors, either personally or through members of their families."

He ordered an FBI investigation and asked jurors to cooperate in the investigation. Two jurors and the wife of a third said they had been telephoned by an unidentified person who "said he was interested in the case and working for the defense to insure they had a fair trial."

The jurors were Alex E. Fitzhugh and Guy I. Salord, both electricians. They were stricken from the jury. Government lawyers asked one question of the jurors: "Has anyone of you ever been a member of the Ku Klux Klan?"

The Afro-American

A hand shot up — the juror was excused.

Earl F. Hamrick reported to the court that he received a Halloween night visit from three masked men. He said they told him "I should conduct myself with leniency."

He, too, was excused from the jury.

Sat. 11-11-61

MANY OF the witnesses put on by the government were persons sympathetic with the mob. One who was not was Larry A. Harper of Atlanta, who was en route to his family home at Leeds.

Describing the fire-bomb, he said: "It was something that looked like an orange juice can. It came through the window and hit on the seat where I had been sitting."

If the jury had convicted the men, they could have been sent to prison for 20 years and fined $10,000 each.

'Rider' Bus Glass-Breaker Named

Washington Post

ANNISTON, Ala., Nov. 1 (AP)—A Greyhound Bus lines official testified today he saw one of the eight defendants smash a window in a mob attack on a bus carrying Freedom Riders here last May.

Roy Franklin Robinson of Atlanta, southern regional manager of Greyhound, was the first witness called in the Federal Court trial of eight men accused in the burning of the bus—the first outburst of Freedom Rider violence in Alabama.

Robinson said he rode the bus from Atlanta to Anniston, where it was destroyed, because he had heard reports there might be trouble.

From a large photograph, he identified one of the men as Roger Dale Couch, 19, and said, "he had a piece of metal in his hand broke one of the windows."

After the bus finally left the station with the help of city police, it got only about five miles toward Birmingham when the left front tire went flat, he said, and a rear tire went flat moments later.

Birmingham Reporter Identifies Georgia Man As Rioter

Montgomery Advertiser

ATLANTA (AP) — A newspaper reporter Thursday identified a Rome, Ga., pulpwood worker as one of the white men who took part in rioting at a bus station when the first busload of "Freedom Riders" reached Birmingham last May 14.

The identification of Hershel W. Acker, 30, came from Bud Gordon, Birmingham News reporter and photographer, at a hearing in Gov. Ernest Vandiver's office on on whether Acker should be turned over to Alabama officials on an indictment charging assault with intent to murder.

Asst. Atty. Gen. Henry Neal, Vandiver's legal aide, presided and announced that Vandiver will make the decision later on the basis of Thursday's testimony.

Defense Atty. Bobby Lee Cook of Summerville, who had been expected to present testimony that Acker was in Georgia on May 14, offered no witnesses. He cross-examined state witnesses closely, apparently trying to throw doubts about their identification.

One such move came when he called into the room at different times two older twin brothers of Acker while Gordon was testifying. But the reporter said there was no doubt that Hershel was the man he saw taking part in the rioting.

Fri 7-28-61

Cook in his opening statement told Neal that "Mr. Acker denies that he was in the state of Alabama on May 14. He says that he was over there about three weeks prior to that date."

The indictment charged Acker with beating George Webb, who was identified only at the hearing as a Negro shoeshine boy. There was no testimony about the beating, the only issue at an extradition hearing being whether or not the defendent was in Alabama on that date.

Gordon testified that Acker was one of a group of 8 or 10 men rioting at the bus station. He said they beat up another photographer, Tom Langston of the Birmingham Post-Herald. Gordon took a picture of this but said Acker and his group made him give it to them. They took his camera but gave it back when he agreed to give up the film.

Two Alabama and two Georgia officers testified that Acker first denied when questioned at Rome May 26 that he had been in Birmingham. Later they said, he admitted being there but denied taking part in the disorders. A tip from the FBI led to his questioning and arrest at Rome, an auto license number being the lead involved.

A. M. Bailey, Birmingham city detective, said Acker first told them at a Rome paper plant that he was fishing in Georgia on May 14. After being taken to the Rome police station, Acker admitted being in Alabama, the officer testified.

Similar testimony came from Birmingham detective Vernon T. Hart, sheriff W. Joe Adams of Floyd County, Ga., and Rome city detective W. B. Terhune.

Cook brought out from the Alabama officers that the warrant they brought with them to Rome named Clancy Lake, and not Webb, as the man who was beaten up. There was no further testimony about Lake.

Acker remained at liberty under $2,500 bond pending Vandiver's decision.

Rome Man Identified In Bus Riot

A Birmingham news photographer unhesitatingly identified a Rome, Ga., man Thursday as a participant in the "Freedom Ride" riots at a Birmingham, Ala., bus terminal last May 14.

Atlanta Ga

And at an extradition hearing held in Gov. S. Ernest Vandiver's office, four law enforcement officers swore that the Rome man denied and then later admitted being in Birmingham on the day in question.

Through his attorney, the accused man, Herschel W. Acker, denied at Thursday's hearing that he was in Birmingham on the day of the riot, however.

Acker is being sought by Alabama authorities on a charge of assault with intent to murder. The victim of the alleged assault was a Negro bystander who said he took no part in the violence-dogged Freedom Rides.

Atlanta Constitution

Confronted with look-alike twins in an attorney's effort to challenge his powers of observation, Birmingham News photographer Bud Gordon firmly insisted that Acker was the man he had seen at the Trailways station May 14.

P/C

"I saw him first," Gordon testified, "among a group of eight or 10 men beating up a news photographer.

Fri 7-28-61

"I second saw him when he took a camera away from me. I third saw him when he took a camera from my partner," the newsman continued.

Defense attorney Bobby Lee Cook called in a man, later identified as a brother of Acker, and asked Gordon whether he had ever seen the man before.

Gordon said he had seen the man at the Rome police station with Acker. The man left the room, but later Cook again asked for an outsider to come in.

It was apparently the same man, and Gordon again identified him as the man at the police station. Cook then called in the original outsider, a nearly identical twin. Gordon remained firm in his identification of the accused.

Vandiver's legal adviser, Henry Neal, who was conducting the hearing, asked: "May I inquire if Mr. Acker (the accused) is a twin also?"

Cook replied that he did not think so.

Birmingham detective A. M. Bailey testified that when he had examined Acker at the Rome police station on May 26, the accused admitted being in Birmingham on May 14. "He said he had lied to the FBI," Bailey said.

Floyd County Sheriff W. Joe Adams and Rome detective W. B. Terhune both swore that when first interviewed at a pulp mill near Rome, Acker said he had gone fishing at Big Cedar Creek on May 14.

Later, the sheriff and detective both asserted Acker admitted being in Birmingham on the day in question.

Jury Clears Man Of Eight With Negro

BIRMINGHAM (AP) — A circuit court jury Tuesday acquitted Herschel Acker of charges of assault with intent to murder growing out of "Freedom Rider" violence here last May.

Acker, 30, a pulp mill worker from Rome, Ga., was charged in the beating of George Webb, a Negro, during the outburst of violence at a downtown bus station

Webb, in testifying during the two-day trial, identified Acker as one of several men who beat him up during a white mob's attack on a racially mixed team of segregation-testers.

Bud Gordon, a reporter with the Birmingham News, testified that he saw Acker at the scene of the violence, but said he did not see Acker at the time Webb contends he was beaten. Gordon said he did not recall seeing Webb at the station at all.

Four White Ministers, 7 Negro Riders Fined

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Nov. 21 (AP).—A State judge has convicted of unlawful assembly 11 Freedom Riders who ventured here less than a week after another group's visit resulted in rioting, bloodshed and martial law in Montgomery last May.

Circuit Judge Eugene Carter ordered $100 fines and 30-day jail terms yesterday for the four white ministers and seven Negroes. The group included Yale University Chaplain William S. Coffin, jr.

The verdict capped a daylong trial, during which Mr. Coffin testified he talked with an assistant to United States Attorney General Robert Kennedy before launching the challenge against bus depot segregation.

The defendants' State Court conviction came in contesting a similar outcome in County Court on the charges stemming from an integration attempt May 25.

Decision Appealed

All 11 Freedom Riders, including three other white clergymen from Connecticut, filed notice of appeal to the Alabama Court of Appeals. They were released under $750 bond each.

Judge Carter, who tried the cases simultaneously without a jury, since none was requested, convicted 10 of the defendants on unlawful assembly and breach of the peace charges.

The 11th rider, the Rev. Wyatt Tee Walker, was convicted only of unlawful assembly. But the Atlanta Negro leader drew the same penalty on that verdict as the others did for both offenses.

Montgomery was bristling with United States marshals and National Guardsmen when the biracial group under military escort to quell any violence, went into a white waiting room at a bus station.

They were arrested when all except Mr. Walker sat down at the lunch counter.

Week-long martial rule had been declared four days earlier after another Freedom Rider bus touched off a wild week end of bloody brawling and other racial violence.

Defendants Listed

White ministers arrested with Mr. Coffin are the Rev. Gaylord B. Noyce, assistant professor of religion at Yale; Dr. David E. Swift, religion professor at Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn., and Dr. John D. MacGuire, assistant professor of religion at Wesleyan.

11 Riders Convicted In Capital

Group Plans New Appeal From Sentences

MONTGOMERY, Nov. 20 (AP) — Eleven "freedom riders" were convicted today on charges growing out of a bus depot integration incident in the wake of race riots here last May.

It was the second conviction for the group—including Yale University Chaplain William S. Coffin Jr. They had appealed to state court after being given fines and jail terms earlier in county court.

Circuit Judge Eugene Carter, who conducted the one-day trial without a jury, since none was requested, ordered $100 fines and 30-day jail terms for the riders.

All filed notices of appeal and were released under $750 bond.

Ten of the defendants were convicted of unlawful assembly and breach of the peace. The 11th, Wyatt Tee Walker, Atlanta Negro, was convicted only of unlawful assembly. But he drew the same penalty for that as the others did for both charges.

Coffin, son-in-law of pianist Artur Rubinstein testified he talked with a representative of U. S. Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy before he and the others came here.

Talked to Official

Asked on cross-examination if he talked with anyone in Kennedy's office before he and his colleagues came here in the wake of bloody race riots, Coffin said he had a telephone call from Burke Marshall, an assistant attorney general.

The Presbyterian minister, replying to a question about whether the Federal official encouraged the challenge of Montgomery's bus depot segregation, testified:

"Mr. Marshall said he was not intending to interfere but that he wanted us to give this decision (freedom ride) very serious consideration."

Also on cross-examination, he testified that the group's attorney fees "very likely will be paid mostly by the National Association for the advancement of colored people."

He amended that later to say he meant the NAACP legal defense fund. Its chief counsel, Jack Greenberg of New York, is one of the lawyers representing the freedom riders.

Defense attorneys brought out that three white men who had pored coffee on the group's seats at a bus depot lunch counter went free.

All 11 freedom riders were arrested at the downtown Trailways bus terminal last May 25 while seeking service at the previously all-white waiting room and lunch counter.

Montgomery still was under martial law in the wake of bloody week-end of racial violence which greeted the arrival of another freedom rider bus five days earlier.

The National Guard officer who ordered the arrests, Col. Ralph Porch of Anniston, told the court the city was "extremely tense" as a result of the week-end rioting and other incidents which followed. He said that in his judgment, the integration attempt at the bus station could have caused another outbreak of violence.

Porch and Sheriff Mac Sim Butler before him, testified that before the freedom riders took seats at the lunch counter, three white men had poured coffee on the seats. Porch described them as "three white toughs trying to create trouble."

The white clergyman arrested besides Coffin are Gaylord B. Noyce, assistant professor of religion at Yale; Dr. David E. Swift, professor of religion at Wesleyan University at Middletown, Conn., and Dr. John D. Maguire, assistant professor of religion at Wesleyan.

'Rider' Cases Continue

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (UPI) — Court cases growing out of the violence attending the arrival of "Freedom Riders" in Montgomery last May will probably be cropping up for some time.

Eleven "Freedom riders" appealed their disorderly conduct convictions before Circuit Court Judge Eugene Carter this week. The group, including four white New England religion professors, had been convicted and sentenced in common pleas court.

Carter upheld the lower court's verdict that the defendants were guilty and ordered them to serve 30 days in jail each and pay $100 fines.

The ruling was immediately appealed by attorneys for the 11 men, and will next be heard by the State Court of Appeals.

One of the defendants, Dr. William S. Coffin, Yale University chaplain, said he was "disappointed but not surprised" by the decision. Dr. John Maguire, assistant professor of religion at Wesleyan College, called Carter's verdict "fundamentally phony."

Col. Ralph Poarch of the Alabama National Guard testified he ordered the arrest of the four white men and seven Negroes to avert a "bloody riot" when the group sought to integrate a bus terminal lunch counter while Montgomery was under limited martial law.

Yale Chaplain, 10 Others Fined, Sentenced To 30 Days

By United Press International

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Nov. 20.—Circuit Judge Eugene Carter Monday night found 11 so-called "Freedom Riders" — including the Yale University chaplain — guilty of disorderly conduct for trying to integrate a bus station lunch counter here during May racial strife.

Judge Carter sentenced each defendant to 30 days hard labor and imposed a $100 fine on each.

Appeals Filed

The defendants immediately appealed.

Judge Carter ruled within two minutes after both the prosecution and defense waived closing arguments.

"The court finds all the defendants guilty," Judge Carter said. When told that one defendant had only a charge of illegal assembly against him, Judge Carter said "he's just as guilty as the rest."

The four New England religion professors and the seven Negroes showed no emotion when the judge snapped out his decision.

The defense put Adjt. Gen. Henry V. Graham, head of the Alabama National Guard, on the stand to testify he once said he was "happy" when the 11 were arrested. However, other similar statements by General Graham during a Federal court case several weeks ago were thrown out by Judge Carter.

Earlier the Yale University chaplain, Dr. W. S. Coffin, said the 11 were arrested in the Trailways terminal while under the protection of the National Guard.

Defendants Listed

The defendants include Dr. Coffin and an assistant professor of religion at Yale, Dr. Gaylord Noyce; Dr. David Swift, professor of religion, and Dr. John Maguire, assistant professor of religion at Wesleyan College in Middleton, Conn., and Negroes Bernard Lee of Montgomery, former Alabama State College student here expelled for sit-in demonstrations; Rev. Ralph Abernathy, former president of the Montgomery Improvement Association, and Rev. Wyatt Tee Walkr, executive secretary of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, both of Atlanta; students Joseph C. Jones and Clyde Carter, both of Charlotte, N. C.; George Smith, a law student at Yale, and Rev. Fred Shuttlesworth of Birmingham, head of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights.

11 Face Trial Today In 'Rider' Appeal

BY DONALD F. MARTIN

MONTGOMERY, Nov. 19 (UPI)—Four New England religion professors and seven Negroes face trial in Circuit Court here tomorrow in appeal of their convictions on charges of trying to desegregate a bus terminal lunch counter during "freedom rider" violence in May.

Montgomery County Circuit Court Judge Eugene Carter denied motions to squash the cases against the defendants—including the chaplain of Yale University—when the 11 were arraigned formally last Tuesday.

The men were convicted on charges of disorderly conduct and unlawful assembly in Montgomery County Court of Common Pleas Sept. 26. They immediately appealed to circuit court. They did not request jury trials.

Arrested In May

The biracial group was arrested May 25 in Trailways Bus Station after they sat at a formerly "all-white" lunch counter and ordered coffee. When the coffee was served, Sheriff Mac Sim Butler, under orders from the Alabama National Guard, placed each defendant under arrest.

Montgomery was placed under limited martial law by Gov. John Patterson during the time because of bloody rioting which occurred a week before when the first wave of "freedom riders" invaded the capital.

The defendants are Dr. William S. Coffin, Yale University chaplain, and Dr. Gaylord Noyce, assistant professor of religion at Yale; Dr. David Swift, professor of religion, and Dr. John Maguire, assistant professor of religion at Wesleyan College in Middleton, Conn.; and Negroes Bernard Lee of Montgomery, former Alabama State College student expelled here for sit-in demonstrations, the Rev. Ralph Abernathy, former president of the Montgomery Improvement Assn., and the Rev. Wyatt Tee Walker, executive secretary of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, both of Atlanta; students Joseph C. Jones and Clyde Carter, both of Charlotte, N. C., George Smith, a law student at Yale; and the Rev. Fred Shuttlesworth of Birmingham, head of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights.

Common Pleas Judge Alex Marks found all the defendants guilty and sentenced them to jail terms with fines.

At their arraignment, Dr. Coffin told UPI, "This costs a lot of time and a lot of money, but I think it's worth it." The Yale chaplain said he was "encouraged" by the recent Interstate Commerce Commission ruling integrating interstate travel.

Coffin and Maguire said the ruling came as a result of the "freedom ride" tests of segregated travel terminals and a situation here "which had repercussions on all parts of the country."

On his participation in the "freedom ride" movement, Coffin said he felt it was his duty "to support students actively participating in world issues" after encouraging them to do so in the classroom.

Jury Indicts 9 Men In Bombing of Bus

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (UPI)—Nine men accused of bombing the first "freedom rider" bus to enter Alabama have been indicted by a federal grand jury, the government announced Friday.

The incident took place last May 14 outside Anniston, Ala., while the bus was en route from Atlanta to Birmingham.

Atttorney General Robert Kennedy announced the two-count indictment in Washington. He said it was returned Thursday at Birmingham but remained sealed until Friday.

One count of the indictment charges the nine men with conspiring from May 5 to damage the bus, and the second count charges them with carrying out the conspiracy.

Maximum penalty for conviction on the first count is five years in prison and a $10,000 fine. On the second count each could be sentenced to 20 years in prison and $10,000 in fines or both.

Those named in the indictment: Kenneth L. Adams, 41, an oil company operator; William O. Chappell, 39, upholsterer; Jerome B. Couch, 25, an electrician; Roger D. Couch, 19, unemployed; Jerry R. Eason, 22, a flower shop employe; Frank B. Honson, 42, a maintenance worker for the Anniston Housing Authority; Cecil L. Lewallyn, 22, occupation unknown; Frank J. Tober, 54, self-employed store keeper and Jerry Z. Willingham, 21, a valve company employe.

FBI Nabs 7 Charged In Burning

BIRMINGHAM (AP) — FBI agents Friday arrested seven of nine men indicted by a federal grand jury on charges of burning an interstate bus near Anniston last May.

The other two are accounted for—one is in jail and the other in a hospital.

Burning of the Greyhound bus after it left Anniston May 14 was one of the first major acts of violence involving "Freedom Riders" seeking to crack Southern segregation barriers.

BOND SET

Macon B. Weaver, recently named U.S. Attorney for north Alabama, said the two - count indictment charges the nine with conspiracy to violate laws involving persons traveling in interstate commerce.

Seven of the nine were arraigned at Anniston Friday. They are:

Kenneth L. Adams, 41, Anniston; Frank B. Johnson, 42, Anniston; Jerome Byron Couch, 25, Munford; Jerry Willingham, 23, Anniston; William O. Chappell, 40, Anniston; Jerry Ronald Eason, 23, Anniston; and Frank Tolbert, 54, Anniston.

U.S. Commissioner Ruby Price Robinson said $5,000 bond was set for each man and that Eason, Johnson and Willingham posted bond.

The other two are Roger Dale Couch, 19, Anniston, presently in jail at Annistion on a local Burglary count, and Cecil Lamar Lewallyn, 22 ,Annistion, in Anniston Memorial Hospital as a result of an automobile accident Aug. 13.

Weaver said that Eason, Johnson and Roger Couch were arrested May 22 on a commissioner's complaint charging them with participating in bombing and burning the bus and were released on $5,000 bond each.

The bus which burned approximately four miles west of Anniston carried 17 persons, including several Negroes and white persons in the Freedom Rider group.

The Freedom Riders had started from Washington, D.C., under sponsorship of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE). They said their destinatoin was New Orleans.

ANNISTON TROUBLE

The bus they were on ran into trouble at the station in Anniston. A number of persons gathered at the station and caused some damage to the vehicle.

At the time it was burned the bus had stopped because of a flat tire. A mob surrounded it on the side of the highway and the fire apparently started when a soft drink bottle containing an inflammable liquid was thrown through a window.

Alabama State Investigator Ell Cowling, who had boarded the bus at Atlanta on a tip of possible trouble, stood in the door of the bus and held off a crowd of white people milling around.

Highway patrolmen arrived and two shots were fired into the air to quiet the mob.

Passengers were then allowed to leave the burning bus. Twelve of the passengers received hospital treatment for smoke inhalation.

The Greyhound bus was one of two carrying Freedom Riders from Atlanta to Birmingham that Sunday afternoon.

A Trailways bus carrying an integrated CORE group was boarded at Anniston by white persons who struck some passengers because of seating arrangements.

The Trailways bus proceeded to Birmingham where a white mob met them at the bus station. Several persons were beaten in the fighting on the bus station loading dock and in the bus terminal.

The Freedom Riders later sought to continue their trip by bus to Montgomery and New Orleans. But bus drivers refused to drive them and they flew from here to New Orleans.

Perjury Charge Hits Anniston Trial Juryman

FBI Arrests State Man Over Klan

BIRMINGHAM (AP) — The FBI Tuesday arrested on a perjury charge one of the members of the jury that failed to reach a verdict in the "Freedom Rider" bus burning trial four weeks ago.

U.S. Atty. Macon Weaver said the federal complaint charged that the juror gave false information when asked about Ku Klux Klan membership during selection of the jury.

Eight men were tried together in U.S. District Court in Anniston, on charges of interfering with interstate transportation and conspiracy growing out of a white mob's attack on a Greyhound bus carrying the first of the "Freedom Riders." The bus was burned outside Anniston.

DIRECTED VERDICT

One of the eight defendants was freed on a directed verdict of acquittal. A mistrial was declared in the case against the other seven when the jury was unable to agree on a verdict.

The arrest of Parker marks the third charge of wrong-doing involving the jury that heard the case.

The first incident occurred even before the trial got under way when Judge H. Hobart Grooms told the jury panel he had heard reports of jury-tampering efforts.

He asked members of the panel to tell him if they had been contacted about the case by anyone outside the court. Two members of the jury panel later told in court about receiving telephone calls at their homes from anonymous persons expressing interest in the trial. Neither was seated on the jury.

Then, when the case went to the jury, the judge excused one of the jurors, saying the juror had told him he had been contacted by masked men at his motel the night before the trial opened. The juror said the masked men had advised him to be lenient. The judge replaced the juror with an alternate.

No formal charges have been filed as a result of either of the two reported incidents of jury-tampering efforts.

QUIZZED ABOUT KKK

At the opening of the trial, the entire jury panel was questioned as a group by Weaver about Ku Klux Klan connections.

One member of the panel—not Parker—indicated he had been a member of the KKK at one time. He was not seated on the jury.

The perjury charge against Parker carries a maximum penalty of $2,000 fine and five years imprisonment on conviction.

Parker was arraigned late Tuesday before U.S. Commissioner Claude Pipes at Huntsville. A preliminary hearing was set tentatively for next Tuesday. Bond was set at $3,000 and he was held in the Madison County jail.

ANNISTON AREA

In all, nine men were indicted in the attack on the bus carrying the integrated team of segregation-testers. All live in the Anniston area.

The seven involved in the mistrial were Frank B. Johnson, 42; Jerome Byron Couch, 25; Jerry Willingham, 23; William Chappell, 40; Jerry Ronald Eason, 23; Frank Tolbert, 54; and Roger Dale Couch, 19. A second trial has been scheduled for February.

The ninth man, Cecil Lamar Lewallyn, 22, has not been brought to trial because of injuries suffered in an automobile accident.

Federal authorities Tuesday announced the arrest of a juror in the recent "freedom rider" bus burning trial at Anniston on a charge of perjury.

U. S. Attorney Macon Weaver said a federal complaint charged Lewis Martin Parker, 59, of Hartselle, Route 1, gave false answers when asked about present or past membership in the Ku Klux Klan.

Parker was one of the 12 jurors who were unable to reach a verdict in the trial of eight men charged with burning a Greyhound bus carrying "freedom riders" near Anniston May 14.

WEAVER SAID PARKER was arrested at his home on the basis of a complaint filed by the FBI at Huntsville Monday.

He said Parker denied being or having been a member of the Ku Klux Klan when questioned about his qualifications as a juror at the outset of the trial at Anniston Oct. 31.

Weaver had asked the entire jury panel if any of the members were or ever had been members of the Klan. One member of the jury panel—not Parker—responded that he had been a member. He was not seated on the jury.

Nine men were indicted on charges of interfering with interstate transportation and conspiracy following the May 14 attack on the bus.

Eight were tried together. One man was freed on a directed verdict and a mistrial was declared in the cases of the other seven.

Parker, a farmer and long-time resident of Morgan County, was arraigned before U. S. Commissioner Claude H. Pipes at Huntsville Tuesday. Recommended bond was $3,000.

Penalty upon conviction is $2,000 or five years in prison or both.

The jury at Anniston reported Nov. 3 to U. S. District Judge H. H. Grooms that it was hopelessly deadlocked after deliberating nine hours and five minutes.

THE TRIAL had been highlighted by charges of jury tampering, beginning with a dramatic assertion by Judge Grooms that he was considering ordering the U. S. attorney to prepare contempt citations. Grooms said he had been "reliably informed members of the jury have been systematically contacted about a case before this court."

Later, a government witness, Photographer Joe Postiglione, reported that his former wife had received threats that he was "not long for this world."

One juror, Earl Frankllin Hamrick of Arab, was excused by Grooms shortly before the jury got the case after reporting that four men had appeared at different times at his motel room on Halloween night, wearing Halloween masks. Hamrick said the men advised him that "I should conduct myself with leniency."

United States Attorney Macon Weaver identified him as Lewis Martin Parker, 59, a Hartselle, Ala., farmer.

Weaver said the Federal complaint charged that Parker gave false answers when asked about present or past membership in the Ku Klux Klan.

The trial of eight men charged in the burning of a bus carrying a group of white and Negro segregation-testers ended in a mistrial at Anniston, Ala., earlier this month.

At the outset of the trial, Weaver asked the jury panel if any of the members were, or ever had been, members of the Klan. One man — not Parker — responded that he had been a member. He was not seated on the jury.

Nine men were indicted on charges of interfering with interstate transportation and conspiracy after the attack on the bus—the first outburst of Freedom Rider violence—last May.

All were tried together in Federal Court. One man was freed on a directed verdict. The jury was unable to reach a decision on the other eight. A retrial has been set for February.

The perjury charge against Parker carries a maximum penalty of $2000 fine and five years' imprisonment.

Perjury Charge Says He Did Not Respond on Klan Tie

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Nov. 28 (AP)—One of the members of the jury that failed to reach a verdict in the Freedom Rider bus burning trial four weeks ago was arrested today on a perjury charge.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Nov. 28.—Lewis Martin Parker, 59, a member of the jury that failed to reach agreement in a trial stemming from racial violence at Anniston, was arrested on perjury charges, it was disclosed Tuesday.

United States Attorney Macon Weaver said Parker, a farmer from rural Hartselle, falsely swore he was not a member of the Ku Klux Klan during questioning before selection of the jury.

Bus Burning Charged

The jury failed to reach a verdict in the case of eight white men charged with burnihg a bus bringing the first group of self-styled "Freedom Riders" into Alabama May 14. The violence erupted at Anniston to trigger a chain of violent acts.

Weaver said Parker was arrested at his home Monday and released on $3,000 bond after arraignment before a United States commissioner in Huntsville. If convicted of perjury, Parker could be sentenced to a maximum of five years in prison, a $2,000 fine or both.

When Parker was called as a prospective juror, he was asked if he was or had been a member of the Ku Klux Klan. He denied any connection with the group and was seated as a juror.

The trial lasted from Oct. 31 until Nov. 3 when the jury reported members were unable to reach agreement. One Birmingham source said the jury stood at 11-1 for acquittal.

Trial Reset

The trial was reset for Feb. 6 for seven of the defendants. An eighth, Kenneth L. Adams, was cleared by directed verdict of the presiding judge because of the lack of evidence against him.

The bus bringing the riders to Alabama was met at the Anniston bus terminal by a group of howling whites. Later the bus was forced to stop several miles outside the city because of a flat tire and the vehicle was stoned and burned.

The incident was the first in what was to be a series of violent outbreaks against riders who came to the state to test segregation barriers in bus terminals.

FREEDOM RIDERS- CHICAGO WHITE MAN FINED $200

White Man Fined In Rider Case

SELMA (AP) — A Chicago white man, charged with disturbing the peace after an incident aboard a "Freedom Ride" bus last june, has paid a $200 fine and court costs.

Court officials said Ralph T Fertig, 31, pleaded guilty to the charge growing out of the disturbance June 2. An assault charge was dropped. Both cases were disposed of without trial.

Sheriff Jim Clark arrested Fertig after a crippled white woman who was occupying two seats on the bus, said he tried to sit on her lap. Fertig was with a group of Freedom Riders en route from Montgomery, scene of racial violence several days earlier, to Jackson, Miss.

Fertig disclaimed being a Freedom Rider, but said he was traveling with the biracial group as an observer. His expenses were paid by the Chicago Mission on Youth Welfare, he said.

Free under $1,500 bond since June 3, he was represented by attorneys when his case was called to trial. He did not reappear here.

Bergman had been hospitalized for an emergency appendectomy Sunday. During the operation his heart stopped beating for a minute and 45 seconds. The heart was re-started by massage. A spinal tap indicated brain damage.

When the first Freedom Rider's bus entered Birmingham, Ala., last May 15, Dr. Bergman and his wife, Frances, of 25515 Inkster, Farmington, Mich., were beaten and kicked by segregationists. He suffered a swollen jaw and a black eye.

On the same day, another riot was made on the freedom riders in Anniston, Ala., where Jr. Bergman was slugged and knocked down.

L. B. SULLIVAN
. . . Caught off guard

"WE HAVE BEEN getting reports from news media, from other police departments and from crank calls nearly every hour that they were coming this week but they did not arrive."

"We all sincerely regret that this happened here in Montgomery. It could have been avoided had outside agitators left us alone.

"I sincerely believe there had been an improvement in our strained race relations in Montgomery before these incidents today shattered all that progress," said Sullivan.

"Providing police protection for agitators is not our policy but we would have been ready if we had had definite and positive information they were coming.

"We will increase the number of patrol units now on duty until after this emergency is over and we sincerely hope to prevent any further violence."

Evasive Shelton Denies Knowing Of Klan Activity

One Witness Sent To Jail On Contempt

Alabama Klan leader Robert M. Shelton, hammered by questions from a Justice Dept. attorney, mantained here Tuesday he had almost no knowledge of Klan activities in Alabama.

A threat of a jail sentence for contempt of court from U.S. District Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. loosened his tongue a little — but not much.

Tension and drama heightened considerably during the second day of a hearing in which the government seeks to have Johnson enjoin Klan groups, and Montgomery and Birmingham police officials, in connection with bus station integration.

PLEAD FIFTH

Among the high lights:

— Three men pleaded the Fifth Amendment to questions linking them with Klan groups, refusing to testify on grounds their answers might incriminate them;

— One of the three was sent to jail by Johnson, angered when the witness refused to answer questions;

— An attorney sought to have U.S. Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy called here as a witness in the hearing;

— A tightening net was drawn about Alabama Klan groups with documents, records of telephone calls, identifications, and recorded license plate numbers.

Shelton, grim-faced and with furrowed brow, fiddled continually with his eye glasses under questioning by John Doar, chief Justice Department attorney here.

INCREASINGLY VAGUE

He identified Klan press releases as his, admitted he headed the Alabama Klans, Knights of the Ku Klux Klans, Inc., and that he was formerly an officer in U.S. Klans, Knight of the Ku Klux Klan.

But he grew increasingly vague under Doar's relentless probing. He said he did not know what local Klan groups are chartered in Alabama.

"I have no records involving any names," he said. He also professed to "know nothing of the inner workings of local meetings."

Judge Johnson broke in to tell Shelton: "That's not responsive," when he failed to give a direct answer to the question:

"Do you know any members of the Alabama Klans, Knighs of the Ku Klux Klan?"

When the question was put to him again, Shelton answered, "To authenticate this information, I do not."

Turning a stern eye on the Klan leader, Johnson rapped out: "That's not responsive, read him the question one more time."

Then Shelton said he knew only the Klan members "I work with." He went on to say he did not know how many charters he had issued, except some were "in the area of Tuscaloosa."

Calling a recess, Johnson advised Shelton and his attorney to confer. "I don't want to send Mr. Shelton to jail, without the advice of his attorneys," he said.

After the recess, Shelton testified that he knew of an Eastview Klavern in Birmingham, and to knowing three men — Robert Thomas, Kenneth Adams, Hubert Page, and James (Ace) Williams. But he said he did not know if they were Klan members.

Asked if he knew a J. B. Jurls of Montgomery, Shelton said no.

DREW JUDGE'S IRE

He also said he didn't know if there was a Klan "den" here, or in Warrior. Shelton termed a den in Monroeville "inactive."

Earlier a youth implicated by testimony in a bus burning near Anniston went briefly to jail when he drew Johnson's ire.

Cecil Lewallyn took the witness stand with a trapped and stunned expression. He held a piece of paper in trembling hands.

Asked if he were at the scene of the burning bus, Lewallyn quavered: "I refuse to answer . . ."

His voice failed to carry and an attorney compalined he could not hear him. "He's trying to plead the 5th Amendment," said Johnson. Then he turned to Lewallyn and snapped: "Who wrote that out for you?"

AGAIN DECLINES

Lewallyn again declined to answer. Pressed by Johnson, he said it was J. B. Stoner, an Atlanta lawyer. But when Johnson sought to question him turtner, he again declined, pleading the 5th Amendment.

"Mr. Marshal, commit this man to jail for contempt of court," said Johnson. The judge a moment later asked local attorney T. B. Hill, a spectator throughout the day, to advise Lewallyn on the 5th Amendment.

"I got the impression that he didn't know what he was doing—possibly," Johnson observed. Later, Lewallyn returned to again plead the amendment as to questions relating to Klan membership. Johnson orderd him released under $500 bond.

Kenneth Adams, Anniston, a beefy and red-faced man, answered all questions as to Klan membership with "I decline to answer on the grounds it might tend to incriminate me."

He was accompanied by Stoner, who identified himself to the court.

IDENTIFIES BALLOT

The next witness, James Williams, Gadsden, also pleaded the 5th Amendment in answer to questions related to his Ku Klux Klan connections. But he admitted being in Birmingham the day violence broke out at a bus station with one Robert Thomas. And he identified a ballot as one similar to one he had used in a Ku Klux Klan election.

Hubert Page, Birmingham whom Shelton had earlier testified at one time headed the Eastview Klan group, took the stand to deny any knowledge of Klan activities or that he was a Klansman.

An Anniston free lance photographer, Joe Postiglione, told of seeing a white mob charge a bus as it pulled into the station in Anniston. He also said he saw Kenneth Adams once holding a Klan robe at a Klan rally in an Anniston park.

The surging crowd cursed the bus passengers, and several of them smashed in windows, said Postiglione.

WARNED EARLIER

He said he had been previously warned to stay out of the way or get hurt. And he said one man had asked him: "What are you doing with that camera, Buddy?"

The photographer described following the bus five miles out of Anniston and pull off the road with flat tires. He identified several men in pictures he had shot at the bus station.

Before Lewallyn took the stand, a state criminal investigator, Harry Sims of Anniston, had told the court he saw the youth at the bus - burning scene. "When we went to a nearby store to make a telephone call," the officer said, Lewallyn told him, "There's no reason to call for help because we're leaving."

Sims said Lewallyn was wearing a brown sports shirt and cotton wash trousers, with the shirt tail outside the trousers.

The investigator's wife told the court she saw a fire bomb thrown which set the bus afire, and she said the man who tossed it answered the description her husband gave of Lewallyn.

WOVE INTO PATTERN

Testimony in the two-day hearing turned to the Anniston incident after other witnesses told of mob rioting in Montgomery and Birmingham.

Federal attorneys wove the Ku Klux Klan into the pattern of violence, but were unable thus far to pin it on any Klan member.

The request for Kennedy to appear as a defense witness was made to Doar by Calvin Whitesell, attorney for Montgomery policle authorities. Whitesell told the Associated Press he wanted to find out what, if anything, the attorney general had to do with the freedom rides.

In Washington, a spokesman for the Justice Department said he knew nothing about the request and could not say whether Kennedy would appear.

A Birmingham newspaper reporter, William A. Mobley of the Post-Herald, told the court Birmingham Police Commissioner Eugene Connor remarked shortly before the Trailways bus reached there that "It's just another bus coming in and there's not any use sending anyone over there."

However, the newsman said, he took the statement as a joke at the time.

Unlike the other defendants, silent and attentive, Connor frequently smiled, grimaced and yawned during the hearing.

Defense Atty. James A. Simpson tried to bring out in cross-examination that police had been alerted for days to watch for freedom riders arriving by Greyhound, but not by Trailways.

An FBI agent, Thomas J. Jenkins, testified that he talked with police several times but nothing was said about a Trailways bus until the day it arrived, May 14.

SAW POLICE

The segregation - challenging riders had been traveling by Greyhound, but split up in two groups in Atlanta and started for Birmingham over both routes.

Another reporter, Bud Gordon of the Birmingham News, said he saw uniformed police at the Greyhound terminal and a detective sergeant cruising around the Trailways depot. And he said he saw a black Cadillac believed to be Shelton's.

Still another newsman, Tom Lankford, also of the News, testified that Birmingham police "have always been quick and efficient" in emergencies.

Lankford said uniformed police reached the besieged Trailways terminal within five or six minutes after the violence erupted, and immediately put out arrest orders for men whose descriptions newsmen gave them.

ABOUT TO WIND UP

The hearing was recessed shortly after 6:30 p.m. to 9 a.m. Wednesday, with indications that the government was about to wind up its case.

Still on the stand was Charles Price, Southern Bell Telephone district manager in Birmingham. Doar had asked Price to identify from phone company records a call from Kenneth Adams in Anniston to Robert Shelton in Birmingham. Judge Johnson sustained a defense objection to identifying the call from the records as from Adams to Shelton.

R. F. Robinson, regional manager of Greyhound Lines in Atlanta, said a bus driver had first asked a police escort, then agreed, "If I would ride with them, he would drive."

SEAT IN BACK

He took a seat in the back of the bus, he said, after telling the driver not to disclose his identity. In Anniston, he said, he saw windows smashed in, and white men sitting in front of the bus so it could not move.

After pulling out of the station after police arrived, Robinson said a pickup truck and car pulled in front of the bus, then prevented it from passing them. After the bus had stopped with a flat tire, Robinson said, he went to make a phone call and returned to find smoke pouring from the vehicle. He termed the action of state investigator Ell Cowling in facing the mob "Heroic."

He called Cowling "one of the bravest men I ever contacted in my life."

Dfense Attorney Whitesell, representing Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal and Police Commissioner L. B. Sullivan, pounced on Robinson's statement that there were no uniformed police at the Atlanta terminal when the bus left.

STAMMERS DENIAL

He also drew from Robinson the statement that plainsclothesmen on the scene had been sent at the request of the terminal manager.

Earlier, an ex-Klansman stammered a denial that he took any part in violence that greeted "Freedom Riders" there.

A 20-year-old bakery doughnut maker, Jesse Oliver Faggard of the Alton community near Birmingham, testified that he went to the Trailways bus station there May 14 at the urging of a Klan member identified only as "Red."

Faggard told the court he and his father, also an ex-KKK member, were at the bus terminal when a white mob attacked an arriving group of freedom riders. But he said they were not involved in the violence.

The young bakery worker, who faces a charge of disorderly conduct as a result of the rioting, said he first went to the Greyhound station in Birmingham, where another Freedom-Ride bus was due. .

HAD 'ACCIDENT'

But he said "Red" told him the Greyhound bus had "a little accident" at Anniston, Ala. — a white mob burned it — and advised him and his father to rush to the Trailways depot.

A detective, Melvin Bailey, had said in Birmingham that young Faggard told officers he went to the Greyhound station in response to a telephone call from a Klansman.

Asked about that in court Tuesday, the youth did not deny making the statement, but said he could not recall just what he had told police.

"I was scared, mister," he explained, "and I don't know what I said."

Another witness, News Director Jim Atkins of Television Station WBRC in Birmingham, told the court he saw Klan leader Shelton at the Greyhound station but not at Trailways.

FREEDOM RIDERS
INJUNCTION HEARING- U.S. DISTRICT JUDGE FRANK M. JOHNSON

Hearing Set On Injunction For 'Riders'

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A hearing on whether an injunction will be issued against "Freedom Riders" in Alabama is set for Monday before U.S. Dist. Judge Frank M. Johnson.

The hearing was originally scheduled for June 12 when Johnson let a temporary restraining order against "Freedom Rides" in Alabama expire, and postponed the hearing until July 17.

Montgomery Police Department attorney, Calvin Whitesell, first asked the judge to put the "Freedom Rider" groups under injunction in the same suit which had been directed only against police and the Ku Klux Klan.

JUNE ORDER

Johnson issued the order June 2 to prohibit the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) and other "Freedom Rider" groups from financing, sponsoring, assisting or encouraging segregation-testing bus rides in Alabama until further notice.

But under federal court procedure, a temporary restraining order can remain in effect only for 10 days and can be extended for 10 days. However, the judge let the restraining order die on June 12 with a warning that he might reinstate the decree at a later date "if it becomes necessary."

Both the restraining order against CORE and the other "Freedom Rider" groups, and an injunction against Montgomery police, the Ku Klux Klan and four individuals grew out of race riots here and at Birmingham and Anniston.

Judge Delays New 'Rider' Ban Action

MONTGOMERY, July 17 (AP) — A Federal judge withheld action today on a new request for an injunction to prohibit organized "freedom rides" in Alabama.

U.S. Dist. Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. directed opposing attorneys to present written briefs before he makes a ruling.

The announcement came at the close of a hearing in which City Atty. Calvin Whitesell, contended that freedom rides create breaches of the peace and unduly burden law enforcement agencies and interstate commerce.

Whitesell had asked for an injunction during another hearing last month which resulted in a court order directing Montgomery police to protect freedom riders from further mob action.

Johnson also issued a restraining order against sponsored freedom rides, but let it expire 10 days later.

The no-bus-violence decree against police, and the temporary order against further freedom rides came in the wake of a weekend of racial violence May 20 and 21, touched off by the arrival of segregation-challeging freedom riders.

Prosecutes

When Whitesell appeared in court last month, he came as a defense attorney representing the Police Dept. But after the judge granted the temporary rstraining order against freedom ride sponsors, and the Justice Dept. opposed that action, the city attorney found himself in the role of a prosecutor against organized segregation-testing bus rides.

Justice Dept. Atty. John Doar argued today that there is no justification for an injunction against sponsored rides.

Johnson asked one of the attorneys opposing the requested new injunction, "Why do you continue to agitate, within the law, while you have a case pending in this court?"

The question was addressed to a Yale law professor, Louis A. Pollack, who joined others in representing the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) and other freedom ride sponsors.

Pollack replied that, in his opinion, opponents of segregation should not give up their fight "merely because a case is pending."

Johnson referred to a suit filed last month seeking a court order against any bus station segregation in the state. This case is awaiting a hearing.

Sees No Violation

The first witness at today's hearing, Col. Herman A. Price Jr. of the Alabama National Guard, testified that he saw no law violation by any freedom rider during May 21-29 when martial rule was in force in Montgomery. The statement came under cross examination by Fred Gray, a Negro defense attorney.

Randall McRae, a vice president of Capitol Trailways Bus Line, testified under Whitesell's questioning that gross revenue at the Montgomery terminal in May was about $2000 below that for May, 1960.

Alabama's public safety director, Floyd Mann, told of Highway Patrol preparation to protect freedom riders and said Montgomery police "knew as much as we did about the first such group coming to Montgomery May 20.

Escort Buses

Asst. Police Chief Marvin Stanley said police since May 20 have escorted every bus believed to be carrying freedom riders. Further, Stanley said, a supervisor and two officers now meet every bus, train and commercial plane arriving at Montgomery. Police, he said, are "absolutely not" ordered to enforce segregation.

Whitesell is asking for an injunction against Core, the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., and the Rev. Wyatt Tee Walker of Atlanta, the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy and the Rev. Solomon S. Seay Sr. of Montgomery and the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth of Birmingham.

The case against two other defendants was dropped when defense attorneys said they did not represent them and, as far as they knew, the organizations did not exist. They were listed as the Nashville Student Non-Violence Movement and the Montgomery County Jail Council.

Alabama Rides Resume As U.S. Court Voids Ban

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (UPI)—A federal restraining order against "freedom rides" in Alabama was lifted Monday and Negro leaders immediately made plans to resume the antisegregation rides which sparked racial violence in this Deep South state.

The temporary order was issued 10 days ago to allow a "cooling off' period and funneled all "freedom ride" activity into Jackson, Miss., where officials planned to relieve crowded jails by working the riders in cotton fields.

Shortly after the "off limits" restriction died on a technicality in Federal District Court here, an official of the "freedom ride" coordinating committee said in Atlanta the protest rides would resume "as soon as possible" in Alabama.

The Rev. Wyatt T. Walker, executive secretary of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, said he would meet here Tuesday with the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy to work out plans "to restart freedom rides." Abernathy is president of the Montgomery Improvement Associatian (MIA), an integrationist organization.

There were these other developments:

1. The NAACP said that biracial investigating teams would begin touring Florida's major transportation terminals Wednesday "to observe whether or not the spirit of the recent integration rulings is being followed in interstate travel terminals."

The Atlanta Constitution
Atlanta
Miss. 6-13-61

2. The Congress of Racial Equality announced in Washington that two groups of "freedom riders" will leave Washington Tuesday for trips through North and South Carolina and Florida.

110 ARRESTED

At Jackson, Miss., where 110 white and Negro "freedom riders" have been arrested for challenging bus, train and air terminal segregation, county officers cleared the way to send the "riders" to the state prison at Parchman.

The Atlanta Constitution

Twelve "riders" were convicted Monday and received $200 fines and jail sentences of four months.

At Montgomery, U.S. middle district Judge Frank Johnson Jr. who placed Alabama off limits to the riders 10 days ago after racial violence in Montgomery Birmingham and Anniston, lifted his ban.

EXPIRED MONDAY

The original restraining order was issued for only 10 days and was due to expire Monday. It could have been extended for 10 more days, but then would have permanently died under federal rules and procedures.

Johnson permitted the order to expire immediately when he found that a techincal mistake had been made by a U.S. district attorney's office, which admitted it had failed to serve CORE and other integrationist groups with one of the documents in the case.

Johnson set July 17 for a further hearing into the case.

2 Rival Klan Leaders Named In Bus-Violence Injunction Suit

The Washington Post, Washington, D.C.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 23 (AP)—Two bitterly rival Ku Klux Klan leaders—Robert M. Shelton and the Rev. Alvin C. Horn—are among the defendants in a Federal court injunction against bus violence.

United States District Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. signed the order last night in an effort to halt rioting touched off by the arrival of "Freedom Riders" in three Alabama cities.

The injunction was issued against Shelton, Horn, two other men identified as Klan members, and against three KKK groups in Alabama. It prohibits them from interfering with interstate bus travel in Alabama.

Forms New Group

After he was bounced out by the late Imperial Wizard E. L. Edwards of Atlanta, Shelton announced the organization of a New KKK group—the Alabama Knights, Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, Inc.—and claimed most of the members of the other faction as his followers.

The 49-year-old Horn was Grand Dragon of the Klan for many years, but had resigned in 1957 because of publicity over his marriage to 15-year-old Barbara Richardson at Trenton, Ga., in May of that year.

He was indicted for falsely swearing that the girl was 20, but the charge was dropped on the request of the child-bride's father.

Murder Indictment Dismissed

Horn had been indicted seven years earlier for murder in the nighttime slaying of Charlie Hurst at Pell City, Ala. Hurst was shot down by a group of men after telling his son he thought "the Klan is after me."

The murder indictment against Horn later was dismissed.

An employe of a rubber company at Tuscaloosa for many years, Shelton supported Gov. John Patterson in his successful race for office in 1958. Later, the Klansman became a tire salesman doing business with the state.

He lost his job last year and protested he was fired for his

'Riders' Undeterred By Alabama Race Riot

The Washington Post, Washington, D.C.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 23 (AP)—Undeterred by race riots which upset their timetable, battered "Freedom Riders" promised today to continue their challenge of bus station segregation in the South.

Others will come, too, their spokesmen told a news conference, and a State court injunction which seeks to stop the "Freedom" journeys through Alabama will be appealed to Federal court.

City police today announced the first arrest of anyone accused of taking part in the mob violence which greeted the racially mixed group of bus riders at the Greyhound bus station in downtown Montgomery last Saturday.

Claude Henley, 37, a former Montgomery reserve policeman, was taken into custody, then released on bond, on warrants charging assault and battery for an attack on two NBC television newsmen, photographer Maurice Leavey and sound man H. W. Riser.

The two newsmen were beaten and Leavey's camera smashed during the rioting which left about 20 others pummeled with fists and clubs.

Plans for continuing the freedom bus ride were announced at a news conference by the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. acting as spokesman for the group.

He declined to say when the riders would resume their journey through Mississippi to New Orleans, except that it would be soon.

White as well as Negro students will make the trip, he said. The group was integrtaed when it arrived here, but the only white man aboard, James Zwerg of Appleton, Wis., was hospitalized after a severe beating, and two white girls returned home to Nashville, Tenn.

Meantime, the riders still here turned their attention to a "non-violence worshop" set up, Mr. King said, to "cleanse themselves for the goal ahead."

Picked to lead the workshop was the Rev. James Lawson, former student at Vanderbilt University who was dismissed a year ago for his part in sit-in demonstrations in Nashville.

Another Negro leader, the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy of Montgomery, told reporters the bus riders hope to stop in Mississippi despite Gov. Ross Barnett's plans to escort them through the State.

Mr. Abernathy denounced the Mississippi Governor's plan as a "form of kidnaping."

From National Directors when they resume their terday will join the other riders members who came here yesthe Negroes here, came the gress of Racial Equality (CORE), which is worikng with James Farmer of the Condisclosure that four CORE journey.

Mr. King said a Federal judge will be asked to set aside the injunction issued last Friday by Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones in Montgomery. Jones ordered integrationists to cease all so-called "freedom rides" through Alabama.

Although State authorities have warrants charging the group with violating the injunction by coming here from Birmingham, no arrests have been made. The Negroes have been staying at private homes since their arrival.

If the arrests are made, Mr. King said, the Negroes will remain in jail without bond and other students will be sent in to take their place in the segregation test.

Negro Shot; Marshals Go; King Objects

The Atlanta Constitution P.1
Dai. 5-26-61 Atlanta, Ga.

By JEROME BRAZDA

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (UPI)—A Negro integration leader was shot by white youths in a passing car Thursday shortly after the government announced the withdrawal of 500 marshals from this racially tense Alabama capital.

The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., head of Negro integrationist efforts in the South, who had returned to Atlanta, immediately protested to President John F. Kennedy that "a perpetual reign of terror still exists in Montgomery." King asked that the marshals not leave "at this crucial moment."

WIRES KENNEDY

King telegraphed the President of the wounding of the Rev. Solomon Seay and the arrest of a new group of "Freedom Riders" at the bus station here.

Seay said he had just stepped outside his front door when he saw a youth, apparently white, stick a rifle out of the window of an old model car speeding down the highway. "I just happened to have my hand up in front of my face and the bullet struck my wrist," said Seay, executive secretary of the Montgomery Improvement Association, a leading group in the integration fight.

U.S. Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy said in Washington he was reducing the marshal force here to 100 because state and local officials seem to have the "Freedom Rider" situation under control. Kennedy said also that his chief deputy, Byron White, who headed the marshals ordered here in the wake of racial violence, was returning to Washington.

RIDERS FILE SUIT

The Rev. Ralph T. Abernathy and six "Freedom Riders" filed a suit here Thursday afternoon challenging the constitutionality of Alabama's segregation laws. The Justice department announced in Washington it would take part in the suit as a "friend of the court."

Edwin Guthman, Justice department press officer, said the suit seeks to enjoin Montgomery police from enforcing segregation in interstate bus terminals, and to block arrests of "Freedom Riders" under an Alabama state court injunction.

The Atlanta Constitution
Dai. 5-26-61

The Justice department will study the legal issues involved and then take a position—certain to be one of backing the "Freedom Riders" in their assault on segregation laws.

TROOPS PULL OUT

Meantime, the National Guard troops which have been guarding both Montgomery bus terminals, Union Railroad Station and the airport were quietly withdrawn. They were being kept in readiness, however, should they be needed and the state limited martial law remained. Bus, train and airplane arrivals were watched by sheriff's deputies, police, state troopers and FBI agents.

Two inter-racial groups jailed in Jackson Wednesday after completing bus rides from Montgomery had used the white facilities at the bus station here without challenge. But they were arrested within minutes after they arrived in Jackson and tried to use white facilities in that bus station.

The new arrests brought to 37 the total number of "Freedom Riders" behind bars in the two cities.

RIOTING ERUPTED

Rioting erupted when the first group of "Freedom Riders" arrived in this "Cradle of the Confederacy" last week. Ten tense, and at times bloody, days ensued before the students were hustled out of the state Wednesday in what amounted to an armed caravan for a seven-hour trip to Jackson and jail.

Before leaving, they had coffee without incident in the white facilities of the Montgomery Terminal. White waitresses refused to wait on them, however, and Negro waitresses from the Negro lunch counter were brought in.

The seven arrested Thursday when they sought similar service included four white College professors—two of them from Yale—and three Negro college students.

WARNED BY GOVERNOR

They indicated in advance they would seek service at the lunch counter and were in turn warned in advance by Gov. John Patterson that they would be arrested if they made such an attempt.

State Adj. Gen. Henry V. Graham offered Thursday's group the same armed convoy provided for Wednesday's group. The convoy would have included 50 National Guardsmen and 32 highway patrolmen with instructions to escort the group to the Mississippi border.

"Now everyone is happy," commented Graham. "This is what they wanted and we have accommodated them. They've been arrested quietly like they wanted to be and now I'm happy too."

group was hauled off to jail. Like those previously arrested, they will be segregated at the jail house, in the custom of the South.

The group arrested at Montgomery Thursday was different from earlier groups of "Freedom Riders" in that they had no direct connection with groups planning the rides.

PROFESSOR ARRESTED

One of those arrested, Professor John Maguire of Wesleyan University at Middleton, Conn., said he decided to join the "Freedom Ride" movement when he saw his boyhood home in Montgomery pictured in newsreels taken during recent riots.

Although Mississippi is considered the strongest bastion of Southern segregation, the "Freedom Riders" got a comparatively polite welcome. There were a few isolated insults shouted from the crowds that gathered along the route, but mostly the group was treated with courtesy.

They came to Mississippi, however, under extremely unusual circumstances. Carloads of armed National Guardsmen and highway patrolmen escorted the double-deck buses that brought in the two groups. Planes hovered overhead, scanning the surrounding pine woods for snipers. The first group was held up at the border while National Guardsmen checked out a report the caravan would be bombed.

King, top integration leader in the South, returned to Atlanta Thursday before the arrests here. He had announced Wednesday that there would be "Freedom Riders" on every bus leaving Montgomery for Jackson in the next few weeks. This plan was apparently not pushed immediately in view of the appeal issued by the attorney general for both sides to let the situation "cool off."

A reporter asked Gov. Barnett if Mississippi could financially afford to continue police protection for "Freedom Riders" if the trips continue in great number.

"It's very expensive indeed," Barnett said. "I can't predict what the future will hold. We'll cross that bridge when we come to it."

OFFERED ESCORT

Alabama's offer to give Thursday's group an escort indicated that "Freedom Riders" would be protected within the state, at least in the near future.

In addition to Maguire, the seven "Freedom Riders" arrested at Montgomery Thursday were the Revs. Gaylord Noyce and William Coffin, both Yale University religion professors, and George B. Smith, a Negro and a student at the Yale University Law School.

Also David Swift, like Maguire a religion professor at Wesleyan University at Middleton, and Clyde Barter and Charles Jones who are Negro theological students at Johnson C. Smith University at Charlotte, N.C.

The leaders arrested were the Revs. Ralph Abernathy, Fred M. Shuttlesworth and Wyatt Tee Walker, and Bernard S. Lee, Atlanta student leader in the segregation movement. All were charged with breach of the peace.

Lines Drawn for Racial Test

Abernathy could not be reached for comment.

A State Court injunction which sought to keep the racially mixed Riders from continuing their segregation-challenging bus trip was still in force despite Johnson's order.

Sheriff's deputies had orders to arrest the Freedom Riders on charges of violating the State injunction, but they were unable to locate them.

There have been no further reports of violence since the rioting was quelled with tear gas.

Top Negro leaders called a meeting in Montgomery to "mobilize a fullscale exercise of the rights of peaceful citizens, white and Negro, in the South."

The Alabama Knights of the Ku Klux Klan and other segregation groups held an all-night meeting last night in a hotel at Rome, Ga., and offered its "wholehearted support to the Governor and citizens of Alabama." But the Klansmen did not say what action they planned.

What, if anything, they decided was not immediately disclosed. But informed sources said the Administration was not considering sending troops into Alabama at this time.

The "Freedom Riders," all students from Nashville, Tenn., had set out to challenge segregation laws in buses and waiting rooms. They were met at the bus terminal here yesterday by club-swinging whites directed by a man puffing on a big cigar.

Negro leaders, speaking through the Southern Christian Leadership Conference in Atlanta, said student and adult groups from all over the Nation had asked if they could help Montgomery Negroes. Mr. Abernathy and Wyatt Tee Walker of Atlanta said, "groups from all parts of the nation will travel by bus through the South to determine whether constitutional rights to safety from violence while exercising the privileges of American citizens is, in fact, a reality."

The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., symbol of Negro efforts to shatter all Southern segregation customs, cancelled a speech in Dartmouth College in New Hampshire and flew to Montgomery.

Today's trouble actually began a week ago.

The Congress on Racial Equality began a much publicized Freedom Rid from Washington through the South with the goal of deliberately defying all bus and waiting-room segregation customs. The group made it with minor difficulty through North and South Carolina and Georgia, but ran into violence at Anniston and Birmingham, Ala., last weekend.

A bus was burned. The riders were attacked at Birmingham. The CORE group gave up its ride and flew from Birmingham to New Orleans.

College students from Nashville, who boast what Negro leaders call the "best organized and most disciplined of all the movements over our Southland today," took up the Freedom Ride idea.

Volunteers were picked from 80 trained "non violent" demonstrators.

They rode buses to Birmingham and spent Friday night in the bus terminal because drivers refused to take them aboard a bus for Montgomery.

They finally got on a bus for the Alabama capital yesterday. A small but determined crowd of white men and women were waiting for them at the terminal here.

The "man with the cigar" directed attackers at Jim Zwerg, 21, a white ministerial student, and Zwerg was beaten unconscious. Two white girls with the Freedom Riders, Susan Wilber, 18, and Susan Hermann, 20, sprinted to police headquarters and later caught a train back to Nashville.

Negro rider William F. Barbee was clubbed unconscious. He and Zwerg said later—from segregated hospital rooms—they would continue their campaign.

"From here we go to Jackson, Miss.," Zwerg said. "Then on to New Orleans. They may try to stop us—attack and maybe bomb us. But we're ready for anything."

ROBERT M. SHELTON

. . . Klan leader enjoined

Rival Injunctions Issued by Federal And State Courts

From News Dispatch

The Justice Department rushed 400 Federal marshals to Montgomery after a brief but vicious attack on 21 white and Negro "Freedom Riders" at the city bus terminal yesterday. The marshals carried pistols and wore yellow arm bands.

Gov. John Patterson angrily insisted that local officers had the situation under control and threatened arrest of any Federal marshals who attempt to enforce the law without a request for Federal intervention.

Patterson wired both President Kennedy and the Attorney General to get the marshals out of Alabama. Patterson also charged that the Justice Department encouraged the Freedom Riders to violate Alabama segregation laws, and "Federal marshals are not welcome in this state."

An injunction from U. S. district Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. prohibiting any attempt by force to stop "Freedom Riders" from continuing their test of bus station segregation, was issued less than 24 hours after yesterday's bloody race riot.

Johnson put the blame for recent violence here and in two other Alabama cities o Ku Klux Klan members and his order was directed at them "and all persons acting in concert with them."

Marshals Stand Guard

The U. S. marshals and deputies, rushed here last night by Attorney General Robert Kennedy, stood guard today near the bus station and near the home of a Negro integration leader, the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy.

Three cars of officers were seen parked near Abernathy's residence, but there was no explanation for their presence.

Lines Set For Test in Bus Dispute

Rival Kluxers Defendants in U.S. Court Injunction

Shelton and Horn, Long Bitter Opponents

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — Two bitterly rival Ku Klux Klan leaders — Robert M. Shelton and the Rev. Alvin C. Horn — are among the defendants in a federal court injunction against bus violence.

U.S. Dist. Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. signed the order Saturday night in an effort to halt rioting touched off by the arrival of "freedom riders" in three Alabama cities.

The injunction was issued against Shelton, Horn, two other men identified as Klan members, and against three KKK groups in Alabama. It prohibits them from interfering with interstate bus travel in Alabama.

MURDER CHARGE

Shelton, 31, a former rubber factory employe, was grand dragon of the U.S. Klans, Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, Inc., before he was ousted last year. He was replaced by Horn, a Talladega minister once indicted for murder.

After he was bounced out by the late imperial wizard, E.L. Edwards of Atlanta, Shelton announced the organization of a new KKK group — the Alabama Knights, Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, Inc. — and claimed most of the members of the other faction as his followers.

Horn, 49, was grand dragon of the Klan for many years, but had resigned in 1957 because of publicity over his marriage to 15-year-old Barbara Richardson at Trenton, Ga., in May of that year.

He was indicted for falsely swearing that the girl was 20, but the charge was dropped on the request of the child-bride's father.

ACTION DISMISSED

Horn had been indicted seven years earlier for murder in the night-time slaying of Charlie Hurst at Pell City, Ala. Hurst was shot down by a group of men after telling his son he thought "the Klan is after me."

The murder indictment against Horn later was dismissed.

An employe of a rubber company at Tuscaloosa for a number of years, Shelton supported Gov. John Patterson in his successful race for office in 1958. Later, the Klansman became a tire salesman doing business with the state.

He lost his job last year and protested he was fired for his Klan activity. His company listed it instead as a reduction in personnel.

AGAINST HEALTH AID

Besides the usual KKK activities of fighting racial integration, Shelton also has been actively opposed to increased state appropriations for mental health and against fluoridation of drinking water, contending they have subversive aims.

He once gave this explanation for his stand against increasing mental health funds: "They can perform an operation on you and give you the mentality of a 3-year-old child. They do this by going in behind the eye and deadening the brain tissues. And when they get you in this condition, they can teach you to be an integrationist or anything else. They have already performed this operation on 500,000 people in Russia."

DESEGREGATED
TERMINAL RESTAURANTS

Ala. terminal firm orders desegregation

MOBILE, Ala. — Desegregation of the Mobile and Montgomery railroad terminal restaurants was ordered by the Union News Company as a result of complaints filed by J. L. LeFlore, director of case work for the Mobile Citizens' Committee and veteran civil rights official.

He disclosed that W. J. Bligh, secretary and counselor of the Union News Company, with headquarters in New York city, advised in a letter last week that "definite instructions have been issued to our managers at Mobile and Montgomery that all passengers are to be served in our restaurants."

This brings to six and seven the number of bus and railroad terminal restaurants desegregated by LeFlore and Ernest L. Koen, two "Freedom Commandos," since their first travel survey trip of Feb. 21 on these missions. They have made 10 such trips to date.

LEFLORE SAID that complaints were first filed with the Department of Justice and the Interstate Commerce Commission, then the Union News Co. The Mobile complaint was filed on behalf of Mrs. Dorothy Williams, Miss Zora McArthur and Mrs. Juanita Coleman, who were refused service in the so - called "white" restaurant of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad terminal on March 28 while traveling in interstate commerce.

The Montgomery protest was made as the result of LeFlore and Koen being denied service in the Union Station restaurant there in April.

The Montgomery Union Station restaurant was visited by "Freedom Riders" several weeks ago but was closed by the management at the time.

LEFLORE added that a fourstate travel, waiting room and restaurant desegregation survey was made by Koen and himself during the past five months.

The trips included cities in Florida, Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama, and resulted in Greyhound bus terminal restaurant segregation crumbling in New Orleans, Mobile, Pensacola and Montgomery, and in railroad terminals restaurants at New Orleans, now since Feb. 21.

The desegregation trips have been sponsored by the Non - Partisan Voters League and the Citizens' Committee of Mobile.

J's First Defensive Speech

IN J's opening campaign speech at Talladega, it seemed to us that for the first time in his 20 years of campaigning he spoke defensively and negatively.

One line in his speech perhaps revealed J's major anxiety. He said: "I'd a put them sorry white folks [freedom riders] in a cell with the blackest Negroes in Atmore Prison."

That came from the former governor who once sent License Plate No. 1 to Dannelly Field to fetch Parson Powell of Harlem to the Executive Mansion for whisky and fellowship.

There is no question that this act would have murdered any 20 other politicians. But J has been a politician all apart from our mortal politicians and he has enjoyed immunity from chastisement by the people. The racial tragedy is the most inflamed emotion of the people of Alabama. Can he spit out the Harlem highball?

Evidently that is something J himself doesn't know. It is even possible that he is not cornballing it in his acknowledged sampling of public sentiment on his candidacy and that his course will be ruled by his findings.

Alabama Begins Trial Of 'Riders'

Sheriff Says Military Told Him To Arrest 11 At Bus Station

By United Press International

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Sept. 15.—Montgomery County Sheriff Mac Sim Butler testified Friday he arrested 11 so-called "Freedom Riders" at a bus station here on a prearranged signal from the state adjutant general's legal advisor, Col. Ralph Porch, when the city was under limited martial law.

"When circumstances got to a certain point," Sheriff Butler said, "Colonel Porch gave me a nod and I touched each one on the shoulder and told them they were under arrest for breach of peace."

Sheriff Butler told the Court of Common Pleas, "in my opinion, if an arrest hadn't been made, we would have had a serious riot at or near the bus station."

Motion To Quash Denied

The sheriff was the first witness called by the prosecution in the case of a bi-racial group arrested here May 25 when they tried to integrate a bus terminal lunch counter. The 11 were charged with breach of the peace and conspiracy to breach the peace. Their arrest came a few days after violence erupted when another group of so-called "Freedom Riders" arrived in this capital city and were beaten by a mob.

Earlier Judge Alex Marks denied a motion to quash and motions of demurrer filed by defense attorney Fred Gray. Mr. Gray argued allegations in the warrant issued for the arrest of the "riders" tended to elaborate on one offender rather than the group and charged the terminology was too vague. He said the warrant failed to list the names of the defendants as well as the persons whose peace was disturbed.

Atty. Louis Pollak, professor of law at Yale, argued the Federal aspects of the warrant for the defense. He said the "language" of the warrant and the "Determination" of Federal Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. indicated the warrant was issued to compel segregation. He said prosecution of the case interferes with the Federally protected rights of the defendants to travel freely in Alabama.

In denying the demurrers, Judge Marks, who helped write the arrest warrants, said the fact that all 11 were present at the time of arrest and were arrested was sufficient for identification.

Under examination by Curcuit Solicitor William Thetford and attorney Frank Riggs, Sheriff Butler told the court, at the time of the arrest he was under the military command of state Adj. Gen. Henry V. Graham and was told to take any arrest orders from Colonel Porch.

Earlier this week the group lost its bid to delay the trial when the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals refused to issue an injunction against state prosecution on criminal charges.

Defendants Are Listed

Judge Johnson, the Federal judge who ordered bus integration here five years ago, held Federal procedures did not empower him to enjoin Mr. Thetford from prosecution of the plaintiffs. The ruling came during a case aimed at knocking down racial barriers in bus terminal facilities in the state. The suit attacked the state's breach of peace laws as a method of enforcing segregation on interstate travelers.

The 11 defendants included assistant professor of Yale Divinity School, the Rev. Gaylord Noyce, 34; John Maguire and David Smith, religion professors at Wesleyan College; Yale University chaplin, the Rev. William Coffin; George Smith, New Haven, Conn; Bernard Lee and the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, Montgomery; Joseph Charles Jones and Clyde Carter, Charlotte, N. C.; the Rev. Wyatt Tee Walker of Atlanta and the Rev. Fred Shuttlesworth of Birmingham.

BIRMINGHAM- FREEDOM RIDERS
REV. F.L. SHUTTLESWORTH

Negro pastor faces trial in 'sit-ins'

The Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, who appealed Recorder's Court convictions on three counts involving "freedom rider" sit-ins at the Greyhound Bus Station last May, will go on trial in Circuit Court here tomorrow.

Recorder's Court Judge William Conway last June sentenced Shuttlesworth to 30 days in jail on a breach of the peace charge and fined him $100 in costs plus 180 days in jail on separate charges of interfering with an officer and refusing to obey the lawful command of an officer.

The appeal hearings were scheduled before Circuit Judge George Lewis Bailes today but were postponed until Wednesday for jury trial.

The charges against Shuttlesworth grew out of the May 17 "freedom rider" sit-ins during which a group of integrated students were taken into protective custody by Birmingham police.

Shuttlesworth Loses Appeal

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (UPI) — The State Supreme Court Friday refused to overrule the disorderly conduct convictions of the integrationist leader, Rev. Fred Shuttlesworth, and [illegible] other Negroes for sit-in attempts in Birmingham. The court offered no expl[illegible]n for its action.

'Rider' Cases Grow

BIRMINGHAM (UPI) — Court cases growing out of the violence attending the arrival of "Freedom Riders" in Montgomery last May will probably be cropping up for some time.

Eleven "Freedom Riders" appealed their disorderly conduct convictions before circuit court Judge Eugene Carter this week. The group, including four white New England religion professors, had been convicted and sentenced in common pleas court.

Carter upheld the lower court's verdict that the defendants were guilty and ordered them to serve 30 days in jail each and pay $100 fines.

The ruling was immediately appealed by attorneys for the 11 men, and will next be heard by the state court of appeals.

One of the defendants, Dr. William S. Coffin, Yale University chaplain, said he was "disappointed but not surprised" by the decision.

Dr. John Maguire, assistant professor of religion at Wesleyan College, called Carter's verdict "fundamentally phony."

Col. Ralph Poarch of the Alabama National Guard testified he ordered the arrest of the four white men and seven Negroes to avert a "bloody riot" when the group sought to integrate a bus terminal lunch counter while Montgomery was under limited martial law.

CHAIR PUT TO USE

The State of Alabama carried out another execution four minutes after the end of Thanksgiving day. The total is now over 140 in the 40 years the electric chair has been in use.

Joe Henry Johnson, 19-year-old Negro, was electrocuted at 12:04 a.m. Friday for the rape-killing of Miss Dicie Boyd, 62, at Athens two years ago.

Johnson had pleaded for executive clemency but was turned down by Gov. John Patterson.

During his trial, the state introduced as evidence a confession in which the Negro youth admitted killing and raping the woman in a barn near her home.

At his clemency hearing, however, Johnson said "I don't remember doing anything like that . . . but if I did, I ask you to spare my life. Give me another chance."

McPHEARSON TRIAL

The third murder trial of John Lewis McPhearson, wealthy Silas timberman, began Monday at Butler.

McPhearson is charged with first degree murder in the slaying of his wife. He was sentenced to life imprisonment at his first trial but the state supreme court threw out the verdict. A second trial resulted in a hung jury.

The state contended that McPhearson murdered his wife for love of another woman. McPhearson has claimed her death from a gunshot wound was accidental during a struggle for possession of a rifle.

"9-8 ATTACKED

The "nine-eight" congressional redistricting bill has come under legal attack in Mobile.

Maurice A. Downing, a Mobile attorney, has questioned the legality of the measure which is designed to reduce the state's congressional delegation from nine to eight in elections next year due to population losses.

Downing claims the bill is unconstitutional because provisions requiring the use of paper ballots in the congressional runoff conflict with current state laws governing elections.

The bill was aimed at preventing "single shot" voting.

Circuit Judge Joseph M. Hocklander said he would rule Monday on the petition brought by Downing.

Court upholds convictions of Negroes

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Nov. 16 —(AP)—The Alabama Supreme Court Thursday reaffirmed its earlier decision upholding the conviction of an integration leader and another Birmingham Negro arrested in 1960 sit-ins.

It refused to consider its previous action in affirming the ruling of the Alabama Court of Appeals, which upheld fines given the Rev. Fred Shuttlesworth and Charles Billups.

They were arrested along with 10 other Birmingham Negroes in March, 1960. All were convicted of violating cit yordinances in connection with sit-in protests at Birmingham department and variety store lunch counters.

The Supreme Court took the same action on the 10 other cases two weeks ago.

'Rider' Group Found Guilty, Bonds Posted

BY ARTHUR OSGOODE

Eleven "Freedom Riders," including four prominent white ministers, Monday were found guilty of breach of the peace and unlawful assembly in Circuit Court.

Judge Eugene Carter sentenced each one to 30 days in jail and fixed their fine at $100 each.

All were released under $750 appeal bonds.

The charges against them stemmed from a May 25 incident at the Trailways bus terminal, when they were arrested as they sought service at the white lunch counter. The racially mixed group included seven Negroes.

The arrests were made as uniformed National Guardsmen stood on guard outside the bus station, the city having been proclaimed under martial law after a series of racial disturbances during the preceding week.

TALKED WITH KING

During the daylong trial, Yale University Chaplain William S. Coffin told of talking with the Rev. Martin Luther King and with Asst. U.S. Atty. Gen. Burke Marshall before making the trip to Montgomery. And Maj. Gen. Henry V. Graham, who was in command during the martial law period, maintained he did not order the arrests because he was angry.

Coffin said he decided to make the trip here after reading of previous bus station violence in Montgomery. He said he first talked to another of the defendants, Dr. John D. Maguire, Montgomery native and professor of religion at Wesleyan University.

Coffin said the group "anticipated little trouble in Montgomery" and planned to go from here to Jackson, Miss. He said they concluded this from learning that two other racially mixed groups had been served at the bus terminal lunch counter.

TOOK SEATS

Coffin maintained that it would have been almost impossible for anyone outside the bus station to have observed his group as they took their seats at the counter.

Graham said he decided on the arrests because he felt the action of the defendants threatened to touch off mob violence. But he acknowledged that, "I was provoked, I was irritated, I was also angry. . . ." He further acknowledged saying afterwards that he was "happy" over the arrests, and that the defendants "wanted to be arrested."

Another National Guard officer, Col. Ralph Poarch of Anniston, who served as Graham's legal aide at the time of the arrests, agreed with Graham that no arrests would probably have been made if there had been no possibility of a riot.

Poarch said the city was "extremely tense."

Under cross examination, he said he had not ordered the arrests of "three white toughs" who poured coffee on lunch counter seats though he thought they might be guilty of breach of the peace.

Poarch said it seemed wisest at the time to evict them from the station. He said he could not have dealt with the racially mixed group in the same manner.

Newsman Donald Martin, UPI Manager in Montgomery, testified that when he left the station the previous day with a group of "Freedom Riders" bound for Jackson, Miss., it was his impression that it would have been impossible to see inside the station from across the street.

'CAUSE RIOT'

County Sheriff Mac Sim Butler testified he made the arrests when ordered to by Porach. He also said the action of the defendants in seeking to drink coffee together might "very well have caused a riot."

Beside Coffin and Maguire, the defendants included two other college faculty members, Dr. Gaylord Noice, Yale Divinity School professor, and Dr. David Swift, Wesleyan religion professor.

Also in the group were three prominent Negro integrationists, the Revs. Ralph Abernathy and Fred Shuttlesworth, and Wyatt Tee Walker, executive director of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference.

OTHER DEFENDANTS

The other Negro defendants were George B. Smith, a Yale law student; Clyde Carter and Joseph Jones, students at Johnson Smith College, Charlotte, N.C.; and Bernard Lee, who was among Alabama State College students expelled for taking part in anti segregation demonstrations.

The cases were tried on appeal of previous convictions in Court of Common Pleas last September.

Coffin said Monday on the witness stand that the NAACP is paying most of the cost of counsel for the 11 defendants, who pay for their own transportation.

Representing them were local attorney Fred Gray, Louis Polak, Yale law professor and Jack Greenberg, general counsel for the NAACP Legal and Education Fund, a post formerly filled by Thurgood Marshall.

Yale Riders' Conviction Upheld by Alabama Court

By United Press International

MONTGOMERY, Ala.

An appeals court Monday upheld the conviction of four white university professors and seven Negro integration leaders of disorderly conduct charges growing out of their attempts to eat together in an all-white bus station restaurant.

The decision came in Circuit Court here shortly after one of the group, Dr. William S. Coffin jr., the chaplain of Yale University, told the court they had been escorted into the restaurant by National Guardsmen.

"It was obvious we were under the protection of the National Guard," Dr. Coffin said. "They told us what to do."

Circuit Judge Eugene Carter sentenced the defendants to thirty days hard labor and fined them $100 each. The case was an appeal of a city court decision.

Dr. Coffin's testimony disagreed with that of prosecution witnesses who contended the group was arrested to prevent recurrence of the rioting which accompanied trips of other Freedom Riders to this Deep South capital.

Col. Ralph Poarch, an Anniston attorney, said "the air was electric with hostility" when the four New England professors, including the Yale chaplain, and seven Negroes tried to integrate the lunch counter at the Trailways terminal last May.

"The primary purpose of the National Guard," Col. Poarch said, explaining limited martial law which was imposed on this city during the Freedom Ride movement, "was to preserve peace and prevent riots.

"When the group sat down at the lunch counter the white waitresses immediately left and the tension was increased to such an extent I arrested the group to prevent harm to their lives and those of other passengers, the crowd of more than 300 outside and other passers-by."

The defendants included Dr. Coffin and an assistant professor of religion at Yale, Dr. Gaylord Noyce; Dr. David Swift, professor of religion, and Dr. John MaGuire, assistant professor of religion at Wesleyan College in Middleton, Conn.; and Negroes Bernard Lee, of Montgomery, the Rev. Ralph Abernathy, former president of the Montgomery Improvement Association, and the Rev. Wyatt Tee Walker, executive secretary of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, both of Atlanta; students Joseph C. Jones and Clyde Carter, of Charlotte, N. C.; George Smith, a law student at Yale; and the Rev. Fred Shuttlesworth, of Birmingham.

FREEDOM RIDERS N ALABAMA AGAIN

First Since Court Ruling—
14 Jailed in Jackson

New York Times

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 20 (UPI)—The first group of Freedom Riders to invade Alabama since a Federal judge put the state off limits eighteen days ago was met by a sullen crowd today.

The riders, five Negroes and four whites, got off a Greyhound bus from Atlanta in a pouring rain but did not try to enter the terminal. They said they would proceed tomorrow to Jackson, Miss.

It was just one month ago today that violence erupted here when Freedom Riders arrived to challenge local segregation customs. United States Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy called out Federal marshals, and Gov. John Patterson put the city under limited martial rule before the May 20 violence was controlled.

At least sixty uniformed police, firemen and other officers surrounded the bus terminal here before today's riders arrived. Just six minutes before the bus was due, the fire department was called out to search the terminal because of two anonymous telephone calls saying that bombs would explode.

The crowd of 400 to 500 white persons was kept at a distance by officers.

The Freedom Riders got off the bus and were told they could not enter the terminal because of the bomb threats.

"I understand," said the Rev. Wyatt Tee Walker, the leader of the group.

After the Freedom Riders left in private cars for the Negro area of the city, the crowd continued to stand in the rain around the bus station.

Police patrol cars had met the bus about fifteen miles outside Montgomery and followed it to the terminal because of last month's violence.

On June 2, Federal District Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. issued a ten-day restraining order putting Alabama off limits to groups sponsoring the Freedom Rides into the South. He let the order lapse on June 12 but warned all concerned that he reserved the right to reinstate it.

Mr. Walker said as his group left Atlanta without trouble that the ride into Alabama was segregated interstate travel has been re-established in Alabama."

Earlier today, fourteen riders from California, three Negroes and eleven whites, rode into Jackson on an Illinois Central train and were quietly arrested when they refused to leave the "white only" waiting room at the railroad terminal.

A total of 131 Freedom Riders have now been jailed in Jackson since the start of the Freedom Ride campaign a month ago.

Some have made bond, but forty-one are still being held at the state prison a Parchman, Miss., and thirty were in Jackson city jails before today.

The California's group, mostly college students from the San Francisco area, alighted from the City of New Orleans passenger train in a drizzling rain and marched in a body into the the white waiting room.

A white minister, the Retv. Grant Muse, 40 years old, of Berkeley, Calif., said he decided to make the trip because "I have been preaching about sin, and I think this [segregation] is it."

the state penitentiary had not been treated like felons.

"If they were treated like felons," he said, "they would be out in the fields working like the regular convicts."

Charles R. Oldham, national chairman of the Congress of Racial Equality, had charged in St. Louis that the Freedom Riders "are subjected to the same rules as mixmum security felons."

Sheriff Gilfoy also said today that Price Chatham, a Freedom Rider from New York, could fast as long as he wished.

Sheriff Gilfoy said Mr Chatham, 29 years old, "can eat or not eat, just as he wants."

"We put out wholesome food for them, and whether he eats it comes under the heading of his business," the sheriff said.

Mr. Chatham, a former story analyst for Paramount Pictures from East Rockaway, N. Y., is among the riders who have been transferred to the states penitentiary to serve their breach of peace sentences.

His wife reported in New York that he had written her he would fast until he dies in prison and would resist forced feeding.

The first group of "Freedom Riders" to invade Alabama since a Federal judge put the state off limits 18 days ago left Atlanta yesterday for the Alabama capital, Montgomery.

At Jackson, Miss., 14 riders from California—three Negroes and 11 whites—rode into town on an Illinois Central Railroad train and were quietly arrested when they refused to leave the "white only" waiting room at the terminal.

The Alabama-bound riders included the Rev. Wyatt Tee Walker, executive director of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, and his wife. Walker said the trip by Greyhound bus was designed to prove that "desegregated interstate travel has been reestablished in Alabama."

Federal District Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr., issued a 10-day restraining order June 2 against sponsors of the Freedom ride movement aimed at testing local segregation laws in interstate travel.

Walker's group of five Negroes and four whites left the Atlanta bus terminal without incident although a white girl refused to get on the Montgomery-bound bus when she saw the Freedom Riders boarding it.

Arrest of the California group in Jackson brought to 131 the total number of riders jailed in the Mississippi capital since the start of the Freedom Ride campaign a month ago.

Some have made bond, but 1 presently are being held at the state prison at Parchman, Miss., and 80 were in Jackson City jails before yesterday.

A young Negro woman from New York was traveling south to be married. In Atlanta she boarded a Trailways bus for the final leg of the journey to Birmingham.

Already aboard were a group of Negroes and whites traveling together and sitting together. They were the "Freedom Riders" touring the Deep South to test whether interstate buses and terminals were open to all travelers as Federal laws and regulations said.

If the facilities were found to be operated on a racially segregated basis, the Riders planned to hold peaceful demonstrations, be arrested and serve out terms.

In this way they hoped to focus national attention on the shortcomings of the South in a limited but highly important area of race relations.

The trip of the Riders from Washington through Virginia, North Carolina and Georgia was nearly as uneventful as the young woman's trip from New York to Atlanta. Only in Rockhill, S. C., where feelings still ran high from recent sitins by Negroes at a lunch counter, was there any trouble. Riders reported they were roughed up in a waiting room.

If the Riders, sponsored by the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) of New York City, had national headlines in mind, so far they were disappointed. But this was before Alabama.

The Riders split into two groups in Atlanta. Ahead of the Trailways bus was a group in a Greyhound bus. That bus never reached Birmingham.

The arrival of the buses in Alabama had been advertised in newspapers and on radio stations. The schedules were well known. When the Greyhound bus stopped in Anniston, a city of about 31,000 shortly afternoon on Sunday it was met by a gang of toughs with clubs, chains and black jacks. The Federal Government said later they were led by Ku Klux Klansmen.

The hoodlums taunted the passengers, broke windows in the bus and slashed tires. Six miles out of town, when the tires blew out, the mob converged on the bus and destroyed it by fire. Twelve persons, Freedom Riders and other passengers in interstate travel, went to the hospital.

The young woman on her way to be married told a Federal Court in Montgomery Ala., what happened on the Trailways bus that same Sunday afternoon.

The driver, she said, stopped the bus and told the passengers that he could not guarantee their safety unless Negroes moved to the rear and whites to the front.

Wash-6-12-61

When James Peck, a white Freedom Rider, refused to move forward, five white men started beating him. Peck did not say a word, did not fight back and kept his seat. Blood streamed down his face.

This was only a taste of what awaited Peck when the bus reached Birmingham later that Sunday. There another gang of hoodlums beat him, hit him with sections of pipe and kicked him. It took more than 50 stiches to close the wounds.

In the few minutes before the club-swinging men descended on he Riders in the bus station the young woman greeted George Webb, whom she was to marry in a few days.

"Get them niggers," she heard somebody shout and George Webb was knocked to the ground. About 15 men were on him, kicking him. She ran out of the bus station screaming for the police. There were none in sight. When she later saw George his clothes were torn and he was bleeding from the temple.

This was Alabama's first day of trial. Two more were to follow that will haunt the state for years.

To the Slaughter

Maurice Levy, an NBC cameraman, who arrived in Montgomery, Ala., six days later with a second group of Freedom Riders, likened the journey to a trip to the slaughterhouse behind the lead steer.

State police escorted the bus to the outskirts of town and then dropped away. City police were nowhere in sight, but the thugs and soon a screaming mob of men and women were there. Levy was knocked to the ground and kicked. His sound camera was smashed into junk.

Twenty persons were injured in three waves of violence that swept around the bus station that Saturday afternoon. Next day, the mob stormed a Baptist Church with 1200 Negroes inside and threatened to burn it to the ground.

Last week, the sorry story unfolded in the United States Court for the Middle District of Alabama. Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr., making no effort to hide his disgust and anger, found two Klan organizations responsible for the violence and said Montgomery police officials deliberately withheld protection. He placed the Klan groups and Montgomery police under injunction and gave a stiff warning to Birmingham police.

Then, in what many lawyers believe was an act of doubtful legality, he issued a 10-day order preventing organizations that have sponsored Freedom Rides in Alabama from bringing in any more Riders. He set a June 12 hearing for the organizations to show why they, too, should not be enjoined.

The order, in effect, provides a cooling-off period that Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy requested and Freedom Riders have rejected.

The Innocent Suffer

Judge Johnson said that innocent passengers were being subjected to violence, threats and inconveniences.

There is no question that the organizations and the riders are exercising their Constitutional rights. Bi-racial groups have a right to travel together and to protest peacefully against segregation.

Judge Johnson said that their activity, though, had "an evil result."

"The rights of the public to be protected from evils of conduct, even though the Constitutional rights of certain persons or groups are thereby in some manner infringed, has received frequent and consistent recognition by the Courts of the United States," Judge Johnson said.

6 More 'Riders' Jailed in Jackson

JACKSON, Miss., June 11 (AP)—Police arrested six more "Freedom Riders" here today, swelling the number of travelers taken into custody in Jackson to 110.

There were no crowds and no violence.

A group of five white men and one white woman — all from Minnesota — got off a Greyhound bus from Nashville, Tenn., and walked into a Negro waiting room.

Police Capt. J. L. Ray told the group to move on. They made no reply. He arrested them.

ANNISTON, Ala., May 15 (AP).—A group of angry white persons ambushed two buses Sunday, attacking Negro and white "Freedom Riders" who are seeking to knock down bus station racial barriers.

A little later, 60 miles to the west, one of the buses ran into another angry crowd of white men at a Birmingham bus station. The integrated group took a brief but bloody beating and fled.

Mon. 5-16-61

No serious injuries were reported.

Both buses were carrying members of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE), testing segregated facilities in bus stations.

State Investigator Ell M. Cowling, acting on a tip of possible trouble, was aboard a Greyhound bus attacked near Anniston. He barred the bus door with his body when the crowd of white men tried to board. Two highway patrolmen shot into the air to quiet the crowd of about 200 which had followed the bus from Anniston.

Somebody threw a fire bomb into the bus, sending twelve persons to a hospital, mostly for smoke inhalation. Ten later were released. The bus, stalled about six miles out of Anniston by a flat tire, was destroyed by the blaze.

The CORE members left Washington 10 days ago with six white and seven Negro "Freedom Riders." They split into two groups in Atlanta and took separate buses into Alabama. The trouble started when the Greyhound, carrying nine "Freedom Riders" and five other passengers, reached this northeast Alabama city of about 30,000.

Dr. Walter Bergman, 61, a former Michigan State University professor and a member of the CORE group, said a fight broke out on a Trailways bus at Anniston when the driver said he wasn't going to move until the Negroes moved to the back of the bus. "At that time, about 10 white men attacked Charles Person, a student at Morehouse College, Atlanta," Bergman said.

"And then James Peck stepped forward, then they turned on us. Peck was beaten about the face and got a deep cut on his scalp.

"Then they beat me and were kicking me. And then they threw the Negroes and others over me. There was no other violence until we got to Birmingham."

One Negro tried to walk through the group of white men, but a husky white man knocked him against a wall.

Several white men entered from the white waiting room and stood behind the young Negro.

"Hit him," one of them said.

Buses of 'Freedom Riders' Burned and Stoned in South

ANNISTON, Ala., May 14.—Violence trailed a group of Negro and white persons testing desegregation at interstate bus stations in the Deep South today.

Mon. 5-15-61

A Greyhound bus carrying fourteen persons, nine of them members of the "Freedom Riders," was stoned and burned outside of Anniston in north Alabama. Ten persons were taken to a hospital where they were treated, mostly for smoke inhalation.

At the Trailways station in Birmingham, violence erupted after a group of "Freedom Riders" arrived from Atlanta.

The group that sought to break the segregation barrier left Washington ten days ago. It split into two groups in Atlanta and took separate buses—a Greyhound bus and a Trailways bus—into Alabama.

At Anniston, the bus station was closed, but a crowd of between 150 and 200 persons milled around outside the station.

Joseph Perkins jr., identified as field secretary of the self-styled Freedom Riders, told a reporter several windows in the bus station at Anniston had been broken. He said some of the bus tires apparently had been cut, "because I could hear the air hissing."

They sought to enter the vehicle, but were prevented from doing so by Ell M. Cowling, a state investigator who stood in the doorway while the bus driver tried to change the tire.

The crowd milled around outside, Mr. Cowling said, before they had to push through the crowd around the bus to help the people out.

Washington Post p-14

The group, under the sponsorship of the Congress on Racial Equality (CORE), started the journey from Washington with six white and seven Negro "Freedom Riders." Spokesmen said the number has fluctuated at various stops.

On the Anniston bus the CORE group included five Negroes and four white persons. The number on the bus that reached Birmingham, fifty miles west of Anniston, was not known.

New York N.Y.

Several white men, attacked the group inside the Birmingham station, beating a Negro youth and a white man who apparently was accompanying them.

Mon. 5-15-61

The white men, obviously waiting for the arrival of the bus, covered telephone booths and exits. They refused to permit a newsman to use a telephone.

The fighting broke out in several areas around the station in downtown Birmingham. No police were in evidence until several minutes after the outbreak.

To the left was a sign that designated the Negro waiting room. The group hesitated, and then a young Negro walked ahead of the group. He walked about ten feet into the white waiting room. The other Negroes followed a few feet behind him.

Negro Beaten

Several white men stopped the young Negro man, and one of them told him. "The Negro waiting room is back that way." They turned him around forcefully, and pushed him.

The Negro group turned back into the passageway, but were met by another group of white men entering from the opposite end of the hall.

Several white men entered the passageway from the white waiting room. They stood behind the young Negro.

"Hit him," one of them said.

As he got up, the white man hit him again. This time, the Negro fell backward into the arms of the white men. They pushed him up again. The white man slammed the Negro in the face again.

A white man who had been riding the bus with the Negroes tried to interfere. He was beaten in the face until he lay on his back, blood streaming from his nose.

Followed to Parking Lot

The injured Negro youth and the white man staggered outside, through the entrance, and into the bus parking area outside.

The group followed them. The Negroes and white men who accompanied them ran from the bus station with the white attackers behind them.

It was all over in about three minutes.

There was no way to determine the number of attackers. Some apparently had been waiting in the bus station before the incident.

An aged Negro woman who was on the bus stood among the milling crowd, crying. "It started on the bus. It started on the bus."

Newsmen Attacked

The "Freedom Rider" group and the attackers had disappeared within fifteen minutes after the first outbreak.

Two newsmen were attacked by the crowd outside the bus station. One, Tom Langston of "The Birmingham Post-Herald," was hurt painfully, but was not hospitalized.

Clancy Lake, a radio newsman, was attacked as he sat in his closed automobile broadcasting an account of the violence. He escaped serious injury.

In an alley behind the bus station, a group of photographers had leaped into their automobile, but were blocked by another crowd of white men. They seized several cameras, smashed some of them and made off with the others.

Police made no arrests immediately.

Integrators Held Under $1,000 Bond

Montgomery Cities
Fri-5-26-61
P.

Three Negro ministers and eight other integrationists were arrested at Trailways Bus Station here Thursday after they bought tickets for a "freedom ride" to Jackson, Miss.

Jailed by Sheriff Mac Sim Butler on breach of peace charges were the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy of Montgomery, the Rev. D. L. Shuttlesworth of Birmingham, the Rev. Wyatt T. Walker of Atlanta, four white college professors and four Negro students.

They are being held in the Montgomery County jail under a $1,000 bond.

Atty. Charles Conley said five of the defendants — four white college professors and a Negro college student — probably will make bond Friday, but the other six may remain in jail until a hearing set for June 16 before Judge Alex Marks in the County Court of Common Pleas.

SCHOOL COMMITMENTS

Conley said those expected to post bond are the Rev. William S. Coffin Jr., 36, chaplain at Yale University; the Rev. Gaylord B. Noyce, 34, assistant professor at the Yale Divinity School; Dr. David E. Swift, 47, professor of religion at Wesleyan in Middletown, Conn.; Dr. John D. Maguire, 28, assistant Wesleyan professor of religion, and George B. Smith, Negro student at Yale.

The attorney said they have commitments at school.

Thursday was the fifth day of the qualified martial rule declared for Montgomery by Gov. John Patterson Sunday night. National Guardsmen continued to assist and supplement local law enforcement officers.

According to a statement issued by the State Military Department, a decree issued by Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones enjoining "freedom riders" from entering the state was not the basis of the arrests.

In the statement, Maj. Gen. Henry V. Graham, state adjutant general and commander of the National Guard units patroling the city, said other such groups coming into Alabama also face arrest.

". . . they will be arrested if circumstances indicate that their conduct would tend to inflame the tense situation in this city and county which is operating under qualified martial rule and where troops are stationed to maintain law and order and to protect the life and property of the citizenry," the general said.

Montgomery City

Among the arrested Negroes was Bernard S. Lee, 22, of Atlanta, Ga., a former student who was expelled from Alabama State College here last year for leading students demonstrations against segregation.

Gen. Graham was in the bus station Thursday and sanctioned the arrests made by Butler. Also present in the heavily guarded station was Floyd Mann, state director of the Department of Public Safety.

DIFFERENT SITUATION

Queried by a newsman on the scene if the arrests represented a change in policy from Wednesday, when two bus loads of integrationists were allowed to leave the city and were escorted to the Mississippi state line, Graham said:

"No, I would not say there has been any change in policy. It was a different situation here yesterday."

STUDENTS LISTED

The Negro students are Joseph Charles Jones, 23, and Clyde L. Carter, 39, students at Johnson C. Smith College at Charlotte, N.C., and George B. Smith, 23, student at Yale.

Carter and Jones said they are members of the 'Freedom Ride" teams organized by the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE).

The others said they were simply swept up in the movement for equal rights and were paying their own expenses.

Coffin said the white ministers decided to visit the South last Monday after talking by telephone with the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. of Atlanta, formerly of Montgomery. The group had intended to go by bus to Jackson and then to New Orleans, he added.

"Our plans are not entirely in our hands," he said. "I have to conduct church services at Yale Sunday, and I hope to be able to do it."

The group arrested Thursday spent the night at Abernathy's house. About 10:30 a.m. Thursday, one of the Negroes came out on the porch of the minister's house and told a Guard sentinel they wanted escort to go to Trailways, saying they planned to board a bus to Jackson at 11:30.

They were accompanied to the station by strong guard and Highway Patrol forces and, as on Wednesday, the troops blocked off the entire block of Lee street on which the station fronts.

The Negroes and the four white professors went inside and bought tickets and then took seats in the white lunch area and ordered coffee.

SHERIFF COUNTS OFF DINERS TO BE ARRESTED

Sheriff Mac Sim Butler counted off the integrated diners in the Trailways Bus Station Thursday morning then had them led away to jail. He's just tapped the Rev. Ralph Abernathy in the picture. Public Safety Director Floyd Mann (wearing hat) is just to his rear. Capt. S. E. Vigny, Montgomery, National Guard military sheriff under martial law, is at right.

Stand by to Act Against Further Violence

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — Federal marshals kept a close watch on racially tense Montgomery Sunday, ready to enforce a court injunction newly issued to forestall further rioting.

But Alabama Gov. John Patterson, meanwhile, angrily threatened to jail the armed federal marshals if they attempt to enforce the law without a request for federal intervention.

The order from U. S. Dist. Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. prohibiting any attempt by force to stop "freedom riders" from continuing their test of bus station segregation, came less than 24 hours after Saturday's bloody race riot in which about 20 persons were beaten.

Johnson put the blame for recent violence here and in two other Alabama cities on Ku Klux Klan members and his order was directed at them "and all persons acting in concert with them."

CROWD KEPT MOVING

About 30 white people gathered outside a Negro church where the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., famed Negro leader, was scheduled to preside over a meeting Sunday night with the "freedom riders" present. But armed U. S. marshals kept them moving, and there were no incidents.

The federal marshals and deputies, rushed here Saturday by Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy, also stood guard near the homes of several Montgomery Negro integrationists. Three cars of officers were seen parked near the home of one of them, the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy.

One of King's assistants, Wyatt T. Walker of Atlanta, executive secretary of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, said federal authorities offered protection and "we thought it wise to accept."

Other marshals kept a sharp eye on the bus station — some from the nearby federal building, others watching with field glasses from an apartment house.

A state court injunction which sought to keep the racially mixed group from continuing its segregation-challenging bus trip was still in force despite Johnson's order.

STATE ARREST ORDERS

State deputies had orders to arrest the "freedom riders" on charges of violating the state injunction, but they were unable to locate them.

There have been no further reports of violence since the rioting was quelled with tear gas.

But Alabama's governor and a high-ranking member of the US attorney general's office clashed sharply over the matter of federal intervention.

Patterson told Byron R. Whizzer White, former All-America football star at the University of Colorado, and now chief assistant to Atty. Gen. Kennedy, that the federal officers may be arrested if they attempt to exercise authority in Alamaba.

White flew here Saturday night to direct the growing task force of U.S. marshals and other federal officers who were rushed here to preserve order in the wake of the bloody race riot.

'WE DO NOT RECOGNIZE'

"We do not recognize the federal marshals as law enforcement officers in this matter," the governor told White during a conference at the state Capitol.

The Justice Department officia replied that the federal govern ment "does not share your view on that point" and said the 40 marshals and deputized officer "will continue working to main tain law and order."

A white mob attacked the racially mixed group which arrived here on a Greyhound bus Saturday and beat and clubbed at least 20 persons in a wild two-hour riot. Other groups of rioters ran into violence last Sunday at Birmingham and Anniston, Ala.

Johnson's order was directed at three Klan groups in Alabama and four individuals who were identified as Klan leaders or members.

Two of the defendants, Robert M. Shelton of Tuscaloosa, Ala., and Alvin Horn, of Talladega, Ala., are widely known in Alabama for their Klan activities.

KKK RESTRAINT ORDER

The restraining order prohibited the three Klan groups and the four individuals and all members or agents of KKK organizations "and all persons acting in concert with them" from attempting to interfere with intersfate bus travel anywhere in Alabama.

Johnson charged in his two-page order, that Klansmen "have by force, violence and threats prevented, and are conspiring to prevent" interstate passengers from riding Greyhound and Trailways buses.

Further, the judge said, members of the three Klan groups "have wilfully damaged and destroyed" property of bus companies and "have threatened and intimidated the drivers in their efforts to provide (bus) service."

The court order was issued against the U.S. Klans, Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, Inc.; Alabama Knights, Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, Inc.; Federated Ku Klux Klan, Inc., Shelton, Horn, Lester C. Hawkins of Montgomery and Thurman E. Ouzts, also of Montgomery.

RIDERS TO CONTINUE

The Justice Department complaint, which asked for the restraining order, identified Shelton as head of the Alabama Knights, Knights of the Ku Klux Klan; and Hawkins as an officer in the Federated KKK. Ouzts was not further identified.

Battered and bruised "freedom riders" whose journey here by bus set off the violent uprising Saturday, vowed to continue the fight even at the cost of their lives.

Sheriff's deputies were looking for the bus riders with contempt of court warrants. All 21 were cited for contempt under a state court injunction which sought to prohibit the "freedom riders" from continuing their challenge in Alabama.

Three injured bus riders, part of the racially mixed group who came here from racially tense Birmingham on the second leg of their trip from Nashville, Tenn., remained in "good condition" in a hospital.

GIRLS GO HOME

Two others, white girl students from Nashville, returned home Saturday night, but the remaining 16 spent the night in private homes, their whereabouts kept secret.

"There is not a shadow of doubt," he declared, "that the government will have to take a greater hand in the affairs of the states."

The Negro leader vowed that his people are "prepared for any suffering."

From their hospital beds, two of the injured riders — Jim Zwerg, a white exchange student at predominantly Negro Fisk University in Nashville, and William Barbee, a Negro who attends American Baptist Theological Seminary at Nashville — said they are ready to forfeit their lives if need be to combat segregation.

U.S. SEEMS SET TO USE TROOPS

Won't Let Racial Violence Erupt Again

By JACK ADAMS

WASHINGTON (AP)—The federal government appears ready to use whatever force it feels is necessary to prevent recurrence of bloody racial violence in Alabama.

And the justice department said Sunday U.S. marshals and other federal officers already sent into that state are on sound legal ground.

That was the department's reaction to a statement by Alabama Gov. John M. Patterson that the federal agents might be arrested if they encroached on the rights or functions of state officers in controlling disorders.

The department said the governor had been advised the marshals were there to enforce federal law and would do so.

WON'T TURN BACK

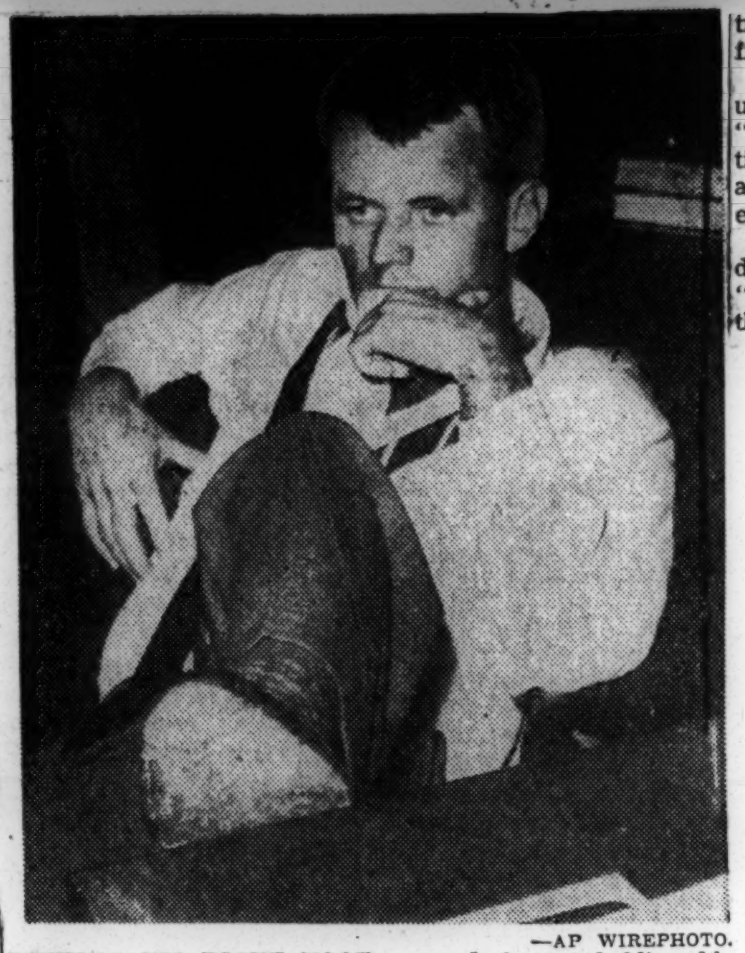
Prior to the governor's statement, department officials expressed confidence the 500 or so federal officers sent into the Montgomery area would be able to handle the tense situation there in cooperation with local authorities.

But it was apparent here that the federal government is prepared to augment that force, or possibly call in troops, if developments make that necessary.



—AP WIREPHOTO.

RESTING HIS RIGHT FOOT on a desk and holding his chin, U.S. Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy is deep in thought in the Justice department early Sunday as he worked with aides considering legal measures to be taken following Saturday's racial violence in Montgomery, Ala.

The impression reporters got in talks with officials was that the government had embarked on a course from which it would not turn back.

1871 LAW CITED

The special force of federal officers was sent to Aalabama under an 1871 law which reads: "The president, by using the militia or the armed forces or both, or by any other means, shall take such measures as he considers necessary to suppress, in a state, any insurrection, domestic violence, unlawful combination, or conspiracy, if it

"1. So hinders the execution of the laws of that state, and of the United States within the state, that any part or class of its people is deprived of a right, privilege, immunity or protection named in the constitution and secured by law, and the constituted authorities of that state are unable, fail, or refuse to protect that right, privilege, or immunity, or to give that protection; or

"2. Opposes or obstructs the execution of the laws of the United States or impedes the course of justice under those laws."

The Justice Department in the current action takes the position that it must prevent any interference with the operation of an adequate interstate passenger bus service.

SUPPRESSED KKK

Government legal experts assert the law was adopted in 1871 in order to reduce to writing, "what had previously been assumed to be the president's authority and responsibility to enforce the laws of the United States."

In the same year in which it was enacted, President U.S. Grant made the first use of it by sending troops into several South Carolina counties to suppress the Ku Klux Klan.

It was next used in 1894 by President Grover Cleveland who dispatched troops to Chicago to put an end to violence attending a Pullman strike which had effectively cut off interstate Pullman service.

President Eisenhower invoked two different but related laws in sending U.S. troops into Little Rock, Ark. during the 1956 Central High School integration difficulties.

One of these laws provides for use of military force to put down "unlawful obstructions, combinations, assemblance or rebellion against the authority of the United States."

The other authorizes the president to issue proclamations for "insurgents to disperse," and use the military to back them up.

New Group of Seven Takes Off From Atlanta Without Incident

ATLANTA, May 24 (UPI).—A new group of Freedom Riders, including four white religious professors from Connecticut and three Negro students, left here by bus at 12:30 p. m. today on the Montgomery-Jackson-New Orleans route of the earlier groups.

Times 5-25-61

There were no incidents at the bus station as the seven boarded the bus and sat together in the middle. City detectives and Georgia Bureau of Investigation agents were present along with newsmen.

The latest Freedom Riders held a news conference here shortly before boarding the bus for Alabama. Their spokesman, the Rev. William Sloane Coffin jr., Yale University chaplain, said their action was a spontaneous one set off by news of the action in Alabama.

With him from Yale was the Rev. Gaylord B. Noyce, an associate professor in the Divinity School, and George B. Smith, a Negro student in the Yale Law School.

Professors on Bus

The Rev. John Maguire and the Rev. David Swift, religion professors at Wesleyan University at Middletown, Conn., were the other two white men in the group, while the other two Negroes, Clyde Carter and Charles Jones, are both theological students at Johnson C. Smith University in Charlotte, N. C.

Mr. Swift is a member of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the only one of the four whites who has "worked in this sort of thing before." However, Mr. Carter and Mr. Jones, who met the other five here, have been active in student nonviolent movements, including the sit-ins at [illegible] Hill, N. C.

Mr. Maguire, a native of Montgomery who went to school in Bermingham and in Virgina, said he saw his old house on television during a news show on the violence at Montgomery and called Mr. Swift and suggested they go and join the freedom riders.

Mr. Coffin, who said he went to Africa last summer with Mr. Smith, said he contacted Mr. Smith and Mr. Noyce after hearing from the Wesleyan professors and the five agreed to go together. Word of their trip reached Charlotte where Mr. Carter and Mr. Jones decided to join forces with them.

Mr. Coffin emphasized that they are "exercising academic freedom" and not representing their universities. "My president doesn't even know I'm down here," he said.

Rally in New Haven

The group from Yale and Wesleyan Universities left New Haven by plane Tuesday at 11 p. m. after a rally on New Haven Green, the Herald Tribuen's correspondent at Yale reported yesterday. Speakers at the rally, who attacked segregation both in the South and in New Haven, included most of those in the group now in the South.

The leader is the Rev. William Sloane Coffin jr., thirty-six, a Presbyterian minister who has been chaplain of Yale for the last three years. He is a nephew of the late Henry Sloane Coffin, former president of Union Theological Seminary in New York, and husband of the former Eva Anna Rusinstein, daughter of the pianist Artur Rubinstein.

Last summer, Mr. Coffin was group leader in Guinea, Africa, of the project called Operation Crossroads-Africa. The project, organized in 1957 by the Rev. James Robinson, pastor of the Presbyterian Church of the Master at 86 Morningside Ave., sends American students to work and study with Africans.

Also in the Guinea group was Mr. Smith, a third-year law student at Yale. Mr. Noyce is assistant director of religious field work and assistant professor of pastoral theology at the Yale Divinity School.

REV. F.L. SHUTTLESWORTH

An editorial—

Shuttlesworth shouts 'Fire'

B'ham, Ala. Thurs. 5-18-61

Police Commissioner Connor late yesterday properly jailed the latest group of so-called "freedom riders" because arrangements could not be made to get them out of the city.

MR. CONNOR IN A STATEMENT said he was going to check with attorneys to see if Rev. Fred Shuttlesworth could be charged with inciting to a breach of the peace.

The commissioner should certainly do so.

Shuttlesworth yesterday morning called newsmen, wired the governor, did everything possible to inform the public that a bus carrying some Nashville whites and Negroes on a "freedom ride" was coming to this city and he informed them of the arrival time.

This came three days after violence had broken out in this city because of integrationists' presence here.

THE POLICE WERE in the process of arresting whites who Sunday attacked the "freedom riders." The law was taking its course. The police, even if they failed to keep the peace Sunday, were keeping order and doing their job.

But the city remained tense. There were still at hand men who probably would try once more to attack the integrationists. There was a clear danger of more trouble despite good police efforts.

Justice Holmes in an opinion defended the right of free speech but such right, he said, gives no one the privilege of crying "Fire!" in a crowded theater.

Whatever rights Negroes may have or claim to have, Rev. Shuttlesworth in Birmingham, Ala., yesterday morning was in the equivalent of a crowded theater and he cried "Fire!" He was beyond the point of trying to join in an effort to bring about peaceful integrated bus travel and use of bus terminal facilities.

THE CITY OF BIRMINGHAM should prosecute him. Shuttlesworth cannot be allowed to threaten this city with turmoil. THE BIRMINGHAM NEWS believes there is a case here that can stand up in the courts. Justice Holmes' opinion is still sound.

Jefferson Court Finds Shuttlesworth Guilty

The Montgomery Advertiser p-1

Montgomery, Ala.

BIRMINGHAM (AP) — The Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, Birmingham Negro leader, Thursday was convicted on two breach of peace charges growing out of "Freedom Rides" and the violence that met them here.

In each case he was fined $500 and sentenced to 90 days in jail. His attorneys said he would appeal.

Dec. 6-2-61

Shuttlesworth, on the stand about an hour near the end of the one-day trial, told of two telephone conversations with Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy during the height of racial tension here the week of May 14-20.

In the first call, made by a member of the "Freedom Rider" group, Kennedy asked for suggestions on how to avoid a recurrence of violence that met Freedom Riders arriving here by bus May 14, Shuttlesworth said.

ESCORT SUGGESTED

Shuttlesworth told him, he said, that he would suggest an escort for a group of riders stranded in Birmingham on their way to Montgomery. Bus drivers refused to drive them in the wake of previous mob violence.

Shuttlesworth said that in his second conversation when the attorney general called back, Kennedy told him he had assurances of "adequate protection" for the group to go on to Montgomery.

The riders went to Montgomery by bus—under heavy escort—but ran into an attack by a group of white people at the Greyhound station in Montgomery.

The warrants against Shuttlesworth, taken out by Birmingham Police Commissioner Eugene Connor, charged him with breach of the peace and conspiracy to cause a breach of the peace.

MOB VIOLENCE

The two counts in each charge stem from mob violence against "Freedom Riders" arriving in Birmingham by bus on May 14, and from sizable crowds that formed at a Birmingham bus station May 17 when another group of integrated riders was trying to leave the city by bus.

The state contended that Shuttlesworth caused the forming of both crowds by giving public notice that the integrated riders were on the way.

Shuttlesworth, in other testimony, said:

—He was not a member of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE), which sponsored the first "Freedom Ride," and that he did not know any of the riders personally prior to their arrival in Birmingham.

—That he got a $500 money order from CORE headquarters in New York on May 13, the day before the CORE riders arrived, along with a request that he turn it over to the riders. He said he did this.

—That he did not conspire with anyone to put on the itinerary of the "Freedom Riders."

NO ADVICE

—That he didn't advise a group of riders, composed of students from Nashville, Tenn., on what they should do about trying to break down racial barriers in Birmingham bus stations.

Connor, in testifying, laid the blame for the violence squarely on Shuttlesworth and the riders.

"I think they (the riders) had more to do with it than anybody," Connor said. "I don't believe they would have come through here if Shuttlesworth hadn't been here," he said. "I think Shuttlesworth had more to do with it than any human being."

Wallace Seymour, operations manager of the Birmingham Western Union office, read into the record several telegrams directed to Connor, Police Chief Jamie Moore and state officials, and signed by Shuttlesworth. The telegrams warned of possible violence and requested police protection for the integrated riders.

Montgomery Aide Withdraws Request for Injunction

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Aug. 14 (AP)—City Attorney Calvin Whitesell withdrew Monday a request for a new Federal Court injunction against organized Freedom Rides in Alabama.

Mr. Whitesell first asked for the injunction June 1 and got a temporary restraining order prohibiting sponsored Freedom Rides for ten day.

Before Mr. Whitesell asked for the dismissal, Dist. Judge Frank M. Johnson instructed opposing attorneys to submit written arguments for and against the requested injunction by next Tuesday.

Mr. Whitesell, said Freedom Rider activity in Alabama had subsided to the point where no injunction was needed now.

Walker Gets Long Jail Sentence As "Freedom Rider"

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (UPI)— The chaplain of Yale University and 10 other white and Negro "freedom riders" were found guilty Friday of conspiracy to breach the peace by failing to use separate facilities at a bus terminal here May 25.

Judge Alex Mars of the court of common pleas sentenced Yale Chaplain Rev. William Coffin and nine others to $100 in fines and 10 days in jail. The Rev. Wyatt Tee Walker of Atlanta, Negro secretary of the Southern Christian Leadership Council, was sentenced to 90 days in jail.

Defense attorneys told the court they would appeal the ruling and posted bond for the defendants.

Mars singled Walker out for the heavier sentence because of his work in publicizing activities of the integrationists. "Very little trouble would have happened in Alabama if so much publicity had not been given to the papers and radio and TV stations" Marks said.

The 11 integrationists were tried as a group and only Walker and Dr. John Maguire, a Wesleyan divinity professor, testified for the defense.

Montgomery County Sheriff Mac Sim Butler told the court he arrested the "riders" to avoid a riot.

"In my opinion if an arrest hadn't been made, we would have had a serious riot at or near the bus station," Butler said.

In addition to Rev. Coffin, those convicted at Montgomery are assistant professor of Yale Divinity School, the Rev. Gaylor Noyce 34; John Maguire and David Smith, religion professors at Wesleyan College; George Smith, New Haven, Conn.; Bernard Lee and the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, Montgomery; Joseph Charles Jones and Clyde Carter, Charlotte, N. C. and the Rev Fred Shuttlesworth of Birmingham.

11 Riders Face Trial In Montgomery Today

MONTGOMERY, Sept. 14 (AP) — Eleven white and Negro "freedom riders," with the chaplain of Yale University among them, face trial tomorrow on breach of the peace charges.

The Rev. William S. Coffin of Yale, three other prominent religion professors from Connecticut and several Negro integrationists were in the group arrested during a racial incident at a bus depot here last May 25.

All have been free under bond since a few days after their arrest while seeking service at a normally white-only lunch counter during racial tension and martial law which followed bloody rioting several days earlier.

Ten members of the racially mixed group went into U. S. District Court recently in an effort to stop their trial in county court. But. Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. refused to grant an injunction.

Johnson's decision was upheld earlier this week when the freedom riders appealed to the Fifth U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans.

Jailed with Coffin shortly before they were to board a bus were three colleagues: Dr. Gaylord Noice, divinity professor at Yale in New Haven, Conn. and two religion professors at Wesleyan University, Dr. John Maguire and Dr. David Swift, both of Middletown, Conn.

The others were George Smith of New Haven, Bernard Lee of Montgomery, Joseph C. Jones and Clyde Carter of Charlotte, N. C., and three integration leaders, the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy of Montgomery, the Rev. Fred Shuttlesworth of Birmingham and the Rev. Wyatt Tee Walker of Atlanta.

Riders' Cc Fines, Jail Terms

Eleven "Freedom Riders" received fines and jail sentences in Court of Common Pleas Friday at the end of a day-long hearing.

Among them were the chaplain of Yale University, the Rev. William S. Coffin, and three other white educators on the faculties of Yale and Wesleyan Universities.

So were three Southern Negroes prominent in the fight on segregation barriers: The Revs. Ralph Abernathy and Fred Shuttlesworth, and Wyatt Tee Walker, director of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference.

The mixed group was arrested May 25 at the Trailways bus terminal as they sought service at the white lunch counter. National Guard troops ringed the area at the time, the city having been previously declared under limited martial law.

ALL WILL APPEAL

All served notice they will appeal. Each was fined $100, but Walker, who was sentenced to 90 days in jail.

Jail sentences for the other 10 were:

Abernathy and Bernard Lee, both of Montgomery, 10 days; Shuttlesworth, Clyde L. Carter, Coffin, Joseph Charles Jones, John David Maguire, Gaylord B. Noice, George B. Smith, David E. Swift, each 15 days.

Maguire and Swift are both professors of religion at Wesleyan University, and Noice is a divinity professor at Yale. The three are white.

The central argument in the case revolved around two questions: Was there a serious danger of mob violence at the time of the arrests? And, did the necessity to avert possible trouble outweigh the right of individuals to exercise their constitutional rights?

Sheriff Mac Sim Butler testified that, "It was my opinion, at the time, that if an arrest had not been made we would have had a serious riot at or near the bus station."

DID NOT WARN

He acknowledged he did not warn the mixed group they might be arrested or in danger. But, he said; "We were in effect walking a chalkline, trying to do our duty as we saw it."

Poarch called the action of the 11 in sitting at the counter "the height of folly." He also testified to threatening crowds outside the terminal.

Dr. Maguire, a Montgomery native, said he returned to the city "to affirm support" of Negroes challenging segregation after he heard of violence here. He said Coffin agreed to come with him after a telephone conversation.

As questioning tended toward a sociological discussion of conflicting points of view on segregation, Maguire said:

DENY CROWD

"Racism at any level is not to be tolerated." He said he came here to show that whites also shared the "abhorrence" which Negroes feel at segregation.

Both he and Walker denied that a large and hostile crowd was outside at the time of the arrests.

Deputy Solicitors Frank Riggs and Maury Smith presented the evidence against the defendants. Local attorney Fred Gray and a Yale law professor, Louis Pollak, conducted the defense.

Judge Alex Marks set appeal bonds of $400 for Lee and Abernathy, $750 for Walker, and $500 for the remaining eight.

Appeal Fails To Prevent 'Rider' Trial

A federal appellate court has refused to prevent the trials of a racially mixed group of "Freedom Riders," including the chaplain of Yale University, in Court of Common Pleas here Friday.

U.S. District Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. last week had dismissed a request for an injunction to stop Solicitor William F. Thetford from prosecuting the 11 riders. He also refused to grant a temporary injunction holding up the trials until his decision could be appealed.

After Thetford and Judge Alex Marks of the Court of Common Pleas refused to grant a continuance, the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans was asked for the injunction which it subsequently denied.

Thetford said Tuesday that unless a further appeal is taken to the U.S. Supreme Court, the mixed group will be tried Friday.

The group, led by Yale Chaplain William Coffin and including three other white educators, was arrested May 25. They were charged with breach of the peace after seeking to be served together at the lunch counter at the Trailways bus terminal.

The cases were continued three times in Court of Common Pleas, pending the federal court hearing on their plea for an injunction to keep them from being prosecuted.

Johnson refused the injunction, saying that he believed federal law prevented him from interfering with the prosecutions.

The white educators remained in jail here for 28 hours after their arrest, reportedly while friends raised cash bonds for them at their respective schools.

Racial Apathy Termed 'Crime'

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — Yale university's freedom-riding chaplain declared it is a moral crime for anyone to stand on the sidelines during the fight for integration in the South.

The Rev. William S. Coffin, who was convicted of breach of the peace in Montgomery, Ala., Friday, told 1000 worshippers at the university's Battell chapel much of the evil in the world is due to lethargy.

He condemned those who avoid taking sides on important moral issues. "Some are scared to die, and some are scared to live," he said.

The Rev. Coffin, who has also aided in the training in Puerto Rico of recruits for the peace corps, was fined $100 and sentenced to 15 days in jail for participating in an attempt to desegregate the Montgomery bus terminal last May. He was released on bond.

PROSECUTIONS OKAYED

Defendant Wins Dismissal As 'Riders' End Mix Plea

By ARTHUR OSGOODE

A group of "Freedom Riders" ended their plea for a broad injunction against enforcement of bus station segregation in U.S. District Court here Tuesday.

All defendants but Montgomery County Sheriff Mac Sim Butler also rested their cases. And another defendant, Solicitor William F. Thetford, won a dismissal of the proceedings against him.

Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. gave the green light to Thetford's prosecuting a group of integrated riders arrested here May 25 after seeking service at the lunch counter at the Trailways bus station.

Johnson said it was his opinion that federal law prevented him from stepping in to stop the prosecutions. But he said it was his opinion, at that point in the proceedings, that the arrest of the 11 riders was "for the purpose of enforcing segregation."

Alabama Atty. Gen. MacDonald Gallion, taking the stand Tuesday afternoon, testified that he has pursued no polices aimed toward segregation of the races at bus terminals.

On the contrary, he said, he has advised a number of Alabama mayors that federal law forbids such segregation.

Gallion said he obtained an injunction against "Freedom Riders" entering Alabama only because: "It was such an explosive and tense time that I sought this injunction to avoid bloodshed and keep the peace in this state."

At this point, Judge Johnson broke in to ask:

"What, if any, action did you take against the persons bringing on the violence?"

ADVISER TESTIFIES

Gallion said he took none.

Later, under cross-examination by U.S. Justice Department attorney John Doar, Gallion said the injunction, obtained from Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones of Montgomery, was "the most that I could do under the circumstances."

Doar pressed Gallion as to whether he had taken any steps to acquaint the public or local municipal and court officials with the federal law pertaining to bus segregation. Gallion said it is "not my duty to publicize all federal laws."

The legal adviser to the commander of the Alabama National Guard testified for Sheriff Butler. Col. Ralph D. Poarch said it was he, not Butler, who made the decision to arrest a mixed group sitting at the Trailways lunch counter on May 25.

At that time, said Poarch, local police as well as the sheriff were acting under orders of the National Guard, martial law having been declared here in the wake of bus station violence.

Under cross - examination, Poarch said he ordered the arrests on breach of the peace charges after "a series of incidents bordering on riotous conditions." He said he felt the arrests were warranted in view of the tense situation.

Under cross-examination, he acknowledged that he did not tell the group, which included four white college professors, not to sit at the counter.

Two of the educators, Drs. John D. Maguire and David E. Swift, testified earlier, along with a Negro law student at Yale University, George B. Smith, that they had behaved at the station in an orderly manner.

'AFFIRM SUPPORT'

Each of them said he made the trip to Montgomery "to affirm my support" of Negroes challenging bus station segregation.

First witness was John R. Lewis, a Negro student at a Nashville seminary, who said he was beaten unconscious when he arrived here on May 20 with a group of "Freedom Riders." Lewis said Atty. Gen. Gallion served him with a copy of the injunction against the integrated rides as he lay dazed on the ground.

Attorney James J. Carter, representing three bus companies charged with maintaining segregated facilities, asked each witness for the plaintiffs if bus company employes refused them service or intimidated them.

In each case the witnesses said they had not.

Attorney Calvin Whitesell, representing City Commissioners Earl James, Frank Parks, and L. B. Sullivan, and Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal, sought by questioning to show that local police have taken no action to enforce segregation in bus terminals.

And Taylor Hardin, representing members of the Alabama Public Service Commission, argued that no evidence had been adduced at the hearing to show the commission in any way enforced segregation.

Fred Gray, local Negro attorney, and Yale law professor Louis Pollack presented the case for the plaintiffs.

The suit seeks a court order forbidding the local and state officials and bus companies from enforcing bus station segregation. It is also aimed at the Alabama breach of the peace statute, which forbids "conduct calculated to provoke a breach of the peace."

Another witness Tuesday was Asst. Police Chief Marvin Stanley, who said that local police have been instructed that they cannot enforce bus station segregation. Stanley also said that a top heavy majority of persons arrested at local bus stations were white, and that few of the arrests involved segregation.

The case is expected to be concluded Wednesday.

'Rider' Case Goes Before Judge Today

Four white ministers and seven Negroes, arrested in a "Freedom Rider" bus station incident, go on trial here Monday on their appeals to state court.

Pleas of innocent to breach of peace and unlawful assembly charges have been filed by the group. Circuit Judge Eugene Carter will try the case without a jury, since none was requested.

The "Freedom Riders" include the Rev. William S. Coffin Jr. of New Haven, Conn., Yale University chaplain and son-in-law of piano virtuouso Artur Rubinstein.

MINISTERS JAILED

White ministers arrested with him last May were the Rev. Gaylord B. Noyce, assistant professor at the Yale Divinity School; Dr. David E. Swift, religion professor at Wesleyan College, Middletown, Conn., and Dr. John D. MacGuire, assistant religion professor at Wesleyan.

They and the seven Negroes were convicted in county court on charges growing out of their effort to get service at the white-only lunch counter of a downtown bus terminal.

Montgomery was still under martial rule when they were jailed May 25. Five days earlier the arrival of another Freedom Rider bus had touched off a bloody weekend of racial violence.

Negro defendants are the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, a former Montgomery integration leader who has moved to Atlanta, the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, a Birmingham integrationist; the Rev. Wyatt Tee Walker and Bernard Lee, both of Atlanta; George Smith, a Yale student, and Clyde Carter and Joseph Jones, students at Johnson Smith College at Charlotte, N.C.

Walker was sentenced to 90 days for unlawful assembly, but was acquitted on the breach of peace charge. Abernathy and Lee drew $100 fines and 10 day jail terms; the other eight were fined $100 and sentenced to 15 days in jail.

BIRMINGHAM -FEDERAL INJUNCTION PREVENTS CITY CLOSING BUS RESTAURANT

U.S. Halts Closing Of Alabama Cafe

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP)—The City Commission Tuesday revoked the license of the segregation-troubled restaurant in the Greyhound bus station, ordering it to close at midnight.

But the federal government promptly asked for and got a temporary restraining order prohibiting the commission from interfering with operation of the restaurant.

U.S. District Judge Seybourn H. Lynne, holding court at Gadsden, Ala., signed the order. It later was filed with the clerk at Birmingham. It takes effect immediately and will stand for 10 days.

The judge set a hearing for Dec. 28 on a possible permanent injunction.

Earlier the federal government asked for an injunction, but did not seek an immediate temporary order until the commission's action Tuesday.

The commission charged that Greyhound Post Houses, Inc., operator of the restaurant, was violating a city ordinance prohibiting the serving of food to customers on an integrated basis.

Ralph D. Sizemore, manager of the restaurant, has been arrested four times on charges of violating the ordinance since Greyhound, complying with a ruling of the Interstate Commerce Commission, ordered desegregation of interstate bus facilities in November.

Federal Injunction Prevents City Closing Bus Restaurant

BIRMINGHAM (AP) — Birmingham's city commissioners tried Tuesday to shut down the Greyhound Bus station restaurant because of integration, but the federal government stopped them with a court order.

The commissioners voted to revoke the restaurant's license and ordered the eating establishment closed, effective at midnight.

But the U.S. Attorney's office here prepared a request for a temporary restraining order, rushed it to Gadsden, Ala., where U.S. District Judge Seybourn H. Lynne was holding court, and the judge signed it.

The temporary restraining order, good for 10 days, prohibits the city from enforcing an ordinance which requires segregated eating facilities in Birmingham.

It also prohibits the revoking of the Greyhound Restaurant's license.

The judge set a hearing for Dec. 28 on a possible permanent injunction.

Mayor Art Hanes and Police Commissioner Eugene Connor said they would abide by the restraining order.

Hanes said the City Commission acted on a valid city ordinance which was being violated.

He said there is some question whether the ICC, lacking legislative ability, can supercede a city ordinance.

Connor said in a statement:

"For a hundred years every court in the land recognized segregation as the law of the land . . . but without a single act by any legislature or congress the power-hungry Supreme Court cancelled out that law and wrote another.

"I'm not a lawyer, but I know that was wrong."

'Bull' Connor Named In U. S. Restraint Suit

Bus Co. wants him to leave cafe alone

WASHINGTON (NNPA)—The Federal Government went to court Thursday to protect the Greyhound Corporation from Birmingham officials who want to put the company out of the restaurant business because it persisted in serving all passengers in accordance with the ICC ruling that went into effect Nov. 1.

United States Attorney Macon A. Weaver filed suit in the Federal District Court at Birmingham against the city of Birmingham, Mayor Arthur J. Hanes, and Commissioners Eugene Bull Connor and J. T. Waggoner.

Mr. Weaver asked the court to enjoin the city, its officers, agents and employees from arresting, or causing to be arrested, any personnel of the Greyhound Corporation.

HE ALSO specifically requested a ruling to forbid the defendants from suspending, revoking or canceling the Greyhound restaurant's license on account of any alleged violation of a Birmingham law forbidding colored people and whites from being served food in the same room.

The latter action is directed against Section 369 of the General Code of the City of Birmingham, which makes it unlawful to serve food to colored and white customers unless these persons are "effectually separated."

In do this, the local law says there must be a "solid partition extending from the floor upward to a distance of seven feet or higher." A separate entrance from the street must also be provided for each compartment.

MR. WEAVER explained that this action was brought at the request of the Greyhound Corporation and their attorneys. The company was served with a copy of a city resolution ordering it to show cause why its license should not be revoked and canceled for violation of laws pertaining to the conduct of the business.

He asserted the "purpose and effect of the arrests and convictions described above, and the license revocation proceedings are to compel Greyhound and its agents to maintain racially segregated restaurant facilities in the terminal."

The Government attorney said Mr. Connor who controls and directs the activities of the Birmingham Police Force in his capacity as Commissioner of Public Safety, has caused the following arrests since the first of November:

Nov. 3 — The arrest of Ralph Sizemore, manager of the bus terminal restaurant in Birmingham, for serving four colored interstate bus passengers.

Nov. 5 — The arrest of W. E. Gleason, a cashier, at the terminal restaurant, for serving a colored person.

Nov. 6. — The arrest of Mrs. Pearl Brown, another terminal cashier, for serving a colored member of the Armed forces.

Nov. 7. — The arrest of Mr. Sizemore for serving three colored persons.

Nov. 8. — The arrest of Mr. Sizemore for serving four colored interstate bus passengers.

FOLLOWING THESE arrests, Mr. Weaver said, an attempt was made to avoid injunction proceedings and to allow these cases to proceed in normal course in the courts of the State of Alabama.

It was assumed, he said, that this had been accomplished as there had been no more arrests at the Greyhound bus terminal since Nov. 8, and the subsequent conviction of Mr. Sizemore, Mr. Gleason, and Mrs. Brown.

However, on Dec. 5, the city ordered Greyhound Corporation to appear before the Commission of the City of Birmingham on Tuesday, Dec. 19, to show cause why its restaurant license should not be revoked and canceled.

All negotiations having failed, Mr. Weaver concluded that he had no alternative but to file suit to prevent the closing down of the Greyhound restaurant because it was complying with the Interstate Commerce Commission order.

Mr. Weaver said the constitutionality of the ICC order issued Sept. 22, barring discrimination in the operation of interstate motor carriers and their facilities, stands undisputed.

JUDGE ALLOWS 10 DAYS

Alter Bus Cafe Ban, Birmingham Ordered

BIRMINGHAM (AP) — U.S. District Judge Seyborun H. Lynne told the city of Birmingham Thursday to amend its ordinance prohibiting the serving of food on an integrated basis.

He gave the city 10 days to do it.

If it doesn't comply, he said, he will issue a preliminary injunction against the city.

Lynne acted in a hearing on a temporary restraining order, which he issued 10 days ago to block the city commission's efforts to close the segregation-troubled restaurant in Birmingham's Greyhound Bus Terminal.

ICC RULING

He extended the original restraining order 10 days.

Then he told city attorneys the extension was to give the city an opportunity to revise segregation ordinances so they will not apply to facilities subject to federal Interstate Commerce Commission regulations.

The hassle started in November when the restaurant was integrated in compliance with an ICC ruling on facilities serving interstate passengers.

The manager of the restaurant, Ralph Sizemore, has been arrested four times on charges of violating the city's segregation ordinance.

Early last week the city commission voted to revoke the restaurant's license. The federal government promptly asked for, and got, the temporary restraining order blocking the city commission's action.

The restaurant has remained open.

In court, City Attorney J. M. Breckenridge contended that the federal government "has not presented an iota of evidence" that interstate — rather than intrastate — passengers were involved in the arrests.

He also told the judge, "the U.S. government is pushing itself foward to try to exert pressure in a case in which congress has not given them authority."

Ban Sought On Interference With Greyhound Restaurant

Montgomery Advertiser p. 6A
Wed 12-13-61

BIRMINGHAM (AP) — The federal government petitioned Thursday for an injunction to stop the City of Birmingham from interfering with operation of the Greyhound Bus Station restaurant here.

Montgomery Ala.

The restaurant was integrated last month in compliance with an Interstate Commerce Commission ruling. U. S. District Attorney Macon L. Weaver said the injunction was sought at the request of Greyhound officials.

Named in the action, in addition to the city, are Mayor Arthur J. Hanes and Commissioners Eugene Connor and J. T. Waggoner.

Greyhound Corp. officials have been ordered to appear before the city commission Tuesday to show cause why the restaurant license should not be revoked for failing to observe a segregation ordinance.

Weaver said he regrets that the issue could not be resolved in the state courts. He added:

"But if the city insists on closing down the Greyhound restaurant on the basis that Greyhound was violating a city ordinance, I have no alternative but to ask the federal court to enjoin such action."

No immediate relief was asked in the petition, which will be docketed in routine order by U. S. District Court Judge Seybourn Lynne.

Ralph D. Sizemore, 34, manager of the restaurant, has been arrested several times for violating the ordinance. He and two employes have been placed under bond in connection with the charges.

U.S. COURT ENJOINS FREEDOM RIDERS IN ALABAMA TRIPS

Judge Cites 'Undue Burden on Interstate Commerce' —Police Also Criticized

By CLAUDE SITTON
Special to The New York Times.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 2—A Federal District judge ordered Freedom Riders and their supporters today to halt tests of segregation on public transportation in Alabama.

He also forbade the Montgomery police to withhold protection from interstate passengers no matter what their race. And he enjoined Ku Klux Klansmen and their associates from interfering with such travel.

In his fifteen-page order Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. conceded that the white and Negro demonstrators might be within their rights. However, he said they had caused "an undue burden and restraint on interstate commerce."

[In Washington the Justice Department made it clear that it disapproved of the injunction against further Freedom Rides. It criticized any legal restraints on a citizen's exercise of his constitutional rights.]

Riders to Fight Order

Supporters of the Freedom Riders said they would ask the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals to vacate the order. However, a court official here said such action would have to await the issuance of a preliminary injunction and that the restraining order would remain in force for ten days.

The judge found that city law-enforcement officials had demonstrated "willful and deliberate failure" to protect passengers on a Greyhound bus that arrived here May 20 with a group of Freedom Riders.

The officials included Lester B. Sullivan, the city's Police Commissioner, and Goodwin J. Ruppenthal, the chief of police.

Judge Johnson also said that members of various Klan groups had conspired in and participated in riots here, in Birmingham and at Anniston, Ala.

Hearings Lasted 4 Days

The stern-faced judge told those involved that his orders must be obeyed. He said:

"I want to make it abundantly clear that this injunction and restraining order will be enforced.

"If there are any such incidents as this again, I am going to put some Klansmen, some city officials, some city policemen and some Negro preachers in the Federal penitentary.

Defiance of these orders could bring unlimited jail terms, according to a District Court source.

Judge Johnson's action followed a four-day hearing, which ended yesterday. He had denied Birmingham's police officials in the injunction as had been requested by the Justice Department.

The action raised doubts over the future of the Freedom Rides, at least in this state. A temporary restraining order names virtually every organization and individual of any significance in the movement.

The organizations included were the Congress of Racial Equality, a Manhattan-based group of whites and Negroes; the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, which is headed by the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. of Atlanta, and the Student Nonviolent Movement of Nashville, Tenn., which was formed during the sit-in demonstrations against lunch-counter segregation there.

The fourth organization was the Montgomery City Jail Council. This was set up last week by eleven demonstrators who had been arrested while seeking service at a Trailways bus terminal lunch counter.

The individuals restrained by the court were Dr. King; the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy of Montgomery, president of the Montgomery Improvement Association, a Negro protest group, and the Rev. Fred L. Shuttlesworth of Birmingham, president of the Birmingham Christian Leadership Council.

Other persons named were the Rev. Solomon S. Seay Sr., a Montgomery integration leader, and the Rev. Wyatt Tee Walker of Atlanta, executive director of the leadership group. Mr. Walker is also a key member of the Freedom Ride Coordinating Committee of Atlanta.

The restraining order prohibits the organizations and individuals named and "all persons acting in concert with them" from:

¶Sponsoring, financing, assisting or encouraging any individual or group in traveling in interstate commerce through Alabama for the purpose of testing segregation laws.

¶Committing any act that is designed to cause violence upon or threats toward any passengers in interstate commerce in Alabama.

¶Otherwise obstructing, impeding or interfering with the free movement of interstate commerce in the transportation of bona-fide interstate passengers in Alabama.

Judge Explains Order

"This is not a restraining order enjoining individuals or groups who are traveling in interstate commerce through Alabama and through this district on bona-fide trips," Judge Johnson emphasized. "It is only directed to and against those organizations and individuals specifically named."

The judge scheduled a hearing for June 12 at which the integration advocates may show cause why a preliminary injunction should not be issued pending trail of the case.

In commenting on the restrainig order the judge noted that the violent outburst had been caused directly by the Klansmen and others. He also said they had been allowed "by the willful failure of the police authorities to take the usual, adequate, protective measures."

However, he contended that it was "equally true" that supporters of the Freedom Riders, "by their actions in financing and sponsoring and aiding and assisting such non-boda-fide trips, are directly causing an undue burden and restraint upon interstate commerce within the State of Alabama and within this district."

'Agitation' Seen by Court

The court recognized, he said, "that this sponsorship, even though it is agitation within the law of the United States, is agitation that constitutes an undue burden upon the free flow of interstate commerce at this particular time and under the circumstances that exist."

Judge Johnson noted that additional facilities and buses had been made necessary and that this had required the companies to run extra schedules and to coordinate them with armed escorts.

The Freedom Riders' actions 'may be a legal right," he conceded.

However, he went on: "The right of the public to be protected from the evils of their conduct is a greater and more important right."

He then pointed out that "the right of the public to be protected from evils of conduct, even though the constitutional rights of certain persons or groups are thereby in some manner infringed, has received frequent and consistent recognition by the courts of the United States."

Includes C.O.R.E. Group

Mr. Sullivan and Mr. Ruppenthal, through their attorneys, had requested the District Court to issue an injunction against the Congress of Racial Equality and the Freedom Riders.

In his order, the judge said that "even though these sponsors have not been named as defendants in this action by the United States, this court is under a duty to go further in this particular case and grant the public complete relief insofar as possible."

The preliminary injunction involving the city police included Mr. Sullivan, Mr. Ruppenthal, their officers and agents and persons acting with them. They were enjoined from "failing or refusing to provide protection for all persons traveling in interstate commerce in and through the city of Montgomery, Ala."

Judge Johnson said the hearing had brought out that Mr. Sullivan and the others "were aware of the explosive situation that existed in this area" before the arrival of the bus carrying the Freedom Fighters.

Despite this, he asserted "they did not take any of the usual precautionary measures to keep down violence in the city."

The Commissioner "had not even alerted the Montgomery city police, and no special plans had been made to insure the safety of the group of students, to prevent unlawful acts of violence upon their person and to insure the safe conduct of these groups of interstate travelers," the order said.

"This Court specifically finds that the Montgomerhy Police Department, under the direction of Sullivan and Ruppenthal, willfully and deliberately failed to take measures to insure the safety of the students and to prevent unlawful acts of violence upon their persons.

"This lackk of protection on the part off the city police of Montgomery continued even after the arrival of the bus."

Judge Johnson held that the failure of the police to act constituted a violation of the equal-protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution. He also said it had deprived passengers of their rights without due process of law.

A reporter for The Montgomery Advertiser, the order noted, had testified that a city detective had told him on the day of the riot tha the police "'would not lift a finger to protect'" the riders.

Mr. Sullivan denied during the hearing that the police had failed to act and contended that 'there was no indication that there would be trouble."

At the request of Justice Department attorneys, Judge Johnson issued a temporary restraining order May 20 against various Klan groups and persons alleged to have participated in the riots. The only organization among them not included in today's preliminary injunction was the Federated Ku Klux Klan, Inc.

List of Others Enjoined

Besides the police officials, the injunction included the U. S. Klans, Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, Inc.; The Alabama Knights, nKights of the Ku Klux Klan, Inc.; Alvin Horn, grand dragon of the U. S. Klans; Robert M. Shelton, imperial wizard of the Alabama Knights, and "all persons acting in concert with them."

Others included were Claude V. Henley, a former reserve policeman here and Thurman hearing identified the two as members of the mob that attacked the Freedom Riders here. All of the persons named are enjoined from:

¶Conspiring to interfere with travel of passengers in interstate commerce through Alabama free from racial segregation and other unjunst discrimination.

¶Committing acts of violence, or threatening, intimidating, assaulting or harassing any interstate passengers.

¶Threatening, committing violence or injuring personnel or property of bus companies.

¶Otherwise obstructing, impeding or interfering with the free movement of interstate commerce.

Judge Johnson said the evidence had shown that both the U. S. Klans and the Alabama Knights had taken part in the conspiracy and riots here, in Birmingham and in Anniston.

C. O. R. E. Maps Appeal

The Congress of Racial Equality plans an immediate appeal of Judge Johnson's order to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals.

Marvin Rich, community relations director at C. O. R. E.'s headquarters, 38 Park Row, said that "we feel that the right to travel on interstate vehicles cannot be abridged, nor can it be limited."

Should the court rule against a stay of execution, C. O. R. E. will continue its fight to win the right of unlimited travel on the public highways at a formal hearing scheduled for June 12, Mr. Rich declared.

He pointed out that Judge Johnson's restraining order had "only legal and technical meaning now" because C. O. R. E. had had no immediate plans for further Freedom Rides in Alabama.

The organization is concentrating its forces in Jackson, Miss., he reported.

Alabama Passes Anti-Rider Bill

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP)—The Alabama Senate gave swift approval Saturday to a bill to prohibit "freedom rides" in Alabama. The House-passed bill was sent to the governor for signature.

Members of the upper chamber voted 24-0 in favor of the measure, setting a maximum penalty of $300 fine and six months in jail for anyone who pre-announces and then carries out a challenge to Alabama's racial barriers.

Specifically, the bill forbids "any act, gesture or communication which is calculated to or will probably so outrage or transgress the sense of decency and morals or so violate or transgress the pattern of life and habits of the people of Alabama as to be likely to cause a riot."

The overwhelmingly endorsed bill, co-sponsored by nearly every member of the legislature, does not mention freedom riders by name.

However, supporters admit its purpose is to discourage segregation-testing bus rides like the one which touched off bloody race riots and led to martial rule in Montgomery last May.

Seek Desegregation Of Bus Terminals

MONTGOMERY, Sept. 4 (AP)—A hearing opens in Federal Court tomorrow on a "freedom rider" suit seeking to desegregate Montgomery bus stations and protect integrationists from arrest.

Filed last May in the aftermath of bloody racial violence, the complaint asks for a court order to prohibit buslines or city, county and state authorities from "enforcing and pursuing a policy, practice, customs and usage of separation of the races" in buses and terminals.

Hits Breach of Peace Law

It also attacks constitutionality of the state's breach of the peace law under which 11 freedom riders, including four white college professors; were arrested May 25 while seated together at a bus station lunch counter.

The law prohibits any "conduct calculated to provoke a breach of the peace" and provides a maximum penalty of 12 months in jail and a $500 fine.

Trials of the 11 defendants in state court have been postponed pending outcome of the hearing before U. S. Dist. Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr.

Seeks Stop To Arrests

The suit asks Johnson to prevent authorities from "arresting, harassing, intimidating, threatening and coercing" bus riders who seek to tear down racial barriers.

Among the freedom riders filing the complaint were the Rev. William S. Coffin Jr., chaplain at Yale University; the Rev. Gaylord B. Noyce, assistant professor at the Yale Divinity School; Dr. David E. Swift, professor of religion at Wesleyan in Middletown, Conn., and Dr. John D. Maguire, assistant professor of religion at Wesleyan.

HOWARD THURSTON EDWARDS ACQUITTED

Birmingham Man Acquitted Of 'Rider' Violence Charge

BIRMINGHAM (AP). — A circuit court jury late Wednesday acquitted Howard Thurston Edwards of an assault with intent to murder charge which resulted from the Mother's Day "Freedom Rider" violence in Birmingham.

The jury deliberated only a few minutes but held up its verdict while court officials located the presiding judge.

Bud Gordon, a Birmingham News reporter-photographer, earlier identified Edwards as one of the men who beat up a photographer during the rioting.

But Edwards' wife testified he was at their house in suburban Irondale at the time that a white mob attacked an integrated group of bus riders at the Trailways station in downtown Birmingham.

Edwards, 22-year-old Birmingham print shop employe, is charged with assault with intent to murder in the beating of Tommy Langston, a photographer with the Birmingham Post-Herald.

Langston testified that he could not identify Edwards as one of the men who jumped him while he made pictures of the mob beating up the integrated bus riders.

Gordon, of the Birmingham News, said he saw Edwards and about 10 other men chase Langston, hit him and knock him to the ground, and smash two cameras he was carrying.

The state rested its case after Gordon testified.

Patterson Asks Bobby 'Send Riders Home, Let South Be'

Gov. John Patterson appealed to Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy Monday to "Please leave the people of the South alone and tell your "Freedom Riders' to go home."

His telegram to Kennedy was prompted by the weekend outbreak of racial violence at Monroe, N.C., which was touched off by anti-segregation picketing.

Patterson also sent telegrams to Gov. Terry Sanford of North Carolina and Mayor Fred Wilson of Monroe, telling them they have the sympathy of the people of Alabama.

Three cities in Alabama—Montgomery, Birmingham and Anniston—experienced racial outbreaks three months ago prompted by the arrival of segregation-challenging "Freedom Riders."

The Alabama governor, in his telegram to Kennedy, denounced what he called "lawless elements from the North who call themselves "Freedom Riders."

"Surely you have ample evidence by now," he said, "that these invaders are nothing more than rabble rousers and law violators whose aim is to create riots and breaches of the peace in the Southern states."

He charges that the movement "is backed and supported by the Communist Party with the intent of dividing out country and creating domestic distrubances at a time of international crisis."

Patterson told the attorney general that "your encouragement of these rabble rousers is bringing about a disregard and disrespect for law and order" and if continued, "will certainly lead to grave consequences."

Freedom Riders Bared Truth About South, Insists Priest

Foley sees movement in victory

NEW YORK — A Southern priest expressed "highest admiration for the Freedom Riders for uncovering some of the truth about race attitudes in the south."

Father Albert S. Foley, professor of sociology at Spring Hill College, Mobile, Ala., spoke to about 100 at a meeting of the newly-formed Bronx chapter of the Catholic Interracial Council.

He said the Freedom Riders had put an end to several Southern illusions and false traditions, and had laid bare for all to see "the bitter and die-hard resistance" of Alabama officials to the orderly processes of law enforcement and to court decisions.

The riders also revealed, said Father Foley, "the glaring discrepancy between the legend of Southern hospitality for visitors and the stark fact that some Southerners, notably the members of the violent mobs, are savagely inhospitable to other American citizens — regardless of their high rank or clergy status."

Father Foley, chairman of the Alabama Advisory Committee for the U.S. Civil Rights Commission and Council on Human Relations, felt that the movement has a good chance to succeed if its leaders coordinate their efforts with those of other organizations.

ATLANTA — In an interview with Ray Moore, news director for WSB-TV, taped in Washington, Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy denied he encouraged Freedom Rides.

On the contrary, Mr. Kennedy said he tried to persuade participants from taking the rides a week before the violence in Montgomery, Ala.

The riders ignored the attorney general's plea for a "cooling off period."

And on the local front, the President's brother said he concerning Rep. John Bell Atlanta schools desegregated in September.

And in reply to a question concerning Rep. John Bell Williams' request that Federal troops be sent to quell recent Chicago violence, Mr. Kennedy said:

Chicago police "are not standing back and waiting for people to be beaten up 10 to 12 minutes and then stepping in."

IN OTHER action in Georgia, Gov. Ernest Vandiver turned over to Alabama authorities a suspect accused of assault with intent to murder in connection with the Birmingham riots against freedom riders.

The governor said he could find "no reasonable basis" for refusing to hand over Herschel W. Acker of Rome, a pulpwood worker, accused of beating a photographer and an innocent bystander.

And in Macon, the arrest of John E. Glover, 19, paved the way for a test of Georgia's bus segregation laws.

Donald L. Hollowell, Atlanta attorney, filed an appeal immediately after Glover was convicted in City Court by Judge Andrew W. McKenna on a charge of refusing to move to the back from a front seat when ordered by the driver.

JACKSON, MISS. — The number of freedom riders arrested in Jackson since May 24 totaled 294 last week as 15 more were taken into custody at the railroad station's white waiting room.

Like the others, all were charged with breach of the peace.

The majority of the 15 riders, 10 of them white, were University of California students.

The 19-year-old former University of Wisconsin senior was arrested June 6 and given a four-month sentence, two of them suspended, and fined $200. He was released on bond June 24, returning to Wisconsin where he got a job as a dishwasher before returning to Jackson.

And at the trial of a group of freedom riders last Friday, a German reporter-photographer for Quick magazine of Munich, likened Mississippi to Germany under the rule of Hitler.

"You people condemned us German soldiers and Adolph Eichmann for obeying Hitler's orders without question," said Hilmar Pabel, 50," but now you say we must not question police orders."

Pabel, arrested for failing to "move on," was cleared. Judge James Spencer said there seemed to have been a "misunderstanding."

But Sheriff J. R. Gilfoy claims they distorted the truth. He also charged that two of them — John, 28, and his 23 - year - old wife, Janice — had no right to complain because both have criminal records.

Rogers has "a record that goes back 10 years," said the sheriff.

Also complaining of the treatment received in Mississippi jails were Misses Marcia Rosenblum, white 23, of Los Angeles and Rita Carter, 18, of Berkeley, Calif.

The complaints included the "serving of horse meat and an improper diet" and making women remove their clothes in front of male guards.

Earlier, the House passed a similar bill which provides a maximum penalty of $300 fine and six months in jail.

And in addition to approving the anti-freedom ride bill, the judiciary committee also reported out a measure to make it easier to sue out of state newspapers in Alabama courts. The action was taken after the courts ruled against Alabama in a libel suit against The New York Times.

U.S. CHARGES 4 ALABAMA OFFICIALS WITH WITHHOLDING PROTECTIONS

U. S. Charges 4 Ala. Officials With Withholding Protection Of Riders: "Cooling Period" Urged

Injunction Seeks Halting Of Interstate Travel Hindrances

By SUSAN WAGNER
(United Press International)

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The federal government moved Wednesday against four officials in Birmingham and Montgomery, Ala., on grounds that they failed to assure protection for the "freedom riders" when they first arrived in the state.

The Justice Department asked the U. S. District Court at Montgomery to enjoin the officials from "interfering with the peaceful movement of interstate travel."

The action would make the four defendants in a government complaint already outstanding against the Ku Klux Klan and certain states rights groups.

The Birmingham officials are Police Commissioner Eugene T. Connor and Police Chief Jamie Moore. The Montgomery officials are Lester B. Sullivan, commissioner of public works, and Police Chief Goodwin J. Ruppenthal.

The department's announcement came as Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy moved to discourage all unnecessary travel in Mississippi and Alabama until the "confusion and danger" growing out of violence against the "freedom riders" has passed.

He issued a special statement which also appealed for a "cooling-off period" in the two states. Besides "freedom riders," he said there are in the area certain "curiosity seekers, publicity seekers, and others who are seeking to serve their own causes."

Kennedy issued two statements during the day. In the first, he expressed confidence that local authorities now would control any outburst against the "freedom riders." In the second, he said the officials were meeting the test but their job was becoming increasingly difficult.

The Justice Department complaint against the Birmingham officials charged that the police deliberately withheld protection when a mob attacked the "freedom riders" in that city on May 14. They also were accused of refusing to prevent assaults on representatives of the Council on Racial Equality.

The department charged that the Montgomery officials had been informed of the expected arrival of the "freedom riders" in their city on May 20 and still failed to protect them.

The federal complaint also sought to add Claude Henley as a defendant in the case. Henley was described as a ringleader of the mob which attacked the riders in Montgomery.

Last Saturday Federal District Judge Frank M. Johnson issued a temporary order restraining the Ku Klux Klan and others from interferring with interstate travel by bus.

Atty. Gen. Kennedy said in his second statement of the day that there was an increasing possibility that innocent travelers — those forced to use buses on business or on other mandatory trips — might be injured.

"A mob asks no questions," he said.

"It would be wise for those traveling through these two states to delay their trips until the present state of confusion and danger has passed and an atmosphere of reason and normalcy has been restored."

U. S. Enters Suit On Ala. Segregation Law

Atlanta Daily World
Atlanta, Ga.

By SUSAN WAGNER
(United Press International)

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Justice Department announced Thursday night that it would take part as a "friend of the court" in a suit challenging the constitutionality of Alabama's segregation laws.

Thu, 5-26-61

The action followed an order by Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy withdrawing all but about 100 U. S. marshals from the state because state and local officials appeared to have the "ffreedom rider" situation under control.

The suit was filed in Montgomery, Ala., Thursday afternoon by attorneys for the Rev. Ralph T. Abernathy of Montgomery, and six "freedom riders."

Edwin Guthman, Justice Department press officer, said the suit asked that Montgomery police be enjoind from enforcing segregation in interstate bus terminals. It also sought to block arrests of "freedom riders" under an injunction issued by an Alabama state court.

Guthman said U. S. District Judge Frank Johnson asked the department to take part in the case as a friend of the court.

"We have advised the court that we will comply with this request," the press officer said.

We have asked for an early hearing in view of the importance of the questions involved."

In another indication that the government hoped to concentrate its battle against segregation in the courts, Kennedy said that deputy Atty. Gen. Byron White was returning to Washington. White has been directing the U. S. marshals in Alabama.

The attorney general said the 100 marshals remaining in the state will be available for emergency duty. But he expressed hope they "can be withdrawn at an early date."

Meanwhile in Montgomery, Ala., a Negro leader was wounded by a bullet fired from a passing auto shortly after Alabama authorities jailed a new group of "freedom riders."

The Rev. Solomon Seay said he had just stepped outside his front door when he saw a youth, apparently white, stick a rifle out the window of an old model car speeding down the highway.

"I just happened to have my hand up in front of my face and the bullet struck my wrist," Seay said. He said there were several youths in the car.

Seay is executive secretary of the Montgomery Improvement Association (MIA), a leading group in the integration fight.

The group of "freedom riders" arrested included four white professors and three Negro students who planned to take a bus from Montgomery to Jackson, Miss.

They were arrested and charged with disorderly conduct when they sought service at a segregated lunch bar used without incident by two groups of "freedom riders" who preceded them to Jackson Wednesday.

Also arrested at the same time were three integration leaders who have figured prominently in planning the "freedom rides."

Two inter-racial groups jailed in Jackson Wednesday after completing bus rides from Montgomery had used the white facilities at the bus station here without challenge. But they were arrested in minutes after they arrived in Jackson and tried to use white facilities in that bus station.

P, 5

The new arrests brought to 37 the total number of "freedom riders" behind bars in the two cities.

WITHDRAWS 500 MARSHALS

There were these other developments Thursday in the Mississippi-Alabama area which has been the focal point of the two-week-long controversy:

Atlanta, Ga.

Attorney General Robert Kennedy announced withdrawal of 500 of the 600 U. S. marshals he sent into Alabama after mob violence, rioting and bloodshed marked the "freedom riders" appearance in that state.

—Mississippi Gov. Ross Barnett told a news conference in Jackson his state's segregation and other laws are valid until repealed and that violators would continue to be arrested. He renewed his promise to preserve order and prevent violence in Mississippi.

—Alabama Gov. John Patterson, commenting on the new arrests, said state authorities escorted the first batch of "co-called freedom riders" out of Alabama Wednesday to ease unrest. He said the state did so after receiving "assurances they wanted to leave Alabama, that they would not return, that others would not come here to cause new unrest." He said the state was not "committed to escort invaders all over Alabama to permit them to flagrantly violate our laws and customs."

Patterson said the second group of freedom riders "came against the urging of the United States attorney general and in violation of our agreement."

REJECTS REQUEST

—The Rev. Martin Luther King left Montgomery and returned to Atlanta. He said Negro leaders could not go along with Atty. Gen. Kennedy's request for a cooling off period. "We cannot in good conscience cool off in our determination to achieve first class citizenship," he said. King repeated his prediction that mass "freedom rides" would be undertaken, but said he could not give exact dates or other specifics at this time. The integration leader said he was sure "no responsible Negro leader" gave Gov. Patterson the assurances Patterson mentioned.

—Authorities here and in Jackson promised speedy trials for those arrested. First hearings in all the cases are now scheduled for Friday.

State Adjutant General Henry V. Graham offered Thursday's group the same armed convoy provided for Wednesday's group. The convoy would have included 50 National Guardsmen and 32 highway patrolmen with instructions to escort the group to the Mississippi border.

In addition to Maguire, the seven "freedom riders" arrested at Montgomery Thursday were the Revs. Gaylord Noyce and William Coffin, both Yale University religious professors, and George D. Smith, a Negro and a student at the Yale University Law School.

Also David Swift, like Maguire a religious professor at Wesleyan University at Middleton, and Clyde Barter and Charles Jones who are Negro theological students at Johnson C. Smith University at Charlotte, N. C.

The leaders arrested were the Revs. Ralph Abernahty, Fred M. Shuttlesworth and Wyatt Tee Walker. All were charged with breach of the peace.

U. S. seeks to link Klan with violence

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 31—The U. S. Justice Dept. sought today to connect Ku Klux Klan leaders with participants in mob violence against "freedom riders" in testimony in an injunction hearing entered its third day.

Wed. 5-31-61

The hearing before U. S. Judge Frank Johnson Jr. is on a government request to restrain police officials of Montgomery and Birmingham from failing or refusing to provide protection to persons in interstate travel.

P-1

The complaint was amended to include Police Commissioner Eugene Connor and Chief Jamie Moore of Birmingham, Commissioner L. B. Sullivan and Chief G. J. Ruppenthal of Montgomery. It also listed Claude V. Henley and Thurmond T. Outxs, both of Montgomery, charged in Montgomery bus station beatings.

Records of long-distance calls made from telephones belonging to alleged KKK members to others were expected to be introduced during testimony today.

TESTIMONY yesterday afternoon pointed fingers of accusation at Klansmen in gang attacks on a group of CORE bus riders at Anniston and Birmingham.

Three witnesses questioned about alleged KKK connections sought refuge under the Fifth Amendment, refusing to answer on grounds their testimony might tend to incriminate them.

One reluctant witness, 21-year-old Cecil Llewellen of Anniston was jailed by U. S. District Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. for contempt of court.

Johnson instructed Llewellen that he had a right to decline to answer questions that might incriminate him but would be required to answer other questions.

Llewellen recited the Fifth Amendment when asked if he lived in Anniston. Johnson ordered him to answer the question, asserting that such a question would not come under the constitutional guarantee against self-incrimination.

Llewellen refused and was jailed. He later returned to answer most questions posed by federal attorneys, then was returned to jail. He was released on $500 bond.

AFTER STATING his name, Llewellen was asked by federal attorneys if he lived in Anniston.

"I decline to answer that under the Fifth Amendement on grounds that it might tend to incriminate," Llewellen read from a written note.

"Who wrote that for you?" asked Judge Johnson.

"I decline to answer," said Llewellen.

"I insist that you answer that question. It will not incriminate you," fired back Johnson.

"J. V, Stoner, a lawyer, of Atlanta, Ga.," was the answer.

"Where did you see him?"

"MARSHAL, COMMIT this man to jail for contempt of this court!" said Johnson.

Later, as Adams appeared to testify, Atty. Stoner accompanied him. The lawyer asked the judge to instruct the witness to his rights.

Johnson instructed the witness of this constitutional guarantees and told the attorney Llewellen had been aware of his rights when he had refused to answer.

When Llewellen was recalled to testify he said he had met Stoner here through Adams. He chose the Fifth Amendment when asked if he belonged to the KKK.

Llewellen's ex-wife, Mary Ann Cleghorn, 20, of Anniston, testified he had told her last Fall he was a member of the Klan.

State Investigator Harry E. Simms, who lives near the site of the Greyhound bus burning near Anniston, linked Llewellen to the scene of the mob violence in East Alabama.

James Oscar (Ace) Williams of Gadsden, yesterday invoked the Fifth Amendment when asked if he is a member of the Klan.

HE LATER ADMITTED that he was in Birmingham Mother's Day afternoon at the Greyhound Bus Terminal after 4 p.m.

Mob violence broke out at the nearby Trailways bus depot shortly after 4 p.m. that day, when a group of bi-racial riders debarked from a bus.

Williams was confronted by a list of alleged officers of the Alabama Knights of Ku Klux Klan and asked if he had voted on the ballot at a meeting of the Eastview Klan Klavern in Birmingham.

"I did not vote on that ballot," answered Williams, "but I voted on one similar." The witness' name was pointed out on the document by U. S. attorneys.

Kenneth Adams of Anniston Rt. 3, said by an earlier witness to have been at the scene of the Anniston bus burning, used the Fifth Amendment seven times when asked of his activities.

SHELTON, GRAND WIZARD of the Alabama Knights of KKK, hedged in testimony when asked of his knowledge of Klan leaders and members.

Judge Johnson, at one point sharply admonihsed Shelton to cease evasive answers. He recessed the hearing by telling Atty. James Hammonds of Bessemer, Shelton's lawyer, to "discuss evasiveness" with his client.

"I don't want to put Mr. Shelton in jail," said Johnson.

Shelton returned to request permission to reconsider his earlier answers.

When cited several names and asked if each were members, Shelton said he did not know whether they are presently Klan members. He said several names mentioned were known to him as having been members of the KKK organization at one time.

Yesterday's testimony ended with U. S. Atty. John Doar seeking to prove that Adams had made a phone call to Shelton last March 27.

SHELTON TESTIFIED records are kept by individual Klaverns and that he, as an overall organizer, knew most members only by the numbers on their records. He replied that he had sold tires to several men named in questions, but had not known them as Klansmen.

Jim Atkins, of Birmingham, WBRC-TV news director, had earlier testified he talked with Shelton near the Greyhound Bus Terminal the afternoon of the Birmingham beatings.

News Staff Writer Bud Gordon had told the court a black Cadillac with a low-frequency, whiplash antenna parked in the area of the Trailways station had been identified to him as belonging to Shelton.

Hubert Paige, 236 49th-st, n, Birmingham, denied being a Klansman, but said he had bought automobile tires from Shelton.

When asked his license number, Paige promptly told them it was 1A-1429.

Government attorneys had sought to insert the same number into the records earlier when a Negro cab driver said he took the number from a car carrying a group of men who had beaten three Negroes after the Trailways incidents.

The Negro, Walter Elder of Birmingham, said he saw three Negros standing on a street corner at Seventh-av and 18th-st beaten by a half dozen white men.

The witness said he saw Kenneth Adams at the terminal and at the bus-burning scene. He said he recognized Adams as the same man he had seen holding a robe at a cross-burning rally in the Anniston city park last year.

Posteglione said he told Anniston police twice the morning of May 14 that he had a tip the bus carrying the CORE riders was on its way to Anniston.

He said police did not arrive at the terminal until "10 or 15 minutes" after an angry crowd had surrounded the bus, screaming insults at the riders, and delaying its progress.

Non-Violence Leaders Called In; 'Whizzer' White Heads Marshals' Team

Atlanta, Ga.

By DOUGLAS KIKER
Atlanta Journal-Constitution Staff Writer

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 20—Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. is flying back south from Chicago and "will probably" come to Montgomery Sunday to take personal charge of a non-violent integration protest in this strife-ridden town.

Rev. Wyatt Tee Walker, executive director of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, announced this minutes after he himself arrived in Montgomery Saturday night in the wake of a day of rioting.

"We are calling in non-violent leaders from all over the South. We are going to see it through. We've got to see it through," he said.

"If we stop now, we've lost all our psychological advantage. We hope and pray nobody will have to die to shake Alabama and Montgomery to its senses. We insist that law and order must prevail," the Rev. Mr. Walker added.

The Rev. Mr. Walker said he was not sure yet exactly how many Negroes would be available Sunday. "We'll just have to wait and see. We are trying to get all we can," he said.

He said the 18 "freedom riders" who were beaten, stomped, and bloodied in Saturday afternoon's riots here were sent here backed by the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, which Dr. King heads.

Byron "Whizzer" White, detailed by President Kennedy to head the 400-man U.S. marshal force coming in here to maintain order was scheduled to land Saturday night at Maxwell Air Force Base.

2-DAY MEETING MAPS NEW FREEDOM RIDES

The New York Times

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTA, May 26—Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. said key integrationist leaders were meeting here today and tomorrow to plan a resumption of Freedom Riders on a "large scale." At the same time, he said, he expects a temporary lull in the demonstrations.

He said the lull was not the same thing as the "cooling off" period Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy had asked for. He indicated the demonstrations would resume by the middle of next week, when final examinations for college students are over.

New York, N.Y.

"If the Federal Government came out with a strong order against segregation in interstate travel and any type of discrimination in terminals, we would have no need for the rides," he also declared.

The strategy meeting included leaders of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, of which Dr. King is the head; the Congress of Racial Equality, the sponsor of the first Freedom Ride, and the Nashville, Tenn., Christian Leadership Conference, a branch of Dr. King's organization.

Keep Marshals On Duty, King Urges President

Birmingham Post-Herald

Birmingham, Ala.

ATLANTA, May 25 (UPI)— The Rev. Martin Luther King telegraphed President Kennedy today that "a perpetual reign of terror still exists" in Montgomery, Ala., and asked that Federal marshals not be withdrawn from that city.

King's telegram was sent a few hours after he returned to his office in Atlanta from Montgomery, where he has been for the past several days in connection with the "freedom riders" activities.

Fri. 5-26-61

It was signed by King in his capacity as president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference.

The telegram said:

"A perpetual reign of terror still exists in Montgomery. Four official staff members of Southern Leadership Conference, Rev. Wyatt T. Walker, Rev. Ralph Abernathy, Rev. Fred Shuttlesworth and Rev. Bernard Lee are in jail on questionable charges associated with their entering waiting rooms in the Montgomery bus station.

"Another Southern Christian Leadership Conference member, Rev. Solomon Seay, was shot by whites from a passing auto. All this reveals that there is still need for Federal marshals to remain in Montgomery. "Knowing of your determination to preserve law and order and to protect all citizens, I strongly urge you not to withdraw Federal marshals from Montgomery at this crucial moment."

'SATURATION' OF RIDERS PROMISED

Atlanta Constitution p. 4

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (UPI) —The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., said today he expected that there would be Freedom Riders on nearly every bus that leaves Montgomery in the next few weeks.

He said he expected many students seeking to integrate bus terminal facilities would begin riding when Negro colleges begin dismissing students at the end of the term.

King, when asked if the "bus method" of integration will be used in the future said, "very definitely. For the next few weeks this will be the area of concentration."

5 Georgians Face Courts Over Riders

The Florida Times-Union
Jacksonville, Fla.

LA GRANGE, Ga., May 29 (AP)— Three men drew heavy fines in recorder's court today for trying to stir up trouble over the passing through the city of a "freedom riders" bus. Two others were bound over to a higher court on more serious changes.

W. C. Hancock, 38, of Hapeville, and C. R. Hammond, 28, of Newnan, were held to superior court on charges of inciting to riot. Hancock was armed when arrested last Wednesday several hours after a group of "freedom riders" had passed through the city en route from Atlanta to Montgomery, Ala.

The recorder's court levied fines of $135 each against C. L. Handley, 29, of Hapeville; Tommy Jones and L. W. Chase, both of Newnan, on charges of idling and loitering.

Times 5-30-61

Police Chief Troy McClung said all five carried membership application blanks, identification cards or other papers indicating their connection with the Ku Klux Klan.

P-22

Three loaded pistols, a blackjack, hammer and billiard cue stick were found in the car the men used in coming to LaGrange, McClung said.

McClung reported they hired small boys to distribute pamphlets advising that a trouble-making group of integrationists was headed for LaGrange.

Wilkins Says NAACP Supports 'Rider's' Ideals

Jackson Daily News

A national NAACP executive said here last night that although his organization may disagree with minor points of the "Freedom Rider" movement it supports their ideals.

Roy Wilkins of New York City, executive Secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, told a rally here that while his organization is not often as spectacular as the Congress of Racial Equality movement, he does not oppose the rides.

SOLID WAY

"We think the solid way to make progress is to attack segregation and discrimination by tactics generally accepted and used in America, such as in the courts," Wilkins told a crowd of more than 1200 at the Lynch Street Masonic auditorium. "We believe the way to test a law is to set up a test case, carry it through the courts and get a determination. We do not believe you can test a law and get it thrown out by staying in jail," he continued.

"After one spends 20 or 60 or 90 days in jail, the law is still on the statute books and still constitutes a support for segregation," he continued.

But he said the NAACP does "not sneer at those who choose to stay in jail," referring to the endless line of "freedom riders" who have paraded to Jackson jails in the past two weeks, "for they are registering a personal and powerful moral protest against injustices."

"Even though methods may differ. . .here is basic agreement among Negro leaders and organizations in the overall goals and objectives. All methods should be used," Wilkins continued.

He said racial discrimination in the South embarrassed President Kennedy in his discussions with Khrushchev.

PAYS TRIBUTE

Wilkins paid a back handed tribute to Gov. Ross Barnett and Jackson police for lack of violence in connection with "freedom rider" movement in Mississippi.

But he said they "put on a face" that all is well between races in the state.

"I don't care how bad we think of Gov. Barnett, we must say that he has performed one of the duties of his office. Some of them won't even listen to you," he continued.

Wilkins said he referred to Barnett's meeting with Dr. Aaron Henry of Clarksdale, state president of the NAACP, here last night.

The Rev. Charles A. Jones of Campbell College, presided at the meeting and announced that six Negro youths had successfully integrated the Jackson Zoo two days ago. He said they sat for two hours on Zoo benches and drank "that pure white water" without interference from police.

Sunday six Negroes, including some of those who returned Tuesday, were detained when they took seats at the zoo. Police released them without charges within 30 minutes of the time they were picked up.

Wilkins said an intensified voter registration campaign began this week in seven Mississippi cities. He did not name the towns.

He called on Negroes to press for registration to vote, for equal treatment by police, an end to segregation in courtrooms, employment in factories with government contracts, access to public accommodations and integration of public education facilities.

The University of Mississippi, he said, "would be a better university with some Negroes there. It'd be a real democratic university," he said, referring to a suit filed in federal court here last week to force the school to admit Negro college student J. H. Meredith of Kosciusko.

Riot Suspect Held To Jury For Assault

Gordon also identified Edwards as one of the men in a newspaper photograph of the violence, saying he was a man facing the camera with an object — it had the appearance of a length of lead pipe — raised in one hand.

Gordon further said Edwards was one of a group of men who took his camera from him and destroyed the film in it.

Langston was one of several persons — newsmen and integrationists — beaten by the mob. The crowd of white men jumped Langston when he tried to photograph the violence. He suffered cuts and bruises.

Langston testified he could not identify any of the men who beat him. He said he couldn't positively identify Edwards as one of the men in the newspaper photograph.

Edwards was one of four men arrested in the week that followed the racial outburst. The others were charged with disorderly conduct.

Gaither said the office was reopened for the purpose of recruiting people in the area for the rides and training prospective riders.

JUDGE LETS CURB ON BUS TESTS DIE

The New York Times

Opens Way to New Freedom Rides—12 More Jailed by Mississippi Court

June-6-13-61

By The Associated Press.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 12—A Federal judge's refusal to prolong a temporary restraining order left the door open today for new Freedom Rides in Alabama. P. 1

But United States District Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. warned that he might reinstate his decree against sponsored rides at a later date "if it becomes necessary."

Judge Johnson let the restraining order die after postponing a hearing that was to have determined whether the temporary order would be replaced with a longer-lasting injunction.

The New York Times

The judge issued the order June 2 to prohibit the Congress of Racial Equality and others from financing, sponsorsing, assisting or encouraging tests of segregation in bus stations in Alabama until further notice.

But under Federal court procedure a temporary restraining order which can be issued without notice or hearing, can remain in effect only ten days. Then it can be extended for ten days. After that, it must be lifted or supplanted by a permanent injunction, which requires formal notice and hearing.

Hearing July 17

Judge Johnson had ordered a hearing for today to determine the future course, but it was postponed until July 17 because C. O. R. E. and the other defendants had not been formally notified of the original court complaint that led to the prohibition of sponsored Freedom Rides.

Both the restraining order against C. O. R. E. and the other supporters of Freedom-Rides and an injunction against Montgomery police, the Ku Klux Klan and four individuals grew out of racial violence here and at Birmingham and Anniston, Ala.

The Justice Department asked for the injunction against Birmingham and Montgomery Police, the Klan, two of its leaders and two other individuals. Judge Johnson cleared police in Birmingham of blame for rioting there, but enjoined the others.

During the hearing on the police and the Klan, Calvin Whitesell, an attorney for Montgomery police officials, asked the judge to restrain the Freedom Rider groups in the same legal action. The judge did.

The New York Times

The Justice Department opposed the complaint against C. O. R. E. and the other organizations. It was represented today as a "friend of the court."

Mr. Whitesell, although he asked for the injunction against Freedom Rides, was still technically a defense attorney.

C. O. R. E. Stand

Consequently, the C. O. R. E. attorney, Thurgood Marshall of Washington, argued that there was no one to prosecute the complaint. The Negro lawyer is chief counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, but he did not appear in that role today.

June, 6-13-61

Mr. Marshall asked the judge to dismiss the case against the Freedom Rider groups. The judge withheld a ruling.

Mr. Whitesell was given permission to file a motion for a new restraining order.

Defendants besides C. O. R. E. on the integrationist side were the Southern Christian Leadership Council, the Nashville Student Non-Violence Movement, the Montgomery County Jail Council and five Negro leaders, the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. and the Rev. Wyatt Tee Walker of Atlanta, the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy and the Rev. Solomon S. Seay Sr. of Montgomery and the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth of Birmingham.

The Jail Council was organized by eleven integrationalists who were jailed here during one challenge to bus-station segregation.

Their departure is a bitter blow to citizens pressing for decency and human dignity in the South.

The Rev. Mr. Shuttlesworth, president of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights, has accepted the pastorate of a large church in Cincinnati. He said he plans to retain his legal residence in Birmingham.

The Rev. Mr. Lowery, who has pastored a Methodist Church in Mobile for nine years, has been named area director of promotion and public relations for the Nashville - Birmingham area of the Methodist Church. He will live in Nashville.

Both ministers were defendants in a series of libel suits filed by Alabama's Gov. John Patterson, three Montgomery city commissioners and a former commissioner.

Freedom Riders exercising legal right—Justice Dept.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — The Freedom Riders merely are exercising a Constitutional right, states a brief filed in Federal Court here by the U.S. Justice Department.

The brief was filed by the Department against a ruling by U.S. District Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. forbidding the Congress of Racial Equality and other groups from sponsoring Freedom Rides in Alabama.

In a move which probably set a precedent, the Justice Department asked the court to be relieved from the responsibility of presenting the case against CORE, the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., and other ministers and organizations sponsoring the rides. request of the Justice Department. Later Calvin Whitesell, who represented the Alabama officials charged with allowing violence against the Freedom Riders, announced that Judge Johnson had asked him to present the case against the Freedom Riders.

The effect of this development was to place a Federal Court in the unusual position of having its order defended by the attorney who originally opposed it.

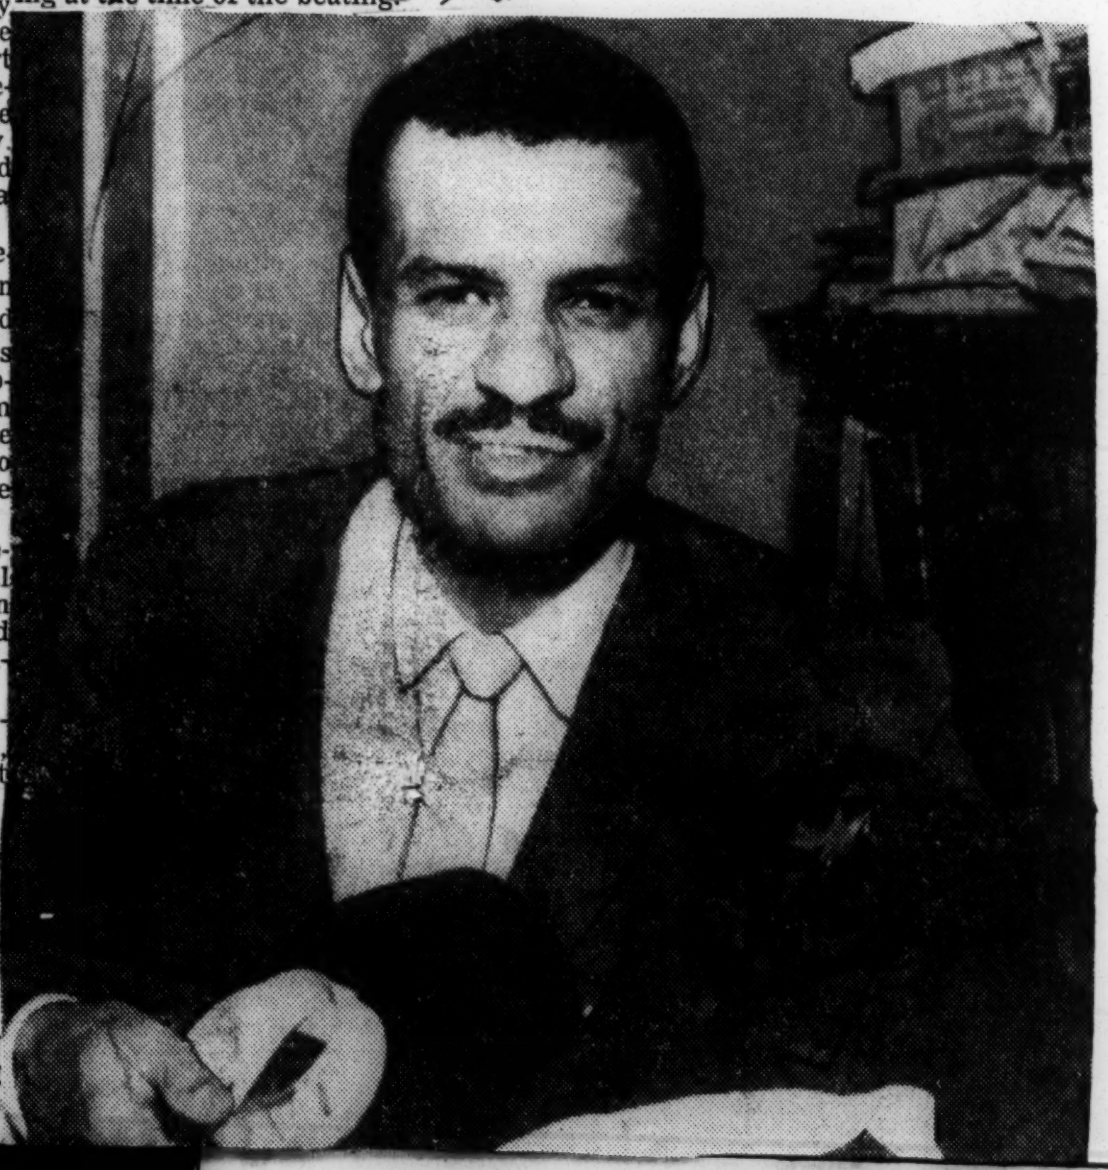
Explaining its brief in support of the Freedom Riders, the Justice Department stated that Judge Johnson overstepped his authority when he ruled that Freedom Riders must not test segregation laws in Alabama.

"....THE COURT lacked the power to restrain these activities," the Justice Department's brief stated.

It included the testing of segregation laws as among the "forms of free speech protected by the First Amendment.

In issuing the injunction, the court took it upon himself to prescribe how travel could be conducted by interstate passengers, the Justice Department argued.

TELLS OF BEATING — The Rev. Cordy T. Vivian, 36 - year - old Freedom Rider arrived in Nashville, Tenn. last week after posting bond in Jackson, Miss. He spoke at mass meeting in a Nashville church, telling of beatings in the Mississippi jail. The Rev. Mr. Vivian holds bloodstained clothes of his profession which he was wearing at the time of the beating.



FREEDOM RIDERS
ATTY. GENERAL KENNEDY ASKED FOR NEGRO DRIVER FOR FREEDOM RIDERS

Says Atty. Gen. Asked For Negro To Drive Riders

The News and Observer

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A bus company official testified Wednesday that Atty. Gen. Robert F. Knenedy urged him vigorously to get a Negro to drive a "Freedom Riders" bus when white drivers refused to move it.

When he replied that no Negro drivers were available, the witness said Kennedy told him, "Well, hell, you can look for one, can't you."

The statement came in U.S. District Court after Birmingham police were cleared of blame for race rioting there, but a similar Justice Department complaint against Montgomery police was left pending.

Called As Witness.

Called as a defense witness, Greyhound Supt. George E. Cruitt of Birmingham said Kennedy telephoned him after regular drivers refused to take the bus from Birmingham to Montgomery. Several scheduled trips were canceled before a Greyhound driver finally made the run May 20.

A screaming white mob attacked the Freedom Riders when the bus got here, and the Justice Department contends police "deliberately failed" to provide protection.

With dismissal of the complaint against Birmingham police and one of three Ku Klux Klan factions, who had been put under a temporary no-violence injunction after the rioting here, U.S. Dist. Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. still is considering possible action against Montgomery police and two other Klan organizations.

The government seeks to compel police to protect Freedom Riders in the future, and to continue the injunction against the Klans.

Cruitt told the court that when he told Kennedy the regular drivers refused to take the bus out of Birmingham for fear of violence after rioting there, the attorney general asked him to get someone else, or drive it himself.

For Montgomery.

Among the first witnesses called by defense attorney Calvin Whitesell in behalf of Montgomery police was a high-ranking Justice Department official, John Seigenthaler, who was among those beaten by the screaming white mob near the Greyhound bus station in Montgomery May 20.

Seigenthaler had come here as a representative of President Kennedy to talk with Gov. John Patterson about protection for the Freedom Riders.

In court, he told of seeing bus riders and bystanders clubbed and beaten. He was slugged and hospitalized when he tried to rescue two white girls who were in the Freedom Riders bus group.

Whitesell asked Seigenthaler about names of bus riders in a notebook in his pocket, and when the judge asked the purpose of that line of questioning, the lawyer replied: "I just wanted to know if the Justice Department is working with CORE (Congress of Racial Equality which sponsored some of the rides) and these riders."

Seigenthaler said he got the names in advance in a long-distance telphone conversation with one of the sponsors, not officially connected with CORE, in Nashville, Tenn.

The Justice Department official also was asked whether he called police when the riot broke out. He said he did not.

On This Week's Racial Violence In Alabama...

DREW PEARSON Says:

The Kennedys Are Involved Ironically

WASHINGTON

THERE are tragic ironies behind the mob violence in Alabama which induced Attorney General Robert Kennedy to take the unusual step of sending 400 armed U.S. marshals there to restore order:

Irony No. 1

It was only two months ago that the same Attorney General Kennedy was standing outside the Senate door calling senators off the floor and asking them to vote for Charles Meriwether, the No. 1 politico of Alabama who used to walk through the Alabama Capitol with his arm around Bob Shelton, imperial wizard of the Ku Klux Klan.

Last week, the same Attorney General asked for an injunction against the Klan to restrain it from more beatings-up of white and Negro bus riders in Alabama.

Senators William Proxmire of Wisconsin, Wayne Morse of Oregon, and Jacob Javits of New York had argued that Meriwether's close co-operation with the Klan was symbolic of Administration support for the wrong forces in Alabama and one of the reasons why he should not be confirmed. Young Kennedy, ignoring this, was the chief backstage wire-puller for Meriwether's nomination as director of the Export-Import Bank.

Irony No. 2

Governor John Patterson, whose inflammatory statements prior to the arrival of the "freedom riders" in Alabama practically invited violence, was himself a victim of mob rule.

His father was killed by the underworld mob of Phoenix City, Ala. It was at his father's funeral that Meriwether and other Alabama politicians decided to groom John Patterson to run for attorney general and, later, governor.

Irony No. 3

When Attorney General Kennedy wanted to restore law and order in Alabama, he tried to get Governor Patterson on the telephone. The Governor was "out."

In the past, telephone connections between "John" and "Bobby" have been frequent, friendly, and easy. During the nominating campaign for John F. Kennedy, Governor Patterson was the first Southern leader to come out for him and was one of the faithfuls who tried to line up Southern delegates. All during the presidential campaign Patterson had no trouble telephoning brother Bobby, and vice versa. This was true also during the Senate fight over Meriwether, who was appointed as a political pay-off to Patterson.

But when Bobby wanted to reach John regarding law and order in Alabama, John was out.

Irony No. 4

Maxwell Field, just outside Montgomery, is the nation's Air University and show place of the Air Force. Yet there have been constant embarrassments to Negro visitors in that area.

Last year two Ethiopian Air Force officers, Maj. Abera Marian and Lt. Johannes Marian, guests of the U.S. Air Force, together with two U.S. Negro officers, Maj. Denzal Harvey and Capt. Philip Jeter, were arrested in downtown Montgomery while parking.

Montgomery police confiscated a hammer from Major Harvey's automobile and hauled all four to the station house, threatening to book them for "carrying a deadly weapon."

Later, the City of Montgomery formally apologized, but this did not undo the damage to relations with a country where the United States has been working to win friends against a lot of Soviet inroads.

Another incident occurred in the Montgomery Trailways bus station when Airman Henry O. S. Mays, a Negro on emergency leave from Eglin field in Florida, stretched out on a bench to sleep. Police Officer Estes prodded him with a nightstick and ordered him to sit up.

The police officer later alleged that Mays cursed him. But the Negro's story, later supported by Air Force investigators, was that the policeman had punched him, struck him with a nightstick, and pulled a gun on him which Mays knocked out of the officer's hand.

Air Force investigators found that the Negro airman had been dragged to jail and beaten severely, his right eye swollen shut, lips puffed, face bruised, with three deep cuts over his eyebrow. They also discovered blood on his uniform, his prison mattress and the cell floor.

Col. C. C. Harris, base commander, met privately with Montgomery City fathers, and reported to Washington that the police chief had expressed his regret. Colonel Harris, instead of demanding security for his personnel, ordered Negro personnel to keep out of Montgomery in the future.

Irony No. 5

Ben Hardeman, assistant City judge of Montgomery, a strong segregationist, has been recommended by Senators Hill and Sparkman of Alabama to be U. S. attorney with the job of enforcing federal law. If appointed he will have to enforce the law as ordered by Attorney General Kennedy who has now sent 400 U. S. marshals to Alabama.

Note—The Birmingham News led Alabama indignation in a series of vigorous editorials against Ku Klux Klan lawlessness and the hands-off attitude of Governor Patterson which encouraged that violence.

Riot-Battered Zwerg Feels Cause Aided

Montgomery Ala.
Jun. 5 28-61

APPLETON, Wis. (AP)—Injured "Freedom Rider" James Zwerg returned home today and said he was convinced the cause of brotherhood had been advanced by the journey into the South.

Zwerg, 21, was beaten and kicked and left unconscious in the street by a mob which attacked the pro-integrationist group as it arrived in Montgomery last Saturday. He was a patient in Montgomery's St. Jude Hospital until Thursday.

The theological student said he did not hate those who beat him "because they represent a small portion of southern residents."

In an interview at his home he said that "for the first time in my life I received flowers" while in the hospital. "They came from two white Montgomery women who picked them from their gardens. They sent a note which said, 'We want you to know that all the people in Montgomery are not like those who met you at the bus station'."

Zwerg left the hospital with his minister, the Rev. Richard Schroeder, assistant pastor of the First Congregational Church of Appleton. They were escorted to the airport by FBI agents.

Zwerg still showed the signs of the beating. His broken left thumb was in a splint. Purple shadows still showed around his eyes and there were the scars of lacerations near his right eye, and the eye remained inflamed.

Zwerg said he had no plans except to make up the examinations he missed at Fisk University at Nashville, Tenn., and to take up his summer job with the Appleton street department.

Protest Riders Labeled Tools Of Communism

From The Commercial Appeal
Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, June 8.—Senator Olin D. Johnston (D., S. C.) charged Thursday that so-called "Freedom Riders" are doing the work of the communists.

The South Carolinian called on the nation's press to "quit making an international incident out of every toe that somebody stubs below the Mason-Dixon Line."

He told the Senate he supports former President Harry S. Truman's contention that "Freedom Riders" are "agitators and pests."

He also declared, "There is a communist conspiracy behind the riders' movement."

Senator Johnston said intelligence reports from Communist East Germany have disclosed that communists have opened a school there to teach African Negroes and American Negro communists how to stir up racial trouble in the United States.

He said Gerhard Eisler, former No. 1 American communist and now one of Communist East Germany's leading propagandists, is in charge of the training program.

Agitators are to infiltrate the United States to foment strife to embarrass, harass and humiliate this country, Senator Johnston said.

"I think it is obvious," he declared, "that those participating in the "Freedom Riders'" movement, whether they like it or not, are doing the work which the East German communist race agitation school is training people to do."

Disregard Cooling Off Plea, ADA Officer Advises Freedom Riders

Washington D.C.

The vice chairman of the Americans for Democratic Action, Joseph L. Rauh Jr., urged "Freedom Riders" yesterday to disregard the Federal Government's request that they cool off. June 5-28-61

Rauh said: "Freedom Riders are exercising their constitutional rights and they are entitled to protection from the Federal Government. P-A4

"If 600 marshals are not enough, 6000 or 60,000 will be," he said. Rauh, also vice chairman of the District Democratic Central Committee, spoke to the annual awards luncheon of the Capital Press Club at the Continental Hotel.

"Segregation," he said after receiving the group's Civil Rights award, "is communisms's ally . . . Simply put, we integrate or perish." The Freedom Riders have traveled by interstate buses to test segregation laws in Alabama and Mississippi.

Bill D. Moyers, at 27, one of the youngest New Frontier executive appointees, filled in as main speaker for Peace Corps Director R. Sargent Shriver Jr., who is out of the city.

Moyers, associate public affairs director of the Corps, said he hoped Peace Corps members would have the same spirit as the Freedom Riders, but he told reporters later the Corps neither encourages nor discourages the Riders.

The awards luncheon followed a forum on Africa and its challenge to mass media conducted by a newspaper editor, a magazine editor, a correspondent and information experts.

Winners of the award, plaques in addition to Rauh, were:

Bus Firm Fires 3 In Ala. Incident

CHICAGO (UPI)—The Greyhound Corporation Thursday said it fired three employees at its Montgomery, Ala., terminal "within five hours" after learning they had refused to serve food to Negro freedom riders.

C. D. Cherry, vice president of the corporation, said the firings were issued as part of "a standing policy of operating under the established laws of the land."

"These releases were ordered under a re-statement of the policy Jan. 11, 1961," Cherry said. "The new directive was issued to update company policy in the matter of non-discrimination in Greyhound facilities" in line with a 1960 United States Supreme Court ruling on integration of bus terminal restaurants.

Cherry said the incidents came to the company's attention after J, L. LeFlore ,a Negro leader, said segregatioon ended in the Montgomery terminal only five days prior to the outbreak of racial violence there last weekend.

LeFlore reported to the company that he and another Negro were refused service April 30. He said they complained to the Interstate Commerce Commission, returned to the terminal May 15 and were served.

The News and Courier Charleston, S.C.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. James O. Eastland, D-Miss., told the Senate Thursday the "Freedom Riders" visit to Mississippi marks the first time the people of his state "came face to face with the world Communist conspiracy."

He said he salutes the people of his state and Mississippi officials for their reaction to the visit from racially mixed bus riders demonstrating against segregation in buses and at bus stations.

Eastland charged that the freedom ride was planned in Europe, "masterminded" by an organization known as the Congress of Racial Equality, and designed to embarrass President Kennedy on the eve of his talks with Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev.

P-1

"In my judgment," Eastland said, "one of its (CORE's) objectives is to manufacture incidents and thus raise money, from dupes, for the international Communist conspiracy."

"The freedom ride. . .was the master effort of this organization he said.

Eastland said newspapers reported that two riders on the bus were beaten at Rock Hill, S.C., and two were arrested on trespass charges at Winnsboro, S.C., a day later.

Jus 5-26-61

He said one of those beaten was Albert Bigelow, 55, who "ran afoul the law" by attempting to sail a ketch into a Pacific Ocean testing area in 1958 to protest the testing of a nuclear bomb.

Eastland said James Peck, 47, of New York City, one of those arrested, also had been in the ketch with Bigelow. He said Peck has a record of several arrests in connection with racial demonstrations and served a prison term for refusing as a conscientious objector to serve as a noncombatant in World War II.

"The day has come when the Communist movement must be stopped," Eastland said, "and this is part of the Communist movement inside the United States."

HST Tells 'Rider' To Stay Home

Birmingham News

NEW YORK, June 5 (UPI)—Former President Harry S. Truman told a white "Freedom Rider" today to "stay up North" and let the South work out its own problems.

The rider, James Peck, of New York, walked with Truman during his early morning stroll. He was among a group of integrationists beaten in Birmingham by a white mob May 14.

Tues 6-6-61

Peck questioned the former President during his usual morning walk on statements he made last Friday characterizing the "Freedom Riders" as agitators.

"I'll stick to those statements," Truman said. "Integration can't be done in the manner you're doing it. You should stay up North."

Truman said the United States is making good progress toward integration but is not moving fast enough. He suggested the problem could be solved "with common sense and goodwill" if "the leaders" would get together and decide to solve it.

Truman said a major step toward integration would be the removal of racial signs from Southern waiting rooms.

Peck, still bearing the scars of his beating, said he would join another "Freedom Ride" if he is needed. This was his first personal encounter with Truman, but he came close in 1948 when he chained himself to a White House gate to protest the draft laws.

'Stay Home' HST Advises CORE Groups

NEW YORK (AP) — Former President Harry S. Truman asserted Friday the "Freedom Riders" are agitators who should stay home instead of "stirring up trouble in the South."

Fri 6-3-61

The native Missourian's remark drew a prompt reply from James R. Robinson, membership director of the Congress of Racial Equality, sponsor of the Freedom Riders, who said: "I don't think Mr. Truman's remarks will make any difference to the Freedom Riders or others who are supporting this movement."

Montgomery Ala.

Truman's comment was made during his regular morning walk from the Hotel Carlyle. He and Mrs. Truman are visiting their daughter and son-in-law, the Clifton Daniels, and grandchildren.

The former Democratic president said persons interested in the welfare of Negroes in the South should advance the cause of civil rights in an "orderly and legal manner."

He said "good will and common sense" would solve strained relations in the Southern states.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. James O. Eastland, D-Miss., told the Senate Thursday the Freedom Riders visit to Mississippi marks the first time the people of his state "came face to face with the world Communist conspiracy."

Fri 5-26-61

He said he salutes the people of his state and Mississippi officials for their reaction to the visit from racially mixed bus riders demonstrating against segregation in buses and at bus stations.

P-2 A

Eastland charged that the Freedom Ride was planned in Europe, "masterminded" by an organization known as the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE), and designed to embarras President Kennedy on the eve of his talks with Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev.

"I salute the people of Mississippi for their courage, their intelligence and their patience," Eastland said. "This is the first time they have come face to face with the world Communist conspiracy. They have acted well."

Eastland charged that persons with long records of association with Communist fronts are among those in the top echelons of CORE.

He pictured CORE as "The war department of those who sell hate, collect donations and sow the seeds of discord in this country."

"Since its inception," he alleged, "its creed has been one of lawlessness and its tactics have followed the pattern set by Communist agitators the world over."

ALB.NY, N.Y. (AP) — Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller said Monday Negroes had been patient and considerate in seeking equal treatment and "this nation could have had a much rougher time."

The Republican governor declared that Negro "Freedom Riders," persons challenging segregation in Southern bus stations, "are asking in a quiet way for their rights as American citizens."

Montgomery Ala.

Rockefeller described the Rev. Martin Luther King, leader of the Negro Southern movement against segregation, as "a great American."

The Rev. Mr. King will be a dinner guest of Rockefeller's Friday night at the governor's temporary, official residence in a downtown hotel.

Rockefeller said in regard to the "Freedom Riders" and the civil rights question:

"I think we can feel very grateful for the fact that some of the minority groups in this country have been as patient as they have and as considerate in their approach to these questions. One would visualize that this country could have a very much rougher time."

Eastland Cites Records Of Members Of CORE —Stennis Speaks

Memphis, Tenn.

From The Commercial Appeal Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, May 25. — Senator James O. Eastland (D., Miss.) charged Thursday that the organization promoting "Freedom Ride" demonstrations in the South "follows the pattern set by communist agitators the world over."

And he said some of the members of the advisory committee of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) have records of associations with communist front organizations.

Both Senators Speak

Senator Eastland and Senator John Stennis (D., Miss.) in separate Senate speeches commended Mississippi officials and citizens for the way "Freedom Riders" were handled in their state.

Jus 5-26-61

A Senate resolution by Senator Jacob K. Javits (R., N. Y.) to place Congress on record as approving the use of Federal marshals in Alabama was debated briefly and laid aside.

Senator Stennis said Southerners attempting to cope with outside agitators should be commended rather than censured.

Senator Eastland, chairman of the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee, presented a formidable collection of information about the associations of persons connected with CORE.

He charged that James Peck, 47, of New York City, a "Freedom Rider" injured in Birmingham, was a conscientious objector who spent three years in Federal prison in Danbury, Conn., during World War II when he refused all Federal service. And he said Peck has been arrested in numerous incidents and demonstrations since then, many for causes supported by communists.

He said A. J. Muste, a member of the CORE advisory committee, was described by FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover in 1957 as a man "who has long fronted for the communists."

Activities Cited

"Muste has been connected or associated with no less than 32 communist-front organizations or activities," Senator Eastland said.

The Mississippian also presented the records of others connected with CORE.

He charged the agitations in Alabama and Mississippi were deliberately devised as a prelude to President Kennedy's forthcoming meeting with Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev with the objective "to embarrass the President and the United States in the handling of international affairs."

Byrd Deplores Mob Action

The Washington Post

RICHMOND, May 23 (AP) Sen. Harry F. Byrd (D.-Va.) said today he deplores the racial violence in Alabama but added "It must be realized that it was deliberately provoked by a mixed group of outsiders."

Washington, D.C.

The Senator said that although the "purpose of the Alabama invasion was to create trouble and provocation was great, I feel that the violence was not justified and was most unfortunate."

Federal marshals were sent to Montgomery and the National Guard was called out to deal with riots which resulted after "Freedom Riders" testin gsegregation arrived in the city.

Byrd said Virginia "has been the target for the NAACP and the Warren Court (U. S. Supreme Court) and the executive branch of the Federal Government since the 1954 (public school) integration decision.

"If there should be any such deliberate efforts to provoke citizens of Virginia to violence for propaganda purposes, I earnestly hope that Virginia's record against violence will prevail and be maintained.

"As has been demonstrated many times in the past seven years, the Virginia people of both races have shown their desire to avoid violence in seeking a solution."

Byrd, Virginia's senior Senator and leader of the State's dominant Democratic organization, said that throughout his "public career I have urged against violence in every form.

Riders Irritate Old Wounds, Judge Warns

By REG MURPHY
Constitution Political Editor

JEKYLL ISLAND—The president of the Georgia Bar Association warned here Thursday that troubles now sweeping the South "may well open old wounds" when the nation needs to concentrate on its future.

Judge Homer C. Eberhardt of the Georgia Court of Appeals never referred specifically to the "Freedom Riders" in his speech to several hundred lawyers, but they obviously were his subject.

And a colleague on the Court of Appeals. Judge John Sammons Bell, said, "to preclude tyrannical government by the few, it is an absolute necessity that justice and politics be separated."

Both Eberhardt and Bell were featured speakers at the second session of the 78th annual meeting of the bar association here.

The judge said that the courts are the proper place for handling issues such as civil rights, but he pointed out some seeming discrepancies in the decisions which have been issued recently by the U.S. Supreme Court.

"Surely we could with profit devote more effort toward matters upon which our national security rests, and concentrate a little less upon irritations that may well open old wounds," Eberhardt concluded.

Warning of the perils of mixing politics and the courts, Judge Bell said: "The grave responsibility is thrust upon lawyers and judges to see to it that politics and partisanship do not permeate the judiciary nor its adjunct enforcement agencies, for where this diffusion occurs there exists a totalitarian state."

Bell said the 1961 Legislature's action adding two judgeships to the Court of Appeals "will allow us more time to be devoted to the research so necessary to the proper deciding of cases."

The association will wind up its convention Friday by electing new officers and hearing a concluding address by Whitney North Seymour of New York, president of the American Bar Association.

Memphis, Tenn.

From The Commercial Appeal
Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, May 23.—Senator Estes Kefauver (D., Tenn.) Tuesday called the racial violence in Alabama "reprehensible" and charged local officials "have been negligent of their obligations to control brutality."

"I pray that those who have inflicted this damage, that those who have condoned it, and that those who have turned their backs upon it, will seek forgiveness in their souls," the Tennessean said.

Senator Strom Thurmond (D., Ala.) said, however, that "this is not a one-sided issue."

"The self-styled 'freedom riders' set out deliberately to create trouble at all costs," the South Carolinian said. "Their avowed purpose, publicly expressed, was not to work toward the creation of better race relations, but to incite incidents. They . . . were encouraged by both a large part of the press and the Administration. In fact . . . consulted with the Interstate Commerce Commission and the attorney general before they began the agitation trip."

Capehart Lashes At 'Riders' For Breaking Southern Laws

The Montgomery Advertiser

Montgomery Ala.

WASHINGTON (AP) Sen. Homer E. Capehart, R-Ind., said Sunday he's opposed to southern segregation laws but disapproves also of "Freedom Riders" defiance of such laws.

P.-7A

Capehart accused the justice department of encouraging the 'freedom riders' testing of southern bus terminal segregation laws. And he said U.S. marshals shouldn't have been sent into Alabama to deal with rioting which resulted from the breaking of state segregation statutes.

RADIO TALK Mon. 5-29

Appearing on a taped radio interview program (radio news conference — non-network), the Indiana Republican implied John Seigenthaler, a justice department aide, had no business being at a Montgomery bus station on May 20 when rioting broke out. Seigenthaler was knocked unconscious while trying to help a white girl escape from a mob.

The Justice Department has said Seigenthaler was in Montgomery to try to prevent violence and this was suggested to Capehart but he replied:

"Well, I gave you my opinion and observation on it and that's my opinion and observation.

VOICES FEELINGS

"I'm opposed to permitting any group of people to organize for the purpose of violating the laws. I'm opposed to those (sic) kind of laws, as I told you, but I'm likewise opposed to organizing for the purpose of violating laws.

"That's the trouble with the world today — allover the world — you got nations that if they don't like their government, they throw them out with force, just as they did in Korea, just as they did in Cuba, just as they are doing around the world.

"Now, we're adopting this same technique here. We're adopting the technique of taking the law into our hands and organizing to do things, to create trouble and I'm opposed to it. I think it's wrong."

Arkansas Solons Asked to Back State Envoys

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP)—Gov. Orval E. Faubus asked the Arkansas congressional delegation by telegram Monday to join with Alabama congressmen in demanding that extra federal marshals be withdrawn from racially torn Montgomery, Ala.

In another telegram, Faubus criticized Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy for sending the marshals to Alabama. He said Kennedy aides might in effect have encouraged the situation. In a third telegram Faubus offered sympathy to Alabama Gov. John Patterson.

Faubus said the Montgomery situation was "brought about by outside agitators and provocators as was the case in Little Rock in 1957."

That was the year Faubus used National Guardsmen to prevent Negro children from attending High School here, and former President Dwight D. Eisenhower later used troops to carry out the court-ordered integration.

Kennedy sent federal marshals to Montgomery after white rioters beat members of a traveling biracial group called the "Freedom riders." Patterson countered by putting the Montgomery area under martial law.

Faubus' telegrams were inspired, he said, by a telegram he received Sunday from Kennedy. He declined to release the next of the Kennedy telegram but said it appeared to be "a sort of explanation" for the attorney general's action in Alabama.

The Montgomery Story—An Echo Returns

Thusly, the old Confederate capital, Montgomery, Alabama, is again the sounding board, the intermittent echo of a past, although buried, that never died.

In the shadow of the seat of government where Jefferson Davis took the oath as the first and only president of the ill-fated Confederacy, history is writing another chapter in the annals of race relations after nearly a hundred years of the struggle toward freedom.

When one reads from a press release stating that President Kennedy's personal representative suffered a mild concussion Saturday when he was attempting to protect a white girl who was being attacked, it shows that not even the representative of the highest official functionary in the land is immune from insult and mob violence.

So on goes the Montgomery story.

It is a sorry spectacle for the world at this time to find that in our own country among ourselves, that we not only have an unfriendly attitude toward our fellow citizens, but would defy the cardinal laws of our land.

Surely the Montgomery story has not netted anything worthy of pride in the recent history enacted from time to time ever since Mrs. Parks' case precipitated the struggle toward outlawing separate seating for the races in public buses.

It also is to be regretted that the governor of the state found himself with no other option than declaring martial law. But failure to defend law and order at the outset, made the need for National Guardsmen inevitable.

The Montgomery story continues; as the nation reads, the world also reads.

There Must Be Better Means

Into the South last week came an interracial group which called itself the "Freedom Riders." Their avowed purpose was to test the segregation practices in the cities along the route to New Orleans, leaving Washington, D.C. and traveling by bus. The riders represented CORE (Congress on Racial Equality).

It is history now what happened as a result of this jim crow-testing episode. Not only the people of Birmingham and Alabama know but the whole world knows what happened as a result of this planned test.

The persons responsible for the violence against the bus passengers were wrong and should be dealt with by local police and the courts.

The "Freedom Riders" knew in advance that something was likely to happen to them, and apparently, they were ready to accept any eventuality. But even though they were willing to take the risk of their course, their act could have triggered a reaction that could have caused many innocent persons to suffer physical injury.

The South is tense with emotional excitement over the race question. The rapidly falling barriers of segregation and discrimination, the more or less sudden changing of old habit patterns of life and co-existence between the races, has kept feelings on edge. Violence and personal injury to innocent persons who do not care to be involved in the conflict, can result from hasty and unwise actions on the part of a few who may take the extreme approaches to solving complex problems.

Calm, quiet, intelligent approaches are the best ways to solve complex problems of this sort. Fanatical emotionalism on the one part, only begets fanatical extremism as a reaction.

The courts have decided the issue of interstate transportation and use of facilities. Dramatizing the lag between the legal right and the social fact, it seems to us, only gives the Communist adversary additional propaganda weapons to use in furthering their cause of capturing the undecided areas of the world. There must be better means than this.

Jue, 7-21-61

Kennedy, who drafted the proposed rules, prodded the Interstate Commerce Commission to issue them. But Gallion called the proposals an unwarranted intrusion on the rights of Alabama citizens.

Atlanta, Ga.

The opposing views were submitted to the ICC just before the deadline for comments. The commission has set Aug. 15 for a hearing on the proposals.

Kennedy submitted to the ICC a survey of 294 bus terminals in 17 states. It said racial segregation existed in 97 terminals in 12 states.

Gallion told the ICC Kennedy's proposals—submitted in the wake of the freedom riders Southern tour—are part of an effort to "encroach upon the personal and property rights of the citizens" of Alabama.

Kennedy said the survey—conducted by the FBI — disclosed segregation in 89 bus terminals in Florida, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas and Tennessee. Nine terminals with segregated facilities were found in Kentucky, Virginia, North and South Carolina, he said. No open discrimination was found in Delaware, Maryland, Missouri, Oklahoma or West Virginia.

Gallion said the proposals "would serve to make an informer, a law enforcement officer and a judicial officer of each and every person, firm or corporation engaged in the business of rendering interstate transportation service."

SELMA (Special) — Guest speaker at the Thursday meeting of the Selma Exchange Club was Alabama Attorney General MacDonald Gallion, who discussed recent "Freedom Riders" activities in the state.

Dis. 7-7-61

He also gave a behind - the-scenes report on his recent appearance on the Dave Garroway "Today" television program.

More Gallion Riders

Following a brief background of "Rider" events, Gallion said "another type of Riders is getting started, which is costing the taxpayer a bit of money.

"This is called the 'VIP' (Very Important People)."

Continuing, Gallion said "On June 27 a C-131 plush, expensive-to-operate jet, furnished by President Kennedy, arrived at Maxwell Air Force Base. The plane was logged as being on official business and carrying Frank Reeves, Negro, White House aide to the president.

"Reeves was met by dignitaries of the base. He was escorted to Tuskegee to attend the fourth anniversary celebration of the Tuskegee Civic Association."

As it turned out, Gallion added, "This meeting was used for nothing but rabble rousing!"

Gallion pointed out, in a forceful tone, "This man Reed has not paid his income tax in four years . . . his excuse being 'I can't pay it'. Could you or I say that and get by with it?"

In reference to his recent appearance on the Dave Garroway show, Gallion said that he almost didn't get on it. He said that the attitude up there (New York) towards a Southerner presenting his version of the activities going on in the South are strictly monitored.

Atlanta Daily World

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (UPI)—The U.S. Justice Department Monday told a federal judge if he banned the "freedom ride" movement in Alabama he would be denying the constitutional [illegible] of individuals. Wed. 7-19-61

City law enforcement officers argued, however, that "continued agitation" by "freedom riders" hindered interstate passenger travel in the state and set the stage for breaches of the peace.

Th arguments came in a hearing before U.S. Middle District Judge Frank M. Johnson, Jr., to determine whether he should enjoin the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) and othe rpro-integration groups from continuing their "publicity campaign" in Alabama and the South.

After more than two hours of testimony, Johnson ordered briefs filed by Aug. 22.

Montgomery officials requested the injunction after Johnson let die a preliminary restraining order against the sponsors of the "freedom ride" movement. The preliminary restraining order, which under federal procedure is only good for 10 days unless renewed, prohibited CORE and its allies from sponsoring, financing or encourging the segregation-testing bus rides.

Johnson also slapped an injunction against several chapters of the Ku Klux Klan, Montgomery law enforcement officers and various individuals following racial violence at Anniston, Birmingham and the Greyhound bus station here during the week May 14-20.

Couple Fined After Local Bus Incident

By ARTHUR OSGOODE

A couple arrested during a nob disturbance at the Greyound bus station here were found guilty of disorderly conduct by a Circuit Court jury Tuesday.

The jury deliberated for approximately two hours before returning the verdict. The Gaches announcel through their attorney, Clifford Durr, that they do not plan to appeal.

Earlier, they heard Durr compare their actions during bus station rioting with that of the Biblical Good Samaritan, and City Prosecutor Dave Crosland say they provoked additional violence after police had rioters under control.

CROSLAND CHARGES

Durr observed that they had attracted the hostility of a mob because they protested the beating of a Negro who was lying unconscious in the street. Such a sight, he said, "if you are a human being, it will disturb you."

As to charges that the couple used profanity, Durr pointed to their denial that they did. He also told the jurors that if people were arrested for using swear words "our jails would be full."

Crosland said police at the scene "did everything they could do" to protect the couple from the hostile crowd. He also commented that the "Freedom Riders" came to Montgomery "to create a breach of the peace."

Crosland said that the Gaches, in refusing a police escort from the scene, were likely to cause additional outbreaks on the part of the crowd.

During the trial, which began Monday, testimony conflicted on whether Mr. and Mrs. Gach had used profanity.

Police officers testified that Mrs. Gach had cursed them because she said they failed to act to protect victims of the mob.

Both the defendants denied cursing at any time.

The Gaches and police witnesses agreed that they were pushed by a hostile crowd.

The trial was an appeal of a Recorder's Court conviction in which Gach was fined $100 for failing to obey an officer and both he and his wife fined $100 for disorderly conduct.

CHARGE DISMISSED

The charge of failing to obey an officer was dismissed after Judge Eugene Carter sustained a demurred by Durr that the ordinance setting out the offense was an amendment incorrectly added to an earlier statute.

Durr withdrew a motion for a mistrial earlier, after several jurors backed up a fellow juror when he said he had expressed no opinion on the case before hearing the testimony.

Durr said that two courtroom spectators had heard Frank Doby say that there was no use in listening to the testimony because he had already made up his mind. Doby and several other jurors said that a remark he made had been misinterpreted while he was joking with a Negro attendant.

Doby said he told the attendant that: "I've already made up my mind about you."

Durr in withdrawing his motion apologized to the jurors for the "misunderstanding."

Gach is a student at Auburn University. Mrs. Gach has recently taken a job in Dallas, Texas.

Frederick A. Gach and his wife, Anna, testified yesterday in State Court in their appeal of a City Court conviction on charges of disorderly conduct and refusing to obey an officer.

Both denied using profanity. Police officers testified that they cursed policemen.

MRS. GACH, who says she attended both high school and college with Gov. Patterson, testified that she heard of the trouble at the bus station and went to see about her husband. She said that after joining him, both were attracted by a crowd beating a fallen man.

She said she called out to the crowd to "Cut it out," and said she then asked two policemen standing nearby for help and "they said to mind my own business, and if I didn't like what was going on, I didn't have to look at it." Gach said he also asked a policeman to intervene.

Both said they were threatened by the crowd and were afraid to walk along the crowded street. Gach said he and his wife later refused an escort of one policeman, who he said was a man that he and his wife had vainly urged to stop the earlier beating.

Police Lt. R. D. Moody, who offered them the escort, quoted Gach as saying, "I'm going to stand here in the middle of the street, and I'm not going anywhere."

ANNISTON, Sept. 3 (UPI)—Kenneth Adams, one of nine area white men indicted by a Federal Grand Jury for burning a "Freedom Rider" bus, said yesterday he will sue the "integrationist FBI for false imprisonment and violation of constitutional right."

Adams, 41, of Anniston, who was released from the Calhoun County Jail yesterday after being held since Thursday, said the indictment was "part of a plot by the FBI to frame nine law-abiding white citizens, including myself."

Adams said he was held in jail "because I refused to allow the FBI to humiliate me with fingerprinting and photographing. The FBI kept me under false imprisonment from Thursday morning until yesterday afternoon."

Adams was the last of the nine men to be released under $5000 bond on charges of burning the bus and forcing the 17 passengers in the interracial group to disembark in a "reckless disregard for lives."

The indictments were returned in Birmingham Thursday, but kept secret until announced by the Justice Dept. in Washington Friday.

The men were charged with conspiring from May 5 to damage and set fire to the bus and with carrying out the conspiracy by breaking windows and tossing an explosive inside shortly after it left Anniston.

A group of howling whites, wielding clubs and knives, met the bus when it arrived at Anniston from Atlanta. The mob stoned the bus and then followed it out of town, tossing the incendiary bomb through an open window.

Several passengers were treated for burns and smoke inhalation and the $30,000 bus was destroyed.

Adams said by staying in jail, "I have proved the FBI doesn't have the right to force any citizen to suffer the indignity of being photographed and fingerprinted."

He added, "When this case goes to trial, we will positively prove the "Freedom Riders" set the bus on fire from the inside." However, he refused to say how the nine white men could prove this charge.

'Rider' suit under study by Johnson

The Birmingham News p. 35

Birmingham Ala. 9-7-61

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Sept. 7—(AP)—After a day and a half of testimony a federal judge has taken under consideration a "freedom rider" suit, but there was no indication when a ruling might come.

Testimony by Asst. Fire Chief R. C. Talley yesterday closed a hearing before U. S. Dist. Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. on a suit attacking Alabama's breach of the peace laws and seeking to forbid enforced segregation in buses and bus stations.

"Dangerous electrical conditions and grease accumulations" caused the closing of the Greyhound and Trailways depots May 15, Talley testified. He said the depots were reopened several days later after the conditions were corrected.

Adj. Gen. Henry V. Graham said the 11 freedom riders," among those who filed the suit, were arrested because he considered their effort a "breach of contract."

HE SAID he "had become exasperated with the situation" and "was tired of those people flaunting their sense of Christian ethics in my face."

Graham said the action by the 11 who tried to get service at a Trailways bus station customarily patronized by white persons only was "immoral and was definitely calculated to provoke a breach of the peace."

Capt. Roland Sevigny of Montgomery, Graham's liasion officer with the sheriff's office during martial rule last May, said the situation was "definitely explosive. The only reason we arrested the "freedom riders" that day was to prevent bloodshed."

Charleston S.C.

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP) — Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy said Monday night he did not encourage "riders" on a journey that was punctuated by riots in Montgomery.

On the contrary, he said, his representatives tried during the week preceding the Montgomery incident to persuade "riders" not to make such trips.

Kennedy defended the administration's actions in sending federal marshals to Alabama in an interview with Ray Moore, news director for WSB-TV. The interview, taped in Washington, was broadcast Monday night.

Kennedy said the first he knew of the riders taking rides was after receiving information of a bus burning in Anniston, Ala. President Kennedy, he said, tried to get in touch with Gov. John Patterson of Alabama "to get assurance that they would handle this themselves so that the federal government could stay out of it."

The attorney general said Patterson wouldn't talk to the President. Later Patterson sent word he wanted to talk to a representative of the President, and John Siegenthaler of the attorney general's staff went to Montgomery.

Kennedy said Patterson assured Siegenthaler the state had the means, the will and the ability to protect the riders. The Alabama governor, he added, gave assurance that people traveling across the state would not be molested.

"Twelve hours later," Kennedy said, "Mr. Siegenthaler was lying on the ground in Montgomery unconscious, having been beaten by this mob . . .

"All of these things are just a small minority of the population giving the city, the area and the whole state a bad name."

Moore called attention to the request of Rep. John Bell Williams of Mississippi that federal troops be sent to Chicago to take care of it's race trouble.

Kennedy replied that Chicago police "are not standing back and waiting for people to be beaten up for 10 or 12 minutes and then stepping in. If they know there is going to be disorder, they come in and try to deal with the trouble. That's all we're asking.

"If there had been a concentrated effort on the part of the authoritiess in Alabama, we would not have had to send marshals in there . . . I have no apologies to make."

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 24 — An ironic difference in the receptions of "freedom rider" pilgrims at Montgomery and Jackson, Miss., went unremarked.

It is Montgomery that splashed the world's front pages with its mob violence response to the first riders, whereas in Jackson not a single rider has a scratch or bump to show for his Mississippi invasion.

YET IT NOW is in Jackson that riders are routinely sent to jail whereas in Montgomery they are protected during their stay and sent on their way without any interference whatever.

The irony was thickened last week as the city's attorney denied before a federal judge, Frank Johnson Jr., that the city was in any way trying to maintain segregation at the bus stations. The Alabama Public Service Commission demurred likewise.

The contention was made in a suit by the Negro preacher, Rev. Ralph Abernathy, that the previous arrest of himself and associates on a charge of breach of peace was in fact an effort at imposing segregation.

AS THIS SUIT was being heard, nine "freedom riders" from Atlanta arrived as advertised at the Greyhound Bus station. The city had some 60 patrolmen and plainclothesmen on duty to insure order.

About 300 whites stood in a drenching rain to look on in curiosity, but there was no disorder. What attracted them was the spectacle of the station and area being cleared by police due to a bomb threat.

The bomb threats were phoned to the station shortly before the riders arrived in late afternoon (three white girls, one white man, four Negro men, one Negro woman).

All persons were ordered from the station while the fire department searched for the bombs, of which actually there were none.

The riders spent the night in the Rev. Abernathy's home and were off to Jackson the next morning.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The federal government — acting on President Kennedy's orders Saturday dispatched from 350 to 400 armed and steel helmeted U. S. Marshals and other law officers to Alabama to Quell the racial violence that has rocked the state.

The sending of the federal enforcement agents climaxed a series of moves announced by Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy, the president's brother. The action came after a mob at Montgomery, Ala., beat members of a mixed group of "Freedom Riders."

The chief executive directed the attorney general to take all necessary steps to deal with the strife.

A Justice department spokesman estimated that most of the marshals and deputies had taken up stations in Montgomery by Sunday noon. They will carry sidearms, riot clubs and wear steel helmets and identifying arm bands.

SAFETY GUARNTEE

Their assignment is to guarantee "safe passage" in interstate travel. Violence has flared on two successive weekends in Alabama over the "Freedom Riders" who are testing bus segregation practices in the south.

Earlier, a mob of white men and shrieking women attacked and mercilessly beat members of a mixed group of "Freedom Riders".

Even before the federal officers were ordered in, President Kennedy had a personal representative on the scene trying to ease the building racial tension.

The representative, John Seigenthaler, 32, was among those beaten by mob.

DEFENDS GIRL

Seigenthaler was not accompanying the Freedom Riders, but he incurred the mob's anger when he tried to save a white girl the angry whites were chasing. Before he could get her into his car he was struck from behind and left dying unconscious on the pavement.

James Zwerg, the only white youth among the Freedom Riders, was the most seriously beaten.

"Kill the nigger-loving - - - -," several women screamed when the Appleton, Wis., youth stepped from the bus.

Alabama Gov. John Patterson said, "I have no sympathy for law violators whether they be agitators from outside Alabama or inside-the-state troublemakers."

Patterson issued his statement about an hour after police, armed with tear-gas bombs, broke up a crowd of angry white toughs who beat and stomped Negroes and whites at the Greyhound Bus terminal.

U.S. Accuses 4 Officials Of Not Protecting 'Riders' In Two Alabama Cities

Asks Court To Prevent 'Interfering'

The Courier-Journal Louisville, Ky.

By SUSAN WAGNER
United Press Writer

Washington, May 24.—The Federal Government moved Wednesday against four officials in Birmingham and Montgomery on the ground that they failed to provide protection for the "freedom riders" when they first arrived in Alabama. P-1

The Justice Department asked United States District Court at Montgomery to enjoin the officials from "interfering with the peaceful movement of interstate travel."

The action would make the four men defendants in a Government complaint already outstanding against the Ku Klux Klan and certain States-rights groups. Thurs. 5-25-61

Officials Are Named

The Birmingham officials are Police Commissioner Eugene T. Connor and Police Chief Jamie Moore. The Montgomery officials are Lester B. Sullivan, commissioner of public works, and Police Chief Goodwin J. Ruppenthal.

The Department's announcement came as Attorney General Kennedy moved to discourage all unnecessary travel in Mississippi and Alabama until the "confusion and danger" growing out of violence against the "freedom riders" has passed.

He issued a statement which also appealed for a "cooling-off period" in the two states. Besides "freedom riders," he said, there are in the area certain "curiosity seekers, publicity seekers, and others who are seeking to serve their own causes."

At Montgomery, Negro integration leaders said they would pay no attention to Kennedy's appeal for a cooling-off period.

Issues Two Statements

Kennedy issued two statements during the day. In the first, he expressed confidence that local authorities now would control any outburst against the "freedom riders." In the second, he said the officials were meetin gthe test, but their job was becoming increasingly difficult.

The Justice Department complaint against the Birmingham officials charged that the police deliberately withheld protection when a mob attacked the "freedom riders" in that city May 14. They also were accused of refusing to prevent assaults on representatives of the Council on Racial Equality.

The Department charged that the Montgomery officials had been informed of the expected arrival of the "freedom riders" in their city last Saturday and still failed ot protect them. Thurs. 5-25-61

Seeks To Add Ringleader

The federal complaint also sought to add Claude Henley as a defendant in the case. Henley was described as a ringleader of the mob that attacked the riders in Montgomery.

Saturday, Federal District Judge Frank M. Johnson issued a temporary orderr estraining the Ku Klux Klan and others from interfering with interstate travel by bus. P- 30-51

Attorney General Kennedy said there was an increasing possibility that innocent travelers—those forced to use buses on business or on other mandatory trips—might be injured.

"A mob asks no questions," he said.

Asks Delay Of Trips

"It would be wise for those traveling through these two states to delay their trips until the present state of confusion and danger has passed and an atmosphere of reason and normalcy has been restored."

In his first statement of the day, the Attorney General appealed to all persons in Alabama and elsewhere to "use restraint and to weigh their actions carefully." He said this was especially important in view of President Kennedy's forthcoming meeting with Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev.

"Whatever we do in the United States at this time which brings or causes discredit to our country can be harmful to his mission," the Attorney General said.

4 Charged In Anniston

Four persons have already been charged in Anniston, Ala., with setting fire to a bus carrying the "freedom riders" May 14.

Kennedy said he had been in frequent contact with both Alabama and Mississippi officials and in turn was relaying the latest information to his brother, the President.

Informed sources said Mississippi Governor Ross Barnett had assured the Attorney General that State and local enforcement officers would do all they could to maintain order.

Alabamans Use Clubs And Knives

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — (ANP) — White and Negro "Freedom Riders" who set out to crash Deep South" segregation barriers were attacked by white men in two cities Sunday, May 14.

A crowd of about 100 white men, some armed with clubs and knives, attacked a Greyhound bus on which nine members of the Congress on Racial Equality (CORE) were riding at Anniston, Ala. There were 13 other persons on the bus, including an Alabama state investigator.

Another group of white men at Birmingham attacked James A. Peck of New York City, editor of a "CORE" publication and one of the leaders of the tour. Peck and a Negro student from Morehouse college, Atlanta, were hospitalized.

The CORE group planned to defy segregation customs in bus terminals at Montgomery, Ala., Monday and then move to Jackson, Miss. The tour began in Washington, D. C., earlier this month.

The Anniston attack destroyed the bus, and three persons were hospitalized for treatment for smoke inhalation.

When the bus tried to leave the terminal at Anniston, a group of about 100 white men appeared, threw chocks beneath the wheels to keep it from moving and began to slash the tires. One man sat down in front of the bus and dared Driver O. T. Jones to start.

State Investigator E. L. Cowley, who got on the bus in Atlanta, prevented the occupants from leaving the bus, and Anniston Police Chief J. L. Peek held back the crowd outside.

The bus was able to leave, but a tire went flat just outside the city. The mob, which had followed in private automobiles, began throwing stones at the windows. Someone tossed an incendiary device in one window, and the bus caught fire.

The mob disappeared as soon as the flames broke out, and the passengers left the bus. The interior of the vehicle was destroyed.

"When the bus caught fire they just disappeared," CORE's Negro filed secretary, Joseph Perkins Jr., 27, said. "Some of them were standing back in the woods beside the road."

Perkins said "only about 20 or 25" members of the crowd were active and the others watched. He said the crowd "was not hostile after the fire."

No arrests were made.

Those hospitalized at Anniston for smoke inhalation were identified as Genevieve Hughes, 28, Chevy Chase, Md.; Edward Blakenheim, 28, Tucson, Ariz., both white; and Mae Frances Mosely, 24, Negro.

Perkins said he was ready to continue the tour, aimed at breaking racial barriers in bus terminals through its original schedule. But Charlotte Devree of New York City said she would not talk about the incident "until I'm out of Alabama."

"How would you feel if you had almost been killed?" she asked.

In Atlanta, where the CORE group met no difficulty, Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., wired Alabama Gov. John Patterson and U. S. Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy condemning "disgraceful and unprovoked violence" and demanding federal action to "end the tyranny in Alabama and other states . . ."

Three Bus Trials Are Postponed

The trials of three men in connection with the May 14 rioting and beatings at the Trailways Bus Terminal have been postponed to June 8 at 9 a.m. in Recorder's Court.

The cases originally were set for 9 a.m. today but lawyers for the defendants requested the postponement.

The defendants are Jesse Thomas Faggard, 48; his 20-year-old son, Jesse Oliver Faggard, both of Alton, and Melvin Dove, 40, Vandiver.

The Faggards are charged with disorderly conduct, aiding and abetting and conspiracy. Dove is charged with disorderly conduct.

Jailed 'Riders' Seek Way Out

Birmingham Officials Say Arrangements Must Be Definite

By The Associated Press

BIRMINGHAM, May 18.—Ten student integrationists jailed here after racial disturbances Thursday sought to get out of Birmingham.

They were jailed Wednesday after a tense four-hour situation at the Greyhound bus terminal.

Police Chief Jamie Moore said they were held in protective custody.

A spokesman said a lawyer was trying to free the group, but the city jail reported no attorney had been to see them.

Police said the students would remain in jail until definite arrangements were made for them to leave Birmingham.

Five Birmingham Negroes, jailed for protective custody at the same time, were released Thursday and, from Washington it was reported that United States Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy was making a new effort to prevent further racial demonstrations here.

Bus Drivers Balk

It was the second such group to be stymied here in efforts to break bus station segregation barriers in the Deep South. The "Freedom Riders" are sponsored by the Congress of Racial Equality.

The first group met violence at Anniston and Birmingham. This group rode two buses from Atlanta—a Greyhound and a Trailway.

A mob set the Greyhound bus afire at Anniston and 12 passengers, including some integrationists, were treated for smoke in their lungs. The bus was destroyed.

The second bus met with violence in the Trailways station, with several integrationists beaten by white men. Four white men have been arrested at Birmingham.

The first group finally got off to New Orleans aboard a plane Monday night after three false starts and two bomb threats at the municipal airport.

The group of eight Negroes, a white girl and a white man, were balked when they sought to leave aboard a Greyhound bus Wednesday for Montgomery. Greyhound drivers refused to drive the bus.

Insist On Schedule

Police Inspector Bill Haley said the group would have been released within 30 minutes after they were taken into custody if they had been willing to leave town.

But a Birmingham Negro leader, Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, himself jailed with them and then freed on bond, said:

"These students came here to ride out on a regularly scheduled bus and that's what they still hope to do. That is our irrevocable position. The challenge has to be made."

The students are from colleges at Nashville, Tenn. They said they are bound for New Orleans.

Arrest Seven Students 'Freedom Riders'

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — (UPI) —A bi-racial group of students from Nasville, Tenn., tried to resume the anti-segregation "Freedom Ride," but were taken into "protective custody" after bus drivers refused to transport them to New Orleans.

The students had ben stranded in the downtown Greyhound bus terminal for four hours before City Police Chief Jamie Moore ordered them taken off to jail.

Seven of the eight students, one a white girl, were loaded into a paddy wagon while a local Negro integrationist, the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth who had met the group on its arrival, and two Negro friends were placed in a police car. A Negro girl went to a telephone and was not picked up immediately.

ALA. COPS JAIL SHUTTLESWORTH

As the police vehicles sped away from the terminal, some cheering went up from about 100 white persons kept across the street from the terminal by police armed with billy sticks and a police dog.

One was heard to shout "You better use a club on him," referring to Shuttlesworth.

There were eight Negroes and two white students in the group which left Nashville but a Negro and a white male student were arrested by police for refusing to move to the rear of the bus as it neared the terminal.

BULLETIN

The Negroes, loaded on the bus through two files of police sat in the bus with two Greyhound supervisors and at least one police officer. Several took positions on front seats on the bus.

The driver was Joe Cavanaugh, who earlier refused to drive the Negroes.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — A band of young Negroes and white persons today renewed efforts to crack racial barriers on buses in Alabama but drivers continued to refuse to carry them.

"I have only one life to give and I don't intend to give it for CORE or the NAACP," Joe Cavanaugh, a Greyhound bus driver, told the group as they tried to board his bus for Montgomery.

The bus did not leave as the integrationists stood around the loading platform, following their usual pattern of waiting.

Cavanaugh said he had heard of "a big caravan" waiting down the road to stop any attempt at integrated bus riding in Alabama.

Large crowds which gathered at the Greyhound terminal here late Friday night had dwindled to small groups of onlookers early today.

The prospects of the youths riding integrated out of here aboard a regularly scheduled bus appeared dim as this city entered its seventh straight day of mounting racial tension.

They tried to board three buses and ride integrated Friday. But none of the buses left the station.

SPEND NIGHT WAITING

Then they settled down in the white waiting room and said they wouldn't try again until daylight. They made no effort to board buses leaving late Friday night and early today.

The youths entered the station, carrying tickets to Montgomery, Ala., at 2:45 p.m. Friday. They said they intended to stay "until we get a bus to Montgomery."

Drivers, apparently fearful of violence, refused to take out buses carrying the integrated group.

Buses for Montgomery weren't cancelled—they just didn't leave the station—when the group tried to board them.

The threat of violence remained, as it has since a white mob jumped the so-called "freedom riders" of the Congress of Racial Equality last Sunday and beat some of them unmercifully. The integrated CORE group was testing bus station segregation in the South.

P. 14

CROWD DISSIPATES

A crowd, building up to several thousand at one time, gathered in the area around the station Friday night but it thinned out as the night wore on.

President Kennedy reportedly tried—and failed — to reach Alabama Gov. John Patterson, then settled for talking with Lt. Gov. Albert Bountwell about the explosive stalemate at the bus station. What was said wasn't revealed.

Jackson, Miss.

At Birmingham, the Birmingham Post-Herald reported that a Justice Department spokesman said Gov. Patterson had told a presidential aide that he aims to give full protection to all travelers in Alabama.

The governor couldn't be contacted for comment.

The statement was contrary to what he said earlier this week—that he couldn't guarantee the "freedom riders" safe conduct on their segregation-testing tour in Alabama.

INJUNCTION PROHIBITED

At Montgomery, State Court Judge Walter B. Jones issued an injunction prohibiting "freedom riders" or their supporters from "entry into and travel within the state o fAlabama in the so called 'freedom ride' and other acts of conduct calculated to provoke breaches of the peace."

The injunction, requested by Alabama Atty. Gen. MacDonald Gallion, could mean five days in jail and a fine for the riders.

One of the integration leaders, the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, Birmingham Negro minister, was arrested on charges growing out of the Sunday and Wednesday incidents. He was charged with conspiring to cause a mob to gather. He was freed on $2,000 bond.

The Friday night crowd, kept away from the bus station about a block in all directions by policemen working with dogs, grew to about 3,000 shortly before midnight, police estimated. Then their numbers began to thin out.

Inside the station, in the early hours, the 19 Negroes and 3 white persons, most of them college students from Nashville, Tenn., tried to sleep in the white waiting room —leaning back in seats, or resting their head in their hands, or putting their head on a companion's shoulder.

The group is composed of students from several colleges at Nashville—Fisk, American Baptist Theological Seminary, Tennessee A&I, and Peabody Teachers College—along with two who said they were not students.

Policemen carrying billy sticks walked around the large waiting room, asking people without tickets to get out.

WHITES REMOVED

At least half a dozen times during the night they forcibly removed white men after minor disturbances—arguments, sharp remarks, and one door-shoving incident.

One white man objected to a Negro sitting down near him.

"I can't do anything about it," the policeman replied.

The white man moved.

The 22 in the station during the night included seven who were taken to the Tennessee line and turned loose by Birmingham city police early Friday, only to return to Birmingham by car in a matter of hours.

Riders Will Continue At Any Cost, Leaders Announce in Alabama

The Atlanta Constitution p. 1

Atlanta, Ga. Wed. 5-24-61

Louisiana, Mississippi To Be Next

By BRUCE GALPHIN and MARION GAINES
Constitution Staff Writer

MONTGOMERY — Negro integration leaders vowed Tuesday to continue the "freedom ride" from Montgomery to Mississippi and Louisana no matter what the cost.

They announced no time of departure, but swore they would go to Jackson, Miss., and New Orleans in the near future.

If the battered group of riders now in Montgomery is arrested under a state injunction, then more volunteers for the freedom ride are waiting, they asserted.

JOINT CONFERENCE

These intentions to defy Alabama and Mississippi officials were announced at a joint press conference by the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., of Atlanta; the Rev. Ralph Abernathy, Montgomery Negro leader; CORE executive James Farmer; freedom rider John Lewis, and Nashville student leader Diane Nash.

"Freedom is worth any price," Miss Nash asserted.

Asked about the chance of a rider's being killed, King replied "We are not martyrs. But . . . death can sometimes serve to arouse the conscience. Unearned suffering is redemptive."

Lewis, a bandage on his head as a result of a beating here Saturday, announced that most of the riders already have tickets to leave Montgomery.

WITHOUT BAIL

If they are arrested, he added, all are prepared to go to jail without bail.

"I am sure that if these students are arrested, others will flow in constantly," King declared. He noted that college sessions are almost over for the summer and said there had been numerous volunteers for the ride from all over the country.

p. 10

King announced that the existing state injunction against the freedom ride demonstrations will be challenged in federal court. But until and unless it is dissolved, jailed students will not post bond, he added.

Atlanta, Ga.

King defended the riders against charges that they are deliberately provoking trouble.

"Would you think the presence of a rich man in Montgomery causes robbery?" King demanded.

Wed. 5-24-61

IMMORAL REQUEST

It is "not only practical but immoral," to ask people to forego their constitutional rights, he declared.

As to the bad publicity abroad, he said, "the continued existence of segregation in America damages our image more than anything else I know . . . We seek to bring all this to the surface, to get rid of it," he said.

It was Abernathy who announced the riders' intentions to travel through Mississippi, where state troopers reportedly are poised at the Alabama border to stop the riders.

Abernathy said the group would not be satisfied with being escorted through Mississippi without being allowed to stop at Jackson.

GUARD PATROLS

Steel-helmted National Guard troops continued to patrol the streets here Tuesday, but there was a business-as-usual atmosphere about this white-columned city on the banks of the Alabama River.

Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy, who ordered 500 U.S. marshals into Alabama to keep the peace after members of a group of freedom riders were attacked last Saturday, said Tuesday the federal officers would be removed at the earliest possible date.

WHITE REPORTS

He made the evaluation after conferring early Tuesday morning with Byron R. (Whizzer) White, who made a fast trip to Washington to report on the situation. White is in charge of the U.S. marshals here.

Meanwhile, Tuesday a Montgomery man, Claude V. Henley, 37, was booked on an assault and battery charge lodged by two National Broadcasting Co. employes who accused him of leading a mob of club-wielders at the Greyhound bus terminal last Saturday.

It was revealed that Henley until recently had been a reserve police officer here. Assistant Chief J. R. Eiland said that Henley resigned "a week or 10 days ago."

NBC newsmen Maurice Levy and H. W. Risser identified Henley as the man who assaulted them and destroyed their cameras.

Henley was released on $200 bond.

LEGISLATURE CONDEMNS

The Alabama Legislature, returning to Montgomery Tuesday after a recess, adopted a resolution condemning both the freedom ride and the presence of federal marshals in Montgomery.

The House adopted the resolution on a voice vote, although two Mobile legislators declined to sign it. The Senate adopted it 35 to 0 on a roll call vote.

In a news conference late Tuesday afternoon, Alabama Gov. John Patterson again stated his contention that the presence of federal marshals was responsible for disorders here, particularly the Sunday night riot at a Negro church.

Patterson said that if the riders wanted to leave Alabama, he would be glad to have them escorted to the state line.

Ban On 'Ride' Backers Expires In Legal Snarl

Injunction Hearing Set For July 17

A restraining order against "Freedom Ride" sponsors in Alabama expired Monday.

But U.S. District Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. made it clear that he would reimpose the order "if it becomes necessary."

The order, with a time limit of 10 days, expired as a legal snarl-up postponed a decision as to whether sponsors of integrated bus riders were to be placed under an injunction.

The hearing on whether the temporary order would be replaced by an injunction with no fixed time limit was put off until July 17.

CHANCE TO STUDY

The issue was to be argued before Johnson Monday. The judge postponed the hearing when it developed that attorneys for CORE and other integrationist groups had not been served with copies of the original complaint, on which three Klan groups and Montgomery police officials were enjoined 10 days ago.

Johnson held that, since CORE and the other "Freedom Ride" sponsors had been added as "indispensable defendants" in the case, they were entitled to a chance to study the complaint.

In the aftermath of bus station violence here, Johnson issued a temporary injunction against three Alabama Ku Klux Klans groups and City Commissioner L. B. Sullivan and Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal.

At the same time he issued a temporary restraining order against CORE, the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, the Rev. Martin Luther King, and other integration leaders.

DECLINED TO EXTEND

Unlike the injunction, which could remain in effect indefinitely, the restraining order automatically expired after the 10-day limit set by federal statute.

Johnson could have extended it for an additional 100 days, but declined to do so.

The hearing got under way Monday under unusual circumstances. The plaintiff in the case was the U.S. Justice Department, but department attorneys wanted no part in presenting the case against CORE.

This job fell to Calvin Whitesell, originally the attorney for defendants Sullivan and Ruppenthal.

In relieving the government attorneys of the unwanted job of seeking a temporary injunction against integration leaders, Johnson had requested Whitesell to take over as a "friend of the court" and present the evidence.

TAKES FEDERAL CASE

Thus Whitesell, who first opposed the government, took over the government's case.

It was Whitesell who made the motion, which Johnson granted, that CORE and related groups be added as defendants. The judge did so on the theory that both sides in the inflammatory situation needed to be restrained in the interest of interstate commerce and public order.

Chief NAACP attorney Thurgood Marshall argued at the hearing Monday that it could not properly be held because in "a case in controversy, you've got to have two sides."

Since both Whitesell and the Justice Department were appearing as "friends of the court," he contended, there was no plaintiff in the case.

After continuing the case to next month, Johnson left the question of whether he might reimpose the restraining order in doubt.

VEHEMENT PROTEST

Whitesell moved that the order be reimposed after the defendants were served with copies of the complaint. The judge instructed him to offer his motion in writing.

Government attorney John Doar, asked by Johnson what was the government position, recommended that the case be dropped.

Whitesell hotly protested that such action would be "a travesty of justice."

Johnson assured him that the continuance of the case was "no fault of yours, Mr. Whitesell. It is the fault of those who were instructed to see that the papers were served."

Representing CORE at the hearing was attorney Carl Rachlin. Marshall represented the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, King and other SCLC members.

Attorney Fred Gray told the judge that two other defendants, the Montgomery Jail Council and the Student Nashville Non-Violent Movement, "really do not exist."

FBI Warned Birmingham Several Times Before Riots, Agent Tells Court Hearing Iniunction Plea

FBI Says Chief Said He Would Be Out Of Town

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—The hearing into a federal request for an injunction restraining certain Montgomery and Birmingham officials from interfering with interstate bus travel, went into its second day with testimony by an FBI agents that he had repeatedly warned Birmingham officials of the advent of the "freedom riders" who were attacked there.

Meanwhile, a defense attorney asked the Justice Department to bring Attorney General Kennedy here as a witness to testify what, if anything, he had to do with the segregation - challenging freedom rides.

FBI agent Thomas J. Jenkins, special agent in charge of the Birmingham office, said he warned Police Chief Jamie Moore several times that the riders, and "potential trouble" were headed for the city, but Moore declared "he would be out of town."

The agent testified he called Moore on April 26 and warned him that the Congress of Racial Equality was planning the bus trip into the city, and that racial trouble could come as a result. Jenkins said he told Moore later of additional information he received on the rides on May 6 and May 8.

Then on May 13, the agent testified, he called the police chief at home and explained to him that two groups were leaving Atlanta and would arrive in Birmingham the next day.

But Moore simply "[illegible]" and said to call Sgt. Tom [illegible] with any other details because he (Moore) would be out of town.

The FBI agent said he heard that next day the two groups had left Atlanta and would be making stops in Anniston and Birmingham on the way to Montgomery. He testified he called the chiefs of police of both cities and warned them of the two approaching buses, one with nine riders, and the other with 10.

The agent said one bus was attacked and burned outside of Anniston, and the other was attacked in the Birmingham bus terminal. Both attacks were made on Sunday, May 14.

The injunction names, in addition to Moore, and Birmingham Police Commissioner Eugene Conner, Montgomery Police Commissioner L. B. Sullivan and Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal, and a number of klansmen, klan organizations and other individuals believed to have been connected with the rioting.

NEWSPAPERMAN TESTIFIES

William Mobley, police reporter for the Birmingham Post-Herald testified Tuesday in the hearing, which is being held before U. S. Middle District Judge Frank M. Johnson, Jr.

Mobley said that on May 14 he checked City Hall on a tip, and found "an unusual lot of activity at City Hall for a Sunday." He said a detective told him he "saw a bunch of klansmen sitting on a wall near the bus station. One had a lead pipe extending from his pocket.

The newspaperman said that about 2 p. m. he saw five or six policemen and Conner "sitting around the detective office. I asked Conner what he was going to do and if he intended sending police to the bus station and he said, "no, it's just another bus coming in and there's no point in sending anyone over there.' "

BEATING REPORT

Meanwhile, in Washington, the FBI confirmed it is investigating a report that one of a group of imprisoned riders taken briefly to a county work camp was beaten while there.

Meanwhile, in Mississippi, Max Thomas, superintendent of the Hinds County penal farm, confirmed that a "Freedom Rider," the Rev. Gordy T. Vivian, 36, a Negro from Nashville, Tenn., was injured "in a scuffle with guards" at the farm when he "refused to cooperate" while being checked in. Thomas said Vivian "suffered a minor head wound" which he said was bandaged by a doctor.

One of five riders released under $500 bond said Vivian was hit with a blackjack for refusing to say "sir" to a guard.

"If you don't run prisoners with an iron hand," Thomas told United Press International, "they'll run you."

FIFTH AMENDMENT

Three witnesses invoked the Fifth Amendment as the government sought to link the Ku Klux Klan with the burning of a bus carrying "freedom riders" near Anniston, Ala., on May 14. One witness, cited for contempt of court, refused to say whether he was present at the burning scene and two others said their answers to questions regarding Klan membership might tend to incriminate them.

Judge Johnson's 'Rider' Clarification

JUDGE FRANK M. JOHNSON, JR., of the Middle District federal court, since his June 2 order to restrain Klan actions in connection with so-called "freedom riders," his directive to Montgomery police to preserve order, and his preliminary injunction directly aimed at the above, has sought to clarify a temporary restraining order affecting sponsors of the "freedom riders."

If the terminology seems somewhat confusing it is doubtless because definitions of such orders in law are specific, for legal purpose. The general import is not clouded.

IN THE TEMPORARY restraining order, Judge Johnson named CORE, the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, Montgomery County Jail Council, Student Nashville Non-Violent Movement, Revs. Shuttlesworth, King, Seay, Abernathy and Walker, by name.

He also said that it was the order of the court that such organizations, members and agents, employes and all persons (italics added) acting in concert with them be bound and is hereby temporarily restrained from" "sponsoring, financing, assisting or encouraging any individual or group of individuals in traveling in interstate commerce through or in Alabama for the purpose of testing the state or local laws as those laws relate to racial segregation."

The judge's announced clarification said that the order applied to the "riders'" backers, not to the riders themselves: "The temporary restraining order does not enjoin 'freedom riders' or other like groups. The order is being misapprehended and misunderstood in this respect."

Judge Johnson said that part of the order "in a casual sense seems directed" to the individual riders.

THE JUDGE'S meaning is clear enough. But the fact seems to be that it is impossible to make a division as between backers and those deliberately recruited for the rides. Rides still are going on, though not here. Ride backers, while closing a Montgomery organizational office, have publicly announced opening of other Southern city offices.

These are not spontaneous groups and any separate individuals to whom Judge Johnson may be making reference are currently unknown out of context of the sponsoring organizations.

CORE is still in high gear, if not in Alabama. The New York Herald Tribune contained an ad Monday stating that "An evening with Mike Nichols and Elaine May" would be presented to raise CORE funds for "freedom riders."

Said the ad in part: "There will be a special extra performance for the benefit of CORE (Freedom Riders) on Sunday evening, June 11, at 9 o'clock. Tickets are on sale now at regular prices."

Judge Johnson's explanation is a legal clearing of the way for any theoretical "independent" freedom riders. But the facts are the riders are part of a nationally organized group with great financial resources.

INTERESTINGLY, in the face of already-accumulated evidence as to source of such ride efforts, the following occurred during a May 21 conference between Asst. U. S. Atty. Gen. Byron White, Gov. Patterson, Atty. Gen. Gallion and Public Safety Director Mann:

"GALLION: . . . You do know the identity of the groups that have come in?

"WHITE: What do you mean, the identity?

"GALLION: That it is the CORE organization and its followers?

"WHITE: No, I do not know that.

"GALLION: You do not know that?

"WHITE: No, I do not know that."

The News finds Mr. White's statement exceedingly difficult to accept—that's putting it mildly.

IN A SPECIAL REPORT issued May 30 by the Southern Regional Council, an Atlanta-based organization which advocates desegregation, stated beginning on Page 1: "In mid-March, the Congress of Racial Equality, from its New York headquarters, announced it would recruit (italics added) a small, bi-racial group to ride Greyhound and Trailways buses from Washington to New Orleans, with the purpose of challenging any segregation of interstate travellers encountered. On May 4, the Freedom Ride began. . . ."

That was some time before Asst. Atty. Gen. Byron White gave Mr. Gallion his answers in Montgomery, May 21. Surely the Justice Department's sources of information are more complete than the May 21 exchange indicated.

Injunction in Alabama

Federal District Judge Johnson has issued an injunction in Montgomery, Alabama, which is directed equally at the sponsors and opponents of the Freedom Riders Movement. Though Judge Johnson's desire to avoid violence is certainly laudable, the court's action has the effect of equating persons seeking to exercise their legal rights and others who are violating the law by trying to prevent such exercise.

In the 1958 Little Rock school case, the Supreme Court made it clear that the robbers and the robbed do not have equal standing before the law. It declared then, in language clearly pertinent to the present situation, "The constitutional rights of respondents are not to be sacrificed or yielded to the violence and disorder which have followed upon the actions of the Governor and Legislature." The Supreme Court then quoted approvingly the following equally relevant statement in a unanimous decision it had handed down forty-one years earlier: "It is urged that this proposed segregation will promote the public peace by preventing race conflicts. Desirable as this is, and important as is the preservation of the public peace, this aim cannot be accomplished by laws or ordinances which deny rights created or protected by the Federal Constitution."

The Freedom Riders ought not to be enjoined by the courts from exercising their Constitutional rights. But, as we have urged before, the Freedom Riders should realize they have made their point and voluntarily cease their activities for a period during which the passions aroused by their recent efforts may subside. A similar position on this issue was taken last week by the Southern Regional Council, which is composed of both white and Negro liberals. The Council is entirely correct in advocating that the advantages gained be not pressed too far.

The issue of desegregation can ultimately be solved only in the South and primarily by Southerners, white and Negro. Neither violence nor the steadily insistent provocation of violence can bring about the solution. The demonstrations of the Freedom Riders have already resulted in a major advance. The Justice Department is putting strong pressure upon the Interstate Commerce Commission to outlaw segregation in buses and related facilities. This is a concrete move advancing desegregation under the law.

Judge Jones Issues Legal Roadblock

By ARTHUR OSGOODE

Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones has thrown a legal roadblock in the path of "Freedom Riders" planning to enter the state to battle bus segregation.

Jones Friday issued a temporary injunction forbidding "the entry into and travel within the state of Alabama, and engaging in the so-called 'Freedom Ride' and other acts or conduct calculated to provoke breaches of the peace. . . ."

Atty. Gen. MacDonald Gallion sought the injunction on the basis of "the violence that has occurred in Anniston and Birmingham."

CONTINUING THREAT

The petition calling for the injunction said it was needed because of the inadequacy of legal remedies available for dealing with the threat of violence posed by further incursions by the Freedom Riders.

It also stated a belief that the organizers of the Freedom Riders planned to continue them, posing a continuing threat to the public peace.

Citing three incidents leading to violence or the jailing of the integrationist riders, the petition said that the "respondents' conduct caused violence and threats of violence and breaches of the peace in the State of Alabama. . . ."

HELD IN CONTEMPT

The injunction was directed against the president of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) and the organization itself.

Notice of the injunction can be served on the Alabama secretary of state. With it in effect, Freedom Riders can be held in contempt of court if they enter Alabama to combat segregation practices on buses or bus stations.

Gallion said the riders would be subject to arrest at any time it was determined they were engaged in a CORE - sponsored "Freedom Ride."

The state pointed to "strong and convincing reasons" for believing that such rides will continue.

BROAD WORDING

The petition cited the burning of a bus near Anniston and injuries inflicted during violence at a Birmingham bus station on Sunday. Also cited was the arrival of a new group of the integrated riders in Birmingham Wednesday.

Taken into protective custody, said the petition, this latter group was caused "to leave the State of Alabama in order to prevent further violence or bloodshed."

The petition was sought on the basis of a state statute aimed at conduct "calculated to provoke a breach of the peace."

The broad wording of the statute has been adopted by a number of Alabama cities, including Montgomery, where a similarly worded ordinance has been the basis for arrests of integrated groups.

Russell Hits Javits' Bid On Riders

Stalls Confidence Vote for Kennedy

By ALBERT RILEY
Constitution Staff Writer

WASHINGTON — Sen. Jacob Javits, R-N.Y., set the stage Wednesday for a possible wrangle in the Senate Thursday over the racial disorders and federal intervention in Alabama.

Javits, with Sen. Paul Douglas, D-Ill., as a co-sponsor, introduced a resolution declaring congressional support for President John Kennedy's action in sending federal marshals into Alabama.

Sens. Richard B. Russell, D-Ga., and Strom Thurmond, D-S.C., blocked immediate consideration of the resolution.

SET FOR DEBATE

Majority Leader Mike Mansfield of Montana later obtained a unanimous consent agreement for the Javits resolution to be

Sen. Russell

debated for one hour Thursday and then be placed on the calendar, if no vote has been taken by that time.

Russell deplored the violence in Alabama but said the resolution offered by Javits is not needed and will do only harm in the South. It may be helpful only to some politicians in the North, Russell indicated.

Meanwhile, in a counter move to Javits' action, Sen. John Stennis, D-Miss., introduced a bill making it a federal crime to travel in interstate commerce with the intent to incite to riot or to violate state laws.

WAR BAR INCITEMENT

Stennis said the bus trips into the South of the so-called Freedom Riders were for the announced purpose of violating local statutes and with the hope of arousing trouble.

His bill, Stennis said, would prevent any group, whether "Freedom Riders" or George Lincoln Rockwell's Nazis, or the Ku Klux Klan, from so traveling to incite riot and stir up strife and enmity.

Javits said the Alabama situation was "pretty serious" and that it was time the whole country's attention is called to it.

CALLS SEGREGATION EVIL

The New Yorker declared interstate bus segregation is "an evil" and that U.S. citizens have a legal right to unsegregated bus transportation.

"State authorities cannot be excused from failure to protect citizens in their rights, not only as citizens of their states, but as citizens of the United States," Javits added.

"No one has been more saddened by the tragic occurrences of the last several days in the South than the senator from Georgia," Russell replied.

RUSSELL RAPS VIOLENCE

"I have deplored all the acts of violence, not only because they are against the law, but also because they run counter to the best interests of the people in the South. . . .

"Mr. President, the mistake was," Russell continued, "that these people permitted themselves to be provoked into the situation. . . ."

Russell said the Senate should not have a "double standard of political morality" and that Javits' resolution should also have an amendment commending the mayor of New Orleans for keeping George Lincoln Rockwell and his so-called Nazi group under strict surveillance when they reached the Louisiana city.

ALABAMA

URGES UNITED FRONT

Sen. Joseph Clark, D-Pa, commended Sen. Russell for his "temperate and wise" comments, but said he wanted to join Javits in sponsoring the resolution.

It is important, Clark said, that Congress present a united front back of the President in declaring that "the law of the land is going to be enforced all over the land and that there can be no condoning of mob violence. . . ."

Russell thanked Clark and Javits for complimenting him, but said he did not wish to leave the impression that he favors compulsory integration in any public place.

"I am unalterably opposed to that," Russell said, but added also that "violence on the part of those living in a community is the very worst way to go about gaining any end."

Gallion Blasts At 'Riders' On Nationwide TV Show

NEW YORK (AP) — Alabama Atty. Gen. MacDonald Gallion said the "Freedom Riders" were sent into Alabama "for one purpose, and that's to create trouble."

Appearing on a nationwide television show (NBC's "The Dave Garroway Show") Wednesday, Gallion said:

"These are outside groups coming into our state. They're not on any peaceful mission, as you might say. . .

"They are sent there for one purpose, and that's to create trouble. And it's the natural result that trouble will come about when they do come in, advertised in advance with publicity.

"Now, when these groups come in like that, they know that trouble is probably going to result."

Gallion said Alabamians do not condone violence, even over racial matters.

"We are God-fearing and law-abiding people," he said. "But I think we have shown a great deal of patience in this matter.

"We wish they would stay home and keep this siuation from coming about."

Referring to the riders as outsiders coming into Alabama, Gallion cited James Peck, an official of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE).

Peck, of New York City, was in a CORE-sponsored group that took a beating at the hands of white men in Birmingham May 14.

Gallion said the people of Alabama "resented highly the federal marshals coming . . .because it was unnecessary."

"As far as the state of Alabama is concerned," he said, "we are capable of enforcing our laws down in our state. We have a good record of law enforcement."

FREEDOM RIDERS- MONTGOMERY
MR. JAMES PECK (NATIONAL OFFICER)
(CORE) CONGRESS ON RACIAL EQUALITY

'Freedom Rider' Ready to Do It Again

James Peck, one of the "Freedom Riders" who was beaten severely in Birmingham, Ala., on Sunday, said yesterday he was "still a pacifist—very strongly so" despite innumerable beatings, a prison term and various assaults.

Mr. Peck, who is a national officer of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) and editor of its periodical, was one of two "Freedom Riders" who arrived here yesterday from New Orleans and held a press conference at the office of Charles S. Zimmerman, vice-president of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, 218 W. 40th St. Also at the press conference was Henry Thomas, nineteen, a Negro, who lives in St. Augustine, Fla., and attends Howard University.

Mr. Peck wore bandages on head wounds he said he received from six men who used "pieces of pipe and other instruments" on him in Birmingham.

C. O. in War

He is a graduate of Lawrenceville School in New Jersey, and a one-time student at Harvard whose formal education was terminated by the Great Depression.

Born in New York forty-six years ago, he seemed headed toward a conventional career of one sort or another.

When he left Harvard, however, he found work as a seaman during the period when these workers were being organized into a union. Through experience and extensive reading, the course of his life was changed completely.

He left the sea to work and write for the labor press until World War II. Called up in the draft, he declared himself a conscientious objector. But his objection went far beyond that of most "C.O.s" at that time. He would not become a "medic," nor would he agree to take part in other non-combatant activities connected with the military. As a result, he spent three years in the Federal prison at Danbury, Conn.

In 1949, he chained himself to a railing in the White House and staged a sit-down strike, but it was quickly ended by Secret Service agents.

He joined the Congress of Racial Equality in 1946. He was one of eleven persons arrested in Nevada in 1957 for trying to force their way through the gate of an Atomic Energy Commission proving ground in the cause of pacificism. A year later he was under arrest again, this time in Honolulu as a member of the crew of a ketch intent upon demonstrating against nuclear tests in the Pacific.

Mr. Peck, who lives at 552 Riverside Drive, was asked yesterday if he would go on another "Freedom Ride."

"Yes, of course," he replied.

Picket Lines Set Up

After the press conference Mr. Peck and Mr. Thomas joined picket lines set up in the Trailway area of the Port Authority Bus Terminal, 40th St. and 8th Ave., and the Greyhound terminal on 34th St. to protest segregated waiting rooms in Southern bus terminals. Members of the I. L. G. W. U. joined GORE members on the lines.

In other developments yesterday, a Greyhound bus carrying a group of Negroes believed to be ready to try to crack bus station segregation arrived in Birmingham, but police refused to let them off the bus. The police action apparently averted a chance of a repeat of the violence that greeted White and Negro "Freedom Riders" at the Birmingham terminal on Sunday during a segregation-testing swing through the South.

U.S. Seeks Injunction Against Montgomery, Birmingham Officials

The Atlanta Constitution Atlanta, Ga.
Thurs. 5-25-61 p. 1

Kennedy Hits Police Leaders

By JOSEPH A. LOFTUS

Copyright 1961 by the New York Times Co.

WASHINGTON — The Justice department acted Wednesday to bring officials of Birmingham and Montgomery under a federal court injunction prohibiting interference with interstate travel.

Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy said the Birmingham and Montgomery Police departments, despite foreknowledge of the arrival of "Freedom Riders" on scheduled buses, withheld police protection. Violent outbreaks occurred in both cities.

MAY BE ENJOINED

If United States District Judge Frank M. Johnson in Montgomery grants the government's motion at a hearing Monday, the police officials will be enjoined from failing or refusing to provide police protection for persons traveling in interstate commerce through their cities.

The court order now is directed at three Ku Klux Klan groups, four individuals connected with the Klan, and "all individuals acting in concert with them."

The officials who would be brought within the order are police commissioner Eugene T. Connor, and police chief Jamie Moore of Birmingham; commissioner of public works, Lester B. Sullivan, and police chief Goodwin J. Ruppenthal of Montgomery. Chief Ruppenthal was not in Montgomery on May 20 when the "Freedom Riders" were attacked. He was named as a defendant in the government petition, however, in his capacity as police chief.

SUGGESTS SLOWDOWN

Kennedy also suggested that the "Freedom Riders" apply the brakes for a while in their test of segregation practices in Alabama and Mississippi.

"A cooling-off period is needed," Kennedy said in his first public appeal to the bus travelers for a self-imposed restraint. A group sponsored by the Congress of Racial Equality has been testing travel segregation practices in the South.

"It would be wise for those traveling through these two states to delay their trips until the present state of confusion and danger has passed and an atmosphere of reason and normalcy has been restored," the attorney general said.

p. 10

The 131-word statement dealt, however, only with the possibility of violence and appeared to be a request to all travelers in the two states.

Atlanta, Ga.

A Justice department spokesman said that the attorney general, in constant touch with the "Freedom Riders" operation, was struck by the possibility that a mob, frustrated by police guarding the bus that carried the riders, might attack persons traveling in buses that were unprotected.

Noting that there are curiosity seekers, publicity seekers, and others, as well as ordinary travelers trying to mind their own business, the attorney general said: "There is increasing possibility that innocent persons may be injured. A mob asks no questions."

Although he had questioned the willingness of Alabama officials to protect travelers in recent days, the attorney general declared that "the Alabama and Mississippi law enforcement officials are meeting the test today, but their job is becoming increasingly difficult."

An open telephone wire connected the attorney general's suite with the post of deputy attorney general Byron White at Maxwell Air Force Base, near Montgomery. The line carried the conversations conducted in White's office and the reports coming in on amplifiers from police.

The line was monitoned at the Washington end at all times by an assistant of Kennedy's and a secretary who took notes. The attorney general himself picked up an instrument frequenty for direct reports.

In the forenoon, when apparently no thought had been given to an appeal for a cooling-off period, the attorney general issued a statement saying "We have no power to prevent groups or individuals from traveling in the South, the North, the East or the West."

He did, however, say he had "appealed to all persons in Alabama and elsewhere to use restraint and to weigh their actions carefully," particularly because the President was about to embark "on a mission of great importance," referring to the June 3 summit conference between Kennedy and Soviet Premier Nikita Khruchev.

"Whatever we do in the United States at this time, which brings or causes discredit on our country, can be harmful to his mission."

Announcing its move to broaden the injunction to include the four Alabama officials, the Justice department said it also sought to add as a defendant Claude Henley, who has been described as the ringleader in the attack on the traveling students in Montgomery on May 20.

Bill To Outlaw 'Rides' Gets Favorable Report

The Senate Judiciary Committee returned a favorable report Friday morning on a bill which would outlaw "Freedom Riders" in Alabama.

Sponsored by Sen. E. O. Edling of Marengo, the measure is aimed at anyone acting in such a manner as to "outrage the decency and the morals of the people or to transgress and violate the customs of Alabama."

The bill indicated that such actions would likely cause riots or be a breach of the peace and would likely induce the assembling of a crowd which could set off riots.

Anyone found guilty under this law would be charged with a misdemeanor and fined not more than $300 and may also be imprisoned for a period not exceeding six months.

STUDY SCHOOL FUNDS

In a meeting of the Senate Rules Committee, also on Friday, approval was given to the creation of a committee to study the expenditure of certain school funds in the state.

The bill is sponsored by Sen. L. K. Andrews of Bullock to determine if the schools of the state were making proper use of funds appropriated them.

Andrews said that he would like to know "how and where some of the school boards of this state are spending the money that we give them." He mentioned in many cases the boards were back asking for more money for certain projects almost as fast as it can be appropriated.

A bill by Sen. Bert Haltom of Lauderdale to change the rules of the Senate was carried over at the request of its author.

Haltom presented the motion in the form of a resolution to change the rules and allow any bill concerning reapportionment be free from committee study and given its third and final reading three days after introduction.

"This may seem like a drastic measure," Haltom said, "but in the case of reapportionment, drastic measures are needed to see that each bill on the subject is given a chance to be studied by the entire Senate and voted on by the entire membership and not killed in committee."

He asked that no action be taken on the bill now but that it be held in committee and brought up again later if the Senate makes no reasonable attempt to hear a reapportionment bill.

Jefferson Sen. Larry Dumas indicated that he wished to introduce a motion for the Senate to adjourn from the period of June 27 to July 11 so that the legislature might attend a meeting of the Council of State Governments to be held in Mobile the week of June 27.

Bobby Acts To Restore Race Calm

Birmingham Strife Stirs Phone Calls To State Officials

WASHINGTON (AP) — Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy Thursday was reported to be making a new effort to prevent any further racial demonstrations at Birmingham, Ala.

His office declined to discuss the matter but it was understood that he had made long-distance telephone requests to state authorities and Birmingham police for "safe conduct" for a group of white and Negro college students jailed in Birmingham after trying to break down bus station racial segregation.

The students, from colleges in Nashville, Tenn., are traveling toward New Orleans.

Birmingham Police Commissioner Eugene Connor said he had not been called by Kennedy and knew of no one in the police department who had talked with the attorney general.

CHIEF UNAVAILABLE

Police Chief Jamie Moore was not available for comment.

In Montgomery, Public Safety Director Floyd Mann said Kennedy called him by telephone Wednesday night "to see what the situation was" regarding the jailed students. But Mann said Kennedy did not ask him for protection for the group.

Gov. John Patterson has said the group would not be given an escort on its bus trip through Alabama.

Patterson was not immediately available for comment on the reported request for protection.

In Birmingham, an integration leader said Thursday that police have offered to release—a few at a time—members of the racially mixed group if they will leave the city in private transportation.

Len Holt, a Negro attorney from Norfolk, Va., said Police Chief Jamie Moore made the offer.

HUNGER STRIKE

Moore couldn't be reached for comment immediately.

Holt, speaking at a news conference, said he didn't know what the 10 college students would do.

But he said they went on a hunger strike, effective at noon Thursday, in the city jail where they have been held since Wednesday afternoonm

At the jail, Warden J. R. Johnston said he didn't know whether the students were eating.

"They are brought into the kitchen for their meals, and the food is there for them," he said. 'I don't know whether they are eating it."

While the 10 students headed into their second night in the jail —some in protective custody, others on minor charges — five Birmingham Negroes picked up in the bus station incident were released.

The five were held about 24 hours.

ARRANGED TO LEAVE

Earlier police said the students would be freed when they have arranged what they called definite passage out of the city. They didn't elaborate about what they considered definite passage.

Meanwhile, at Birmingham, a group of integration leaders met to study ways to gain the release of the 10 students, held since Wednesday after a tense four-hour situation at the Greyhound Bus Terminal. Police said they were being held in protective custody.

ATTENDING MEETING

A spokesman said a lawyer was trying to free the group, but the city jail reported no attorney had visited them.

Attending the meeting were the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, Birmingham, president of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights; the Rev. Wyatt T. Walker, Atlanta, director of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference; the Rev. Joseph E. Lowery, Mobile, president of the Alabama Civic Affairs Association; the Rev. J. Metz Robbins, of the Nashville Christian Movement, and Len Holt, an attorney from Norfolk, Va.

They met at Shuttlesworth's house. He said they agreed to support the "Freedom Riders," and added, "They have agreed they will ride a regular bus. There will be no chartered bus and there will be no more plane flights."

Police said the group would remain in jail until definite arrangements were made for them to leave Birmingham.

It was the second such group to be stymied here in efforts to break bus station segregation barriers in the deep South. The "Freedom Riders" are sponsored by the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE).

The first group met violence at Anniston and Birmingham.

RODE 2 BUSES

This group rode two buses from Atlanta — a Greyhound and a Trailways bus.

A mob set the Greyhound bus afire at Anniston and 12 passengers, including some integrationists, were treated for smoke in their lungs. The bus was destroyed.

The second bus load met with violence in the Birmingham Trailways station, with several integrationists beaten by white men. Four white men have been arrested.

Greyhound drivers refused to drive the groups farther south than Birmingham.

The first group finally got off to New Orleans aboard a plane Monday night after three false starts and two bomb threats at the Municipal Airport.

The second group of eight Negroes, a white girl and a white man were balked when they sought to leave aboard a Greyhound bus Wednesday for Montgomery. Greyhound drivers refused to drive the bus.

Police Inspector Bill Haley said Thursday the group would have been released within 30 minutes after they were taken into custody if they had been willing to leave town.

But Shuttlesworth, himself jailed with them and then freed on bond, said:

"These students came here to ride out on a regularly scheduled bus and that's what they still hope to do. That is our irrevocable position. The challenge has to be made."

The students are from colleges at Nashville, Tenn. They said they are bound for New Orleans.

4 Seized In Riot at Anniston

The Atlanta Constitution

By SUSAN WAGNER

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy Monday announced the arrest of four men in Alabama and ordered 200 more U.S. marshals to the state capital in a crackdown on continuing racial unrest there.

He also said the administration has considered the possibility of using federal troops if that becomes necessary. But he added that it was not planning such a move now.

ANNISTON INCIDENT

The four arrests were made in connection with the May 14 burning of a bus carrying freedom riders at Anniston, Ala.

FBI agents carried out the arrests—the first since racial violence broke out in Alabama. Kennedy said the men have been charged with damaging and destroying a bus operated in interstate commerce "with intent to endanger the safety of persons on board."

The attorney general said he thought the situation with the marshals "is adequate at the present time" to deal with trouble in Montgomery, the troubled capital.

Kennedy said he was in constant touch with President Kennedy. The chief executive stayed up most of the night at his Middleburg, Va., farm receiving reports on the trouble that broke out upon arrival of "Freedom Riders" in the Alabama capital.

SUSPECTS IDENTIFIED

In Anniston, federal charges were lodged against Robert D. Couch, 19, unemployed; Jerry Eason, 22, a flower shop employee; Frank B. Johnson, 43, a maintenance man, and Dalford L. Roberts, 42, a taxi driver.

The four were arraigned and jailed in default of $5,000 bond each. If convicted in the bus bombing, each could be fined up to $10,000 and given 20 years in prison.

Asked whether the President specifically approved the dispatch of more marshals to Montgomery, acting Press Secretary Andrew Hatcher said such action was in the hands of the Justice department.

But he said Kennedy's statement Saturday "made it very clear that the U.S. Government will meet its responsibilities."

The attorney general said more marshals were being sent in the scene because the situation still was "obviously not satisfactory." He told a news conference half the new forces would be in Montgomery Monday night, and the remainder would go Tuesday.

About 500 marshals were sent to Montgomery previously, Kennedy said, and the total strength Tuesday will be about 700.

REINFORCEMENTS NEEDED

He said Deputy Atty. Gen. Byron (Whizzer) White, top federal official on the scene, agreed the reinforcements were needed.

"We are cooperating with the National Guard and hope these matters can be worked out," Kennedy said.

He said the new federal officers being sent in were employes of the Immigration and Naturalization Service. They are being deputized as special marshals.

Kennedy told reporters the presence of marshals in Montgomery prevented major bloodshed Sunday night when a white mob gathered at a Montgomery church where Negroes were meeting. He said local authorities did not arrive until about 15 minutes after the demonstrators began surrounding the church.

DEFERS DECISIONS

There were indications the Kennedy administration was upholding any further decisions on the crisis until it can determine the effectiveness of Gov. John Patterson's declaration of martial law Sunday night.

At the White Huose, Hatcher said he did not know whether the use of federal troops was under consideration. "Any further action would have to come as a result of recommendations from the attorney general," he said.

President Kennedy returned to the White House from Middleburg at 8:44 a.m., EST, and continued to receive word from the Justice department on the latest developments in Montgomery.

Hatcher said so far as he knew the President had made no further efforts to reach Gov. Patterson by telephone. Kennedy called Patterson Friday, but the governor would not talk with him.

Atty. Gen. Kennedy said he talked with Patterson at 2 a.m., EST, Monday, but did not receive satisfactory assurance of state protection for the "Freedom Riders" seeking to break segregation barriers in the South.

Kennedy said Floyd H. Mann, Alabama commissioner of public safety, had been acting with vigor and skill in the situation. But he said the governor "was not cooperating with the federal government."

On Capitol Hill, Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield commended the administration's intervention in Alabama. He said the riots in Montgomery should make the American people "hang our heads in shame."

Recall Marshals, Vandiver Urges

The Atlanta Constitution

Gov. Ernest Vandiver suggested Monday that the Kennedy administration withdraw federal marshals from strife-torn Montgomery and urge integrated "Freedom Riders" to stay at home.

After saying Sunday that he did not intend to comment on affairs in Alabama, Vandiver changed his mind and issued a formal statement. It said:

"I feel a deep resentment for these unwelcome, subversive groups who are making integrated bus tours into the South with the sole and avowed purpose of disturbing the people of a section who are otherwise peaceful.

"Peace could be restored, as well as harmony between the races, if the administration in Washington would withdraw the federal marshals and appeal to these riders to stay at home.

"I am reliably informed that since the first encounter with federal marshals last night, the situation has been taken over by Alabama National Guardsmen, deputy sheriffs, Montgomery police and the Highway Patrol. This makes it plain that Alabama authorities intend to preserve the peace and good order of their state."

Alabama Violence Is Probed

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — FBI agents poured into this troubled city along with fresh federal marshals Monday as a top Justice department officer indicated the federal government was going to push its powers to the limit to end racial violence here.

Byron (Whizzer) White, deputy attorney general, in a press conference late Monday revealed that the FBI here is being "considerably augmented."

4 ARRESTED

All White would say was that the agents were "investigating" possible conspiracy as well as direct violations of federal statutes in the racial conflict of the past two days. But even as he spoke, the Justice department in Washington announced four arrests in Anniston arising from incidents there last week.

The reputy attorney general, while stating that he was pleased with the cooperation of the National Guard here, none the less firmly but quietly stated that the federal officers would stay here as long as there was danger of violence. The guardsmen are patroling the city in groups of four.

500 MARSHALS THERE

He warned that interfering with interstate bus travel is a serious federal crime with sentences ranging up to 20 years in prison. He also made it clear that the Justice department intends to protect the right of free assembly here.

White said the force of marshals would be kept at about 500. Some 200 more marshals were moving in Monday, but he said they were merely to relieve 200 others who are returning to regular duty.

The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., the "Freedom Riders" and other integration leaders still had not decided late Monday how and when the beleaugered riders were going to leave Montgomery.

5 BOMB THREATS

There were at least six false bomb threats Monday. Two of them forced the temporary evacuation of some 1,800 white children from the Cloverdale Elementary and Goodwyn Junior High Schools here. There was no explanation for the calls.

But the only fighting going on was the bitter verbal feud between U.S. and Alabama officials.

Atty. Gen. Kennedy promised immediate prosecution against "a number of people" involved in violations of federal laws springing from the last 10 days rioting and assaults in Alabama.

GALLION HITS BACK

Alabama Atty. Gen. MacDonald Gallion in return angrily accused Kennedy of "fanning the fires of strife in Alabama" by sending the marshals in.

The marshals, Gallion asserted, are for the most part "inexperienced and ineffective." If National Guardsmen had not been called out at the riot Sunday night at the First Baptist Church, "the consequences could have been most serious to the marshals themselves," the Alabaman continued.

KING COMMENTS

The arrival of the riders Saturday touched off a riot in which the anti-segregation demonstrators were brutally clubbed as they arrived by Greyhound bus.

King revealed that he had been in touch with Attorney General Kennedy three times Sunday night.

MUST BE IMPOSED

Asked whether he had requested more marshals from Kennedy, King replied:

"I kept him apprised of the developments, and he realized that the situation was getting out of hand.

"It is clear that Alabama officials will not place limits on themselves," the integration leader continued.

"The limits must be imposed from without . . . the federal government must stand up firmly and forthrightly to insure the rights of all its citizens."

There were persistent reports Monday that the Freedom Riders would give themselves up to local law enforcement officials, but the rumors did not materialize.

CITED IN CONTEMPT

Contempt citations against the group were issued by a state judge after they ignored his injunction against traveling here by bus from Birmingham.

Warrants for arrest of the riders were in the hands of a National Guard officer Sunday night at the moment he was outside the church where many of the riders were being honored.

The riders reportedly went directly from the church Sunday night to private homes.

But the Rev. Ralph Abernathy, Montgomery integration leader, insisted that "we are not hiding the Freedom Riders." He said that none of them has been served with a warrant.

Besides the decision of what the current group of riders should do, the integration leaders also apparently were discussing the offer of another group of Nashville students to ride buses to Montgomery. The group beaten here was the second wave moving through Alabama in the past 10 days.

The first wave, sponsored by the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE), was mauled in Birmingham and in Anniston.

State Patrolmen have been given orders to stop all buses coming into Alabama to read the state judge's injunction against further demonstrations.

STREETS PATROLED

Numerical strength of the federal marshals sequestered at nearby Maxwell Air Force Base was pinpointed at 550 for the first time Monday.

"There are 550 here now and I'd say there will be 550 tomorrow," said Wallace Turner, who flew in from Washington, D.C., Sunday night to take charge of White's public relations in Alabama's trouble-torn capital.

'NO CONTACT'

Three of the deputized marshals, including the officer who took command Sunday night in repelling the rioters at the Negro church, appeared with Turner in an afternoon press conference.

Turner also said that, "There's been no contact" between White and the Freedom riders regarding possible plans for the Negroes to ride buses out of Montgomery and continue their swing through Dixie testing bus segregation barriers.

ASKED FOR HELP

William Behen, whose regular job is with the U.S. Alcohol and Tax Unit at Jacksonville, Fla., led the federals in turning back Sunday night's mob attack on the Negro church.

Asked if he has had any previous experience in quelling riots, Behen replied that he's spent most of his time "raiding whisky stills."

Behen said the deputies were asked for help Sunday night by state investigator Willie B. Painter, who was nearly overwhelmed as he and another state officer tried to stem the mob's rush.

"I couldn't stand by and see them killed," said Behen.

Behen revealed that he hurled the first tear gas grenade at the angry mob of rowdies. He acted because "the mob was getting worse—throwing bricks and bottles at passing cars and knocking out windshields."

After Gov. Patterson had mobilized the guard, Behen said he was instructed that the federals should "stand by and give the guards any assistance if they needed it."

He said state and local police at the church "worked very closely" with the federals—"more as a team than as opposing forces."

New Riders Roll Into Alabama

The Atlanta Constitution
Atlanta, Ga.

By MARION GAINES
Constitution Staff Writer

MONTGOMERY—A new wave of seven "Freedom Riders" was met by more than 200 heavily armed National Guard troops and police when they arrived here Wednesday afternoon on a bus from Atlanta.

They left the bus station in private cars shortly afterword under military guard.

There was no disturbance but two white brothers, James Gardner, 30, and Charles Gardner, 23, of Montgomery, were arrested outside the station for refusing to move on when ordered by police.

State Patrol cars escorted the bus carrying the seven demonstrators—four white professors from Connecticut and three Negro students—from the Georgia state line.

Police care escorted it to the bus station where the National Guard cleared the street when it arrived.

During their 15-minute wait for a private automobile, the new group—whose stated destination is New Orleans—did not attempt to enter the bus station to test possible segregated facilities. They waited on the unloading platform until a car driven by a Montgomery Negro leader arrived.

On hand for their arrival at the station were the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. of Atlanta, the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy of Montgomery and the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth of Birmnigham.

The new group arrived in the face of a warning by Alabama Atty. Gen. MacDonald Gallion that "If any more 'Freedom Riders' come to Alabama they will be arrested."

Gallion said the arrests would be based on a state judge's injunction that prohibits "Freedom Riders" from entering or traveling in Alabama or other acts "calculated to provoke breaches of the peace."

A strong show of strength was demonstrated Wednesday morning when two buses carrying the victims of Saturday's riot left for Mississippi and Louisiana to test their bus segregation barriers.

Six guardsmen with fixed bayonets were aboard each bus.

The first bus carried 12 Negroes and one white youth, identified as Paul Dietrich of Washington, D.C., a student at the University of Virginia.

The second group of 14 persons was all Negro and included James Farmer, national director of the Congress on Racial Equality, and two students — Harold Andrews and Frank Holloway of Atlanta's Morehouse College.

SERVED AT COUNTERS

In each instance, members of the two groups sought and obtained service at the white lunch counter in the bus station. White waitresses moved away from the counter while Negro employes served the riders.

The National Guard, commanded by Maj. Gen. Henry V. Graham, put on an impressive show of keeping the peace in the terminal area, moving sidewalk traffic along briskly and allowing no crowds to congregate.

The "Freedom Riders'" buses were whisked out of the city in a convoy that included 15 to 20 State Patrol cars, each occupied by two state troopers in the front seat and three armed guardsmen in the back.

The Rev. King who came here to spark resumption of the "freedom rides," said that "several groups of riders have made inquiries about coming in" here to continue the rides through Alabama.

MORE POSSIBLE

"There's a real possibility that more riders will be coming through here," King said.

Asked if he considered the departures under heavy guard to be successful continuations of the integration efforts, King replied:

"I consider it a valid step. It proves the forces of defiance and mobs will not be able to block interstate travel."

King declared that the riders were looking forward to stopping in Jackson, despite Mississippi Gov. Ross Barnett's hints that they might be ushered non-stop through his state.

The force of federal deputy marshals, ordered in here by Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy last weekend, was not in evidence at all at the bus terminal Wednesday morning.

The 500 or so U.S. officers remained, however, at nearby Maxwell Air Force Base, poised to spring into action wherever—as Deputy Atty. Gen. Byron "Whizzer' White put it—they may be needed.

The latest wave of "Freedom Riders" left Atlanta at 12:30 p.m. on the Montgomery-Jackson-New Orleans route of the earlier group. There were no incidents as the seven boarded the bus and sat together in the middle. Atlanta detectives and Georgia Bureau of Investigation agents were present.

The new group of riders held a news conference shortly before boarding their bus. Their spokesman Yale University chaplain William Coffin, said their action was "spontaneous," set off by news of the troubles in Alabama.

Georgians in Congress Blame CORE in Alabama Violence

By ALBERT RILEY
Constitution Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Georgia members of Congress sadly deplored racial violence in Alabama Monday but blamed organized provocators from outside the state for deliberately stirring up the trouble.

Two members of the Georgia delegation were critical of the use of federal marshals to quell the disorders, but others were privately critical of Alabama's Gov. John Patterson for failing to preserve the peace.

SHOULD HAVE FORESEEN

Sen. Herman Talmadge commented for the record that state and local officials should have anticipated mob reaction to the "Freedom Riders" and taken necessary steps to preserve order.

The sentiment here could be summed up that the "Freedom Riders" asked for trouble when they went into Alabama, and got it, and that Gov. Patterson invited federal intervention by not enforcing law and order.

Rep. James C. Davis of Stone Mountain and Rep. E. L. (Tic) Forrester of Leesburg defended Patterson, however.

Rep. Carl Vinson of Milledgeville, dean of the Georgia delegation and a man who measures his words, blamed CORE (Congress for Racial Equality) for deliberately inciting violence but said two wrongs do not make a right, and the nation is the loser.

"It is not unexpected that an organization seeking trouble ends up starting trouble," Vinson said.

"The recent violence in Alabama was premeditated and deliberately instituted by the CORE organization. Had violence not erupted in Montgomery, I am confident that the CORE organization would have aggravated the tension until at some point in the South an explosion would have occurred. . . .

"But two wrongs do not make a right. And those who participated in the violence, pro-segregationists and pro-integrationists, are both at fault in the situation. Unfortunately, the nation, in the eyes of the world, is the loser. . . ."

"It is, of course, a most tragic affair in all its aspects," said Sen. Richard B. Russell.

"The CORE organization deliberately planned every detail of that invasion with the design to excite the people and to stir up their emotions. . . .

"It would have been much better if the people of Alabama had exhibited restraint and let this caravan of provocateurs pass through without disorder. . . ."

Sen. Talmadge said:

"Violence in any form merely serves to aggravate the existing bad situations.

"The following tragic events have occurred in Alabama in the last few days:

"1. The interracial provocators made repeated trips into the State of Alabama admittedly seeking violence and unfortunately found it.

"2. Law enforcement officials on the state and local level should have anticipated mob reaction to the provocators and taken the necessary steps to preserve order.

"3. If the attorney general desires to subvert United States marshals into law enforcement officers to perform local police duties, he should give high priority to the city of Washington, D.C., where crime is rampant and criminal assaults on women are daily occurrences."

Rep. James C. Davis said:

". . . This 'Freedom Riders' program is in large part directed by an organization known as CORE. That organization has a national advisory board of 16 people. Nine of those 16 have records of connection with subversive organizations in the files of the House Committee on Un-American Activities. This is the background of the groups now making trouble in Alabama. . ."

SOUGHT TROUBLE

Rep. E. L. (Tic) Forrester's comments, in part:

"They were seeking trouble. They found it.

"The endorsement of the President and his attorney general brother of this attempt to insult the South is unpardonable. That endorsement undoubtedly furnished aid and encouragement.

"Gov. Patterson is right in asking the federal government to let the state handle its own affairs."

Integrationists say we'll keep testing law

The Birmingham News, p. 1
Birmingham, Ala. Thurs., 5-18-61

Birmingham police were expected to release eight Negro and two white college students from jail early today and a spokesman for the group said they would resume efforts to test segregation laws in Alabama and Mississippi.

The Nashville students were taken into protective custody after bus drivers refused to take them out of Greyhound depot.

The group arrived by bus at 12:06 p.m. yesterday and for more than four hours about 50 city policemen were required to control the large crowds.

The Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, Birmingham Negro integrationist, was jailed on charges of interferring with an officer in the line of duty and refusing to obey a lawful command. He was released some five hours later on two $25 bonds.

Police Commissioner Eugene Connor said Shuttlesworth by publicizing the arrival of the Negroes made "a deliberate attempt to induce a breach of the peace."

He said he would consult the city legal department on whether Shuttlesworth should be charged with breach of the peace.

ALSO TAKEN to City Jail in paddy wagons were four Negro men and one woman from Birmingham.

Menwhile reports from the Highway Patrol and FBI last night that another bus load of Negroes was reported headed here to aid in integration efforts failed to materialize.

Birmingham police were out in large numbers to meet an 11:10 p.m. Trailways bus from Atlanta and an 11:45 p.m. Greyhound from Chattanooga. There were no Negro travelers on the vehicles.

Officers said they spotted a number of known Ku Klux Klansmen in the area of the two stations, and many automobiles bearing out of county license plates were parked near by.

On hand to assist police were two men from Atty. Gen. MacDonald Gallion's office. Joe Malone, investigator, and Johnny Bookout, assistant attorney general, kept in contact with Gallion and the local circuit solicitor.

POLICE CHIEF Jamie Moore confronted the integrationist group standing on the loading platform at Greyhound Depot yesterday and told them they were in danger.

"In view of the circumstances surrounding you here, it is my opinion, and that of other superior officers that I have consulated, that it is dangerous for you or others to stay here.

"I am therefore taking you into protective custody of the city of Birmingham to remove you from these premises. You will be transported to Southside Jail."

Police officers then herded the travelers into three paddy wagons.

Birmingham, Ala.

As Shuttlesworth was placed in a squad car a loud cheer went up from approximately 200 persons gathered at the rear of the station.

Thurs 5-18-61

AN ATTORNEY for the integrationist group arrived in Birmingham from Norfolk, Va., last night and is expected to obtain a writ of habeus corpus for the release of the jailed students early today.

Len Holt of Norfolk arrived here by plane with Wyatt T. Walker, director of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, Atlanta, Ga.

The Nashville students arrived here about noon yesterday with the intention of taking up where the CORE group left off Monday.

After the CORE travelers were unable to get bus transportation on to Montgomery, they boarded a plane to by-pass Mississippi and went on to New Orleans, La.

Police stopped the bus at the northern Birmingha mcity limits and arrested the two when they refused to move to the rear of the bus when ordered.

None of the group was allowed to leave the bus when it arrived at the bus station about noon. Later, however, when the driver refused to board the bus, police let the students unload.

They immediately went into the white waiting room where they tried to integrate the Post House Cafeteria, snack bar, restrooms, and seating facilities.

They were partially successful in all attempts except at the cafeteria which was closed.

POILCE RECEIVED a bomb threat while the mixed group was inside the station but immediately dismissed it as a hoax.

Large crowds gathered around the depot and were continuously moved away by members of the K-9 Corps and oficers on motorcycles.

Police Commissioner Connor and Police Chief Moore made several trips to the depot during the day and were greeted by hundreds of waving and shouting white spectators.

When informed that the bus drivers' union reportedly had instructed drivers not to take out any bus on which the Nashville group was attempting to ride, the Rev. Shuttlesworth implied that he might seek an injunction.

Capt. Walter Garrison, in charge of the police detail at the bus station yesterday, was commended by superior officers for his work.

THIRD MAN CHARGED IN MOB BEATING

Suspect Believed Wielder Of Pipe In Sunday Attack

Birmingham Post-Herald
Birmingham, Ala.
Wed. 5-17-61 P1

A third man was arrested by Birmingham police yesterday and charged with assault with intent to murder in connection with the Sunday fray at the Trailway Bus Station.

Picked from a lineup at City Jail as the man who was pictured wielding a lead pipe in Monday morning's Post-Herald was Howard Thurston Edwards, 22, of 1906 Second-av, n, Irondale.

Edwards, six feet one inch, and 160 pounds, was taken into custody at Quality Press, where he was at work as print shop foreman.

An outstanding characteristic of the pipe wielder in the Post-Herald photo was his long, bushy hair.

When arrested, Edwards had a fresh crew-cut.

Detective Melvin Bailey who, with Detectives Vernon Hart and C. L. Pierce, and Sgt. Tom Cook, is investigating the beating of a bus passenger and two newsmen, said Edwards did not appear surprised when arrested by Lt. Maurice House.

'Looked Like The Man'

"He said he knew he was being picked because he looked like the man in the picture," Bailey said. Bailey said Edwards admitted to the bus station area with a brother-in-law around noon after hearing newscasts, but denied he was involved in the beatings.

The detective said Edwards stated he and his brother-in-law had driven around for a while and then had left the scene.

Bailey said Edwards also volunteered the information that he got his haircut Monday afternoon.

He said Edwards stated that he was taking diving lessons at the YMCA and had gotten his hair cut because it was too long and was getting in his way.

The detective said Edwards has in New Orleans until tomorrow night for a celebration of the U. S. Supreme Court's decision in 1954 declaring school segregation unconstitutional. The seventh anniversary celebration will be held in a Negro Baptist Church.

The 18 arrived in New Orleans by plane late last night. They said they decided to skip Mississippi and fly to New Orleans rather than travel by bus because of the violence in Alabama and "implied threats" from Mississippi.

QUESTIONING—Detective Melvin Bailey (left) questions Jesse Oliver Faggard who is being held in connection with Sunday's beatings at the Trailways Bus Station.

'Riders' Tell Of Hatred

Birmingham Post-Herald
Birmingham, Ala.
Wed. 5-17-61 P1

NEW ORLEANS, May 16 (AP) — One of the 18 "Freedom Riders" — nine whites and nine Negroes testing segregation practices in the South—said today hatred of the Negro "prevails as a spirit" in Birmingham.

The group, 14 of them, held a press conference today in the lobby of a dormitory on the campus of the predominately Negro Xavier University. They said their violence-marked trek through the South had ended and they would leave New Orleans tomorrow night for their homes.

James Peck of New York City, the chief target of attackers at Birmingham Sunday, told newsmen "it is disheartening to see a city engulfed in such a state of hatred."

Peck had 57 stitches in his head from the melee in Birmingham. He talked to newsmen with his head wrapped in white gauze bandages.

Wed. 5-17-61

Peck, who is white, termed the trip a success—"not completely successful" — because it proved that "one could not travel freely in this country."

One of the Birmingham attackers, Peck said, taunted the group:

"You dirty Communists. Why don't you go back to Russia? You're ashamed of the white race and you're ashamed of the nigger race."

Peck said he hoped the trip "would have a sobering effect on our country."

"If we are going to live as a Christian nation," said B. Elton Cox, a 29-year-old Negro from High Point, N. C., "we are going to have to clean up our own back yard."

Cox blamed Gov. John Patterson for the violence in Alabama. He said that Patterson's lack of interest toward the Freedom Riders and his failure to furnish them protection had the same meaning as "go to it, boys, they're all yours."

Albert Bigelow of Cos Cobb, Conn., the unofficial leader of the junket, told a newsman:

"I was ashamed to be a white man in South Carolina and Alabama."

The group said it would remain a record. He said Edwards was dishonorably discharged from the Marines after conviction of a strong-arm robbery of a cab driver in New Hampshire.

Edwards served two years for this offense.

Wed. 5-17-61

Investigators continued questioning Edwards after his identification in the lineup.

P1

First man to be picked out of the lineup yesterday was Jesse Feggard, 20, a doughnut machine operator at Dolly Madison Bakeries.

Birmingham Ala.

Feggard was arrested by Bailey and Hart around midnight Monday on his return home in Alton.

The investigators said Feggard admitted being at the bus station at the time of the beatings, but denied striking any blow.

Called By Klansman

Feggard said he had been called by a well-known Klansman and told to be at the station "if he wanted to see something."

They said they also got other information from Feggard.

Feggard's father, Jesse Thompson Feggard, 48, was arrested when he appeared at City Jail to post bail for his son. The father also was identified as being at the station Sunday.

Both are charged with disorderly conduct, investigators said. Young Feggard was released on $300 bond.

Meanwhile, Commissioner Eugene Connor pushed the probe forward unrelentingly.

Another suspect was to be brought in for questioning and still another was being investigated.

Fourth man held in race violence

BY BUD GORDON
News staff writer

Police have charged a fourth man in connection with Sunday's mob violence at the Trailways Bus Station.

In jail on a charge of disorderly conduct is Melvin Dove, 40, of Vandiver, Ala.

Dove, an employe of Anderson Electric Co., Leeds, was arrested yesterday after being identified from a photograph taken during an attack on a member of a "Freedom Rider" group.

V. T. Hart, M. H. Bailey and C. L. Pierce, detectives assigned to the investigation, said Dove denied having any part in the fracas at Trailways.

HE CLAIMED he stopped by the station to use the restroom, according to Sgt. Tom Cook and Dtective J. R. Bieker.

Sgt. Cook quoted Dove as saying he had just stepped out of the rest room with a cigaret in one hand and a lighter in the other, when someone kicked him in the stomach.

Dove claimed he lost the cigaret as a result of the blow, and had his fist clinched in the picture because he was holding onto his lighter.

Howard Thurston Edwards, 22, who was arrested Tuesday on charges of assault with intent to murder in connection with the beatings, was transferred to the county jail, where he was released on $300 bond.

EDWARDS denied being at the bus station, but was identified by two eye-witnesses, police said. Identification was made ever though Edwards had his hair cut short Monday after the bus station violence.

Arrested earlier in connection with the affray were Jesse Faggard, 20, and his father, Jesse T. Faggard, 48, both of Alton. Both were charged with disorderly conduct and released on bond.

All four arrests have resulted from a single photograph snapped o fa mob beating a member of the CORE (Congress on Racial Equality) sponsored group.

Detectives said several other suspects were questioned and released yesterday, and added others will be questioned today as the probe continues.

Freedom Riders Attacked, Hospitalized In Alabama

Mobs Whip CORE Riders, Burn Bus In Outbreak Of Violence

ANNISTON, Ala. — (UPI) — About 100 whopping whites met a bus carrying a bi-racial integrationist group here Sunday, stoned it and slashed the tires and then followed the bus out of town and tossed gas bombs in it when it stopped for repairs.

The 22 passengers aboard the bus, including nine members of the Congress of Racial Equality, were rushed to a hospital for treatment. None was believed seriously injured.

The whites met the regular Atlanta to Birmingham Greyhound passenger bus at the terminal of this town of 35,000 which is situated about 30 miles from the Georgia line. They shouted threats at the CORE group which has been on a "Freedom Ride" through the South, testing southern bus segregation laws.

Police Chief J. L. Peek said his men refused to let the passengers leave the bus and attempted to hold back the crowd of whites.

The whites began slashing the tires and stoning the bus as it pulled away from the station. About three miles outside of Anniston, two of th etires went flat and the men, following in about 50 cars, converged on the bus.

Police said tear gas bombs and a fire were tossed into the bus windows.

On the bus in addition to the nine freedom riders were four Negroes and five white persons.

Witnesses reported that one Negro was struck on the head with a chain as the occupants fled from the burning bus, but the arrival of state highway patrolmen prevented further violence.

Most of the passengers aboard the Greyhound bus, which was en route from Atlanta to Birmingham, were members of the socalled "Freedom Ride" of the Congress on Racial Equality CORE. The group was traveling through Dixie in an effort to integrate bus station facilities.

Roy Robinson, manager of the Greyhound office in Atlanta, said the group had "absolutely no trouble" in the Georgia capital. He said he was riding in the bus "simply because I wanted to take a trip to Birmingham."

The bus station here was closed around noon. before the bus arrived in an apparent attempt to avoid violence. A crowd of about 100 white men was gathered at the station when the bus arrived.

Witnesses said the crowd began yelling for the "freedom riders" to get out of the bus. But a state policeman in plainclothes barred the door and kept the bus passengers inside.

The men then began stoning the bus and slashing the tires. The bus left the station but about three miles outside Anniston, two of the tires went flat.

The white men, following in some 50 cars, stopped around the bus and again yelled for the passengers to alight.

A fire then started in the bus. Police were not certain whether some sort of fire bomb or flare was tossed into the vehicle or whether the flames originated in side the bus.

The occupants began pouring from the bus. They were met by the white men. Witnesses reported some blows struck and one Negro was struck by a man wielding a chain. State highway patrolmen arrived at that time and prevented further violence.

The bus occupants were rushed to the emergency room of the Anniston Hospital for treatment of burns and lacerations, apparently received when some of them had to climb through the bus windows to escape.

A Negro student from Morehouse College in Atlanta, Charles Persons, was also hospitalized with injuries and Dr. Walter Bergman, 61, of Detroit also suffered bruises.

Bergman, a former college professor, said a group of white men who got on the bus in Atlanta began beating Person who would not move when the driver ordered him to the rear of the bus.

"Peck and I got up to intervene, not violently, and they turned their attention to us. We were knocked down and they threw the Negro to the back of the bus."

James Farmer, CORE Director, To Speak At Bethel, May 14

Birmingham, Ala

James Farmer, of New York, national director of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE), is scheduled to speak at a mass meeting scheduled for 7 P. M. Sunday, May 14, at the Bethel Baptist Church, 3191 No. 29th Ave., Collegeville.

The mass meeting, according to the announcement is jointly sponsored by the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights and CORE. The Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth is president of ACMHR and pastor of the host church.

Meantime the announcement said that the meeting is "featuring those who have been participants in CORE's Freedom Ride, 1961."

Composed of 13 men and women, Negro and white, the freedom travellers began a tour May 1 in Washington, D. C., designed for "testing segregation in busses, terminals, and rest stops in the Deep South.

Additionally, the "Freedom Riders" are due in Birimngham Sunday, according to the announcement.

More 'Riders' Go To Birmingham; Drivers Balk

By United Press International

Mounting racial tensions in Alabama; quiet, orderly integration of lunch counter in Jacksonville, Fla. and a new drive to end segregation in Atlanta city parks and courts Wednesday marked the seventh anniversary of the historic U. S. Supreme Court decision that public school segregation is unconstitutional.

The day's pattern of race - relationship developments over the South varied widely.

In Birmingham, Ala., a group of Negroes, including students, arrived from Nashville, Tenn., to resume the "freedom rides" that resulted in beatings and the burning of a bus in Alabama last weekend.

Alabama Gov. John Patterson, informed in advance that the Negroes were coming told a news conference the group was composed of "rabble - rousing agitators" and said he would not promise them protection.

When they arrived at the Birmingham bus terminal, however, police would not let them leave the bus, which was headed for New Orleans, via Tuscaloosa, Ala., and Meridian, Miss.

Police finally let the group off after an hour and a half wait, when it appeared bus drivers were refusing to make the trip.

ARREST TWO PERSONS

Police said two persons, one white and one Negro, were arrested on the outskirts of the city for refusng to cooperate with officers.

Already in New Orleans were the first two groups of "freedom riders" — Negroes and some whites — who made the bus tour of the South to integrate bus and other public facilities at the time of the court decision anniversary.

They scheduled a rally Wednesday night to mark the anniversary day.

There were these other developments:

A spokesman for the Congress on Racial Equality CORE said college students would picket major interstate bus terminals in all parts of the country in an effort to desegregate Southern bus waiting rooms. He listed 27 cities for the demonstrations, including three in the South - Nashville, Ten., Chapel Hill, N. C., and Augusta, Ga. Pickets showed up at the Nashville bus station at mid -afternoon.

City Relatively Calm After Weekend's Violence

WASHINGTON, May 22 (AP)—The federal government withdrew its U.S. marshals from the streets of tense, race-torn Montgomery, Ala., today but kept them on the edge of the city ready for action.

The Justice Department announced also the first arrests by the FBI in connection with violence against the "freedom riders." Four men were taken into custody at Anniston on charges in connection with the burning of a "freedom riders" bus several days before the mob outbreak in Montgomery.

Both of these developments came shortly after the Alabama congressional delegation had asked withdrawal of all U.S. marshals from the state. Others in Congress praised dispatch of the federal officers.

National Guards Patrol

Eight hundred National Guardsmen, mobilized under martial law, patrolled Montgomery, a city of 136,000 population, along with civilian police and segments of a federal task force already numbering more than 500.

Except for a false-alarm bomb scare at two white schools which sent 1,800 students outside while police and firemen searched the buildings, no incidents were reported in the wake of weekend race violence.

The Juctice Department announced withdrawal of the marshals to Maxwell Air Force Base, minutes away from downtown Montgomery.

The withdrawal was made, a spokesman for the department said, because the Alabama National Guard appeared to have the situation in the city under control.

At the same time, the department said it is beefing up its force of marshals in Alabama by sending 200 more to the state, swelling the total there to near 700.

Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy, who announced the dispatch of additional marshals to the state, said "obviously we're not satisfied with the situation or we wouldn't be sending more in."

Statements Conflict

This appeared to conflict with the department's later statement that the Alabama National Guard had the situation under control.

But Edwin O. Guthman, Kennedy's information officer, said the attorney general simply had meant, "Alabama is a big state and he doesn't know what is going to happen."

The four men arrested at Anniston were charged with throwing a fire bomb into a bus carrying Negro and white "freedom riders."

This attack occurred near Anniston, in the northern part of Alabama, on May 14 and was the first in a series of violent incidents climaxed by last Saturday's rioting at Montgomery in central-south Alabama.

The bomb destroyed the bus and injured some passengers. Later, a second group of "freedom riders" boarded a bus and attempted to travel through Alabama. They were severely beaten by a mob in Montgomery last Saturday morning.

The four men, all charged with damaging a bus traveling in interstate commerce, are Robert Dale Couch, 19, unemployed; Jerry Ronald Eason, 22, employed in a flower shop; Frank B. Johnson, 43, a maintenance man; and Daleford Leonard Roberts, 42, cab driver.

Atty. Gen. Kennedy, earlier today, told newsmen that the federal government has no plans to send federal troops to Alabama at the present time. But a high government source said they would be used if needed.

Sen. Lister Hill, D-Ala., made public the appeal which said Gov. John Patterson of Alabama "has assured us that law and order will be enforced and maintained."

Patterson declared martial law and called out the National Guard after a crowd of white people advanced last night on a Montgomery church crowded with Negroes.

U.S. marshals, who helped turn back and disperse the mob, came to Montgomery after whites severely beat a group of "freedom riders"—young Negro and white students testing the state's segregation laws by riding together on a bus.

Shameful, Mansfield Says

Sen. Mike Mansfield of Montana, the Senate Democratic leader, said the mauling of the bus riders in Montgomery Saturday "makes us as a nation hang our heads in shame."

Most sentiment expressed in Congress supported the views of Mansfield rather than the Alabama delegation.

Atty. Gen. Kennedy said the marshals would stay in Montgomery "until we receive assurances by action that the situation is under control in the state of Alabama."

"Without any question," he continued, "you would have had major bloodshed in Montgomery" last night if U.S. marshals had not been there.

Kennedy revealed that his department plans to enter federal court in Montgomery and attempt some kind of prosecution, The attorney general would not give details. But he said he believed the department had evidence of violation of federal law and "there will be a number of people involved."

Riders in Safekeeping

Kennedy said the department knows where the "freedom riders" now are staying in Montgomery. But he said the information was confidential, and he would not give it to Alabama and Montgomery officials. The riders, Kennedy said, are being interviewed by the FBI.

All the demonstrators have been ruled in contempt of a state court which issued an injunction forbidding them to ride buses. Presumably they will be jailed if located by state officers.

A high government source, who would not allow use of his name, said it is obvious that the federal government has decided to end the racial violence in Alabama. He said there could be no turning back from this decision and this means the use of troops if there is no other way.

Four Arrested On Federal Charge In Bus Burning

WASHINGTON — (UPI)—Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy Monday announced the arrest of four men in connection with the May 14 burning of a bus carrying freedom riders at Anniston, Ala.

FBI agents carried out the arrest—the first since racial violence broke out in Alabama last week.

Kennedy said the four Anniston men have been charged with damaging and destroying a bus operated in interstate commerce "with intent to endanger the safety of persons on board."

Earlier Monday afternon, the attorney general filled in President Kennedy on the incendiary Alabama situation during a 45 minute conference at the White House, an aide told newsmen.

The four men charged at Anniston Monday were identified as Robert D. Couch, 19, unemployed; Jerry Eason, 22, a flower shop employe; Frank B. Johnson, 43, a maintenance man, and Dalford L. Roberts, 42, a cab driver.

Kennedy said cases against them "will be pursued wth utmost vigor."

If convicted, the four men face the maximum penalty of $10,000 in fines and 20 years imprisonment. They were arraigned before U. S. Commissioner Ruby P. Robinson here and were taken to Calhoun County jail in lieu of $5,000 bond each.

Roberts and Eason waived the right to a preliminary hearing, the Justice Department said. But the hearing has been set for Johnson and Couch on May 29.

About a dozen persons were injured when an angry mob greeted the bi-racial freedom riders when they arrived at Anniston en route from Atlanta, Ga., May 14.

Scores of additonal U. S. marshals piled into Montgomery Monday to bolster 500 federal officers trying to keep racial peace in this riot-torn city .

The attorney general announced that a number of persons in Alabama would be charged with violating federal law.

Kennedy, who has been in close touch with the President on the situation, ordered in 200 additional U. S. marshals Monday to bolster the 500 already on hand.

ORDER NOT ASSURED

He said he did so because he failed to get assurance from Gov. Patterson that law and order would be maintained.

SITUATION NOT SATISFACTORY

The attorney general said more marshals were being sent to the scene because the situation still was "obviously not satisfactory."

said local authorities did not arrive until about 15 minutes after the demonstrators began surrounding the church.

There were indications the Kennedy administration was upholding any further decision on the crisis until it can determine the effectiveness of Gov. John Patterson's declaration of martial law Sunday, night.

PREVENT MAJOR BLOODSHED

Kennedy told reporters the presence of marshals in Montgomery prevented major bloodshed Sunday when a white mob attacked a Montgomery church where Negroes were meeting. He

1,000 Howling Whites Beat Bus Integrators In Alabama

Negroes Stomped, Set On Fire In Montgomery —Aide To Bob Kennedy Slugged In Bloody 'Freedom Ride' Riot

By The Associated Press

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 20.—A bloody race riot in which at least 20 persons were beaten with clubs and fists raged for two hours here Saturday after a white mob greeted a busload of "Freedom Riders."

Police, unable to restore order by other methods, tossed tear gas bombs into the howling crowd.

Nine persons—seven wihte men, a white woman and a Negro man—were arrested. Most were charged with failing to obey an officer's command.

The mob, which at times numbered about 1,000, attacked the racially mixed bus riders first within an instant after the Greyhound bus pulled into the downto wn station here from Birmingham.

Mr. Seigenthaler

But the savage fury left bystanders pummeled to the ground, too, including a representative of the Justice Department in Washington who tried to rescue a white girl from the mob.

Former Nashvillan

John Seigenthaler, 32, a representative of Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy, was taken to a hospital with a cut behind his ear. He was slugged from behind as he struggled to help the besieged girl, one of the "Freedom Riders." He is a former Nashville reporter.

At least four out-of-town reporters and photographers were beaten as they attempted to film the rioting. Others lost their cameras, some of them smashed.

Some of the beaten Negroes had no apparent connection with the group which came here from Birmingham on a trip to challenge racial barriers at bus stations. The trip started at Nashville.

Several young white boys waylaid four Negroes walking along a street near the bus station, poured an inflammable liquid on one's clothes and set it afire. The blaze burned out, butthe man was left lying in the street. Another Negro with hims uffered a broken legt when the white youths pounced on him.

An 18-year-oldo employe of the Montgomery Advertiser-Journal, Paschal Pike, was attacked by th emob when he sought to enter the bus station to pick up a package. He said he was beaten when he identified himself as an employe of the newspapers.

White Girls Flee

The two white girls on the bus, Susan Wilbur, a student at Peabody College in Nashville, and Susan Hermann, a Fisk University exchange student who lives in Los Angeles, said they got away from the pursuing crowd by running first into a church and then into an office building.

They were taken into protective custody by police.

The rioting started at the bus station but spread quickly to adjoining streets. Police finally cleared the area for two blocks around.

Even after police arrived, about 10 minutes after the fighting broke out, the battle raged on—mobs of white people chasing, catching, clubbing and stomping any and all targets of their anger.

A gang of women attacked two young white women who came in on the integrated Greyhound bus. Men behind them shouted, "Hit 'em, hit 'em again."

The women flailed away with their purses and their hands.

A white man tried to protect the two women. The men attacked him, clubbed him to the ground. kicked him and left him lying motionless and bloody on the ground.

Horace Cort, an Associated Press photographer, said he saw two members of the racially integrated group try to outrun a huge crowd of the roaring attackers.

The white men chased them down, caught them, knocked them to the ground, "and jumped up and down on them," Cort said.

He said an ambulance pulled into the area. Somebody in the mob of white men shouted, and part of the mob started after the ambulance. The driver roared away.

No Guard For Agitators

The fighting came in two waves—the first when a crowd of about 200, waiting at the station for the bus, jumped the riders and some newsmen standing alongside the bus with no police in evidence, and the second after a brief lull that came when police arrived.

Police Commissioner L. P. Sullivan, sitting in a car on the other side of the station from the fighting during the first wave, was asked by a newsman if he had anticipated trouble.

He said:

"We respond to calls here just like any place else. But we have no intention of standing guard for a bunch of trouble-makers coming into our city and making trouble."

Highway Patrol reinforcements tried to contain the rioters.

Floyd Mann, state public safety director, personally rescued one Negro who had been beaten to the ground. Mann pulled his pistol and ordered the crowd of white people back from the crumpled form of the Negro.

"We are going to keep law and order," he said.

Mann, pistol in hand, also forced some of the rioters to release a television newsman.

An hour after the battle started, at least 1,000 persons stood around the bus station. Apparently many were curious spectators.

The sheriff's mounted posse—formed for riot control—arrived an hour and 15 minutes after the first outbreak.

Police Reinforced

The 11 officers on horseback were armed with billy sticks and pistols. A few moments later 10 more police cars arrived.

Uniformed officers moved in and forced a crowd of about 1,000 persons to leave the area around the station. But some members of the crowd only moved across the street, and into other nearby areas, and hovered in small groups.

The original "Freedom Riders," members of the Congress of Racial Equality testing bus station segregation in Dixie, tried Monday to get a bus out of Birmingham, failed, and finally took a plane for New Orleans that night.

The latest wave of integrated riders, most of them college students from Tennessee, said they considered their effort a "continuation of the Freedom Ride to New Orleans."

Bus drivers repeatedly refused to take the riders out of Birmingham — apparently fearing violence from white extremists.

But at 8:30 Saturday morning after waiting in the white waiting room at Birmingham's Greyhound station almost 18 hours, the group of 18 Negroes and three white persons unexpectedly got on board a bus.

State investigators in a car—and apparently others in a small plane that repeatedly circled over head—went with the bus down U. S. 31 toward Montgomery.

Once they ran into a hint of trouble.

Coming up to a barricade at Clanton, halfway between Birmingham and Montgomery, the bus stopped and a man told state investigators he had reason to believe trouble awaited them ahead.

Took Back Road

The investigators ordered the bus turned around and moved onto an old state highway for the remainder of the trip. It got to Montgomery 35 minutes earlier than expected.

At Birmingham during the week, no further violence came after the Sunday beatings at a Trailways bus station, but tension remained high.

Wednesday, seven of the youths in the group beaten at Montgomery Saturday were among more than a dozen taken into protective custody by city police after a driver refused to leave with them.

After being held about 30 hours, the seven were awakened about midnight Thursday, whisked 120 miles in a black limousine to the Tennessee state line, and turned loose by police.

They returned to Birmingham in a matter of hours by private car, saying they still intended to ride integrated aboard a bus out of Birmingham.

Statement Issued By Patterson

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 20.—(AP)—Gov. John Patterson Saturday issued a statement through an aide saying, "I will not allow any group to take the law in their hands."

"We are fully able to enforce the laws of the state. I have no sympathy for law violators whether they be agitators from outside Alabama or inside-the-state troublemakers . . ."

The Kennedys Are Playing With Fire

Publisher William Loeb In The Manchester (N.H.) Union Leader

THE Kennedy brothers are apparently determined to get as much political mileage as possible out of the tragedy of racial discord in this country.

They seem to have no understanding that their cultivation of the Northern Negro vote is likely to set a fire going in the South which will do great damage and weaken us at a time when we can ill afford internal dissension.

The South, with its huge Negro population, has problems which no Northerner, unless he has lived in the South, can understand or appreciate.

The South is entitled to work out these problems in its own way and in its own time schedule. In that direction alone, lies a possibility of peace and eventual progress.

But a section of the Democratic Party in the North has discovered what it thinks is a sure-fire method of assuring control of the Negro vote in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago and other Northern cities. This formula consists of making a whipping boy out of the white people in the South for the benefit of the Negroes in those states.

Had the Southern political leaders been sound in their thinking they would have realized that the Democratic platform forced through at Los Angeles by the Kennedy people meant exactly what it said. But this is an age in which apparently no one ever believes that the worst is going to happen. This applies equally to Khrushchev's remarks in predicting what he intends to do with this country.

Now the South, unfortunately, is getting a taste of what it voted for. The recent mixed bus rides of white and colored agitators in Tennessee and Alabama and other Southern states was a deliberately provocative act. The action of the Kennedys in sending federal marshals into those states to aid the outside agitators was, of course, excellent politics from the standpoint of the Northern Democrats. What this action did, of course, was to encourage this sort of provocative activity. Now there will be more violence and more tragedy in the South.

The Southern white man is not going to take lying down the Kennedy brothers' forcible and dictatorial attempts to change their way of life. There are not enough federal marshals in Washington to sit on the doorstep of every white man and woman in the South.

The Kennedy brothers' actions in this connection shows the same ignorance of the South as their ideas about Africa. There are, of course, educated Negroes in Africa and, of course, fine educated Negroes in the South. But there are many primitive, almost half-savage Negroes in both Africa and the South. They can be easily aroused and stirred into wild, uncontrollable emotions. When this occurs, it naturally arouses equally strong emotions on the part of the Southern white men and women who rise to defend their homes and their women and their children.

Not being content with causing the Cuban catastrophe, the Kennedy brothers now apparently are going to play with racial matches which they don't understand are about to light a racial conflict in the South that will really delight the communists and everyone else who want to weaken this troubled nation of ours.

As this newspaper said earlier, the old frontier had its Calamity Jane and the new frontier most assuredly has its Calamity Jack.

FREEDOM RIDERS
INJUNCTION

20 to Testify for U. S. At Injunction Hearing

The Sunday Star
P. A-7

By a Star Staff Writer

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 27.—At least 20 witnesses will be called by the Justice Department to support its plea for a Federal Court injunction requiring Montgomery and Birmingham police officials to give protection to the Freedom Riders.

This was disclosed here today as Justice Department attorneys rounded up witnesses for the hearing Monday.

The evidence promises to be shocking. A Government source said that when the full picture following last week end's disis revealed of what happened orders here were these officihere and in other places in als:

Alabama, "the people of the South will be horrified."

The brutality that took place when racially-mixed white and Negro Freedom Riders undertook to test Alabama's segregation barriers was described by one source as "almost unbelievable."

May 28 1961

The Government's request for a temporary restraining order against the Alabama police authorities and others will be heard by United States District Judge Frank M. Johnson, jr. in Federal Court here starting at 9 a.m. Monday.

Washington D.C.

Still Under Martial Law

Government attorneys made final preparations for the hearing as Montgomery entered its seventh day under martial law growing out of the rioting which broke out after the arrival of 21 Freedom Riders a week ago.

Maj. Gen. Henry V. Graham, the State's adjutant general, ordered extra precautions for the week end. But he said he had received no rumblings of any disorder and added: "We don't anticipate any trouble."

The Government's suit for an injunction will be presented by a Justice Department team headed by John Doar of 4514 Drummond avenue, Chevy Chase, Md., First Assistant Attorney General in the Civic Right's Division, assisted by Carl Eardly of 5504 Charlcote road, Bethesda. Six other Justice Department attorneys are here assisting them.

Names of the Government witnesses were not revealed. FBI agents have been working to round up witnesses since the violence here and earlier in Birmingham and Anniston involving the Freedom Riders.

Officials Named

Named in an amended complaint filed by the Government from the State to the local level have been named as defendants.

The suit was brought by the Rev. Ralph Abernathy and six of the "Freedom Riders" who were attacked by the mob here last Saturday.

Attorney Charles Conley said ten of those arrested here this week were intervening in the suit. The Justice Department previously entered the case as a "friend of the court" at Judge Johnson's request.

- Lester B. Sullivan, commissioner of public safety, and Police Chief Goodwin J. Ruppenthal of Montgomery and Eugene T. Connor, and Jamie Moore, holding similar positions in Birmingham.
- Claude V. Henley of Montgomery, arrested as one of the participants in last Saturday's rioting here, was also named.

Originally, the proceedings were directed only against five Ku Klux Klan organizations and their officers.

The Government's complaint charged that the Montgomery and Birmingham police officials "withheld police protection" from the Freedom Riders and "refused to prevent unlawful assault upon and harrassment of" the demonstrators.

The Government charged that the Montgomery police department knew of the expected arrival of the interstate bus last Saturday and "deliberately failed to take measures to insure the safety" of the Freedom Riders. Judge Johnson was asked to enjoin temporarily the Montgomery and Birmingham police officials, and "all those acting in concert with them from failing or refusing to provide police protection for persons traveling in interstate commerce."

Hearing Scheduled

Judge Johnson has scheduled a hearing Wednesday on a plea by Negro leaders and some of the Freedom Riders to forbid any interference with passengers travelling interstate by bus.

In this new move in a massive attack on enforced segregation in bus stations, one of the attorneys for the complainants said, State agencies and Alabama law enforcement officers

Justice Department Thinks Injunction Is Unwise

New York, N.Y.

By ANTHONY LEWIS

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, June 2—The Justice Department made clear today that it did not approve of the injunction issued by Federal Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. against continuation of the Freedom Riders in Alabama.

The view at the department is still that anti-segregation groups would be wiser not to make any new bus trips into the Deep South at the moment. This view was expressed last week in the departmnet's call for a "cooling-off period."

But it was forcefully pointed out that asking people to use restraint was far different from telling them they may not exercise their constitutional rights. That was the effect of Judge Johnson's order today.

The Judge barred the Congress of Racial Equality and others fighting segregation from "sponsoring, financing, assisting or encouraging any individual or group of individuals in traveling in interstate commerce through or in Alabama for the purpose of testing the state or local laws as those laws relate to racial segregation."

The Justice Depatrment originally asked Judge Johnson for injunctions to bar Ku Klux Klan groups from engaging in violence against the Freedom Riders, and to force the Montgomery police to protect the riders. Judge Johnson issued these injunctions.

Memorandum Is Filed

The Montgomery police, during the court proceedings, asked the judge to restrain the Freedom Riders. The Justice Department opposed this request and filed a memorandum of law explaining why it thought such an order improper.

The view at the department is essentially that the Supreme Court settled the question in its Little Rock opinion in 1958. The court said then that the way to stop violence arising over the exercise of constitutional rights was not to enjoin their exercise.

A department spokesman reiterated today that the reason for desiring a "cooling-off period" was a genuine fear that innocent persons might be injured. He noted also that the whole question of bus segregation was now before the Interstate Commerce Commission.

I. C. C. Prodded Again

The department sent another letter to the commission today urging "immediate" action. On Monday, Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy had called for regulations against segregation on buses and in terminal waiting rooms, rest rooms and restaurants.

Today's letter said the department was considering a similar petition to the agency to adopt explicit rules against racial segregation in railroad facilities. But it said that was no reason to delay action on the bus problem.

At the commission, a spokesman said the Attorney General's bus petition was under "active consideration."

The department also announced today the withdrawal of the last Federal marshals from Alabama. About 700 were sent there when violence against the Freedom Riders broke out. All but 100 were recalled a week ago yesterday, and fifty more had left since then. The last fifty were affected by today's order.

SHUTTLESWORTH IS CHARGED IN RIOT; NEGRO BUS RIDERS BACK AT STATION

Connor Says Negro Leader Sparked Mob

MONTGOMERY, May 19 (AP)—Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones late today issued an injunction forbidding "Freedom Riders" from testing bus segregation in Alabama.

The injunction, requested by Alabama Atty. Gen. MacDonald Gallion after conferences with Gov. John Patterson, was issued against the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) and any of its followers.

It prohibits them from "entry into and travel within the state of Alabama, and engaging in the so-called 'freedom ride' and other acts or conduct calculated to provoke breaches of the peace."

The Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, Birmingham Negro minister, was arrested late yesterday on charges of provoking the Sunday riot at Trailways Bus Station where several persons were lead-piped in a demonstration against desegregated bus travelers.

The minister also was charged with provoking Wednesday's disturbance at the Greyhound Terminal where a bi-racial group of Tennessee students were stranded in an attempt to make a desegregated trip to Montgomery.

Charges against Shuttlesworth were made by City Commissioner Eugene Connor.

Warrants were served by two sheriff's deputies who arrested the minister at his home and took him to County Jail.

Bond was set at $1000 on each charge.

Shuttlesworth did not make bond immediately and was locked up.

At about the time Shuttlesworth was being booked in at County Jail, another bi-racial group of students was being refused bus passage to Montgomery.

The students, 21 in all, included seven who had been returned to Tennessee earlier in the day by city police, and 14 additional.

They arrived at the Greyhound Station in three automobiles. One car showed a Nashville, Tenn., license. The other two were licensed here.

Return Here

The 21 went directly to the white waiting room.

They failed in a first attempt to leave by bus for Montgomery at 3 p.m. yesterday.

Their second effort failed just after 5.

Bus drivers refused to take the buses out because they could get no promise of protection through the state.

It was understood that the city had offered protection for buses to the city limits, but that the bus company could get no promise of a convoy beyond.

In the group of 21 were two white girls, four Negro girls, one white boy and 14 Negro boys.

When they failed on their second attempt to get passage, they gathered on the station's loading platform and began reading Bible verses.

When the segregation-protest group came in Wednesday, it was stranded in the bus station for several hours. At nightfall police took the group into protective custody and transferred its members to City Jail. They remained there for 30 hours.

Police said the second group would not be taken to jail.

Apparently plans were to leave them in the station for the night.

Shuttlesworth Charged

The charges against Shuttlesworth were identical except that the first cites Sunday disturbances at the Trailways. The second cited the Wednesday affair at the Greyhound.

The charges held that Shuttlesworth (count 1) "did conspire with person or persons unknown to accomplish a criminal or unlawful purpose, to wit: To cause a mob to gather at the Trailways Bus Depot in the City of Birmingham, Ala.. on the 14th day of May, 1961, for the purpose of provoking a breach of the peace" and (Count 2) Did disturb the peace of others by conduct calculated to provoke a breach of the peace in that he did cause a mob to gather at the Trailways Bus Depot in the City of Birmingham, Ala.. on the 14th day of May, 1961, for the purpose of provoking a breach of the peace. The second charges substitute Greyhound for Trailways and May 17 for May 14.

Shuttlesworth sent a telegram to Gov. John Patterson early Wednesday stating that a group of "Freedom riders" would reach Birmingham at mid-day and ask for protection for them.

Taken To Tennessee

City police took the seven in protective custody from the jail at after midnight, put them in a black limousine with officers, and escorted them out of town. Police said three unmarked cars rode in escort..

They reached Ardmore, on the Tennessee line in North-Central Alabama, four hours and ten minutes later. They were put out on the highway and Commissioner Connor told them:

"There is the Tennessee line. Cross it and save this state and yourself a lot of trouble."

One of the Negroes replied:

"We'll see you back in Birmingham about noon."

Three who came in with the group of seven Wednesday took different paths.

Paul Brooks, a Negro student at the American Baptist Theological Seminary in Nashville, and James William Zwerg, 21, a white student at Fisk University, got suspended fines on charges of failing to obey an officer. They then joined the travelers here.

Girl Released

Mary McCollum, 21-year-old white student at Peabody College in Nashville, was released to her father earlier.

Walter McCollum of Snyder, N.Y., her father, said:

"I sent her to Nashville for an education, not to get mixed up in this integregation mess." They ordered an airliner en route to New York.

Connor said he took sole responsibility for taking the Negroes to the Tennessee line.

"In view of the stand taken by these students, this was the only way for police to protect them and the citizens of Birmingham," he said.

The students arrived here shortly after noon on Wednesday and spent four tense hours at the bus station trying to take a bus to Montgomery.

But their driver refused to drive the bus with them on board—the same thing that happened to the CORE group on Monday.

A short time later police took them into custody, along with several Negroes who joined the group here.

All were freed later.

Police Arrest Shuttlesworth On 2 Counts

BIRMINGHAM (AP) — The Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, Negro integration leader here, was arrested Friday on charges of conspiracy and disturbing the peace.

Both counts stemmed from last Sunday's bus integration incident here when several persons, including some integrationists, were beaten at the Trailways Bus Station.

The first count charges that he conspired with unknown persons to cause a mob to gather at the Trailways station here.

Bond was fixed at $1,000 on each count.

Shuttlesworth Arrested In Riders Issue

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — Rev. Fred Shuttlesworth, integration leader and instrumental in the Montgomery bus boycott, was arrested in Birmingham, Ala. Friday on four charges of conspiracy, in connection with an attempt by "freedom riders" to test interstate transportation laws in Alabama.

Shuttlesworth's bond was set at $2,000 on two counts of conspiracy to riot and two counts of conspiracy to breach of peace.

Rev. Wyatt Tee Walker, official of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference headquarters in Atlanta, stated that "twenty two students went to the Greyhound bus terminal in Birmingham at 2:30 Friday and drivers refused to take them to Montgomery." At last report the students were still at the bus station attempting to get to Montgomery.

The racially - mixed group entered a Birmingham bus terminal for the third time in less than a week to test Alabama's rigid segregation laws.

The group of 21 students from Nashville, Tenn., including two white girls and one white youth, numbered some who were escorted to the Tennessee state line early Friday by city police after spending some 21 hours in "protective custody" following an earlier integration attempt.

There was no violence at the Greyhound Bus Terminal in downtown Birmingham. About 20 police officers kept order, and they were accompanied by a police dog.

The group had sought to take a bus to Montgomery, the capital of Alabama, but was stymied as in the past by the apparent refusal of drivers to take the buses out with integrated passengers for fear of violence.

They stood about the Montgomery - bound bus in the terminal, waiting for a driver to appear but later moved into the waiting room. It was apparent that the drivers, as on two previous occasions, would not take the bus out of the terminal.

INJUNCTION ISSUED

Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones Friday night issued an injunction against "Freedom Riders," prohibiting them from traveling in Alabama.

Jones' order was handed down at the request of Alabama Atty. Gen. MacDonald Gallion.

Johnson's temporary injunction said the Congress of Racial Equality, "its officers, agents, members, employees, servants, attorneys| followers and all other persons in active concert or participation" with the congress were enjoined from entry into and travel within the state and engaging in the "freedom ride."

Both counts stemmed from last Sunday's bus integration incident here when several persons, including some integrationists, were beaten at the Trailways Bus Statiion.

The first count charges that he conspired with unknown persons to cause a mob to gather at the Trailways station here.

Bond was fixed at $1,000 on each count.

GOVERNOR JOHN PATTERSON
FREEDOM RIDERS - MAY 14, 1961

LOOK OVER CONGRATULATORY TELEGRAMS

Patterson's Position Draws National Praise

Gov. John Patterson's vigorous opposition to federal intervention in Montgomery's racial crisis has provoked a flood of congratulatory messages from throughout the nation.

Press Secretary Harry Cook said Monday night the governor had received "several hundred" telegrams during the day and as many telephone calls.

"We have not yet made an accurate check of the telegrams but it would appear that at least 95 per cent of them are in support of the governor's position," Cook said.

25 TELEGRAMS

A spot check of some 25 such telegrams turned up but one critical message — the others overwhelmingly endorsed his stand.

"Congratulations on your great strength and great character," read one wire from New York City; "You have our support," wired several people from New Haven, Conn.; "Congratulations," wired a group of students from Princeton (N.J.) University.

A telegram from Selma contained 14 pages of singnatures—approximately 550 names—strongly endorsing the governor's stand.

The wires came from all parts of the nation, although primarily from the Southern states.

GOVERNORS APPLAUD

The governor's stand was also applauded by three Dixie governors—Orval Faubus of Arkansas, Earnest Vandiver of Georgia, and Ross Barnett of Mississippi.

Also received was a copy of a telegram sent to President Kennedy by Alabama's entire Congressional delegation. The message said in full:

"We, of course, deplore violence or lawlessness in any form. The governor of Alabama has assured us that the state of Alabama has the means, the ability and the will to keep the peace without outside help and he has assured us that law and order will be enforced and maintained. He has invoked martial law to prevent and control any further outbreaks of violence. Under the circumstances, we believe that the sovereignty of the state and the police powers guaranteed and reserved to the state by the constitution should be respected and upheld until and unless federal help is requested by the state. We further believe that the federal marshals should be withdrawn, and we urge that everything possible be done to keep outside agitators out of Alabama."

SWITCHBOARD BUSY

Switchboard operators in the Executive Department reported a "tremendous number" of calls from throughout Alabama and the nation.

The operators on duty took many of the messages which Patterson could not take time to accept personally. They specifically mentioned congratulatory calls from Michigan, California, Illinois and Canada.

"It has been one of the busiest days we've ever had," one operator said. "All the messages I took were complimentary of the governor's action."

Patterson said he was "gratified and encouraged" by the firm support given him by the Southern governors.

"I am saddened by the recent incidents in Alabama calculatedly provoked by a group of irresponsible outsiders," Patterson said. "I say again that Alabama will enforce the law diligently and fearlessly. State authorities together with the Alabama National Guard are fully able and will control the local situation."

PHONE EFFORTS FAIL

Governor 'Out,' President Told

President Kennedy talked by phone with Lt. Gov. Albert Boutwell or more than 15 minutes Friday after several efforts by the President to reach Gov. John Patterson had failed.

Both Boutwell and the White House confirmed the conversation between Kennedy and Boutwell but neither would confirm the obvious — that the subject of the extended conversation was the critical racial situation in Alabama.

"The President called me because he couldn't reach the governor," Boutwell said. "He said efforts had been made without success to contact the governor and he asked me to try to reach Gov. Patterson and ask him to call him (Kennedy) at the White House. I feel that any statements as to what was discussed should come from either the White House or the governor's office."

GOVERNOR 'NOT IN'

It was learned that Boutwell tried to reach Patterson at his office but was told that the governor was not in. Patterson was in his office most of the day.

Neither the governor's office nor the White House would comment on what was discussed between Kennedy and Boutwell.

Gov. Patterson, through Press Secretary Harry Cook, issued a "no comment" to the development.

A call to Pierre Salinger, Kennedy's press secretary, was no more illuminating.

Salinger's secretary reported that he could not come to the phone, but she agreed to relay a couple of questions to him, specifically:

Had the President tried and failed to reach Gov. Patterson by phone? What did the President discuss with Lt. Gov. Boutwell?

The secretary, who identified herself as a Mrs. Cowan, returned to the phone moments later and said: "Mr. Salinger says that as far as he knows the President did talk with the lieutenant governor and he has no further comment to make on the situa-

'No sympathy for violators'—

Violence will not be tolerated, Patterson says in statement

Following is a statement released by Alabama Gov. John Patterson at 2 p.m. Saturday:

"I have no sympathy for law violators whether they be agitators from outside Alabama or inside-the-state trouble-makers. It is our duty to maintain the law, and I will not allow any group to take the law in their hands. The good name of our state and people is at stake, and I can state frankly that violance of any type will not be tolerated.

"The highways of Alabama are safe, and state patrolmen will do all in their power to eenforce law and order at all times. We have the men, the equipment and the will to keep the public peace and we need no help—from the federal government, from 'interested citizens' or anyone else.

"We are fully able to enforce the laws of this state. I have ordered the State Department of Public Safety to cooperate fully with all city police departments and county sheriff's offices in maintaining order on the highways and elsewhere in the state. We will honor any requests from these law enforcement agencies for assistance.

"WHILE WE WILL do our utmost to keep the public highways clear and to guard against all discorder, we cannot escort busloads or carloads of rabble rousers about our state from city to city for the avowed purpose of disobeying our laws, flaunting our customs and traditions and creating racial incidents.

"Such unlawful acts serve only to further enrage our populace. I have no use for these agitators or their kind.

"Yet, we have the duty and the desire to protect human lives no matter who is involved, to safeguard personal property and to keep order. How we will do so is a matter for us to determine.

"We are a peaceful, hospitable, God-fearing people and we welcome visitors from all other states. They can travel in Alabama secure in the knowledge that we have one of the best law enforcement records in the nation. We intend to keep this recognition."

Alabama Governor Fails State, Nation

Gov. John Patterson of Alabama has shamed his state, the nation and the South by his irresponsible words and failure to prevent mob violence. He is the chief executive and the major responsibility is his. Before the Montgomery riots he had pledged adequate law enforcement. It was not present. As of this writing both he and the local law enforcement officers seemingly are making efforts to arrest all but the guilty. Gov. Patterson threatens to arrest the U.S. marshals sent to provide protection which he failed to give. Local police reportedly are planning to arrest the victims. Meanwhile the mob and its leaders remain at large.

This is a brazen attitude which confirms all that the South's worst critics have said of her. It confirms too, that fear, hatred and terror do stalk the streets of Alabama's cities. At Anniston, Birmingham and Montgomery the police were late. If observers draw the most obvious and cynical conclusions from this fact, the governor, the police chiefs and mayors have but themselves to blame.

The governor for some time indirectly has encouraged extremist elements in his state by declaring he would close down the public and university school system rather than obey a court order of desegregation. In this he has been joined by most of the state press and local political leadership. His threat to arrest U.S. marshals can be construed as direct encouragement of the mob elements. The violence in Alabama is, in part at least, a harvest of such leadership.

Whatever one's views of the Freedom Riders, they have the right as citizens to ride a bus wherever it goes. Carrying out their passive resistance techniques they have offered no provocation.

Alabama's shame, which is shared by the South, is also a serious blow to the security and prestige of this nation.

We earnestly hope that the federal government will protect law-abiding citizens wherever and whenever local authorities fail to provide full protection of the law.

'Rider' Hearing Opening Today

Trials In Federal Court Resulted From Riots At Montgomery

By The Associated Press

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Sept. 4. — A hearing opens in Federal Court Tuesday on a so-called "Freedom Rider" suit seeking to desegregate Montgomery bus stations and to protect integrationists from arrest.

Filed last May in the aftermath of bloody racial violence, the complaint asks for a court order to prohibit bus lines or city, county and state authorities from "enforcing and pursuing a policy, practice, custom and usage of separation of the races" in buses and terminals.

Attacks State Law

It also attacks constitutionality of the state's breach of the peace law under which 11 self-styled "Freedom Riders," including four white professors from Eastern colleges, were arrested May 25 while seated together at a bus station lunch counter.

The law prohibits any "conduct calculated to provoke a breach of the peace" and provides a maximum penalty of 12 months in jail and a $500 fine.

Trials of the 11 defendants in state court have been postponed pending outcome of the hearing before United States Dist. Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr.

Want Arrests Stopped

The suit asks Judge Johnson to prevent authorities from "arresting, harassing, intimidating, threatening and coercing" bus riders who seek to tear down racial barriers.

Among the so-called "Freedom Riders" filing the complaint were the Rev. William S. Coffin Jr., chaplain at Yale University; the Rev. Gaylord B. Noyce, assistant professor at the Yale Divinity School; Dr. David E. Swift, professor of religion at Wesleyan in Middletown, Conn., and Dr. John D. Maguire, assistant professor of religion at Wesleyan.

C.O.R.E. Asks 'Riders' To Serve Sentences

WASHINGTON, Sept. 4. — (AP) — The Congress of Racial Equality Monday urged all so-called "Freedom Riders" who have appealed their convictions of breaching the peace in Jackson, Miss., to return there and serve sentences imposed in city court.

It said 260 now are free on bond. The cases stem from the Congress' efforts earlier this year to break down racial segregation in bus, railroad and airport terminal facilities. Most of the sentences were for two months' imprisonment plus fines of $200.

At the same time C.O.R.E. announced the launching of new campaigns to end discriminatory employment practices in national retail chain stores, to obtain unlimited decent housing for all Americans and to continue and intensify its campaign for registering eligible Negro voters.

The decisions were made in resolutions adopted at the conclusion of the Congress' annual four-day convention here.

Hearing Set On Alabama Rider Attack

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — U.S. Dist. Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr., today was to begin a hearing on a "Freedom Rider" suit attacking the constitutionality of the state's breach of the peace laws.

The complaint, filed last May following racial violence in Montgomery, attacks the law under which 11 Freedom Riders were arrested on May 25 while seated together at a bus station lunch counter.

It also seeks to desegregate Montgomery bus stations, asking for a court order to prohibit bus lines or city, county and state authorities from "enforcing and pursuing a policy, practice, custom and usage of separation of the races" in buses and terminals.

Johnson is asked to prevent authorities from "arresting, harassing, intimidating, threatening and coercing" bus riders who seek to tear down racial barriers.

The breach of the peace law under attack forbids any "conduct calculated to provoke a breach of the peace" and provides a maximum penalty of 12 months in jail and a $500 fine.

Four white professors are among the Freedom Riders filing the complaint. They are the Rev. William S. Coffin Jr., chaplain at Yale University; the Rev. Gaylord B. Noyce, assistant professor at the Yale Divinity School; Dr. David E. Swift, professor of religion at Wesleyan in Middleton, Conn., and Dr. John D. Maguire, assistant professor of religion at Wesleyan.

Alabama Officials Deny U.S. Charges

Testimony Opens In Suit To Break Racial Barriers

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Sept. 5.—(UPI)—State and city authorities denied Tuesday they sought to maintain segregated facilities at bus terminals here by arresting a biracial group of so-called "Freedom Riders."

Alabama Atty. Gen. MacDonald Gallion and Assistant Police Chief W. M. Stanley said they instructed their subordinates that Federal law demanded all interstate travel facilities be integrated.

The denials by Gallion and city officers highlighted the first day of testimony in a Federal suit seeking to break down all racial barirers in transportation facilities in Alabama. The suit was amended, however, to include just the geographical boundaries of the United States Middle District Court.

Immediately after the plaintiffs rested, Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. denied motions to dismiss the suit filed by the defendants which included companies operating Greyhound and Trailways bus franchises in this Deep South city, Montgomery's three city commissioners and the police chief, Gallion, the three-member Public Service Commission and Montgomery County Sheriff Mac Sim Butler.

The Federal jurist who ordered integration of buses here five years ago, did grant a motion to dismiss the suit against Montgomery County Solicitor William Thetford. Judge Johnson held Federal procedures did not empower him to enjoin the solicitor from prosecuting the 11 plaintiffs who were arrested last May on charges of conduct calculated to cause a breach of the peace.

Alabama Editors On Mob Violence

The Huntsville Times

HOT-HEADED and ill advised, a small group of men at Birmingham and near Anniston have once again played into the hands of the racial agitators they sought to oppose.

The incidents Sunday serve only to intensify the campaign for an immediate breakdown of the racial barriers in the Deep South.

Birmingham Post-Herald

THE so-called "freedom riders" came to Alabama looking for trouble and left calling their mission a complete success.

They would have been disappointed had their presence been ignored. Too bad a group of misquided hoodlums along the Anniston highway and here in Birmingham gave them the propaganda weapon they were seeking. We can be sure they will use it throughout the country to stir up anti-South sentiment and to raise money to keep their propaganda and their professionals going.

Opelika Daily News

WE were surprised, and disappointed, that Birmingham Police Commissioner Bull Conner allowed the incident to get out of hand by failing to have proper police protection at the bus station where the attack occurred on the group. In the past he has shown alertness in preventing such incidents by prompt and efficient action on the part of the police department.

Those who took the law into their own hands in both Birmingham and Anniston need to be ferreted out and punished by proper authorities. Mob rule must never be condoned.

The Tuscaloosa News

THERE is need for law enforcement officials—and that should include a call from the Governor of this state to state investigators and highway patrolmen—to apprehend those responsible for the burning of the bus and for the assaults on individuals in the Birmingram and Anniston bus stations.

The Birmingham News

MANY blunders marked the eruption of violence Sunday.

The biggest was that of Gov. John Patterson in announcing officially in so many words that, though he was the state's chief executive, though he had many state highway patrolmen at his command, though he had the National Guard which he could have called out, he could not guarantee protection to a group of race agitators.

His explanation that crowds were gathering in several Alabama towns through which the CORE group would pass was no excuse whatsoever. Law is law and authorities are fully equipped by the public and at the public expense to handle disorder.

If this can't be done then the Governor or anybody else would be admitting that potential anarchy existed in Alabama.

Selma Times-Journal

OUR battle for self-determination and racial integrity must not be an aggressive one. It should be, instead, a delaying action to hold our lines until other sections of the nation feel the same stresses that harass us, and realize that a fight for Americanism is a fight for all Americans.

But they never will realize that if we persist in creating sympathy for the opposition with lead pipe-swinging tactics by a small minority of the citizenry, which really does not play a decisive role in the thinking and progressive action of our section.

The Decatur Daily

EVEN 10 policemen on the scene at Birmingham or at Anniston would have prevented the whole sorry spectacle which took place on Sunday, for public opinion is with the enforcement of the law and not with the hoodlums or with the so-called "Freedom Riders."

We feel like saying, "How long, Oh Lord, how long," before all the people of Alabama will come to realize that these matters must be left to law enforcement agencies, and if people from the outside come into Alabama and commit acts in violation of state law that they will be jailed, and how long before law enforcement officers and those who have the responsibility for directing law enforcement will see to it that those who violate the law by forming themselves into mobs must also be put in jail, to go before the bar of justice and be sentenced according to the law.

The Anniston Star

ANNISTON, Birmingham and other cities here in Alabama often wonder why it is that Atlanta grows in population and in industrial progress to such a greater extent than do our own cities and counties that are blessed with natural resources far superior to those of Georgia.

And one of the answers to that fact is that in Georgia, although as much opposed as are the people of any other state in the Union to forced mixing of the races, does not try any longer to solve her problems by resort to cave man practices by way of protecting the people's human life and property.

And unless we can get more protection from our constituted officers of the law in our cities and counties, we might as well close up our Chambers of Commerce and similar institutions; for no thoughtful person wants to come to a place where both human and property rights are held in such low repute.

The Governor Of Alabama A Mob Leader?

DOES John Patterson, governor, aspire to become a mob leader?

Whether he desires it or not, his statements are making him so.

In his Wednesday press conference Patterson talked as the Grand Dragon of the Kluxers has talked.

It was nearly, but not quite, unbelievable that a Governor of Alabama could so far forget himself as to seem to invoke lawlessness.

The people of the United States cannot construe Patterson's utterance as other than enthronement of lawlessness in Alabama.

This is the kind of dereliction of duty for which a sheriff might be impeached.

It is not only permitting the lynchers to drag the prisoner from the jail, as it were, but actually suggesting they do so.

PATTERSON'S statements are vicious in their injury to good order and prosperity in the State of Alabama. Otherwise, Patterson slaps himself into the brace of a sap when he makes such a gaudy display of joining a raid on a dice table shack in the name of civic purity and then licenses the mob to do its bloody work!

ALL of us are deeply offended by the self-righteous intrusion of the agitators and the intervention of Patterson's old buddy, Bobby Kennedy. But inspiring mob action is no defense against agitation, it is that which feeds it.

The mob fell upon one gaggle of agitators. The result of this was that before the boob cheers died a second gaggle came sprinting into the open arms of Alabama martyrdom. This could get to be a fad like collegians pushing beds from state to state.

"WE can't act as nursemaids to agitators," said Patterson. "They'll stay home when they learn nobody is there to protect them."

In short, the Governor of Alabama has told the cockeyed world that Alabama on occasion is to be converted into a lawless arena that might even include murder on the card.

The Advertiser is not concerned about nursemaids for the agitators. That is an example of Patterson's vacuum-packed mental processes. The issue is not protection of agitators but upholding the law of native white Alabamians against riot and violence. That—not protecting agitators — is the issue.

AS governor John Patterson took an oath to uphold the law of Alabama. He makes a schoolboy exhibition of swooping down on a penny-weight crap table. He has hundreds arrested and fined for violating traffic laws. He wrangles with the state treasurer over what the law says about the investment of state funds in securities. He was on loan-shark violators and demands reapportionment in the name of the law.

As the first and foremost agent responsible for law and order in the commonwealth Patterson demands obedience to law a hundred times a day.

And above all this, he has placed (appropriately we believe) a statue of his father upon the Capitol greensward, to commemorate a man who became a martyr because in Phenix City law enforcement was abandoned and the city turned over to the mob.

MOBS are no more to be tolerated in Birmingham than in Phenix City. The toll of mob action is the same everywhere it is countenanced.

A governor blights this state economically and packages long-range woe for all its citizens when he does other than austerely quell mob action in any form whatever—Kluxer, labor or company goons.

MOB action is morally wrong in any case. It is rape of our noble Anglo-Saxon tradition of lawful justice.

But there is a readier and more tangible reason for all the people to disapprove of Patterson's incendiary leadership.

That reason may become one's own skin.

Mobsters will rule whatever they are not restrained from ruling—everything from church to hot dog stand. They will rule you—and John Patterson—if they can.

The same newspapers that told of the Birmingham mob action against the agitators told of the flogging of three white men in Sylacauga. One was said to have permitted a colored nurse to chastise his child. That is the way of the mob unleashed.

The mob will enter your home and your shop if, as and when it can. That is the history of mob action down through the ages.

It's a dull citizen who thinks it may not come home to him, directly or indirectly.

Ignore The Inciters

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER—CORE—What in the world is it? Congress of Racial Equality? Who organized it and why? Personally, I see no point in the organization whatsoever, except to incite and stir up trouble.

Why the name "Congress?" Dictatorship, eh? That's exactly what we need the least of in this peace-loving City of Montgomery. I am in favor of ignoring the (whole situation myself.

Don Hallmark, publicity director for the Alabama Association of Citizens Councils, was right in urging the public to ignore the "Freedom Riders."

I would like to congratulate our local law enforcement authorities and also our city officials who kept peace by thinking of and demanding the safety of all our citizens, both white and colored in this, our beautiful Capital City. And also we say thanks to our Governor for his concern for the welfare and safety of all our fellow Alabamians.

The people of the South have done a good job in spite of this radical interference and we can, with God's help, continue to live in peace with all races, and can quell agitator groups if necessary.

We all need more faith in the "Man Upstairs," and he will see to it that we live in peace and harmony without anxiety, fear, turmoil and upheaval.

"A Grateful Montgomery Citizen."

What They Asked For

Editor, The Advertiser:

Most people think that the "Freedom Riders" got just what was coming to them or not quite enough.

The few men who had enough spirit and intestinal fortitude to demonstrate their willingness to fight for what they believed are the same type of men who stood against the British at the beginning of the American Revolution, men who now would be called radicals.

The main trouble is that most of us are resting on our full stomachs and high standard of living, content to let a few do our fighting. If we all were willing to join in a common front we would not be overrun by policies of an oppressive government and by every minority pressure group that can raise enough money for transportation to Alabama.

It continues to amaze the people how the newspapers defend the left-wing organizations such as CORE, but attack any rightwing group such as the John Birch Society as soon as they raise their heads. It appears that all the propaganda weapons in this country, such as newspapers, TV magazines, radio, and movies, are gradually accepting communism.

When are the American people going to wake up to the fact that the type of people who are running the government are ruining the best form of government the world has ever known. The Kennedys, the Harvard professors, and a State Department overrun by odd-balls are leading us into a local and worldwide mess that will likely finish off our form of government.

The above remarks are supported by the fact that the Attorney General of the United States can take several days away from his job to support a busload of renegades and agitators who are touring the South in an effort to cause trouble which will help them raise money for their nefarious purposes.

Alabama Badlands?

THE ADVERTISER has not until now offered comment on the John Brown raids from the north into Alabama because it was not entirely clear what had, was and would happen.

This condition still obtains as this goes to press. But we defer no longer, for enough is now known to make the basic point whatever else happens in Birmingham or Montgomery.

Always the basic truth of these violent convulsions is that no matter what, baboons committing violence must be collared, jailed, tried and generously punished.

The evidence is that the police in Birmingham, under command of a coarse and rash antic with the title of police commissioner, spat on their duty and looked the other way from murderous assault.

And sad to say, the Governor of Alabama seemed to be fitting the seal of Alabama into the ring on the baboon tails. For the governor said he could supply protection for the white and colored agitators to reach the state line but could not otherwise protect them.

Happy to relate, Montgomery has learned its lesson and its police commissioner made it plain that violence on the part of white or colored would not be tolerated.

ANYTIME a city, county or state surrenders to the mob it pays a dear price. Assuredly Birmingham and Alabama will pay dearly.

The agitators later confirmed what was obvious before to all but baboons: they came to Alabama seeking to be the cause of incidents.

The White Citizens Council in Montgomery quickly and shrewdly recognized this and wisely asked Montgomerians to defeat them by ignoring them.

BUT elsewhere there was surrender and dereliction of duty. Specifically, Birmingham's police commissioner and the state's governor permitted a gang of thugs to suspend transportation in Alabama.

City police cars should have provided that scheduled bus safe escort to city limits and Highway Patrol cars should then have escorted them the length of the state to demonstrate the unfailing dominion of law and order in Alabama.

THE white and colored agitators who came seeking trouble are, of course, slobbering trash and the Attorney General of the United States used them to help along his brother's second term aim.

Their presence in Alabama is galling and Alabamians are entitled to their anger and dismay. Yet it is inviting more woe to respond violently.

The breakdown of law enforcement fortified the latterday abolitionists who welcome incendiary incidents as the mother of more civil rights pokes and cuts at the South.

These accursed incidents make Americans think of Alabama as a badlands.

THE most obvious injury is to the cause of those who seek to entice new industry to Alabama to create payrolls and provide the material blessings so long denied by the Civil War and its aftermath.

The police dereliction in Birmingham probably shrank business in every firm in the city.

There are a lot of fundamental reasons why a city and state cannot tolerate violence in any circumstance. But the most obvious reason is that riotous conditions blight profits and payrolls—and, politically, make the South's plight worse than before.

Patterson Vows Arrest For Integration Testers

The Montgomery Advertiser
Montgomery, Ala.
Thurs. 5-18-61

By BOB INGRAM

Gov. John Patterson declared Wednesday that "Alabama isn't the Congo" and if efforts are continued to challenge the state's segregation laws "we'll fill the jails with agitators."

In an hour long press conference devoted almost exclusively to the sudden outbreak of racial violence in Alabama, Patterson made it clear he had no sympathy for the "Freedom Riders" who were attacked and beaten Sunday near Anniston and in Birmingham.

"When you go somewhere seeking trouble you usually find it," Patterson said. "I lay full blame on the agitators who came in here for the express purpose of stirring up just such a thing."

"We can't act as nursemaids to agitators," he continued. "They'll stay at home when they learn nobody is there to protect them. The state of Alabama can't guarantee safety of fools, and that's what they are."

The governor had earlier declared the policy of his administration would be to withhold Highway Patrol escorts for any segregation-testing buses unless it "becomes necessary."

"We will guarantee the safety of any law-abiding citizens," he continued, "but we can't guarantee the safety of people who come here to deliberately break the law, to breach the peace and to create a riot."

Patterson said the people of Alabama were "enraged and incensed at these agitators."

Patterson also warned that the situation "will get worse and we will have more riots" if the "outside agitators" continue to come into Alabama.

Newsmen made several efforts to get Gov. Patterson to condemn the action of the white mobs in Anniston and Birmingham which attacked the "Freedom" riders. However, his strongest condemnation of that action was a brief: "I don't condone that."

At one time during the session he testily inquired of the newsmen?

"Are you people in sympathy with the agitators?"

Patterson declined to comment on the action of the Birmingham Police Department Sunday at the bus terminal riot. Some criticism had been voiced that Birmingham police had not made sufficient preparation for the arrival of the busload of members of the Congress on Racial Equality (CORE).

But Patterson added that he put the "major part of the blame (for the violence) on the outside agitators who came here looking for trouble."

Asked what he had told U.S. Atty. Gen. Bobby Kennedy when the latter called him seeking state protection for the CORE group, Patterson replied:

"I told him we had learned of a possible attempt to ambush the bus between Birmingham and Montgomery and that we could not guarantee the safety of law violators."

Then the governor added: "We certainly intend to maintain law and order by whatever means possible . . . We will do everything we can to protect the lives of anyone in Alabama who obeys the law, but when it comes to the U.S. Government asking me to guarantee the safety of agitators, I can't guarantee nothing."

Birmingham Jails Mixers At Bus Depot

The Montgomery Advertiser
Montgomery, Ala.
Thurs. 5-18-61

BIRMINGHAM (AP)—A racially mixed group of college students from Tennessee, trying to crack bus station segregation, went to jail Wednesday after a tense four hours at the Greyhound Terminal here.

The smattering of white persons allowed on the loading docks by police sent up a cheer and a round of handclapping as officers loaded them into patrol wagons.

As the wagons pulled away, the students sang.

Police Chief Jamie Moore said the eight students—seven Negroes and a white girl—were taken into protective custody.

Moore said in a statement, "It is dangerous for you and for others to stay here."

Several other Negroes were taken into custody at the station. One was the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, Birmingham Negro minister who heads the pro-integration Alabama Christian Council on Human Rights.

FAILURE TO OBEY

All told 16 persons were taken into custody—14 Negroes, a white man and a white woman.

Ten of them—including the two white people—were on the bus coming into town.

Of the 17, all but three were held in protective custody.

Two were charged with failing to obey an officer, and held on $25 bond each.

Bond was set at $25 on each count.

He posted bond and was released Wednesday night.

During the four hours the students spent at the bus station, police said they received a bomb warning, but the danger time expired without incident.

The students rode into Birmingham on a bus from Nashville, Tenn., then found themselves stranded when drivers refused to take them out of town.

Police boarded the incoming bus on the outskirts of Birmingham, arrested a white man and a Negro—for refusing to change seats—and put two officers on the bus for the remainder of the ride to the bus station.

At the station, where a crowd was beginning to gather, police refused to let them off the bus for an hour.

Then the officers cleared the area of persons without tickets, and the students went into the white waiting room.

Some of them tried—and failed—to get service at a refreshment bar. The manager of the station later said some were served.

They bought tickets to Montgomery and stayed in the almost-empty waiting room.

Small knots of people stood on the sidewalks and in a parking lot next to the bus station.

Two hours later, at 3 p.m., they went out onto the loading docks to board their bus.

But their driver told them:

"If you get on, I will not drive the bus."

Thurs. 5-18-61

He picked up his bag and walked away from the bus.

A few minutes later the dispatcher at the station said the bus run had been cancelled.

The group remained on the loading platform, standing next to the bus, and said they planned to try again on the next scheduled bus to Montgomery at 5:15 p.m.

PLAN INTERRUPTED

But their plan was interrupted when police took them into custody.

While the group was standing on the loading platform—and earlier when they were in the white waiting room—police kept the area clear of persons without tickets.

But small knots of people stood on the streets and sidewalks around the bus station.

This is the same station in which 17 members of a racially mixed Congress of Racial Equality group found themselves bottled up for more than two hours Monday when drivers refused to move the bus. The group finally went to the airport in cars and flew to New Orleans.

The station is in downtown Birmingham, three blocks from the Trailways station where a white mob attacked a racially mixed group arriving on a bus Sunday.

SITTING TOGETHER

The two arrested on the incoming bus were identified as Jim Zweig, a white student at Fisk in Nashville, and Paul Brooks, Negro, a student at American Baptist Theological Seminary at Nashville.

Police said they were sitting together on the second seat from the front of the bus when the officers boarded it, and refused to change seats.

They were charged with failure to obey a lawful command of an officer. They were jailed.

One member of the group, William Harbour, 19, a student at Tennessee A&I at Nashville, said the bus driver shoved him, causing him to hit his head on the windshield, shortly after the bus arrived. A policeman then jammed him in the stomach with a billy stick, he said.

Harbour gave his hometown as Piedmont, Ala.

Other members of the group identified themselves as:

John Lewis, 21, of Troy, Ala., Negro, student at American Baptist Theological Seminary at Nashville.

Lucretia Collins, 21, of Fairbanks, Alaska, Negro, student at Tennessee A&I at Nashville.

Catherine Burke, 21, of Birmingham, Negro, student at Tennessee A&I.

Carl Bush, 19, of Memphis, Negro, student at Tennessee A&I.

Rudolph Graham, 20, of Chattanooga, Tenn., Negro, student at Tennessee A&I.

Charles Butler, 20, of Charleston, S.C., Negro, student at Tennessee A&I.

Mary McCollum, 21, of Snyder, N.Y., white, student at "all-white university at Nashville." She declined further comment.

Jail records listed Miss McCollum as a student at Peabody Teachers College at Nashville.

The others taken into protective custody when police picked up the riders were:

Vera Brown, 21; James Armstrong, 38; Eugene Ervin, 25; the Rev. Floyd King, 49; and Lincoln Hendrick, 32, all of Birmingham.

Charged with assault

Three held; FBI probes bus burning

BY TOM LANKFORD
News staff writer

Three men were charged today in connection with the gang beatings of CORE integrationists at Trail Bus Station Sunday.

An intensive police investigation led to the arrest of the third suspect late yesterday.

In Montgomery, Public Safety Director Floyd Mann said no arrests have been made in connection with the burning of a "freedom" bus near Anniston Sunday.

Two passengers on that bus—neither associated with the "freedom riders"—remained hospitalized in Anniston today. One, a young Negro from Margaret, Ala., says he was hit over the head with a chain as he got off the bus.

Howard Thurston Edwards, 22, of 1906 Second-ay. n, Irondale, was picked from a line-up at City Jail as the man who wielded a lead pipe while a photographer was being beaten outside the bus station.

HE WAS HELD on a charge of assault with intent to murder. Police said Edwards, a print shop foreman, admitted being in Birmingham Sunday, but denied taking part in the action.

Shortly before Edwards' arrest, the father of a Ku Klux Klansman who was arrested yesterday, was taken in custody when he went to City Jail to make bond for his son.

Jesse Thompson Faggard, 48, of Box 348, Alton, was charged with disorderly conduct and released on $300 bond.

His son, Jesse Faggard, 20, was originally charged with assault with intent to murder and grand larceny, but the charge late yesterday was reduced to disorderly conduct.

Detectives Bailey and Hart said the charge was reduced when witnesses were unable to identify Faggard as actually striking any blows during the fracas.

Meanwhile, police say there is a possibility persons arrested in connection with the beating of travelers who got off the interstate bus here may face possible federal charges.

THOMAS J. JENKINS, special agent in charge of the local FBI, said the matter is under investigation but he would not discuss the case.

Jenkins also said the burning of a bus transporting CORE travelers from Atlanta to Birmingham, four miles west of Anniston Sunday, is under active investigation by his office.

Sources close to the FBI said a number of suspects are under investigation in connection with the May 14 violence near Anniston.

Edwards, who is employed at Quality Press here, was identified chiefly through facial characteristics. Witnesses said he also had long busy hair when he was at Trailways Depot Sunday.

When arrested yesterday by Detectives A. M. Bailey, V. T. Hart and Lt. Maurice House, Edwards had a fresh crew-cut. He told police he had been to the barber shop Monday afternoon because the long hair got in his way while he was taking diving lessons at the YMCA.

DETECTIVES SAID the man was not surprised when arrested at the print shop late yesterday and said he knew he was being picked up because he resembled a man in a photograph that appeared in local newspapers portraying the beating of a CORE member.

Bailey said Edwards was dishonorably discharged from the Marines after conviction of strong-armed robbery of a cab driver in New Hampshire.

After Edwards was picked from the line-up yesterday, he was brought face-to-face with the men who had identified him and refused to comment. Witnesses said they saw him trying to strike integrationist James Peck.

Young Faggard, who early yesterday repeatedly denied that his father was even at the Trailways Bus Station Sunday, broke down under police questioning and pointed his father out in a photograph snapped at the depot.

He also admitted being in the group that assaulted Post-Herald Photographer Tommy Langston but denied striking any blows.

Faggard said both he and his father are members of the Tarrant Ku Klux Klan, according to Bailey. Young Faggard also was released on $300 bond.

The 20-year-old mah was quoted by police as saying the mob action in Birmingham Sunday was arranged by Ku Klux Klan officials. He also implicated other persons.

Many People Are Asking "Where Were the Police?"

. . . Yesterday (Sunday, May 14) hoodlums took over a section of Birmingham. They clustered in small groups, they drove around in cars, they all but swaggered. They were not afraid, they were sure of themselves, they knew about the "freedom riders" and the buses they were supposed to come in on, and they had the place staked out. . . .

Others knew this situation existed. Commissioner Eugene Connor apparently knew it. He was on duty at City Hall.

There were squad cars operating in the area—an area of several square blocks embracing the City Hall, the Greyhound and Trailways terminals. The News understands plainclothesmen also were on hand in some, at least, of the area. . . .

Klansmen or other hoodlums were ready to create trouble. In trying to "defend" the South they invited every imaginable weapon to be trained against us. And the police of Birmingham did not stop the trouble that did develop. . . .

At the Trailways terminal yesterday afternoon, with the condition above prevailing, a bus pulled in and all but in an instant a Negro was being beaten, his trousers almost torn off, a white man being beaten by a hoodlum who repeatedly smashed his face with his fist, and a Birmingham Post-Herald photographer was being pummeled by a group of white men, one of whom had a heavy instrument in a brown paper bag. . . .

But this wasn't all. These bums saw other photographers — two from the Birmingham News. They mobbed these News men and with a threat which from our own witnesses might very well have meant death if a wrong move were made, tore out the film from two News cameras.

But this wasn't all either. Within minutes a radio - television newsman, parked in a plainly marked TV station wagon, right by the Birmingham Post Office, was attacked. . . .

The people's right to know what goes on in Birmingham was that moment censored by these hoodlums who were deciding for themselves that, in the name of the South, they would "show everybody."

But this wasn't all.

The police were not visibly on hand when the Trailways terminal beatings took place. The police were not on hand when the radio-TV man was attacked.

And the City Hall, with police presumably on the alert, was some two blocks away. . . .

The Birmingham News charges that the very men who did these beatings, who smashed to the concrete and kicked and battered a Post-Herald photographer, who ripped film from two cameras of the News, who in broad daylight bashed in two windows of a radio-TV news station wagon, up to an hour or more later were plainly visible, still carrying on their vicious patrol in the whole area and particularly in the Greyhound bus terminal area.

Yesterday afternoon fear and hatred were on Birmingham streets. . . .

The people—and their police—permitted that fear and hate to ride our streets.

It was a rotten day for Birmingham and Alabama.

The thugs did what they had come to do—up to now they have gotten away with it.

Today many are asking "Where were the police?"

The News asks that, too, but the News also asks:

When will the people demand that fear and hatred be driven from the streets?

✓ THE TIP-OFF

By EMORY O. JACKSON

The decree in the "Birmingham Terminal Waiting Room case," issued by U. S. Judge Seybourn H. Lynne, April 21 has wide implications and practical applications, it seems to me.

It took almost five years to bring the case to a successful and useful conclusion.

Styled Carl L. Baldwin, and all, plaintiffs and Mayor J. W. Morgan, and all defendants, the celebrated case clarified the law in passenger travel. It originated locally and was filed in the U. S. District Court for the Northern Division. Here is the text of that decree:

"Pursuant to the Mandate of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, filed herein on March 22, 1961

It is ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED by the court as follows:

Alabama Public Service Commission

"1. That the orders of the Commission, Alabama Public Service Commission General Order No. -2 (1923)* and Commission's General Order No. T-21 (1956),* as well as the underlying statute, Alabama Code 1940, Title 48, Section 186, are unconstitutional and void insofar as they require Birmingham Terminal Company to provide, maintain, mark and designate separate waiting rooms on the basis of race.

"2. That the defendants, C. C. (Jack) Owens and Sybil Pool, as members of the Alabama Public Service Commission, their agents, servants, employees, attorneys and successors, and all persons in active concert and participation with them, be and they are hereby restrained and enjoined:

"A. From directing or otherwise requiring, either directly or indirectly, that the waiting rooms of Birmingham Terminal Company shall be marked, designated or reserved for the exclusive or preferred use of white or colored persons or any group of persons on the basis of race or color;

"B. From compelling, either directly or indirectly, segregation on the basis of race or color in the use, maintenance or marking of the facilities described in paragraph 2A above;

"*On April 19, 1951, the Alabama Public Servbice Commissioning in its informal Docket No. C-3755 modified its General Order No. T-2 (1923) and its General Order No. T-21 (1956) so that neither of such orders is applicable to the terminal or station facilities of the Birmingham Terminal Company in Birmingham, Alabama. To deny declaratory and injunctive relief on the basis of this order would, in the opinion of the court, require an amendment of the Mandate of the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.

"C. From further enforcing the provisions of Alabama Code 1940, Title 48, Section 186, of Alabama Public Service Commission General Order No. T-2 (1923), and of Commission's General Order No. T-21 (1956) insofar as such statute and orders require Birmingham Terminal Company to provide, maintain or mark separate waiting rooms on the basis of race.

Birmingham Terminal Company

"3. That the action of Birmingham Terminal Company in posting and mainting the signs: "Colored Intrastate Passengers Waiting Room" and "Waiting Room Interstate and White Intrastate Passengers" and the separate waiting rooms on the basis of color is forbidden by the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

"4. That the defendant, Birmingham Terminal Company a corporation, Its agents, servants, employees and attorneys and all persons in active concert and participation with them, be and they hereby are, restrained and injoined from further or continued display or maintenance of the signs described in paragraph 4 above, from maintaining separate waiting rooms on the basis of race or color, and from posting and maintaining sings indicating that any such waiting rooms are labeled as or reserved for the exclusive or peferred use of either white or colored persons or any group of persons on the basis of race or color.

Board of Commissioners of the City of Birmingham

"5. That the custom and usage of the Commission, Its agents or servants, in denying to a colored person traveling in intrastate commerce the right to be or remain in the waiting room, marked or designated "Interstate and White Intrastate" is violative of the Fourteenth Amendment and 42 U. S. C. 1981, 1983.

"6. That the custom or usage of the Commission, Its agents or servants, in undertaking to use race as the basis for determining the right of occupancw of either of the waiting rooms is contrary to law.

"7. That the defendants, J. W Morgan, Eugene Conner, and J. T Waggoner, as members of the Board of Commissiers of the City of Birmingham, Alabama, their agents servants, employees, attorneys, and successors, be and they are hereby restrained and enjoined from using race or color as the basis for determining the rights of persons to use or occupy any waiting room maintained by Birmingham Terminal Company.

"8. That the costs of court incurred herein be and the same are IN SOLLDE against the defendants.

Done, this the 21st day of April, 1961.

Alabama Badlands?

THE ADVERTISER has not until now offered comment on the John Brown raids from the north into Alabama because it was not entirely clear what bad was and would happen.

This condition still obtains as this goes to press. But we defer no longer, for enough is now known to make the basic point whatever else happens in Birmingham or Montgomery.

Always the basic truth of these violent convulsions is that no matter what, baboons committing violence must be collared, jailed, tried and generously punished.

The evidence is that the police in Birmingham, under command of a coarse and rash antic with the title of police commissioner, spat on their duty and looked the other way from murderous assault.

And sad to say, the Governor of Alabama seemed to be fitting the seal of Alabama into the ring on the baboon tails. For the governor said he could supply protection for the white and colored agitators to reach the state line but could not otherwise protect them.

Happy to relate, Montgomery has learned its lesson and its police commissioner made it plain that violence on the part of white or colored would not be tolerated.

ANYTIME a city, county or state surrenders to the mob it pays a dear price. Assuredly Birmingham and Alabama will pay dearly.

The agitators later confirmed what was obvious before to all but baboons: they came to Alabama seeking to be the cause of incidents.

The White Citizens Council in Montgomery quickly and shrewdly recognized this and wisely asked Montgomerians to defeat them by ignoring them.

BUT elsewhere there was surrender and dereliction of duty. Specifically, Birmingham's police commissioner and the state's governor permitted a gang of thugs to suspend transportation in Alabama.

City police cars should have provided that scheduled bus safe escort to city limits and Highway Patrol cars should then have escorted them the length of the state to demonstrate the unfailing dominion of law and order in Alabama.

THE white and colored agitators who came seeking trouble are, of course, slobbering trash and the Attorney General of the United States used them to help along his brother's second term aim.

Their presence in Alabama is galling and Alabamians are entitled to their anger and dismay. Yet it is inviting more woe to respond violently.

The breakdown of law enforcement fortified the latterday abolitionists who welcome incendiary incidents as the mother of more civil rights pokes and cuts at the South.

These accursed incidents make Americans think of Alabama as a badlands.

THE most obvious injury is to the cause of those who seek to entice new industry to Alabama to create payrolls and provide the material blessings so long denied by the Civil War and its aftermath.

The police dereliction in Birmingham probably shrank business in every firm in the city.

There are a lot of fundamental reasons why a city and state cannot tolerate violence in any circumstance. But the most obvious reason is that riotous conditions blight profits and payrolls—and, politically, make the South's plight worse than before.

'Democracy Test' Abandoned In Breakdown Of Ala. Law, Order

Alabama's race-haters, unable to contain themselves Sunday, exploded in a fury of inhuman treatment and brutal beatings of 14 Freedom Riders and in the burning of one of two buses in which they were riding.

Battered and exhausted, the 14 members of the racially-mixed Freedom Ride reached New Orleans via airplane shortly before midnight Monday. They left Birmingham after Alabama Governor John Patterson reportedly refused to guarantee them protection in that state.

Freedom Ride, sponsored by the Congress of Racial Equality, left Washington, D. C., May 4 headed for New Orleans. Enroute, the members tested segregation policies of waiting rooms, rest rooms and eating facilities of bus stations in the Deep South. They encountered little trouble until they reached Anniston, Ala., Sunday, where infuriated white mobs were waiting.

In New Orleans on Tuesday the "Freedom Riders" told how they had split into two groups at Atlanta and had boarded two buses -- a Greyhound and a Trailways -- before going into Alabama.

When the Greyhound bus pulled into the station at Anniston, a crowd of some 200 white persons took posts in an alley

BULLETIN

The South Louisiana Citizens Council in New Orleans called upon Mayor deLesseps S. Morrison and Governor Jimmie Davis Tuesday to oust the "Freedom Riders" from New Orleans "before violence erupts."

At press time, CORE spokesmen said the "Freedom Ride Rally" is still scheduled for Wednesday at 7:30 p.m., in New Zion Baptist Church, 2319 Third Street.

blocking it so it couldn't leave.

Alabama State Investigator Ell M. Cowling, acting on a tip there would be trouble, had boarded the bus and was unable to get off.

City police, who were conspicuous by their absence, appeared on the scene later and the bus began its trip to Birmingham. However, several windows of the bus were broken at Anniston and several tires were slashed, Freedom Riders said, and it is believed the top of the vehicle was doused with gasoline.

TRAILED BUS

Six miles outside Anniston a tire went flat. The driver, O. T. Jones of Birmingham, stopped and found another tire going flat. It was then several automobiles of white persons arrived after apparently trailing the bus.

A fire bomb crashed through the window of the bus which was carrying 14 passengers -- nine of them "Freedom Riders."

The incendiary device set the bus afire and passengers were forced out as highway policemen fired pistols into the air to keep back the mobs.

The passengers were treated for smoke inhalation and placed on another bus going to Birmingham.

Meanwhile, the Trailways bus which later ran into difficulty at Birmingham had its first trouble at Anniston also.

In that town, the bus driver said he wasn't going to move until hecklers moved to the rear of the bus, one CORE spokesman said. At that time some 10 white men attacked Charles Person, a Morehouse University student.

COPS LOOK ON

James Peck, New York CORElator editor, stepped forward and was beaten about the head and face. Also beaten were Dr. Walter Bergman, 61, former Michigan State University professor and member of CORE.

Three Anniston policemen stood outside the bus as the beatings took place, CORE spokesmen said.

Violence broke out again when the Trailways bus reached Birmingham. Groups of white men attacked the group inside the station and kept all persons, including newsmen, away from telephones. No policemen were on the scene for several minutes.

White men pummelled and beat a white man and a Negro youth until blood was spurting from their noses, a CORE member said.

FBI ACTION

Gordon Carey, CORE field director, New York, flew to Birmingham after the incident. He told the Louisiana Weekly that bus drivers refused to operate vehicles carrying "Freedom Riders" and that difficulty was experienced in securing plane reservations.

James Peck appeared in New Orleans with his head heavily bandaged, it having been necessary to take 57 stitches to close the wounds. He was closeted with the FBI for several hours.

Other members of Freedom Ride who arrived in New Orleans were Mr. and Mrs. Walter Bergman, Rev. B. Elton Cox, High Point, N. C.; Henry Thomas, St. Augustine, Fla.; Herman Harris, Sumter, S. C.; Ivor Moore, Sumter, S. C.; Charles Person, Atlanta; Joseph Perkins, Owensboro, Ky.; Miss Genevieve Hughes, Maryland; Albert Bigelow, Cos Cob, Conn.; Isaac Reynolds, Detroit; James McDonald, New York, and Edward Blankenheim, Tucson, Ariz.

Minor incidents were reported at Charlotte, N. C., Rock Hill, S. C., and Winnsboro, S. C.

MOBSTER ARRESTED

Birmingham police Monday arrested Jesse Oliver Faffard, 20, a white bakery worker, on charges of taking part in the mob's attack on Freedom Ride. Faggard allegedly signed a statement saying he answered a Ku Klux Klan call to go to the bus station.

Meanwhile, CORE spokesmen said that Trailways and Greyhound bus stations in 30 cities over the nation would be picketed Thursday and that more than 1,000 pickets would appear at the New York terminals.

To New Orleans

NEW ORLEANS. — (UPI) — Sixteen white and Negro "Freedom Riders" arrived here by plane Monday night, May 15, with tales of "inhuman, uncivilized" treatment on their violence-shortened trip through the South aimed at breaking down segregation barriers.

One of the 16, Herman K. Harris of Englewood, N.J., said he wouldn't tell newsmen where the group was staying in New Orleans because "we don't know who to trust anymore."

A battery of newsmen met the self-styled "Freedom Riders" at Moisant International airport when their plane landed at 11:45 p.m. CST.

But no hint of the bitterness and hostility that forced the group to abandon its bus trip and fly here from Birmingham, Ala., met them.

Members of the embattled group said there would be a press conference here Tuesday, but could give no specific time or place.

"We couldn't make any plans because we didn't know we'd be here tonight," said James Peck, whose face was scarred and head was bandaged from injuries suffered in earlier violence.

Harris told United Press International the group would make the trip again if called upon to do so.

"But I've never seen anything like the trouble we had at Alabama. Dogs get better treatment than we did. It was inhuman and uncivilized," the young Negro said.

Describing the Anniston, Ala., incident in which their bus was burned out, he said "it was one of the dirtiest things I've ever seen. There wasn't a respectable face in the crowd. They had guns and were drinking."

Six of the "Freedom Riders" got into a private car to leave the airport. But police gave the driver a summons for going the wrong way on a one-way drive on the airport grounds. Then they were allowed to continue.

The 16 members of the mixed racial group left Birmingham on an Eastern Airlines flight at 10:39 p.m., CST, for New Orleans. However, their departure was delayed when authorities received a telephone call that a bomb had been placed aboard the airliner.

The integrationists were removed from the plane and a search instituted. The flight was canceled and the group eventually departed on the Eastern Airlines flight.

The "Freedom Riders" left Washington for New Orleans last week in a test of racial barriers at Southern bus terminals. The group, sponsored by the Congress on Racial Equality (CORE), split into two groups Sunday in Atlanta.

One group went through Anniston, Ala., where the bus was stoned and burned by an angry crowd of about 100 white men. The other group went to Birmingham where about 30 white men attacked them. The two groups rejoined in Birmingham for the trip to New Orleans.

The group was forced to cancel its violence marred bus caravan when bus drivers refused to chauffeur them any farther. The drivers' refusal apparently stemmed from violence surrounding two bus trips by the riders earlier this week and the refusal of Gov. John Patterson to guarantee the integrationists safe passage through Alabama.

U.S. Attorney General Robert Kennedy spoke to Alabama officials Monday, urging them to provide police protection for the riders.

However, Patterson said in a statement that "the citizens of the state are so enraged I cannot guarantee protection for this bunch of rabble-rousers."

The group did not disclose their future plans now that their bus tour has been abandoned. But Harris told UPI the group would make the trip again if called upon to do so.

The group said they would attend a rally Tuesday evening in observance of the anniversary of the U.S. Supreme Court decision declaring school segregation unconstitutional. They said they probably would leave here Thursday.

38 Auburn Students 'Take Pride' in Action Of Gov. Patterson During Racial Trouble

The Atlanta Constitution

Auburn, Ala.—We, students at the University of Auburn, take pride in the fact that the governor of the State of Alabama saw fit to stand up against the imported rabble rousing agitators, who have recently invaded Alabama. Their sole purpose was to create trouble camouflaged under the leadership of so-called ministers as "non-violent" demonstrators.

Atlanta, Ga.

No one will deny that "freedom riders" have the privilege of riding unmolested, but when these people deliberately bait trouble with behavior such as they have displayed, then they are asking for trouble. Instead of the news media publicizing their maneuvers, all such actions and demonstrations should have been ignored. However, full facilities were on hand to spread the activities of these trouble makers.

The disturbing fact is that so few people seem to realize the background of these demonstrations. It would seem that any real Christian minister or leader would discourage actions which only serve as a means of feeding the propaganda machines of the Communist conspiracy. Therefore, we must agree with the Birmingham News in its condemnation of these AGITATORS.

Montgomery police officials remained on the griddle Wednesday in a federal court hearing into charges local police failed to act to keep a mob from beating integrationists. Ohms 6-1-61

But Birmingham Police Commissioner Eugene (Bull) Connor and Police Chief Jamie Moore had the threat of a preliminary restraining order against them lifted.

However, they remained under the shadow of a permanent injunction which is to be argued later in the local court.

In another development, attorney Calvin Whitesell, representing the Montgomery officials, said he has filed a motion to have integrationist groups enjoined from interfering with interstate bus travel.

KLUXER RELEASED

Johnson, in granting the motion to discharge Connor and Moore, warned them they could face a new injunction demand "if things like this recent mob violence occur again." At the same time, he also discharged Federated Ku Klux Klans Inc., and its officer, Lester C. Hawkins of Montgomery.

Testimony Wednesday saw the lawyer directing the government's case, top Montgomery police officials, and a personal emissary from President John Kennedy to Gov. John Patterson all on the witness stand.

John Siegenthaler, who acted as a go-between Kennedy and Patterson, described watching violence erupt at the Greyhound bus station May 20.

ASKS ABOUT NAMES

He said he was struck and knocked out as he attempted to get a young white woman into a car after observing her being abused by a mob and struck with a purse by a white woman.

Defense Attorney Calvin Whitesell asked Seigenthaler about names of bus riders in a notebook in his pocket, and when the judge asked the purpose of that line of questioning, the lawyer replied:

"I just wanted to know if the Justice Department is working with CORE (Congress of Racial Equality which sponsored some of the rides) and these riders."

Seigenthaler said he got the

A defense witness, Sate Public Safety Director Floyd Mann, told the court he had heard no rumblings of impending mob violence before the bus arrived here. He said he was at the depot 10 minutes before the bus pulled in, and saw nothing unusual.

OFFICER BY SIDE

Asked if he had any reason to believe the police "deliberately failed to provide protection" as the government charged, Mann answered, "I do not."

Mann said that when he pushed through the mob to rescue a beleagured television newsman, Asst. Police Chief Marvin Stanley was right by his side. He said Stanley, as he recalled, disarmed one man who had a knife, and arrested others.

On another occasion when he drew his pistol to stop the beating of a Negro freedom rider, the head of the Highway Patrol related, a city policeman was pushing his way through the crowd.

Remaining in the hearing with Montgomery officials, after the discharge of the Klan group, Moore and Connor, were the following defendants:

The U.S. Knights, Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, and its top man in Alabama, the Rev. Alvin Horn of Talladega.

A former Montgomery reserve policeman, Claude V. Henley, and another Montgomery man, Thurman Watts. Ohms 6-1-61

FILES AFFIDAVIT

All of the defendants except the Montgomery police rested their cases quickly, without calling witnesses. Horn filed an affidavit with the court.

Horn's affidavit said his organization split off from the parent Georgia organization about March 15 this year and has no units or officers in Alabama now.

He denied conspiring with any other group or individuals to interfere with interstate bus travel.

Fewer spectators were in court Wednesday than on the previous few days of the hearing. The courtroom was integrated, but whites and Negroes generally sat together.

Among the spectators was Alex Marks, judge of the Court of Common Pleas. Marks is to hear charges against an integrated group that sought to eat at the Trailways bus station here.

KING OUTSIDE

Also in the courtroom during the day were Circuit Solicitor William Thetford, Deputy Solicitor Frank Riggs, and Baptist minister Henry Lyon.

Integration leader Martin Luther King was seen several times in the corridor outside

Another Negro leader, the Rev. Fred Shuttlesworth of Birmingham, was sent to the witness room after a defense attorney said he had refused to go there. Shuttlesworth has been called as a defense witness.

Mann declared, "I have the very highest respect for the Police Department of Montgomery."

John Doar, Justice Department attorney handling the government's case, said he watched the violence break out here May 20, but denied he was here in connection with the "Freedom Rides." Montgomery Ala.

PASSED TWICE

Doar said he passed the bus station twice, noticing nothing unusual at first, but " people in little groups" the second time. "I would say at that time there were an unusual number of people around."

He described watching the beating of a Negro rider, and of watching a crowd of "25 to 50 men charging down the street," chasing a man attempting to enter a cab.

As the freedom riders huddled together at the end of the Greyhound station ramp, said Doar, he heard a woman yelling: "Get those niggers; get those nigger lovers!"

He said few police were in evidence, and he saw no police take action to halt attacks. Judge Johnson repeatedly asked, as he described the mob scene: "Did you see any police around at that time?" Doar said he did not.

Doar, called to the stand by defense attorneys, exclaimed at one point, "I looked around for police, yes, I did!" He said he came here with Seigenthaler, and had breakfast with him. But he said he did not come here to prepare a government case to protect integrationists.

Asst. Police Chief Marvin Stanley, who was acting chief at the time of the bus station riot, later took the stand to justify police action.

He said he "had no reason to believe there would be violence." Stanley also told of taking a knife from a man menacing Safety Director Mann as Mann sought to protect a newsman. The assailant was placed under arrest, said Stanley.

Mann had previously testified he believed Stanley had taken the knife from the man.

A series of police officers took the stand to say they had no advance information of the approach of the bus carrying the integrated riders. They also testified to early dispatching of police cars to the scene.

SHARP REPRIMAND

Government attorneys questioned them closely as to any instructions they may have received for dealing with possible trouble. All said they had received no such instructions prior to the riot.

During the questioning of one officer, Lt. R. D. Moody, Johnson sharply reprimanded attorney Whitesell for "leading" the witness.

Said Johnson: "I'll tell you the truth: I don't pay much attention when you lead him."

Detective Sgt. Jack Shows, whom a newsman said earlier in the hearing had said police here "wouldn't lift a finger" to protect "Freedom Riders," took the stand to deny making such a statement.

PHONE RECORDS A-2A

Shows said he halped open the crowd to get an injured man out after Mann had rescued him. And he said he called an ambulance for beaten Jim Zwerg, one one of the riders.

As they brought their case to a close, government lawyers produced telephone company records to show a series of long distance calls to and from Robert Shelton the acknowledged Klan leader and others the Justice Department sought to identify as Klansmen.

Most of the calls were made after the first freedom bus started its segregation - challenging tour of the South which reached a climax with mob violence in Alabama.

Another witness, Frank J. Torbert of Anniston, invoked the Fifth Amendment and refused to say whether he was at the Anniston bus terminal when the first outbreak of rioting erupted there May 14, or whether he is a Klansman.

After riders were beaten in Anniston and a bus burned near there, the violence spread to Birmingham later that day, and to Montgomery six days later. The governor proclaimed martial law in Montgomery before order was restored.

In the face of Torbert's silence, an FBI agent, Andrew M. Smith of Birmingham, testified the witness told him he was at the Anniston bus depot and was a Klan member.

FORMER KLANSMAN

Robert S. Thomas of Birmingham, said he was at the Greyhound bus station in Birmingham where the bus was due to arrive. It never reached there because a mob set it afire, and a second group of riders, aboard a Trailways bus, was attacked when they reached the Trailways terminal in Birmingham.

Thomas, who said he took no part in mob violence, identified himself as a former klansman and onetime candidate for statewide KKK office.

As fellow Klan members with him at that time he named Ace Williams of East Gadsden and Hubert Page of Birmingham. Those names also figured with Thomas' in the telephone calls put into the court record earlier.

One witness, Jimmy York of Montgomery, failed to show up and the judge ordered him brought in. But later the U.S. marshal's office reported York was in a hospital for an operation.

During the three days of government testimony, several witnesses testified that Birmingham police took precautions against violence at the Greyhound station, where the riders originally were scheduled to arrive.

Wave of Negro Militancy Spreading Over the South

The New York Times
New York P.

By CLAUDE SITTON
Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTA, May 13—A social upheaval born of long-suppressed discontent over discrimination and segregation has brought a rising wave of militancy among Southern Negroes.

It has boiled to the surface in the cities, spilling out of the ghettos and into the suburbs of the so-called black bourgeoisie. It is spreading into the smaller towns, and, in a few cases, into the share-croppers' isolated cabins.

Ann. 5-14-61

The aggressiveness of the Negro conflicts directly with the resistance of the Southern white, a resistance intensified by the Kennedy Administration's efforts to extend civil-rights guarantees.

Negroes interviewed in seven Southern states contended that the new militancy was no transitory phenomenon. They cited evidence of its spread across the region.

Youths line lunch counters in mute protest against racial barriers. Boycotts to force desegregation over hiring of Negroes slash the profits of white merchants. Parents send their children through segregationist gauntlets into schools open to them by the Federal courts.

Constantly New Demands

Negro leaders return again and again to the negotiating table with new demands for changes in the status quo. Ministers expound a social gospel keyed more to the "here" than the "hereafter." And a small but growing band of so-called Muslims preaches hate for the white, supremacy for the black.

The declared objective is: "Full equality—nothing less." This does not apply to the black Muslims, who want several states set aside for their exclusive occupancy.

The vigor and confidence of the drive can be seen in the faces of the thousands who flock to mass rallies held at least once a week by various organizations in virtually every major Southern city. It can be heard in the thundering chant that pours out into the night:

"Everybody wants — free-ee-dum!

"Free-dum! Free-dum!"

Those interviewed argued that the impatience stemmed from both the progress and lack of progress made during the last century. They said the progress had whetted the desire for greater gains. The lack of progress has fired the Negro's determination to a point where no sacrifice is too great, according to him.

P. 76

Many trace the new militancy to the Supreme Court's school desegregation decision of May 17, 1954. A number said that the bus boycott in Montgomery, Ala., in 1955 and 1956 had demonstrated to the Negro that he could play an active role in the struggle. Still others said the student sit-in demonstrations had united the Negro community as it had never been united before.

New York

Less tangible factors were said to be significant—rising educational and economic standards, the growth of newspaper reading and television viewing and the emergence of the new nations in Africa and Asia.

More Aware of Deprivations

The consenaus was that the Negro had become more aware of deprivations.

Ann. 5-14-61

On a rainy spring afternoon recently, the popular symbol of the new militancy relaxed in his mahogany-paneled study at Ebenezer Baptist Church on Atlanta's Auburn Ave.

Behind him hung a plaque designating him as a lifetime member of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Before him on a desk were stacks of letters, the head of an African Fulani woman carved in ebony, a ceramic black panther and a copy of his book, "Stride Toward Freedom."

Nothing in the demeanor of the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. suggested the militant, but non-violent, approach that he advocates as president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference. But it was emphasized in his words.

"The new militancy grew out of the Negro's growing sense of dignity and destiny," he said. "Whenever people get a new sense of dignity they become more determined to do away of the denial of his rights, that he had obtained enough free time to do something about it and that he had been stimulated by the action of others of his with the barriers to freedom."

The 32-year-old leader of the Montgomery bus boycott then put it another way:

"When people see a way out, they become more aggressive. When they don't, they give up and find themselves adjusting to their plight."

Dr. King said that many factors lay behind the rising pressure for equality. Among them are the circumstances that force the Negro to travel—the coming of the automobile, the depression and two World Wars.

Rural Isolation Ending

"The Negro's isolation on the rural plantation largely gave way to an urban industrial life" he noted.

This was followed by economic and cultural improvement and a new awareness of the world stimulated by the press, radio and television.

More important than anything else, Dr. King said, "the Negro has seen the exit sign to freedom" in the United States Supreme Court's school desegregation decision of 1954.

"The whole nation put itself on record then as saying that segregation is wrong," Dr. King remarked.

There was almost complete agreement on this last point among the others interviewed.

James T. McCain of Sumter, S.C., a field secretary for the Congress of Racial Equality, declared that "the Emancipation Proclamation freed the Negro physically; the Supreme Court decision freed him mentally."

The new militancy, said Thomas W. Young, publisher of The Norfolk (Va.) Journal and Guide, reflects "a final realization that what most of us had believed for so long is not valid."

"As a youth forty years ago, I was brain-washed into believing that this is the way it's got to be," he went on. "But when the Supreme Court says that segregated schools are inherently unequal then you come to believe it and you're not going to accept anything less than equality."

Blames Lack of Compliance

The widespread failure to carry out the court's directive is another cause of today's unrest, according to Dr. Benjamin E. Mays. He is president of Morehouse College in Atlanta, which has trained many Negroes prominent in the civil rights struggle in both the North and South.

"If the South had accepted the decision and had honestly set out to obey that order rather than being determined to circumvent it, I doubt that you would have had the sit-in's," Dr. Mays said. "And you can never forget the impact of the Montgomery boycott."

Others agreed that the admission of few more than 6 per cent of the region's Negro children to previously white schools had had a widespread effect.

"The promise of 1954 was not fulfilled," said Robert D. Robertson of Norfolk, state president of the N. A. A. C. P. and a trade union official. "We've been able to get only twenty-three children in to the white schools here at a tremendous cost to each child."

Encouraged to Fight

But these small accomplishments in education and other fields have encouraged Negroes to fight to extend them.

"After years in sack cloth, the Negro has learned how it feels to wear a suit," declared Mr. Robertson. "Oone he sees or smells freedom, he puts in greater effort."

Earlier Supreme Court decisions, affecting education, voting and transportation also were held to be important. The Rev. I. DeQuincey Newman, field secretary of the N. A. A. C. P. in South Carolina, said the key ruling had been the one that outlawed the white primary.

"Getting voting rights helped to create the atmosphere in which ideas of equality and dignity could be born," he said. "Without the vote, men didn't have dignity.

"A voteless people is a voiceless people. For a man to have in his pocket a registration certificate, gives him a sense of belonging."

Mr. Newman traced the new importance to another development, the confidence instilled in younger Negroes by their changing status at home. He explained that many parents were bringing up children as their virtual equals and cited himself as an example.

The New York Times

ADVOCATE: The Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., a leader in Negro drive to end racial discrimination.

"My parents took a parternal attitude toward me," he said. "But my children have a voice in family affairs."

Dr. J. Rupert Picott, executive secretary of the Virginia Teachers Association, a Negro organization, recalled during an interview in Richmond that his grandmother had once told him:

Jail a Badge of Honor

" 'Son, whatever you do, don't ever go to jail!' "

He then remarked that among many younger Negroes today a jail term imposed as a reult of anti-segregation activity was a badge of honor.

"There is no longer the old fear of suffering for that which you believe to be right," he said, "because the Negro people believe that in pushing forward they are helping America to grow strong.

"Right or wrong," he went on, "The Negro people believe that they have not only become the conscience of the South but also, in a very real sense, the last hope and savior of the South.

The new militancy has been fed to some extent by rivalries between organizations, college groups, cities and individuals.

Joseph McNeil of Greensboro, N. C., a student at North Carolina Agricultural and Technical College, said that had been a key factor in the spread of the sit-in demonstrations.

He and three other students at the school touched off the current wave of protest in Feb. 1, 1960, with a demand for service at a Woolworth's lunch counter in Greensboro.

Little Rock a Beacon

He said the nine Negro students who were admitted to Central High School in Little Rock, Ark., in 1957 "were idols to us." Earlier, he and other youths had been encouraged by the Supreme Court's desegregation decision.

"We were green school kids then," he said. "There was a yearning in our hearts to break the barrier but it never came about."

The Montgomery boycott drew many clergymen into the struggle.

"It seems that all the ministers since that time have wanted to become Martin Luther Kings," said A. T. Spaulding, president of North Carolina Mutual Life Insurance Company.

Typical of the viewpoint of these ministers was that expressed by the Rev. L. F. Griffin. He is pastor of the First Baptist Church of Farmville, Va., president of the Prince Edward County Christian Association and coordinator of the county's N. A. A. C. P. branch. He is also a leader in the effort to desegregate the county's public schools, which have been closed for two years.

"I, myself, preach a strong social gospel," said Mr. Griffin. "I'm not much of a 'pie-in-the-sky' minister. I believe that The Nuzarene had a way of life that is far above anything that man has attained and I believe that it can be applied here on earth."

Urges Paying Poll Tax

Pointing to a bulletin board at the rear of the chuch sanctuary, he said:

"I don't think anything about desecrating the temple with a notice about paying your poll tax."

But to some leaders of the race, there is nothing new about the pressure for civil rights. This contention was made by John H. Wheeler, president of the Mechanics and Farmers

Bank in Durham, N. C., and a member of the President's Committee on equal job opportunities.

"White people North and South have missed this," asserted Mr. Wheeler. "There's nothing new about it. Of late, we've had an increase in the centrifugal force—now they're beginning to bunch the data, so to speak."

Whites, he said, have failed to view the Negro as just another American with "desires and ambitions that are comparable to those of other Americans."

Mr. Wheeler conceded that Negro leadership in the past had been divided over the question of desegregation," not because it didn't want it but because it wasn't convinced that it could take place.

"There was never any question about what the Negro wanted," Mr. Wheeler said. "He wanted full equality. And each new successs was proof to the timid that it could be attained."

Klansman Held in Birmingham In Mob's Attack on Bus Riders

Youth Tells Police of Lying in Wait for Bi-Racial Group—Faces Charge of Intent to Kill—2 Others Seized

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., May 16 (AP)—A 20-year-old Birmingham bakery worker was arrested today and charged with taking part in a white mob's attack on integrationists at a Birmingham bus station on Sunday.

Detective Melvin Bailey said Jesse Oliver Faggard had signed a statement admitting that he had answered a Ku Klux Klan call to appear at a bus station where the integrationists were expected, but denied striking any blows.

He was charged with assault with intent to murder and grand larceny, Mr. Bailey said. Mr. Faggard's father, Jesse Thomas Faggard, was arrested on a disorderly conduct charge today. A third man was also held.

Two persons, a white and a Negro, were battered severely by a crowd of club-swinging white men when they stepped off the bus. Others getting off the bus also were beaten up, along with several bystanders.

Mr. Bailey said young Faggard, who identified himself as a member of the Klan, gave the following account of events leading up to the beating:

He received a call from the Klan to be at the Greyhound bus station Sunday.

He and other men waited at the station until 4 P. M., when they heard that the Greyhound bus carrying the integrationists had been set afire outside Anniston.

Then they went to the Trailways bus station, three blocks away, where another bus carrying integrationists was expected.

A few minutes after they arrived, a bus carrying Negroes and white persons arrived.

A Negro got off the bus and walked through the rear door of the station.

Mr. Faggard said one of the men in front of him grabbed the Negro and told him to "Get out of here, the Negro waiting room is over there."

"All at once," Mr. Faggard said, "people started rushing, shoving and kicking."

The integrationists beaten at the bus station were members of the Congress of Racial Equality, making a bus trip through the South to test bus station segregation laws.

C. O. R. E. Group Criticized

WASHINGTON, May 16 (UPI)—Representative George Huddleston Jr., Democrat of Alabama, said today that the "freedom riders" got just what they asked for" when their bus was burned and they were beaten.

"Their sole purpose in trespassing upon the South and its well established and understood customs," Mr. Huddleston said in a House speech, "was to create a deplorable and disturbing situation."

He said:

"Every decent Southerner deplores violence of any sort. In deploring violence in this case, all of us understand the tremendous aggravation brought about by these self-anointed merchants of racial hatred."

He went on that the Negro and white riders had made it clear they were not seeking good will and racial understanding but had set out to violate the laws of Alabama instead.

Nation-Wide Protests Against "Freedom Riders" Tormenters

By EMORY O. JACKSON

Nation-wide protests against the Mothers' Day mob which interrupted a tour of "FreedomRiders" sponsored by the Congress of Racial Equality were being sent widely as Birmingham police on the seventh anniversary of the May 17, 1954 school decision halted a trip by Nashville students seeking to ride through the Deep South freedom-styled.

Police reportedly boarded the bus transporting the student freedom tourists before it arrived at the Greyhound Bus Terminal. Two of the freedom travellers were reportedly arrested.

When the bus pulled into the bus terminal minus of two of the freedom tourists, the freedom riders were kept on the bus as others got off it. After about an hour's wait, the student American - style riders left the bus and went into the waiting room marked "white. The [illegible] closed.

Several well known civic leaders were in the crowd which formed fast and enlarged as the unusual activities drew attention. Newsmen had no opportunity to talk with the freedom travellers while they were restricted to the bus. A card-board cover was placed over the windshield and front glass of the bus which prevented photographers from making pictures from that angle.

The Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, president of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights and pastor of Bethel Baptist Church (North) contacted the Department of Justice in Washington, alerting them to the situation as it appeared before the freedom tourist were allowed to aligh from the bus.

While restricted to the bus, there had been a brief scuffle on the inside. Police and bus officials standing near the bus obscured the view. It was not learned what happened, and why.

While waiting departure, the open-seat riders chatted among themselves in the general waiting room. Apparently enroute to New Orleans, they re-routed their trip to go through Montgomery. When time arrived for them to continue their trip, no bus driver would pilot the bus on which they were scheduled to ride. That had been the situation the day before.

Police kept the crowd at distance. The general Greyhound Bus Terminal area was under police supervision. Later two police dogs were brought to the scene, ostensibly to help keep the crowd in check. None indicated whether any legal action was planned against the interruption, restrictions, and detainment. Nor was there any inkling whether the Justice Department of Justice intended to look into the incdent.

This is a reproduction of the note thrown from the window of the halted Greyhound Bus at the Bus Terminal about 12:45 p. m. Wednesday, May 17, 1961. It was thrown to the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, president of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights.

"Negro, Paul Brooke, white student, Jim Zweig police has put them in jail, one of the policemen was Jones from Birmingham, bus operator is E. S. Lane was put in jail in North Birmingham."

This was the first indication that any arrest had been made.

Police said later that the two collegians were arrested for refusal to cooperate with officers who asked them to move back to the Jim Crow section of the bus.

Zweig, of Beloit, Wis., was identified as a student at Fisk University and Brooks was identified as a student at American Baptist Theological Seminary.

....

In addition to these two open-seat riders, there were Miss Catherine Burke, a Birmingham student in Nashville; John Lewis, Lucretia Collins, Charles Butler, Rudolph Graham, William Harbour, Miss Mary McCollum, Carl Bush.

Others placed under protective arrests were: James Armstrong, Eugene Irving, Lincoln Hendricks, the Rev. Robert Floyd and Miss Vera Brown.

Thanks to Gov. Patterson

Atlanta Ga.

Gov. John Patterson, of Alabama, has done the South a timely favor. By the brazen preposterousness of his public position, and by the added political hypocrisy of his threat to arrest the U.S. marshals, he has shown all but those whose eyes are blinded by the cataracts of unreality and prejudice, the one alternative to the processes of law. In addition he has focused world attention on what choice the states of the South will make.

The White Citizens Councils and Klans shout, in ignorance and arrogance, that they do not give a damn if the newspapers of Africa, Asia, South America and Europe are looking at pictures of mobs beating students with lead pipes and clubs. Nor do they give a damn what the radios and televisions of the world are saying.

But, the fathers and mothers of the South and the nation do care. The men who direct the future of this country care. The legendary grapes of wrath and grief are being trampled out.

The South should make up its mind on the basis of morality—and not because its brutal toughs have, for a time, taken over areas of three Alabama cities and carried out their violence all but unmolested until police belatedly arrived. But if Alabama and other states which will be tested cannot make up their collective mind to do what is right, then they can thank Gov. Patterson for showing them the other side of the coin.

Gov. Patterson has reaffirmed the state's determination, in defiance of federal law, to select those citizens who may travel on buses in his state. His troopers will inspect buses and eject, presumably arresting, those who they decide are not eligible.

Law

Here again we see a Southern state committing itself to a position it cannot long sustain. There may be more mobs. Her toughs may conspire in other states. But, in the end, the right of an orderly citizen to travel on a bus will prevail.

Gov. Patterson illustrates the dilemma of other Deep-South governors. He is in a very real sense a captive of all his previous criticism of federal courts and his pledges to maintain state laws in conflict with federal laws.

The toughs, hearing a governor make such heated charges, cannot be other than encouraged in their own forms of lawlessness.

The loud cries from Alabama for law enforcement also require study. They may mean enforcing only Alabama laws which defy the United States Constitution.

Whatever views one may have about the wisdom of the students who decided to test the law, it is necessary to keep in mind they did not provoke any disorder. They passed through several other Southern states without incident. It was not until they reached Alabama that mobs gathered. In neither Anniston, Birmingham nor Montgomery did police prevent their concentration about bus stations ahead of the arrival of the travelers. The students are merely passive passengers in the bus. All Alabama had to do was allow them to arrive and depart.

The students are entirely within the law.

Yet Alabama seeks to arrest them and the U.S. marshals. Mob members are still at large.

Parallel

There is here a deadly parallel. In time not even Gov. Patterson can be too comfortable in endorsement of it.

The Christian church also may not be comfortable if it notes one aspect of this story. As of this writing not a single white church congregation has held a protest meeting. Only a Negro congregation protested and it would have been mobbed but for U.S. marshals. Is the moral voice of the South silent?

Let the South—and the nation—look well.

There are just two paths to take. One is that of law. The other is that of mobs, brutality, murder, tear gas and troops.

There is no way to pass by, like the Pharisee, on the other side.

The Birmingham News Asks Bus Riders Be 'Held in Check'

A Front Page Editorial Bids Robert Kennedy Take Action to 'Stop Those Who Provoke Violence'

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., May 22 (UPI)—Following is the text of a front-page editorial that appeared in The Birmingham News today under the headline: "Mr. Kennedy: Why Aren't King 'Riders' Held in Check?"

"Mr. Robert Kennedy:

"The people of Alabama and the people of the South want to know why it isn't just as important to stop those who provoke violence as it is to stop those who commit violence. This, Mr. Kennedy, is a direct question. We are sure you will want to answer.

"Martin Luther King flew into Montgomery. For what, Mr. Kennedy? Are you pressing him for an answer? Why don't you put him under some control?

"The News understands that attempts were made to dissuade King from going to Montgomery. He refused to heed them.

"Instead, he came into a city on the knife's-edge of tension and went through the heart of Montgomery in a motorcade which was described by one observer as "just like the President coming to town." If this was not intended to attract attention to him, to further increase tension, what was it?

"Once in Montgomery, King was the featured attraction at a Negro rally honoring the "Freedom Riders." The rally itself was designed, inevitably, to cause more strife.

"Before it began, you, Mr. Kennedy, asked for a "return to reason" in Alabama. You asked this state's citizens and travelers here to weigh their actions carefully and avoid doing anything which might make matters worse. King went on with his rally.

"Later, after the violence which he certainly expected and obviously wanted did indeed erupt and the National Guard was called out, King reportedly told the Negroes inside the church where the rally was being held that "the lawmen would be coming into the church soon to harass and arrest the 'freedom riders'.

Words Called Inflamatory

"The law was coming to harass! Mr. Kennedy, are these the words of a man attempting to restore calm? Are they the words of a man who is attempting to help restore order?

"The people of Alabama can believe that the office of the President of the United States, and the office of the Attorney General of the United States, have sought to show the agents of turmoil that their hi[gh]ly publicized "Freedom Ri[de]rs" their highly emotional meetings only serve to i[n]their cause, not improve it.

"The Federal courts already ruled on segrega[tion] The weight of the exec[utive] branch of the Federal Go[vern]ment already has been put [be]hind the rulings of the cou[rts].

"The people of Alabama, people of goodwill, of good i[n]tent know that law and [or]der must prevail no matter what the provocation. Those who congregate are a threat to law and order.

"Alabamians want those who set up these charged meetings who deliberately began actions that they cannot doubt will create violence, to be put under the same weight of executive pressure that is being applied to white trouble-makers.

No Patience With Pat[terson]

"The Birmingham News has no patience with many of the actions and utterings of John Patterson, the Governor of Alabama.

"The News is not satisfied that Commissioner of Public Safety Sullivan of Montgomery met the situation there Saturday with the speed and vigor that the Montgomery police should have shown when they well knew that the "Freedom Riders," the provokers, were nearing Montgomery's city limits. If he didn't have access to Highway Patrol Director Floyd Mann's surveillance of the bus they were riding, he could have had access to that information. Floyd Mann had it and he was making it available to any proper law enforcement agencies that desired it.

"The people of Alabama don't want Federal marshals or steel-helmeted troops with bayonets roaming their streets. But those who stop to think will have to admit, as The Birmingham News admits, that we brought much of this upon ourselves. This newspaper—and we trust the good people of all over the state of Alabama—is demanding of all law enforcement agencies that the job be done.

"Law and order—through the cooperation of Maj. Gen. Henry V. Graham, State Safety Director Floyd Mann, the police of Montgomery and your Federal Marshals—are in charge in Montkomery. These representatives of municipal, state and Federal law are working together as people should work together.

"We don't know the letter of the Federal law. But we do know and we do respect the spirit of the law in this Western world of freedom.

"The right of peaceful assembly has its limitations, just as has the right of freedom of speech. The performances of Fred Shuttlesworth in Birmingham have long deliberately abused these guarantees of the Constitution. The News believes the deliberate rushing to Montgomery by Martin Luther King and his retinue. Could be construed as nothing but further agitation of an already tense community.

"The News has urged municipal and state law enforcement agencies of Alabama to stop those who encourage violence by their presence and attitudes in already charged situations. The News believes that this applies to "Freedom Riders," Martin Luther King, and Fred Shuttlesworth, as well as the men Gov. Patterson called "interested citizens" who have shown they were ready to take the law in their own hands.

"The people of Alabama, Mr. Kennedy, would feel more secure in the efforts to guarantee the rights of all citizens if you found a way to stop those who came here and, for[ced] trouble by their actions in the midst of already highly charged

Alabama, U. S. A.

Once again the Federal Government has been compelled to move into a state to maintain law and order and to protect the Constitutional rights of American citizens subjected to mob violence. Four years ago, President Eisenhower was forced to intervene with paratroopers in Little Rock. Now President Kennedy has found it necessary to send armed Federal marshals to Montgomery, where the Federal Government is being challenged by state authorities.

This deplorable train of events adds a tinge of irony to the nation's observance of the hundredth anniversary of the Civil War. It can only deal a new blow to American prestige and especially to our foreign policy dedicated to the promotion of human rights and human equality irrespective of class, color or creed. Little Rock became a byword in international discourse and Montgomery may now join it in that unenviable distinction. The saving grace is that the Federal Government is acting promptly and decisively to defend these rights.

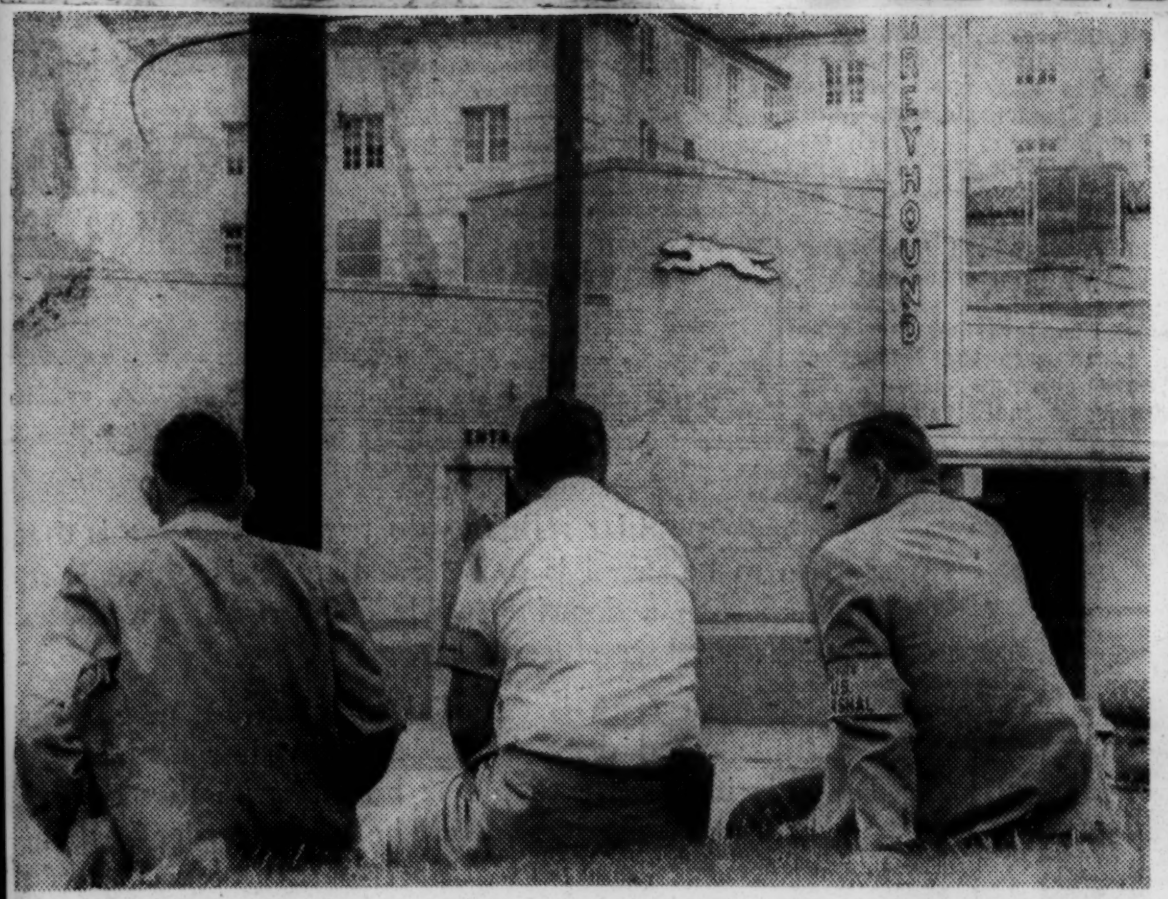
The issue in Montgomery and in Birmingham is not school segregation, as in Little Rock. It is the right of American citizens, white and Negro alike, to travel in safety in interstate commerce, without being segregated in contravention of the Constitution. This right is now being tested by the so-called "Freedom Riders," a racially mixed group consisting primarily of students, who are waging their campaign for civil rights in the South in a Gandhian spirit of idealism and of non-violent resistance to an evil tradition. But it is also being waged with loud advance publicity and in deliberate defiance of state laws and local customs. There can be no question that in the "Freedom Riders'" completely legal action there is an element of incitement and provocation in regions of high racial tension.

There can also be no question, however, of the "Freedom Riders'" Constitutional right to do what they are doing, nor—and this is the key point—of the duty and responsibility of the city and state authorities to protect them. The "Freedom Riders" are acting in accordance with the law and they are doing what they are doing frankly to test that law.

Governor Patterson himself acknowledges the state's responsibility to cope with violence, but he has only exacerbated the situation by denouncing the "Freedom Riders" as "rabble rousers," by threatening to arrest the Federal marshals and by obtaining an injunction in state courts in conflict with a Federal injunction. He has put the State of Alabama in direct opposition to the Government and the Constitution of the United States.

The issue between the Federal and the state authorities is clearly joined. There can be no doubt which authority will and must prevail.

GOVERNOR OF ALABAMA WARNS U.S. MARSHALS FACING ARREST



United Press International

United States marshals, part of a group of 400 sent to Alabama, sit across from the Montgomery bus station where "freedom riders were attacked by a mob.

United Press International

Byron (Whizzer) White, named by President Kennedy to head the force of armed officers, is shown yesterday as he conferred with Alabama Gov. John Patterson.

Deputy Attorney General Is Told Federal Agents Are Not Wanted

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 21 (AP)—An angry Gov. John Patterson warned a high Federal official today that 400 or more armed United States marshals arriving here may be arrested if they try to intervene in race-riot control.

"We do not recognize them as law enforcement officers in this matter," Patterson told the Associated Press after a heated conference with Byron R. (Whizzer) White, No. 1 assistant to U. S. Attorney General Robert Kennedy.

Reporters were allowed to sit in on the 45-minute conference, staged in a coldly formal atmosphere with few smiles or niceties exchanged by Patterson and White.

Governor Angry

The Governor, flanked by several state officials, was plainly angry at times and his tone was often argumentative as they talked. White remained polite but firm, his voice showing no emotion.

The angry Patterson told White: "Make especially certain that none of your men encroach on any of our state laws, rights or functions, because we'll arrest them just like anybody else."

White replied that the Federal Government "does not share your views on that point" and said the marshals and deputized oficers—some already patrolling city streets—"wil lcontinue working to maintain law and order."

"There are other pending movements of bus passengers which might provoke more racial violence here," the Federal official said without elaborating. "We want to have the marshals on hand in case there is trouble."

In Washington, the Justice Department said White took Patterson's statement to mean that Federal officers might be arrested "if they acted in breach of local law."

Patterson, questioned by a newsman after the conference said his statement meant that U. S. marshals trying to quell any further rioting "will be considered just as plain citizens trying to take the law into their own hands."

Congress leaders of both parties back United States action in Alabama. Page A7.

"Alabama law prohibits federal intervention in state rights and functions, such as preserving law and order, unless Federal assistance is requested," Patterson explained. "We didn't request it."

Possible Clash Seen

The development thus set the stage for a possible clash of Federal vs. State officers in the wake of the race riot which erupted against a biracial group of "Freedom Riders" yesterday.

White flew to this troubled city last night to supervise the growing task force of Federal officers sent here from surrounding states by the U. S. Attorney General.

"Any further Federal intervention," Patterson declared, "would certainly be harmful to Federal-State relationships. These relations are already at a pretty low ebb as far as Alabama is concerned."

Denouncing the Federal action, Patterson said "we consider you interlopers here and we feel that your presence here will only serve to agitate and provoke the racial situation."

Patterson accused the Federal Government of encouraging "Freedom Rides" and told White he thinks the bus-riding movement to test segregation traditions is Communist-inspired.

"We don't need your marshals, we don't want them and we didn't ask for them," the Chief Executive said. "And still the Federal Government sends them here to help put down a disturbance which it helped create."

White said the armed marshals "intend to operate within Federal jurisdiction, which we believe encompasses protecting passengers traveling by interstate bus."

No Time Limit on Stay

"Is this invasion of U. S. marshals an indefinite proposition?" asked Alabama Atty. Gen. Macdonald Gallon, one of tthe state officials present.

"There is no time limit on our stay here," White replied, "but naturally, we hope it will be brief. Everything seems very peaceful this morning, yet yesterday's violence showed how fast it can erupt."

To the Governor's expressed belief that Communists promote "Freedom Rides," the Deputy U. S. Attorney General said he didn't know of any Communist infiltration into this movement.

"But no matter what this group's connection may be, if any," he argued "that is no reason why they shouldn't be assured of the right to travel peacefully by bus."

Asked by Patterson if the Federal men would aid in the arrest of the 21 "Freedom Riders" sought for violating a State court injunction prohibiting them from riding buses in Alabama, White said, "I cannot guarantee that."

"I am not familiar with your injunction and have no opinion on its validity," said the Federal official, adding that the U. S. task force could not promise to share any knowledge of the riders' activities.

Patterson Quizzes Officials

Patterson, who fired dozens of questions at the U. S. officials, remarked at one point, "We don't mean to be interrogating you." Replied White: "Well, you're doing a pretty good job of it."

The Governor asked White if the Federal Government is seeking to discourage the segregation-testing efforts of the battered group here now or any others who might come in their wake.

"We have attempted to caution anyone we could reach against provoking any incidents," White answered. "But we certainly do not have the authority and do not intend to discourage bus travel."

To that, the Governor leveled another question: "Do your men plan to escort these agitators to various cities in Alabama to violate our laws, or to escort them into restaurants, for example, to flaunt [sic] our segregation traditions?"

To Escort "Freedom Riders"

White said the U. S. marshals will escort the "freedom riders" if they decide to travel farther, "but not to violate any laws—just to keep them safe. I don't know whether they will go into any restaurants."

The Federal official also suggested that yesterday's bloody violence could have been averted if police had been at the station controlling the mob when the biracial busload of "Freedom Riders" arrived.

"It was no secret that the bus had left Birmingham and was on its way to Montgomery," White declared. "It was a known fact."

Patterson avoided that implication with a question of his own: "Are you saying that we should protect agitators who come here to stir up trouble?"

White said all passengers should be protected when necessary.

The "Freedom Riders" arrived by Greyhound about 35 minutes ahead of schedule. And police did not reach the scene until 15 minutes after thet wild two-hour melee broke out. The riders had already been beseiged once, and anti-Negro violence flared twice later.

The conference between Patterson and White started with the Governor protesting against the Federal intervention and questioning its legality," White said. "Any such question should be discussed by your Attorney General and the Justice Department.

STOP VIOLENCE, TENSIONS, PRESIDENT KENNEDY URGES

More Marshals Sent Into Montgomery; Church Attacked

WASHINGTON — President John F. Kennedy has urged all citizens of Alabama and all travelers through the state to refrain from doing anything which will cause increased tension or provoke violence and result in further damage to our country.

The President spoke in wake of an angry, club-swinging mob which stormed through a cordon of U. S. marshals and state troopers, and attacked a Negro church during a rally being held Sunday to honor "Freedom Riders", whose arrival in Montgomery, Ala., Saturday touched off a race riot.

The nation's chief executive voiced his views after a personal report from Attorney General Robert Kennedy. The appeal had not been heard in Montgomery, when the strife-torn Alabama capital exploded for the second day in a row.

Meanwhile, Monday, President Kennedy ordered two hundred more Federal marshals into Alabama to cope with the situation, which had not settled. There was some talk about sending in troops, but this had not been confirmed by noon Monday. On another front, the Justice Department was reportedly considering the prosecution of persons known to have participated in the rioting under Civil Rights and other federal statutes.

CHURCH ATTACKED

A crowd of several hundred whites attacked the First Baptist Church and forced federal officers and Alabama Highway Patrolmen, to wield guns and tear gas before the National Guard was summoned to the scene to put down the disorders. Alabama Gov. John Patterson declared a limited state of martial law after ordering out the National Guard.

Alabama Adjutant Gen. Henry Graham, head of the National Guard, kept the besieged Negroes in the church until 2:30 a.m.

As Dr. Rev. Martin Luther King spoke inside the church, Sunday night, tension began to boil outside. The crowds grew, insulting remarks were hurled at marshals, then stones and missiles. The firing of an automobile seemed to be the signal an explosion as burning crosses once had rallied Klansmen.

The gas tank of the car exploded and the battle was on.

When the major clash came, tear gas wafted through the neighborhood and into the auditorium itself. Authorities tried to get the Negroes in the church to go home.

But many came out only for fresh air and, still weeping from the gas, went back in to continue the prayer and singing service.

At one time the gas was so thick it was almost impossible to see through it.

One U. S. marshal who was not immediately identified was injured when a brick hit him on the head.

King said that "the ultimate responsibility for the hideous action" against the freedom riders "must be placed at the doorstep" of Governor Patterson.

Shortly after the meeting began a tear gas shell went off outside the closed front door of the church but it was not immediately clear who fired the shell.

As King, a hero to Montgomery Negroes for helping break city bus segregation barriers, spoke, 18 of the students who were set upon Saturday by a white mob, arrived.

The whole congregation stood and cheered.

More 'Riders' Go To Birmingham; Drivers Balk

By United Press International

Mounting racial tensions in Alabama; quiet, orderly integration of lunch counters in Jacksonville, Fla., and a new drive to end segregation in Atlanta city parks and courts Wednesday marked the seventh anniversary of the historic U. S. Supreme Court decision that public school segregation is unconstitutional.

The day's pattern of race - relationship developments over the South varied widely.

In Birmingham, Ala., a group of Negroes, including students, arrived from Nashville, Tenn., to resume the "freedom rides" that resulted in beatings and the burning of a bus in Alabama last weekend.

Alabama Gov. John Patterson, informed in advance that the Negroes were coming told a news conference the group was composed of "rabble - rousing agitators" and said he would not promise them protection.

When they arrived at the Birmingham bus terminal, however, police would not let them leave the bus, which was headed for New Orleans, via Tuscaloosa, Ala., and Meridian, Miss.

Police finally let the group off after an hour and a half wait, when it appeared bus drivers were refusing to make the trip.

ARREST TWO PERSONS

Police said two persons, one white and one Negro, were arrested on the outskirts of the city for refusng to cooperate with officers.

Already in New Orleans were the first two groups of "freedom riders" — Negroes and some whites — who made the bus tour of the South to integrate bus and other public facilities at the time of the court decision anniversary.

They scheduled a rally Wednesday night to mark the anniversary day.

There were these other developments:

A spokesman for the Congress on Racial Equality CORE said college students would picket major interstate bus terminals in all parts of the country in an effort to desegregate Southern bus waiting rooms. He listed 27 cities for the demonstrations, including three in the South - Nashville, Ten., Chapel Hill, N. C., and Augusta, Ga. Pickets showed up at the Nashville bus station at mid -afternoon.

Montgomery Bus Station Scene Of Vast Disorder

By DON MARTIN

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (UPI) A mob of white men and shrieking women attacked and mercilessly beat members of a mixed group of "freedom riders" Saturday and the Kennedy administration ordered more than 350 U. S. Marshals and other armed federal officers into Alabama.

Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy sent the federal officers in to deal with violence after the President told him to take whatever steps necessary to bring an end to the continuing disorders in Alabama.

Saturday's outburst occurred at the Montgomery bus station when the freedom riders arrived from Birmingham.

Even before the federal officers were ordered in, President Kennedy had a personal representative on the scene trying to ease the building racial tension.

The representative, John Seigenthaler, 32, was among those beaten by Saturday's mob.

SAVING WHITE GIRL

Seigenthaler was not accompanying the freedom riders, but he incurred the mob's anger when he tried to save a white girl the angry whites were chasing. Before he could get her into his car he was struck from behind and left lying unconscious on the pavement.

James Zwerg, the only white youth among the freedom riders, was the most seriously beaten.

Atty. Gen. Kennedy said the federal marshals and other enforcement agents were sent to guarantee "safe passage" in interstate travel.

Saturday's violence marked the third outburst in Alabama in about a week.

PRESIDENT'S STATEMENT

Kennedy's statement said:

"I have instructed the Justice Department to take all necessary steps based on their investigations and information. I call upon the governor and other responsible state officials in Alabama — to exercise their lawful authority to prevent any further outbreaks of violence.

"I hope that state and local officials will meet their responsibilities. The United States government intends to meet its responsibilities.

"I would also hope that any persons whether a citizen of Alabama or a visitor there would refrain from any action which would in any way tend to provoke further outbreaks.

ALL NECESSARY STEPS

Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy acted after the President directed him to take all necessary steps to deal with the strife which flared again Saturday at Montgomery.

The federal marshals and other enforcement agents were sent to guarantee "safe passage" in interstate travel. The violence has centered on a group of "freedom riders" who are using buses in the South.

The Justice Department also said it would ask the U. S. federal court in Montgomery to issue an injunction to bar the Ku Klux Klan, the National States Rights Party and other persons from interfering with interstate bus travel.

A department spokesman said more than 300 law enforcement officers already were headed for the Montgomery area to protect persons, propety rand vehicles in Alabama.

The attoney general also sent in an extra FBI team to intensify its investigation of Saturday's beatings of "freedom riders" attempting to challenge bus segregation practices in the South.

The U. S. officers are either marshals or deputized as marshals and are not military men, the that integration couple walk home by themselves. These people will spokesman said.

"They are on their way now by air and automobile," he said.

All of the officers, except for some FBI agents and 20 marshals from the Washington, D. C. area are from Southern states, he added. The attorney general notified Alabama Gov. John S. Patterson of the moves in a telegram sent late Saturday.

Byron Whizzer White, deputy attorney general, will be in charge of the special federal forces in Alabama.

In Montgomery, a man who was not immediately identified at the scene, was discovered lying in the street about 40 feet from where Jim Zwerg a white freedom rider was attacked.

The man lay there for about 25 minutes before police officers finally put him in a car and took him to a downtown hospital.

A reporter asked Police Commissioner L. B. Sullivan why an ambulance wasn't called for Zwerg and the unidentified man.

Sullivan replied: "Every white ambulance in town reports their vehicles have broken down."

Another group of whites grabbed Norman Ritter, Atlanta manager of the Time - Life bureau, and his photographer Don Urbrock. The two were accompanying the freedom riders, who had the avowed purpose of breaking down racial barriers at bus stations and terminals and in the vehicles themselves.

Ritter was clubbed on the head and Urbrock was smashed repeatedly in the face and his 35 MM camera shattered.

Most of the Negro freedom riders escaped in the crowd, but one unidentified Negro was beaten senseless by baseball - bat-wielding group on the unloading platform of the terminal about 45 minutes after the bus arrived.

He too lay unconscious for about 20 minutes before a Negro ambulance finally came and picked him up.

The actual violence was carried out by only about 25 or 30 of the estimated 300 persons that had gathered at the station for the freedom riders arrival.

Additional hundreds poured into the area when the violence had erupted and the crowd swelled to an estimated 1,500 to 2,000 persons.

Part of the crowd caught up with some of the Negro freedom riders when they attempted to make their way to Negro First Baptist Church at which the Rev. Ralph Abernathy, an integration leader officiates.

Suitcases were ripped from the hands of the students and smashed on the pavement. Mail and clothing scattered over the street and sidewalk in front of the federal building where the attack occurred.

About an hour and a half after the first violence erupted, highway patrol cars sped into the terminal parking area with sirens screeching. Officers armed with riot guns and extra - long night sticks piled out.

The first police did not arrive on the scene until about 20 minutes after the trouble started.

The state patrolmen were reinforced by Sheriff Mac Sim Butler of Montgomery County and about 30 mounted deputies.

Officers herded the crowd onto the sidewalks on the far side of the two streets which parallel the terminal.

Two hours after the bus arrived at the terminal at 10:15 a. m. cst, the hostile crowd of more than 1,500 was shouting jeers and catcalls at the officers.

A deputy sheriff was heard to say to Butler: "We ought to let take care of them."

Stewart Culpepper, a reporter for the Montgomery Advertiser, credited Floyd Mann, state public safety director, with "saving the life" of the Negro that was attacked by bat - carrying toughs on the unloading platform. Culpepper said Mann waded into the melee pulled a gun and shouted "stand back."

Witnessing the bus station violence were Alabama Atty. Gen. MacDonald Gallion; Asst. Atty. Gen. Ed Livingston; Highway Patrol Chief Joe Snelley and several state investigators. Gallion turned over a court injunction to a deputy sheriff who was to have read it to the Negro students. But Gallion ,Sullivan and the deputy said they didn't know where the Negroes were. They tried to read it to Zwerg as he sat in the back of a Negro taxicab in a state of semi - shock. Swerg was later taken to St. Jud Hospital by a Negro ambulance.

The hospital reported he was under "close observation." A spokesman said Zwerg's face was badly damaged by repeated blows.

The freedom riders left Birmingham for Montgomery Saturday morning after waiting 18 hours for a bus.

That is an example of Patterson's vacuum - packed metal processes. The issue is not protection of agitators but upholding the law of native white Alabamians against riot and violence. That — not protecting agitators — is the issue."

"As governor John Patterson took an oath to uphold the law of Alabama. He makes a schoolboy exhibition of swooping down on a pennyweight crap table. He has hundreds arrested and fined for violating traffic laws. He wrangles with the state treasurer over what the law says about the investment of state funds in securities. He was on loan shark violators and demands reapportionment in the name of the law."

"As the first and foremost agent responsible for law and order in the common wealth Patterson demands obedience to law a hundred times a day."

"And above all this, he has placed (appropriately we believe) a statue of his father upon the Capitol greensward, to commemorate a man who became a martyr because in Phenix City law enforcement was abandoned and the city turned over to the mob.

"Mobs are no more to be tolerated in Birmingham than in Phenix City. The toll of mob action is the same everywhere it is countenanced."

"A governor blights this state economically and packages long-range woe for all its citizens when he does other than austerely quell mob action in any form whatever — Kluxer, labor or company goons."

"Mob action is morally wrong in any case. It is rape of our noble Anglo-Saxon tradition of lawful justice."

"But there is a readier and more tangible reason for all the people to disapprove of Patterson's incendiary leadership. That reason may become one's own skin."

"Mobsters will rule whatever they are not restrained from ruling — everything from church to hot dog stand. They will rule you — and John Patterson — if they can."

"The same newspapers that told of the Birmingham mob action against the agitators told of the flogging of three white men in Sylacauga. One was said to have permitted a colored nurse to chastise his child. That is the way of the mob unleashed."

"The mob will enter your home and your shop too, as and when it can. That is the history of mob action down through the ages."

"It's a dull citizen who thinks it may not come home to him, directly or indirectly."

Mob Action Termed Here As "Ferocious Inhumanity"

The Greater Birmingham Council on Human Relations of which the Rev. C. Herbert Oliver is the president has branded the mob-stopped "Freedom Riders" trip "ferocious inhumanity".

Additionally the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights headed by the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth wired Atty. General Robert F. Kennedy said the mob-generated events indicated that "Alabama .... (is) .... unsafe for travel."

"We share the pain and humiliation of all those who suffered from the ferocious inhumanity which erupted in Birmingham last Sunday. We condemn the conduct of lawless persons who perpetrated the violent attacks upon others. We deplore the absence of the forewarned law enforcement agencies."

"The failure of responsible officials to restrain violence at Anniston and Birmingham was clearly in violation of Article I, Paragraph 35 of the Alabama constitution, which reads in part that "the sole object an donly legitimate end of government is to protect the citizen in the enjoyment of life, liberty and property."

"We join with the conscience of the Birmingham press, radio, TV, and other responsible leadership in recognizing the failure of our community. It is regrettable that personal suffering on the part of community. It is regrettable that personal suffering on the part of communications personnel was required to bring to light brutality which has long been existent in Alabama. Signed statements of such brutality against Negroes and white alike, some inflicted at the hands of the police, are available."

"We believe in a growing community unhindered by lawlessness and resultant industrial loss. When, by the common effort of its citizens,, Birmingham will use the lesson of the recent tragedy to remove tension and disorder, a rehabilitated prestige will foster the growth of the community for the benefit of all."

Here is the text of the telegram sent to the Attorney General:

Robert Kennedy
Dept. of Justice
Washington, D. C.

"Events of past few days show Alabama being unsafe for travel by persons from without as well as within the state. Even Newspapermen are at the mercy of mobs".

"Inaction by Commissioner Conner who was warned of possible violence via telegram 7:25 a. m. Sunday morning,....."

"Inflamed words by Gov. Patterson, and his withdrawal of patrol escort encouraged more possible violence and caused Greyhound drivers to refuse to drive."

"Iresponsible actions by such officials constitute derelection of duty an damount to high crimes against American Citizens. Gov. Patterson's words and actions are shocking and inexcusable."

"Your direct action in the situation caused Birmingham Officials to give adequate protection later at the Bus Station and Airport. Seeing the governor did not follow through may mean that with him, mere telephone calls may not be enough.

"We thank you for your forthrightness and genuine concern for us in this area of extreme gravity."

"We urge a thorough investigation of the whole incidents at once; and we request that you personally come to Alabama in the hope that law and order will be better enhanced."

May 17, the Rev. Shuttlesworth issued the following release:

"We are informed that students of the Nashville Non-Violent Movement Committee have decided to come to Birmingham today to "take up the freedom ride" which was hindered by violence Sunday. The students, feel that the law is plain enough; that citizens' rights to ride and use public facilities is well established; and that its a national disgrace to let violence and lawlessness run unchecke don the streets and highways of Southern America."

"Believing fully in our Constitution, and in the ability and willingness of a Democracy to correct its own errors, they feel morally and spiritually obligated to continue with honor the ride which was shamefully disturbed by violence. It is unthinkable that the Birmingham Police Dept. will repeat Sunday's error of negligence, or that Alabama's Governor will persist in his announced indifference toward lawlessness. These people will thus present Birmingham, Alabama and South, with the privilege of immediate redemption, and the opportunity to prove that the KKK and mobsters will not rule the South."

"We whole heartedly support and join these fine Young Americans in their efforts to implement our laws and Court decisions. Our struggle is that of loyal and forward looking Americans; the only victory we seek is the triumph of democracy, and the supremacy of the law. I understand telegramed requests for protection were sent this morning from Nashville to the Governor Highway Safety Director, Birmingham Public Safety Commissioner Eugene Connor and Chief Jamie Moore. At 8:00 a. m. I wired the Governor, the Highway Director, Mr. Connor and Mr. Moore, this telegram:

"Dear Sir,

"We have definite information that students from Nashville are enroute to Birmingham, Montgomery and points South on a " Ride for Freedom".

"Others may arrive from Atlanta. They will be arriving Birmingham via Greyhound shortly after 11:00 a. m. today, Departure time uncertain. Please use the powers of your offices to see that these citizens reach all points of their destination safely, and afforder full protection while at stations within your jurisdiction." "Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, Pres. "ACMHR".

WHO TOOK PART IN FREEDOM RIDES

Ten 'Riders' Given Grants By M. L. King

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., Atlanta integration leader, has presented $500 scholarships to 10 persons who took part in "Freedom Rides" in Alabama and Mississippi.

The awards were presented in conjunction with the convention of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, which King heads. Three of the recipients were students expelled from Tennessee A&I State University after their participation in rides to Jackson, Miss.

Wyatt T. Walker, SCLC executive director, praised the 10 for joining the "Freedom Ride" movement after earlier rides encountered violence in Alabama.

Without them, he said, the rides might not have obtained international notice and the Interstate Commerce Commission might not have handed down its recent decision on bus desegregation. Walker told the scholarship recipients they could consider the ICC ruling "a feather in your cap."

$18,000 TOTAL

Walker said the awards were part of $18,000 in scholarships which will be presented students by the SCLC and the American Baptist Convention.

Students receiving scholarships here were:

Charles Butler, Charleston, S.C., expelled from A&I; John Lewis, Troy, Ala., Fisk University graduate student; Paul E. Brooks, East St. Louis, Ill, former American Baptist Theological student; Catherine Brooks, Birmingham, expelled from A&I; Jim Zwerg, Appleton, Wis., former Fisk student; Salynn McCollum, Snyder, N.Y., former Peabcdy College student; Rudolph Grahama, Chattanooga, A&I stu-

CORE FREEDOM RIDERS

MAY 1961

By Uncaging The Mob, Alabama Invited Federal Intervention

THE VIOLENCE THAT always simmers just below the surface in our still imperfect society has exploded with shocking fury in Alabama. A default of leadership prepared the ground. Governor John Patterson abdicated his responsibility to law and order at the outset, making what followed inevitable. He persisted in referring to the "freedom riders," mostly college students testing desegregation in interstate bus facilities, as "agitators"; and after the first eruption of violence on Mother's Day, he said he could not assure the students of protection if they stayed in Alabama.

The exclusive application of the word "agitators" to the Negro and white students was inflammatory. The declaration that he would not guarantee their safety was an open invitation to the extreme segregationists, who were doing a great deal of agitating themselves, to resort to mob violence.

Certainly the excursions of the "freedom riders" are provocative (so, of course, was the Boston tea party) in states like Alabama where the Klan mentality has taken fertile root. The student riders expected resistance. But they also had the right to expect more protection than they got from the authorities. After all, they were proceeding peacefully on a mission sanctioned, in effect, by the highest court in the land, which has ordered the desegregation of interstate transportation facilities.

Police Just Late Enough

It comes as no surprise that there are whites in Alabama, and elsewhere, who believe in brainless violence. The tragedy is that they were permitted, at least for awhile, to have their way. The police repeatedly arrived on the scene just late enough to permit them to exact a measure of their ugly vengeance. In the end, they were carried away by their excesses. They attacked bystanders, newspapermen, federal marshals, and a key aide of Attorney General Robert Kennedy. Finally, in Montgomery last weekend, Governor Patterson had to institute martial law to control the creature he had uncaged. Even though his own safety commissioner had to plead for Federal help, Governor Patterson still whines about federal intervention, saying in the face of all reason that it wasn't needed.

We might question the judgment of the freedom riders in pursuing their objective in the present surcharged atmosphere. But we cannot question their right to travel unmolested on buses licensed to carry passengers in interstate commerce—or to use the facilities of the bus terminals on the same basis as anyone else.

We believe the Federal Government had no choice but to intervene. The Kennedy Administration is concerned about the Alabama riots damaging our reputation in the eyes of the world. Already, the Soviet press has cited the Alabama violence as another example of "wild, bestial mores in a country pretending to teach others how to live."

Obviously, these outbursts of racial violence tarnish the national image. But we don't want to labor the point. We do not need the excuse of the Cold War to act in the name of common decency. Even if there were no worldwide propaganda struggle, the Federal Government would still have an obligation to protect the life and limbs of its citizens when state and local authorities have indicated that they are either unable or unwilling to do so. Mob action of this kind cannot be sanctioned anywhere, any time.

Close-up

A Mob Is Not Dissent or Protest

It is a strange and sobering fact that this weekend white and black residents of Leopoldville in the Congo read their newspapers and gave thanks for the fact that they do no live in Montgomery, Ala., U.S.A.

It is a strange and sobering fact that a city on a savage plain, where education and government are new, is safer than one where government is 180 years old and the state has been educating its citizens for generations.

The contrast is too stark to be believed.

What the rioters are against at this time is not really important. (If they can beat up Negroes with impunity, they can also beat up Jews or Catholics or physicians and lawyers who sign manifestos or the rich or anybody else apart from the mob.)

What is important is that the American answer to mankind's most difficult problem has been challenged. The problem is how to establish freedom and order at the same time. The answer is constitutional democracy. The answer is law by and above men.

Because the problem is so immense, the answer is necessarily fragile at times. Our insistence on freedom weakens our formula for order. Who, though, would have it any other way? Khrushchev and Franco have imposed a more perfect order. The price is not one Americans would wish to pay.

We allow dissent. We allow protest. But a mob roaming the streets is neither of those. It is a mob. Deep down it wants more than specific blood. It wants to turn time back to where it is the only social force.

Each state is supposed to keep it from doing that. It has that duty. It has that right. Government officials spend their time better when they exercise that duty than when they argue about that right.

No one interfered with Georgia's right to maintain law and order last January. That's because Georgia maintained law and order. —TED LIPPMAN.

Rider injunction hearing at end

Birmingham News 7-19-61

MONTGOMERY, Ala., July 18—(AP)—A hearing to determine whether a new injunction will be issued against organized "freedom rides" in Alabama ended yesterday with no immediate ruling from a federal judge. Dues 7-18-61

U. S. Dist. Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. instructed opposing attorneys to submit written arguments by Aug. 22. Memphis Press

A Justice Department attorney, John Doar, asked the court to turn down Montgomery City Atty. Calvin Whitesell's request for an order to prohibit segregation-testing bus rides. He said evidence presented at the hearing did not justify an injunction.

Attorneys for freedom ride sponsors formally asked Johnson to throw out Whitesell's request, but the judge withheld a ruling on that motion. Arguing for dismissal, among others, was a Yale University law professor, Louis A. Pollack.

AT THE OUTSET of the hearing, Johnson reprimanded Thurgood Marshall, chief counsel for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, for his absence from court. Marshall was here when the hearing was first scheduled June 12, but did not appear today.

The judge said that in the future, attorneys should attend all hearings on cases in which they are involved, or advise the court that they will not be present.

Before court adjourned, Johnson dismissed Whitsell's complaint against two Negro organizations listed by the city attorney as sponsors of freedom rides. They are the Nashville Student Nov-Violent Movement and the Montgomery County Jail Assn. The latter organization was formed by a group of riders while in jail here.

Johnson issued a temporary restraining order against organized bus rides June 2, but let it expire 10 days later.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., July 16.—(UPI)—Sponsors of the so-called "Freedom Riders" into Alabama will attempt to show in Federal Court here Monday why they should not be enjoined from backing further segregation-barrier testing trips in the state. Memphis Press

The hearing on the preliminary injunction petition is scheduled before United States Middle District Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr., who several weeks ago issued a temporary restraining order against the groups. The temporaryf order remained in effect for a period of 20 days only.

The case is a continuation of the United States Justice Department's complaint against Montgomery Police Commissioner L. B. Sullivan, Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal and various Ku Klux Klan groups, all of which were enjoined against interferring with interstate travel in Alabama.

The court action followed a week of racial violence in Alabama, sparked off by the arrival of an interracial group of self-styled "Freedom Riders" who were travelling through the South in a demonstration against the old "Jim Crow" ideas.

Savagery In Montgomery

Editor, The Advertiser:

In the light of recent events it is evident that Alabama has seen the day of the savage, has tasted the bitter fruit of violent action, perpetrated by blind, prejudicial hate and outspoken disregard for law and order. We are appalled by the Mother's Day melee in Birmingham and the the ignominious flogging at Sylacauga. We are sickened by the uncivilized savagery at Montgomery.

This savagery is worse than any of the horrors of Reconstruction, worse because it comes from within—from the minds and souls of Alabamians. it is inborn within the South; it did not come into Alabama with a busload of freedom riders.

The Birmingham News likes to refer to the freedom riders as "agitators." It is a convenient term and seemingly face-savings. It tends to make Alabama feel a little better about her infamous reaction to an exercise of freedom guaranteed by law. The "agitators" were breaking no laws, lifting no finger in violence. Whatever The News means by the term "agitator," it should make Alabama feel no less guilty of inhumanity.

The Montgomery Advertiser

Gov. Patterson referred to the freedom riders as "rabble rousers." He is entitled to his opinion, but is Alabama to glory in the fact that it furnished sufficient rabble to be rous[ed]

Montgomery, Ala.

The image that has been created by Alabama's expression of man's inhumanity to man reflects on all who dare to call Alabama home. Those who have not been lulled by press and publicity can see that Alabama is far behin dthe times in almost every field of endeavor.

But it has been moving forward, however reluctantly. The savage image has ground all to a halt. And rightfully so; justice has a way of being absolute whether we like it or not. Alabama will suffer as a state; her people will suffer as individuals. And we have earned our suffering through dishonor.

Recent events would indicate that the time has come for the supposedly thinking majority, or at least its educated representatives, to make some logical decisions regarding the conflict between local custom and established law.

Wed. 5-24-61

The process will be painful, it is necessary if Alabama is to be wrested from the hands of the savage. Yet one could question whether or not Alabama wants to be free of the savage. Without the savage, the inevitable transition can be made in peace The choice is Alabama's.

Those who are conscienciously considering the problem and trying to arrive at an understanding complimentary to human dignity are few. But they are the people who hold the salvation of Alabama in their hands. Are they to be driven out by an insensitive, typer-loyal press and politically misguided electorate? Are they to be discredited because they see where others only grasp at straws? Again the choice is Alabama's to make.

We of today's college generation ask only that our elders leave us a world fit to be developed by our talents and interests. The universities do not, unfortunately, give us instruction in how to combat savagery and violence. We look to our elders to show us the way; and we are very disillusioned at what we see.

We want a state fit to grow in, to live in at peace with our neighbors, be they black, white, yellow, red or brown. We want a place where we can raise a family and ply our trade. We want only law and order; we do not expect to be flogged by nightriders or mauled with lead pipes because of our creed or social conviction.

Is this unreasonable to expect of Alabama? Recent events would indicate that it might well be. The action of our law enforcement agencies enhances this apprehension.

We have seen what has happened in Alabama, and we know that this is not an atmosphere conducive to progress, growth, development or the rising-again of the South.

If Alabama persists in keeping her head in the sand, she will someday awaken to find the talent of her youth gone elsewhere, leadership moved to a cleaner atmosphere where spiritual and moral values have a meaning, and she will sadly find that the world has passed her by.

Alabama can rise out of the ashes of the savage sacrifice, or she can smoulder away for all time with hatred, perjudice and antagonism. Again, the choice is Alabama's to make.

CORE FREEDOM RIDERS (MAY, 1961)
STATEMENT BY THE FACULTY AND STAFF OF TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE

Tuskegee presses fight for mixing

TUSKEGEE, Ala., May 27—(AP)—The faculty and staff of Tuskegee Institute released a statement Friday urging President Kennedy, Congress and the Department of Justice to take further steps to fight racial segregation and discrimination.

Tuskegee President Dr. L. H. Foster said the group unanimously approved the statement urging the president to eliminate all signs and other deterrants indicating or imposing separate facilities upon the races and asking him to "proclaim the right of individuals to intrastate as well as interstate travel on a desegregated basis."

The statement also asked Congress to enact legislation implementing constitutional guarantees of civil rights and urged the Department of Justice to "initiate devices to test the operation of democracy for everyone in this country."

Referring to the "freedom riders," the group commended the federal government for its "effective efforts to protect bus travelers and those persons who have assembled peaceably to express support for the 'freedom riders.'"

The statement said that "Negroes in the South reject the humilating status to which they are subjected. . . ." And that the group insists "that public officials and others are gravely in error when they say the Southern Negro is satisfied with present arrangements which restrict his normal travel, educational opportunity, economic security, or any right guaranteed by the constitution."

Jews Protest Actions Of Nazis' Hate Tour

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Jewish war veterans organization Monday protested action of the American Nazi party in sending a "hate" bus into the South.

Joseph F. Barr, national executive director of the Jewish organization protested to Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy that the bus trip was a "flagrant and provocative agitation against Jews and Negroes."

Mayor Warns Nazis, Riders

Mayor deLesseps S. Morrison warned that "Nazi storm troopers" and "freedom riders" are not welcome in New Orleans and that they will be dealt with sternly. He issued the following statement Wednesday:

"New Orleans has demonstrated that it can handle its own problems without outside interference and thus every citizen deplores these repeated publicity stunts continuously put on by agitators repersenting extreme and radical viewpoints.

"The 'Nazi storm troopers and the 'Freedom Riders' and such other groups mean nothing but trouble and are not welcome here.

"I would like to assure every citizen that appropriate steps have been taken to deal sternly with these agitators and that the strict letter of the law will be carried out by the police department."

Louisiana Jails Driver Of 'Hate Bus'

NEW ORLEANS, May 24 (UPI)—State police today arrested one of the American Nazi "Storm Troopers" when their "hate bus" was involved in a minor traffic accident.

George Lincoln Rockwell, leader of the group, expressed displeasure at the treatment accorded his men. But he said he would conduct his anti-Jewish, anti-Negro campaign here, "if I have to picket alone."

Today they were booted out of the motel where they spent the night. They drove across Lake Pontchartrain to a State Park to prepare their "hate" songs, but State and parish officers refused to let them in.

On the return to New Orleans, their bus ran into the side of a bridge and was put out of commission. State Police arrested the driver, but let the others go.

The "storm troopers" arrived last night in a driving rain and ran smack into the unsympathetic police.

The American Nazi Party members first were headed out of town by police, then turned away by a motel operator, and finally permitted to stay in town overnight after agreeing to cover their "hate" signs.

The signs read "we hate Jew-Communism" and "we do hate race mixing."

CLUB CONDEMNS 'RIDERS,' NAZIS

Activities Held Excuses to Allow Intervention

The Young Men's Business Club Wednesday went on record as deploring the activities of the so-called Nazi and Freedom Rider groups and any others where the purpose and motiviation are to incite riots, disorder, lawlessness and breaches of the public peace.

The motion, brought up as "emergency" legislation at the Roosevelt hotel luncheon-meeting, was passed unanimously.

The resolution described the activities of both groups as "excuses to allow the federal government to move in and take over the rights of the states and that of local communities to govern themselves and thus to further weaken the ever diminishing area of states rights," and "putting our nation in a bad light before the world in a measure bearing no relation to their real significance and importance."

The federal government was also requested in the resolution, which is being forwarded to the President, vice-president, speaker of the House, attorney general and governors of all Southern states, to cease and desist from "encouraging and supporting such activities." It also called upon Congress to enact appropriate laws to safeguard local communities and individual sovereign states and the prestige, welfare and security of the people of the United States.

Rockwell Gains Freedom On Bail

NEW ORLEANS, La. (AP)—George Lincoln Rockwell, self-designated Commander of the American Nazi party, left Orleans Parish Prison on bond Tuesday, but his nine "storm troopers" stayed behind.

Rockwell and his followers were arrested for disturbing the peace for picketing the movie "Exodus" at a downtown theater.

They had come to New Orleans in a German-made "hate bus," publicizing the party's hate of Communists and integrationists.

Dist. Atty. Richard Dowling said the trial for Rockwell and his group may come up later this week.

NAZI ARRESTED AFTER ACCIDENT

'Hate Bus' Crashes into Side of Causeway

An American Nazi Party member, Beernard F. David Jr., 20, was booked with reckless driving Wednesday when the "hate bus" he was a... crashed on the Lake Pontchartrain causeway trying to elude state police.

His four companions, also so-called "storm troopers," were escorted with another group of American Nazis to New Orleans and released on Canal st.

They, and their leader, George Lincoln Rockwell, were scheduled to picket the Civic theater for the Wednesday night premiere showing here of the motion picture, "Exodus."

Also on their New Orleans schedule was a demonstration Wednesday night at a rally of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

OUSTED FROM MOTEL

The arrest of David after he crashed the bus into the side of the causeway roadway, added to the following other events:

They were ordered out of their Chef Menteur hwy. motel Wednesday morning after occupying it overnight, and they were barred from Fontainebleau State Park, where they had planned to paint signs for the demonstrations.

Police followed them constantly.

Rockwell arrived Tuesday by plane. A small busload of his followers arrived by bus Tuesday night. A second group came Wednesday morning.

COVER UP SIGNS

State police attempted to stop their bus returning to New Orleans from St. Tammany parish but instead of stopping at the causeway turn-around, the bus sped down the turn-around ramp and crashed into the side of the roadway.

State Police Lt. Vincent Ebeier arrested the driver.

When the party members arrived in New Orleans Tuesday night, Police Capt. P. J. Trosclair ordered them to cover up the signs on their bus which declared the party's racial feelings.

Trosclair read to them a city ordinance on disturbing the peace.

Riders Arrested At Little Rock

Jackson Daily News Mes. 7-11-61

Four Hustled Away As Crowd Gathers

Jackson Daily News Thurs. 7-13-61

The four are charged under the same state law which led to the conviction of lunch counter sit-in demonstrators last year. The maximum penalty if convicted is a $500 fine and/or six months in jail.

Mes. 7-11-61

It was the first visit by riders to Little Rock, race-conscious since the 1957 Central High School integration crisis.

Jackson

The four who spent the night in jail, are the Rev. B. Elton Cox, 30, Negro, of High Point, N. C., field secretary for the Congress of Racial Equality; Bliss Ann Malone, 23, Negro, a St. Louis teacher; Janet Reintiz, 23, white, a New York housewife; and the Rev. John C. Raines, 27, white, pastor of the Setauket Methodist Church on Long Island.

A fifth rider, Annie Lumpkin, 18, St. Louis Negro student, did not reach the waiting room and was not charged.

P. 1

The arrests came after they sat in the room about seven minutes. Police guarded the doors, but many of the crowd, mostly teenagers carrying soft drink bottles, encircled the four.

Police Chief R. E. (Bob) Glasscock, fearing violence, twice ordered the riders to leave. When they didn't, officers pulled Raines to his feet, frisked him and escorted the four to police headquarters.

THREAT TO PEACE

"We waited as long as we could," Glasscock said. "I felt their presence was a threat to the peace of the community as there were several hundred persons gathered in the area and some were trying to enter the station."

There was no violence although the crowd applauded police and jeered the four riders as they were led from the station.

The waiting room and lunch counter are integrated to interstate bus passengers, segregated to intrastate passengers, according to a spokesman for Midwest Trailways.

pended fines and jail sentences.

One of the four, the Rev. John C. Raines, 27, of Setauket, N. Y., said the group discussed the matter and decided that to leave would be giving up something they believed was right.

Raines said he assumed they would begin serving six-month sentences.

Thurs. 7-13-61

They were arrested Monday night when they stopped here en route from St. Louis to Shreveport and New Orleans, La.

Municipal Judge Quinn Glover Wednesday morning convicted the four on breach of peace charges but said he would suspend their six-month terms and $500 fines if they would go home.

They conferred with their attorney and made telephone calls to officials of the Congress of Racial Equality—CORE—in St. Louis before agreeing to call off their Southern tour and return home. It was later in the day they decided to accept the sentence.

The four, in addition to Raines, are the Rev. B. Elton Cox of St. Louis, Negro field secretary for CORE; Miss Bliss Ann Malone, 23, Negro, of St. Louis, and Janet Reinitz, 23, a white New York housewife.

Montgomery, Ala.

A fifth member of the group, who was not arrested, Annie Lumpkin, 18, Negro, said she would return to her home but did not know when.

Glover rejected a defense contention that their arrests at a bus terminal here interfered with interstate commerce.

Little Rock Police Jail Four 'Riders'

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Five "Freedom Riders" arrived here on a Trailways bus Monday night and within minutes police had four of them in jail, charged with disturbing the peace

The fifth, Miss Annie Lumpkin, 18, Negro of St. Louis, was taken into custody but released. She went to the home of a Little Rock Negro minister.

It was the first group of Freedom Riders in Arkansas. They were met by a crowd of about 300 whites which shouted and jeered but did not become unruly.

CROWD CHEERED

Police Chief R. E. Glasscock arrested the four—two Negroes and two whites—after they sat down in the white waiting room in the Midwest Trailways bus station and refused to leave.

The crowd cheered when the arrest was made and again when the four were placed in a police car. Miss Lumpkin stood outside the station and was escorted to a police car a few seconds later. "I was told not to go inside," she told a reporter.

The four were booked under a 1959 state law aimed at anti-segregation demonstrations. The act's constitutionality is being tested before the State Supreme Court. It makes conduct that causes or threatens a breach of the peace a misdemeanor.

38a 1961 ARKANSAS FREEDOM RIDERS-LITTLE ROCK

Arrival of Riders Stirs Little Rock; U. S. Court Delays Mississippi Suit

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., July 11 (AP).—A shouting crowd of about 300 white persons yesterday greeted the first Freedom Riders to reach Little Rock, where violence erupted over forced school integration in 1957.

When the five riders from St. Louis arrived at the Midwest Trailways bus station yesterday, there were taunts but the crowd never became unruly.

Police Chief R. E. Glasscock arrested two Negroes and two white persons when they refused to leave the white waiting room. The fifth, an 18-year-old Negro girl, was picked up by police outside the waiting room and later released.

The crowd which met the bus pressed around the small station and the police chief said he feared trouble at one point, but it did not develop.

The four were charged under a 1959 State law which makes it a misdemeanor to act in a way that causes or threatens a breach of the peace. Maximum penalty is a $500 fine, six months in jail, or both. The law's constitutionality is being tested in the Arkansas Supreme Court.

Faubus Urges Quiet

Earlier yesterday, Gov. Orval E. Faubus had said he hoped Little Rock residents would ignore the Freedom Riders, who announced in advance when they planned to arrive.

"If they were completely ignored it would be the worst disappointment they could have," Gov. Faubus said.

The Freedom Riders also suffered a temporary setback at Jackson, Miss., where 227 Negroes and white persons have been arrested since May 24 on breach of the peace charges for trying to desegregate bus, train and air terminals.

A three-judge Federal panel, with one judge dissenting, postponed until August 7 a suit seeking to halt arrest of the riders in Mississippi.

Despite objections of Chief Justice Elbert Tuttle of the United States Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, the panel agreed to the postponement because of the illness of a Mississippi assistant attorney general.

Suit Filed by NAACP

The court action was filed by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. The suit attacked what it called unconstitutional State laws requiring segregation in railroad cars, buses, rest rooms, waiting rooms and other areas.

The Justice Department joined forces in a "friend of the court" brief which asked for an injunction to stop Mississippi from enforcing nine State laws calling for racial segregation of travelers. The brief called such laws clearly unconstitutional.

In City Court at Jackson, Judge James Spencer convicted 34 riders in two trials, the largest mass convictions to date. All were sentenced to $200 fines and four months in jail. The action brought to 224 the number convicted on breach-of-peace charges. Three riders arrested July 7 were turned over to juvenile authorities.

Minnesota Disowns Riders

The office of Gov. Ross Barnett of Mississippi made public a letter from Minnesota Gov. Elmer Andersen saying that violation of State laws by the riders strikes "at deep fundamentals in our American way of life."

If a law is wrong or bad, Gov. Andersen wrote, "there are proper ways to seek to change it. At no time can we condone deliberate breaking of any law."

He thanked Gov. Barnett for permitting Minnesota officials to inspect State prison facilities and treatment of Minnesota citizens jailed as riders.

In another development, white residents in Mayfield, Ky., filed a petition in the State Court of Appeals at Frankfort claiming an all-Negro housing development would violate the Supreme Court ruling outlawing segregation of the races.

The group objected principally to changing location of the 50-unit housing development from an area where most Mayfield Negroes live to a part of town that includes only a few Negro residents.

FREEDOM RIDERS-
LOS ANGELES RALLY CONTRIBUTE, $26,000

50,000 People Contribute $26,000 at Freedom Rally

(Courier News Service)

LOS ANGELES—In what Rev. Martin Luther King described as the "greatest civil right rally in the history of the U.S.," more than 50,000 Los Angelenos packed the new Sports Arena with an overflow crowd which contributed more than $26,000 to help the cause of the Freedom Riders and their crusade against discrimination.

• "The Freedom Riders have made it crystal clear to the South that Negroes do not like segregation and that the rides will continue until they can ride in dignity and humility on the buses and other public carriers," Dr. King declared in a dynamic address to the crowd of 18,000 inside the Arena, and the more than 30,000 outside.

"Some say we should cool off. We cannot in good conscience cool off in our determination to exercise our constitutional rights.

"Those who should cool off are the ones who are hot with violence and hatred in opposition to the rides," King declared.

Sponsored by the Western Christian Leadership Conference, the Rev. L. Sylvester Odom, president, the rally also featured singer Mahalia Jackson, Sammy Davis Jr., and comedian Dick Gregory.

• "As a result of our sit-ins, which started in Greensboro, N. C.," Dr. King pointed out, "more than 100 cities in the South have stopped segregation at their lunch counters."

The Rev. Mr. King said that the great American dream can only be realized when discrimination and segregation are eliminated in America and when our national really adots a "one-world perspective."

The crowd rose in thunderous applause when Dr. King said that "America has had a schizophrenic personality, practicing segregation, and all of this within the paradox of her philosophy that all men are created equal."

Pilgrimage Off On Racial Test

The Washington Post
Washington, D.C.
Fri. 5-5-61

By Elsie Carper
Staff Reporter

Thirteen men and women, Negro and white, boarded Greyhound and Trailway buses here yesterday to begin a two week pilgrimage through the deep South testing racial segregation in buses, eating facilities and rest stops.

The trip, called "Freedom Ride 1961," is sponsored by the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) and is a repeat of the "Journey of Reconciliation," a trip made into border states 14 years ago.

The 13, divided into two groups, will visit Richmond, Petersburg and Lynchburg, Va.; Greensboro and Charlotte, N. C.; Rock Hill and Sumter, S. C.; Augusta and Atlanta, Ga.; Birmingham and Montgomery, Ala.; Jackson, Miss.; and New Orleans.

They plan to arrive in New Orleans May 17 to take part in a freedom rally marking the seventh anniversary of the Supreme Court school desegregation decision.

Schedule Indefinite

James Farmer, national director of CORE and one of the participants, conceded that the schedule may not be met. Those making the pilgrimage are pledged that if arrested they will not seek bail but serve jail sentences. Twelve of the 23 Negro and white participants in the "Journey of Reconciliation" were arrested.

Farmer said the 13 (seven Negroes and six whites), hope to focus public attention on segregation patterns in the South "that are degrading and destructive of human dignity."

Supreme Court decisions have outlawed segregated seating in buses in interstate commerce and in restaurants in terminals serving interstate passengers. Farmer said the group will test compliance with the Supreme Court decisions and also challenge segregation at lunch counter and rest room stops.

Officials of the two bus companies, the Interstate Commerce Commission and Attorney General Robert Kennedy have been informed of the itinerary, Farmer said. A letter outlining the project also was sent to President Kennedy.

Ages From 18 to 61

Henry Thomas, 19-year-old Howard University sophomore and a leader in desegregation demonstrations at lunch counters in Northern Virginia and at Glen Echo Amusement Park, is one of the participants. Ages of those taking part range from an 18-year-old Negro student from Morehouse College, Atlanta, to a 61-year-old white retired school administrator and college teacher from Detroit and his 57-year-old wife.

The 13 were selected by CORE from about 50 volunteers and spent three days in training in Washington before setting out. The raining consisted of discussions on meeting situations that may develop during the trip, Farmer said. The participants are committed to the doctrine of non-violence.

Ohers taking part include Albert Bigelow, 55-year-old artist from Cos Cob, Conn., who, as a Naval officer, commanded combat ships during World War II. He was captain of the Golden Rule, a ketch that three years ago, sought to enter the Pacific bomb detonating area in protest of the continuation of nuclear tests.

Freedom Ride To End With Rally Here May 17

The Louisiana Weekly
New Orleans, La.
Sat. 5-13-61

Freedom Ride, a bus trip through Southern states to challenge racial segregation, has headed for New Orleans where it will terminate with a public rally May 17 at 7:30 p.m., in New Zion Baptist Church, 2319 Third Street, Rev. A. L. Davis, Jr., pastor.

Sponsored by the Congress of Racial Equality, the Freedom Ride began in Washington and is touching principal Southern cities enroute to New Orleans.

Negro and white CORE members making the ride are seeking service in segregated bus terminals and other public facilities.

James Farmer, New York, national CORE director-founder, is heading the group of 16 Freedom Ride participants. Two Orleanians are included. They are Julia Aaron, student of Southern University at New Orleans and Jerome Smith, former student of Southern University in Baton Rouge. Both were arrested recently in connection with the picketing of Canal Street stores.

Early this week, only one arrest had been reported along Freedom Ride's route. Joseph Perkins, Jr., a CORE field secretary, was jailed in Charlotte, N. C., for entering the bus terminal barbershop and asking for a shoeshine. He was charged with trespassing, and elected to remain in jail rather than accept bail.

Farmer will be the principal speaker at the May 17 rally in the New Zion Baptist Church. CORE representatives said the general public is invited to the meeting.

AUGUST
WASHINGTON- FREEDOM RIDERS
PICKET ICC HEARING

Riders Picket ICC Hearing

Freedom Riders continued their round-the-clock prayer vigil today as a hearing into anti-segregation signs on buses in interstate commerce, and the lunch counters and waiting rooms connected with such travel, opened at the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The Riders began their vigil at 8:15 last night at the ICC building, Twelfth street and Constitution avenue N.W. About 18 alternated in picketing and holding prayer and meditation sessions in front of the Constitution avenue entrance.

At midnight, the riders, mostly Negro clergymen, were relieved by another shift which was to remain at the building until morning when more replacements would arrive.

Spokesman for the group, the Rev. Walter E. Fauntroy, regional representative of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, said police authorities had told him no singing or loud Scripture reading would be allowed without a special permit for the conduct of an outdoor religious service.

"We'll have to limit our vigil to prayer and directed meditation," the Rev. Fauntroy said.

Other groups represented were the Congress on Racial Equality (CORE, the National Christian Leadership Council, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the Students' Non-Violent Co-ordinating Committee. They will continue their vigil until sundown tonight.

The hearing, which opened at 10 a.m. today, is to consider Attorney General Kennedy's request that signs be placed on all buses, in bus terminal lunch and waiting rooms, stating that seating and admission are regardless to race, color, creed or national origin.

Representatatives of integration groups as well as the bus industry were to testify.

10 Clergy Freedom Riders Fined $500 in Tallahassee

By the Associated Press

Ten Freedom Riders were fined $500 last night and told to "clean up your own back yard" by a Tallahassee (Fla.) City Court Judge.

Judge John Rudd imposed the fines and delivered the lecture to the white and Negro clergymen after they were convicted of unlawful assembly stemming from efforts to integrate the white restaurant at Tallahassee's municipal airport.

The 10 posted appeal bonds and left by plane for New York. Their attorney, Tobias Simon of Miami, said the case would serve as a test of segregation at municipally-operated airport terminal facilities.

Judge Rudd told the group that if they had come to Tallahassee on a "noble, Christian purpose" he would have dismissed the charges. But, he said, "You came here for the whole purpose of forcing your views on this community."

Cites Crime Rate

He said records would show Tallahassee has a much lower crime rate than any city from which they had come and that they should "clean up your own back yard before you go around trying to impose our views on someone else."

Each of the clergymen, who were arrested last Friday during a sit-in at the airport restaurant, took the stand to testify they had made a tour of Southern cities from Washington to Tallahssee to test segregation and to further the cause of equal rights for all persons. They said if they had been allowed to eat in the airport restaurant they would have returned home.

None of the clergymen commented on the sentence—the maximum under the law—but Rabbi Martin Freedman, 34, of Paterson, N. J., said, "I rather imagine there will be other Freedom Riders here this summer."

The clergymen who were fined, along with Rabbi Freedman, are the Revs. Robert McAfee Brown, 41; Ralph L. Roy, 32; A. McRaven Warner, 41; Robert Stone, 41, and Wayne Clyde Hartmire, jr., 29, all of New York, and Rabbi Israel Dresner, 32, Newark, N. J., all white, and the Revs. J. W. Collier, jr., 46, Newark; A. L. Hardge, 34, New Britain, Conn., and Petty D. McKinney, 40, Springfield, Mass., Negroes.

Rally in New York

Meanwhile, a desegregation leader, the Rev. Fred Shuttlesworth of Birmingham, Ala., told a rally in New York in support of Freedom Riders that the Southerners' attitude is "bitter, vicious and unjustified."

In Jersey City, N. J., residents of the Marion section are seeking ways to relieve racial tensions between residents of a housing project and those in the surrounding neighborhood. Two policemen were stabbed in a street brawl there Tuesday night.

And in Des Moines, Iowa, an official of Local 7 of the United Packinghouse Workers of America said union members have voted to boycott the Black Hills area of South Dakota as a vacation spot because of racial discrimination.

RIDERS ON TRIAL IN FLORIDA SIT-IN

Court Told Robert Kennedy Tried to Halt Protest

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., June 22 (UPI) — Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy tried to persuade ten Freedom Riders to call off an anti-segregation demonstration at the Tallahassee Airport, it was disclosed in City Court here today.

The disclosure was made at the trial of the ten white and Negro clergymen from the New York and New England areas. The ten were arrested on charges of unlawful assembly last Friday. They demanded service at an airport restaurant used by whites and ignored policemen's orders to leave.

The Rev. Petty D. McKinney (left) of Springfield, Mass., and the Rev. J. W. Collier, jr., Newark, N. J., were among 10 Freedom Riders fined yesterday at Tallahassee, Fla., on charges of unlawful assembly.—AP Wirephoto.

City Attorney James Messer Jr. said Mr. Kennedy had sought a two-hour delay in the arrest of the group so he could try to have them abandon their protest. Mr. Messer said Mr. Kennedy's request had been relayed to city officials by Gov. Farris Bryant.

In the middle of the trial, the prosecution withdrew charges against Jeff Poland, a white teen-ager, and the Rev. Charles Hunter, a Negro, Tallahassee residents who were arrested with the Freedom Riders. Mr. Messer said they had apparently dispersed and had been arrested by mistake "in the confusion."

The trial, before City Judge John Rudd, attracted a large group of white and Negro spectators. Strict segregation was observed in seating. White and Negro defendants who sat down together were separated by the police.

The testimony about Mr. Kennedy's intervention was drawn from Mr. Messer by Tobias Simon of Miami, attorney for the Freedom Riders.

Tells of Phone Call

Mr. Messer was not asked if he knew whether Mr. Kennedy had ever talked with the group. But the Rev. J. W. Collier, 46 years old of Newark, N. J., spokesman for the riders, said later that he was talking by telephone to a Kennedy assistant when Mr. Messer led a squad of policemen into the airport terminal.

Mr. Collier, a negro, identified the assistant as Burke Marshall, assistant attorney general in charge of covil rights. The conversation involved only a description of the situation leading to the airport sit-in, Mr. Collier said, when he had to hang up to listen to Mr. Messer's proclamation to disperse.

Mr. Messer, Police Chief Frank Stoutamire, State Attorney W. D. Hopkins and Police Lieut. Billy Bennett testified for the prosecution. All said they had believed there would have been violence had the group carried out their intention to sit in the airport until the restaurant served them on an integrated basis.

In addition to Mr. Collier, the defendants are:

The Rev. Arthur L. Hardge, 34, of New Britain, Conn.; the Rev Petty D. McKinney, 40, of Springfield, Mass., both Negroes; and the Rev. Wayne C. Hartmire Jr., 29, of New York City; the Rev. Robert J. Stone, 41, of New York; the Rev. Robert McBrown, 41, of New York; the Rev. Austin M. Warner, 41, of New York, the Rev. Ralph L. Roy, 39, of New York; Rabbi Martin Freedman, 34, of Paterson, N. J., and Rabbi Israel Dresner, 32, of Springfield, N. J.

The defense called all ten clergymen to the stand. They said their purpose in testing Florida segregation customs was to "bear witness as men of God to the struggle to obtain equal rights for all men."

17 Arrested as Disturbances Erupt On Freedom Ride Routes in Florida

By the Associated Press

Police arrested 17 persons for breach of the peace in disturbances that erupted, without injury, at three points along Freedom Riders' routes in North Florida yesterday.

Bus trips by racial integration-testing groups also produced five arrests in Mississippi.

A Freedom Ride leadership delegation conferred in Washington with Attorney General Robert Kennedy, reportedly to seek help in preventing further arrests.

Police in Tallahassee, Florida's Capital, arrested 10 hunger-striking clergymen, including seven white men, after the 10 defied an order to disperse at Tallahassee Airport.

Three Seized at Ocala

Two Negroes and a white man were arrested at Ocala after a bus station scuffle with two unidentified white men, who were not arrested.

At St. Petersburg, a white truck driver was taken into custody after he and a St. Petersburg Negro preacher exchanged heated words at a bus depot where the Negro went to welcome Freedom Riders who traveled there from Jacksonville.

The group arrested at Tallahassee comprised two rabbis, five white ministers and three Negro ministers. All were jailed in lieu of posting $500 bond each on charges of unlawful assembly. Jailed also were two Tallahassee Negroes and a white man.

Bail Is Provided

The Rev. Charles Hunter of Tallahassee provided bail last night. The 10 Freedom Riders went on a hunger strike a day before in protest to being denied food at the airport restaurant. In jail, they ate their first meal since breakfast Thursday.

The only Florida incident that approached violence came at Ocala, Gov. Farris Bryant's home town.

There was elbowing and jostling when seven Freedom Riders headed for the Ocala bus station cafeteria and were met by two white men. Three of the Freedom Riders obeyed a police order to climb back aboard their bus, and were not arrested.

Meanwhile, Freedom Riders were served almost without incident at lunch counters in Tampa, St. Petersburg and Gainesville.

At Gainesville, a white woman quickly moved away from the bus station lunch counter as the Negroes approached. Someone else played "Dixie," traditional battle song of the South, on the lunchroom juke box.

More Riders Arrested

Authorities at Jackson, Miss., raised to 116 their total of arrests of Freedom Riders when five of the integration-testers alighted from a bus that brought them from Nashville, Tenn. The five riders were charged with breach of the peace when they failed to comply immediately with a police captain's order to move on.

Nine leaders in the Freedom Riders movement conferred in Washington with Attorney General Kennedy, reportedly to seek help in halting arrests of the demonstrators against segregation.

Mr. Kennedy's office said afterward only that "there was a frank exchange and the meeting was a useful one."

Attending the 20-minute conference was John Seigenthaler, the Attorney General's executive assistant, who was knocked unconscious last month in mob action at Montgomery, Ala.

Rockefeller Lauds King

In other developments:

The Rev. Martin Luther King, jr., Southern integration leader, was described by New York's Gov. Nelson Rockefeller last night as a man with the same motivation and dedication as Mahatma Gandhi.

In turn, Dr. King said the entire Nation should be dedicated to Gov. Rockefeller "for his genuine liberalism, his humanitarian concern and his unswerving devotion to the principles of human dignity."

The exchange took place at a rally in a Negro church at Albany, N. Y., attended by a predominantly Negro audience. Dr. King is on a Nation-wide tour seeking support for the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, which advocates nonviolent resistance to segregation laws in the South.

At Louisville, Ky., two Negro integration leaders were jailed yesterday after a hearing before Juvenile Court Judge Henry M. Triplett. Frank M. Stanley, jr., and Arthur Smith were found guilty of contributing to the delinquency of a minor. Charges of breach of peace and delinquency against several juveniles arrested in the case, a racial demonstration, were continued until Tuesday.

Mr. Stanley, 23, co-chairman of the Steering Committee leading integration efforts at Louisville, was given a 90-day jail sentence and a $300 fine. Mr. Smith, 18, was given 30 days in jail and $100 fine.

Chose to Go to Jail

The hearings grew out of the arrest of Mr. Stanley, Mr. Smith and nine adults in demonstrations at Fontaine Ferry Park Thursday afternoon. The jail sentences were suspended by Judge Triplett, but Mr. Stanley and Mr. Smith chose to go to jail rather than pay the fines, according to their attorney, Neville M. Tucker.

At Jackson, Miss., a New York free lance writer planned to sign and send a Federal Court petition to United States District Court Judge Sidney Mize today, asking if Mississippi's breach of peace law was constitutional.

Elizazbeth Porther Wyckoff, 45, a white Freedom Rider in jail at Jackson, made the announcement of new legal tactics yesterday through her lawyers —only a short time after six riders were convicted on breach of peace charges.

At Memphis, Tenn., the fiirst Negro bus driver in the history of the city was hired yesterday by the city-owned transit system.

Carl Carson, a member of the Memphis Transit Authority, said John L. Smith, 29, starts work Monday and will train three days before going out on an official run.

Hunger Strikers Jailed in Florida

By The Associated Press

Ten hunger-striking "freedom riders" refused to obey a police order to disperse at the Tallahassee, Fla., airport Friday and submitted quietly to arrest. Three others got into a scuffle with two white men at the Ocala, Fla., bus station and also were taken to jail.

Meanwhile, others in a total of 24 out-of-state riders who criss-crossed north and central Florida by bus in a campaign to challenge Southern racial segregation practices were served without incident at lunch counters at Tampa, Gainesville and St. Petersburg.

At Jackson, Miss., five new "freedom riders" stepped off a Greyhound bus after a trip from Nashville, Tenn., and were arrested immediately. A police captain ordered them to move on. When they did not comply, he arrested them for breach of the peace. The arrests brought to 116 the number of "freedom riders" arrested in Jackson since May 24.

In Washington, two homemade bombs were set off in a trash can and an unoccupied telephone booth Thursday night. An anonymous telephone caller told police the blasts were related to efforts of "freedom riders."

WITHOUT FOOD

The Tallahassee hunger strikers — white and Negro Protestant ministers and Jewish rabbis — were in their third day without food in a protest against their inability to obtain service at the state capital's airport restaurant.

ORDERED ARREST

Th five ministers and two rabbis were taken into custody early in the afternoon by about a dozen policemen led by Tallahassee City Atty. James Messer. The attorney ordered arrest of the clergymen after they refused to obey an order to disperse in 15 seconds.

Three others — a Negro woman, a Negro minister and a white youth, all from Tallahassee—also were arrested for failure to leave the scene.

At Ocala, two Negroes and a white man were picked up. They were taken into custody after a disturbance which erupted when seven "freedom riders" walked into the bus station and headed for its cafeteria. Two unidentified white men advanced to meet them and there was pushing and elbowing.

Four of the riders obeyed police orders to return to their bus. The other three refused and were jailed.

The white men with whom they scuffled were not arrested.

Ocala is the home town of Gov. Farris Bryant of Florida, who earlier this week urged citizens of the state to ignore the "freedom riders."

Two companies of "freedom riders" set out in separate buses from Jacksonville Friday morning after spending the night there.

In Louisville, Ky., a crowd of 100 spectators cheered Thursday night when police arrested 27 Negroes and one white person at a stand-in demonstration. Police said blocking the entrance to a business establishment would be the basis for prosecution.

3 Nabbed After Ocala Scuffle In Bus Station

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Ten hunger-striking "Freedom Riders" refused to obey a police order to disperse at the Tallahassee, Fla., airport Friday and submitted quietly to arrest. Three others got into a scuffle with two white men at the Ocala, Fla., bus station and also were taken to jail.

One other rider stayed behind in Ocala to arrange bond for those arrested. He was Dan Stern, 26, white interne at Bellevue Hospital in New York City.

One of the riders who went on, Benny Winston, 42, a New York City Negro, said none of the riders engaged in any shoving or other violence as charged by the police.

Those arrested pleaded innocent to charges of unlawful assembly and failure to obey a police officer. Bonds were set at $500 each, returnable June 21.

JAILED IN JACKSON

Meanwhile, others in a total of 24 out-of-state riders who criss-crossed north and central Florida by bus in a campaign to challenge Southern racial segregation practices were served without incident at lunch counters at Tampa, Gainesville and St. Petersburg.

At Jackson, Miss., five new "Freedom Riders" stepped off a Greyhound bus after a trip from Nashville, Tenn., and were arrested immediately. A police captain ordered them to move on. When they did not comply, he arrested them for breach of the peace. The arrests brought to 116 the number of "Freedom Riders" arrested in Jackson since May 24.

The two Jacksonville group passed through Tampa and arrived at St. Petersburg. They were served at both cities without incident.

Later in the day, four "Freedom Riders" arrived at St. Petersburg from Tallahassee. They also were served.

The groups then left for meetings and workshops being held at Negro churches.

white man after he exchanged heated words with a St. Petersburg Negro minister at the bus station.

The Tallahassee hunger strikers — white and Negro Protestant ministers and Jewish rabbis — had gone without food for more than 24 hours in a protest against their inability to obtain service at the state capital's airport restaurant.

The group included two rabbis, five white ministers and three Negro ministers.

RESTAURANT CLOSED

The restaurant was closed when the clergymen showed up Thursday. It was still closed when they returned to the airport Friday morning.

The ministers and rabbis were taken into custody early in the afternoon by about a dozen policemen led by Tallahassee City Atty. James Messer. The attorney ordered arrest of the clergymen after they refused to obey an order to disperse in 15 seconds.

Three others — a Negro woman, a Negro minister and a white youth, all from Tallahassee—also were arrested for failure to leave the scene.

At Ocala, two Negroes and a white man were picked up. They were taken into custody after a disturbance which erupted when seven "Freedom Riders" walked into the bus station and headed for its cafeteria. Two unidentified white men advanced to meet them and there was pushing and elbowing.

REFUSE ORDER

Four of the riders obeyed police orders to return to their bus. The other three refused and were jailed. They were the Rev. Leslie Smith, 35, Albany, N.Y., Negro minister; Herbert A. Collender, 27, Negro member of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and United Auto Workers from Mahwah, N.J., and James OConner, 31, a white economics instructor from Barnard College, New York City.

Pleas of innocent were made before Marion County Judge L. O. Meyers by the trio, and bond was set at $500 each for hearing June 21.

The white men with whom they scuffled were not arrested.

Ocala is the home town of Gov. Farris Bryant of Florida, who earlier this week urged citizens of the state to ignore the "Freedom Riders."

Two companies of riders set out in separate buses from Jacksonville Friday morning after spending the night there.

PEACEFUL SPOT

Although Jacksonville was the scene of race riots last year when Negroes staged lunch counter sit-ins, it was one of the most peaceful spots on the "Freedom Riders" itinerary this week. The arrivals and departures of the integration crusaders passed almost unheeded by residents.

The Tallahassee segregation challenge began quietly, too. The clergymen were served in routine fashion when they arrived at the bus station and entered its restaurant.

17 Jailed 'To Avoid Violence'

By United Press International

A two-day "freedom ride" into a dozen north and central Florida cities ended on a sour note for both participants and state officials Friday when 17 persons were arrested. Police said the arrests were made to avoid threatened racial violence.

An 'interfaith' group of 10 Protestant ministers and Jewish rabbis was jailed in Tallahassee charged with "unlawful assembly" during a sit-in demonstration at the new airport terminal in the capital. Police said the clergymen had caused an angry crowd to collect outside the building and they were jailed when they refused to end the protest.

Tallahassee police also arrested three other persons sitting with the ministers at the airport.

At Ocala, three "freedom riders" were arrested and later released on bond in a scuffle with three unidentified white men. Police said the riders were "jostled" at the door of the bus terminal restaurant and were jailed when they refused to return to their bus.

ARRESTED FOR REMARKS

A white man, truck driver Robert D. Bierl, 26, was arrested at St. Petersburg when he made what police termed "improper remarks" to a Negro clergyman at the bus terminal entrance.

"Freedom riders" also met with arrest Friday in Jackson, Miss., where 116 of the anti-segregationists have now been jailed.

A group of four white persons and one Negro came to the Mississippi capital by bus from Nashville, Tenn., and was arrested at a lunch counter in the Greyhound terminal.

Two attorneys in Jackson announced Friday they will ask federal Judge Sidney Mize at a hearing in Gulfport, Miss., on Monday to declare the arrests of "freedom riders" unconstitutional.

ROCKERFELLER LAUDS KING

Rockefeller introduced king, an Atlanta minister, by comparing King's policy of "non-violence" in the integration campaign to Gandhi's attempts for peace during his lifetime.

The Rev. Wyatt Tee Walker of Atlanta also spoke at the rally and declared Negro leaders would not adopt a "cooling off" period in the "freedom rides" as suggested by U.S. Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy.

While Rockefeller was praising the "freedom riders," Gov. Farris Bryant of Florida, a segregationist, was defending the action of police in his state who arrested the integrationists.

"Regardless of cost or convenience their trip across Florida was made peaceful and without incident," Bryant said. "Unfortunately, these people were not willing to leave Florida without creating discord and securing attendant publicity."

Another group of "freedom riders" touring Florida under the sponsorship of the state NAACP ended a two-day trip Friday night and reported they met with little difficulty.

Thursday night after a relatively uneventful "freedom ride" that stretched from the nation's capital to Florida's capital city.

Rabbis, Ministers Arrested In Fla. 'Riders' Issue

Atlanta Constitution 6-11-61

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — (UPI)— Florida police stepped in and arrested 24 "freedom" riders" and three sympathizers Friday after allowing one day of integration.

One "interfaith" group, made up of ten white and Negro Protestant ministers and rabbis, was taken into custody when members persisted in demands that they be served at Tallahassee's Airport restaurant .

Police told the clergymen it was feared their presence would spark a riot. They were given 15 seconds to disperse.

Another "freedom riders" group made up of two Negroes and a white man, was arrested at Ocala for attempting to enter a white waiting room in a bus station.

The three were jailed in lieu of bond on charges of attempting to incite a riot and failing to obey a police officer. Maximum penalty in Florida for unlawful assembly and inciting to riot is 60 days in jail or a $500 fine.

Tallahassee police also arrested the Rev Dan Speed, local official of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

NAACP; Priscilla Stephens, and official of the Congress of Racial Equality CORE, and Jeff Poland, 18 - year -old Florida State University student. The three were sitting with "interfaith" riders at the air terminal.

When the Stephens woman balkat getting in a police car, she was handcuffed and forced into the vehicle.

Meanwhile, at Jackson, Miss., five more "freedom riders" were arrested when they arrived from Nashville, Tenn. The new riders brought to 116 the total arrested in Jackson since May 24.

The "interfaith" group had been scheduled to return to New York

Group Florida-Bound Reaches Charleston

Thurs. 6-15-61

(The Associated Press)

The first of three bus-riding groups of "Freedom Riders" re- tion in South Carolina Wednesday.

They were the vanguard of 32 white and Negro riders testing segregated facilities at interstate bus stations in the Deep South en route to Florida.

Seven members of the party from Washington were greeted at a lunch counter in the Charleston, S.C., bus terminal by an elderly white woman carrying a cane. She shook hands with a white minister and a Negro minister in the group. p. 22

Uniformed and plainclothces policemen were on hand as the Greyhound bus rolled in.

DAY IS QUIET

It was an uneventful day for the group, which left Wilmington, N.C., after spending the night in a Negro hotel. As the bus drove southward, the number of white onlookers at bus terminals grew larger. Brief uneventful stops were made at Myrtle Beach, Georgetown, and other coastal cities.

New Orleans

An unmarked patrol car carrying two state law enforcement division plainclothesmen escorted the bus as it left Myrtle Beach. Six city police cars converged on the bus station at Georgetown, but again there were no threats of violence.

Seven more riders left Wilmington and planned to join the first group in Charleston to spend the night.

A third group of 18 left Raleigh, N.C., for Sumter, S.C. Four rabbis, eight white Protestant ministers and six Negro ministers made up the party. They are due in Tallahassee, Fla., Thursday and plan to fly back to New York for a news conference Friday.

The groups who spent the night in Charleston were bound for Jacksonville and St. Petersburg, Fla.

PLANS ANNOUNCED

All were traveling by regularly scheduled buses. Their trips are sponsored by the Congress of Racial Equality.

A group of four Negroes and one white woman in Daytona Beach, Fla., announced plans to check treatment of Negroes at bus stations in north Florida and south Georgia. An official of the Florida branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People said Thursday's trip will be the first of four.

"One of the saddest aspects of the Southern race problem has been that governors have, by plan, had lawyers join with them in statements which deliberately deceived the people by distorting, and falsifying, the fact and the Constitution. All too often this alliance has been assisted by lawyer-members of the Congress."

The attorney general of Alabama, interviewed on a national television network (NBC), attacked sponsorship of the Freedom Rides and said the citizens of his state highly resented the use of federal marshals there last month.

Not Too Much Sense in Rides—Atty. Gen.

Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy said Wednesday he did not believe continued "freedom rides" into the heart of the South make "a great deal of sense" in advancing the cause of desegregation.

The President's younger brother told a news conference here that he would like to see desegregation "settled in the courts, not in the streets."

"I think they (the freedom riders) have a legal right to make these trips," he stressed. But he added:

"I don't think at present it makes a great deal of sense as far as advancing their own purposes."

He noted that the issue of desegregated travel was now before the courts and the interstate commerce commission and added, "I hope and expect that in the near future the ICC will take action to end discrimination in interstate buses." eH said the ICC order was expected within the next few months.

From Our Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, 3-6-61 Two groups of interracial freedom riders will leave Washington by bus today to test racial segregation at interstate terminal facilities in Florida.

The announcement was made in Washington by Genevieve Hughes of New York, field secretary of the Congress of Racial Equality.

Announcement of the tests came as Gov. Farris Bryan signed into law Monday a bil rushed through the Florida Legislature because of possible freedom rider excursions into the state.

The new law adds city commissioners and highway patrolmen to the officials given authority to order dispersal of persons unlawfully assembled. Mayors in Florida already had such authority.

Cities to be tested in Florida include Tallahassee, St. Petersburg, Jacksonville and Tampa.

One group, called the "interfaith" group, will consist of 14 Protestant ministers and four rabbis. Seven of the ministers are white. Another group will include 14 "union and professional" workers, Miss Hughes said.

The groups will travel on regularly scheduled Greyhound buses. The interfaith group will end its ride through five Southern states at Tallahassee. The other group will wind up at St. Petersburg.

The interfaith group is due in Jacksonville at 7:45 a.m. Thursday and will go from there to Tallahassee.

The union and professional workers will go to Jacksonville Thursday, split into two groups and stay overnight.

One group will leave at 6 a.m. Friday and the other at 7 a.m., both headed for St. Petersburg.

One group will arrive at St. Petersburg at 12:45 p.m. and the other at 5:10 p.m. after a side trip to Tampa.

Miss Hughes said CORE had informed the FBI and municipal police in Florida of the trips.

TALLAHASSEE- FREEDOM RIDERS

Restaurant Closed to Freedom Riders in Tallahassee

By RICK TUTTLE
Capital Bureau Chief

TALLAHASSEE — Ter "freedom riders" found segre gation at the airport termi nal here Thursday and refused to board the plane that wa to take them back to thei homes in the North.

The 16, part of a group o 18 who have been traveling through Northern Florida t test segregation barriers in in ter-state transportation, sa the airport's restaurant clos as they approached to see service.

Eight of the "freedom rid boarded the plane fo home. But the rest wired the Interstate Commerce Commis sion asking for immediate ac tion to open the restaurant Then they sat down to wai for a reply.

The Freedom Riders had just completed a 170-mile bus tour from Jacksonville to this capital city.

It was the first Florida test of bus station facilities by the same organization that set off bloody rioting in Montgomery, Ala., last month.

The closest thing to an outbreak came at a bus station in Tallahassee, but it was so minor few people in the crowded station even knew it occurred.

A white clergyman and a Negro minister were shoved out of a formerly all-white bathroom by two local toughs. Two detectives quickly took the white men outside with no disturbance.

The first group of riders, sponsored by the Congress of Racial Equality, arrived in Jacksonville early Thursday. A half-hour later the 14 Protestant ministers and four rabbis caught a bus to Tallahassee with brief stops at Lake City, Live Oak, Madison, Greenville and Monticello.

A second group of riders, called the union and professional group, will arrive in Jacksonville today and make a test run to St. Petersburg and Tampa.

On the same bus with the "freedom riders" was a NAACP "fact-finding" group of four Negroes and a white woman, Mrs. Don Calhoun of Daytona Beach.

They planned a side trip to Thomasville, Ga., then will leave early today for Gainesville, Ocala, Tampa and Orlando before returning to Daytona Beach which they left Thursday morning.

"We were quite pleased with the trip," said Rabbi Israel Dresner of Springfield, N.J., a "Freedom Rider" spokesman.

"We have found all the facilities integrated and it's a major step in the right direction."

The Negro riders were ignored at Lake City's white bus station restaurant, although the seven white ministers were served in the Negro restaurant.

At every stop, small groups of men gathered to gawk and laugh but they never came closer than 100 yards of the buses.

At least 50 Negroes pushed into the bus station restaurant here behind the riders and were served along with them. Regular white waitresses served the white riders and Negro waiters served the Negro riders.

Within half an hour, the station was packed with Negroes and whites, plus reporters and cameramen.

Police then blocked the doors and allowed no one else inside. One plainclothesman worked with a walkie-talkie.

A Tallahassee detective handed out pamphlets that charged the NAACP with two goals: 1—"To make trouble—and get attention." 2—"To force Negro-white mixing."

It was entitled "Massive Isolation."

"To isolate them is to defeat both purposes," the pamphlet said. "Turn your back — leave the store — ignore them."

The message was in keeping with Gov. Farris Bryant's attitude toward the integrationists, but he refused to comment on the paper later in the day.

The riders made the trip in two buses.

A Florida Highway Patrol trooper in an unmarked car drove ahead several miles to alert local police at each stop.

All along the route — U.S. 90 West — highway patrol cars radioed ahead as the buses passed check points.

At each stop, town police cars were waiting and unmarked cars circled the block, watching for trouble.

The Rev. E. C. Tillman, leader of the NAACP group, said he would file a report of his findings with the Federal Civil Rights Commission. He denied that his trip was timed to coincide with the Freedom Riders who left Washington Monday.

A Southern mother and her daughter — caught on the Freedom Riders bus by accident at Jacksonville — were not pleased with the demonstration.

Said Mrs. E. C.Gregory:

"They are just causing more trouble. I was born in Mississippi and I have nothing aaginst the Negroes. But since they started all this, the feeling between the races has become worse."

However, Mrs. Gregory and her daughter, Caroline, did not move away when two Negro men sat beside them at a table.

"Why, I wouldn't get up and walk away," she said. "That would just cause more hard feelings."

Riding Clergy Advised 'Clean Up At Home'

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (UPI)—Ten clergymen convicted of unlawful assembly during a "Freedom Ride" sit-in at the city airport returned north today with a pledge that other anti-segregationists would follow them here.

The biracial group of ministers and rabbis was convicted in city court Thursday night and received the maximum sentence of a $500 fine or 60 days in jail. Each posted $1,000 and filed notice of appeal.

Municipal Judge John Rudd told the clergymen at the end of the day-long trial:

"If I thought for one minute... that you came here on a noble, Christian purpose and acted accordingly, you would not be here now. Stop and think when you go back home and check the records of crime, prostitution and racial strife there compared to Tallahassee.

"Then clean up your own parishes, and you'll find you have more than you can take care of."

SPONSORED BY CORE

The seven whites and three Negroes, all from New York and New England, were sponsored on a "Freedom Ride" through the Southeast by the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE). They were arrested June 16 during a sit-in at the segregated municipal airport restaurant.

The ministers, who departed for Jacksonville, returned north by plane from the port city.

The clergymen promised that "others will follow us to Tallahassee," Florida's capital city. A spokesman would not say when another group might come here, however.

Rudd sentenced Priscilla Stephens, a student at Florida A&M University for Negroes, to a fine of $200 to 60 days in jail, plus a mandatory five-day jail term. The girl was arrested with the "Freedom Riders" a week ago.

The girl was convicted in a separate case of resisting arrest and interfering with a policeman. Witnesses testified she had to be handcuffed and forced into a police car. The judge said the arrest violated an earlier probation stemming from a sit-in demonstration.

KENNEDY SOUTH DELAY

Highlight of the trial Thursday was testimony that U.S. Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy, at the request of Florida Gov. Farrris Bryant, had sought a two-hour delay in arrest of the "Freedom Riders" in order to try to have them call off the airport demonstration.

Tallahassee city attorney James Messer Jr., said the governor relayed Kennedy's request to city officials.

One of the Negro clergymen, the Rev. J. W. Collier, 41, of Newark, N.J., said he was talking by telephone with one of Kennedy's assistants when Messer and a squad of police arrived at the airport to arrest them.

City police and other local officials testified that the clergymen refused to leave the airport despite warnings that their presence could lead to violence.

now," Rudd said. "Stop and think when you go back home and check the records of crime, prostitution and racial strife there compared to Tallahassee. Then clean up your own parishes, and you'll find you have more than you can take care of."

He denied a defense motion for a new trial.

It was brought out at the trial that U.S. Atty. Gen. Robt. Kennedy tried to talk the "freedom riders" into calling off ther airport demonstration.

FLORIDA JUDGE CONVICTS TEN FREEDOM RIDERS

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. —(UPI)— A Tallahassee city judge Thursday night convicted 10 white and Negro clergymen from New York and New England of unlawful assembly for demanding service in a "white only" restaurant at the city's airport.

Judge John Rudd imposed the maximum sentence of a $500 fine or 60 days in jail on the group of rabbis and Protestant ministers who were arrested last Friday when they refused to leave the airport. The clergymen were part of a team of "freedom riders" sent to Florida by the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) in New York.

Rudd told the group to "go back north and clean up your own parishes" of crime and racial discrimination before coming south again.

Defense attorneys announced immediately they would appeal. Rudd set bond at $1,000 each for the 10 and they all posted bond.

"If I thought for one minute . . . that you came here on a noble, Christian purpose and acted accordingly, you would not be here

Riders' Trial Told of Robert Kennedy's Role

TALLAHASSEE, June 22 (UPI)—Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy tried to talk 10 white and Negro "Freedom Riders" into calling off an anti-segregation demonstration at the Tallahassee Airport, it was disclosed today.

The testimony came out at the City Court trial of the New York and New England clergymen who were arrested on charges on unlawful assembly last Friday. They had demanded service at a "white only" restaurant at the airport and refused police orders to leave.

City Attorney James Messer Jr., said Kennedy sought a two-hour delay in the arrest of the group so he could try to have them call it off. Messer said Kennedy's request was relayed to city officials by Gov. Farris Bryant.

In the middle of the trial, the prosecution withdrew charges against Jeff Poland, a white teen-ager, and Negro minister Charles Hunter, local residents arrested with the Freedom Riders. Messer said they apparently had dispersed and were arrested by mistake "in the confusion."

The trial before city Judge John Rudd attracted a large group of white and Negro spectators to the tiny courtroom in the ancient brick City Hall. Strict segregation was observed in seating. White and Negro defendants who sat down together were separated by police.

Testimony about Kennedy's intervention in the incident was draw from Messer by Tobias Simon of Miami, attorney for the Freedom Riders.

Jersey City Asked To Gird for Tension

JERSEY CITY, June 22 (UPI)—A new committee of Negroes and whites called on city officials today to step up law enforcement in a racially tense residential section.

The committee was organized yesterday in the wake of a 40-minute outburst of racial violence Tuesday night in which two policemen were stabbed while trying to keep some 300 persons of both races from rioting.

Feelings in the Marion Gardens housing project area had been running high since Sunday when a group of Negroes from the housing project tried to crash an Italian festival at a church. The Negroes were chased.

(The Associated Press)

Ten hunger-striking "Freedom Riders" refused to obey a police order to disperse at the Tallahassee, Fla., airport Friday and submitted quietly to arrest. Three others got into a scuffle with two white men at the Ocala, Fla., bus station and also were taken to jail.

Meanwhile, others in a total of 24 out-of-state riders who criss-crossed north and central Florida by bus in a campaign to challenge Southern racial segregation practices were served without incident at lunch counters at Tampa, Gainesville and St. Petersburg.

At Jackson, Miss., five new Freedom Riders stepped off a Greyhound bus after a trip from Nashville, Tenn., and were arrested immediately. A police captain ordered them to move on. When they did not comply, he arrested them for breach of the peace. The arrests brought to 116 the number of Freedom Riders arrested in Jackson since May 24.

CLERGYMEN FAIL TO EAT

In Washington, two homemade bombs were set off in a trash can and an unoccupied telephone booth Thursday night. An anonymous telephone caller told police the blasts were related to efforts of Freedom Riders.

The Tallahassee hunger strikers — white and Negro Protestant ministers and Jewish rabbis — had gone without food for more than 24 hours in a protest against their inability to obtain service at the state capital's airport restaurant.

The group included two rabbis, five white ministers and three Negro ministers.

The restaurant was closed when the clergymen showed up Thursday. It was still closed when they returned to the airport Friday morning.

TAKEN INTO CUSTODY

The ministers and rabbis were taken into custody early in the afternoon by about a dozen policemen led by Tallahassee City Atty. James Messer. The attorney ordered arrest of the clergymen after they refused to obey an order to disperse in 15 seconds.

Three others — a Negro woman, a Negro minister and a white youth, all from Tallahassee—also were arrested for failure to leave the scene.

At Ocala, two Negroes and a white man were picked up. They were taken into custody after a disturbance which erupted when seven Freedom Riders walked into the bus station and headed for its cafeteria. Two unidentified white men advanced to meet them and there was pushing and elbowing.

Four of the riders obeyed police orders to return to their bus. The other three refused and were jailed. They were the Rev. Leslie Smith, 35, Albany, N.Y., Negro minister; Herbert A. Collender, 27, Negro member of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and United Auto Workers from Mahwah, N.J., and James O'Conner, 31, a white economics instructor from Barnard College, New York City.

ALMOST UNHEEDED

The white men with whom they scuffled were not arrested.

Ocala is the home town of Gov. Farris Bryant of Florida, who earlier this week urged citizens of the state to ignore the Freedom Riders.

Two companies of Freedom Riders set out in separate buses from Jacksonville Friday morning after spending the night there.

Although Jacksonville was the scene of race riots last year when Negroes staged lunch counter sit-ins, it was one of the most peaceful spots on the Freedom Riders' itinerary this week. The arrivals and departures of the integration crusaders passed almost unheeded by residents.

The Tallahassee segregation challenge began quietly, too. The clergymen were served in routine fashion when they arrived at the bus station and entered its restaurant.

OPPOSITION RISES

But opposition mushroomed within hours. By the time the party reached the airport, its lunchroom was closed. When another group of integrationists—Floridians from Daytona Beach who called themselves "fact finders" rather than Freedom Riders —sought to eat at the bus station Friday morning they were turned away. The manager said he always closed in the early morning to clean up.

Other racial developments:

At Parchman, Miss., Fred Jones, superintendent of Mississippi State Prison, said he doesn't plan to put 45 transferred Freedom Riders to work in cotton fields with other prisoners. He said he thought it would create trouble. The Freedom Riders were taken to the state prison from jails in Jackson, where they had been arrested on breach of peace charges.

In Louisville, Ky., a crowd of 100 spectators cheered Thursday night when police arrested 27 Negroes and one white person at a stand-in demonstration. Police said blocking the entrance to a business establishment would be the basis for prosecution.

At Columbia, S. C., a white state park was closed when 20 Negroes in three automobiles sought admission.

Racial Riders Plan Headquarters Here

The Atlanta Constitution

P. 10

By BRUCE GALPHIN

Negro leaders here, some just released from jail in Alabama, plunged Tuesday into organizing a flow of "freedom rides" which they vowed would continue until bus terminal segregation is ended throughout the South.

To be tagged the Freedom Ride Coordinating Committee, the organization will have its headquarters in Atlanta, with branches in Montgomery, Jackson, Miss., and New Orleans.

Atlanta, Ga.

The coordinating committee is composed of Dr. Martin Luther King's Southern Christian Leadership Conference, CORE, the Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee and the Nashville Christian Leadership Conference.

One of the leaders of the new movement, the Rev. Wyatt Tee Walker, who was released on bond from a Montgomery jail Monday night, rejected any suggestion of a "cooling-off" period in an interview Tuesday.

Wed. 5-31-61

"He (Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy) is asking the wrong people to cool off," Walker declared.

Later Tuesday, the biracial Southern Regional Council issued a special report asserting that the momentum of the freedom rides is "too great to be held back."

"There would be no freedom ride, if there were compliance with law and decency in the South," the report continued.

"The white South," it declared, "has got to acquire the habit of introducing change before it is demanded. If this is wishful thinking, it is also a statement of fact."

Walker said Atty. Gen. Kennedy's request that the Interstate Commerce Commission issue regulations at once requiring the full desegregation of terminals was "the most hopeful thing that has developed to date."

If such a regulation is issued, Walker continued, the freedom rides probably will end soon afterward.

But he added that a "sort of watchdog network" of the Freedom Ride Coordinating Committee will be maintained to be sure the regulation is enforced.

Walker said the group is going to ask Greyhound and Trailways bus lines to close their colored restaurants outright and operate only desegregated counters.

"Most of the while people in the South are law-abiding," he continued. "The emotional climate of the people who seem unbending will adjust."

Walker was accompanied from Montgomery by Bernard Lee, who has been active in Atlanta and Montgomery sit-ins and who was jailed along with Walker.

They said they posted bond only because they were asked to help run the new coordinating committee.

More 'Riders' Alabama-Bound

ATLANTA (AP) — More "Freedom Rides" were promised Monday after a federal judge refused to prolong a temporary restraining order against the antisegregation activities in Alabama.

A spokesman for the "Freedom Ride" coordinating committee said inter-racial groups of students and adults would resume the rides sometime this week.

The Rev. Wyatt Tee Walker made the announcement after U.S. Dist. Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. let the restraining order die in Montgomery.

Walker said the "Riders" would go from Atlanta to Montgomery and then to Jackson, Miss. He also said the group would reopen its Montgomery office within 24 hours.

NEW YORK — Michael J. Quill, international president of the Transport Workers Union of America, AFL-CIO, announced that TWU was forwarding an additional check for $5,000 to the Committee on Racial Equality in support of the "Freedom Riders."

At the same time, Quill attacked the proposal for a "cooling off" period stating, instead, that "what is needed is the full force of federal troops with a thorough understanding of their assignment."

QUILL'S STATEMENTS were included in a letter, signed also by Matthew Guinan, international secretary-treasurer, and Frank Sheehan, director of organization, which was addressed to the office of James Farmer, national director of CORE now in a Mississippi jail for his participating in the crusade for equality.

Quill and the other TWU officers praised the challenge to segregation laws now being hurled by the CORE "freedom riders" and said, "it is organized labor's duty to help you in this fight."

2 Groups of Riders On Way to Florida

By The Associated Press

Two groups of "freedom riders" arrived in Raleigh, N.C., by bus from Washington without incident Tuesday en route to the first such test of racial segregation in Florida.

The first group stayed only a few minutes before going to Wilmington, N. C., their next stop on a trip to Jacksonville and St. Petersburg, Fla. The five white and five Negro men, and two white and two Negro women, were to all spend the night in a Negro hotel at Wilmington.

The second group, which arrived a few hours later, was composed of four Jewish rabbis, eight white protestant ministers and six Negro ministers.

They planned to leave Raleigh Wednesday morning headed for Tallahassee, Florida's capital. The clergymen are to fly from Tallahassee to New York Thursday and hold a news conference in New York.

St. Petersburg Police Chief E. Wilson Purdy said any U.S. citizen can come to the Florida city. "Integration and segregation are social and not police problems," the officer added. "However, any violation growing out of them will be handled as such."

The office of Florida Gov. Farris Bryant, who was in Washington, said he believes Floridians will ignore the "Freedom Riders" when they arrive in the state.

In other racial developments:

A federal judge at Jacksonville directed Mayor Haydon Burns and five other city officials to show cause why they should not be cited for contempt for refusing to permit Negroes to enter a municipally operated swimming pool. A federal court has barred the city from operating any of its recreational facilities on a segregated basis.

Two Negro groups staged sit-in demonstrations in downtown Woolworth and Kress stores in Pensacola, Fla. The lunch counters were closed immediately, and there were no incidents.

A white New York legislator and a Negro leader, arrested in a white rest room last week at Jackson, Miss., said they will sue for false arrest and false imprisonment. They are Mark Lane, a Manhattan Democrat and member of the state assembly, and Percy Sutton, president of the New York Chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

At Jackson, a 24-year-old Mississippi Negro who caught a "freedom ride" from Chicago to his home state's capital, said, "I'd rather be in jail here than starve in Chicago."

'Riders' Ask ICC For Force In Travel Push

The Montgomery Advertiser

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

"Freedom Riders" asked the Interstate Commerce in Washington Tuesday to add "moral force" to their legal maneuvers to remove segregation barriers from travel facilities.

Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson of Mississippi joined his state public service commission in blasting proposals for an ICC crackdown on such segregation.

Carl Rachlin, general counsel of the Congress of Racial Equality, sponsor of the riders, told the ICC in oral arguments "our job is to help Mississippians to get rid of a tradition which is morally wrong."

Wed. 8-16-61

Rachlin said he was just back from Jackson where hundreds of riders have been arrested and many jailed.

U.S. Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy has filed a petition asking the ICC to issue regulations to require bus companies to post this sign in buses:

"Seating aboard this vehicle is without regard to race, color, creed or national origin."

WHAT PURPOSE?

Patterson said he couldn't understand what the "billboards" proposed by Kennedy would accomplish. He said the crackdown was illegal, unworkable and capricious.

Meanwhile, rider attorney William Kunstler and Prosecutor Jack Travis of Jackson prepared arguments on a suit set before Federal District Judge Harold Cox Saturday in Jackson.

The petition brought five Freedom Rider cases into federal court and Travis has asked Judge Cox to return them to Hinds County Court.

The judge must decide whether the cases involve civil rights. If they do, he keeps the cases; if not, they go back to state courts. There is no appeal on his decision.

Montgomery Ala.

SLIM CHANCE

"I think we have a slim chance," Kunstler said, "because this federal law hasn't been thoroughly tested. It has been used only for voting suits.

"But if we are successful, we will remove all the cases from county court and transfer them to federal court under this statute."

County Judge Russel Moore received pleas of innocent to breach of peace charges from three riders Tuesday after 188 entered their pleas Monday.

The riders are appealing Jackson City Court convictions after their arrests for refusing to obey police orders to move on while attempting to desegregate transportation terminal facilities in Jackson.

The first riders reached Jackson last May 24. Since then 297 have been arrested and many remain in Jackson jails and at the state penitentiary at Parchman.

Two trials a day will be held for riders out on $500 appeal bonds beginning Aug. 22. All of the current rider appeal trials are expected to be completed by Jan. 19.

FREEDOM RIDERS-THE CAROLINAS enroute TO FLORIDA

Riders Head for Florida, Report Only Minor Incidents in Carolinas

The largest of three groups left Sumter, S. C., without difficulty shortly after midnight, en route to Jacksonville, Fla. The four Jewish rabbis, eight white Protestant ministers and six Negro ministers planned to change buses at Jacksonville and go to Tallahassee, Florida's Capital, before flying back to New York this afternoon.

Two inter-racial groups spent the night in Charleston and were to leave for Savannah, Ga., in the morning. From there the seven men and women in each group were to go to Jacksonville, spend the night and possibly combine for an extended ride, probably to Tampa, Fla.

First Florida Test

The riders left Washington via Greyhound bus to make the first such test of Florida's segregation practices. They were refused restaurant service in two small South Carolina towns but encountered no trouble in the Charleston terminal restaurant.

Two buses brought 14 of the challengers to Charltston from Wilmington, N. C. A third bus carried the clergymen from Raleigh, N. C., to Sumter, where they halted for a church service. The clergymen were refused lunch counter service at a motel cafe on the outskirts of Sumter. They later ate at a Negro cafe.

The first group of riders arriving from Wilmington reported no difficulty en route. The second group of seven reported two members ran into trouble at Conway, S. C.

Mrs. Dupree C. White, a 40-year-old Negro from New York, said a white man walked behind the depot lunch counter, grabbed a knife, and ordered her and a companion to leave She said a waitress refused them service.

Law Upheld

Mrs. Laura Randall, 25, a New York white woman making her first Freedom Ride, said the man gestured with the knife but she did not view his action as a threat to attack them.

Mrs. Randall said the trip so far had been almost a complete success. The travelers experienced some rudeness, but she said police are upholding the law.

Her husband, Francis B. Randall, 29, history teacher at Columbia University, was among the seven on the first bus to arrive in Charleston.

The Charleston bus station was desegregated three months ago. A white and a Negro soldier sat together at the station's lunch counter talking as the second group of Feredom Riders entered.

The white and Negro riders were served together at the counter without incident. Two dozen or more white passengers in the station paid little attention to the visitors.

Riders Transferred

In other racial developments: Mississippi authorities today transferred 44 of the Freedom Riders from the jail at Jackson to the State Penitentiary at Parchman.

Members of the interracial group were singing as they climbed aboard one large truck and two small ones for the trip of about 130 miles into the Mississippi delta country. A heavy convoy of deputies was on hand, but there were no disturbances.

The Freedom Riders were scheduled to be lodged in the maximum security unit at the State penitentiary, reportedly to keep them away from the other prisoners.

Only the male members of the Freedom Riders—80 of whom were being held in jail—were transferred to Parchman.

A 26-year-old white man was arrested in Jackson as the 111th Freedom Rider to reach the city since arrivals began May 24.

Man Arrested

Daniel Ray Thompson of Cleveland, Ohio, arrived at the Greyhound bus terminal alone and was arrested on charges of breach of the peace after entering the Negro waiting room.

At Pensacola, Fla., the county school board submitted a school desegregation plan to Federal court as ordered by a Federal judge.

The city of Memphis, Tenn. asked a Federal court to approve a plan for gradual desegregation of municipal recreation facilities. The plan was a counter to a suit demanding that all tax-supported recreational facilities be desegregated immediately.

Probe Ordered

The New Britain (Conn.) Park Board ordered an investigation of the rejection of membership applications from two Negroes by a golf club which uses the municipal course and makes special use of municipal clubhouse facilities.

At Evansville, Ind., two 18-year-old Ohio college coeds charged they were dismissed from their jobs at the Evansville State Hospital because they participated in a sit-in demonstration protesting racial segregation.

The charges were made by Liane Davis and Lois Faibisch. Both are students at Antioch College at Yellow Springs, Ohio, but had been working in the social service department of the hospital since last April as part of Antioch's on-the-job training.

The girls were among 24 persons arrested in Henderson, Ky., last Saturday on charges of trespassing. Their trials are scheduled for Monday.

3 Groups Are Unmolested on Trip in Carolinas

CHARLESTON, S. C., June 14 (AP)—Freedom riders received a cool but orderly reception in South Carolina today.

Thirty-two white and Negro riders are testing segregated facilities at interstate bus stations on their way to Florida.

Seven members of the party from Washington were greeted at a lunch counter in the bus terminal here by an elderly white woman carrying a cane. She took hands with a white minister and a Negro minister in the group.

Uniformed and plainclothes policemen were on hand as the Greyhound bus rolled in.

It was an uneventful day for the group, which left Wilmington, N. C., after spending the night in a Negro hotel. As the bus drove southward, the number of white onlookers at bus terminals grew larger. Brief, uneventful stops were made at Myrtle Beach, Georgetown, and other coastal cities.

An unmarked patrol car carrying two State Law Enforcement Division plainclothesmen escorted the bus at is left Myrtle Beach. Six city police cars were at the bus station at Georgetown, but again there were no threats of violence.

14 Clergy in Group

A third group of eighteen left Raleigh, N. C., for Sumter, S. C. Four rabbis, eight white Protestant ministers and six Negro ministers made up the party. They are due in Tallahassee, Fla., tomorrow and plan to fly back to New York Friday.

The groups who spent the night in Charleston were bound for Jacksonville and St. Petersburg.

All were traveling by regularly scheduled buses. Their trips are sponsored by the Congress of Racial Equality.

"True Southern hospitality" greeted the group in Raleigh, one said. "I even had some grits for breakfast," said Rabbi Martin Freedman of Paterson, N. J. "First time since I was in the Army."

Meanwhile, a group of four Negroes and one white woman in Daytona Beach, Fla., announced plans to check treatment of Negroes at bus stations in north Florida and south eGorgia starting tomorrow.

In Jackson, Miss., a 26-year-old white man was arrested as the 111th Freedom Rider to reach the city since arrivals began May 24.

Daniel Ray Thompson of Cleveland, Ohio, arrived at the Greyhound bus terminal alone and was arrested on charges of breach of the peace after entering the Negro waiting room.

The superintendent of the Mississippi State Penitentiary said he has cleared space there for the 81 Freedom Riders now in Hinds County and Jackson jails.

Fred Jones said preparations should be complete next week at the new first offender camp to house 400 prisoners.

Accusation on TV

Alabama's Attorney General, MacDonald Gallion, charged in a television interview yesterday that one of the white Freedom Ride leaders was "Communist associated."

Mr. MacDonald, in a taped interview on the "Dave Garroway Show" of the National Broadcasting Company, made the accusation against James Douglas Peck, an official of the Congress of Racial Equality.

Mr. Peck, who recently was beaten by a mob in Alabama on one of the first freedom rides, described the charge as "simply a rehash of the irresponsible charge made on the Senate floor May 25 by Senator James O. Eastland of Mississippi."

Mr. Gallion said records of the Senate Internal Security Committee showed Mr. Peck on the letterhead of the Civil Defense Protection Committee and said this committee was "on the subversive list."

Mr. Peck said of this allegation: "I am not on the Civil Defense Protection Committee because it does not exist. I am on the Civil Defense Protest Committee and it is not on the subversive list."

WASHINGTON — (ANP)— The Alabama "Freedom Riders cost the Democratic National Committee $16,100 in cold cash, it was learned last week.

On May 12, Alabama Democrats held a party fund-raising dinner. Vice President Lyndon Johnson had been scheduled as the star speaker but his round - the - world goodwill tour forced a cancellation of his appearance.

House Speaker Sam Rayburn was sent south by Democratic Party leaders as a substitute and proved a major drawing card. The dinner raised $16,000.

ON SUNDAY, May 4, the Freedom Riders descended upon the state. Before the next week was over, Attorney General Robert Kennedy had sent United States marshals into Alabama to help maintain order.

Kennedy lawyers went into federal court and sought a federal injunction against Police Commissioner Eugene Connor of Birmingham on charges that he had failed to protect the Freedom Riders from mob attack. Connor was cleared, but he is a Democrat with an elephant's memory.

Connor, the Kennedy Administration has learned, is Democratic National committeeman from Alabama. The $16,000 from the dinner which normally would have been sent to Washington headquarters within a matter of days after the party, has not been received here.

Riders Urged to Serve Terms

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Congress of Racial Equality Monday urged all "freedom riders" who have appealed their convictions of breaching the peace in Jackson, Miss. to return there and serve sentences imposed in city court.

It said 260 now are free on bond. The cases stem from the Congress' efforts earlier this year to break down racial segregation in bus, railroad and airport terminal facilities. Most of the sentences were for two months' imprisonment plus fines of $200.

At the same time CORE announced the launching of new campaigns to end discriminatory employment practices in national retail chain stores, to secure unlimited decent housing for all Americans and to continue and intensify its campaign for registering eligible Negro voters.

It said the attack on employment practices will place "particular emphasis" on Sears Roebuck and might later include a nationwide Negro boycott of its goods.

serve out the sentences imposed on them in city court.

The riders were convicted of breach of the peace in refusing to obey police orders to move on while attempting to end segregation of bus terminal facilities in Jackson.

MAXIMUM SENTENCE

Farmer said the results of the appeals trials are "fairly predictable." He said the County Court juries have given the maximum sentence, compared with a lighter sentence in city court, in two of about 190 cases appealed.

"Our feeding is," Farmer said, "the authorities of Mississippi are merely harassing us by demanding that each person return to Mississippi for an individual trial.

HARD SENTENCE

"It seems clear that each will receive the maximum sentence in the appeal trial regardless of the sentence previously received.

"For example, the two already tried in County Court received two months' suspended sentence plus $200 fine originally. In the appeal trial they received the maximum of four months, nothing suspended, plus $200."

Two other riders have dropped their appeals and gone back to jail, Farmer said.

Farmer himself served 40 days in jail after receiving a sentence of two months suspended plus $200 fine. He refused to pay the fine and went to jail to serve it out at the rate of $3 a day. If he drops his appeal he will return to Jackson to serve the remaining 27 days.

It said the attack on employment practices will place "particular emphasis" on Sears Roebuck and might later include a nationwide Negro boycott of its goods.

The decisions were made in resolutions adopted at the conclusion of the Congress' annual four-day convention here.

James Farmer, CORE national director, said the date of the "freedom riders" return to Jackson has not been decided but would be in September.

"Those who cannot return, we will assist in defending when their trials come up in county recorders court," he told a news conference, " . . . we will carry a few test cases all the way up to the US supreme court if necessary."

He made it plain this would not mean the end of the "freedom rider" effort in Jackson. The convention voted, he said, to begin recruiting a select, "trained and disciplined" group prepared to go on more rides to Jackson and "when and if arrested stay in jail for their maximum sentences."

He said he didn't know how many would be picked or when they might renew their rides. "We will seek whatever we can get," he said. "If we can get hundreds, fine . . . we cannot let this protest die."

The convention also voted to urge citizens of Jackson to engage in sit-ins, stand-ins, to register to vote and take any other form of direct non-violent action to end racial discrimination in their city wherever they found it.

Riders May Drop Appeals In Jackson

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Congress of Racial Equality gathered Friday for a four-day convention with indications it will decide to urge dropping of appeals in the "Freedom Rider" cases in Jackson, Miss.

As about 150 bi-racial delegates registered for a night opening session CORE National Director James Farmer, one of the first arrested for breach of the peace in Jackson, told a newsman that he and other "Freedom Riders" might withdraw their appeals.

But he said a final decision would be left to the convention which runs through Monday. Dropping of the appeals to the county court would mean that more than 180 "Freedom Riders" would

It said the attack on employment practices will place "particular emphasis" on Sears Roebuck and might later include a nationwide Negro boycott of its goods.

The decisions were made in resolutions adopted at the conclusion of the Congress' annual four-day convention here.

CORE adds 3 to staff, expands rider drive

NEW YORK—CORE national director James Farmer announced this week the hiring of four additional staff members "to increase the momentum of our direct action challenge to bigotry."

Three new field secretaries initially will be assigned to CORE Freedom Ride efforts. They and other field secretaries will be responsible for screening and training Freedom Riders and will be assigned to lead riders that will criss-cross the South.

The new field secretaries have all participated in the Freedom Rides. They are: the Rev. B. Elton Cox, Edward Blankenheim, and Henry Thomas. Cox, a 30-year-old Congregational minister from High Point, North Carolina, was a member of CORE's first Freedom Ride and was active in the sit-ins in the High Point area last year.

IN OTHER ACTIONS involving sit-in and civil rights cases throughout the country: The Columbus (Ohio) Committee on Racial Equality reports that the latest effort by the management of Rollerland Skating Rink, 318 East Mound St., to prevent the integration of its skating facilities has been the formation of "private skating clubs" which "meet" there on nights on which colored skaters are not to be admitted.

* * *

THE LOUISIANA STATE Supreme Court upheld the conviction of four CORE members for a sit-in demonstration at a McCrory lunch counter Sept. 17, 1960. The sit-in was the first in New Orleans.

An early appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court is planned according to CORE attorney Lolis Elie.

The state court, in an opinion by Associate Justice Frank W. Summers, upheld the conviction of CORE Chairman Rudolph Lombard; Sydney L. Goldfinch, a former Tulane student; Miss Orethat Castle and Cecil Carter Jr.

Each was fined $350 and sentenced to serve 60 days in the Parish Prison.

* * *

IN MEMPHIS, Tenn., three persons were arrested in a downtown drugstore after a brief exchange of punches in the wake of a sit-in demonstration.

White customers reportedly threw itching power at the sit-ins at a Walgreen lunch counter here, and later one customer exchanged blows with one of the sit-inners.

IN POCATELLO, Idaho, Charlie F. Woods, 52, NAACP officer, who suffered a cut on his face that required 12 stitches when he visited a bar to investigate a discrimination report, this week, signed a police complaint against two men, Buddy Lee Welch, Pocatello, and Jack Halpin, Alameda.

Woods acted on a report that musicians had been refused service at the bar and, along with other NAACP staff members, went to investigate when they were attacked by white patrons.

At Ft. Lauderdale, Florida, following an attack upon residents for using a public beach here, Mrs. Eula Johnson, president of the Ft. Lauderdale Branch NAACP, has called upon Mayor Ed Burry to use his authority "to see that the rights of all citizens are protected in the free and uninterrupted use of all tax-supported facilities."

Mrs. Johnson's letter, dated July 27, also asked "that members of the police force be informed of their duties to protect and not hinder persons who peacefully are using these facilities and that their duty is to arrest those persons who, because of prejudice, seek to prevent citizens from using these facilities."

Those attempting to use the beach on July 23 were set upon by angry whites and driven from the area. The police did nothing to prevent the attack or to arrest the hoodlums who started it.

Dallas Sets Plans For Desegregation

The Washington Post
p. A5

Negroes dined at 40 previously all-white eating places in downtown Dallas last week, virtually without incident, as a step to prepare for peaceful desegregation of some schools there in September.

Meanwhile, the number of Freedom Riders arrested in Jackson, Miss., since the protest rides began May 24 neared 300. Mon. 7-31-61

The desegregation plans in Dallas were prepared by a special committee of seven Negroes and seven whites, working closely with the influential Dallas Citizens Council, composed of 250 of the city's business executives.

The Council reported that only four or five calls were received protesting the presence of Negroes in restaurants and cafeterias at downtown department stores and other business places.

The diners were 159 specially chosen Negro business and professional men, clergymen and their wives. Their desegregation efforts were carried out without publicity.

One-Fifth Negro

Washington, D.C.

Dallas, a city of 850,000, about one-fifth Negro, is under court order to desegregate schools at the first grade level this fall.

Several weeks ago facilities at Fair Park, a huge amusement area, and the State Fair theatrical productions were opened to Negroes without demonstrations. Further desegregation steps are planned before the schools open.

Police in Jackson, Miss., arrested a bi-racial group of 15 Freedom Riders yesterday in the city's railroad station. Most of the 10 white and five Negro riders are students at the University of California at Los Angeles. All were booked on the usual breach-of-peace charges.

All but two of the 296 riders who have come to Jackson by bus, train and plane since May 24 have been arrested.

The exceptions are Norma Wagner of Rochester, N. Y., a blind woman, and Wiejonarke Gjokreadisumarte, an Indonesian exchange student. They were with eight other white Freedom Riders in a desegregation attempt at the Greyhound bus station Saturday.

Chief of Detectives M. B. Pierce said the exchange student was not charged because "he is a guest in our country," United Press International reported.

Pierce was quoted as saying Miss Wagner was released because "it was the only humane thing to do." Miss Wagner, 44, said she felt she was being "discriminated against" because she is blind.

Other Happenings

There were these other developments in race relations last week:

• In Chicago, about 100 Negro and white "Freedom Wadders" held the fourth Sunday demonstration yesterday at the South Side's Rainbow Beach. Although they were greeted by a sign which read "Go Home Nigger," painted on a concrete retaining wall, no incidents on the beach were reported.

• An NAACP youth group held a sit-in demonstration at a Kansas City, Mo., drive-in restaurant to protest the serving of beverages in paper cups to Negroes and in glasses to whites. The demonstrators refused service in paper cups and departed after an hour.

• Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy listed 39 complaints of racial discrimination on interstate buses—three of them in Northern states—in asking the Interstate Commerce Commission for specific rules barring segregation in interstate buses and terminals.

• Charles F. Woods, president of the Pocatello, Idaho, chapter of the NAACP, said he and several other Negroes were jumped by a group of whites while investigating a segregation complaint.

CORE- PRESIDENT KENNEDY ASKED FOR MARSHALS AT RIDER TRIALS

Pres. Kennedy Asked For Marshals At Rider Trials

Atlanta World 8/6-61

NEW YORK (UPI)—The Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) asked the Kennedy administration Saturday to station federal marshals in Jackson, Miss., Aug. 14 when at least 186 "freedom riders" will appeal their breach of peace convictions.

Atlanta Ga.

CORE said the so-called "freedom riders" would arrive in Jackson Aug. 13 for a rally the night before the mass appeals.

James Farmer, national director of CORE who served 40 days on a breach of peace charge, appealed for federal marshals in identical telegrams to President Kennedy and U.S. Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy.

Farmer said CORE attorneys had tried to work out "an orderly and peaceful series of trials," but that Jackson's prosecuting attorney, Jack Travis, refused.

"Travis ordered all defendants to be present Aug. 14 though it will be physically impossible to try them all then, or even in the next few months," Farmer said in the telegrams.

Farmer said CORE would "make every effort to see that our conduct is completely non-violent. At the same time, CORE shall continue to protest segregation in Jackson. We cannot guarantee the conduct of hoodlum elements."

The CORE national director said there had been 305 arrests of persons testing segregation in the Mississippi capital. He said the 186 who plan to appeal their convictions are out of jail, and that they might be joined by others who still are in jail but who post bond for the court appearance.

He said the "freedom riders" would come to Jackson by bus from New Orleans, Nashville and Atlanta.

14 More Negroes Are Arrested In Montgomery, Baltimore Sit-Ins

The Evening Star p. 1 c

By PAUL HOPE
Star Staff Writer

Fourteen Negroes have been arrested in new sit-in demonstrations at restaurants in Montgomery County and Baltimore.

One adult and eight juveniles were charged with trespassing last night after they refused to leave the Double B Restaurant in Gaithersburg.

Four ministers and the president of a Baltimore real estate form were arrested yesterday when they tried to eat at Hooper's Restaurant in downtown Baltimore.

In another development, 10 persons arrested last week end in an Annapolis sit-in demonstration asked Gov. Tawes to call a special session of the General Assembly to enact a law to bar racial discrimination in hotels and restaurants. Four of the 10 are on a hunger strike at the Anne Arundel County jail.

Test Scheduled Today

The Congress of Racial Equality plans to visit restaurants on Route 40 in Maryland today to see if the owners will abide by their promise to desegregate the eating places. A scheduled Freedom Ride was called off November 11 after 35 restaurants along the Maryland portion of Route 40 north of Baltimore agreed to begin serving Negroes.

In the Gaithersburg demonstration last night, George Hackley, 27, of 13 Martins lane, Rockville, was charged with trespassing and with contributing to the delinquency of minors involved in the demonstration. He was released on $500 bond and a hearing was scheduled for Monday in Rockville Peoples Court.

The eight juveniles, who also were charged with trespassing, were released to their parents.

Mr. Hackley said the juveniles were among a group from Richard Montgomery and Gaithersburg High Schools who participated in the demonstration.

Points Up Issue

Mr. Hackley, who idenfified himself as a former University of Maryland student, said the demonstration was carried out to "point out to the Montgomery County Council the need for an anti-discrimination ordinance." An ordinance to bar discrimination in places of public accommodation is before the council.

Warrants charging the nine with trespassing were sworn out by waitress Nancy James who first asked the group to leave, county police said. Police said the owner, Michael J. More, of 114 Rolling road, Gaithersburg, had heard of a possible demonstration a few minutes earlier and had instructed the waitress to swear out the warrants if the demonstrators would not leave.

Mr. Hackley said the demonstrating group went into the Diamond Drug Store earlier in the evening and were served. He said they had been refused service there the night before.

The group arrested yesterday in Baltimore included the Rev. Logan Kearse, pastor of Cornerstone Baptist Church and leader of anti-segregation demonstrations in the Baltimore area the past two week ends.

Others Identified

The others were identified by the Associated Press as George Crawley, Herbert O. Edwards and Matthew R. Silver, all pastors of Baltimore churches, and Warren Shaw, president of the Manning-shaw Realty Co. of Baltimore.

Hooper's Restaurant was the scene of another demonstration November 11 in which 13 were arrested.

The 10 jailed in Annapolis sent Gov. Tawes this petition:

"We young people, now in jail in Annapolis for requesting service in segregated restaurants, implore you to call a special session of the Maryland General Assembly to enact an effective public accommodations law.

"There are four of us fasting in protest as long as our endurance will allow or until the special session is called."

Gov. Tawes has said he will support anti-discrimination legislation at the regular session of the General Assembly in February, but he has refused to call a special session.

FREEDOM RIDERS

Supreme Court says no to freedom bid

WASHINGTON

The legal strategy of a Freedom Rider defense counsel to win the release of his client from Mississippi state prison failed last week when two U.S. Supreme Court justices ruled that there was insufficient evidence to show that all state legal processes had been exhausted.

Atty. William Kunstler had petitioned the U.S. Supreme court for a habeas corpus on behalf of Miss Elizabeth Porter Wyckoff, 45, of New York City, who was convicted and jailed for 60 days for breach of the peace in connection with Freedom Rider activities in Jackson. She is scheduled to be released on Aug. 11.

The habeas corpus petition contended that her conviction was unconstitutional and invalid, that appeals to state courts on the contention were useless. The attorney also noted that a pending appeal to the U.S. Circuit Court of appeals woud not be decided before the sentence expires. The circuit court had earlier denied the habeas corpus petition.

THE HIGH COURT denial was issued by Justice Hugo L. Black (Alabama) and concurred in by Justice Tom C. Clark (Texas), sole members of the Supreme Court available. The court is in summer recess.

Undaunted by this setback, Kunstler announced that he would petition Hinds County Judge Russel Moore to arrange for four of the 260 cases pending in Jackson, Miss., to represent the entire group in appeals.

This new strategy is expected to determine the outcome of the entire batch of Freedom Rider convictions and appeals. More than 100 riders have been released on appeal bonds, and others are scheduled to win their release under similar conditions.

Hearing on the test appeals would, if granted by Judge Moore, be held in county court sometime in August.

ALSO IN JACKSON, city courts continued to hand out sentences for "breach of the peace" to Freedom Riders.

Judge James Spencer convicted CORE field secretary Richard Haley, 45, of Chicago, and Miss Helen Jean O'Neal, 20, of Clarksdale, Miss., for picketing a meeting of Southern Governors at the Heidelberg Hotel.

Judge Spencer also convicted the Rev. Matthew Petway, pastor of a Montgomery, Ala., AME Zion Church, his two children, Miss Kreddle Petway, 20 and Alfonso, 16, and Dr. Cecil A. Thomas, an Albany, Calif., YMCA official, on breach of peace charges.

The four were arrested as they attempted to desegregate the city airport. Each was fined $200 and given four months in jail. All posted appeal bonds and were released.

In Houston, two Freedom Riders were released from jail after posting $500 bonds for "unlawful assembly."

In Louisville, Ky., three Freedom Riders were fined $25 each on charges of breach of the peace, in connection with a sit-in demonstration in downtown restaurants; and the cases of 19 others were taken under advisement. Fourteen cases were filed and seven were dismissed.

ON THE wade - in scene, the 14th complaint was made to the St. Louis Council on Human relations that the Forest Park Highlands swimming pool discriminates racially.

In Nashville, the park commissioners closed all of its public swimming pools, with the excuse the shuttings were necessary for "financial reasons." The closings followed the denial of admissions of colored swimmers at one of the pools.

The municipal pool at Maplewood, a suburb of St. Louis was ordered closed, after 35 swimmers sought admission. The pool has had a white only policy since it opened in 1936.

At Fort Lauderdale, Fla., some 200 were permitted to use the public beach, without incident.

In Louisiana, the State Supreme Court upheld the conviction of four CORE members for a sit-in demonstration at a McCrory lunch counter last September. The sit-in was the first in New Orleans.

On the legislative level, the Alabama House of Representatives has a bill under consideration which would levy $300 fine and six month sentences on Freedom riders within the state.

The measure stipulates that the law is aimed at anyone convicted of announcing before hand and then carrying out a challenge to the state's segregation statutes.

In Jackson, Miss., key employes of the state's sovereignty commission, charged with preserving segregation in Mississippi, have received pay increases because of the Freedom Riders movement.

The pay increases were ordered by Gov. Ross Barnett because of the heavy work load caused by integrationists.

IN OTHER AREAS, Freedom Riders continued their assaults upon segregated travel facilities. The second group of riders to visit Little Rock were quietly received. The group, consisting of three whites and two colored, obtained integrated service at the Union Terminal and at the airport restaurants.

The group also had no trouble in Charlottesville and Roanoke, in Virginia; Knoxville, Chattanooga, and Memphis, in Tennessee.

However, some difficulties were presented in Elizabethtown and Culpepper, Va. and in Stuttgart, Ark.

At Birmingham, Ala., trial was scheduled in the September term of circuit court for Howard Thurston Edwards, 26, who was indicted last week on a charge of assault with intent to murder, as a result of violence against Freedom Riders at the Trailways bus station last May.

Edwards is accused of being one of a group of men who attacked Birminbham Post - Herald photographer Tom Langston and smashed his camera last May 14.

In Columbus, Ga.—

a different story

COLUMBUS, Ga. — An integrated group of responsible citizens, as Columbus faced possible sit-in demonstrations, has taken action which will result in the desegregation of "a number of lunch counters" here early in 1962.

Quite a few lunch counters and cafes lowered color bars in Atlanta, Savannah and Macon following prolonged sit-in demonstrations and picketing.

A prepared statement, released by the Columbus Chamber of Commerce, said in part:

"Serious study has been given to similar action taken in Atlanta, Macon and Savannah. In each instance, it was shown to be an apparent break with tradition, yet it was successfully accomplished.

"In Columbus, the desegregation of the airport, city buses, train and bus stations has been peaceful. Beginning in early 1962, a number of lunch counters will follow this recommendation."

IN KENTUCKY, the recent Supreme Court ruling in favor of 16 Louisiana youths played a big part in the dismissing of "breach-of-peace" charges against 40 Louisville youths convicted in sit - in demonstrations last summer.

Judge J. W. Hodges dismissed the charges in Special Criminal Court after Laurence E. Higgens, commonwealth attorney, declared "there was no evidence that these people were guilty of breaching the peace."

The commonwealth attorney also cited the recent ruling of the U.S. Supreme Court in a similar case.

"If the facts as you explained them are uncontradicted," said Judge Hodges, "I don't need the Supreme Court to tell me what to do. Cases dismissed."

AND IN Frankfort, some [illegible] members of High Street Baptist Church last Sunday marched about a mile to the steps of the capitol in protest of segregation.

A spokesman for the group which sang hymns as they walked to the capitol and back to church, said the march was in observance of Human Rights Week, proclaimed by Governor Combs.

Some 150 demonstrators marched through downtown Frankfort the night before, protesting segregated restaurants. A local editor received a letter the same day which threatened an economic boycott unless cafes and theatres were opened on an integrated basis.

IN LEXINGTON, Louis Armonstrong was urged by CORE pickets last Friday to "blow the trumpet for desegregation" in connection with his appearance at segregated Phoenix Hotel.

The band leader expressed strong support for the interracial CORE demonstration and indicated that if he were not bound by contract he would not have appeared at the hotel.

Outside the hotel, members picketed for four hours in intermittent rains. Others staged sit - ins in the hotel coffee shop where colored members of the Boston Celtics had been turned away recently.

IN COLUMBIA, the South Carolina Court upheld trespass convictions of 24 youths arrested in sit-in demonstrations at a Charleston variety store on April 1, 1960, but reversed their conviction of interferring with a policeman in the performance of his duties.

The opinion upholding the trespass convictions stated that it is a "well-established" rule that a private restaurant operator "has the right to select the clientele he will serve and to make such selection based on color or race if he so desires."

But in connection with the arrest on the other charge, the court held that "It appears to us that the conduct of the appellants... did not constitute interference with said officer in the discharge of his official duty."

AT THE REQUEST of the Greyhound Bus Co., the U.S. has filed suit in U.S. District Court seeking an injunction against the City of Birmingham to prevent it from interferring with the operation of a bus terminal restaurant.

Bus company officials called on the U.S. for help when city officials asked the bus company to show cause why its restaurant license should not be revoked for violating local segregation laws.

The company desegregated its terminal cafe facilities in compliance with the recent Interstate Commerce Commission ruling.

ANDREW PHILLIPS and John L. Gibson of Atlanta last week lost their bid to get an injunction forbidding the Fulton County courthouse cafeteria to discriminate on the basis of color.

Judge Lewis R. Morgan dismissed the suit on the ground the cafeteria on Dec. 1 was given permission to serve only employees of the courthouse and its annex.

Employees of the courthouse and annex are served on an integrated basis.

ALSO IN Atlanta, Stouffer's Restaurant on Peachtree St. reportedly served five colored patrons last week for the first time. Some three of the diners, however, were African students on a tour of the nation under auspices of the State Department.

In High Point, N.C., a local supermarket chain promoted a colored employee to cashier when faced with a NAACP-sponsored boycott.

The association threatened the boycott to back up demands that the A. and P. hire colored in other than menial capacities.

MEANWHILE, in Rockville Centre, N.Y., the NAACP had picket lines in three Long Island communities last week in protest of discrimination in urban renewal programs.

Association officials charged that apartment and homes torn down in the area were being replaced with middle - income apartments—too expensive for the displaced families.

And in Shreveport, La., Justice Department officials have filed suit to remove segregation signs in Trailways terminal in Ruston, La.

The suit is almost identical to suits filed earlier relating to terminals in Baton Rouge, Monroe and Alexandria, La.

New York, N.Y.

ONE of the leading protagonists of the Freedom Riders' campaign for equality is a soft-spoken, tall and scholarly Negro who was born in Marshall, Tex., Jan. 12, 1920, the son of a scholar and the grandson of a slave.

He is James Leonard Farmer, national director of the Congress of Racial Equality, one of the groups behind the campain against segregation in the Southern states.

Man in the News

Mr. Farmer says that his "first awareness" of segregation came when as a small boy, living in Holly Springs, Miss., he was walking with his mother.

"We passed a drug store and I said I was thirsty. Mother said, 'you'll have to wait until you get home. That place is for white folks'. I didn't know until then that I was colored."

A Sheltered Life

"I lived a sheltered life because my father was a minister and a college professor—the first Negro Ph. D. in Texas—and we lived on segregated campuses," he recalls. Inaccessible drugstore counters, sweltering balconies in movie houses, rear seats in public conveyances and a thousand large and small experiences of racial apartness have run like a ragged thread through his life.

Some rebuffs were blunt and some were subtle during a period of ten years in Mississippi, three in Georgia, three in Washington, D. C., one in Chicago and the remainder of his forty-one in New York.

At one time he through of entering the ministry, but, his studies completed, he was unable to reconcile the division of the Methodist Church into its North and South branches at the time. They have since united.

In 1941, he had begun to read extensively of Ganhi's passive resistance movement and non-violent techniques in India. A year later he says he says, evolved a program of Negro resistance to segregation based on the Gandhi principles.

When he first advocated non-violence, other Negros asked:

"You aren't going to fight back?"

Mr. Farmer replied:

"We are fighting back; we are only using new weapons."

The New York Times
"We are fighting back"

But should non-violence fail—and Mr. Farmer does not believe it will—he prefers violence to acquissence to discrimination, he has said.

Called a 'Front Man'

Opponents of Mr. Farmer within Negro circles have charged that he is more of a "front man" than a true leader of the C. O. R. E. movement. But Marvin Rich, in charge of C. O. R. E.'s community relations, says that Mr. Farmer is the true leader of the organization.

Nevertheless the foremost advocate of non-violence as a means of fighting segregation is generally recognized to be the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King.

In 1946, Mr. Farmer was divorced from his first wife, a Negro. In 1949 he married a white woman from Chicago. They have a 2-year-old daughter.

"My daughter, Tami, is not conscious or her color yet," he says.

He once served as program director for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. He was, until recently, an international representative of the State, County and Municipal Employees Union.

He lives in Greenwich Village.

Birmingham, Ala. — Several white and Negro members participating in the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) two-week old "Freedom Ride" through the deep South, were beaten this week by white mobs in North Carolina and Alabama.

The freedom riders, however, decided to abandon their integration attempt after were unable to secure bus service to Montgomery. A Alabama patrol car was scheduled to follow the bus to the Alabama capitol.

Governor John Patterson said he would escort the freedom riders to the nearest state line but not to any other cities in Alabama to "continue their rabbler rousing.

P-1

The CORE members boarded a plane for New Orleans Monday night where they held a press conference Tuesday. Spokesmen for the group said the trip was successful because it proved that citizen could not enjoy the privileges of interstate travel despite U. S. Supreme Court rulings.

A regular scheduled Greyhound Bus carrying the freedom riders, was burned and stoned outside Anniston, Ala., by a group of white men. Ten persons were taken to a local hospital suffering mostly from smoke inhalation and slight burns.

Two days earlier, the riders were beaten by white hoodlums in the Rock Hill, N. C., Greyhound Bus Terminal when they sought to use the "white only" waiting room.

The freedom riders arriving in Birmingham from Atlanta were attacked in a Trailways Bus Station and severly beaten before police arrived. One Negro and a white man, who was accompanying him, were targets of the attack.

New Yorker Beaten

A Negro identified as James Peck, 46, of New York City, was treated at a Birmingham hospital for severe cuts inflicted by white men using iron pipes for clubs during the bus station beating. He was later released.

A total of 13 persons, white and Negro, were reported to be taken to the hospital in the two Alabama incidents. No arrests were made by police in either case.

Reports said that police arrived 10 minutes after the Negroes and white freedom riders were beaten in Birmingham. State highway patrolmen dispersed the mob near Anniston.

Freedom Riders, organized into two groups of eight white and eight Negroes, left Washington, D. C., to ride regularly scheduled buses to test racial segregation in the South. All were members of CORE.

The group leaving North Carolina, spent a day in Atlanta before boarding two different buses for Birmingham.

When the first bus arrived at the station at Anniston, they were greeted by an angry mob of 200 white persons. The bus headed for Birmingham but stopped ot repair a flat tire six miles outside of Anniston. The riders said the bus tires had been cut.

The mob of white men, who had followed the bus in cars, tried to board the bus but were prevented by Eli Cowling, a state investigator who had boarded the bus in Atlanta. Moments later the fire bomb, contained in a pop bottle, was thrown through a window of the bus.

Kentuckian With Group

When the second bus reached Birmingham a second mob of white men waited. The freedom riders, led by Peck and his white companion, walked into the white waiting room after being warned by a white man blocking their entrance.

The man asked, "Where do you think you're going? — you don't know where you are." When Peck attempted to walk through a group of white men, he was struck to the floor. He and his white companion were struck several times before they staggered from the station bloodied and beaten.

Joseph Perkins, a CORE field secretary and native resident of Owensboro, Ky., was a member of the party at Anniston. Perkins, who has conducted several non-violent workshops here, was acquitted two days earlier of tresspassing charges in Charlotte (N. C.) in connection with the freedom ride.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — Negro and white members of CORE'S Freedom Ride—pledged to nonviolent resistence—told recently how Alabama police stood by while mobs of white men attacked them with clubs and burned their bus.

Their hands and faces still showing the traces of smoke from a bomb hurled through one of the bus's shattered windows, they nursed their wounded in Birmingham and planned their next step—the trip to Montgomery.

As the bus riders gave their accounts of violence on the highway, the FBI opened an investigation of the bus burning and CORE national director James Farmer, talked with officials of the Department of Justice. Atty. Gen. Kennedy promised protection.

The CORE Freedom Riders are testing segregation on a bus trip from Washington, D. C. to New Orleans. Only minor difficulties had been experienced by the group before it reached Alabama.

Louisville, Ky

"The trouble started when we got to Anniston, about 60 miles from Birmingham," artist Albert Bigelow, 55, of Cos Cob, Conn., who was on the first bus to leave. "At the outskirts of town a plainclothesman got on the bus and told us there was a crowd waiting in Anniston. He talked to the bus driver and we thought they'd go right on through town. But when we reached the bus station, the bus stopped," said Bigelow.

"A mob of hoodlums was waiting there for us. They had stones and clubs and lead pipes and they were screaming and yelling and trying to cave in the windows. One of them apparently slashed the left front tire.

A Sudden Following

"After a few minutes," he continued, "the bus pulled out. Suddenly, we had picked up a cavalcade of cars. There were two in front, dodging to keep us from passing and about 40 behind. When that tire finally went and the driver had to stop at a filling station, the cars pulled up and these men piled out.

"The plainclothesman tried to block the front door, but the mob surrounded the bus. They smashed more windows and tried to get in at us. For ten minutes there were no police. Then a state trooper chewing a big cigar came up.

"While the trooper was talking to the driver, the bomb came through the rear window. It was incredible. The bus was filled with black, terrible smoke and outside these hoodlums were shouting 'Heil Hitler' and 'Seig Heil.'

"We were in a terrible predicament. We had either to stay in the bus choking with the smoke—or go out and face the mob. Then we noticed the head and we realized the bus was on fire and we had no choice."

4 Exit Through Window

Four members of the small CORE group left through the smashed rear window. The others piled out the front with three other passengers.

"By this time," said Bigelow, "a few more troopers came. There were three, altogether.

The mob backed away and ambulances came and took us to the hospital." They were treated for smoke inhalations and released. A motorcade of local Negroes took them to Birmingham

The second bus, which carried the other small group of "Freedom Riders," left Atlanta shortly after noon and it, too, ran into trouble at Anniston—this time from other passengers.

"Seven hoodlums boarded the bus just before Anniston," Mrs. Bergman, wife of a retired University of Michigan professor said. "They just sat there while my husband went out and got coffee and sandwiches," she said.

"When he came back, the bus driver told us:

" 'Now, we don't want any trouble. The last bus that went through here got burned. You niggers get to the back.' " No one moved.

'Fists Hit Flesh'

"Then," said Mrs. Bergman, "these hoodlums got up and started going after one of the Negro students, Charles Person of Morehouse and my husband. Jim Peck went up to try and block the blows. Then they turned on all the Negroes and my husband and Peck. One had an empty coke bottle. They beat them and kicked them and stomped them.

"I was standing there agonizing. All I could hear was the sounds of fists hitting flesh. After they beat all the Negroes, they grabbed them and threw them on top of my husband who was on his face on the floor in the aisle between the seats.

"A policeman who was standing outside the bus came in then and when we asked him to do something, he just said: 'I don't see anything. If I don't see anything, I can't do anything.'

More Violence

Near collapse, the "Freedom Riders," who have been testing integrated facilities in bus stations, slumped in their seats and the bus moved on to Birmingham.

Knots of angry whites were clustered around the Birmingham station to greet the "Freedom Riders," but no police appeared.

The authorities, in fact, did not show up until Peck, who lives at 552 Riverside Drive in New York, and the Negroes were badly beaten by whites. Roving gangs of whites followed the Negroes through the station. One grabbed a young Negro and as the whites shouted "Hit him," slammed his fist into the Negro's face.

Bleeding, the Negro fell to the ground. As he struggled to get up, the white man hit him again, knocking him into the arms of the whites who hoisted up the Negro for more punishment.

Two Attacked By Angry Mob Here

Two elderly men were among four reported innocent by-standers who were beaten and kicked allegedly by the angry mob of white men who attacked the CORE "Freedom Riders" at the Trailways Bus Station, around 3:30 p. m., May 14, police said.

One of the elderly victims, Jimmy Ayers, 70, of 1514 North 8th Avenue, was reported admitted to University Hospital, police said.

Police identified the other victims of mob-attack as George Webb, 30, of 614 Southwest Center Street; Henry Hines, 51, of 842 Short 16th Street; and James Daniel, 66, of 416 South Gamma St.

Investigators quoted Webb as saying that he was at the bus station awaiting the arrival of his girl-friend when four white men struck him with a club and kicked him in his head, jaw and shoulder.

Hines told police that he was beaten with fists by the four attackers.

Ayers was quoted as saying he, Hines and Daniel were standing on North 7th Avenue and 18th Street, when four white men drove up in a car, got out and started beating them with fists, police said.

FREEDOM RIDES

C O R E - SPENDS $282,000 ON FREEDOM RIDES

Freedom Is Costly

It costs money — real money — to win freedom. But how costly it is staggers the imagination. CORE (Congress of Racial Equality) announced this week that already it has spent more than $282,000 on the Freedom Rides. This sum includes the cost of bail bonds, legal fees, legal expenses, travel for Freedom Riders to stand trial, training for the Riders, hospital bills, telephone calls, telegrams and printing.

This amount does not include overhead, office expenses or fund-raising costs. Nor does it include salaries for CORE workers. This $282,000 was spent directly on the Freedom Rides. Jhe Cuel Ans 11-17-61

With expenses mounting up in this fashion, it is no wonder that CORE's national director, James Farmer, this week had words of praise for Jack Greenberg, new director of the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, for assuming the legal burden of defending the Freedom Riders in court.

In announcing that they will share the financial burden of defending the Freedom Riders in court, CORE and the NAACP demonstrate a unity of determination and purpose to see that justice is done. It is ironic, however, that in a land which professes democracy and justice for all, it is necessary for a group of citizens to spend over a quarter million dollars to fight for the freedom which should be theirs as a matter of course. If the NAACP ever totaled up the cost of all of the cases it has taken to the United States Supreme Court, the amount truly would be a staggering revelation. Kansas City Mo P. 21

We are glad to see the NAACP join CORE in the legal defense of the Freedom Riders. The young people who risked their liberty and safety for a principle deserve all of the legal help they can get.

The Freedom Riders and the sit-in demonstrators who proceeded them have performed a great service to American democracy. Many doors, lunch counters and bus terminal waiting rooms have been opened as a result of their efforts which may have remained closed for many more months, perhaps years, had they not staged their dramatic protests.

Freedom is costly, but it is worth every cent and every dollar that must be spent to bring America's practices in line with her principles.

Both CORE and the NAACP will welcome contributions at this time.

-ore Spends $282,000 On Freedom Rides

Jhe Cuel. Ans. 11-17-61 P. 1

NEW YORK CITY. — (NNPA) — The Congress of Racial Equality reported Monday that it had spent over $282,000 on the direct costs of the Freedom Riders. Kansas City Mo

At the same time CORE National Director James Farmer lauded Jack Greenberg, director of the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, for assuming much of the future legal burden of defending the Freedom Riders.

"This unity of action should help make clear to Mississippi segregationists that a new day has come," said Farmer. "We in CORE can now concentrate on our direct action program and leave much of the legal defense to the NAACP which has unmatched skill in this field."

Farmer pointed out that CORE will continue to maintain a responsibility and an interest in the Jackson cases. At the request of the Episcopal ministers, CORE will continue to defend these 15 cases directly.

Of the others arrested in Jackson, 85 have been finally adjudicated either through serving of the complete sentence, death, or payment of fine. In 32 cases appeals have been taken from the decision of the Hinds County Court. One hundred seventy-seven cases have not yet reached this court. Jhe Cuel

CORE will continue to assume the transportation costs of bringing the Riders to and from Jackson for their trials. CORE will share responsibility for bail bond with the Legal Defense Fund. An additional $177,000 is still needed for this purpose. Ans 11-17-61

Farmer pointed out that the Freedom Rides have already cost over $282,000. Core will continue to be solely responsible for Freedom Ride cases in Shreveport, La.; Ocala and Tallahassee, Fla., and Houston, Texas. Future Freedom Ride cases in Jackson and elsewhere will also be CORE responsibilities.

FREEDOM RIDERS - PLAN

FREEDOM RIDE

Southern Group Plans Freedom Ride to North

Evening Star 8-17-61
Hours 8-17-61

ATLANTA, Aug. 12 (AP).—The leader of an Episcopal desegregation group has announced plans for a "South-to-North Freedom Ride" next month.

The Rev. John Morris, executive director of the Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity, said last night the Freedom Ride, called a prayer pilgrimage, would include 30 to 35 Episcopal clergymen—both white and Negro.

He said the group will leave New Orleans September 12 en route to the general convention of the Episcopal Church in Detroit.

Washington D.C

The clergymen will visit Episcopal schools and colleges to see what is being done about desegregation, Mr. Morris said, as well as investigating integration of public facilities along the way.

Stops will be made, he said, in Vicksburg and Jackson, Miss.; Birmingham, Ala.; Sewanee, Tenn.; Versailles, Ky., and Cincinnati.

"We anticipate the possibility of some delay," he said, "in Jackson, Miss."

Meanwhile, Mr. Morris charged that the University of the South at Sewanee, while it announced that students would be accepted without regard to race, actually is discriminating against Negro students in certain university facilities.

Specifically, he said, two Negro students in Sewanee's graduate school of theology were denied service early this week at Sewanee Inn and Claramont Restaurant, which the Atlanta minister said are "university-owned facilities."

At Sewanee, Dr. Edward McGrady, vice chancellor of the university, was quick to challenge the statement by the ESCRU director.

"The Sewanee Inn and Claramont Restaurant," he said, "are not university facilities. The property is owned by the university, but is operated under lease by a private contractor, Mrs. Clara Shoemate.

"The university's contract with Mrs. Shoemate does not give us any right to determine who will be served or who will be denied service.

"I can assure Mr. Morris that if his group visits Sewanee, we will serve them, if they desire, in university dining halls and other university-owned and operated facilities, without regard to the racial make-up of the visiting delegation."

The board of regents of the university, which is supported by 21 Episcopal dioceses in the South, last June announced that Sewanee would accept all qualified students without regard to race.

At Atlanta yesterday a Federal judge continued until August 30 a hearing on a court order restraining the Georgia State Board of Education from allowing a white Atlanta girl, Sandra Melkild, to transfer from a desegregated school to a segregated one.

United States District Judge Frank Hooper had earlier scheduled the hearing for tomorrow. The new date is the day the city schools open. The State, which is preparing an all-out fight to sustain the State board's ruling, asked for the continuance.

At Montgomery, Ala., a county Court of Common Pleas trial of 10 Freedom Riders was postponed after prosecution and defense attorneys conferred in a Federal judge's office.

Originally scheduled for August 28, the trial was postponed until September 15. A hearing on a Federal suit in which the defendants ask an injunction against the trial is slated for September 5.

At Jackson, Miss., a Federal judge took under advisement a suit by James H. Meredith, 28-year-old Negro seeking to enter the University of Mississippi. Federal District Judge Sidney Mize said he will rule on the motion after written briefs are filed September 5.

Judge Mize said he doubted Mr. Meredith could attend the university in September, regardless of his ruling, because it probably would be appealed to a higher court.

Negro integration leader Martin Luther King, jr., announced at Miami Beach, Fla. an intensive campaign to double Negro voter registration in the South.

Dr. King told a news conference that before long thousands will stage "stand-ins" at places where Negroes have not been permitted to register.

Murrow Cites Reaction

Edward R. Murrow said yesterday that the violence against Freedom Riders in Alabama had had "a harmful effect" on the American image abroad.

In testimony prepared for a hearing of the House Committee on Education and Labor at the Federal Building in Foley Square, Mr. Murrow, director of the United States Information Agency, said:

"This agency's job of counteracting the detrimental effects of civil rights violations is not easy. We cannot make good news out of bad practice."

Mr. Murrow did not appear before the committee. His report was outlined by Adam Clayton Powell Jr. of Manhattan, the committee chairman. Mr. Powell took special pains to read the following section of a covering letter from Mr. Murrow:

"I think it would be a mistake to base our action against discrimination mainly on the ground that our image abroad is being hurt. We should attack this problem because it is right that we do so. To do otherwise, whatever the overseas reaction might be, would violate the very essence of what our country stands for."

In his report, the first survey of world-wide reactions to segregation and discrimination since the Freedom Riders began, Mr. Murrow said headlines and news stories in the press abroad had "presented a stark picture of the Alabama incidents."

He pointed out that while there had been an effort by "most free world reporters to include some balance in their stories and to give the Federal Government full credit for its prompt intervention," the attempt had not been successful.

Journalists Outweighed

"Despite the mitigating condition, notably the Government's unequivocal reaction," Mr. Murrow's report continued, "the generally critical tenor of comment and the impressions reported by our field officers, indicate that the reactions of peoples to the news reports themselves were so sharp as to outweigh the attempts of serious and well informed journalists to put the events in perspective."

Even so, Mr. Murrow went on, the agency felt that its work "and our country's exchange programs with all parts of the world have resulted in a more perceptive reaction to the deplorable recent episodes than was true a few years ago—say at the time when Little Rock was in the headlines."

The report contained excerpts from news articles in papers in various parts of the world. Mr. Murrow described the African press and radio comment as mixed. In the Far East, he said, despite restrained comments in the press, "the recent racial incidents have damaged America's reputation as a defender of individual rights and have provided America's detractors with the obvious usable material."

'Strongly Negative'

In the Near East and South Asia, Mr. Murrow said, "the net impact generally has been assessed as strongly negative in character."

Western European coverage was described as "predominantly negative," running "the scale from immediate horror and disgust to longer-range concern that American world policy was being seriously compromised."

Editorial comment in Latin America "strongly condemned the action of Southern segregationists," Mr. Murrow said. "The Left-Wing, pro-Communist press has used the issue to attack the Kennedy Administration."

Finally, reporting on the Soviet Union and Communist China, Mr. Murrow said that after "initial low-volume reaction, Soviet propaganda exploitation of the Alabama incidents and Mississippi jailings was stepped up considerably."

In Communist China, he said "Peking writers bore down hard on the theme that rampant racism has 'exposed' the savage nature of American freedom and democracy."

NEGROES FOUGHT RACISM IN NORTH

'Freedom Rides' Produced Pre-Civil War Riots

North American Newspaper Alliance

The following article is by Leon F. Litwack, Assistant Professor of History at the University of Wisconsin, who is one of the country's foremost experts in the field of discrimination against the Negro in the North. His book, "North of Slavery," has just been published by the University of Chicago Press.

MADISON, Wis., June 24—More than 100 years ago, Negro and white "freedom riders" challenged racial segregation on public transportation facilities in the North.

Employing the weapons of nonviolent resistance and agitation, they pleaded their case for equal rights before a generally hostile or indifferent public.

Although finally victorious, these early "freedom riders" had to wage a long and often bitter struggle, marked by occasional violence, before the proprietors of Northern railroads, omnibuses and street cars reluctantly agreed to give up segregation practices.

Racial prejudice sharply proscribed the position of the Negro in the pre-Civil War North, as Southerners repeatedly pointed out. While statutes curtailed the Negro's political rights, disfranchising him in most of the North, public sentiment and custom confined him largely to menial employment and either excluded him from theatres, hotels, restaurants, resorts, churches, schools, cemeteries and public conveyances, or assigned him to separate and usually inferior sections.

Had to Keep His 'Place'

This was the Negro's "place" in Northern society, and he was expected to keep it. Race riots in New York, Philadelphia and Cincinnati made this abundantly clear.

When railroads first came into public use, segregation precedents already established on steamboats and stage coaches dictated separate accommodations for Negroes. One New England railroad official recalled "scenes of riot and violence" before his company finally decided to provide special cars for Negroes.

These separate accommodations also existed in city transportation, especially in the larger centers of Negro population.

Protesting the inferiority of segregated facilities and the stigma of separateness, the Northern Negro, together with sympathetic whites, sought to break down existing racial barriers. Unlike his Southern brethren, he could at least organize and peacefully protest his condition through public meetings, newspapers, petitions and demonstrations. And this he proceeded to do.

Constant Pressure Needed

Experience soon taught him that only constant pressure for immediate change, rather than a resigned trust in gradualism, would produce results. Rejecting violent measures, the Northern Negro placed his faith in the power of passive resistance agitation and political action.

Recognizing that their newspapers and petitions reached a limtied audience, Massachusetts Negroes resolved to strike more directly and dramatically at segregation by deliberately violating company rules and taking seats in the coaches reserved for whites.

In the Eighteen Forties Northern newspapers reported numerous cases, most of them in New England, where Negroes had to be dragged from the exclusive cars into the "Jim Crow" coaches or off the trains altogether.

On one occasion a Massachusetts Negro woman, carrying an infant in her arms, was dragged from a train for violating segregation rules and was thrown to the ground, while her husband was severely beaten for coming to her assistance.

Triumph in Massachusetts

Failing to achieve favorable court action, Massachusetts Negroes and white abolitionists urged a boycott of discriminatory railroad lines and turned to the State Legislature for relief. After investigating the matter, a joint legislative committee recommended in 1842 a bill that would prohibit any discrimination in accommodations because of descent, sect or color.

Although the proposed bill never passed, the relentless agitation of Negroes and white abolitionists, combined with the threat of legislation, finally prompted Massachusetts railroads to abandon segregation. It was a significant triumph, considering the extent of racial prejudice in the Forties and it had been won largely through direct and nonviolent resistance.

Meanwhile, New York Negroes, tired of being harassed on street cars and omnibuses, organized a Legal Rights Association and deliberately violated company segregation rules. In 1854, they scored a momentary victory. Forcibly removed from a street car, a Negro school teacher sued for damages and, with the legal assistance of Chester A. Arthur, later a President of the United States, won the case.

By the end of the Civil War, racial distinctions in Northern transportation facilities had been virtually eliminated.

Freedom Riders, Dixie Antagonists Get Ready for More Head-On Clashes

By Associated Negro Press

Both sides of the "Freedom Rider" impasse are girding themselves for further head-on battles over the issue of integrating or keeping segregated travel facilities throughout the deep South.

In Alabama, a house committee rushed approval of a bill to make it a misdemeanor for "freedom riders" to enter the state after publicly announcing their intentions. The measure provides a $300 fine or six months in jail.

Calls Riders "Communist-Inspired"

In Mississippi, a smear campaign has been launched to discredit the "freedom riders." Under the aegis of T. B. Birdsong, state commissioner of public safety, the highway patrol has been collecting evidence which purports to prove that the freedom riders are sponsored and being supported by the Communists. Specifically, the evidence singles out the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) is a Communist front group.

Simultaneously, Birdsong disclosed that old Mississippi Bureau of Investigation, which functioned briefly during a bus driver strike in 947-48, was to be revived. Though he indicated the statute covering the MBI was not being used, he said, "had it been continued, we would have had the benefit of its investigations throughout the ensuing years, instead of the responsibility of accumulating this material now."

Riders "In Good Spirits"

On the other side of the fence, the "freedom riders" were reported to be "still in good spirits" and the campaign, which started last May 24, "is just beginning." This observation came from James Farmer, 41, national director of CORE, during a press interview in which he charged that Mississippi prison officials are inflicting "psychological cruelty" upon the jailed freedom riders.

"My three weeks at the penitentiary tried my faith in human nature," he said upon his release on bond. He said officials sought to turn the "freedom riders into animals, and that the riders were allowed fewer privileges than murderers.

Slept On Hard, Cold Floors

He and other riders were forced to sleep for three nights in their underwear "on hard, cold steel floods" with fans "going full blast to freeze us out."

Then, he said, "the fans were turned completely off for three days, making the heat unbearable and the stench stifling. It was difficult to breathe."

Farmer said the action was taken because they sang.

Evidence of the determination to continue the fight for integration was displayed at a three-hour strategy session by leaders of the "freedom riders," movement, in deciding unanimously to "continue to exert moral pressure" against segregation.

The leaders attending the meeting were Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., president, Southern Christian Leadership conference (SCLC), Atlanta; Gordon Carey, field officer for CORE; Miss Diane Nash, Nashville Christian Leadership council; and Charles Sherrod, field secretary, Student Non-Violent Coordinating committee.

Though the arrest total for the 43 day assault upon segregated facilities in Jackson climed to a total of 173, freedom riders continue to storm the city's bastions. The second group of riders from the San Francisco Day area are preparing for their day of protest in Jackson. The group, composed of religious leaders, is headed by Drs. Cecil Thomas and Charles S. McCoy, co-chairmen of the Bay Area Interfaith committee.

Plan "Prayer Pilgrimage"

In the East, 37 Negro and white Episcopalian clergymen are laying plans for a "prayer pilgrimage" across the entire south, beginning Sept. 12. The trip, sponsored by the Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity, will take the group to terminal restaurants along the route and from New Orleans north to Detroit. It will end on Sept. 17 in Detroit, where the group will be on hand forthe open of the Episcopal church's general conference.

One invasion is planned by CORE for a northern community, that of Dearborn, a suburb of Detroit. The Ann Arbor chapter of CORE announced that it wants to investigate "segregated public facilities" in this white-only community of 112,000. No date has been set for the visit but Dearborn's mayor, Orville L. Hubbard, has extended an invitation to tea to what he calls "the freedom clowns" when they do arrive.

Bob Kennedy Questions Value of Freedom Rides

NEW YORK (UPI)—Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy said Wednesday he did not believe continued freedom rides into the heart of the South make "a great deal of sense" in advancing the cause of desegregation.

The President's younger brother told a news conference here he would like to see desegregation "settled in the courts, not in the streets."

"I think they (the "freedom riders") have a legal right to make these trips," he stressed. But he added:

"I don't think at present it makes a great deal of sense as far as advancing their own purposes."

It was on Kennedy's orders that U.S. marshals were dispatched to Alabama to protect 'freedom riders' from a series of mob attacks, and the attorney general said Wednesday the Justice department would continue its insistence that the riders have the right to travel by bus and plane without being subjected to violence.

He noted that the issue of desegregated travel was now before the courts and the Interstate Commerce Commission and added, "I hope and expect that in the near future the ICC will take action to end discrimination in interstate buses."

He said the ICC order was expected within the next few months. It could be adverse, he said, in which case the situation would have to be reviewed.

In a related case, Lewis earlier granted Negroes a move to broaden their case to include the question of the constitutionality of the grants and of the state law under which the schools were closed.

Lewis denied a move by the state to dismiss the Negroes' broadened suit. He said, "The paramount question raised . . . is whether or not the defendants . . . are deliberately circumventing or attempting to circumvent or frustrate the order of this court. On that question the plaintiffs are entitled to be heard."

He granted the defendants two days to file answers to the broadened suit and fixed July 24 for a hearing on the merits of the case. If any of the parties ask for a pretrial hearing, he set one for July 10.

Attorney General Kennedy, in his move to intervene, had asked the court to prohibit Virginia from expending funds to maintain free public schools elsewhere in the state so long as those in Prince Edward remained closed.

Lewis noted that although Asst. Atty. Gen. St. John Barrett had argued it was not the intent of the government to force the closing of the public schools in Virginia, Barrett had refused to delete this from his intervention plea, saying "he did not have the authority to do so."

"Therefore this court can only conclude," Lewis said, "if the government be permitted to intervene as a party plaintiff, it would urge this court to enter an order that would jeopardize the education of several hundred thousand Virginia children who have no re-

Freedom Rider groups put segregated facilities to a test in two South Carolina cities yesterday and received widely varying receptions.

However, another group of seven riders who arrived in Charleston shortly after noon had lunch without incident at the downtown bus terminal. They left in the company of an NAACP official.

Meanwhile, a lone Freedom Rider who split off from an earlier group was arrested at Jackson, Miss., Wednesday. Daniel Ray Thompson, 26, a white man from Cleveland, Ohio, was taken into custody for refusing to leave a Negro waiting room in a bus station.

Like the 110 riders who preceded him to Jackson, Thompson was charged with breach of the peace.

111th Rider Arrives In Jackson Jail

JACKSON, Miss., June 14.—(UPI)—Protest rider No. 111 arrived here Wednesday.

Daniel Ray Thompson, like the 110 riders who preceded him, was arrested on a breach of the peace charge.

Thompson, 26, a white man from Cleveland, Ohio, was taken into custody after refusing orders to leave the Greyhound bus station's Negro waiting room.

Thompson left Nashville, with six other riders who were jailed here Saturday but he separated from the others in Memphis.

81 Remain In Jail

Eighty-one of the riders, who began pouring into Jackson three weeks ago, are remaining in jail rather than posting bonds or paying fines.

However, they are expected to be transferred to the State Penitentiary this week, possibly Thursday. Hinds County Sheriff J. R. Gilfoy had a breakfast meeting Wednesday morning with Gov. Ross Barnett and other officials to discuss the transfer.

South Carolina Greeting Is Cool But Orderly

CHARLESTON, S. C., June 14.—(AP)—The first of three bus-riding groups of protest riders received a cool but orderly reception in South Carolina Wednesday.

They were the vanguard of 32 white and Negro riders testing segregated facilities at interstate bus stations in the Deep South en route to Florida.

Seven members of the party from Washington were greeted at a lunch counter in the Charleston bus terminal by an elderly white woman carrying a cane. She shook hands with a white minister and a Negro minister in the group.

Uniformed and plainclothes policemen were on hand as the Greyhound bus rolled in.

It was an uneventful day for the group, which left Wilmington, N. C., after spending the night in a Negro hotel. As the bus drove southward, the number of white onlookers at bus terminals grew larger. Brief uneventful stops were made at Myrtle Beach, Georgetown, and other coastal cities.

The sum of $5,500 was turned over to Dr. King by Dr. O. K. Maxwell, president of the National Sunday School and BTU Congress. The money was raised by the congress at a special civil rights night held during its recent convention in St. Louis, Mo.

The Empire State Baptist Convention, Dr. Sandy F. Ray, president, gave SCLC $18,000, the Rev. Wyatt T. Walker, executive secretary, announced.

Dr. King said the gifts "Reflect a sincere concern... for the Freedom Struggle in the South."

Dr. Ray and the Rev. George Lawrence of Brooklyn observed: "Dr. King and the Revs. Ralph D. Abernathy and Walker, as well as others, are working down there (in the South) in the front line trenches. The least we can do is give them our moral and financial support."

Each group was given an hour on stand, a fact which enabled all to produce an outstanding effort.

* * *

IT WAS A commendable step there by May and Gus Sperber, who presented this concert as a benefit for the Freedom Riders Fund of the Congress of Racial Equality, and who have scheduled two more next month.

In an hour, a jazz group can accomplish quite a bit.

Armstrong was, of course, uniquely and predictably Mr. Armstrong, playing the program that has become standard for his group over the last ten years.

ADDERLEY'S quintet managed to refute very effectively the notion that it is doggedly attached to "soul jazz."

Cannonball on alto saxophone and his brother Nat on cornet led the group through some merrily jaunty pieces and a selection featuring Sam Jones, the group's bassist, playing pizzicato 'cello in very swinging fashion.

There was not even a suggestion of the heavy repetitious gospel chords that are at the heart of "soul jazz."

MULLIGAN'S thirteen-piece band, now just a year old, has become remarkably light on its musical feet.

JULIAN (CANNONBALL) ADDERLEY

The keynote to its playing is the light, almost pussyfooting, attack that Mulligan occasionally uses on his baritone saxophone.

Its repertoire has changed relatively little since its early days, but the band now handles is material with a deftness that its quite unusual in so large a group.

FREEDOM RIDERS
FORMER PRESIDENT TRUMAN

Truman 'spanked' for 'nonsense' on Freedom Riders

BY EDWARD PEEKS
WASHINGTON

Carl T. Rowan, deputy assistant Secretary of State for public affairs, took former President Truman to the woodshed for his recent attack on Freedom Riders.

Mr. Rowan put the ex-President in a category termed "nonsense" in a tough speech Saturday before the Catholic Interracial Council of Washington.

Freedom Riders will do more to change the image of America around the world for the good of all, he said, "than all the speeches and communiques that we can pour out of the State Department and the U.S. Information Agency."

* * *

HE TOLD the luncheon meeting at the Burlington Hotel:

"I might say here that there is nothing complicated about how to stop Freedom Rides. Give freedom and you destroy the reason to ride."

He described two elements of "softness" representing hostility to riders testing decisions by the Supreme Court and Interstate Commerce Commission, but said of another element involving Mr. Truman:

"The third bit of nonsense — and extremely dangerous nonsense it is—finds as its chief purveyor none other than former President Truman.

"In his usually brash tones, he has referred to those ministers, students and others who are challenging racial segregation in airports and railway stations as 'meddlers.'

"Let me make it clear that I have the highest regard for Mr. Truman's actions as President. I think that on many occasions he showed great courage, and not infrequently in the field of civil rights.

"So I am doubly saddened that he, most of all, should help to create the impression that bigotry and racial injustice in Jackson, Miss., is not the business of a citizen of Washington or New York or Minneapolis."

* * *

MR. ROWAN quoted his own boss, Secretary of State Rusk, and President Kennedy to the effect that segregation hurts this country's relations with the rest of the world.

His speech, however, stands out as the most pointed ever delivered by a member of the Kennedy Administration on the question of Freedom Riders.

ST. LOUIS — Dr. Mordecai W. Johnson, president emeritus of Howard University, sided with Dr. Martin Luther King in support of Freedom Riders in a speech here last week before the National Sunday School and Baptist Training Union Congress.

Earlier Dr. King and Chicago's Dr. J. H. Jackson, a claimant to the presidency of the National Baptist Convention, USA, Inc., had clashed over the Freedom Rides.

Jackson approved the motives behind the Freedom Rides, but said he did not favor violating laws in an effort to secure rights. King, on the other hand, said "we have no moral obligation to obey an unjust law."

* * *

DR. JOHNSON said Dr. King is "doing more than any man alive" to make white and colored churches realize their Christian responsibility.

The speaker said it was his "fervent hope" that there would be many more followers of the riders in the months to come.

Dr. Johnson added that if Abraham Lincoln were to visit the average meeting of the Republican Party he would hardly recongnize it as the party with which he was once affiliated. The speaker said the GOP "is as bad as the Democrats" in its forsaking of minority rights.

The speaker called for the unification of the "great -liberals" of both parties as a moving force to eradicate the evils of our democracy.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., (AP)—Randolph White, editor of the (Negro) Charlottesville Albemarle Tribune and a Negro himself, lashed out Friday in an editorial against the freedom riders.

White said "We are at a loss to understand what Negroes hope to gain by willfully committing acts to get thrown into the clink and then refusing to make or accept bail, or appeal their convictions, if they really think the laws they are violating are unconstitutional.

White, a conservative, also said, "The courts have been established to handle these problems and it would seem that all that is necessary is to institute a test case and solve the problem legally and without fanfare."

'American Image Damaged', Claims Information Chief

NEW YORK (UPI)—The United States Information Agency said today that world reaction to racial violence in Alabama was so sharp that it outweighed attempts by well-informed journalists to put the events into perspective.

The agency said the violence in Alabama and the jailings of "Freedom Riders" in Mississippi "have had a harmful effect" on the American image abroad.

The estimate of world reaction to the latest racial flare-ups in the United States was contained in a report submitted by USIA Director Edward R. Murrow to the House Education and Labor Committee at a hearing in New York.

TOUGH JOB

Murrow said the job of "counteracting the detrimental effects of civil rights violations is not easy."

"We cannot make good news out of bad practice," he said.

The USIA report said "assessed in terms of their impact on the American image abroad, the violence against the 'Freedom Riders' in Alabama, and to a lesser extent their jailing in Mississippi, have had a harmful effect."

It said the "worldwide headlines and news stories presented a stark picture" but the exchange programs and work by the agency "have resulted in a more perceptive reaction to the deplorable recent episodes than was true a few years ago—say at the time when Little Rock was in the headlines."

The agency said that despite some editorial comment applauding quick government action, "the reactions of peoples...were so sharp as to outweigh the attempts of serious and well informed foreign journalists to put the events in perspective."

It found that:

In Africa, there was full news coverage but "surprisingly light" editorial comment. Some editors praised the federal government's quick reaction while a few pointed up America's slowness in solving problems of discrimination.

'DAMAGED IMAGE'

In the Far East there was "restrained comment" but a finding that the racial incidents "have damaged America's image as a defender of individual rights."

In the Near East there was limited editorial comment but "sensational" news coverage.

Western European papers carried strong and "predominantly negative" coverage.

Latin American newspapers and radios had only moderate news coverage but editorial comment "strongly condemned the action of Southern segregationists."

The Soviet Union and Communist China launched broad propaganda programs with Peiping writers bearing down on the theme that "rampant racism" has exposed the savagery of American freedom.

Attorney General Claims Opposition To Local Venture

Montgomery Ala

ATLANTA (AP) — Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy said Monday night that he did not encourage "Freedom Riders" on a journey that was punctuated by riots in Montgomery.

On the contrary, he said, his representatives tried during the week preceding the Montgomery incident to persuade the riders not to make such trips.

Kennedy defended the administration's actions in sending federal marshals to Alabama in an interview with Ray Moore, news director for WSB-TV. The interview, taped in Washington, was broadcast Monday night.

In a discussion of school closings in Prince Edward County, Va., Kennedy was asked if he thought tuition grants made available to both white and Negro children were inadequate.

FIRST HE KNEW

"I don't think that's the proper way of handling it" he replied.

Discussing desegregation of Atlanta high schools in the fall, Kennedy was asked if he thought tuition grants are legal or constitutional. He said he would have to "get into the specifics or the particulars" to answer that question.

Kennedy said the first he knew of "Freedom Riders" taking rides was after receiving information on the bus burning in Anniston, Ala. President Kennedy, he said, tried to get in touch with Gov. John Patterson of Alabama "to get assurance that they would handle this themselves so that the federal government could stay out of it."

The attorney general said Patterson wouldn't talk to the President. Later Patterson sent word he wanted to talk to a representative of the President and John Siegenthaler of the attorney general's staff went to Montgomery.

GAVE ASSURANCES

Kennedy said Patterson assured Siegenthaler the state had the means, the will and the ability to protect the "Freedom Riders." The Alabama governor, he added, gave assurance that people traveling across the state would not be molested.

"Twelve hours later," Kennedy said, "Mr. Siegenthaler was lying on the ground in Montgomery unconscious, having been beaten by this mob. . .

"All of these things are just a small minority of the population giving the city, the area and the whole state a bad name.

"If you put it to a vote asking how many people would support the "Freedom Riders"—It would be a small number, but if you asked the question of how many want these people beaten up, a vast majority of people in Alabama and any other state would say that they are in favor of law and order."

Tuskegee President Speaks Well Of The "Freedom Riders"

The Informer & Texas Houston, Texas

BY RAY BOONE

TUSKEGEE, INSTITUTE —Tuskegee President L. H. Foster has supported the "Peace Corps" and "Freedom Riders," saying they are among groups which "accentuate the positive" in today's world drive "for human dignity."

Jul 29-61

Dr Foster said these two groups are adding "their constructive bit in behalf of the surge so clearly asserted for human dignity."

Speaking at a convocation for teachers attending summer school here, Dr Foster also said the future welfare of the nation depends on "our young people," despite their . "inadequate early school and community experiences."

"It is true that our young people are at a distressing disadvantage because of inadequate early school and community experiences," he said. Nevertheless he continued, this country's future welfare "depends crucially" upon how Negro youths meet "new responsibilities now being thrust upon them."

But responsibility is not with youth alone, he said. "We teachers have some duties, too. We are obligated to take more effective leadership in education .. for the job of facilitating intellectual growth is our strength."

Dr Foster said there are today more groups "dedicated to the people's welfare" -but there still remain "anti-humanistic" forces that block and oppose movement in behalf of human dignity.

He said the conflict between these opposing forces is "real" -, but many persons try to avoid reality "by trying to live in a state of 'weightlessness'"

Discouraging weightlessness," Dr Foster said these people fail to act in local, national and world affairs, because they think their action cannot be "felt constructively."

Respect for the individual, encouragement of self-reliance, and willingness to be different, confidence in the future, and a respect for facts are five things Dr Foster said are essential to world understanding.

Such endeavors as the "Peace Corps and "Freedom Riders" are doing "their constructive bit .. and working here in America to accentuate the positive in human relations and national affairs," he declared.

Dr Foster said the "dominant humanistic influence of our day" has been dwindling colonialism and the drive against the unequal distribution of material goods among the world's population."

"The ideals of human dignity and of greater equity in resource distribution," he said, "have acquired a tenacious hold on our world society, which will hardly be loosed.

Offering that "our confidence in the future" is perhaps the most "important resource of all" for solving world problems, Dr Foster expressed deep confidence in today's youth, saying:

"The constructive influence of young people .. suggests that there is an unusual strength among young people which we need to bring into our society more effectively than has been possible previously."

CAPITAL COMMENT by Lynn Williams

'Hard-Core' Segregationists Puzzled By 'Vigorous' New Negro Leadership

HARD-CORE segregationists deep in the heart of Dixie are bewildered, frustrated and hard put these days trying to figure what to do about the vigorous, action-oriented new Negro leadership.

They have yet to come up with a formula that adequately meets the direct personal challenge of the "sit-inners" and "Freedom Riders."

Head-whipping, jail sentences and other punitive measures that once were effective in keeping things under control seem to stimulate more determined nonviolent action, rather than deter it. Those "Freedom Riders" who were bludgeoned, stomped and hustled off to jail in Birmingham, were quickly replaced by eager new recruits.

● The Rev. Wyatt Tee Walker, executive director of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, put it this way: They don't know what to do with us in jail and they don't know what to do with us out of jail . . ."

Whereas the principal source of the South's obfuscation is the fearless, intensity of purpose that characterizes the unrelenting assaults on long impregnable bastions of segregation, the core of the matter is more deep-seated.

OVER THE YEARS, Southern segregationists had developed formulas and techniques to deal with the NAACP, the Urban League and like proponents of equal rights. Just as chronic sufferers of diabetes or high blood pressure adjust to their ailments, segregation leaders had learned to live with old line civil rights organizations.

ON THE MOVE — The Rev. Wyatt T. Walker, executive director, and Dr. Martin Luther King, president, of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, are assisted by TWA official James Plinton, prior to their departure from New York, via TWA Superjet, for Los Angeles.

● But how can you deal with young, intelligent people who disregard the formalities of dispatching courteous, carefully composed communications respectfully soliciting your consideration; and tell you they've got no time for conferences around a table in downtown offices, etc.

● Recently when Julius Hobson, president of the CORE chapter in Washington, D. C., called on Robert Levy, president of the Hect Department Stores in the D. C. Hobson said: "I didn't come to have a conference. We leave that to the NAACP and the Urban League. CORE is an action group. I simply came to inform you that on the basis of our survey of your employment pattern, which we have found very unfair to Negroes, CORE will initiate a picket line at your store next week . . ."

Perplexed segregationists may or may not get any consolation from the fact that the emergence of this new Negro leadership has made a tremendous impact also on the thinking in tan communities all across the nation.

Now and again among older conservative Negroes one may hear some doubtful concern expressed, but by and large Negroes cheer each new challenge registered by those carrying the battle to the heart-land of Dixie.

One provocative question that seems to stimulate celebration and lively arguments is: what should be their role in this new era of galvanized action?"

Opinions, comments and observations on this are just as diverse as are our tan communities; depending in large measure on the background of the source from which they emanate; the age group, economic level and whether or not one is a member of the proletariat, the bourgeoisie or the cognoscenti.

IT IS MY considered opinion that both the NAACP and the Urban League are strengthened by recent developments; and are in position now to play a more vital role than ever before.

Of course both organizations must discard some of their stuffiness, must become more flexible. They should re-tool and gear their programs to the stepped up tempo that characterizes the forward thrust of the new Negro leadership.

Organizations, just as do people, tend to become conservative and fixed in habits and routine as they grow older. But organizations may be infused with new blood, new ideas and new vigor by succeeding generations. Herein lies the hope and salvation of the NAACP and the Urban League.

As a former soldier, the situation seems to me to be analagous in one respect to the World War II Ardennes Buldge Battle. The First Army had pushed into Germany far ahead of the support on both flanks. Just before Christmas, 1944, a violent counter-attack was launched by 15 German divisions under General Von Modell. General George Pat-lon's Third Army rescued the beseiged Americans at Bastogne on Dec. 21, 1945, and made secure the ground previously gained.

CERTAINLY the NAACP and the Urgan League can gear the program to cover the flanks of those thrusting forward, and make secure the gains made.

Of equal certainty is the assurance that these two organizations will meet the challenge of change and add new lustre to their records of distinguished service toward making democracy meanmerica.

'Price of freedom expensive, good reason to join NAACP'

RICHMOND

"The price of freedom is very expensive. We must be prepared to pay this cost with finance, education, dedication, suffering and service."

This spoke the Rev. L. Francis Griffin, of Farmville, Va., special NAACP consultant, as he addressed a mass meeting which helped spark the current Richmond NAACP membership campaign.

The meeting was held at Fourth Baptist Church, the Rev. Robert T. Taylor, pastor. James Bailey, NAACP vice president, presided.

THE REV. MR. Griffin is also president of the Prince Edward County Improvement association which bas been working diligently for the reopening of public schools in that county.

He also advised his listeners as follows:

"Don't be afraid of going to jail if necessary to secure your rights. From the Delta Land and cotton fields of the Southland the voice of freedom is being heard.

"My people, wake up, get up and join the ranks of crusaders all over the Southland who are determined to be free.

"We must eliminate the unjust and out-dated customs and traditions of the Southland.

"Leaders of my people, teach my people how to live. Lead my people to the Promised Land of freedom. Rededicate your lives to the principles of justice, freedom, and universal brotherhood."

NAACP Asks Protection Of Riders From Police

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People entered the "riders" movement Friday, asking U.S. District Court to protect the riders from police interference.

The move aligned the NAACP with the Congress of Racial Equality—CORE—in its southwide test of segregation laws and traditions.

The NAACP has favored legal action, and has looked with reserve upon the more direct CORE-sponsored rides, although supporting the goal of desegregated travel facilities.

The NAACP petition was filed by Constance Baker Motley and chief NAACP attorney Thurgood Marshall of New York and R. Jess Brown of Jackson, and Vicksburg, Miss.

The petition is a class action asking that a three-judge federal court consider the request for protection against the arrest of riders.

Under the law, U.S. Dist. Judge Sidney Mize must refer the petition to the chief judge of the U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans, Judge Elbert P. Tuttle, for consideration.

NAACP's Request Is Forwarded

The chief judge of the U.S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans will decide if a three-judge court will hear an NAACP request for bus integration and an end to "freedom rider" arrests in Jackson.

U.S. District Judge Sidney Mize said he will send the NAACP's petition to Chief Judge Elbert P. Tuttle for a decision on the matter.

The NAACP filed a petition here yesterday asking a three-judge court to enjoin the state and city from enforcing segregation laws on buses and trains and in their terminals.

The petition also asked for an injunction forcing Jackson police to stop arresting persons who violate segregation laws in transportation facilities.

NAACP Suit Hits Mississippi Acts

JACKSON, Miss., June 9 (AP)—NAACP attorneys today filed suit in U. S. Federal District Court here seeking a permanent injunction against the enforcement of Mississippi's transportation segregation laws.

The suit also sought an end to the massive arrests of "Freedom Riders" entering the state.

It was the first action brought by Negro attorneys seeking a halt to the city's handling of the longest stream of riders which began pouring into the state May 15, and came after five more riders were jailed early today on charges of breaching the peace after alighting from a train from Nashville, Tenn.

98 Jailed

The arrests brought to 98 the total jailed here when they attempt to use segregated facilities at the city's two bus stations, train depot and municipal airport.

The suit was filed shortly before noon by Negro Attys. R. Jess Brown, legal counsel for the Mississippi NAACP, Mrs. Constance Motley and Thurgood Marshall of New York, legal counsel for the NAACP.

The three lawyers were listed as attorneys for the plaintiffs, while Attys. Derrick A. Bell and Norman C. Amaker of New York, were named as assisting counsel.

Three Jackson Negroes, Samuel Bailey, Joseph Broadwater and Burnett L. Jacob, were named as plaintiffs in the suit.

Named In The Suit

The action seeks to enjoin the state of Mississippi, the city of Jackson, Trailways, Greyhound, Jackson City Lines, the Illinois Central Railroad, and the restaurant at the Municipal Airport terminal.

It cited state and local segregation laws as being contrary to the due process and equal protection uses of the U. S. Constitution's h Amendment, the commerce use and clauses pertaining to lroad and pipeline and motor criers.

The suit charged that members the Negro race "have suffered d shall continue to suffer irparable injury as a result of the forcement" of the statutes.

NAACP Asks U. S. Court To Protect Protest Riders

By The Associated Press

JACKSON, Miss., June 9.—The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People entered the so-called "Freedom Rider" movement Friday, asking Federal District Court to protect the riders from police interference.

The move aligned the NAACP with the Congress of Racial Equality in its Southwide test of segregation laws and traditions.

The NAACP has favored legal action and has looked with reserve upon the more direct C.O.R.E.-sponsored rides, although supporting the goal of desegregated travel facilities.

The NAACP petition was filed by Mrs. Constance Baker Motley, chief NAACP attorney Thurgood Marshall of New York and R. Jess Brown of Jackson and Vicksburg, Miss.

The petition is a class action asking that a three-judge Federal court consider the request for protection against the arrest of riders.

To Refer Petition

Under the law, Federal District Judge Sidney Mize must refer the petition to the chief judge of the United States Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans, Judge Elbert P. Tuttle, for consideration.

Since May 24, the riders have poured into Jackson by bus, train and air with the announced intention of testing segregation laws.

All have been arrested on charges of breach of peace growing out of their refusal to obey police orders to move out of the terminals.

Police have said the presence of the riders in Jackson after announcing their intention to violate a law is a breach of the peace, compounded by their refusal to move out of the terminal.

The petition attacked what it called unconstitutional state laws requiring segregated railroad cars, buses, rest rooms and waiting rooms and the posting of segregation signs at terminals.

Such laws, the petition said, subject Negroes "to daily public inconvenience, harassment, and embarrassment (and) violate rights secured . . . by the due process clause of the 14th amendment to the United States Constitution."

Named In Petition

The petition was filed for Samuel Bailey, Joseph Broadwater and Burnett L. Jacob, all Jackson Negroes, against State Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson, Mayor Allen C. Thompson and the Jackson City Council, Police Chief W. D. Rayfield, Trailways and Greyhound bus lines, Illinois Central Railroad, Jackson City Lines and an airport restaurant.

The NAACP petition came shortly before five more riders were convicted of breach of

The Gallup Poll

64% Vote Disapproves Freedom Riders' Way

PRINCETON, N. J., June 20—A majority of the public approves, in principle, of bringing an end to racial segregation on trains and buses and in public waiting rooms.

But many Americans currently have misgivings about the way in which white and Negro Freedom Riders have been attempting to accomplish this goal in recent weeks.

In a Nation-wide Gallup Poll, conducted since the arrival of Freedom Riders in Alabama touched off riots and violence, two out of three persons say they approve of the Supreme Court ruling calling for an end to segregation practices in public transportation facilities.

The question asked of a cross-section of 1502 adults in all regions of the country in the latest survey:

"The U. S. Supreme Court has ruled that racial segregation on trains, buses, and in public waiting rooms must end. Do you approve or disapprove of this ruling?"

The current findings and those in 1957:

| | Today | 1957 |
|---|---|---|
| Approve | 66% | 60% |
| Disapprove | 28 | 32 |
| No opinion | 6 | 8 |

In the South today—as was the case four years ago—a majority voice opposition to the Court's ruling.

The vote in the South:

| | Today | 1957 |
|---|---|---|
| Approve | 26% | 27% |
| Disapprove | 66 | 64 |
| No opinion | 8 | 9 |

Despite a generally favorable climate of opinion at the national level in regard to the principle of desegregated public transportation, the violent reaction in the South to the Freedom Riders has caused many Americans — in both North and South — to question the value of this approach to ending segregation barriers.

Those persons having at least a general idea of the Freedom Riders' activities were asked:

Refused service in Tenn. city

Sat. 8-5-61

Baltimore, Md.

By PETER D. SIMMONS

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. — The five Freedom Riders who arrived here recently without fanfare, spent what they called a pleasant stay except for one incident—a refusal of service at a Howard Johnson Restaurant.

The five visited many places here and were well received, according to Henry Thomas, a member of the original Freedom Riders and Rabbi Sidney Shanker of Cranford, N.J. "We have had a pleasant stay in Chattanooga."

At a get-to-gether at the home of a prominent Chattanoogan, they told of incidents in other places and Mr. Thomas gave first hand account of his stay in the Jackson, Mississippi jail.

ACCORDING TO Mr. Thomas, the Rev. C. T. Vivian, pastor of Chattanooga's Cosmopolitan Community Church, who was among the original riders, was badly beaten while in jail by guards. He told of having to sleep without mattresses and then being put in solitary confinement.

Until it was mentioned that the riders would visit Chattanooga, not many people here knew that the Chattanooga Greyhound bus terminal restaurant was integrated. The newspapers, radios and TV pointed it up in telling that there were no facilities here to be tested.

The five riders dined in the Greyhound terminal restaurant twice while here with two local colored ministers. They questioned the fact that there were no other diners in the restaurant while they were there.

THEY ATTENDED AN integrated rally at Second Baptist Church, where the Rev. F. L. Shuttleworth of Birmingham spoke.

He told the large audience "It's full speed ahead now; we have gone too far to turn back. Like Admiral Faragut said, 'damn the torpedoes' . . .A strange wind is blowing in the world and its blowing empires away."

He said the Freedom Riders will end when "Mississippi and Alabama learn a lesson in social justice. They will end when men are free to ride."

* * *

IN A JOINT statement issued to the press. the five riders said "With the exception of Elizabethon, Tenn., we have been well received where ever we have gone.

"Although we have tried to go as ordinary travelers would, we could not since the light of publicity has preceded us on this journey.

"Nonetheless we have enjoyed this trip and are grateful for the courtesy and kindness which so many Southerners have extended us."

They said: "The pattern of segregation differs from place to place, but wherever it exists, in any form, it appears to us to be absurd, irrational and wrong. It degrades the colored man but its effects are far more baneful for his oppressor.

"We call upon the Federal Government, and specifically the ICC, to end all segregation in interstate commerce as the law requires. We believe the ICC could end segregation quite easily by dispatching several Freedom Riders of its own.

"Few facilities would remain closed to non-whites if it were known that the person refused service might be a federal officer."

IN FURTHER stating their position and how they felt about what is needed to be done, they said.

"We call upon the communities we have visited and all colored persons everywhere to fight harder for their rights as citizens of this land. In those areas where segregation still exists, we must, exert an ever increasing pressure."

The five riders were Henry Thomas, field representative of CORE; Rabbi Sidney Shanker, Cranford, N.J., Rabbi Herman Stern, River Ridge, N.J.; John C. Harvard, Elizabeth, N.J.; and Woolcott K. Smith, Vineyard Haven, Mass.

They left the city for Memphis, but not before they had consulted lawyers concerning the feasibility of suing the Howard Johnson National chain restaurant.

While here they stopped in the homes of prominent colored Chattanoogans.

FREEDOM RIDERS
NEGRO PROTEST MOVEMENT

Negro Leaders Seek Halt In Freedom Ride Testing

Conference This Week

By CLAUDE SITTON

Special to The New York Times.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., June 24—Powerful forces within the Negro protest movement against segregation have thrown their support behind a proposal to de-emphasize the Freedom Rides.

Plans were being made today for a conference on the question early next week in Atlanta or Jackson, Miss. It is expected to decide to suspend sponsorship of the demonstrations.

Sources among the movement's top leaders said this action would probably have the backing of a majority of the groups that have been organizing and financing the rides, which began a month and a half ago.

Supporters of the proposed shift in strategy cited a number of reasons for ending, at least temporarily, the test of discriminatory practices in Southern transportation terminals.

Chief among them was the Justice Department's efforts to obtain a blanket order from the Interstate Commerce Commission against bus station segregation.

It was also learned that the sponsors had encountered increasing difficulty in obtaining funds. Furthermore, a large number of Southern Negroes have declined to volunteer for the demonstrations.

These disclosures came from persons attending the eighteenth annual Race Relations Institute at Fisk University. They were confirmed by others in the South who have played prominent roles in the movement.

Some Still Militant

Despite this development, considerable sentiment still exists among a handful of the more militant student leaders for continuing the Freedom Rides. Some might ignore any decision to suspend the activity and carry on independently.

This point was underscored yesterday at a strategy meeting here of the Freedom Ride Coordinating Committee. The panel was set up recently in Atlanta by groups involved in the demonstrations.

Present were Diane Nash, who convened the committee and who is a representative of the Nashville Student Nonviolent Movement, and Gordon R. Carey of New York, field secretary of the Congress of Racial Equality.

Bernard Lee of Atlanta represented the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, which is headed by the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Charles Sherrod, also of Atlanta, attended as spokesman for the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, a regional organization.

After the meeting, Miss Nash said the committee had decided to continue the Freedom Rides. It was learned later that there had been marked disagreement over the decision. Moreover, some of those supporting this course voiced their personal views rather than those of their organizations.

The disclosure of this point led to the move to call a second conference on the matter.

One highly placed source emphasized that, although the demonstrations might be halted temporarily, they would be resumed if the Federal Government failed in its efforts to end bus terminal segregation.

He said that the forces behind the rides would use the time to regroup and to conduct an intensive training course for prospective participants.

Deadline Uncertain

No deadline was set for the achievement of desegregation. But resumption of the protests would probably come early next fall, he said.

Earlier this week, the Interstate Commerce Commission called for written statements on the request of Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy for a blanket desegregation order. The commission scheduled oral arguments for Aug. 15.

Officials of that agency said the matter would be considered under special rules designed to speed the process.

If the order is granted in line with Mr. Kennedy's request, it would permit the Justice Department, in effect, to take action directly against any bus line operating through a segregated terminal.

The Attorney General has asked the demonstrators on at least three occasions to give the Government time to act. He made this point most forcefully in a recent Washington conference with a group of their representatives.

The group reportedly was impressed by the Attorney General's reasoning. Among them were Miss Nash and the Rev. James M. Lawson Jr. of Nashville, one of Dr. King's chief disciples in the "nonviolent direct action" drive against segregation.

Furthermore, a growing number of the demonstrators have come from outside the South. One leader said that, as a result, the protest had failed to create much sympathy for desegregation among Southern whites.

There also was an increasing sense of futility over the outcome of the attack on racial barriers in Jackson. Almost 150 riders have been arrested and convicted there on charges of breach of the peace and many are still in jail.

Agency Powerless

Burke Marshall, chief of the Justice Department Civil Rights Division, told the Fisk Race Relations Institute this week that his agency was powerless to prevent the arrests. He noted that local authorities had jurisdiction and called this one of the frustrations of the Federal system.

Leaders of the movement were said to feel that the demonstrations had suffered from a lack of coordination and planning.

Another institute speaker, Thurgood Marshall, chief counsel of the legal defense and educational fund of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, agreed with them. He pointed out that at least five organizations had been involved at Jackson.

"I don't know what's going on there and I doubt if any one person knows," he said.

2 Catholic Priests Hail Freedom Ride Movement

Two Catholic priests -- one Negro the other white -- have made public addresses hailing the Freedom Rides during recent weeks, according to a release from the NCWC News Service.

In New York last week, a southern Jesuit sociologist hailed the Freedom Ride movement for uncovering some of the truth about attitudes on race in the South. He is the Rev. Albert S. Foley, S. J., professor of sociology at Spring Hill College, Mobile, Ala.

In Pittsburgh, Pa., last week, a Negro priest from Mississippi said that the Freedom Rides in the South are a "skirmish" in a "cold civil war" being waged over the race question. He is the Rev. John LeBauve, S.V.D., pastor of Holy Rosary Church, Hattiesburg, Miss.

Addressing some 100 persons at the meeting of the newly-formed Bronx Chapter of the Catholic Interracial Council, Father Foley said the Freedom Riders had put an end to several southern illusions and false traditions.

He said the Freedom Riders had laid bare for all to see "the bitter and die-hard resistance" of Alabama officials to the orderly processes of law enforcement and to court decisions.

At the same time, he said, the Freedom Rides disclosed how willing Southern officials were "to encourage and promote the lawless and subversive activities of terrorist mobs, in order to nullify the efforts of American Negro citizens to secure equality before law and in the enjoyment of the privileges of American citizenship..."

Father LaBauve, addressing the Summer School for Catholic Action, said that "if the rides result in something positive being done by Americans for race relations, then the riders will have done a good thing."

The Divine Word priest declared that racial injustice is a sickness in American society and unless Christians work to cure it, it will get worse.

"In America when we discriminate against our own people, we are failing to make friends with a group of people who should be our first allies," he said.

"We are trying to get friends all over the world, in Africa, in Asia, in Latin America, and paying a pretty penny for it. But we are making it almost impossible for our own fellow Americans to be our allies."

He said there are three major issues involved in the race question: as a human being, the Negro "wants the free use of all human rights:" as a citizen, "he wants whatever other citizens want; as a Catholic, "he wants everything that the Church provides for everyone else."

Desegregation and integration are two different things, Father LaBauve explained.

"Desegregation will insure that the Negro gets his just rights," he said. "As to integration, that's up to you. If you want to love me, that's up to you. But we have no right to take what belongs to another."

GENERAL

FREEDOM RIDERS
DR. KING TO DR. JACKSON

Dr. King To Jackson

SPECIAL TO AFRO

JACKSON, Miss.—A local chapter of the anti-segregation Student Non - Violent Coordinating Committee has been organized here and Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. is slated to make his first appearance in this capital city, Thursday.

Reacting sharply to origin of the non - violent unit, J. R. Gilfoy, Hinds County sheriff, has accused the sponsors of "Coming here to stir up violence."

The sheriff told Richard Haley, field representative of the Congress of Racial Equality, "If there is trouble, I will come looking for you."

He reminded Haley that the penalty in Mississippi for "inciting to riot" is "very heavy."

HALEY HAS been in Jackson since the Freedom Riders started coming to the city, May 24.

Dr. King, who is expected to appeal to colored residents of Mississippi to actively oppose racial segregation, will be the main speaker at a giant mass rally to be held at the Masonic Temple here.

Medgar Evers, field secretary of the Mississippi State NAACP, also is scheduled as one of the speakers. Other representatives of CORE, the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, the Student Non - Violent Coordinating Committee and the NAACP also are slated as speakers.

* * *

IN ADDITION to Haley, sponsors of the local non - violent unit are James Bevel, Itta Bena, Miss.; Charles Sherrod, Atlanta, Ga., and Marion Barry, Nashville, Tenn.

Initial members include many students from nearby Tougaloo Southern Christian College, Jackson State College, Campbell College and local high school students.

The group met, last Thursday night, and voted to continue the Freedom Rides.

"Look for the Rides to continue into and out of Jackson throughout the summer," a spokesman told the AFRO.

This was a reaffirmation of the position voted earlier during the week by a meeting of Freedom Ride representatives here.

AN APPEAL is expected to be filed in the case of the Miss Elizabeth Wyckoff, a Freedom Rider, whose plea for a writ of habeas corpus was denied, last week, by Federal District Judge Sidney Mize.

Miss Wyckoff, a free lance writer of New York City, contends that Mississippi courts are enforcing racial segregation in violation of the Federal Constitution, and the case should be removed from their jurisdiction.

Judge Mize refused to rule on the constitutionality of the arrests on grounds the plaintiff did not first take the case to the state courts.

Another legal test of the validity of the arrests will be made July 10 before a three - judge Federal Court in Atlanta.

* * *

THE COURT will be composed of Judges Elbert Tuttle, Mize and Claude F. Clayton.

The hearing will be on a suit filed here June 9 by Bailey, Joseph Broadwater and Brunett L. Jacobs.

The suit asks that the City of Jackson, the State of Mississippi and others concerned be prohibited from arresting Freedom Riders on grounds such arrests are in violation of the U. S. Constitution and rulings by the U. S. Supreme Court and the Interstate Commerce Commission.

'Freedom Rides Directed By Known Communists'

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Brig. Gen. T. B. Birdsong, head of the Mississippi Highway Patrol, charged Thursday "Freedom Rides" were "directed, inspired and planned by known Communists."

The charge brought an almost immediate denial from a New York official of the Congress of Racial Equality.

Birdsong told a press conference at least two riders arrested during efforts to desegregate Jackson transportation facilities attended a Soviet-directed seminar in Cuba last February.

He said 202 American students made the trip to Havana and heard addresses by nine officials of the Soviet Union "to teach the students how to make sit-ins, walk-ins, kneel-ins and Freedom Rides."

The press conference was conducted at the highway patrol headquarters here by Birdsong after a brief statement on one rider's background was handed to newsmen. Birdsong and Art Richardson, patrol public information officer, both answered questions in Birdsong's name.

Birdsong told newsmen the Congress of Racial Equality was responsible for the Freedom Rides and was a Communist - front group.

Earlier this week, Gordon Carey, of New York, field director of CORE, told newsmen here he planned the rides in February.

Birdsong said other Freedom Riders had records of auto theft, burglary, grand larceny and undesirable discharges from military service. He did not identify those riders.

Some, he said, were "Communist-backed, pawns in the hands of Communist powers that be."

Birdsong, a retired Mississippi National Guard officer and founder of the highway patrol 30 years ago, said the two riders who had attended the Havana meeting were:

Katherine Pleune, 21, a white memeograph operator from Chicago, arrested on breach of peace charges when she arrived as a Freedom Rider June 19, and James Robert Wahlstrom, 24, University of Wisconsin student from Madison, Wis., arrested with a group of riders June 6.

Both were convicted and Miss Pleune is serving a four-month sentence at the state penitentiary. Wahlstrom received a four-month sentence, with two sus-pended, and is free on a $500 appeal bond. Each also was fined $200.

Birdsong said Miss Pleune told investigators she was among the students, but that she "refused to answer when asked what the group of students discussed in Cuba or why they were there. She also refused to identify anyone else in the group."

In commenting Thursday in New York on the charges, Carey said CORE knew that Miss Pleune was in Cuba.

"We also know that no training session in nonviolence and in the techniques of sitting in or freedom riding was held," he said.

The patrol chief did not disclose the source of his information, but said his investigators had worked with police agencies in 14 other states.

Miss Pleune refused to say whether she was a member of the Communist party "unless her attorney was present," Birdsong said, and she declined to say whether she had talked to a known Communist on grounds that 'the FBI might intimidate him.'"

The Communist, Birdsong said, was under surveillance by the FBI and his name was being withheld because his arrest was expected.

He said Miss Pleune told officers "she does not now believe in God" and "she was not taught to believe in God and did not receive a Christian upbringing."

She told investigators, he said, she had been "arrested several times in Chicago for picketing (possibly as many as 100-150 times). She also was arrested in New York City and San Francisco for picketing. She has picketed the CIA (Central Intelligence Agency) and for racial integration."

SPECIAL SECTION

Birdsong said the highway patrol had set up a special section to deal with Communist influences after digging into the backgrounds of the riders.

He said many of them had declined to say whether they belonged to the Communist party.

Carey said the charge "is so ridiculous as to merit no reply. However, because the reputation of scores of imprisoned Freedom Riders is at stake, the Congress of Racial Equality feels compelled to answer briefly.

"The Freedom Rides have no connection whatsoever with the Communist party in this nation or any other. They are taking place because the aspirations of the American Negro have been so long denied and stifled by un-American states such as Mississippi wich has systematically denied American citizens of color their constitutional rights."

Carey called Birdsong's statements a smear campaign.

Two riders who held press conferences earlier were critical of others in the movement.

Leon Daniel Horne, 24, a Corinth, Miss., Negro, told newsmen "they are demoralized characters." The Rev. Richard Gleason of Chicago told Jackson newsmen his conversations with riders involved atheism, communism and deceit.

Gleason told newsmen in Jackson, "I will not knowingly associate with any questionable organization," but after paying his fine to gain his release he retracted some of his comments in Chicago.

Mixers Get Slapped Around In Training, Official Reveals

CORE - sponsored "Freedom Riders" get slapped around whether they ever meet bus station rioters or not.

This disclosure came from Thomas Gaither, local CORE field secretary, as he gave a deposition in Circuit Court here Thursday in connection with a coming federal court hearing.

In training sessions, said Gaither, prospective "Freedom Riders" get their ears boxed, not to mention a flow of abusive language.

The object, he said, is to find out whether "they can take it."

Gaither asked questions posed by attorney Calvin Whitesell, who has the job of showing in a July 17 hearing that a previous temporary restraining order against CORE and other integrationist groups should be broadened into an injunction.

MUST BE 'CREATIVE'

The restraining order, which barred sponsorship of "Freedom Rides" into Alabama, has expired. But it could be reinstated, or an injunction could be imposed by U.S. District Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr.

Gaither explained in the deposition that a "Freedom Rider" must be "creative" in his nonviolent resistance. For example, he said, the rider should not remain limp while he is being booted by a crowd of rioters. But, he emphasized, the rider "must not retalitate."

He acknowledged that British television cameramen had filmed a "training session" at a Negro church on Holt street, where a group was put through a simulated bus trip on which they met with various kinds of abuse.

Gaither said also that CORE shunned undesirables — "Communists, or people with shady political affiliations or emotional instability."

PECK A PACIFIST

But he said that he did not view one "Freedom Rider" — James Peck—as a Communist. Peck, he said, was a pacifist. He also said that CORE did not espouse Peck's pacifist views.

Gaither acknowledged that "Freedom Ride" publicity has brought an increase in funds contributed to CORE, but said that expenses have also shot upward.

He said CORE has spent $60,000 in Jackson, Miss., alone, making bond for riders leaving jail, paying lawyers' fees, etc.

Gaither said he arrived here after a bus station riot on May 20, but since then has worked in arranging "Freedom Rides" planned to pass through the city. He said he often worked with the Rev. Ralph Abernathy in obtaining lodging for riders who stopped here.

MORE RIDERS EXPECTED

More riders are expected here within the next few days, he said. But he said he did not know how long it is planned to continue "Freedom Riding."

Gaither said he had received a degree in biology from a South Carolina college, but did not intend to pursue a career in science.

On bus trips to Montgomery, he said, he took a seat in the bus that "was in the Southern tradition—of being in my place."

He said the CORE trips had only one aim, to win a "first class" position on busses and bus facilities for Negroes.

GENERAL

FREEDOM RIDERS
NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES

Council Of Churches Refuses To Directly Endorse Mixers

CHICAGO (AP) — The general board of the National Council of Churches Friday declined to directly endorse the "Freedom Riders."

After a heated debate the board adopted a compromise resolution which supported the principal of non-violent action but from which all mention of the "Freedom Riders" had been deleted.

The hours-long debate between southern members, who felt a board endorsement of the "Freedom Riders" would only increase tensions, and some northern members, who wanted a clear-cut stand taken on the "Freedom Ride" movement, centered around this crucial phrase in the proposed resolution:

". . .The General Board of the National Council of Churches affirms its belief in the justice and sincerity of the purpose of the "Freedom Ride" movement."

In a key vote, the board approved, 55-44, an amendment submitted by a Methodist minister the Rev. Dow Kirkpatrick of Atlanta, Ga., to substitute the words "non - violent movement" for "Freedom Ride" movement.

he revised resolution, largely a reaffirmtion of the board's stand against segregation, was adopted almost unanimously

EMOTIONAL APPEAL

The attack on the resolution, titled "An Appeal to Christian Conscience," was led by John Bryan, a lay member of the United Presbyterian Church in the United States and executive vice president of the Birmingham, Ala., Chamber of Commerce.

In a voice which at times broke with emotion, Bryan, a gaunt, white-haired man, said:

"I plead with you not to pass any resolution that will deter the efforts of southern churches to deal with this problem. . . you will injure us in our efforts to serve.

"We don't need a church body arousing more tensions among the people of this country. We have more important things to deal with in the matter of human rights than riding together on buses."

Church Council Gives Rides Qualified Nod

CHICAGO (UPI)—The National Council of Churches endorsed the "non-violent movement" to end racial segregation in the South Friday but deleted a specific reference to the "Freedom Riders."

The council's general board adopted a watered-down resolution praising non-violent opponents of segregation in interstate travel and condemning "mob violence in every form."

The board policy-making arm of the big Protestant and orthodox federation substituted the phrase "non - violent movement" for "Freedom Ride movement" at the request of members from the South. The resulting resolution appeared to support the "Freedom Riders" without mentioning them by name.

John E. Bryan, a Presbyterian layman from Birmingham, Ala., and Richard Thigpen, a Methodist layman and attorney from Charlotte, N. C., asked the board not to support the "Freedom Riders"

"Give the local communities an opportunity to solve this problem," Bryan, executive vice president of the Birmingham Chamber of Commerce, said. He said NCC support for "Freedom Riders" would "injure us and our opportunity to do service" in the South.

"I'm against 'freedom rides'," because I do not know who sponsored those 'freedom rides'," Thigpen said.

Bishop C. Julian Smith of the Christian Methodist Episcopal Church pleaded with members to keep the words "freedom ride" in the resolution. Bishop Smith, a Chicago Negro, said two squads of police once hauled him away after he used white-only facilities in a terminal at Montgomery, Ala.

Church Council Unit Declines Direct Backing

CHICAGO (AP) — The general board of the National Council of Churches Friday has declined to directly endorse the self-styled "freedom riders."

After a heated debate, the board Friday adopted a compromise resolution which supported the principle of "non-violent" action but from which all direct mention of "freedom riders" had been deleted.

The hours-long debate between Southern members, who felt a board endorsement would only increase tensions, and some Northern members, who wanted a strong stand in favor of the "freedom ride" agitation centered around this crucial phrase in the proposed resolution:

In a key vote, the board approved, 55-44, an amendment submitted by a Methodist minister, the Rev. Dow Kirkpatrick of Atlanta, Ga., to substitute the words "non - violent movement" for "Freedom Ride movement."

Robert Kennedy's Aim in South—To Uphold Law but Take No Sides

The Washington Post
Washington, D.C.

By James E. Clayton
Staff Reporter

Robert Kennedy tells world a Negro can be President of United States in 40 years. Page A4.

It is not seen, as leaders of the "Freedom Riders" movement have publicly proclaimed, as a successful all-out assault on segregation through direct action taken by those seeking to exercise their constitutional rights. P—1

Nor is it seen, as Southern white leaders have loudly announced, as a question of outside agitators going into the South to stir up racial strife.

Rather, to Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy and others high in the Administration, the issue and the problem is how to maintain American prestige around the world while advancing the cause of civil rights at home.

Kennedy is convinced that incidents like the riots in Birmingham and Montgomery and the mass sit-in in the Jackson jail are not the way either to advance civil rights or to maintain American prestige. Sat. 27-5-61

Nor does he think that a mass invasion of the South by hundreds or thousands of "Freedom Riders" is the most effective way of breaking segregation barriers.

Given this way of looking at the problem, the actions taken by the Department of Justice as an aftermath of the Alabama incidents fall into a clear pattern.

The overriding interest of the Attorney General has been to end violence in that state and to ensure that law and order is maintained. His statements reflected his deep feeling that America's international prestige was put on the line in such a manner in Alabama that, regardless of what happened, the Nation could not win.

Thus, Kennedy has worked both sides of the street throughout the past 10 days.

He put heavy pressure on Southern leaders to bring their police forces into line and to crush any incipient violence. The withdrawal of the marshals on Thursday indicates that the Attorney General thinks he has been successful on that side.

At the same time, Kennedy was putting pressure on the leaders of the Freedom Riders movement. His call for a cooling-off period was aimed among other things, at discouraging other groups of riders from galloping Southward.

In fact, up to the moment that the marshals went South last Saturday, no Freedom Riders other than the original group had appeared. Then, with police protection assured, there was an outburst of them.

This did not sit well with the Department of Justice. "It took a lot of guts for that first group to go," one man said, "but not much for the others." Those making the trip from Montgomery to Jackson on Thursday were the safest people in America, the Department thought.

At the same time that leaders of the Riders movement were calling publicly for more trips through the South, they were showing considerably more restraint in private. In fact, until the marshals showed on Sunday night that they were capable of handling Southern mobs, the leaders too, were ready to call the whole thing off. P-A4

Throughout the week, Kennedy has tried to make two points clear to Negro leaders. One is that he agrees with their basic goal—full realization of their constitutional rights. The other is that the Federal Government will not help a movement which results in violence.

Once violence begins to appear, Kennedy has taken the position that he has only one job—to maintain law and order. He does not feel that thet Department of Justice can, at those times, side with one group or the other in disputes over constitutional rights.

Intervenes in Court Cases

Sat. 5-27-61

The Department's role in promoting civil rights can come only through legal and peaceful means. Thus, it has intervened in court cases.

That was the reason Kennedy urged the Freedom Riders to put up bond in Jackson, Miss., after they were arrested. They had a court case; they could strike down segregation there through legal means; their presence in jail did not help their legal fight but, instead, made good propaganda for America's enemies.

That was also the reason Kennedy tried to discourage other Riders from going South. They were not going to start law suits—the peaceful means of winning rights—but were going to get publicity or stir up trouble, the Department thought. The prospects of their action, Kennedy feared, was that persons with no connection with the movement would be hurt or killed by mistake.

This posiiton has meant that Kennedy has been under cross pressures all week. At 2 a. m. last Monday, he was bitterly criticized by Gov. John Patterson in a long telephone conversation. Five minutes after Patterson hung up, Kennedy met harsh criticism again, this time from the Rev. Martin Luther King. Kennedy's aides say the Attorney General treated each exactly the same way—calmly and coolly.

Would Send More Riders

At one point during the week, Negro leaders asked Kennedy if it would help for them to send hundreds or thousands of more Riders into the South. At another time, someone suggested that the Riders would accept Kennedy's proposed cooling-off period if Kennedy would get all the Southern Governors to give up segregation.

It was then that Kennedy made it plain to Negro leaders that he was not trying to run their movement and they ought not to try to run his Department. He would help them peacefully if he could but he would keep a firmly neutral position if violence threatened.

He also suggested that the Negro leaders look to see what effect their actions are having on America's international prestige. If they wanted to send people South, he suggested, they ought to go there to participate in voting registration drives. Elect a couple of Negro Congressmen, he said, and things will change abruptly.

Throughout the week, Kennedy's appeals to both both sides were to have a reasonable attitude. Force on either side, he felt, produces little but counterforce.

Intervention Laid To Robert Kennedy

The Atlanta Constitution
Atlanta, Ga.

A bus company official testified Wednesday that Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy urged him vigorously to get a Negro to drive a "Freedom Riders" bus when white drivers refused to move it.

When he replied that no Negro drivers were available, the witness said Kennedy told him "Well, hell, you can look for one can't you." Thurs. 6-1-61

The statement came in U.S. District Court where Birmingham police were cleared of blame for the May 20 race rioting there, but a similar Justice Department complaint against Montgomery police was left pending. P—1

Greyhound Supt. George E. Cruitt testified he telephoned him after regular drivers refused to take the bus from Birmingham to Montgomery. Several scheduled trips were canceled before a Greyhound driver finally made the run May 20.

A white mob attacked the "Freedom Riders" when the bus got here, and the Justice department contends police "deliberately failed" to provide protection.

POSSIBLE ACTION

With dismissal of the complaint against Birmingham police and factions, who had been put under tion after the rioting here, U.S. District. Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. still is considering possible action against Montgomery police and two other Klan organizations.

Atlanta, Ga.

The government seeks to compel police to protect "Freedom Riders" in the future, and to continue the injunction against the Klans.

GET SOMEONE ELSE

Cruitt told the court that when he told Kennedy the regular drivers refused to take the bus out of Birmingham for fear of violence after rioting there, the attorney general asked him to get someone else, or drive it himself.

Among the first witnesses called by defense attorney Calvin Whitesell in behalf of Montgomery police was a high-ranking Justice Department official, John Seigenthaler, who was among those beaten by the mob near the Geryhound bus station in Montgomery May 20. Thurs. 6-1-61

CLUBBED AND BEATEN

In court, he told of seeing bus riders and bystanders clubbed and beaten. He was slugged and hospitalized when he tried to rescue two white girls who were in the "Freedom Riders" bus group.

P-14

Whitesell asked Seigenthaler about names of bus riders in a notebook in his pocket, and when the judge asked the purpose of that line of questioning, the lawyer replied: "I just wanted to know if the Justice Department is working with CORE (Congress of Racial Equality) which sponsored some of the rides) and these riders."

NAMES IN ADVANCE

Seigenthaler said he got the names in advance in a long-distance telephone conversation with one of the sponsors, not officially connected with CORE, in Nashville, Tenn.

The Justice Department official also was asked whether he called police when the riot broke out. He said he did not.

Although Johnson found no evidence to justify an injunction against Birmingham police, he warned that the Justice department can renew its demand for court action "if things like this occur again."

Johnson's order dismissed the petition fo ra continued injunction against the federated Ku Klux Klan, Inc., and a Montgomery resident, Lester Hawkins, whom the Justice department listed as an officer of that KKK faction.

FACE COURT ACTION

But still facing further court action, besides Montgomery Police Commissioner, L. B. Sullivan, Chief G. J. Ruppenthal and their officers, were these Klan organizations and individual defendants:

The U.S. Klan, Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, and its top man in Alabama, the Rev. Alvin Horn of Talladega, Ala.

Kennedy Says Negro Moving Fast

WASHINGTON (AP) — Atty Gen. Robert F. Kennedy told the world Friday the United States—despite Alabama violence—is moving so fast in race relations a Negro could be president in 40 years.

Using Voice of America transmitters, Kennedy told the people of more than 60 countries that the mob of white people who beat Negro and white "Freedom Riders" in Montgomery last weekend represented only a tiny minority of Americans.

"They do not represent the people in the South," Kennedy said. "They certainly do not represent the attitude of the U.S. government or the American people."

Kennedy recalled that his grandfather came to Boston as an Irish immigrant. At that time, Kennedy said, "The Irish were not wanted there."

Kennedy Says Marshals Will Be Withdrawn When State Proves Protection

By SUSAN WAGNER

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy said Tuesday U.S. marshals would be withdrawn from Alabama as soon as Gov. John Patterson and local officials proved by action rather than words, that they could stop race riots.

"I assure you that we have no intention of permitting the marshals to remain in Alabama a minute longer than necessary," he told the state's congressional delegation in a telegram.

"With your assistance and cooperation I would hope that they could be withdrawn at an early date."

Alabama's senators and House members demanded Monday that Kennedy withdraw the marshals, sent to Montgomery Saturday to quell riots touched off by the integrated "freedom ride" through the South.

AGENTS WERE NEEDED

The attorney general replied that the 600 federal agents were sent to the deep South state because mobs continued to attack the riders despite assurances by Patterson that local officials could handle the trouble.

"What is needed now is action on the part of Gov. Patterson and local law enforcement officers, not merely words of intention," Kennedy said.

Justice Department Press Officer Edwin O. Hutman earlier described the atmosphere in Alabama as "an uneasy calm." He said the situation was touch - and- go. He said the marshals would remain on the sidelines as long as state and local officials maintained order.

WON'T REST EASY

Assistant Attorney General Nicholas Katzenbach said in a morning TV interview Today — NBC that law and order had been restored "only in a - very limited sense."

Officials here will not rest easy until the "freedom riders" leave Alabama. About 20 of the youths are in hiding in Montgomery. The Rev. Martin Luther King announced they would move on to Mississippi to test bus segregation there. But he did not say when.

Before replying to the Alabama congressional delegation, Kennedy dropped into the Justice Department press room briefly. He said then that he had received no request to give protection to the riders.

2 Rider Groups Leave Washington for Florida

United Press International

Two biracial groups rolled southward by bus along the East Coast last night with the announced purpose of blazing a new "Freedom Riders" trail from the Carolinas to central Florida.

Both groups set out from Washington yesterday morning. One group was made up of 14 "union and professional workers." The other was an "interfaith group."

[The larger group—16 protestant and Jewish clergymen—rode out of the Greyhound terminal on the second section of the 11:15 a. m. Miami express.

[Leaders questioned a Greyhound official about being put on a separate bus. The official said he felt that they wanted to ride together and pointed out there weren't enough seats for all 16—7 Negro and 9 white clergymen—on the first section. They Greyhound official assured the Freedom Rider leaders that the bus would pick up additional passengers on the way.]

The interfaith group was scheduled to spend the night in private homes at Raleigh, N.C., and the union and professional workers planned to stop over at Wilmington, N.C.

County solicitor John M. Walker issued a plea in Wilmington for "all of our citizens and lawful visitors to keep our personal and public conduct above reproach during these unwarranted invasions . . ."

Walker referred to the riders as "trouble-makers" who planned by "assault of historic laws and customs. . . to provoke incidents which will embarrass decent people everywhere."

The Wilmington-bound group passed through Raleigh yesterday afternoon. They stopped at the bus depot for a short while, but there were no incidents.

The cities in which the two grouvs plan their major tests of segregatel travel facilities are Charleston and Sumter, S.C., and the Florida cities of Jacksonville. Tallahassee, Tampa and St. Petersburg.

Both groups are sponsored by the Congress Of Racial Equality (CORE).

Florida authorities made clear that while they won't be glad to see the Freedom Riders, they would take steps to assure them a calm reception.

Two 'Freedom' Groups Here

New "Freedom Riders," heading South to test racial segregation in bus travel, Tuesday passed uneventfully through Raleigh.

Television and newspaper photographers and reporters drew attention to the first group as they arrived by bus from Washington. Some of the bystanders and passengers in transit in the waiting room stared at the racially-mixed group, but there was nothing approaching an incident.

Within minutes, the first party of Riders had departed for Wilmington, the next stop on a trip to Jacksonville, Fla., at least two remained behind, presumably to pick up a second contingent of riders.

A crowd of some 350 persons, held back by a few policemen, met the group in Wilmington, but there were no incident. The 14 piled into four taxis and went off to a Negro hotel.

Megan said the "sole aim of this trip is to use facilities which the law says we are entitled to use."

Dr. Grady Davis, a Raleigh Negro minister, headed a welcoming party for both groups in Raleigh.

He said there had been no expectation of difficulty at the Raleigh bus station. All facilities there have been integrated for some time, he added.

The Rev. Gordon D. Megen, pastor of the Manhattan Christian Reformed Church, said the first group's trip had gone "very fine" up to the arrival in Raleigh. "We have been treated with the utmost courtesy. We hope it will be that way all the way," he said.

There were 14 persons, eight whites and six Negroes, in the first party.

18 In Group.

There were 18 in the second contingent, including four rabbis, eight white Protestant ministers and six Negro Protestant ministers.

The Rev. Robert J. Stone, white minister of Adams - Parkhurst Presbyterian Church in New York City, was spokesman. He said the trip from Washington was without incident, the group planned to spend the night on the Shaw University campus here, then depart about 9 a.m. Wednesday for Tallahassee, Fla. A brief stop-over for dinner at Jacksonville was planned, he said, otherwise the party planned to stay aboard the scheduled bus to their destination.

Among those with Stone was the Rev. Austin McR. Warner, executive secretary of the Protestant Council of the City of New York (Manhattan Division).

Stone said he was a native of Tulsa, Oklahoma, and Warner said he was born in Mississippi.

Shaw Professor.

Dr. Davis is president of the Raleigh Citizens Association, a group which seeks improvements in race relations. He also is head of the Department of Religion at Shaw University.

He said the group of riders spending the night in Raleigh expected to continue their trip Wednesday morning.

NAACP Sets Picket Plan Of Stations

TAMPA, Fla. (UPI) — The NAACP said it would send investigators into Greyhound and Trailways bus terminals in north Florida and south as far as Fort Myers to check on alleged racial discrimination.

Robert W. Saunders, state NAACP field secretary, said the team, headed by the Rev. E. C. Tillman of Daytona Beach, would attempt to eat at terminal restaurants and use other facilities. He said there might be a number of white persons on the team.

Saunders said following a report that signs designating color were removed from the Tallahassee Greyhound terminal, several persons attempted to be served at its restaurant but "met with resistance."

Tallahassee police said Negroes tried to integrate the restaurant but boarded a bus for Jacksonville after failing to get service. Officers said there was no disturbance.

FREEDOM RIDERS REACH CAROLINA

Raleigh Calm as 2 Groups Arrive on Way to Florida

RALEIGH, N. C., June 15 (AP)—New groups of thirty-two white and Negro Freedom Riders traveling south from Washington by regularly scheduled bus to test racial segregation arrived today in Raleigh and Wilmington, N. C. without incident.

It was the first organized interracial bus journey from Washington since a similar expedition last month ended in rioting and the burning of a bus in Alabama.

The first group of fourteen—five white men, five Negro men, two white women and two Negro women—stayed only a few minutes before proceeding to Wilmington, where they all spent the night in a Negro hotel.

At Wilmington there were about 150 persons on the streets and near the bus station awaiting their arrival, mostly young white persons. The policemen were inside and outside the bus station. There was no disturbance.

This group plans to divide into two, tomorrow. Both groups plan to spend tomorrow night in Jacksonville, Fla., and arrive in St. Petersburg, Fla., on Friday.

Another group, composed of eighteen white and Negro ministers, came into Raleigh several hours later. This group included four Rabbis, and fourteen Protestant clergymen, eight white and six Negro.

The first group of fourteen was the Rev. Robert J. Stone, a white minister, who is pastor of the Adams-Parkhurst Presbyterian Church in New York. He said there had been no incidents and the trip had been uneventful.

Invitation Accepted

The group, joined by two members of the party from the earlier bus, accepted an invitation to spend the night on the campus of Shaw University, a Negro institution in the city.

The riders planned to meet with summer students at Shaw and tell them of their trip and their reason for making it.

They planned to leave Raleigh in the morning and ride to Jacksonville, where a dinner stop is planned tomorrow night, after which they will re-enter the bus and go on to Tallahassee, Fla.

Dr. Grady Davis, a Raleigh Negro minister, headed the welcoming party that met both groups of riders.

He said there had been no expectation of difficulty at the Raleigh bus station. All facilities there have been integrated for some time, he added.

The Rev. Gordon D. Negen, pastor of New York's Manhattan Christian Reformed Church, with the first group, said the trip had gone "very fine" up to the arrival in Raleigh.

Treated With Courtesy

"We have been treated with the utmost courtesy," he said. "We hope it will be that way all the way," he said.

There were eight whites and six Negroes in the first party.

Dr. Davis is president of the Raleigh Citizens Association, a group which seeks improvements in race relations. He also is head of the Department of Religion at Shaw University.

The stop at Wilmington already had drawn the attention of City Solicitor John M. Walker. In a letter Sunday, he advised "all of our citizens and lawful visitors to keep our personal and public conduct above research during these unwarranted invasions of our area so that the real troublemakers and their mistaken or subversive leaders and advisors may be detected and ultimately exposed for what they are."

Both parties of riders were trained by the Congress of Racial Equality before leaving on the trip.

The ministers and rabbis on the "Interfaith Freedom Ride" are due in Tallahassee Thursday. Then they will fly back to New York for a news conference Friday.

2 to Sue Mississippians

Mark Lane, Democratic Assemblyman of Manhattan, and Percy E. Sutton, president of the Manhattan branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, announced yesterday that they would sue Mississippi officials for violating their rights.

Mr. Lane, who is white, and Mr. Sutton were arrested and jailed in Jackson for eleven hours last Thursday when they attempted to use segregated facilities at the air terminal. Municipal Court Judge James J. Spencer fined them $200 each and sentenced them to four-month jail terms.

32 Freedom Riders to Go South Today

Some 32 Freedom Riders, including 22 Protestant and Jewish clergymen, are scheduled to leave Washington this morning for a three-day test of bus terminal desegregation between here and Florida.

The participants will travel in two groups, one bound for Tallahassee and the other for St. Petersburg. Both groups St. Petersburg. Both groups, composed primarily of individuals from New York and New Jersey, will regularly scheduled Greyhound Lines passenger buses.

The Congress of Racial Equality (CORE), sponsor of the rides, announced yesterday that the group bound for Tallahassee will consist of 18 clergymen, seven Negro and 11 white.

This group is scheduled to leave the Greyhound terminal at 11:15 a. m. Members plan to stop and test bus terminal facilities at Raleigh, N. C.; Sumter, S. C.; Savannah, Ga.; Jacksonville, Fla., and Tallahassee. Upon reaching Tallahassee, they plan to return to New York by plane.

CORE spokesmen said the econd group will consist of our clergymen, four union officials, and six representatives f various professions. Nine re white and five Negroes.

Members of this group said esterday they would leave Vashington at 7:45 a. m. today nd make stops at Wilmington, . C.; Charleston, S. C.; Jackonville, Fla.; Tampa, Fla., and St. Petersburg. Then, they plan to fly from St. Petersburg to New York.

Marvin Rich, CORE national community relations director, said the FBI had been notified of the routes and stops the two groups would follow.

More 'Riders' Move On Dixie

Two Groups Head Down Seaboard To Test Bus Facilities

By United Press International

Two new groups of protest riders left Washington by bus yesterday and headed down the Eastern Seaboard—planning to "test segregated travel facilities from the Carolinas to Florida.

One of the groups was made up of 14 "union and professional workers." The second was an "interfaith group" comprised of 14 Protestant ministers and four rabbis.

The targets of the groups apparently were Sumter and Charleston, S. C., and Jacksonville, Tallahassee, Tampa and St. Petersburg, Fla.

The rabbis and ministers were to stop overnight at Raleigh, N. C., where they will be housed in private homes.

Pressure Off Mississippi

Wilmington, N. C., will be the overnight stopover point for the "union and professional" group.

The new rides temporarily took the spotlight off Mississippi and Alabama, where the self-styled "Freedom Riders" have concentrated most of their efforts to date.

Officials in North and South Carolina pointed out that "Freedom Riders" had passed through their states before without incident. They said they anticipated no trouble from the new rides.

Police in Jacksonville, Fla., where racial violence flared last summer, said they intended to "paly the situation by ear." Uniformed officers and plainclothesmen were expected to be on hand when the riders arrive.

Bryant Has Plan

Florida Gov. Farris Bryant, who was elected to office on a platform to maintain segregation by all lawful means, has said he had a "plan" for dealing with the so-called "Freedom Riders," but has refused to disclose it.

In the past month "white" and "colored" waiting room signs have been removed from the Tallahassee bus terminal, but most travelers continue to segregate themselves voluntarily.

GEN. SECRETARY U THANT VIEWS FREEDOM RIDERS

U Thant Views 'Freedom Rides' As Transition In Equality Fight

The Afro-American Date 11-11-61 P.9. Baltimore, Md.

By CHARLES P. HOWARD Sr.

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. — The almost complete stifling of the United Nations caused by the death of Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold in a plane crash near Ndola, Northern Rhodesia, while on a mission to negotiate a cease fire between United Nations forces and the forces representing the breakaway Katanga Province of the Congo, has been removed.

Actually, all the areas of disagreement between the United States and the Soviet Union, the main protagonists, have found points of accommodation though not necessarily agreement.

The deadlock which has persisted since Mr. Hammarskjold's death Sept. 18 at times seemed insoluble. The very life of the United Nations at times seemed imperiled, so adamant were each of these two major contending powers.

The man most responsible for breaking the deadlock was U Thant of Burma, whom both the United States and the Soviet Union had agreed upon several weeks ago, as acceptable to both of them. He has held conferences with the four great powers, the United States, the Soviet Union, United Kingdom and France.

A SPECIAL SESSION of the Security Council was held Friday and then the 103 member general assembly was called to confirm the nomination by the Security Council and elect Mr. Thant as acting secretary-general.

Considerable face saving has gone into letting Mr. Thant write his own ticket. He will be the sole Secretary - General with no obligation to accept the advice of assistants. The number of assistants will be determined by U. Thant. The "troika" idea is out and the principles of the Charter remain pretty well intact.

So at last it appears that the United Nations will have as its Chief Executive U Thant (U means Mr.; Burmese have no first names.) He is a former high school teacher who smokes chain-wise, a small cigar, much in the Hammarskjold manner. He is 52 years old and keeps his excellent form by walking and swimming and observes the Buddhist's virtues of concentration and detachment.

Unlike Hammarskjold, who was a bachelor, Thant is married, has a married daughter, Aye Aye, 22 years old, who, like her husband is Burmese - attended college in the New York area. He also has a son, Timmy, 19, who attended college here.

Thant, though he does not consider himself so, is a leading Buddhist scholar. However, he quotes freely from Buddhist literature and often takes Buddhist attitudes toward life.

Asked if he thought he could be tough enough to stand up to the buffets of the Secretary General's office, he replied; "I agree that it is necessary to be tough and I wish I knew if I could be tough enough. Only experience will tell."

A KEY TO THANT'S philosophy can be deduced from an address delivered at the 19th Conference sponsored by the Department of Elementary School Principals, NEA, National Association of Secondary School Principals, NEA, and the University of Wisconsin, 6 July 1961. In this address he said, quoting his Prime Minister, "U Nu spoke for millions of other peoples when he said this. Among other things the United States of America symbolizes human freedom and human equality, but this image has been greatly tarnished by reports of violent racial conflicts in the deep South.

"Understandingly, these happenings have tremendous repercussions abroad, especially in non - white countries of Asia and Africa, and they create tensions which are in many ways more explosive than political and cold war tensions.

"One may well argue that over the years race relations in the United States of America has been peaceful and harmonious, but this peace and harmony has been only the absence of overt tensions rather than the presence of justice which your great country stands for.

"The Freedom Riders journeying to the South are looked upon in Asia and Africa as the Champions for the colored American's holy war for freedom. It is obvious that their struggle is not purely a racial one; it has profound political implications. The traditional battleground of fighters for civil rights in this country for many years has been the courts of law. But court victories are only limited victories, since Congress has consistantly refused to endorse them by passing law-enforcement legislation.

"Therefore, to fight in the courts is considered ineffectual, and more important, it is also to limit the colored man's goal to the integration of specific institutions rather than to the political revolution that would transform the institutions.

"THE FIGHTERS for racial equality have in the last three years, changed their strategy. In 1958, 30,000 young men and women marched on Washington; last year lunch-counter sit - in demonstrations were organized and now we are witnessing freedom rides. These developments are transitions from the old law court strategy to the new strategy of mass direct action. From available reports, the next strategy will be mass sit-downs not at lunch counters or in bus waiting room but at the polling stations.

"I have a feeling that in no distant future the battle for enfranchisement will supersede the battle for integration. Most western democracies have traveled the road to universal sufferage, often with considerable class warfare, in the nineteenth century, and the Southern States will walk the same road, I hope, without serious blemishes on the image of the United States."

THANT WENT ON to quote Edward R. Murrow, head of the United States Information Agency, who said, "I think it would be a mistake to base our action against discrimination mainly on the ground that our image abroad is being hurt. We should attack this problem because it is right that we do so. We cannot make good news out of bad practices."

Thant further said, "I would appeal to the Great American people, especially the educators and leaders of thought, to help in the acceleration of the common objectives of justice and equality."

Riders Go Through Georgia

Restaurant Man Hits Cameraman

Three groups of "freedom riders" passed through coastal Georgia Thursday seeking to test possible segregation policies in bus stations. They found none, and there were no incidents.

However, in Savannah, the manager of the Union Bus Station's restaurant took a poke at a television cameraman who was trying to snap a racially mixed group while it dined.

Police guarded many of the bus stations along the route the "freedom riders" took through South Carolina, Georgia and Florida. But even the curious were absent in some cities.

The only refusal of service was at Lake City, Fla. Nine members of a party of Jewish rabbis and Negro and white Protestant ministers sat about 10 or 15 minutes at a bus station snack bar while no one waited on them.

GET SERVICE

Interracial groups were served without hesitation at terminals in Savannah, and Jacksonville and Tallahassee, Fla.

At Savannah, three groups of Negroes and white persons ate together at the lunch counter in Union Bus Terminal. They were served by white waitresses.

Police cars surrounded the terminal and plainclothesmen were stationed inside when the second group arrived. Four Negroes and three whites were served. There were no spectators other than the police and newsmen.

When the third group arrived around 1:45 p.m., the bus station was crowded. White patrons paid little or no attention but a hallway outside was crowded with spectators.

POLICE ALERT

Johnson said he wouldn't have minded the picture-taking if permission had been asked.

Along U.S. 17 in Georgia, local and state police became concerned when a car bearing a lone white man followed a bus for miles. They checked and found he was a reporter assigned to cover the riders.

The largest crowd was at Tallahassee, where about 200 whites and Negroes crowded into the terminal and many watched as the "riders" ate.

Two members of the party of clergymen reported they were pushed out of the white restroom by two white men. The ministers, one white and the other Negro, spoke to a policeman who told them to go back in. They did and did not report a further incident.

The 18 white and Negro clergymen then went to the new Tallahassee Airport to fly back to New York where they will have a press conference Friday. But before they boarded their plane, they were refused service at the white restaurant. The manager told them it was closed temporarily and would be reopened shortly. Ten stayed behind to make sure he kept his word, and the other eight flew home.

2 Bus Trips Planned

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, June 12—Two more busloads of Freedom Riders, one composed of rabbis and Protestant ministers, the other of professional people and union men, will leave here tomorrow to test bus segregation on the route to Florida.

Spokesmen for the Congress of Racial Equality, which is sponsoring the two rides, said that they had notified the Federal Bureau of Investigation. They said that local police along the way had been notified by the Washington Police but that state highway patrol authorities had not been informed.

The announcement of the trip was madeat a news conference here today. Most of those who will make the trip attended, wearing large blue and white buttons saying "Freedom Rider."

Fourteen ministers — seven white and seven Negro—and four rabbis will ride one bus. They plan to go from Washington tomorrow to Raleigh, N. C., stay overnight there and then go on to Sumter, S. C., Jacksonville, Fla., and finally to Tallahassee, Fla., where they expect to end the trip Thursday.

The other group of fifteen people will include a doctor, students, teachers and labor representatives. They plan to go to Wilmington, N. C., and spend the night. There they plan to split up into two busloads and continue on to Charleston, S. C., and Jacksonville, Fla. One group expects to complete the tour in St. Petersburg Thursday. One detachment plans to branch off to test facilities at Tampa, Fla.

Miss Genevieve Hughes, a field secretary for C. O. R. E. and an original Freedom Rider, said that she expected that the integrated groups to be given service at all stops but Tallahassee and Tampa.

Massive Bus Blitz Hits Savannah

BY PREZZANT W. ANDERSON
(Courier Roving Reporter)...

SAVANNAH, Ga. — Although seven Negroes were jailed last week for playing basketball at a white basketball court in Municipal Park, the big news here in recent weeks was the city-wide bus blitzkreig staged by the Savannah NAACP on the eve of its 4th weekly mass meeting, Jan. 22.

Results of the "ride-in" were varied.

The "ride-ins" were staged under the chairmanship of the Rev. L. S. Stell Jr., to ascertain the truth of a statement reportedly made by Savannah Transit Company president Hadley Cammack that the bus company no longer required its passengers to seat themselves on a segregated basis.

The committee also desired that both white and Negro citizens would know that Negroes possess the constitutional right to sit wherever they desired, and that continued separation of the races by custom and tradition denies Negroes their Constitutional rights and robs them of their human dignity.

HERE ARE SOME of the results of the "ride-ins":

Four young ladies, Misses Carrie Orr and Katie Mustipher and Mrs. Dolly Russell and Magnolia Moxley, boarded the Daffin Park No. 8 bus and seated themselves on a non-segregated basis. Miss Orr sat by a white lady, who stood up and commented: "There it is, you can have it!" This group transferred to the Henry St. bus, and Miss Orr and the bus driver had an extended conversation about the payment of the extra cost for a transfer.

As the group boarded the bus, a white female passenger proceeded to leave by the front door and bumped into one of the young Negro ladies. The young lady remarked that: "undoubtedly she is going to knock me down. Probably she can't read the sign which indicates that all passengers should leave by the rear door. At this point the bus driver said: "She leaves by the way I tell her to go. He then pulled out a pistol, apparently as a means of intimidation or to frihgten the young ladies. They didn't frighten.

GROUP II under direction of Mrs. Ethel Luten, president of the Women's Auxiliary of the Savannah NAACP branch, including Mrs. Marie Haywood and others, rode on the Barnard St. bus. The driver was very courteous and cordial and made no objection when the ladies occupied the front seat. This group transfered to the Abercorn St. bus.

Several interesting incidents occurred on the Abercorn St. bus. Two white persons refused to board the bus after seeing Negroes sitting on the front seats. Two minutes later a young white girl boarded the bus and sat beside one of the Negro ladies without any hesitation.

A middle-aged white woman joined the passenger and sat in the back of the bus. She motioned a white man who was standing after refusing to sit by a Negro and he took the seat next to her. It appeared that they were discussing the integrated bus.

GROUP III was made up of Misses Carolyn Quilloin and Dorothy Martin. They boarded the Isle of Hope bus in Isle of Hope and proceeded to return to the city.

Two young white girls sat next to Miss Quilloin and did not seem to object. A white man seemed disturbed over seeing the young ladies seated in the front of the bus. He talked with the driver and looked scornfully at the young Negro ladies during the entire trip to town.

As the bus approached Abercorn and Broughton Sts., the man pulled out a knife and thrust it toward Miss Quilloin. She shielded herself with her purse. When Miss Quilloin and Martin left the bus, they followed the man to Bull and Broughton Sts. (in downtown Savannah) where he crossed the street and went into Morris' Cafeteria.

Six young people, Miss Flowers, Henry, Ben and Freddie West, Miss Inez West and and Samuel Truell, made up another group and rode the East Savannah bus. They occupied front seats and were asked by the driver to move to the rear. They refused to move.

During the afternoon, a group composed of James Brown and Misses Carolyn Quilloin and Sheila Bethel took the Daffin Park No. 8 bus at Broughton and Abercorn Sts.

These young people rode to Daffin Park unmolested by either the driver or passengers. They transferred to the Henry St. bus at Victory Dr. and Water Ave. and rode on front seats back to town without any incidents.

Savannah NAACP branch president Wesley W. Law and Miss Virgiia Mack, rode the Abercorn bus. Both occupied front seats to the end of the line without any incident. Mr. Law and Miss Mack returned on the Henry St. bus, occupying front seats unmolested in any manner.

The blitzkrieg had a profound impact upon the consciousness of Savannah citizens and the NAACP regarded the "ride-in" as successful. The next day—Sunday—the mass meeting was addressed by Rev. Otis Moss Jr., vice president of the Atlanta branch NAACP.

'Freedom Rider' Notices Lead To Arrest of 2 in LaGrange

The Atlanta Constitution

Atlanta Ga.

LAGRANGE (AP)—Two men were arrested Wednesday after distributing pamphlets advertising that "Freedom Riders" would be coming through town.

Journ. 5-25-61

Charged with inciting to riot and violating the city anti-pamphlet ordinance were two men identified by police as W. C. Hancock, 38, Hapeville, and C. R. Hammond, 28, Newnan.

p. 14

Police said that they arrested the two men after they had driven around town handing out leaflets containing the following:

"There will be a trouble-making group in our town today at 7:40 p.m. at the Greyhound bus station. This is a trip being made to integrate our town. These Negroes and trouble-making white people are being protected by people that are being paid with our tax money."

The leaflets were effective but inaccurate.

More than 100 persons gathered at the bus station at 7:40, but the bus carrying the Freedom Riders had gone through town without incident nearly five hours earlier at 3 p.m.

Fifteen policemen were on hand at the bus station Wednesday night, but no incidents occurred.

Police said that there was every indication others were involved because telephone calls advertising the bus were made to residents after Hancock and Hammond were arrested.

The two men were taken to jail in lieu of $1,000 bond each, officers said. They face a hearing Friday morning in Recorders Court.

LaGrange Quiet, Holds 5 As 'Freedom Riders' Pass

The Atlanta Constitution

Atlanta Ga.

LaGRANGE (AP)—All was reported quiet at this city near the Alabama-Georgia line Thursday after police jailed and put under bond five outsiders in connection with the passing of a "freedom rider" bus.

Journ. 5-26-61

Police Chief Troy E. McClung said all of the men carried membership application blanks, identification cards or other papers indicating they are either members or would-be members of the Ku Klux Klan.

p. 19

In the car of one, C. L. Handley, 29, of Hapeville, he reported, were found three loaded pistols, a blackjack, billiard cue stick and a hammer. Another, W. C. Hancock, 38, also of Hapeville, was armed, the chief added, but had an official pistol permit.

ALL POST BOND

All of the five posted $1,000 bond each for appearance in Recorders Court at 9 a.m. Friday. Hancock and C. R. Hammonds, 28, of Rte. 5, Newnan, were charged with inciting to riot and violating an anti-pamphlet ordinance. The former is a state charge, on which the city court can only bind over to a higher tribunal.

These two were arrested late Wednesday after, McClung reported, they had hired a bevy of small boys to blanket the city with pamphlets proclaiming that a "trouble-making" group of white and Negro "freedom riders" would be at the bus station at 7:40 p.m. "to integrate our town."

MISSED BUS

Picked up about 9 p.m. and charged with idling and loitering were Handley and two Newnan men listed as Tommy Jones, 44, Rte. 1, and L. W. Chase, 32, Rte. 5.

Actually, a Greyhound bus bearing seven "freedom riders," four white college professors and three Negro students went through the city without incident just before 3 p.m. en route to Montgomery, Ala., Mississippi and Louisiana.

There were no "freedom riders" on the 7:40 bus. The police chief said about 100 persons were gathered at the station at its arrival, made up largely of the idly curious.

McClung said his men closed in on the five outsiders after the pamphlets were passed out and they began to button-hole "some of our more susceptible" residents in groups of four or five, trying to stir up trouble.

"They seemed to be doing a fair to middling job of it," he observed.

3 Fined, 2 Held In LaGrange Plot

The Atlanta Constitution

Atlanta Ga. p-17

LA GRANGE (AP)—Recorder's court imposed heavy fines against three men Monday and bound two others over to a higher court on charges of trying to stir up trouble in connection with the passage through the city of a "freedom riders" bus.

The court said the action resulted from efforts of the five persons, some of whom were armed, to incite disorders last Wednesday night through the circulation of handbills proclaiming that "Freedom Riders" would be at the bus depot at 7:40 p.m.

Journ. 5-30-61

Actually, the riders—four white members of Eastern college faculties and four Negro youths—had passed through the city virtually unnoticed four hours earlier. The riders were arrested and jailed when they reached Montgomery in their expedition which started at Atlanta.

CHARGED WITH IDLING

The fines of $135 each were levied against C. L. Handley, 29, of Hapeville; Thommy Jones, 44, and L. W. Chase, 32, both of Newnan. All were charged with idling and loitering.

Bound over to Superior Court on inciting to riot charges were W. C. Hancock, 38, of Hapeville, and C. R. Hammond, 28, of Newnan.

Police Chief Troy E. McClung said he found pistols, a hammer and a billiard cue in the car used by the five in their trip to LaGrange. A batch of Ku Klux Klan literature also was confiscated. Hancock was armed but McClung said he had an official permit to carry a pistol.

HANDBILLS DISTRIBUTED

The chief charged they moved into town and hired a band of boys to distribute the inflammatory handbills advising that "Freedom Riders" were on the way to "integrate our town."

All had been at liberty on $1,000 bonds since their arrest.

After Monday's court action Hancock and Hammond were freed under bonds of $2,000 each pending grand jury action. The grand jury meets next in August.

Tells 'Riders' To Clean Up Chicago's Race Bias

WASHINGTON — (UPI) — Sen Olin D. Johnston, D-S.C. said the "Freedom Riders" should go to Chicago and "clean up their own backyards."

Johnston said the removal of 80 Negro refugees from a Chicago church by a shouting, jeering crowd of white persons, as reported by the Red Cross, was "one of the most shameful happenings that I have read about in a long time."

"In South Carolina we practice segregation," Johnston said in a Senate speech, "but never in history has anything like this happened in my state.

"Should any Negro residents ever be burned out of their homes," he added, "I can safely say that neighboring South Carolina white people would be more than happy to shelter them in their church and would not revert to mob violence and throw them out on the streets."

RALLIED TOGETHER

He said a sizable number of the Freedom Riders came from Chicago and suggested they return to teach their people "something about humanitarianism."

"The people of the South," Johnston said, "while practicing segregation have never turned on one another in times of distress and acted in such a repugnant and unChristianlike way.

"To the contrary," he added "in times of crisis the whites and Negroes of the South have always rallied together to overcome whatever difficulty is besetting them."

ORDERS PROBE

In the meantime in Chicago police superintendent Orlando W. Wilson has ordered an investigation of the disturbance that forced removal of the group from a church shelter in a predominantly white neighborhood.

Wilson said he ordered deputy superintendent James B. Conlisk to gather a full report "on what took place and what action was taken by police."

The incident occurred when 100 residents of the old Douglas Hotel were made homeless by a fire. Red Cross volunteers took them to the Holy Cross Lutheran Church at 3118 S. Racine.

Mrs. Albert H. Constien, wife of the church pastor, said a crowd of white persons assembled shortly after the fire victims arrived at the church.

THREATEN PLACE

"I was in the basement and I wouldn't want to say I recognized any of them," she said. "They were looking in the windows and shouting. They threatened to destroy the church if we didn't get the Negroes out of the building."

John M. Angle, Chicago public information director for the Red Cross, said "the Red Cross people at the scene said there seemed to be some chance of ugliness developing and the Red Cross decided that the people should be taken elsewhere. It was our decision but it was taken at the suggestion of the minister."

Mrs. Constien said "we were very surprised when this happened. There has been no racial trouble in this area."

Mayor Richard J. Daley blamed teen-agers for the incident.

However, the refugees and nurses sent there to help them, said that 40 per cent of the mob of about 1,000 were adults.

No 'Freedom' Bus Rides Planned Here For Now

There will be no "freedom" bus rides starting in Louisville in the immediate future.

That was the announcement yesterday by Charles McDew, Orangeburg, S. C., chairman of the Student Nonviolent Co-ordinating Committee which met for three days here.

McDew, a student at South Carolina State College, said some 22 persons from six states attended the conference, which ended yesterday.

A committee statement pledged increasing support to sit-in efforts and "freedom rides" to test integration policies of interstate bus terminals and facilities.

The statement also said the annual fall conference of the committee would be in Nashville. No date was set.

Federal Court Turns Down Rider's 'Hurry Up' Appeal

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals Saturday turned down a woman "Freedom Rider's" request for an expedited hearing of her habeas corpus appeal.

Elizabeth Porter Wyckoff, a 46-year-old New York free lance writer and former Greek professor, is appealing a lower federal court rejected for a writ of habeas copus.

She contends she is illegally jailed in Mississippi because her legal rights were violated when she was arrested on a breach of peace charge.

She asked for a quick hearing because she is a short-term prisoner and may serve her full sentence before her appeal can be heard by going through regular channels.

But the appeals court, in denying an order for a speed-up appeal hearing, said she can make bond and thus gain her freedom pending her appeal.

EXHAUST REMEDIES

The appeals court also noted the record does not indicate Miss Wyckoff attempted to exhaust remedies available to her in the state courts.

U.S. Judge Sidney Mize of Biloxi, in denying her writ, had pointed out she had not first gone into state courts.

In addition to expediting her appeals hearing, Miss Wyckoff had asked to appeal from the original court papers rather than have a printed version made up—to save time. The court also denied this.

The decision came from Chief Appeals Judge Elbert Tuttle of Atlanta, and Judges Warren Jones of Jacksonville, Fla., and John Minor Wisdom of New Orleans. It was unanimous.

Justice Black Turns Down Mixer's Bid For Release

WASHINGTON (AP) — Justice Hugo L. Black of the Supreme Court Wednesday turned down a bid to win release of a "Freedom Rider" from a Mississippi prison.

The habeas corpus action was brought on behalf of Elizabeth Porter Wyckoff, 45, of New York City, who contended her conviction was unconstitutional and invalid.

In a brief opinion, Black said there was not enough evidence to show that all state legal processes had been exhausted.

Justice Tom C. Clark, only other member of the Supreme Court available at this time, concurred in Black's action. The court is in summer recess.

Miss Wyckoff, now confined in the Mississippi State Penitentiary at Parchman, was arrested last month in Jackson, Miss., when she joined other Freedom Riders in an attempt to enter areas of a bus terminal designated for white persons.

Convicted of a breach of the peace, she was sentenced to two months in jail or a fine of $200. She is scheduled for release Aug. 11.

The habeas corpus action was filed in her behalf Tuesday by William M. Kunstler, New York attorney for the American Civil Liberties Union. He said appeals to state courts were useless on such a charge, and contended a pending appeal to the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals could not be decided before the sentence is due to expire.

The petition contended that under the U.S. Constitution and laws and rulings of the Interstate Commerce Commission, Miss Wyckoff had a right to enter any area of the bus terminal. Therefore it added, her conviction was unconstitutional and should be set aside.

Black's opinion said the petition was denied without prejudice to the right of its presentation to any other member of the court.

It said:

"This petition for habeas corpus is denied because the factual allegations fall far short of showing that there are not Mississippi State processes available by appeal or otherwise for petitioner to challenge her state conviction, which processes would effectively protect her constitutional rights, particularly since any denial of such rights by the highest court of a state can be remedied by appropriate appellate proceedings in the Supreme Court of the United States."

Federal Judges Refuse Quick Hearing Request By Writer

By The Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS, July 22.—The United States Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals Saturday turned down a woman protest rider's request for an expedited hearing of her habeas corpus appeal.

Elizabeth Porter Wyckoff, a 46-year-old New York free lance writer and former Greek professor, is appealing a lower Federal Court rejected for a writ of habeas corpus.

She contends she is illegally jailed in Mississippi because her legal rights were violated when she was arrested on a breach of peace charge.

U. S. Judge To Hear Appeal Of Freedom Rider

Judge John Minor Wisdom of the United States Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals here allowed a "convicted" Freedom Rider the right to take an appeal to a lower court decision rejecting her petition for a writ of habeas corpus last week.

The case is that of Elizabeth Wyckoff, a 46-year-old white New York free lance writer. Judge Wisdom signed a certificate of probable cause allowing her to appeal a June 5 conviction in the Jackson, Miss., city court.

Miss Wyckoff was arrested June 2 in the Trailways Bus terminal in Jackson for a "breach of the peace." She was convicted and sentenced by Judge James Spencer to a $200 fine and 60 days suspended jail term.

She refused to pay the fine and elected to go to the state prison to work out her fine at the rate of $3.00 per day.

Federal Judge Shirley L. Mize for the Southern District of Mississippi rejected her petition for a writ of habeas corpus and also refused to sign a certificate of probable cause which would allow her to appeal her decision.

Judge Mize held that Miss Wyckoff had not exhausted her state remedies but her attorney, William Kuntsler, claimed that because of the short term of the sentence the exhausting of her state remedies would deprive her of the right to habeas corpus.

'Hymn-Singing' Freedom Riders Under Arrest

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — Four of 15 Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) members arrested Wednesday after their midnight hymn sing in police headquarters were freed on $500 bond each yesterday after all pleaded innocent.

The 15 Negroes said they staged the sitdown demonstration in the police offices in protest of what they said was police brutality against three out-of-state white Freedom Riders here Aug. 15.

In all, 19 CORE members staged the sitdown, but four left after police chief Joseph Giarrusso said their spiritual singing was interferring with police radio broadcasting and asked the group to leave.

The remaining 15 were jailed on charges of refusing to move on, remaining in a place after being forbidden to remain, holding an unlawful assembly, and vagrancy by loitering in a public place.

Attorneys Robert Collins and Lolis Elie entered pleas of innocent to all charges for the nine women and six men, mostly college students.

H. G. Maynor, New Orleans chief of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, said he had sent a report through channels of the Aug. 15 incident in which two Californians and one New York man suffered cuts and bruises.

One of the three men, George Blevins, 21, Los Angeles, said police arrested them on a phoney vagrancy charge to prevent them from appealing Freedom Ride convictions in Jackson, Miss. He said in the paddywagon, police kicked them and beat them with blackjacks.

The police said the three were arrested because of a complaint of a loud party, and said another prisoner in the paddywagon got involved in a scuffle with the three, and that one officer was assaulted when he tried to break up the fight in the wagon.

FREEDOM RIDERS
SUPREME COURT FREES

Sit-In Case Convictions Overturned

Montgomery Advertiser
5 Tues, 12 12 61
Montgomery, Ala.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court overturned Monday the conviction of 16 Negro sit-in demonstrators in Louisiana but left unanswered broad constitutional questions raised by the sit-in controversy.

The Congress of Racial Equality quickly hailed the decision as the dawning of a "new day" for Negroes, but officials of Southern states said it would have little effect on hundreds of similar pending cases.

The attorney general of Louisiana said the high court did not pass on the constitutionality of the state's so-called sit-in law.

UNANIMOUS DECISION

Chief Justice Earl Warren, delivering the court's opinion, pointedly confined the unanimous decision to the Constitution's due process clause as applied to the convictions.

He said it was not necessary to consider other constitutional questions raised in the Louisiana cases —freedom of expression and equal protection.

Nor, Warren said, was it necessary to decide in Monday's decision whether a private business owner has the right to serve only whom he chooses, a question Louisiana had raised. He said that in the three 1960 Baton Rouge cases involved, at no time did representatives of the store owners ask the Negroes to leave the "white only" lunch counters.

OTHER QUESTIONS

These other questions could be touched on if the court agrees to hear Virginia and North Carolina sit-in cases presented to it.

The 16 Negroes, all students of Southern University in Baton Rouge, were convicted under a Louisiana law making it a breach of the peace to "act in such a manner as to unreasonably disturb or alarm the public."

Each was sentenced to four months in prison, with three months to be suspended on payment of $100 fines.

Warren said there was no evidence that the Negroes "disturbed the peace, either by outwardly boisterous conduct or by passive conduct likely to cause a public disturbance."

OWN OPINION

"The undisputed evidence," he said, "shows that the police who arrested the petitioners were left with nothing to support their actions except their own opinions that it was a breach of peace for the petitioners to sit peacefully in a place where custom decreed they should not sit."

Louisiana had contended that the police were justified in making the arrests because they feared violence might erupt.

In Louisiana, State Atty. Gen. Jack Gremillion said it appeared to him that the Supreme Court overturned the 16 convictions merely on grounds of lack of evidence.

"The constitutionality of Louisiana's so called sit-in laws has not been passed on and so far as the state is concerned, they are valid legislation," Gremillion said.

Gremillion would not say flatly whether arrests will continue under the law. And officials a Baton Rouge would not say—pending a reading of the opinion—whether the 16 Negroes will b retried.

NO EFFECT

In Little Rock, Arkansas Atty Gen. Frank Holt said the decisio will have no effect on simila cases pending in that state. "It would seem that each sit-in cas still stands on its own merits.

The Congress of Racial Equality said 300 "Freedom Riders were arrested in Jackson, Miss under a law word for word lik Louisiana's, and that under th decision such arrests should b ended.

Justice William O. Dougla while agreeing with the majorit went further in a concurring opi ion, declaring:

"I do not believe that a sta that licenses a business can cense it to serve only white only black or only yellows only browns."

PUBLIC USE

He said the authority to licen a business "for public use is d rived from the public" and th "Negroes are as much a part o the public as are whites."

In other decisions Monday, the court:

—Unanimously declared a Florida loyalty oath required for all the state's employees is so vague it violates constitutional due process.

—Ruled 6-3 that the Federal Trade Commission has the right to see copies of confidential reports prepared by manufacturers for the Census Bureau.

—Refused to interfere with an order permitting pupils in the predominantly Negro Lincoln elementary school in New Rochelle, N.Y., to transfer without restriction to other schools in the city.

—Set aside 5-4 the conviction of John J. Killian, former Milwaukee labor leader, on charges that he falsely denied he ever was a Communist.

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Breach of peace charges against 40 juveniles, arrested in an integration demonstration, were dismsied Tuesday in criminal court.

12-13-61

The U. S. Supreme Court decision of Monday, which threw out convictions in sit-in cases in Louisiana, was a factor in the juveniles' case, Commonwealth's attorney Laurence Higgins said. He said there was no evidence of breach of peace in the Louisiana case, and there was no evidenec of boisterousness or violence among the juveniles.

The youths were arrested on June 15 and June 19 after they formed lines in front of gates at a privately owned segregated Louisville amusement park, seeking admission, Higgins said. Whites also gathered and arrests of both whites and Negroes followed.

Cases of the juveniles were taken to criminal court after they were found guilty in juvenile court and placed on probation.

Three adults, also arrested in racial demonstrations, were fined. They were arrested at restaurants.

Police Reception Laid For Nazis

Jackson Daily News Jackson, Miss.

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — City police hung out a "not welcome" sign today for a group of Nazis who say they're headed for New Orleans for the avowed purpose of creating trouble if and when "freedom riders" arrive. p-3

The group of six "National" Nazis, headed by Doug Olelfkee, 27, of Memphis, Tenn., were last reported somewhere between New Orleans and Pensacola, Fla.

Olelfkee said earlier at Pensacola, his group was shipping tear gas and swastika arm bands into New Orleans. He admitted participating in racial riots at Montgomery, Ala., over the weekend and said one of his Nazis hurled tear gas bomb into a Negro church. Sat. 5-26-61

Meanwhile, another group of Nazis—who claim no association with Olelfkee's group — remained in the parish jail here after Dist. Atty. Richard Dowling accepted charges of disturbing the peace lodged against them.

The jailed Nazis, headed by American Nazi Party Fuehrer George Lincoln Rockwell, called their arrests Wednesday night a "farce" and refused to post bail.

Rockwell, 43, said his group would adopt the pacifist "jail, no bail" tactics of the integrationists he opposes.

"It's time the white man did the same as the 'niggers' and stayed in jail to protest for our rights," said Rockwell. Police permitted newsmen to interview him at the prison.

He said he and his nine "storm troopers" would remain in jail as long as necessary as a protest action.

The Nazis came to New Orleans aboard a "hate bus" which paralleled the route of the freedom riders through the Deep South. Their announced purpose in New Orleans was to picket the movie "Exodus" and National Association for the Advancement of Colored People activities.

The Nazis were charged under a state anti-integration statute making it illegal to disturb the peace in a manner which might alarm the public.

Dowling announced he would file similar charges against any other agitators, including freedom riders, who come to New Orleans.

Meanwhile, the city council adopted a resolution calling on the police department to escort freedom riders and other agitators non-stop through the city.

New Orleans Tour Began By Rockwell

The Washington Post Washington D.C. Wed 5-24-61

NEW ORLEANS, May 23 (UPI)—George Lincoln Rockwell, self-proclaimed fuehrer of the American Nazi Party, flew into New Orleans today to lead a "hate campaign" against Negroes and Jews.

He said he and 10 of his "Storm Troopers" would demonstrate here against the NAACP, the Congress On Racial Equality (CORE), and "Exodus," a film opening Wednesday night which depicts the Jewish struggle to create Israel.

His khaki-shirted "Storm Troopers" were scheduled to arrive here later traveling in a car and a Volkswagen bus.

But at strife-torn Montgomery, Ala., sheriff's deputies and National Guardsmen swiftly escorted the "Hate Caravan" through and out of the city.

Louisiana Gov. Jimmie H. Davis said he did not welcome the Nazi party into the state any more than he did the "Freedom Riders." Last night he issued a statement urging both groups to stay out of Louisiana.

State troopers would not reveal whether they have any plans concerning Rockwell's presence here. City police would say only that they "will do everything necessary to keep peace."

Rockwell, a former commercial artist and publisher from Arlington, Va., said his troops would be uniformed and wearing swastika armbands.

He said he expected no trouble during the planned picketing here.

Mob Victim Hints At Nazi Link In Alabama Violence

By JOHN E. ROUSSEAU

"While the trooper was talking to the driver, the bomb came through the rear window. It was incredible. The bus was filled with black, terrible smoke and outside these hoodlums were shouting 'Heil Hitler' and 'Sieg Heil'."

This was not testimony in the internationally-sensational Adolph Eichmann trial as one might well deduce. It is a statement from an eye-witness to the Alabama mob violence of May 14, 1961 when some 14 members of the Freedom Ride were brutally beaten with clubs, bottles and fists, and the bus in which they were riding was bombed and burned. This happened in Anniston, Ala, U. S. A.!

One wonders, of course, why would a mob of semi-illiterate rural whites be yelling these foreign words, "Heil Hitler" and "Sieg Heil."

The entire story of the Freedom Ride from Washington-to-Birmingham then by airplane to New Orleans which was sponsored by the Congress of Racial Equality is well-publicized. So, it is indeed appropriate that attention be given now to the full implications of the Nazi yells of the Anniston mob.

HITLER, THEIR IDOL

These mob techniques, the yells, and other facts which are known, when assembled form a pattern which indicated the widespread influence of the American Nazi Party - a group which idolizes and pays tribute to the memory of Adolph Hitler, The Fuehrer.

Only a week preceding the attack on Freedom Ride, the American NAZI Party (ANP) distributed circulars over the entire South. Some were passed around in New Orleans. They bore the infamous Swastika and ended with the words, "Sieg Heil!"

A few excerpts follow:

"We are back! We believe that Adolf Hitler was a gift of Providence, sent forth to save the world from the Jew-Communist menace, and to keep the White Race pure. We believe the last world war was precipitated by these Jew-Communists to eliminate the threat of the Holy Purpose of Nazism.

"We believe that we are acting in accordance with the Will of God: by defending ourselves against these Jew-Communist swine and these black animals, we are fighting for the work of th

ANOTHER HITLER

A recent issue of a national publication declared, "A Hitler is on the Loose in the U. S. A."

In a feature article on the American Nazi Party, it described one George Lincoln Rockwell as its leader and quoted him as saying much of the party's strength is still undercover. It gave the address of the headquarters as 928 North Randolph St., Arlington, Va.

"We're not going to overthrow the government," Rockwell is quoted as saying. "We won't have to. We're going to become progressively stronger all through the 1960's. And then we're going to sweep the country in the presidential election of 1972."

RECENT INCIDENTS

Thus, the Nazi-like actions of the white mob in Anniston, Ala., appear to be more than mere coincidence. It is recalled that several months ago, Beth Israel Synagogue in Gadsden, Ala., was hit with a "Molotov cocktail" - a soda pop bottle filled with gasoline - similar to the one thrown into the Freedom Riders bus at Anniston.

The bomber of the synagogue, a 16-year-old youth, shot and wounded two members of the congregation when they ran out after him. When police caught him, the youth proudly displayed a Nazi armband!

Just two weeks ago, vandals in Indianapolis, Ind., painted Nazi swastikas on homes of new Negro residents in a swank Northside neighborhood.

Here in New Orleans, the new Blessed Sacrament Church Hall in the uptown section was defaced with swastikas several months ago. This incident was not publicized and was attributed to young pranksters. But, why the swastikas?

Considering these happenings and their conformity to the Negro-hating, Jew-hating doctrine of the Hitlerites, there is no doubt that the American Nazi Party has plans for the South and for Louisiana.

10 Nazis Stage Hunger Strike Against Arrest in New Orleans

Rockwell and 9 'Storm Troopers' Await Trial After an Attempt to Picket Film—No Hearing Date Set

NEW ORLEANS, May 26 (UPI)—George Lincoln Rockwell and his "storm troopers" went on a hunger strike today in the Parish (county) jail here to protest their arrest.

Rockwell, self-styled leader of the American Nazi party, and nine of the uniformed men were jailed on charges of disturbing the peace as they attempted to picket the movie "Exodus" Wednesday night. They came here on their "Hate Bus" earlier in the week for the announced purpose of conducting demonstrations against Negroes and Jews.

An Orleans Parish jail spokesman said Rockwell, 43 years old, and his men had refused food since 4 P. M. yesterday. The jailer said the group was "polite and courteous," but that the Nazis, all from Arlington, Va., maintained they were not hungry.

The last time the men ate was yesterday morning at the city jail. They were formally charged yesterday afternoon and transferred to the Parish prison.

Trial to Be Set

The district attorney's office said no trial date has been set, but predicted it would be early next week. The charge is a misdemeanor.

Rockwell said from his city jail cell yesterday that he would not accept bond if he was charged. Each is under $500 bond.

The Nazis said they had come here at the invitation of some "very high and important people," but none of them have come forth to offer the bail.

There also has been no sign of a Nazi support party, which was supposed to have arrived today from Pensacola, Fla., to aid Rockwell and his men.

Doug Olelfkee, 27, announced yesterday that he and five men were coming herew ith "supplies of tear gas, roofing nails and other things." The New Orleans police said bluntly that "plenty of jail cells are available for them, too, if they cause any trouble."

Charges Conspiracy

Rockwell maintains that America should have fought on the side of the Nazis during World War II. He has said there was a conspiracy of "the inferior people to overcome the biologically superior people by sheer numbers."

The former naval officer charged that the "inferior people" were mostly Negroes and Jews.

The Nazi "hate" tour here has been one of almost complete frustration. In addition to being arrested, they were ejected from their motel. The police refused to let them enter a state park to paint their hate signs. And the Nazis wrecked their Hate Bus while trying to elude a state police car that was following them.

One of them, who was driving the bus when it smashed into a bus railing, was arrested on a charge of reckless driving before his comrades were hauled in for picketing. He was placed in a Jefferson Parish jail.

POLICE ACCUSED BY RACE GROUP

False Arrests Claimed in 'Loud Party' Incident

Congress of Racial Equality officials claimed Sunday that New Orleans police falsely arrested and mauled three white "freedom riders" Saturday night.

The riders were arrested for having no visible means of support after a "loud party" investigation at 2336 Gen. Taylor, police said.

After the arrest, police said the "riders" attacked another prisoner in the police wagon, assaulted police officers at headquarters, and tried to escape.

BOOKEN ON 4 CHARGES

They were booked for no visible means of support, aggravated battery on the officers, simple battery on the other prisoner, and attempted simple escape.

The accusations against New Orleans police were made by Edwin Blankenship, CORE field secretary from Tuscon, Ariz., and Jerome Smith, CORE's New Orleans chairman, as they left for Jackson, Miss., where 180 riders begin appeals Monday on peace-breaking charges.

Blankenship said the arrested men were waiting in a private home to go to Jackson when police came.

He said the three were taken to a district station and put on $25 bond Later, he said, they were moved, bookings were changed, and bond couldn't be posted.

"When I saw them late last night, they had been beaten very badly," he continued.

FIGHTING REPORT

Lt. Leo Forvendal said police went to the residence, reportedly occupied by Negroes, to check out a complaint that Negroes and whites were fighting there.

He said that he found no fighting but that a loud party was in progress. The riders said, according to Lt. Forvendal, they had no jobs, no money, and no local addresses.

They were put in the wagon with Joseph Jiminez, 25, who had been picked up for an unrelated offense. On the way to headquarters, police said a fight broke out in the wagon.

At headquarters police said they opened the door and the fight continued. Ptn. Harry Acosta and Auxiliary Sgt. H. Rosenette tried to break it up and the "freedom riders" jumped them, police reported.

According to police, the three said they had served time in Mississippi State prison on breach of peace charges stemming from a "freedom ride."

The three riders, Jiminez, and the two officers were treated at Charity hospital for bruises and lacerations.

Attack Protests Mount As FBI Intervenes 'Freedom Riders'

NEW ORLEANS — Agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, at the request of the Justice Department Tuesday interviewed members of the Dixie touring "Freedom Riders," to determine if their trouble plagued travels in Alabama involved any federal violations.

Meanwhile, the American Civil Liberties Union called for "swift action by the federal government to deal with the physical attack on the interracial group.

"Personal security, particularly where it is directly connected with the First Amendment right of peaceful expression as in the case of the traveling CORE group, must be vigorously defended," the union's executive director, Patrick Murphy Malin, said in a telegram to Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy.

While recognizing that the responsibility for law enforcement rests in the hands of local authorities, the spokesman urged Kennedy strongly to denounce the action and to make it publicly clear that the "Federal government expects local officials to prevent such attacks."

Kennedy also received a wire from the American Jewish Congress who said that federal law may have been violated in the attack. The congress asked Kennedy to probe the ambush of the buses.

The wire, signed by Shad Polier, chairman of the Commission on Law and Social Action of the Congress asked for a full investigation that the attacks may have violated volume eighteen, section thirty-three of the United States Code.

The law, enacted July 14, 1956, says in part:

"Whoever wilfully, with intent to endanger the safety of any person on board .. or with a reckless disregard for the safety of human life, damages, disables or destroys .. any motor vehicle which is used, operated or employed in interstate of foreign commerce .... shall be fined not more than ten thousand dollars or imprisoned not more than 20 years, or both."

ANOTHER THREAT

Meanwhile, the anti-integration South Louisiana Citizens Council warned of possible violence Tuesday if New Orleans officials do not "rid the community" of bi-racial "freedom riders."

An official of the council said the group feels the arrival here of the integrationists "warrants immediate action to rid the community of the agitators before violence erupts."

Gordon R. Carey, of New York, field director for the Congress on Racial Equality (CORE), sponsor of the "freedom riders" tour of Dixie, said of the Citizens' Council threat:

"We're not going anywhere until Thursday, the date we planned to leave New Orleans. This happens oftentimes."

Carey said officials and police have been "very cooperative."

Fourteen members of the pro-integration group flew into New Orleans Monday night and expressed bitterness at their treatment in Alabama, where white men burned out their bus and attacked them.

The group had to cancel their planned bus trip through Mississippi and into Louisiana when bus drivers refused to chauffeur them any farther.

The "freedom riders," bitter and weary, arrived here about midnight Monday night aboard an Eastern Airlines flight. The plane trip was delayed several hours in Birmingham, Ala., by a telephoned bomb scare.

The group left Washington earlier this month for a bus tour of the South, a deliberate effort to test Dixie's segregation laws in bus stations.

Freedom Tour Halted, Riders Go Into Hiding

United Press International.

NEW ORLEANS, May 16.—A group of biracial "freedom riders" forced to abandon an anti-segregation bus ride through the South flew to New Orleans last night and immediately went into hiding.

The group was forced to cancel their violence-marred bus caravan when bus drivers refused to chauffeur them any farther. The drivers' refusal apparently stemmed from violence surrounding two bus trips by the riders earlier this week and the refusal of Gov. John Patterson to guarantee the integrationists safe passage through Alabama.

The 16 members of the mixed racial group then arranged to fly from Birmingham, Ala., to New Orleans. But their departure was delayed when authorities received telephone call that a bomb had been placed aboard the airliner.

The integrationists were removed from the plane and a search instituted. The flight was canceled and the group eventually departed on a different flight.

The group, met at the airport here by newsmen, refused to disclose where they would stay.

"We don't know who to trust anymore," said Herman K. Harris of Englewood, N. J.

"I've never seen anything like the trouble we had in Alabama. It was inhuman and uncivilized."

He described the Anniston, Ala., incident in which their bus was burned and several of the group injured as "one of the dirtiest things I've ever seen; there wasn't a respectable face in the crowd; they had guns and were drinking."

Louisiana solons condemn 'rides'

BATON ROUGE, La., June 7 —(AP)—The Louisiana Legislature ended its 30-day fiscal session yesterday after declaring the South has a God-given right to defend itself against "hate-the-South" campaigns.

Rep. Parey Branton, Webster Parish, a House sponsor of the "hate-the-South" resolution, said in the heated House debate "all the 'freedom riders' belong at home and should leave us alone."

SEN. HAROLD MONTGOMERY, Doyline, accused the national administration of trying to "niggerize" the entire nation.

The Senate voted 25-1 approval of the resolution. The House voted for it 72-9.

Branton called the resolution a good, clean segregation resolution. It's a Southern gentlemen's resolution. If you're for segregation and opposed to the freedom riders—vote for it."

Rep. Hiram Allen, Tangipahoa, said, "In view of the fact the federal government sent armed forces to Alabama, while Fidel Castro has been taking American property and murdering people on our doorstep, aren't you sometimes a little ashamed of being an American?"

Orleans reports 2 riders may take bus to Jackson

NEW ORLEANS, May 26—(AP)—About a dozen New Orleans policemen—some in plain clothes—turned out at the city's two downtown bus terminals early today amid reports a racially mixed group would test segregation laws.

One officer said there were reports that a group of "freedom riders" might travel from New Orleans to Jackson, Miss., today.

There was no evidence of such a group at either station. Buses were scheduled to leave the city for Jackson a half-hour apart. One left apparently without any "freedom riders" aboard.

Rockwell Brings 'Hate Campaign' To New Orleans

NEW ORLEANS, May 23. —(UPI)— George Lincoln Rockwell, self-proclaimed fuehrer of the American Nazi party, flew into New Orleans Tuesday to lead a Negro-Jew "hate campaign."

The lanky, cigar-chewing Rockwell, loudly maintaining that the United States should have been on Germany's side in World War II, said he and 10 of his "storm troopers" would demonstrate here against the NAACP, the Congress on Racial Equality (CORE), and "Exodus," a film opening Wednesday night which depicts the Jewish struggle to create Israel.

He would not tell newsmen how long he planned to remain in the city, or where he was going when he left the airport. But Rockwell said Monday in Washington he planned to meet with some "very high, responsible people" in New Orleans who supported his party.

His khaki-shirted storm troopers are enroute in a small caravan which originated early Monday in Washington. They are traveling in a car and a Volkswagen bus covered with signs reading, "Lincoln Rockwell's hate bus," "We do hate race mixing," and "we hate Jew-communism."

Rockwell claimed here during a brief press conference at the airport that his troops have been "greeted as liberators" on their Southern tour.

But at strife-torn Montgomery, Ala., sheriff's deputies and National Guardsmen swiftly escorted the "hate caravan" through and out of the city.

Louisiana Gov. Jimmie H. Davis said he did not welcome the Nazi party into the state any more than he did the "Freedom Riders."

"I'm sick and tired of seeing the country run by a bunch of communists and Jews," he said, adding that his purpose here was "to prove that this nation's racial strife is communist inspired."

Rockwell said he has received invitations to go to other cities, but mentioned only Tulsa, Okla.

He said he expected no trouble during the planned picketing here.

Catholic Leader Halted Priests In Freedom Rides

The Courier 8-4
Sat 9-2-61
Pittsburgh Pa

NEW ORLEANS—A head of a Catholic society of priests admitted last week that he had stopped two New Orleans priests from taking part in the "Freedom Riders'" movement.

The Very Rev. George F. O'Dea, superior general of St. Joseph's Society of the Sacred Heart, Baltimore, Md., said he told the two priests "not to participate" and declined comment on the reason for his order.

The priests were identified as the Rev. Father Richard Wagner, 29, chaplain at Xavier University and an instructor at St. Augustine Boys High School, and the Rev. Father Philip Berrigan, 37, also a member of the faculty at St. Augustine.

THE TWO PRIESTS had left New York en route to New Orleans via Atlanta and Jackson, Miss. They intended to test racial segregation at the airport and bus terminal in Jackson.

The Most Reverend O'Dea stated that he reached the priests by telephone in Atlanta and informed them not to participate. They would have been the first Roman Catholic clergy to join in the Freedom Riders' movement.

Catholic circles here were awaiting more reprecussions on Father O'Dea's move last week.

Freedom Riders Charge N.O. Cops With Brutal Beatings

The Louisiana Weekly

The Congress of Racial Equality charged Sunday that three young white Freedom Riders were falsely arrested and brutally beaten by New Orleans police.

Oct. 8-14-61

The three, who were arrested from the residence of Negro CORE members, 2336 General Taylor Street, about 8 p. m., Saturday are Frank Nelson, 23, New York civil engineer; George Blevins, 21, an artist, Los Angeles, Calif., and John Dolan, 20, Berkeley, Calif., a sociology student in the University of California.

Originally charged with vagrancy by having no visible means of support, they said police beat them while transferring them from the Second District police station to headquarters. They have been additionally charged with aggravated battery on officers, simple battery on another prisoner, and attempted simple escape.

New Orleans, La.

CASE DISMISSED

Appearing in the Municipal Court before Judge Edward Babylon Monday on the vagrancy charges, Nelson, Blevens and Dolan were represented by two Negro attorneys, Robert F. Collins and Lolis Elie, who contended the arrests on that charge were illegal.

Judge Babylon, in a fashion peculiarly characteristic to him, proceeded to "admonish" the trio. He told them that Negroes like it here; said Negroes are happier here than some millionaires, and told them that CORE was making trouble here.

After questioning them as to who was "paying" them to come to New Orleans, and being told by the three that they were sincerely interested in civil rights and had spent 40 days in the Mississippi jails for that belief, Judge Babylon dismissed the charge.

INVITED TO DINE

Interviewed shortly after the trial, Nelson, Blevins and Dolan told The Louisiana Weekly they had been jailed as Freedom Riders in Jackson, Miss., June 25, were sentenced the next day, had spent eight days in the city jail, then were transferred to the state penitentiary at Parchman.

Louisiana Weekly

"We were released on $500 bonds each Aug. 4 and came to New Orleans the same day," they said. "On Saturday we were invited to dinner in the home of two CORE members, Patricia and Carlene Smith."

"WAITING FOR DINNER"

Carlene Smith, a 22-year-old secretary, and her sister, Patricia, 19, a student, were interviewed by The Louisiana Weekly.

"The three white CORE members were stopping at the home of an Episcopal minister on General Taylor Street and we invited them over to dinner," the girls declared.

"They had been at our home about 10 minutes and we were waiting for our older sister to serve dinner," they said, "when a policeman knocked on the door asking if we had called police. We said 'no,' and he asked if we knew of any disturbance in the neighborhood.

Oct. 8-14-61

POLICE RETURN

"The officer left. At that time we were sitting down listening to records. About one minute later, about six policemen came. One pulled on the door saying 'What's the matter; got something in there you don't want us to see?'

"We told them 'No,' and they walked in and began asking questions such as who we were, if we lived there, what were white people doing there. One policeman said, 'The colored people around here don't like the idea of you' all having white company.

"We asked him was that the charge. He said, 'No, they said Negroes and whites were fighting in here.' The officers then began questioning Blevins, Nelson and Dolan, and on learning they were from out of town, the officers arrested them.

"One of the policemen said, 'Come on, let's go.' Blevins then asked them if they had the right to come into a house and arrest someone. The officer replied, 'Look, when an officer says come, you have no civil rights.' "

Police reports say the officers went to the residence after receiving a complaint of "fighting" among Negroes and whites. They said they found no fighting but only a "loud party."

"HOLD FOR FBI"

Blevins, speaking for the trio, told The Louisiana Weekly that they were taken to the Second District police station, charged with having no visible means of support, and held for the Federal Bureau of Investigation to check their draft cards. They were then to be taken to police headquarters to be photographed and finger printed, he said.

Police accuse Blevins, Dolan and Nelson with attacking another prisoner, Joseph Jiminez, white, while in the patrol wagon being transported to headquarters.

Officers who made additional charges against the trio, said in attempting to break up the "fight" in the patrol wagon, the three Freedom Riders, Jiminez and two policemen were injured.

"WE WERE BEATEN"

Continuing his statement, Blevins said they were placed in the patrol wagon which was occupied by a white prisoner. He quoted the prisoner as saying he had been arrested for assaulting a Negro.

"We told him we were Freedom Riders. This caused him to become enraged. He said we were down here causing trouble, then he said he didn't want to sit by us.

"After we had ridden a while, he began threatening and wanted to fight. We told him we were pledged to non-violence. We told him if he would strike us we would not hit him back. He then began swinging and yelling 'help.' We just covered up to avoid his blows. The police van had stopped. The back door was opened and police jumped in swinging clubs and blackjacks.

"HE'S TRYING TO ESCAPE"

"One officer struck me. I fell to the floor and several of them kicked me out of the van. An officer outside pulled me up from where I had fallen, yelling, 'He's trying to escape.' He kept beating me, so I sat down on the ground.

"I saw John Dolan thrown out of the police van. He landed on his head. An officer in the van jumped out feet first but landed only partly on John then fell to the ground. I heard him yell, 'Look out, I've dropped my gun.'

"The three of us were stood with upraised hands braced against a wall. Policemen kept hitting us, there were quite a few officers standing around. We were taken to a cell and told to wash off the blood from our faces. Nelson and I were taken upstairs and photographed, but not Dolan. His face was bruised and bloody.

"GET OUT OF TOWN"

"One officer told me that if we got out of jail, we'd better get out of town in 24 hours or he'd shoot our heads off. He said he had fought in the war and had learned some good tricks from the Germans, and that an Adolf Eichmann was needed over here.

"Another officer asked to see the cut in Dolan's head. It had stopped bleeding, but the officer widened it with his finger. I can identify him if I ever see him again.

"We were asked more questions such as who paid us to come to New Orleans. We were called homosexuals, and periodically one officer kicked Dolan in the stomach and in the groin.

"We were taken to the First District station, then to the hospital where we were patched up and given anti-tetanus shots.

"From there we were brought back to the First District station. Sunday night we were taken out and questioned. Monday we were taken to headquarters and put in the line-up.

"News came that day that we were to be released on bonds. At first we were told our bail would be $4,500 each. However, it was finally placed at $1,000 each.

"We were then notified that we were going to trial in the Municipal Court on Monday afternoon. Our attorneys were contacted and they had to rush over to be there when our trials began. The trials lasted about an hour."

LEAVE FOR JACKSON

The three Freedom Riders were to have appeared in the appeals court in Jackson, Miss., on Monday as required by the state law, or forfeit their $500 appeals bond. However, their counsel, Attys. Collins and Elie, succeeded in having an arrangement made with the judge in Jackson whereby they could report Tuesday.

CORE's first statement accusing local police of "mauling" the three Freedom Riders was made by Edwin Blankenheim, field secretary, Tuscon, Ariz., and by Jerome Smith, New Orleans CORE executive.

The trio left for Jackson on Monday night. They still must return to New Orleans to face the three criminal charges, aggravated battery, simple battery, and attempted escape.

Freedom Riders to swarm over Rte. 40

BALTIMORE

November 11 is D - Day in Maryland.

On this day 750 members of the Congress on Racial Equality (CORE) from Connecticut, New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, and the District of Columbia, will conduct "Freedom Rides" along route 40.

The ride's purpose is to dramatize the need for the passage of anti - discrimination legislation in Maryland, Julius Hobson, a national officer of CORE said.

It is assumed that the riders will visit the segregated restaurants and motels along the 49 - mile stretch of highway.

* * *

THE ATTENTION being focused on the Maryland part of Route 40 stems from the fact that it is a link between Washington and New York.

Many of the African nations, unable to afford representatives at both the United Nations in New York City and in Washington, have their delegates serving in both places.

Such an arrangement involves constant travel between the two cities, with the result that a number of Africans have been insulted when they stopped on Route 40 to eat and were refused service because of their race.

For several weeks, the State Department, worried over the adverse publicity such discrimination creates, has been conducting a campaign of persuasion among the Route 40 restaurant owners.

Personal visits have been made to the owners and several meetings have been held at which the State Department explained that such discrimination harms this nation overseas.

Their efforts, so far, have not met with any overt success.

MEANWHILE, sentiment is building up in Maryland for the passage of a law which would end discrimination in places of public accommodations.

Such a bill would not only cover Route 40, but the entire state.

The most recent support for such a measure came last week when the Maryland Restaurant Association called on the state's Governor Tawes to authorize a special session of the General Assembly to consider such a bill.

Other groups have also asked Governor Tawes for such a session but he has consistently resisted the idea.

It was only recetly that the Governor went so far as to even say that legislation was the answer to the problem.

WHILE THE INTEREST in the Route 40 situation has been sharpened by the treatment of Africans, the question of the treatment of colored Americans has also entered the picture.

This was dramatically underscored several weeks ago when three colored Philadelphians and a white friend were jailed when they stopped at a restaurant for food.

The white friend paid her fine and was released. The other three went on a hunger strike that lasted for 17 days and ended only when the court, in a face saving device, fined them and then promptly suspended the fines and freed them.

* * *

THE ANNOUNCEMENT of the proposed action by Freedom Riders has been criticized by William C. Rodgers, chairman of the Maryland Commission on Interracial Problems and Relations, and one of the few public figures who has praised Governor Tawes for his actions in the Route 40 matter.

Mr. Rodgers said the rides "would only create bitterness."

He added that he could see nothing to be gained by the action.

His statement was similiar in tone to one Governor Tawes issued a day earlier in which he suggested that the Freedom Riders stay out of Maryland.

* * *

AS NOW PLANNED the Freedom Riders will be divided into two groups.

One group will leave Baltimore and the other will begin at the Delaware Memorial Bridge. They will meet half - way.

About 750 riders, in 150 cars, are expected to participate.

In Baltimore, CORE official Solomon Baylor felt it "is sort of peculiar situation. (The rides).

"It makes me wonder if we are picketing the right people. Maybe we should be picketing the governor.

"Maybe some of this moral persuasion he is using on the restaurants, he could use on the legislature to get a law passed.

"Moral persuasion is not going to do anything. What we need is a law," Mr. Baylor declared.

IN OTHER quarters, State police regarded the plan with calmness. Major George E. Davidson, field force commander, said police in the affected areas would be alerted, but he foresaw no large scale personnel shifts.

At the State Department in Washington, Pedro San Juan, assistant protocol officer, who has worked with local officials to prevent racial incidents involving African diplomats, had this to say:

"We have no right to interfere in the affairs of CORE, a private organization. Our only interest in the matter is to present a good image of the United States abroad."

If any violence erupted over the demonstrations, he said, it would hurt American prestige.

He evinced optimism over the progress of Maryland anti - discrimination legislation, but would not state whether he thought the planned demonstrations would help or harm its passage.

MARYLAND

OCTOBER
FREEDOM RIDE- NOV. 11,1961
ROUTE 40

Negroes told to call off ride plan Nov. 11

BALTIMORE, Md., Oct. 28—(AP)—Gov. J. Millard Tawes sternly advised leaders of a scheduled "freedom ride" demonstration today that he will not yield to their ultimatum and "the people of this state are going to resent" it.

The governor spoke out in response to a statement earlier this week that the Nov. 11 demonstration along Route 40 would be canceled only if the Maryland Legislature was called into special session beforehand to consider a statewide law against restaurant discrimination.

"In effect, they have offered me and members of the General Assembly an alternative," the governor stated.

"Call a special session in November or face the consequences. Under no circumstances can the governor of Maryland or the General Assembly yield to such an ultimatum."

FRUITS OF SEGREGATION

'Never coming back to Balto.'

BALTIMORE

"I am never coming back to Baltimore."

With determination in her voice, Miss Gloria Wilson, Chicago attorney, made this statement Thursday after she and a companion, Mrs. Jenie Armstead had been arrested while seeking service in a downtown restaurant.

Charged with trespassing, the two Chicago visitors were dismissed in Central Police Court by Judge Joseph G. Finnerty.

The arrests took place early Thursday morning at the Maryland Square Restaurant, 305 W. Franklin St., which does not serve colored patrons on the premises.

After leaving a downtown movie, the visitors, who are attending the 35th annual Congress of the Metropolitan Spiritual Church of Christ, Inc., stopped at the restaurant, with Mrs. Armstead's young daughter.

THEY SAT down and after a wait of several minutes, said they were approached by an employee who told them they could not be served.

Miss Wilson said she then went across the street to call the police and returned to the restaurant to wait for them. She said she tried to call the NAACP but was not successful.

When the police arrived, Miss Wilson said a sergeant told her:

"They don't have to serve you. They can refuse to serve anybody they want."

The women were placed under arrest and taken to Central where they posted $106 collateral each and were released for trial that morning.

IN DISMISSING the charge Judge Finnerty said he did not want to blemish the record of a fellow lawyer.

Miss Wilson said she refused to leave the restaurant because she thought there was a state law here similar to Illinois which makes it a criminal offense against the owner to refuse service to anyone in a public place.

Sgt. Joseph Bierman, one of the arresting officers, claimed that Miss Wilson was "laughing and creating a disturbance" when he reached the restaurant.

Miss Wilson denied this charge.

The police officer also said that the trespassing ordinance had been read to the visitors and the arrest made when they did not leave.

* * *

LATER, at her suite at the Sheraton Belvedere, Miss Wilson noted that she, and Mrs. Armstead, both of whom were well dressed, had been put in a patrol wagon with a group of "derelicts."

"Now can you live under such conditions? We have prejudice in Chicago, but we have laws on the books to fight it," she stated.

Miss Wilson said she was not interested in making this a test case, she was merely interested in getting some food.

She also declined the suggestion of Judge Finnerty that maybe the case should be taken to a higher court.

Miss Wilson told of four other Chicago visitors who were refused service in Baltimore. One was the legal counsel for the group, Rufus Sampson, who was told to leave in no uncertain terms.

The others were body guards of the Rev. Clarence H. Cobbs, national president of the organization.

The restaurant management has declined comment.

JOEL E. GREENBERG
Rides For Freedom

Balto. Freedom Rider

BALTIMORE

What makes a Freedom Rider?

Is it courage, bravado, a fatalistic acceptance that this is what destiny has dictated, or is it the desire to become part of a movement that has attracted the attention and the admiration of a watching world?

Each man, with his own conscience, has his own answer, but for Joel E. Greenberg, 21, the first Freedom Rider from the Baltimore area, the answer lies in none of these things.

Rather, it was, as he puts it, the recognition of his "responsibility to mankind," that has sent him on a ride through the heart of the worse part of the Southland.

HE LEFT Baltimore on Tuesday afternoon aboard a Greyhound Bus for Nashville.

In Nashville, Mr. Greenberg will meet with members of the Christian Leadership Conference, and after a week of training in the technique of being a Freedom Rider, will head for the unfriendly reaches of the Deep South.

The decision to become a Freedom Rider was not created overnight in the mind of Mr. Greenberg, who has walked the picket lines in several anti - discrimination demonstrations, and has always been interested in the civil rights movement.

"I had thought some time about participating and then a friend gave me an application blank from CORE (the Committee on Racial Equality, sponsor of the rides, and I took it."

From there on out, things moved rather swiftly with the application being sent to New York and Mr. Greenberg being given an interview.

* * * *

JUST BEFORE he left, Tuesday, he was asked whether he thought the Freedom Rides were effective, whether they were doing anything worthwhile to help the battle for full equality?

Without hesitation he answered:

"I consider the sit-ins and the Freedom Riders the most effective public action that has taken place in this country in the past 30 years."

He also noted that it has already cost the sovereign state of Mississippi $250,000 to imprison the Freedom Riders, and a scheduled tax cut in Jackson had to be postponed because of this.

Mr. Greenberg carried his lesson in economics a step further with the notation that if he is arrested, he will remain in jail as a guest of the state, thereby increasing the expenditures of Mississippi that much more.

"They feel it in their pocketbooks," he commented.

Asked if he were frightened, he answered:

"I'm sorta scared, but I'm not frightened."

He paused for a moment and then asked:

"Does that make sense?"

The answer — Brave men may be scared but they are not frightened.

8 Sit-in Demonstrators Prefer Jail to Freedom

P. C 20 Dec. 11-21-61

Washington

ANNAPOLIS, Nov. 20 (AP) Eight singing student integrationists returned cheerfully to the Anne Arundel County jail today to resume their hunger strike after a magistrate's court appearance where they requested jury trials.

They were among seven Negroes and six whites arrested in a segregated restaurant here Saturday night on charges of trespassing. Twelve of them also were charged with disorderly conduct after police removed them bodily from Antoinette's Restaurant on West st.

Washington

Five of the group went free on bond today. The others chose to remain in jail until their circuit court trials, which are not expected to come up before late in December.

Twelve of the 13 had not eaten since their arrests.

William W. Hansen Jr., 22, of Cincinnati, one of five white youths who remained in jail, indicated that the hunger strike probably would not be prolonged.

Hansen, a former Xavier University student, spent 40 days in the Mississippi penitentiary after a freedom ride in that state last summer.

Others refusing bond included: Susan L. Rothberg, 18, Jersey City, a student at New York University; Sheila A. Roberts, 18, Baltimore, student at Morgan State College; Janet Rose, 19, Washington, D. C., student at Catholic University; Daniel J. Barker, 19, Brookline, Mass., student at Johns Hopkins University; Richard D. Castilow, 19, of Baltimore; Bonnie Kilstein, 21, of New York City, student at N. Y. U.; and Ronyl Stewart, 19, teacher, of Washington, D. C.

Released under bond were Walter R. Dean Jr., 26, Baltimore, a student at Morgan State; James M. Mejuto, 24, West Orange, N. J., student at Seton Hall and Charles E. Cobb Jr., 18, Springfield, Mass., student at Howard University, Channing P. Cunningham, 20, of Washington, D. C., a student at Howard.

Jail Visits To Jackson 'Riders' Placed Under Curbs

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Hinds County Sheriff J. R. Gilfoy clamped down Wednesday on visitors to jailed "Freedom Riders," saying he would screen them carefully.

"Unless I'm ordered otherwise by the judge," he told the Associated Press, from now on I'm going to interview whoever wants to go up to the jail before giving permission."

Gilfoy's decision followed accusations by the Jackson Nonviolent Movement that jailers forbade parental visits to "Freedom Riders" during visiting hours Sunday.

"I never have seen a state prison where visitors and mail were not regulated and limited," Casey said. "In federal prisons, visitors must receive special permission from the warden (in this case, that's me, Gilfoy interjected) and then they must wait while the warden conducts an investigation of their character."

Of the nonviolent movement accusations, that he forbade rider prisoners to receive medicine from outsiders, Gilfoy said: "Sure I forbade it. What if some one sends something up there and poisons one of them?"

If a prisoner needs simple remedies, such as aspirn, he said, these are available from the jailers.

If he needs medical attention, Gilfoy said, the county provides a physician. "No medicines go into the jail except on prescription of the doctor," he added

Male 'trustys' frisked stripped female Riders

WASHINGTON — Some women Freedom Riders "were forced to strip to the waist for 'frisking' by male jailers," the Rev. Wyatt Tee Walker wrote in a report filed here, last week with the Justice Department.

The Rev. Walker, executive director of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, and his wife spent a week as prisoners in the Hinds County jail at Jackson.

Explaining the treatment the women Freedom Riders received at the hands of the male jailers, the Rev. Walker stated: "This was a humiliation ... (and) seemed wholly unnecessary."

THE SERVICING of the women's sections of the jails, city and county, was done by male "trustys," the report stated.

Regarding the conditions for both men and women in the county jail, the report stated that they "resemble something out of the Middle Ages."

The 13 by 15 foot cell where the Rev. Walker was confined contained eight other men. There were no beds, only a blanket, mattress cover and "an ancient mattress."

* * *

TO THEIR requests that such toilet items as tooth brushes, wash cloths and soap taken from them upon their arrival be returned, one jail official remarked: "I didn't send for you and don't give a g--d--- if you never get your things."

"The stench was almost unbearable; we bathed as best we could, using our pocket handkerchiefs as wash cloths," the Rev. Walker stated.

The report also contained criticism of the treatment the Freedom Riders received from the bus drivers and white employees in the terminals.

Freedom Rider's wedding ring troubles Miss.

JACKSON, Miss. — Police authorities here may have to cut into an iron door of the Hinds County jail to recover the wedding ring of a minister's wife confined a week as a Freedom Rider.

The Rev. and Mrs. Wyatt Tee Walker reported to County Sheriff J. R. Gilfoy that while they were imprisoned here last month, they lost $75 in cash and a wedding ring valued at $275.

THE REV. WALKER was told the cash had been recovered in possession of one of the jail "trustys" who confessed he put the ring into a hole of a cell door.

The sheriff was quoted as saying it would be necessary to cut into the door with a blow torch. If the ring is damaged, the state will replace it, the sheriff promised.

Trusties charged

JACKSON, Miss. — ROBERT SIMPSON and B. Catchings, trusties in the Jackson, Miss., jail, have been held to the grand jury, charged with the theft of a $220 ring belonging to Mrs. Wyatt Tee Walker and $75 in cash from the Rev. Wyatt Tee Walker, director of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference. The valuables were taken by the trusties while the Walkers were in jail after their arrest as Freedom Riders on June 21.

Agitators Arrested For Inciting Youth

Jackson Daily News P. 1

By W. C. SHOEMAKER
Daily News Staf Writer

Jackson police today held two paid racial agitators and sought three others for enticing youngsters to break state laws in an integration campaign.

James Luther Bevel, 24, a native of Itta Bena who came here from Nashville, and Bernard Lafayette, Jr., 20, a resident of Tampa, Fla., were arrested yesterday on charges of contributing to the delinquency of minors. Both are Negroes and gave their Jackson addresses as 1142 Biloxi St.

Bevel said he is a field secretary for the Congress of Racial Equality and Lafayette said he is a field director of the newly organized Jackson Non---Violent Movement.

7-15-61

Both Negroes were arrested as "freedom riders" here May 24 and drew $200 fine and 60-day suspended jail terms. They are free on bond. They face sentences of up to six months in jail and $500 fines on each count of the new charge.

Chief of Detectives M. B. Pierce said Bevel is charged in four counts and Lafayette faces three counts of contributing to delinquency of minors.

The three others sought on similar charges are also employees of the Jackson Non-Violent Movement. All live outside Mississippi and were reported out of the state today. Pierce said they will be arrested if they return.

The five are charged for enticing two boys and two girls, age 14 to 16, to join the segregation protest movement.

Three of the youngsters were arrested at bus stations here and the other was jailed as the result of a Walgreens Drug Sore sit-in. All were charged with breach of the peace.

Jackson Daily News

Pierce said the Non - Violent Movement paid the youngsters $2 each to participate in the integration attempts.

Several of the mix attempts in which the youngsters participated occurred late at night.

Pierce said arrests were made following complaints of parents of some of the youngsters to their employers.

Police said leaders of the movement normally recruited participants through church groups. They gave addresses and showed films in the churches concerning their methods and secured the aid of the youngsters in a call for "volunteers."

While Bevel and Lafayette were being arrested yesterday Municipal Judge James Spencer sentenced four ten-agers to four months in prison and fined them $200 on beach of the peace charges as the result of a sit-in at Walgreens two days ago.

Police Capt. J. L. Ray testified he told the four to "move on" when they took seats at the Capitol St., drug store lunch counter Thursday afternoon and arrested them when they refused.

'Riders' Complain About Jail Conditions

Jackson News and Courier P-8A

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — "I'm not apologizing for our jail," Hinds County Sheriff J. R. Gilfoy said Thursday after a released "rider" accused jailers of mistreatment.

7-14-61

"Jail is jail," Gilfoy said, "and ours is state-regulated and federally approved."

The sheriff made the statement after the Rev. Grant Muse Jr., 35, white Episcopal minister from Berkeley, Calif., said he and other jailed riders were abused and ridiculed by jailers.

Charleston

Muse made the accusation after he posted a $500 appeal bond and returned home after 23 days in jail.

He complained of the food, the size of his cell and its accoutrements, of being fed a laxative, and of being treated like cattle.

He said he did not consider Southerners as "model Americans".

He admitted refusing to tell questioning policemen if he was a Communist.

In Berkeley, he said: "My religion was self-evident, but my politics were not. I am not a Communist; I will never be one. I detest communism."

Meanwhile, Price Chatham, 29, a white free-lance motion picture story analyst from Long Island, N. Y., returned home after 39 days in jail, 24 of which he said he fasted.

Expert Praises Hinds County Jail System

Jackson Daily News

"Freedom riders" jailed in Jackson receive as good treatment as they could expect anywhere in the country.

So said a retired federal jail inspector in an address this week in St. Paul, Minn. 7-14-61

Roy Casey, a 67-year-old Texan who has probably been in more jails than any other American, said jail regulations throughout the nation are fairly standard.

Executive secretary of the National Jail Association, Casey was in St. Paul to address a three-day regional jail forum. P. 1

"Jail regulations throughout the country are fairly standard," he said. "The chief complaint from the 'freedom riders' is that they aren't given enough space and that their parents can visit them only infrequently.

"The same conditions exist in almost every jail, North or South."

Jackson Mississippian

Casey pointed out that the Hinds County jail is fairly new and modern.

"The jailer is only an agent of the court," Casey said. "He can't make the conditions of a prison sentence. He can only carry them out. If the conditions of a sentence require that a prisoner remain in his or her cell the jailer is powerless to order otherwise.

In regard to visiting privileges, Casey said Mississippi jails are probbaly more lax than most.

"In federal penitentiaries," he said, "each visitor must receive special permission from the warden and then must wait while the warden conducts an investigation of the character of the visitor. I have never seen a state prison where visitors and mail weren't regulated and limited."

Casey said he spoke only of the Hinds County and Jackson city jails. He has visited those but has not visited the state penitentiary where some "freedom riders" are being held.

No Letup In Freedom Riders' Prosecution, Say Jackson Officials

The Call p. 3 Fri. 10-6-61
Kansas City, Mo.

JACKSON, Miss. — (ANP) — In lieu of accepting an overture seeking a letup in further prosecution of Freedom Rider cases in exchange for a call-off of the program by CORE, Jackson officials have apparently chosen to drain CORE's treasure chest.

A Washington source reportedly advised Jackson authorities that CORE offered to halt their Freedom Rider program in Jackson if officials would return some 250 cases to the file, let pending appeal cases go on to Circuit and the State Supreme Court and further prosecution be stopped.

Mayor Says, "No Letup'

Mayor Allen Thompson told a television reporter last week in a taped interview that neither he "nor Jackson intended to yield one inch in prosecuting those who violate our local laws."

"There will be no letup in a single case nor will we permit any other type of disorder of disturbance here which violates our laws, the Mayor said. "We feel that we have completely broken the Freedom Rider movement here and will continue to handle the violations of our law whenever they occur," he added.

To Break CORE

A spokesman for the Congress of Racial Equality contends that Jackson and Hinds county officials obvious strategy is to bankrupt CORE.

"With convictions almost a certainty in the county court the cases would have to be appealed to the Circuit court and up to the State Supreme court, with additional bail money being required for each appeal, the spokesman said.

He explained that at $500 each, $150,000 was required to get the cases to county court. Due to bail being increased to $1,500 each an additional $300,000 would be required to get the cases to county court. By the time all the cases got out of Mississippi court (en route to the U. S. Supreme court) the total cost would be over a million dollars, he said.

Chicago Needs $20,000

A CORE official stated last week that the Chicago Freedom Riders committee is desperately in need of $20,000 for bail bonds. The source said that, although the ICC has ruled against Jim Crow, the appeal trials in Jackson are continuing as scheduled and each convicted Freedom Rider will need $1,000 more for an appeal bond."

Ten cases were scheduled for trial last week, two a day. According to the present schedule, the trials will continue until May, 1962

Rider in Poor Condition

One of the original Freedom Riders, 62-year-old Dr. Walter G. Bergman, was reported in poor condition in Detroit's Grace hospital last week with injuries he may have suffered when beaten by a Southern mob.

Police were called by hospital authorities when tests showed a 're-existent condition of brain damage." Detective Inspector George Bloomfield said the results of the police investigation would be turned over to the FBI and the U. S. Department of Justice, which are still investigating the Alabama attacks.

Mrs. Bergman said her husband, a retired director of education research for the Detroit Public Schools, had complained of dizziness since he was slugged on a Greyhound bus in Anniston, Ala., May 14.

Not for Shame

The Episcopal ministers, arrested in a segregated bus station cafe here, said last week that their mission was not intended to point a finger of shame at the South. Rather, they said, to attempt to focus attention on the problems of segregation throughout the country—especially among members of their own church. "We're the first to look in our own back yards," said the Rev. John Morris of Atlanta.

15 Clergymen Arrested in Jackson Bus Station

L.S.J. 9-6

JACKSON, Miss., Sept 13 (AP)—Twelve white and three Ngro Episcopal clergymen on a "prayer pilgrimage" to study segregation sought to use the white waiting room of the Trailways bus station today and police arrested them on breach-of-peace charges.

The group ignored police orders to move from the waiting room.

The Washington Post 9-14-61

The three Negro priests were James P. Breeden of Roxbury, Mass., John Evans of Toledo, Ohio, and Quinland Gordon of Washington, D.C., rector of the Church of the Atonement at 56th and E. Capitol sts.

One of the 28 priests on the pilgrimage bought tickets for all 15, and half an hour later the mixed group entered the waiting room.

Two policemen on duty ordered them to leave and the clergymen declined, saying they were interstate passengers. One officer called Capt. J. L. Ray, who handled the arrests of most of the 297 Freedom Riders seized during desegregation attempts.

The 13 said through a spokesman that they planned to continue their journey, which was to lead them to Detroit by Sunday for the 60th general convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

The original group of 28 arrived at Jackson from New Orleans Tuesday night.

Riders May Drop Appeals In Jackson

Montgomery Advertiser
9-23-61

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Congress of Racial Equality gathered Friday for a four-day convention with indications it will decide to urge dropping of appeals in the "Freedom Rider" cases in Jackson, Miss.

As about 150 bi-racial delegates registered for a night opening session CORE National Director James Farmer, one of the first arrested for breach of the peace in Jackson, told a newsman that he and other "Freedom Riders" might withdraw their appeals.

But he said a final decision would be left to the convention which runs through Monday. Dropping of the appeals to the county court would mean that more than 180 "Freedom Riders" would serve out the sentences imposed on them in city court.

The riders were convicted of breach of the peace in refusing to obey police orders to move on while attempting to end segregation of bus terminal facilities in Jackson.

MAXIMUM SENTENCE

Farmer said the results of the appeals trials are "fairly predictable." He said the County Court juries have given the maximum sentence, compared with a lighter sentence in city court, in two of about 190 cases appealed.

"Our feeding is," Farmer said, "the authorities of Mississippi are merely harassing us by demanding that each person return to Mississippi for an individual trial.

HARD SENTENCE

"It seems clear that each will receive the maximum sentence in the appeal trial regardless of the sentence previously received.

"For example, the two already tried in County Court received two months' suspended sentence plus $200 fine originally. In the appeal trial they received the maximum of four months, nothing suspended, plus $200."

Two other riders have dropped their appeals and gone back to jail, Farmer said.

Farmer himself served 40 days in jail after receiving a sentence of two months suspended plus $200 fine. He refused to pay the fine and went to jail to serve it out at the rate of $3 a day. If he drops his appeal he will return to Jackson to serve the remaining 27 days.

Freedom Riders Pay Fines Quits Appeal

County Judge Russel Moore said two "freedom riders" withdrew their appeals Monday from city court convictions on breach of peace charges and paid their fines.

John H. Moody, 25 of Philadelphia, Pa., paid $149, the remainder of a $200 fine and 60-day suspended jail term not served at $3 per day.

He arrived with the second group May 24.

Matthew Walker, 19, of Nashville, Tenn., was fined $128 out of the $200 fine and 60-day suspended sentence. Walker, who arrived with the first group May 24, served 26 days at $3 a day.

Tom Gaither field secretary of the Congress of Racial equality in Jackson, said Moody and Walker paid their own fines.

"Paying fines are strictly against CORE's policy," Gaither said, "We feel it is an admission of guilt.

The next scheduled trials are Wednesday. Defendants will be Doris Castle, 19-year-old New Orleans Negro, and Jerome M. Smith, 22, New Orleans Negro. Moody and Walker were the third and fourth of 190 convicted freedom riders whose appeals are scheduled to run through January.

Jackson jails son-in-law of Rockefeller

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 14—(AP)—Mississippi authorities jailed the Rev. Robert L. Pierson—son-in-law of New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller—and 14 other white and Negro Episcopal priests yesterday following their attempt to desegregate a Jackson bus terminal.

The 15 priests—12 whites and three Negroes—entered the bus terminal's white waiting room. Two patrolmen ordered them out. They refused to move.

Police Capt. J. L. Ray, who has handled most of the more than 300 freedom rider arrests in this Mississippi capital city, was summoned. He ordered the arrest of the priests on breach of peace charges after they again refused to move on.

CITY ATTY. Jack Travis said the trial was set for 3 p.m. today.

The 15 were participating in a "prayer pilgrimage" which left New Orleans Tuesday and proceeded without incident until they reached Jackson. Twenty-three white and five Negro Episcopal priests started the pilgrimage.

It was the first arrest for Pierson, 35, of New York City and Evanston, Ill. His wife is the former Ann Rockefeller, one of the New York governor's five children.

AFTER A MEAL in jail of cornbread, peas and meat, the minister said that police had been polite and that the treatment was satisfactory.

He said he had no plans to get out of jail but hoped that "churches around the nation will be concerned enough to come to our help."

"I admire all of them," Rockefeller said in Rochester, N. Y.

"I admire the courage and dedication of these young people to the basic precepts on which this country was founded and their dedication to the cause of making a reality out of these precepts."

THE NEW YORK governor, asked if he planned to intercede, replied, "I know he wouldn't expect any special treatment or want it."

Some of the other ministers telegraphed a protest over the arrests to Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy.

"In view of your request to American clergy to exercise leadership in these areas," the telegram said, "we urge you immediately resolve problems of interstate travel for Americans."

THE MINISTERS, who had spent Monday night at a Negro YMCA in New Orleans, traveled by chartered bus to Jackson where they stayed overnight at nearby Tougaloo Southern Christian College, a Negro school.

From Jackson, they had planned to continue by scheduled commercial lines to the 60th general convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church opening in Detroit Sept. 17.

Those arrested had tickets for Chattanooga, Tenn., where they had planned to visit the church's University of the South at nearby Sewanee.

Seven of the ministers, including one Negro, flew to Atlanta, Ga., last night with plans to be in Sewanee today.

The others were expected to stay in Jackson until the arrested ministers were out of jail.

RIDER.—Miss Mary Lucille Hamilton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Buchanan, of 3085 Jackson St., in Denver, is a Freedom Rider. Mary Lucille, a young lady with her whole future in front of her, recently got out of the Mississippi prison where she and other Freedom Riders were placed, while attempting a Freedom Ride through Mississippi. Mary Lucille is a teacher in the public school system in Los Angeles. She left Denver for that position but felt that she was more needed in the struggle for freedom. She has risked position, health and even her life, for what she feels is her share to help fight this ugly thing called segregation. Mary Lucille was released from prison through CORE, which is now asking Denverites to help with their dollars so they may help other Mary Lucille's who are also in the great fight for freedom.

FREEDOM RIDER MOVE BLOCKED

Judge Stops Dropping of Appeal to County Court

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — County judge Russel Moore blocked a move by a "freedom rider" to drop his appeal to county court, indicating the state may prevent a plan for riders to serve out thei rcity court sentences.

Judge Moores ruling came Wednesday before the trial of Alexander Anderson, 33-year-old Negro minister from Nashville, Tenn., who asked to withdraw his appeal on a breach of peace conviction.

The decision would forge about 180 defendants to stand trial in county court or plead guilty to the charge. All freedom riders out on bond have filed for appeal.

The breach of peace charge resulted from riders' failure to move out of transportation terminals after so ordered by an officer.

In earlier cases before Judge Moore, two riders returned to jail after withdrawing their appeals.

The Congress of Racial Equality, sponsoring group for freedom riders, has issued a plea to convicted riders to withdraw their appeals and serve their origina' jail terms.

Following Moore's ruling, ar all-white Hinds county jury con victed Anderson. He received th same sentence as five other rider tried in county court 4 months ir jail and a $200 fine.

A jury convicted Zev Aelony, 23-year-old white rider, earlier Wednesday. He is a University of Minnesota student from Palo Alto, Calif.

The third and fourth trials were held Tuesday and one defendant, a University of Wisconsin woman student, asked the court for mercy as it handed down the sentence.

Elizabeth S. Adler, Brooklyn, N. Y., sai dshe "didn't know what she was getting ino and this was her first offense."

Judge Moore told her she was "old enough and educated enough to know what she was doing."

JACKSON- FREEDOM RIDERS
3 JUDGE FEDERAL COURT REJECTED
AN NAACP REQUEST

FEDERAL COURT DECLINES CASE

By W. C. SHOEMAKER
Daily News Staff Writer

A three-judge federal court yesterday rejected an NAACP request that Jackson authorities be enjoined from arresting "freedom riders" and that city buses be integrated.

District Judges Sidney C. Mize and Claude Clayton, writing the majority opinion, ruled that they will not consider such cases until they have run the course of state courts.

Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals Judge Richard T. Rives of Montgomery, Ala., the highest ranking member of the panel, wrote a dissenting opinion in which he charged Jackson police used breach of the peace laws to enforce segregation and accused Mize and Clayton of using "unreasonable delay" in the case.

Mize, of Gulfport, and Clayton, of Tupelo, wrote that they were abstaining from "passing on the issues in the case and remitting the case to Mississippi courts "for a prior adjudication of the issues and of the scope and meaning of its own statutes."

"This court should simply stay its hand until the adequate and proper remedies provided for by the statutes of the State of Mississippi should be exhausted," they wrote.

They continued: "We do not in this case undertake to pass upon any of the issues that have been tried, nor do we intimate whether the statutes are constitutional or unconstitutional."

The two judges pointed out that laws generally recognized as "peace statutes" exist in most of the states and "have been applied under a variety of circumstances in recent times. . .to prevent violence and more serious offenses where people have gathered or are threatening to gather, under pressure of emotional stress."

They said state courts should be given a "reasonable opportunity to act either in the cases already pending or in any new case which any of the parties may elect to commence."

'SIMPLE EVASION'

Rives wrote that he was unable to find "a bona fide breach of the peace issue" in the case. "The facts clearly show that the arrests are a simple evasion to enforce segregation. This evasion provides no ground for abstention he continued.

"The statutes and ordinances which on their face require segregation of the races in any transportation facility should be declared unconstitutional, null and void," he continued.

"It should be declared impermissable to use laws which purport to deal with the maintenance of law and order, or any other laws, to maintain segregation of the races in any transportation facility," he added.

NAACP MAY APPEAL

Judge Rives continued: "No passenger or intended passenger is subject to arrest for disorderly conduct or breach of the peace unless the passenger is himself disorderly or does something more than to occupy some facility. . .intended for use by persons of another race and refused to remove himself from such place." He said all "Rider" prosecutions since the suit was filed should be set aside and noted that the NAACP may appeal the majority opinion directly to the U. S. Supreme Court.

The NAACP filed the lawsuit June 9 in behalf of Jackson Negroes Samuel Bailey, Joseph Broadwater and Burnett L. Jacob.

Defendants were State Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson, the city of Jackson, Mayor Allen Thompson, Commissioners D. L. Luckey and Tom Marshall, Police Chief W. D. Rayfield, Trailways and Greyhound bus lines, the City Bus Lines, the Illinois Central Railroad, Jackson's Airport Authority and Cicero Carr, operator of a restaurant at the airport here.

The suit was filed in the midst of an avalanche of nearly 300 "freedom riders" who poured into every transportation terminal here for nearly two months and were arrested.

Federal Jurists Erase 3 Segregation Statutes In Mississippi Ruling

Decision Is Split

Enforced Separation Held To Be Unconstitutional In Terminals

By KENNETH TOLER
From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 21.—Three Mississippi segregation statutes were ruled unconstitutional Tuesday by a three-judge Federal Court in a split decision.

The statutes, all dealing with transportation, were enacted by the 1956 Legislature. The 2-to-1 decision marked the first time any of the state's numerous acts designed to preserve racial segregation had been stricken by a Federal court.

The acts declared invalid as "an undue and unconstitutional burden on interstate commerce" were:

Section 2351.5, which requires railroads, bus companies and other common carriers of passengers to maintain separate restroom facilities in their terminals for the two races. The law carries a penalty of a $1,000 fine and-or one year in jail.

Signs Required

Section 2351.7, which prohibits any persons "knowingly or wilfully entering or attempting to enter" a waiting room not marked for his particular race. The penalty is a fine of $1,000 and-or six months in jail. A second section with a $1,000 fine and-or one-year jail imprisonment applies to any person entering, using or visiting a waiting room marked for other than his race.

Section 7787.5, which requires all common carriers of passengers to maintain separate waiting rooms for the races and to display signs denoting those facilities as segregated according to races. Violation of that statute carries a $1,000 daily penalty against the bus terminal, railroad station or airport found guilty. The act also authorizes the attorney general, or any district or county attorney, to seek an injunction to force the common carriers' compliance with the statute.

The decision was given in the issuance of a temporary injunction restraining the City of McComb from maintaining and displaying on city streets adjacent to the Greyhound bus terminal of signs denoting separate facilities for the races "in intrastate travel."

The suit was filed by the United States Justice Department and was handled by Jerome Heilbron of its civil rights section and formerly of Fort Smith, Ark.

The court turned down the Government's request that Section 2409.7, which prohibits a person from entering a place of business or property after being forbidden to do so by "word or sign" to be held invalid. However, the court held that question in abeyance until trial on its merits.

Trespass Statutes

Charles Clark of Jackson, special attorney for the City of McComb, said it would affect statutes dealing with trespass on property for hunting of similar purposes. That act carries a $500 fine and—or six months in jail.

Holding the three acts unconstitutional were Chief Judge Elbert Tuttle of the Fifth Court of Appeals of Atlanta and Appeals Judge Richard Rives of Montgomery, Ala.

District Judge S. C. Mize of Gulfport dissented, taking the position that the Federal Court should abstain from acting until the state courts have had an opportunity to rule on the questions involved.

Judge Mize pointed out that there is pending a similar case before the United States Supreme Court which attacks not only the validity of the transportation segregation statutes but arrests of persons for breach of the peace under "color" of those laws.

Judges' Decision Snarls U.S. Suit

Jurisdiction Rejected 2 To 1 In Action Attacking Mississippi Law

By KENNETH TOLER
From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 17.—A three-judge Federal court, in a two-to-one decision, Friday rejected jurisdiction in a suit attacking Mississippi segregation-in-travel statutes and use of breach of the peace laws in their enforcement until the issues have been adjudicated in state courts. The case stems from the arrests of 300 so-called "Freedom Riders" in Jackson earlier this year.

The majority opinion by District Judges Claude Clayton and S. C. Mize of Mississippi, said, "This court should simply stay its hand until the adequate and proper remedies provided for and by the statutes of the state should be exhausted."

"By this procedure, the comity existing between the Federal courts and the state courts would be maintained without any serious injury to anyone," the majority asserted.

Judges Clayton and Mize said "the facts and a United States Supreme Court decision require abstention until the state courts have decided the full meaning of their respective statutes and their application to the situations presented to us."

Dissenter Gives View

In dissenting, Judge Richard Rives of the United States Court of Appeals, said, "No authority may be found for the proposition that, where a state statute is clearly and unavoidably unconstitutional on its face, comity requires that state courts be allowed the privilege of so declaring."

"Such a rule would be, not abstention, but abdication of our judicial functions," he declared.

Pointing out that the suit, prosecuted by National Association for the Advancement of Colored People attorneys for three Jackson Negro businessmen, has been pending since June 9, Judge Rives said, "The continued refusal to rule on the motion for an injunction is in violation of this court's duty under the law and the refusal should therefore be construed as a de facto denial."

Asserting that the arrests were "a clear violation of the plantiffs rights," Judge Rives said, "The Freedom Riders were travelers in interstate commerce and their only crime is the assertion of undisputed statutory and constitutional rights."

"I am unable to find a bona fide breach of the peace issue," he said with reference to arrests on that charge when the riders in protest to state segregation laws in terminals refused an officer's order to "move on" and out of segregated waiting rooms.

Potential Danger Cited

Judges Clayton and Mize said the "issue should be met head-on" in state courts "for the evidence shows that on at least two occasions there was a danger of riots and disorders"

when the riders came to Jackson from all sections of the nation by bus, railroad and airplane.

"Although past disorder does not concern us as far as a prospective injunction is concerned, there is a strong possibility that a similar situation would arise after an injunction did go in effect," they said.

The majority said it had been held in a case of the NAACP against the Virginia attorney general that "the Federal courts should not adjudicate the constitutionality of state enactments fairly open to interpretation until the state courts have been afforded a reasonable opportunity to pass upon them."

Attorneys File Order To Halt 'Freedom Rider' Prosecutions

JACKSON (AP) — Negro attorneys Thursday filed for a court order to halt prosecution of "Freedom Riders" until the U.S. Supreme Court rules on an appeal from a 3-judge federal court.

Attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People filed the appeal Wednesday on a 2-1 decision which refused to order an end to Mississippi transportation segregation.

The motion for a preliminary injunction said "unless the prosecutions commenced after June 9 are enjoined, the class represented by plaintiffs will suffer irreparable damage."

ONLY VIOLATION

The petition said "Freedom Riders" were convicted for breach of the peace and the only violation was "a breach of the segregation customs and laws of the state of Mississippi."

Specifically, the motion asks the U.S. District Court for the southern district of Mississippi to:

1. Enjoin city officials from continuing to prosecute all persons arrested after June 9 on breach of peace statutes.

2. Enjoin city officials from arresting persons who peacefully use transportation facilities in Jackson.

3. Enjoin city officials from placing segregation signs at transportation terminals.

RETAIN CASE

In the original suit, filed June 9 and ruled on Nov. 17, U.S. Dist. Judges Sidney Mize of Gulfport and Claude Clayton of Tupelo ruled the court should retain the case on its docket until the state courts had a chance topass on the issues.

The appeal asks the Supreme Court to determine whether the 3-judge court erred in refusing to issue a preliminary injunction to stop enforcement of segregation statutes and city ordinances and to stop all future arrests and prosecutions.

The petition also asks the high court to determine whether the 3-judge court was wrong in ruling that the state courts should first be given a chance to rule on the case.

Negroes Seeking To Halt Mississippi Prosecutions

By BEN McCARTY
Associated Press Staff

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 24.—Negro attorneys filed for a court order Friday to halt prosecution of so-called "Freedom Riders" until the United States Supreme Court rules on an appeal from a three-judge Federal Court.

Attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People filed the appeal Wednesday on a 2-1 decision which refused to order an end to Mississippi transportation segregation.

The motion for a preliminary injunction said "unless the prosecutions commenced after June 9 are enjoined, the class represented by plaintiffs will suffer irreparable damage."

The petition said self-styled "Freedom Riders" were convicted for breach of the peace and the only violation was "a breach of the segregation customs and laws of the State of Mississippi."

Specific Requests

Specifically, the motion asks the United States District Court, Southern District of Mississippi, to:

1. Enjoin city officials from continuing to prosecute all persons arrested after June 9 on breach of peace statutes.

2. Enjoin city officials from arresting persons who peacefully use transportation facilities in Jackson.

3. Enjoin city officials from placing segregation signs at transportation terminals.

In the original suit, filed June 9 and ruled on Nov. 17, District Judges Sidney Mize of Gulfport and Claude Clayton of Tupelo, ruled the court should retain the case on its docket until the state courts had a chance to pass on the issues.

Court Should Stay Hand

"This court should simply stay its hand until adequate and proper remedies provided for by the statutes of the State of Mississippi should be exhausted," the two judges said.

However, Appellate Judge Richard T. Rives of Montgomery, Ala., issued a sharply worded opinion dissenting from the majority view.

"The continued refusal to rule, although it has been pending since June 9, is in violation of this court's duty under the law," Judge Rives said.

"There are statutes and ordinances which on their face require segregation of the races in any transportation facilities and they should be declared unconstitutional, null and void."

Reasons For Arrest

Judge Rives said no passenger or intended passenger should be subject to arrest for breach of the peace unless he does something more than occupy some facility in transportation.

"To arrest a passenger under such circumstances is state enforcement of segregation, and therefore unconstitutional," Judge Rives said.

The appeal asks the Supreme Court to determine whether the three-judge court erred in refusing to issue a preliminary injunction to stop enforcement of segregation statutes and city ordinances and to stop all future arrests and prosecutions.

The petition also asks the high court to determine whether the three-judge court was wrong in ruling that the state courts should first be given a chance to rule on the case.

'Riders' Arriving Here On Train

Eight Integrationists Depart New Orleans

More "freedom riders" headed to Jackson today with announced plans of violating the law which sent their predecessors to jail.

Jackson, Miss

The latest group, five whites and three Negroes, left New Orleans by train early today en route Jackson after announcing they "expect arrest." They were due here at 10:10 a. m.

One group of 17 was convicted in municipal court yesterday of charges of committing a breach of the peace. They spent the night in Jackson's city jail but were expected to be transferred across the street to the Hinds County jail today.

Meanwhile 19 of the 22 others transferred to the Hinds County prison farm at Raymond from the county jail early yesterday were brought back to the jail last night.

Sheriff J. R. Gilfoy said other members of the county farm obtained to the group.

'BEATING' PROTESTED

The move came a few hours after Richard Haley, a representative of the Congress of Racial Equality, telegraphed Gov. Barnett and the Hinds County Board of Supervisors that Rev. C. T. Vivian, Negro, of Chattanooga, Tenn., had been beaten by a guard at the farm. Three of the 22 sent to the farm Tuesday morning were released on appeal bonds at noon and Haley said they told him of the beating.

The latest group headed this way left New Orleans at 7:10 a. m. aboard the Illinois Central Railroad's "City of New Orleans."

The group was the product of a hastily conducted "freedom rider school" conducted in New Orleans yesterday and were led by Dr. Walter G. Bergman of Detroit, a former University of Michigan professor and one of the original "freedom riders".

"We expect arrest, but we don't expect violence," Bergman said. "We expect Jackson police to take care of the situation." All earlier groups have moved against bus stations. This would be the first mixing attempt at a train depot.

Some members of the group were Negro girls.

READY FOR JAIL

A CORE official in New Orleans said the group expects to spend 60 days in jail here.

Haley claimed that Vivian was struck with a weapon because he refused to call a guard "sir" but prison superintendent Max Thomas said the Negro minister suffered a minor head wound in a scuffle with guards.

He said Vivian refused to cooperate while being processed for confinement at the farm and that a physician examined him as a matter of routine and covered the wound with a Band Aid.

Gilfoy said he notified the FBI of the incident and joined federal officers in an investigation of the matter.

An FBI spokesman here said federal agents joined the probe at the specific instruction of an assistant U. S. attorney general.

"Thomas runs a clean farm and treats everybody as well as he can," Gilfoy said. "I think he has done a good job out there."

Dan Ferguson, president of the Hinds County Board of Supervisors, which has control of the farm, called the board together yesterday and announced they had decided to "bend over backward to prevent trouble."

"The situation has been handled so well by the state and the city of Jackson that we don't want to fumble the ball just before we get to the goal," he said.

The 17 convicted yesterday told their attorney they expect to serve their sentence in jail.

Municipal Judge James Spencer fined them $200 and handed them 60-day suspended sentences, the same as 27 arrested last Wednesday had received.

If they stay in jail the fine will be worked off at the rate of $3 per day.

SPEEDY TRIAL

Yesterday's trial of the 17 lasted only 17 minutes, in contrast to the nearly two hour trial Friday. They were tried as a group.

Police Capt. J. L. Ray was the city's only witness. He testified he arrested the 17—nine at the Greyhound bus terminal Sunday morning and eight at Trailways Sunday afternoon — after they ignored his orders to "move on." All were arrested in the stations' white waiting rooms. The Trailways group included two whites.

Ray said he told them to move on "so we wouldn't have another incident" smiliar to a riot which erupted when "freedom riders" invaded a Montgomery bus depot.

Defense Attorney Jack Young offered no testimony in behalf of the 17 youthful riders.

Spencer said he based yesterday's verdict on the same basis as his decision of Friday.

"These cases are a continuation of the cases the court heard Friday," he said, adding his court will "do everything in its power to maintain law and order in the community."

In the Friday trial he said the group came here from Montgomery to stir up violence.

Of the 27 arrested Friday, five posted appeal bonds to county court Saturday night and left town. Three others posted bonds at noon yesterday, a few hours after they were sent to the prison farm.

Russians Sparked Mixing 'Seminar'

Mississippi authorities have learned that the apparently endless "freedom" rides into Mississippi and the south were planned in Havana, Cuba, last winter by officials of the Soviet Union.

At least one "student" who attended the Communist planning workshop has been convicted among the riders in Jackson and is in the state penitentiary serving a jail sentence.

The "student" was identified as Katherine Pleune, 21, white, of Chicago, a mimeograph machine operator and parttime photographer's helper in Chicago.

She was arrested on breach of the peace charges as a "freedom rider" here June 10 and is serving a $200 fine and four month jail sentence at the maximum security unit of the state penitentiary.

Miss Pleune has confirmed to Mississippi officers that she was among 202 so-called students who went to Cuba last winter for the announced purpose of hearing a lecture by Fidel Castro on Cuba's aims for cordial relations with the United States and other Western nations.

She has told officers the group was addressed by nine agents of the Soviet Union at a meeting in a Havana dining hall during the trip.

The group also heard an address by Castro she said, adding that she personally met the Cuban dictator during the trip. She has refused to say what the group discussed or to reveal identities of other participants.

RIDE SEMINAR

Authorities have learned, however, that the speeches by the nine Russians was actually a seminar at which this summer's "freedom rides" into the South were planned.

Miss Pleune has told officers she is a member of CORE and seven or eight other organizations, but refused to confirm or deny affiliation with the Communist Party unless her attorney was present.

Miss Pleune refused to tell officers if she has been in contact with a well known Communist worker in the United States. She said she refused to answer questions concerning the man on grounds that "the FBI might intimidate him."

She told officers she is a native of Newark, N. Y., and quit school after two years of high school.

Her parents, she told authorities, taught her against believing in God as a child. She said she has remained an atheist.

Her sister, Joan, was arrested as a "freedom rider" at the Illinois Central Railroad station here June 20 and is serving a four months jail term and $200 fine on a breach of the peace charge.

KATHERINE PLUENE
Briefed In Cuba

Katherine Pleune told officers she has been active in demonstrations throughout the country. She said she has been arrested in Chicago for picketing on numerous occasions as well as in New York City and San Francisco on similar complaints.

A plump brunette with a pony-tail hair style who was arrested at the Greyhound Bus Terminal, she told officers she also picketed the U. S. Central Intelligence Agency as well as numerous businesses in behalf of racial integration.

MOVE 22 TO PARCHMAN

A total of 164 persons have been arrested since "freedom rides" began in Mississippi May 24.

Hinds county officers yesterday moved 22 from jails here to the penitentiary at Parchman to sit out their sentences.

Among those transferred yesterday were nine women, including Elizabeth Porter Wyckoff, a white New York City freelance writer who earlier this week lost a federal court bid at a constitutional test of breach of the peace laws.

Three of the 58 already at Parchman were returned here last night to be released on bond.

Little Skill, Lotsa' Sweat Go Into Cotton Chopping

By W. C. SHOEMAKER
Daily News Staff Writer

Mechanization has replaced many of the once familiar farming tools but Jackson's abundance of freedom riders may find them necessary when they get to Parchman.

A majority of the riders may get to learn how to chop cotton first hand before this week is out.

Thus the Daily News publishes this manual for operation and maintenance of one of the basic crop growing implements—the gooseneck hoe:

The implement is a one-piece, one-man, hand-operated device essential in ridding cotton fields of weed and grass.

It consists of a blade about six inches wide to which is attached at a right angle a wooden handle about six feet long.

The term "gooseneck" comes from the curved steel bar which connects cutting blade and handle.

NOT LIKE GOLF

In some ways it may be described as resembling a golf club. But the similarity ends there.

Successful operation of the hoe is best achieved by placing one hand firmly, without gripping, about midway of the handle with the other hand near the top of the handle.

The blade should be turned toward the earth and placed on the edge of the cotton row away from the operator.

Best result is achieved by allowing the implement to scrape lightly into the dirt as it is pulled across the row toward the operator.

Hard-to-get-at weeds and grass may be removed by turning the hoe on its side and pulling.

With the same half turned-hoe position the operation also may clear the side of the row opposite the cotton from him by giving the hoe a brisk push.

Skilled workmen bend slightly from the waist as they maneuver the implement and soon learn to hoe with a rhythmic motion, clearing grass with both backward and forward movements.

With a few days practice operators usually learn that a steady rocking back and forth of the body improves the operation.

Some crews find that singing helps maintain the body rhythm.

A skilled operator may cover a 100-foot row in 15 minutes.

Hinds county officials made plans today to transfer a load of "freedom riders" to the cotton fields of Parchman to complete their jail sentences.

The county board of supervisors yesterday approved a resolution authorizing transfer of the ever growing group to the state penitentiary if jails here become overcrowded.

Already 84 of the 110 who have been convicted remain in jail and the Congress of Racial Equality said it will send more to Jackson to push transportation terminal integration attempts.

Many of those in jail must serve four months sentences in addition to $200 fines. Most are serving time for the fines at the penitentiary Tuesday to inspect its facilities preparatory to the possible transfer of some of the 85 self-styled "Freedom Riders" jailed here to the institution.

The board of supervisors Monday authorized the transfer due to "overcrowded" conditions at the Hinds County jail.

The board authorized Sheriff J. R. Gilfoy to transfer persons from the county jail here to the penitentiary "as he may deem necessary to relieve and keep relieved the crowded conditions in the county jail", provided each transfer is approved by the Circuit Court here.

The resolution also ordered that work be made available to riders transferred.

In Atlanta, a CORE official said more rides will be arranged to Jackson via Montgomery, Ala., within 24 hours. His statement came after a federal judge's order prohibiting their movement through Montgomery expired.

A group left Washington, D.C., this morning by bus to make integration attempts south into Florida.

And in New York, State Assemblyman Mark Lane, who was convicted on the breach of the peace charge here last week, called for public pressure on the Kennedy administration for stronger federal policy on integration.

He claimed that he learned during his brief tour of the South that most white southerners want the federal government to enforce integration laws.

Lane spent one day in Montgomery and was arrested within five minutes after he arrived at the Jackson airport with a Negro NAACP leader from New York.

He was convicted in municipal court and is free on appeal.

Protest Riders Facing Prison, Cotton Chopping

From The Commercial Appeal
Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., June 9—Transfer of self-styled "Freedom Riders", from the Hinds County jail here to the state penal farm at Lambert in the Delta is planned by Mississippi authorities.

Necessary papers have been drafted and will be presented in Circuit Court here.

About 75 of the riders who have invaded Mississippi since May 24 have each been fined $200, which they refused to pay. Some of them also have been given two-month jail sentences.

The others have been released on $500 cash appeal bonds and two have paid their fines.

The Hinds County Board of Supervisors has called attention to the over-crowded condition of county jail caused by the invasion and the inadequate facilities for segregating prisoners as required by law. It also points out that the law requires prisoners to work out their fines at $3 a day.

Two unused camps at the 6,000-acre Lambert farm, which is about 25 miles north of the 17,000-acre main prison at Parchman, have been readied for the white and Negro riders.

Hundreds of prisoners can be "accommodated" at the Lambert farm. There is also plenty available work in the fields, as cotton chopping is under way in the Delta.

Prison authorities, as well as Gov. Ross Barnett, have authorized use of the Lambert camp for confinement of the riders.

Riders May Be Moved To Work Farm

By W. C. SHOEMAKER
Daily News Staff Writer

More self-styled "freedom riders" headed here today to almost certain lengthy jail terms while officers made arrangements to move those already held to a work farm.

Eight riders left Nashville this morning and were due to have noon, but they missed their bus in Memphis.

The group was having breakfast when time came for the bus to depart for Jackson. The driver refused to wait and left on schedule without them. They are expected to take a later bus to Jackson.

Officers have considered moving the riders to other jails or to the 16,000-acre state penitentiary to serve their terms if the city and county jails here become crowded.

No final decision has been made on the move.

The Leake County Board of Supervisors this week formally offered use of the new jail at Carthage for housing of "freedom riders". Supervisors sent word to officials here that they could house 40 to 50 riders.

Municipal Judge James L. Spencer yesterday sentenced five "riders" to four months in jail and handed them $200 fines, pushing the number of convictions here during the past three weeks to 98.

Yesterday's group was the first to receive the maximum penalty allowed by law.

Spencer began three weeks ago ordering $200 fines and 60 day jail terms with the jail terms suspended. Later he made the sentences four months with two months suspended and announced that any new riders convicted would receive the full sentence allowed on the breach of the peace charge.

Of the 98 convicted, 73 remained in jail today. Those who received only fines are serving them at the rate of $3 per day.

ARRESTED AT ZOO

Meanwhile two Jackson young Negro men were arrested for committing a breach of the peace in the municipal zoo yesterday afternoon.

Police Capt. J. L. Ray arrested them when they ignored his order to "move on" from benches in the zoo.

The two were identified as Amos C. Brown, 20, of 1521 Moorehouse St., and James M. Hopkins Jr., 19, of 917 Franklin St.

Both are members of the NAACP here.

The CORE said it expects to send more "riders" to Jackson next week and "possibly 25 more" before July 1.

In New York, state Sen. Manfred Ohrenstein wired Gov. Nelson Rockefeller asking him to request a public apology from Mississippi Gov. Ross Barnett for the arrest here of New York assemblyman Mark Lane.

Lane, white, was arrested at the Jackson airport in the "freedom rider" roundup two days ago, and was convicted in city court.

He posted an appeal bond and went home.

The Evangelist, newspaper published by the Roman Catholic newspaper in Albany, N. Y., criticized the riders as "Northern do-gooders".

Gov. Rockefeller arranged to dine with the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., June 16 when King goes to Albany, N. Y. to raise funds for an integration campaign in the South.

9 TRANSFERRED TO PENITENTIARY

Five Riders Post Bonds at Prison Farm

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Nine more convicted "freedom riders" were transferred Monday from the Hinds county jail to the state penitentiary and five others posted bond to gain their freedom from the prison farm at Parchman.

Sheriff J. R. Gilfoy sent the nine from Jackson jails to the maximum security cellblock at the penal farm 140 miles northwest of Jackson and said he would return the five to Jackson to be freed. Attorneys for the five posted bonds at the courthouse during the morning.

The nine sento to Parchman were among the 116 who have been convicted on breach of peace charges after unsuccessful efforts to desegregate Jackson transportation terminal facilities.

The transfers and releases brought the Parchman rider population to 49 and left 28, mostly women, in the county jail here. Only men are sent to Parchman.

The five gaining freedom on appeal bonds brought to 39 the number of riders to gain their releases—all but four on bonds. The four paid fines.

Releases on bond were three Negroes and two whites.

In Atlanta, Ga., a Southern Christian Leadership conference staff member said a new "freedom rider" would get under way later this week from Atlanta to Birmingham and Montgomery.

Bernard Lee of the SCLC staff said the expedition was discussed Monday.

"The freedom ride definitely won't start today," Lee said. "It will be later in the week. Those aboard will include persons from Nashville and other places."

When asked if the group would proceed to Jackson, Miss., or New Orleans, Lee said "the itinerary has not been made definite yet."

Patterson Will Attend Hearing

(Times-Picayune Capital Bureau)

JACKSON, Miss.—Atty. Gen. Joe T. Patterson said he will represent the state in a federal court hearing Wednesday at Biloxi on a move by a convicted "freedom rider" attacking constitutionality of her arrest.

The action was filed by Miss Elizabeth Wyckoff, New York free lance writer, seeking her release on a habeas corpus proceeding. She contends she was arrested and convicted on an unconstitutional charge.

All of the 116 "riders" who have been arrested on their arrival here were charged with violation of a 1960 breach of the peace statute.

A hearing on the habeas corpus motion have been set for 10 a. m. Wednesday before federal district Judge Sidney C. Mijze.

Patterson said he will be assisted by two of his assistant attorney generals, Robert Cates and Pete Stockett. Asst. Atty. Gen. Dugas Shands, who usually handles cases involving segregation matters was temporarily hospitalized Monday.

Jackson Convicts 15 'Freedom Riders'

Jackson, Miss., June 20 (AP) Municipal Judge James Spencer Tuesday convicted 15 more "freedom riders" on breach-of-peace charges, bringing to 131 the number found guilty since the segregation-defying attempts began May 24.

The new group included 14 who reached Jackson by train earlier Tuesday and an Oklahoma white teacher who sought to use the Negro lunch counter at the Greyhound bus terminal here Monday.

Nine More 'Mixers' Go Into Jail

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Nine new "Freedom Riders" sought without success Wednesday to desegregate the white waiting room at the Trailways Bus terminal here. Police arrested the racially-mixed group on breach of peace charges.

The new arrivals included the ev. Wyatt Tee Walker, executive director of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference in Atlanta, and his wife, Theresa Ann Walker, and Dr. Milton Reid of Petersburg, Va., president of the Virginia Christian Leadership Conference.

ARRIVE FROM MONTGOMERY

More than 100 spectators gathered to watch as the group, which arrived shortly after 6 p.m. from Montgomery, walked from the bus into the white waiting room and approached the concession stand.

Police Capt. J. L. Ray ordered members to move out of the station.

Henry Schwarzchild of Chicago, only white man in the group, asked permission to get a cup of coffee in the lunrhroom and Ray told him to move on.

"I believe I have a right to get a cup of coffee," Schwarzchild replied, and Ray told him "You're under arrest."

Walker's wife told the Associated Press the group has arrived in Jackson expecting to be arrested.

The group left Montgomery shortly before noon after several members got lunch at a white lunch counter, but served by a Negro waiter instead of the usual white waitress.

TOY BOMB

As the bus started, a toy bomb went off with a loud whistle and explosion, but there was no damage.

Only 25 or 30 persons gathered to see the "Riders" off. The group had reached Montgomery from Atlanta.

The crowd in the Jackson station was several times larger than usual. Heretofore police have kept all but legitimate travelers from the station when "Riders" were expected.

The group merely stood and looked as the episode unfolded in a pattern that has become as familiar as the cowboy and Indian scrip in the Saturday movie.

The new "Riders" brought to 140 the number arrested since rides began May 24. All previous "Riders" have been convicted or breach of peace charges and drawn $200 fines and sentences ranging as high as four months. The earlier arrivals got suspended two-month sentences, but stayed in jail to work off fines. Those which followed got four-month sentences, with two of it suspended, while the last few groups have gotten the full four months.

DUE TODAY

9 More 'Riding' To Jail

By W. C. SHOEMAKER
Daily News Staff Writer

Nine more "freedom riders" were en route to Jackson jails today with a brief stop planned at a bus station here.

The nine, including four whites, planned to move from Montgomery, Ala., to Jackson in an attempt to integrate a bus terminal before the day is over.

They are sure to meet the same fate that 131 persons before them have seen—arrest and conviction on breach of the peace charges.

Fifteen tried yesterday on similar charges received $200 fines and four month jail terms.

Fourteen of the group were arrested earlier yesterday wher they attempted to integrate at Illinois Central depot waiting room and the 15th was jailed when he took a seat in the Negro waiting room at the Greyhound bus station a day earlier.

Trials of the 14 were held yesterday at their request to allow them to begin serving sentences sooner.

The group expected today gathered in Atlanta several days ago for training in "passive resistance" and began their move toward Jackson yesterday. They spent last night in Montgomery.

Fourteen of those convicted yesterday came here from Berkeley, Calif., with a stop in New Orleans for training by the Congress of Racial Equality.

The 15th was a professor at Oklahoma State University who drove to Jackson via automobile before trying to mix the bus station.

The 14 included Paul Duncan McConnell of Castro Valley, Calif., who said he once attended the University of Mississippi. Most members of the 14 were from California.

Police Capt. Ralph Hargrove, head of the department's identification bureau said seven of the 14 refused to say if they are members of the Communist party.

Male members of the group will probably be held in jail here for five day and will be transferred to the maximum security unit at the state penitentiary to sit out their prison terms. Women will stay in jail here.

If they choose to sit out the fine in addition to the jail terms they will be released two days after Christmas.

"Freedom Rider" Lucretia Collins posted a $500 cash bond Saturday and became the first of 27 integrationists to gain her freedom after an attempt to use white facilities at a Jackson bus station. Sun. 5-28-61

The 21-year-old senior at Tennessee A&I College said she was leaving Mississippi to graduate with her class Sunday night.

She was among those arrested Wednesday and convicted Friday of breach of peace. She told newsmen her home was in Fairbanks, Alaska, but was booked at the jail as from El Paso, Tex. Jackson, Miss.

'ALL RIGHT'

She said her father was an Army career man.

"Everything was all right (in the jail)," she told.

She said she joined the student nonviolence committee and the Freedom Riders because she felt it was "a moral and spiritual obligation. I must know for myself."

Lucretia left on a plane for Memphis and will change planes there for a flight on to Nashville, where the college is located.

Municipal Judge James Spencer convicted the 27—all but two of them Negroes' on breach of peace charges stemming from their attempt to use white facilities at a bus terminal. He handed down $200 fines and 60-day jail sentences suspended at the request of the prosecution.

SOLE PURPOSE

The riders were arrested Wednesday minutes after they arrived in Jackson and went into the white waiting room of the Trailways bus terminal.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People had offered to raise bail for the group.

Judge Spencer told his court during their trial Friday "the sole purpose that they came to Mississippi for was to breach the peace."

He told the riders their conduct had led to mob action already and here "you sought to inflame the people to fight it out among themselves instead of taking their case through the court."

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (UPI) — About 10 Negro college students, all recognized members of the non - violent movement here, boarded a regularly scheduled bus for Jackson, Miss., via Memphis, Tenn.

Members of the group not going said there would be more students going later by other meanns of transportation.

The students, although remaining in a cluster, boarded a Greyhound bus at 5:15 p.m. with the usual white and other Negro passengers en route to points west and south. The trip to Jackson takes about 13 hours.

Leo Lillard, a member of the central committee of the Nashville non-violent movement, did not say there would be any attempt to break segregation laws in Jackson.

He said the members of the group hoped to travel as normal passengers in an effort to see what will happen.

Lillard had said Friday and earlier Saturday a telegram would be sent to Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy explaining why the Negroes would continue their trips to Jackson.

A spokesman for the group said at the bus station, however, the telegram had not been sent.

There were no white students with the non-violent group, that left Nashville Saturday afternoon. Lillard said some of the "interest among white students has fallen off' since the violene in Alabama.

The methods used Saturday at Nashville was a departure from normal tactics used by the non-violent movement here in that they waned to be considered as normal travellers without attracting attention as "Freedom Riders."

In previous demonstrations at stand-ins and sit-ins here the group retained an appearance of organization and conducted massive assaults on segregation statues. When members were jailed, all other members would submit themselves to arrest resulting in crowded jails, where they usually refused bond.

8 Train 'Riders' Are Jailed

The Times

Group Leaves N. O., Is Fined in Jackson, Miss.

New Orleans, La.

By W. F. MINOR

(Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

JACKSON, Miss.—With assembly-line precision, eight "freedom riders," including five white college boys, went all the way from New Orleans to Mississippi convicts in one day Tuesday. W-A-S-5-31-61

First of "riders" who have descended on Jackson since last Wednesday to arrive by train, the eight were arrested at 10:20 a. m. Tuesday and were convicted in city court of breach of the peach at 3:1g p. m.

Their trials lasted little more than five minutes as defense attorney Jack Young, a Negro, and city prosecutor J. A. Travis Jr. skipped over a rerun of the two previous trials held here in the past four days.

This brought to 52 the number of "riders" probing Mississipp segregation barriers to arrive to be jailed and to be convicted since last Wednesday. P-14

$200 FINES

The newest group received from city Judge James L. Spencer the same $200 fine and 60-day suspended jail sentence given four other waves of "riders."

Again, no violence accompanied arrival and arrest of these riders, who walked into a white waiting room at the Illinois Central train station.

They arrived on the Illinois Central's "City of New Orleans," which they boarded at 7 p. m. in New Orleans. All of them attended a one-day training school Monday in New Orleans on how they would conduct themselves.

James K. Davis Jr., 21, a Negro college student from Florence, S. C., led the contingent into the white waiting room after they stepped off the train.

QUESTION ASKED

Capt. J. L. Ray, a 20-year veteran of the Jackson police department, snapped the same order of "You'll have to move on," to them that he gave other groups of "riders."

He followed that quickly with the order, "You're all under arrest."

Davis became the first "rider" to question police on why they were being arrested.

"For breach of the peace," Ray retorted.

"What have we done to breach the peace," Davis came back. Ray made no answer.

Davis told reporters he and the others were "just passing through Jackson, and we were intending to get something to eat." He asked where the dining room was located in the train terminal. He was told there was none.

Four of the white college students are from Cornell university, Ithaca, N. Y., and the other from Rockville Center, N. Y., is a student at Tulane.

Manwhile Tuesday, Hinds county Sheriff Bob Gilfoy moved 19 of the original 27 "riders" to arrive last week back from the county work farm to the county jail because of complaints from other prisoners at the farm that their presence may cause trouble.

The transfer of the prisoners back to the jail also followed a report Monday that one of the group, Rev. G. T. Vivian, Chattanooga, a Negro, was struck on the head by a guard at the farm because he failed to address the guard as "sir." The federal bureau of investigation was called in to investigate the report.

Chief of detectives M. B. Pierce, of the Jackson police department, said an arrangement was worked out with Sheriff Gilfoy that white prisoners among the "freedom riders" will be held in the city jail after conviction and Negroes in the county jail.

BUSINESS-LIKE

Eight of the first wave of 27 riders to be arrested had secured their releases under $500 appeal bond prior to Tuesday, but the rest had chosen to remain in jail so far rather than pay their fine or make an appeal bond to dramatize their objection to the state's segregation barriers.

Bond has been arranged for them by the Congress on Racial Equality and the National Association for Advancement of Colored People.

Richard Haley, Chicago, a national field representative for CORE, sat in on the trial of the eigth "riders" Tuesday as he had attended the trial of 17 others Monday.

He remarked afterwards Tuesday that the police adn the courts "have handled it in a business-like manner."

Those arrested Tuesday and later convicted included: Peter Sterling, 20, Rye, N. Y.; Paul S. Green, 22, Ithaca, N. Y.; Charles A. Haynie, 25, Ithaca, N. Y., and Joe Henry Griffith, Corpus Christi, Tex., all students at Cornell; Robert L. Heller, 19, Rockekaville, N. Y., who recently completed his second year at Tulane; all white, and Sandra Marie Nixon, 19, 3003 Desire Park, New Orleans, a student at Southern university; Glenda Jean Gaither, 18, Great Falls, S. C., student at Claflin university, Orangeburg, S. C., and James K. Davis Jr., 21, Florence, S. C., also a student at Claflin, all three Negroes.

Train Freedom Riders Arrested at Jackson

The Washington Post

JACKSON, Miss., May 30 (AP)—More "Freedom Riders"—five whites and three Negroes—moved into Mississippi's capital city on a new trail by using the train today, but they followed their predecessors alogn the same path to city jail.

Wed 5-31-61

The eight arrived on the "City of New Orleans" in midmorning. And when they tried to use white facilities at the train depot and refused to heed a police officer's order to move, they went to jail.

The arrivals from New Orleans were the first Freedom Riders to travel by train in their test of Southern segregation laws. The first 44 riders—all arrested by Jackson police when they arrived—came in by bus.

Washington, D.C

Reason for Change

Richard Haley, field representative for the Congress of Racial Equality, which sponsors the Freedom Riders, had this explanation for the switch to the train:

"So far the emphasis has been on bus depots, to the exclusion of train depots. We want to give them all a fair shake."

R-AH

Jackson police Capt. J. L. Ray, who has supervised most of the Freedom Riders' arrests, told the group today to move out of the white waiting room and when the Riders refused, he arrested them for a breach of the peace.

All previous Freedom Riders have been convicted and fined for breaching the peace—not for defying segregation.

Among the whites arrested today were Peter Sterling, 20, of Rye, N. Y.; Tom S. Green of Ithaca, N. Y.; Charles A. Haynie, 25, New York City, and Joe H. Griffith, Ithaca, all students at Cornell University, and Robert Heller of Rockville Centre, N. Y., a student at Tulane University in New Orleans.

Three Negroes

Those who boarded the streamliner in New Orleans today were students at a special "workshop" set up in New Orleans yesterday by CORE, and taught the methods of non-violence CORE advocates.

At Ithaca, Cornell graduate Davis Smock said a campaign to raise funds was underway in Ithaca with residents asked to contribute $800 to pay fines that may be imposed on the latest arrivals. Smock said he had $150 in pledges.

Earlier Freedom Riders were given 60-day suspended jail sentences — suspended at the request of the prosecution—and $200 fines. Most of those convicted preferred to go to jail or the county work farm rather than pay the fines or post appeal bonds.

Hinds County Sheriff J. R. Gilfoy moved the convicted Freedom Riders from the county penal farm to the county jail in downtown Jackson.

Beating Reported

This came after the reported beating of the Rev. C. T. Vivian, a 36-year-old Chattanooga, Tenn., Negro minister. Haley accused prison farm guards of beating Vivian because he refused to address them as "sir."

Vivian wore a small bandage when he and the others moved to the county jail.

Gov. Ross Barnett promised an investigation into the report of the beating and FBI agents quizzed the penal farm director and others.

Sheriff Gilfoy also said local Negro and white prisoners at the county prison farm objected to working with the Freedom Riders. Negro trustys and prisoners in the downtown jail, he said, also objected to their presence.

JACKSON

RIDERS LOSE PLEA IN SUPREME COURT

Fail to Win Delay of Trials of Biracial Groups Seized at Mississippi Terminals

By ANTHONY LEWIS
Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18—The Supreme Court refused today to order a temporary halt in the prosecution of Freedom Riders in Jackson, Miss.

Since last May more than 300 riders have been arrested in Jackson. The court was asked to call a halt to most of these prosecutions until a Federal suit attacking them as unconstitutional could be brought here.

The justices were unanimous in denying the requested stay. Their action was a shock to Negro groups and to the Justice Department, which had endorsed the plea for a stay.

The court's decision does not in any way imply legal approval of what the authorities in Jackson have been doing. It simply means that the court found intervention inappropriate at this stage.

Clergymen Arrested

The Legal Defense and Educational Fund of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People had sought interim relief. It said that the method used to prosecute the riders was putting a heavy financial strain on them and the fund.

The defendants are both Negr and white. Among them is a group of fifteen Episcopal clergymen, including Governor Rockefeller's son-in-law, the Rev. Robert L. Pierson.

All were arrested for being in transportation terminal waiting rooms in Jackson reserved for members of the other race They were charged not with violating Mississippi segregation laws but with disturbing the peace.

All 300 were convicted in the City Court of Jackson. They were fined $200 each and were given jail sentences of up to four months. All but two then began an involved and laborious process of appeal.

To appeal, each must post a $500 bond. He then gets a wholly new trial in the County Court. If he is found guilty there, as have been all those tried so far, he must post a $1,000 bond to appeal to the Circuit Court.

No surety company in Mississippi has been willing to provide bail bonds for the riders Thus they have had to put up cash at each stage of the proceedings.

Travel Expenses Heavy

In addition, state rules require that each one appear in person for his new trial in the County Court and then, later for the further appeal in the Circuit Court. Since many of the riders live far away from Jackson, this imposes a severe burden of travel expenses.

Moreover, the Mississippi authorities have refused to let all the prosecutions stand or fall on one test case, which would be carried to a conclusion first.

They have insisted that the new trials in the County Court proceed at a rate of two a day. The court stenographer has indicated that the minutes of the first such trial will not be transcribed until perhaps next February.

Only thenwi ll the first appeal be ready for hearing by the Circuit Court. After that a further appeal would go to the Mississippi Supreme Court, and from there to the United States Supreme Court.

Faced with that long road, fifty-four of the riders have given up, have pleaded no defense in the County Court and have been fined $200 plus costs.

'Hardship' Is Charged

The United States Solicitor General, Archibald Cox, told the Supreme Court that the "hardship" of the Mississippi appellate process would force "the vast majority" of the riders to give up their constitutional rights before they ever reached the Supreme Court.

Last June a suit was filed by three Negroes in Jackson, Samuel Bailey, Joseph Broadwater and Burnett L. Jacob, seeking an injunction against any enforcement of segregation at terminals.

A three-judge Federal district court, after holding the case until Nov. 17, refused to issue the injunction. The opinion, by Judge Sidney C. Mize, was joined by Judge Claude F. Clayton. Judge Richard T. Rives of the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals bitterly dissented.

It was this decision that the N. A. A. C. P. fund took to the Supreme Court. A motion filed by Mrs. Constance Baker Motley of the fund asked for a stay of the prosecutions until the court decided whether the over-all injunction should be issued.

The real object was to block prosecution of anyone arrested after the filing of the suit last June. That would cover about 220 of the 300 cases.

'Question of Standing' Raised

The Supreme Court denied the stay in a brief, unsigned order. It emphasized that a Federal injunction against state criminal proceedings was always "an extraordinary remedy."

And the court said that "a serious question of standing" was involved because the three plaintiffs in the case had not actually been arrested or threatened with arrest. Thus they might not be legally qualified to speak on behalf of the 220 defendants seeking to avoid trials now.

Justices Hugo L. Black and Felix Frankfurter noted that they joined in denying the stay solely on the latter ground of standing.

The court's action today will not prevent the Justice Department from bringing an independent suit against bus terminal segregation in Jackson if city authorities continue to bring prosecutions. Several such suits are pending in Mississippi and Louisiana.

Briefs opposing the stay were filed by Joe T. Patterson, Attorney General of Mississippi, and Thomas H. Watkins of Jackson.

Barnett Hails Decision

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 18 (UPI)—Gov. Ross R. Barnett, who has attacked the United States Supreme Court for a number of decisions in recent years, complimented the court today.

Governor Barnett termed the court's refusal to bar Mississippi from prosecuting Freedom Riders "the soundest decision the U. S. Supreme Court has rendered in quite a while."

FREEDOM RIDERS- JACKSON
AIR TERMINAL

'Riders' Change To Air Terminal

Three Fly Into Jackson, Are Arrested—Six Arrive On Bus

By KENNETH TOLER

From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., June 7.— Three self-styled Negro 'Freedom Riders" invaded Jackson by air Wednesday to give variety to the two-week-old assault by out-of-staters on Mississippi segregation laws in bus, railroad and airport terminals.

Like the six—three whites and three Negroes—who arrived at noon on a Trailways bus, the airborne riders were arrested after they refused a policeman's order to "move on" to prevent, he said, creating an incident.

All were charged with breach of the peace.

Two From Yale

In the group arriving by bus were three Negro students of Virginia Union University in Richmond, two white divinity students from Yale University and a white woman secretary from New York City.

The three airborne "Riders" came off a Delta Air Lines plane from St. Louis at intervals late in the day.

First off was Ralph Washington, 25, who was arrested when he apparently attempted to enter a white men's restroom. Then Gwendolyn Jenkins, 21, was arrested as she sought to enter a white women's restroom. Later Robert Jenkins, 27, was arrested after he had entered the airport restaurant and seated himself at a table. The Jenkins are not related.

The latest arrivals brought to 81 the number of "Riders" since the first group arrived May 24.

There has been no violence in Mississippi.

Meanwhile, Roy Wilkins of New York City, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, explained the difference between his organization's efforts to break segregation barriers and those of the Congress on Racial Equality, sponsors of the "Rider" movement.

He said the NAACP does not endorse all the methods employed by C.O.R.E, but "we do not sneer at them." The NAACP official said his organization, however, agrees with the objective—to seek enforcement of Federal laws against segregation.

"We (NAACP) believe the way to test a law is to set up a test case, carry it through the courts and get a determination.

"We do not believe you can test a law and get it thrown out by staying in jail," he said. "After one spends 30, 60 or 90 days in jail, the law is still on the statute books and still constitutes a support for segregation."

Face Maximum Penalty

Of the 81 riders who have invaded Jackson, 19 have been released, either by posting $500 cash appeal bonds or paying the $200 fine assessed by Municipal Judge James Spencer. The others, including James Farmer of New York City, national director of C.O.R.E., have said they plan to remain in jail and work out their fines at $3 a day.

Secretary Wilkins commended Gov. Ross Barnett for his recent conference with Negro leaders, including the state NAACP president. He said while they did not agree on the issues, the meeting served to re-establish lines of communication between white and Negro leaders.

He also said schools to step up registration of Negroes for voting in Jackson, Meridian, Laurel, Greenville, Gulfport, Hattiesburg, Clarksdale, Vicksburg and other larger cities fill be opened soon.

The latest caravan of nine "Riders" will face the maximum sentence of $200 and four months in jail under a new policy of Judge Spencer. The first wave of 65 was given a $200 fine, and 60 days in jail suspended, and the next seven received a $200 fine and four months in jail, with two months suspended.

In the group arriving by Trailways bus were:

John Gager Jr., 23, of New Haven, Conn., and Edward Kale, 24, of Greegeville, Idaho, both white divinity students at Yale; Miss Carol Silver, 22-year-old white secretary of New York City, and three Negroes—Reginal Green, 21, of Washington, Obediah Lee Simms, 21, of Pittsburgh, and Raymond B. Randolph Jr., 21, of New Haven, all students at Virginia Union University in Richmond.

Miss Arrests Air-Rider

JACKSON, Miss— "Freedom Rider" arrests here mounted to 81 Wednesday when three air passengers attempted to desegregate terminals at the Jackson municipal airport.

The three passengers were listed as being from the St. Louis area.

Prior to arrival of the airborne group six riders from Nashville, three whites and three Negroes, were jailed at a terminal servicing inter-state travel.

All were charged with breach of the peace.

FREEDOM RIDERS - JACKSON

Felt Like A Missionary Says College Soph After Ordeal

By SANDRA NIXON
(Freedom Rider)

"The sustained attempt to bring about true democracy and full Americanism into travel facilities in the Deep South is a serious and much-needed project sponsored by the Congress of Racial Equality.

"Those of us who volunteered to participate in the Freedom Rides were well aware that we were not embarking on a pleasure jaunt. We felt it to be our duty to our Nation and to ourselves to demonstrate our belief in the democratic principles by attempting to avail ourselves of the rights and privileges which the Constitution says are ours.

LEAVE NEW ORLEANS

"With this thought in mind, eight of us - five white students of Cornell University, two Negroes of Clafin University, and this writer, a sophomore in Southern University, New Orleans - boarded the Illinois Central Railroad train in the Union Passenger Terminal on May 30 at 7 a. m.

"We felt very much like missionaries going into an unknown, hostile territory. The train trip was uneventful.

"Arriving in Jackson, Miss., about 10:10 a. m., we went into the waiting rooms designated for races other than our own. Within minutes we were placed under arrest by police officers who were firm but not rude nor rough.

"FIVE MINUTE TRIAL"

"That same afternoon we were taken to the city court to be tried before Judge James Spencer, the now - famous 'Freedom Ride judge.' Our trial lasted exactly five minutes. We were found guilty and were sentenced to pay fines of $200 each or serve two months in jail. We decided to remain in jail.

"FREE AT LAST" -- Petite Sandra Nixon, 19-year-old Freedom Rider, is shown being welcomed home by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph D. Nixon, 3003 Desire Street, last week, after spending 40 days in Mississippi jails for testing segregated railroad station facilities in Jackson. Miss Nixon is a sophomore at Southern University at New Orleans. (PHOTO BY PORTER)

"I spent one day in the City Jail. The next day I was transferred to the Hinds County jail where I spent the next four weeks sleeping on a concrete floor. The jail cell had only one bed.

"For the first 3 1/2 weeks, there were six persons in the jail cell, then we were moved to another cell housing 13 inmates. It was about 14 by 15 feet. This cell had four bunk beds. Nine inmates, therefore, had to sleep on the concrete floor using thin cotton mattresses which were given them.

"GRITS AND GRAVY"

"We were fed three times a day. Meals varied slightly but generally the menus were, Breakfast: grits, gravy, prunes, biscuits and coffee; Dinner: beans or cabbage, cornbread, sometimes macaroni flecked with meat; Supper: rice, gravy and one wiener. We were fed in tin plates and tin cups.

"In the county jail we were allowed pocket-size books and we spent much of our time reading. The good people of Jackson brought us shorts, towels, toothpaste, cigarettes and beach slippers. No newspapers or radios were allowed.

"We were visited by the Protestant ministers, who were allowed to bring Communion on Sunday. I am a Catholic, but didn't get to see a priest. I found the visits of the ministers very uplifting.

"NEARLY SUFFOCATES"

"Many times I thought about home, my parents, my eight sisters and brothers. My father, Joseph D. Nixon, had told me things would be difficult. He is an Army veteran and had been stationed in Mississippi during World War II.

"One day, the jailer was in a bad mood. He shut all the windows, the heat became unbearable and it was difficult to breathe. One of our girls was suffering with hayfever. She appeared to be suffocating.

"We called the jailer. He took quite some time to come and when he did, it was apparent that his mood had not improved. However, he acted promptly and gave her some medicine which gave relief. He told her in a low voice, 'Take a fool's advice and get out of here.'

SANG FREEDOM SONGS

"Our mail was censored. Some of us were sent packages which we never received. The jailer said he had been instructed not to give us packages. For a while we could buy candy, cigarettes and stationery from a vendor who came through the cell block. We could write as many letters as we wished, at that time.

"Suddenly, the jailer cut off these privileges to punish us. One of the jailers came in using abusive language. He wanted us to get in line for breakfast. Previously, one girl had been receiving the food and passing it around. The jailer was so angry, he took all the food back and we didn't get breakfast that day.

"To keep up our spirits, we sang Freedom songs and hymns, and held devotional services.

"IN PENITENTIARY"

"Just when we were beginning to think the jailers had realized that they could not break our spirits, the disheartening news came that we were to be transferred to the state penitentiary at Parchman.

"On June 23, 26 white and Negro Freedom Riders, 23 females and three males, were herded into a large closed - in truck which had two small windows on each side. We sat on the hard built-in benches and began our long ride.

"That night we reached the penitentiary. The officials were waiting. Our first stop was to give all our belongings to an officer; our shoes were taken, we were searched by four women trusties, then we were given our 'stripes.' Our prison garb had horizontal stripes; those of the trusties had vertical stripes.

"GIRL IS SCRUBBED"

"We were placed in maximum security in a 6 x 9 cell that held two persons. A host of bugs greeted us - crickets, roaches, bed-bugs, a full variety.

"When the 'sergeant' came the next morning, we asked for combs, towels, toothbrushes, toothpaste and soap. He provided them for us.

"We asked and were granted permission to take showers. Some of the girls requested showers shoes because they feared they would get athlete's foot.

"One girl, her name was Ruby, was reluctant to go to the showers without the protective shoes. The 'sergeant' handcuffed her and had two women trusties scour her with a rough scrubbing brush. The others who saw what happened, went to the showers.

"HOLIDAY FOOD"

"The food was much better than that in the county jail. Even in the penitentiary the Fourth of July was celebrated. On that day we were given fried chicken, potato salad, sweet potatoes, cake, cornbread, green beans and lemonade.

"Generally, the food was starchy - biscuits, potatoes, cornbread, string beans with specks of meat, etc.

"Later, more Freedom Riders were transferred and maximum security became overcrowded. Three persons, instead of two, were now in the small cells. The third slept on the floor on a mattress.

"MATTRESSES TAKEN"

"On July 3, our mattresses were taken away because we continued to sing. We slept on the cold steel bunks for two nights agreeing that we would rather sleep that way and sing, than have mattresses and not sing.

"We were told on July 5 we would get our mattresses back if we would 'cooperate.' We agreed to a certain extent.

"INSPECTION RIGGED"

"We soon learned that our mattresses were returned because some people from Minnesota were coming to inspect and to see how Freedom Riders were treated.

"To make it appear that Freedom Riders were comfortable, the jailers transferred me and eight other Negro girls to the prison hospital for 1 1/2 days. This freed three cells into which white girls were placed. The Minnesota visitors, therefore, saw conditions which were especially prepared for their inspection. As soon as the visitors left, we were removed from the hospital and the former overcrowded situation was restored in maximum security quarters.

"TREATED CIVILLY"

"I was taken to the Hinds County jail on July 7 to sign a $500 appeals bond. My time would have been up Aug. 4.

"In the prison, we were addressed by our given names. We could receive two letters and and write two letters a week, but no visitors could come in and no packages could be received.

"I understand that some girls in the last group taken to the penitentiary before I left were given a most painful and extremely personal examination by the women trusties.

"Several girls suffered asthmatic attacks because of the heat and crowded conditions. They received prompt attention and medication.

"WOULD DO IT AGAIN"

"Oh, yes, the jail cells - city, county and state - were racially segregated. We were placed in segregated jails because we protested segregated travel facilities.

"I feel that the Freedom Riders generally received 'preferential' treatment. That is, the officers had obviously been instructed not to handle us in the same manner as they handled other Mississippi prisoners.

"I left Jackson on July 11 and reached home that night. My mother and father were happy to see me and I was glad to be home.

"I feel that my experiences, my sacrifices, are a necessary phase in our non-violent efforts to secure first - class citizenship. Freedom Rides must continue until all vestiges of travel segregation are erased. Young people everywhere should join this movement. As for me, I would not hestitate to do the same thing over again."

JACKSON FINES 13 ON FREEDOM RIDE

The New York Times

Jail Terms Suspended — Alabama Effort Slowed

p. 26

By United Press International.

Thirteen more Freedom Riders were convicted yesterday of breaching the peace in Jackson, Miss.

Dues. 6-6-61

Meanwhile, a Negro integration leader conceded that an injunction against freedom rides in Alabama had slowed down the movement.

New York Times

But in New York the Congress on Racial Equality said a "fly-in" was planned today to hit segregation barriers at Jackson's airport.

Jackson prosecutors accepted $200 fines and suspended sixty-day sentences for six whites and seven Negroes arrested for having tried to use segregated facilities in the bus terminal.

Jack Travis, city attorney, told the court:

"There appears to be a plot and a conspiracy to completely break down our laws. After today, the State of Mississippi and the City of Jackson will demand in other cases similar to these the maximum penalty" of $200 fines and four months in jail

Plans Disrupted

Edward King of Atlanta, head of the Freedom Ride Coordinating Committee said the publicity given Judge Frank M. Johnson's restraining order had left many persons with the impression that the rides had been outlawed throughout the South.

He said the order came when the movement was gaining momentum, and "threw a monkey wrench" into many plans.

An immediate effect, he said, was to place Alabama off limits to Negro college students planning to test segregated travel facilities on their way home for summer vacations.

A group of five freedom riders was to have left Richmond, Va., tonight on a Trailways bus bound for Jackson. They were to have bypassed Alabama and enter Mississippi from Tennessee, after a stop at Nashville for final instructions.

Dr. King said the group had been advised not to attempt to use white facilities until it reached Jackson, where 65 freedom riders have been jailed.

One rider arrested at Jackson was a white man, Richard Gleason, 24 years old. He was permitted to hold a news conference at the City jail last Friday.

Mr. Gleason, a Chicago minister, said he had incurred the anger of some of his jailed colleagues because he refused to join a hunger strike, which proved short-lived.

He said he had joined the movement because he thought it was a "good step toward desegregation." He said he had been shocked to learn that some riders had prison records.

2 Lawyers Going South

Assemblyman Mark Lane and Percy Sutton, president of the Manhattan chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said yesterday they would leave tonight to investigate the arrests of Freedom Riders in Alabama and Misissippi. They plan to offer assistance as lawyers.

Mr. Lane, a Democrat representing the Tenth Assembly District of Manhattan, advised Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy by telegram of the trip.

He said he and Mr. Sutton "plan to us all of the facilities available to people traveling within the United States, as so clearly enunciated by the United States Supreme Court."

"We call upon you, as the chief law enforcement officer in the United tSates, to guarantee that we will be protected from unlawful acts, whether committed by unruly crowds or by those acting under the color of the law," the message said.

The two will leave at 6 P. M. from Newark Airport for Atlanta, Mr. Lane said. From Atlanta they will proceed tomorrow by bus to Montgomery, Ala., then to Jackson, Miss.

Mr. Lane said they expected to remain in the South four or five days, but would stay longer if their services were needed.

Minister Quits Movement

JCKSON, June 5 (AP)—A 24-year-old Chicago minister quit the Freedom Rider ranks today, saying "I will not knowingly associate with any questionable organization."

The Rev. Richard Gleason, a Baptist, said his conversation with other riders had involved atheism, communism and deceit.

"I advise anyone thinking of joining the riders to look them over carefully," he said.

The minister met with newsmen in police offices. He was one of six persons arrested at a bus terminal Friday after a freedom ride from Atlanta to Jackson by way of Montgomery, Ala.

"I heard the movement was doing some good in the area of desegregation," he added. "I had met none of my future partners. If I had, that would be another matter."

When he was arrested, he said, "officers began to tell me about the persons in my party; I went back to the cell and asked them about the records and asked if it was true."

"They said, "Yes, what's wrong with that," he recalled. "I don't see how any group like that can do anything about segregation in the South."

Some riders told him that if the Communist party was doing something worth while, they should join the party, he said.

MISSISSIPPI COURT FINES 27 FOR TEST AT BUS TERMINAL

The New York Times

60-Day Terms Suspended by Judge in Jackson— Appeal Is Expected

P-1

By CLAUDE SITTON

Special to The New York Times.

JACKSON, Miss., May 26—Twenty-seven Freedom Riders were found guilty here today on charges arising from attempts to desegregate bus terminal facilities.

Municipal Judge James L. Spencer fined them $200 each and gave then suspended sixty-day jail terms on charges of refusing to obey an officer.

[In Montgomery, Ala., five integrationists, including the chaplain, a professor and a student at Yale University and two professors at Wesleyan University, were released on bond.]

The defendants here were expected to appeal the sentence.

Entrapment Is Charged

Attorneys representing the demonstrators accused the city police of entrapment, contending that "out-of-order" signs had been placed on the door of the waiting room reserved for Negroes. City attorneys denied this charge.

The arresting officer, Capt. J. L. Ray, testified that he had been ordered to arrest the Freedom Riders if they entered a white waiting room.

Stringent security measures were enforced during the trial in the vicinity of the municipal court. Newsmen and a handful of Negro spectators were the only ones allowed into the courtroom. The police kept pedestrians moving on sidewalks around the building.

James L. Farmer of New York, director of the Congress of Racial Equality, was among the defendants.

Other Riders Ready

The precautions apparently were designed to prevent a repetition of an incident that took place during the recent trial of students who had staged a sit-in at the public library here.

When Negro spectators lined up along the sidewalk across the street from the court's main entrance began to chant, the police charged them with three snarling dogs. Several persons were bitten.

Today's proceedings took place amid reports that other Freedom Riders were waiting in New Orleans and Nashville to come to Jackson if the demonstrators here were convicted.

The twenty-seven riders arrived Wednesday in two groups aboard Trailways buses that had been escorted from Montgomery, Ala., by National Guardsmen and state highway patrolmen.

Sat. 5-27-61

Four members of the first group of eleven Negroes and one white were arrested after ignoring a policeman's order to move away from a rest room entrance in the white waiting room. Eight others were seized inside the rest room.

The second group of fourteen Negroes and one white lined up in front of the waiting room's cafeteria and refused to move. All were charged with breach of the peace and refusing to obey an officer.

The Freedom Riders turned down an offer by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to post bond for them.

Court Permits Integration

JACKSON, Miss. May 26 (UPI)—Two of the defendants were white youths who at first were seated on the white side of the segregated municipal courtroom.

Court officials agreed, however, to allow the two white defendants sit with their Negro companions on the request of their attoneys.

The first of the Negroes to be put on the witness stand after the state had completed its case was the Rev. Mr. James M. Lawson Jr., a Methodist minister of Nashville, Tenn.

On cross examination Mr. Lawson acknowledged that he had been sentenced to three years in Federal prison for refusal to serve in the armed forces.

The prosecution used only one witness—Captain Ray, who was assigned to a police detail at the Jackson bus terminal after having heard that the Freedom Riders were on their way to Mississippi.

At one point the defense asked Judge Spencer for a directed verdict of acquittal on the ground that there had been no evidence presented by the state, that the defendants had been arrested because of race and that their arrests were in violation of the United States Constitution and interstate commerce regulations that provide facilities for interstate travelers be integrated.

Judge Spencer pulled a law book from a collection of more than a dozen on the bench of his walntu-panelled court room and read the state statutes on which the twenty-seven riders had been arrested.

He said they had been brought to trial on clear points of sate law and therefore he could not direct a verdict of not guilty.

Willey Branton of Pine Bluff, Ark., who directed the legal action for Negroes involved in the 1957 Little Rock Ark., school integration dispute, was one of four lawyers who represented the defendants. Another was Charles Olden of St. Louis who is national chairman of the Congress of Racial Equality.

Mr. Branton said Mississippi has brought the defendants to Jackson under the command of National Guardsmen and state troopers with an advance plan to get them arrested.

Entrapment Alleged

"The bus was under control of the state of Mississippi and there was an element of entrapment," Mr. Branton said.

"The National Guard and the police were stationed at the bus terminal so as to funnel the defendants into the white waiting room.

"What happened on their arrival was influenced by their mental and physical condition imposed upon them during their trip."

"Were you permitted to leave the bus any time in Mississippi?" the attorney asked Mr. Lawson.

"We were not," he said.

"Did you request a rest stop?"

"Yes."

Mr. Lawson was asked what he saw on his arrival at the Jackson bus terminal. He said he noticed a sign on the Negro rest room reading, "out of order."

He said he then walked across the waiting room toward what he thought was a magazine rack when a police officer told him to "move on."

He said he moved into the white rest room and was followed by an officer who told him to move on again and then arrested him.

When the prosecution cross examined Mr. Lawson the first questions asked had to do with whether he had committed any crimes.

He admitted that he had refused to serve in the armed forces because "I am a Methodist minister and a Christian and cannot serve in any army."

He said he had been sentenced to three years in prison but was never asked whether he served.

He said his transportation to Jackson had been paid for by the National Nonviolent Movement of Nashville, Tenn.

Captain Ray testified that he had arrested the Freedom Riders because he knew they had come to Jackson for the purpose of creating a disturbance at the bus terminal.

A Jackson Negro attorney, Jack Young, questioned Captain Ray and finally asked him in a quiet voice:

"Captain Ray, you know me very well and you know I live here in Jackson. If I had come into the rest room with [illegible] people, would you have arrested me also?"

"Jack, under the same circumstances I would have arrested you."

James L. Farmer, the national director of C. O. R. E., testified that he had taken the trip to learn "to what extent there was compliance with the Supreme Court."

A Negro Baptist minister from Nashville, the Rev. C. T. Vivian, said he had joined the riders because he wanted "to see if laws of the United States Government would make it possible for all members of society to travel through Jackson without being degraded and treated in an inferior method."

Mr. Vivian said officers arresting the riders first failed to take him into custody and he told a policeman:

"These are my companions being arrested. Why wasn't I? The policeman took my name down quietly and seemed a little ashamed that he had missed me."

---

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 26 (UPI)—Five Freedom Riders, including three white professors and the chaplain of Yale University, posted $1,000 cash bond each today and were released from county jail.

Those released after a night in the fourth-floor county jail were:

The Rev. William S. Coffin Jr., 36 years old, chaplain at Yale; Dr. John Maguire, 28, Assistant Professor of Religion at Wesleyan University at Middletown, Conn.; the Rev. Gaylor B. Noyce, 34, assistant professor at the Yale Divinity School; Dr. David E. Swift, 47, Professor of Religion at Wesleyan, and George B. Smith, 24, a Negro student at Yale.

Bonds were put up by Charles S. Conley, a Negro lawyer.

Mr. Smith told newsmen outside the Sheriff's office that he had to take examinations at Yale next week, and Mr. Coffin was scheduled to deliver a sermon Sunday.

Mr. Coffin, appearing tired and unshaven, told newsmen:

"You are well aware that we have been detained for more than twenty-eight hours, a procedure which is blantantly illegal and a traversy of justice."

Sees Effect Overseas

The Yale chaplain went on:

"Speaking as a member of President Kennedy's Advisory Council for the Peace Corps, I had a lot of time to think about the Peace Corps. I now know that every man and woman who will go to Tanganyika, the Philippines and Colombia this fall will bear the burden of Montgomery, Alabama."

The five were hustled into their attorney's car, which was flanked by more than twenty National Guardsmen.

Sheriff Mac Sim Butler and his deputies then ordered the five defendants to leave immediately because they were blocking the driveway.

Mr. Conley said bond for those released had been raised by wire from people in the home towns of the five.

Some Still in Jail

Still behind bars were the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, Montgomery integration leader; Wyatt Tee Walker, chairman of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference of Atlanta; the Rev. Fred L. Shuttlesworth, Birmingham integrationist; Bernard Lee of Atlanta, and Joseph Charles Jones and Clyde L. Carter, students at Johnson Smith College of Charlotte, N. C., all Negroes.

There was no indication whether they would post bond.

Earlier Adjutant General Henry V. Graham of Alabama announced that martial law would continue here until Freedom Riders ceased "their stupid, immoral and criminal provocations."

The major general, commanding about 1,000 National Guard troops, said he was taking "extra precautions" during the week-end to see that law and order was maintained.

Last Tuesday after he had escorted two groups of racially mixed riders to the Mississippi State line, General Graham said he thought he could recommend dissolving martial law.

'Will Need Security'

"But how are you going to do it if these provocations continue?" he asked today. "If we are going to have another circus, as we had one circus, we will need security."

General Graham said that when the white professors from Northern colleges tried to integrate the Trailways bus terminal here yesterday a crowd of more than 2,000 gathered—including some "excited whites"—which created a condition endangering all those present.

General Graham went on:

"Any other persons who violate the laws of this state * * * particularly at this time, will be arrested and prosecuted with full vigor."

27 'Freedom Riders' Are Fined And Given Suspended Jail Terms

The Courier-Journal
Louisville, Ky.
Sat. 5-27-61

Are Convicted In Mississippi

By The Associated Press

Twenty-seven "freedom riders"—all but two of them Negroes—were convicted of breach of the peace in Jackson, Miss., last night, fined $200 each, and given 60-day suspended sentences at the request of the prosecution.

The convictions were the first in connection with recent attempts to integrate bus-terminal facilities in Alabama and Mississippi.

Three stories dealing with the racial problem and written by Tom Duncan, Worth Bingham, and Robert Riggs are in Sunday's Passing Show.

Municipal Judge James Spencer told the riders that their conduct "flagrantly disobeyed the law" and had led to mob action. He said it would appear that they wanted violence instead of taking their cases through the courts.

'Took Law In Own Hands'

If any person wanted to challenge the laws, he said, orderly methods are provided by law.

"These people took the laws into their own hands and flagrantly disobeyed the law," he said.

The judge emphasized he was not trying any segregation laws or the defendants' rights to ride on any particular buses in any way.

Defense attorney Wilye Branton, Little Rock, Ark., contended that officers herded the "freedom riders" into a waiting room for white persons when they arrived Wednesday from Montgomery, Ala., in what he described as "a plot to arrest them."

Shortly before the convictions at Jackson, the Rev. William S. Coffin, Jr., chaplain at Yale University, and four fellow integrationists were released on bond at Montgomery after spending 28 hours in jail after a bus-station desegregation attempt.

P-3

Coffin, a member of the President's Youth Corps Advisory Council, told newsmen as he stepped outside:

"While I have been in jail I have had time to think of every Peace Corps man and woman, whether tehy come from the North or South, and particularly those going to Tanganyika, the Philippines, and then Colombia. They will have to bear the burden of Montgomery, Ala."

'Travesty On Justice'

Coffin called his arrest and the detention of his companions "blatantly illegal" and a "travesty on justice."

Cash bonds of $1,000 each were posted for the chaplain; the Rev. Gaylord B. Moyce of Yale's Divinity School; Dr. David E. Swift and Dr. John B. Maguire, Wesleyan University religion professors, and George B. Smith, a Negro student at Yale.

Six others, all Negroes, who were arrested with them, remained in jail and may stay there until a hearing set for June 16. An attorney said they might protest by refusing to eat.

Five Whites Convicted

Five white men were convicted in Montgomery City Court on charges growing out of last Saturday's violence which erupted when a group of integrationists arrived at a bus station.

They included Usco Wright, 39, Deatsville, convicted of assaulting Jim Atkins of WBRC-TV at Birmingham. Wright was fined $100 and costs and sentenced to 10 days in jail.

Others convicted were Henry Stanley, 23, Montgomery, assault and battery, 30 days in jail; Larry Pounders, 18, failure to obey an officer, $100 fine, and James and Charles Garner, loitering and disorderly conduct, $75 fine each.

'Immoral And Stupid'

Other developments on the racial front:

1. Alabama Adjutant General Harry V. Graham, commanding the National Guard troops enforcing military law in Montgomery, told newsmen that the refusal of "freedom riders" to suspend their campaign in response to an appeal from Attorney General Kennedy was "immoral and stupid in general."

"How are we going to end it (martial law) when these people ignored the Attorney General's appeal to slow up?" he asked.

2. An Episcopal bishop in Mobile, Ala., the Rt. Rev. George M. Murray, denounced racial violence in the state as "a disgraceful offense against almighty God." He said, "A Christian society does not turn even a murderer to a mob."

3. In Tampa, Fla., the president of the state organization of the National Association for The Advancement of Colored People ordered a test of racial barriers of all rail and bus terminals in that state.

FREEDOM RIDERS- JACKSON
ARRESTED

27 'Freedom Riders' Are Jailed On Arrival In Mississippi Capital

The Courier-Journal

Police, Troops Shield Them

From Wire Dispatches

Jackson, Miss., May 24.—Twenty-seven white and Negro "freedom riders," shielded by National Guard bayonets, invaded the heartland of Southern racial segregation Wednesday and were promptly arrested. 5-25-61

The avowed purpose of the "freedom riders" was to defy all segregation barriers connected with travel on the highways. Their publicized arrival last weekend in Montgomery, Ala., touched off violence that resulted in martial law and the dispatching of hundreds of United States marshals. P-1

This was the first of what Negro leaders vowed would be a continued attack on all forms of racial segregation in the Deep South.

There was no violence Wednesday, but highway patrolmen, helicopters, National Guard bayonets, and local police kept sullen crowds away from the two Trailways buses that sped the "freedom riders" 250 miles from the capital of Alabama to the capital of Mississippi. Louisville, Ky.

The first bus took four rest stops in Alabama. Once it crossed the Mississippi line, however, it hit speeds up to 90 miles an hour and made no stop till it reached Jackson.

The 11 Negroes and one white man on the first bus were singing calypso songs when the bus crossed the state line at Cuba, Ala.

Bomb Rumor Halts Bus

It stopped in the rain because of a rumor that someone in the silent crowd at the state line planned to throw a dynamite bomb.

Police were waiting in Jackson.

The men aboard the first bus swung down when it reached the Jackson terminal at 3:55 p.m. They walked into the whites' rest room and were arrested. Others in the party were arrested in the whites' waiting room.

The second bus, carrying 14 Negroes and one white man, reached Jackson 2 hours later. All were arrested when they walked into the white cafeteria. They sang hymns on the way to jail.

All 27 were charged with disorderly conduct and refusing to obey an officer. They were held in lieu of $1,000 bonds.

People Draw Praise

Governor Ross Barnett, a leading member of the White Citizens Council, has sworn to rush them through his state without stopping, or to arrest any who violated local laws and customs.

"You got to hand it to the people of Mississippi," State Public Safety Commissioner T. B. Birdsong said. "They were just as nice as they could be. They didn't jeer. They didn't yell. They didn't do anything bad."

A third bus from Atlanta, carrying four white professors from Yale and Wesleyan universities and three Negro students, rolled later into Montgomery, where a crowd was waiting at the bus station. This group did not enter any segregated facilities and left the terminal by cars to visit Negro leaders. P-30 Sec 1

Also arrested were Paul Pietrich, a 29-year-old white man from Washington, and the Rev. James M. Lawson, a Negro minister from Nashville.

Mississippi Plans Set

To guard against upheaval in Mississippi, Governor Barnett said he would call out the National Guard or take any steps needed to preserve the peace.

Louisiana Governor Jimmie H. Davis said racial agitators were not welcomed in his state, referring to both the "freedom riders" and the "hate bus" carrying members of the American Nazi Party. The hate bus arrived in New Orleans Tuesday night.

7 More Freedom Riders Are Jailed at Jackson

JACKSON, Miss., June 6 (AP)—Seven more "Freedom Riders" quickly landed in jail at Jackson, Miss., today after a new attack on Mississippi's segregation laws.

Two Negroes and five whites were jailed for breach of peace, the same charge used to jail 65 earlier Freedom Riders. Authorities maintained the breach-of-peace charge has nothing to do with segregation, but the Mississippi Legislature approved the statute last year with an anti-integration label.

Today's group came by bus from New Orleans. Their arrival was uneventful, except for their speedy arrest.

Meanwhile, the first Freedom Fly-In to test "Jim Crow" barriers was scheduled to leave St. Louis for Jackson via a regularly scheduled Delta Airlines flight.

Louisville apparently will be the starting point for more Freedom Riders testing desegregation policies of interstate travel facilities in the deep South.

Louisville integration leader Frank Stanley Jr., said students from Washington, Baltimore, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Richmond, Va., and Louisville would convene there Thursday to study the city's desegregation movement and organize the rides.

Mississippi Arrests 17 More Riders

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Seventeen "Freedom Riders" were arrested and jailed here Sunday in two separate incidents in a whites-only waiting room at a bus station.

Police charged them with breach of the peace.

Nine persons — seven Negroes and two whites — were arrested during the morning. Eight more — six Negroes and two whites — were arrested in the afternoon.

DIDN'T MOVE

In the latter contingent, nine left Montgomery, Ala., for Jackson, but one of them did not participate in the desegregation test.

Arrests were made after police Capt. J. L. Ray told them to "move on" and they didn't budge.

One Negro woman was arrested as she used a white waiting-room telephone.

TOTAL NOW 17

Two persons were arrested and searched after they took seats in the white waiting room.

Otherwise there were no incidents as the number of prisoners grew to 17. The latest arrivals were from Montgomery, Ala.

Earlier, nine persons were arrested as they climbed off a Memphis-to-New Orleans bus and strode into the white waiting room.

ARRESTED AFTER WARNING

Ray had told them to move on. When they did nothing, Ray said: "Did you hear me say move on?"

After getting no response, Ray said: "Every one of you are under arrest."

Officers then herded them into a paddy wagon under the watchful eyes of highway patrolmen and FBI agents. The officers were not needed, however, as there was only a handful of spectators at the station and no incidents occurred.

5 MAKE BOND

Last week, 27 riders were arrested and subsequently convicted by Municipal Judge James Spencer on breach of peace charges. Five gained freedom on bond, but 22 still were behind bars.

In Montgomery, scene a week ago Saturday of bloody rioting, an attempt was made to arrest the Jackson-bound riders when they used white rest room facilities at the white lunchroom, which was closed. Two white riders then headed for the Negro lunchroom, but as they approached, it, too was closed.

It was the same bus station where 11 integrationists were arrested last Thursday when they sat at a white lunch counter.

A spokesman for the Congress of Racial Equality—CORE—Tom Gaither of Great Falls, S.C., said the nine riders were convoyed to the Montgomery bus terminal by National Guardsmen from the home of the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, where they had spent the night after arriving in Montgomery Saturday. National Guardsmen and state patrolmen escorted them.

8 JAILED IN ALABAMA

The eight in the Montgomery group who were jailed were identified as:

Franklin W. Hunt, 22, Washington, D.C., unemployed.

Larry Fred Hunter, 18, Atlanta, student, Tennessee A&I.

William C. Mahoney, Washington, D.C., student, Howard University.

Pauline Knight, 20, Nashville, student, Tennessee A&I.

Albert Lee Dunn, 26, Fort Worth Tex., Methodist minister of a church in Clarkston, Ga.

2 WHITES INCLUDED

Allen Cason Jr., 19, Orlando, Fla., student, Tennessee A&I.

Charles David Myers, 21, Noblesville, Ind., student Central State College, Wilberforce, Ohio, —white.

David D. Fankhauser, 19, Cincinnati, Ohio, student Central State College,—white.

Cason was with the original Freedom Riders group attacked by a mob in Montgomery.

The ninth rider who did not participate in the integration effort at the bus station was identified as Louis Jordon, 28, of Detroit, a student at Central State College.

The Memphis group booked in Jackson earlier were:

Catherine Burks, 21, Birmingham, Ala.; Frances Wilson, 22, Nashville; Frederick Leonard, 18, Chattanooga, Tenn.; Lester G. McKinnie, 21, Bolivar, Tenn.; Mary Jean Smith, 19, Nashville; Etta Simpson, 19, Nashville; William Harbour, 19, Nashville; William Mitchell Jr., 19, Oklahoma City, and Clarence Wright, 19, Nashville.

Miss Burks, Leonard, Miss Simpson, Harbour and Mitchel were members of the Freedom Riders group which was attacked in Montgomery.

A CORE spokesman in Montgomery said that there would be no more Freedom Riders activity Sunday in the Alabama capital.

The scene in Montgomery shifts Monday to a federal courtroom where U.S. Dist. Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. will consider a Justice department suit aimed at preventing further bus station riots.

CASE AGAINST KLAN

The Justice department alleges that Ku Klux Klan members led rioting mobs in Montgomery and Birmingham, Ala., and that police deliberately failed to stop them.

The federal government is asking the judge to prohibit police authorities from failing to protect Freedom Riders and other interstate passengers. The suit also seeks to continue in effect a temporary no-violence order issued eight days ago against the KKK.

On Wednesday, Johnson is scheduled to hear a Freedom Riders suit which would desegregate Montgomery bus terminals and prohibit city, county and state officers from enforcing segregation laws.

MISSISSIPPI

FREEDOM RIDERS-JACKSON
CONVICTED- FINED

17 Freedom Riders Fined In Mississippi

Raleigh N.C.
Tues. 5-30-61

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Municipal Judge James Spencer convicted 17 more "Freedom Riders" Monday and slapped them with $200 fines and 60-day suspended jail sentences — the same penalties he imposed on 27 others last week. P-1

Judge Spencer stressed, as he did when he sentenced those last week, that the Freedom Riders were tried on a breach of the peace charge, and not for violating Mississippi segregation laws.

No Appeal Planned.

Jack R. Young, the Negro defense attorney, said immediately after the 15 - minute trial the Freedom Riders would not appeal.

Of the 27 Judge Spencer convicted and sentenced last Friday, only eight chose to post appeal bonds. The others preferred to remain in jail.

As Spencer was trying the 15 Negroes and 2 whites in Jackson, a workshop was in progress in New Orleans, teaching about two dozen students — most of them white—the techniques of nonviolence.

The workshop, sponsored by the Congress of Racial Equality, ostensibly was held to prime those for a bus trip reportedly to be made from New Orleans to Jackson Tuesday.

Those tried Monday arrived by bus from Memphis and Montgomery, Ala., Sunday and promptly went to City Jail when they refused to heed a police officer's order to move. The Freedom Riders attempted to use white facilities at the bus station and the arrests came when they ignored police orders.

May Stay in Jail.

The group Monday like the first Freedom Riders, have the option of paying their fines, posting appeal bonds, or going to jail. The 60 - day sentences were suspended at the request of the prosecution, as one prosecuting attorney said last week—"because we don't want to be too harsh."

Richard Haley, field director for CORE, charged Monday a guard at the Hinds County Prison Farm where the 19 are serving their sentences clubbed a Freedom Rider for failing to address the guard as "Sir."

Those who posted appeal bonds Monday after arriving at the camp, Haley said, told him the Rev. C. T. Vivian was clubbed several times by the guard. Haley said the 36 - year - old Vivian, who lives in Chattanooga, Tenn., was given first aid after blood began to flow.

Prison farm Supt. Max Thomas could not be reached for comment on Haley's accusation. But Sheriff J. R. Gilfoy said he would investigate the report.

Martial Law Ends.

In Montgomery — scene of violence on the arrival of the Freedom Riders in days past — Alabama Gov. John Patterson ordered an end to martial law in the city at midnight Monday.

Patterson called out the National Guard and imposed martial law on the city eight days ago after a brick - throwing mob stormed a Negro church where a mass meeting was in progress.

In another Montgomery development Monday, a Negro student testified that the only policeman she saw on duty shortly before violence started drove away just as the Freedom Riders arrived.

Patricia Ann Jenkins, a student at Tennessee A&I at Nashville, was the first witness at a federal court hearing.

Raleigh N.C.

The Justice Department has asked U.S. Dist. Court Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. for an injunction to compel Montgomery and Birmingham police to protect Freedom Riders and other interstate bus passengers in the future. Tues. 5-30-61

At New Orleans, George Lincoln Rockwell and nine members of his American Nazi party —opposed to race-mixers and Communists — were in their fourth day of a hunger strike in Parish (county) Jail.

The 10 were arrested last Thursday and charged with disturbing the peace in connection with their picket of the Israel-based film "Exodus."

ARRIVE FOR HEARING—Montgomery, Ala., Police Commissioner L. B. Sullivan and his wife, accompanied by a policeman, enter federal court for hearing Monday on government's request for an injunction to require police to protect passengers on interstate buses. Witnesses testified officers stood by while Freedom Riders were being beaten.

27 Riders Convicted And Fined

Atlanta Daily World
Atlanta, Ga.

JACKSON, Miss. — (UPI)— Twenty seven "freedom riders", including two white men, were convicted of a breach of the peace, given 60-day suspended sentences and fined $200 each in Jackson Municipal Court Friday. P-1

Those convicted Friday were arrested Wednesday when they rode into the state from Montgomery, Ala., on a heavily - guarded bus and attempted to use white bus station facilities in this bastion of segregation. Tues. 5-29-61

They were taken into custody on two Mississippi laws — breach of the peace and disobedience to police officers. The disobedience charge was dropped when the trial began.

The 27 defendants were returned to their jail cells pending a conference of attorneys as to whether they would appeal the decision.

They were expected to appeal immediately even the fines and then refuse to pay a bond for their freedom pending another trial.

The 27 riders could have been given up to a $500 fine plus six months in jail.

Mississippi and Alabama authorities have promised that new riders who violate state segregation laws will be arrested.

Jackson City prosecutor Jack Travis Jr. said in answer to a question about the possibility of new riders, "That's all right, we can accommodate them."

In testimony at the two -hour trial, Capt. J. L. Ray of the Jackson Police Department acknowledged that had the 25 Negroes obeyed signs posted in the bus terminal waiting rooms concerning white and Negro use of rest rooms, "I would not have arrested them."

The first of the Negroes to be put on the witness stand after the state completed its case was James M. Lawson Jr., a Methodist minister of Nashville, Tenn. P-5

On cross examination Lawson acknowledged that he was sentenced to three years in federal prison for refusal to serve in the armed forces.

Atlanta, Ga.

The prosecution used only one witness - Capt. Ray, who was assigned to a police detail at the Jackson bus terminal after having advanced knowledge that the "freedom riders" were en route to Mississippi.

At one point the defense asked Judge James L. Spencer for a directed verdict of acquittal on grounds that there had been no evidence presented by the state, that the defendants were arrested because of race and that their arrests were in violation of the U. S. Constitution and interstate commerce regulations which provide that facilities for interstate travelers must be integrated.

Spencer pulled a law book from a collection of more than a dozen on the bench of his walnut -panelled court room and read the state statutes on which the 27 riders had been arrested.

He said they had been brought to trial on clear points of state law and therefore he could not direct a verdict of not guilty.

Willey Branton of Pine Bluff, Ark., who engineered the legal action for Negroes involved in the 1957 Little Rock, Ark., school integration dispute, was one of four lawyers who represented the defendants. Another was Charles Olden of St. Louis who is national chairman of the Congress of Racial Eqquality CORE.

Branton said Mississippi brought the defendants to Jackson under the command of National Guardsmen and state troopers with an advance plan to get them arrested.

"The bus was under control of the state of Mississippi and there was an element of entrapment," Branton said.

Lawson was asked what he saw on his arrival at the Jackson bus terminal. He said he noticed a sign on the Negro rest room reading "out of order."

He said he then walked across the waiting room toward what he thought was a magazine rack when a police officer told him to "move on."

He said he moved into the white rest room and was followed by an officer who told him to move on again and then arrested him.

Ray testified he arrested the "Freedom riders" because he knew they had come to Jackson for the purpose of creating a disturbance at the bus terminal.

Jackson Negro attorney Jack Young questioned Ray and finally asked him in a quiet voice:

"Captain Ray, you know me very well and you know I live here in Jackson. If I had come into the restroom with these people, would you have arrested me also?"

"Jack, under the same circumstances I would have arrested you."

27 Arrested In Mississippi As Rides Continued

JACKSON, Miss. — (UPI)—Two busloads of white and Negro "freedom riders" entered race-conscious Mississippi from the riot-scarred capital of Alabama Wednesday and were promptly arrested by waiting police.

The first busload of 12 "freedom riders"—11 Negroes and one white man — reached Mississippi's capital shortly afternoon. They were arrested at the terminal here when the Negro men walked into the white rest room.

The second bus load rolled into Jackson at 6:44 p. m., EDT, and its 15 riders, again including one white man, were rushed off to jail when they tried to enter the white cafeteria at the bus station.

They began singing hymns in the police wagon.

A third bus, carrying four white college professors from Connecticut and three Negro students, was on its way.

Negro leaders said the mass attempt to defy segregation customs of 90 years in the hardcore deep South was just the beginning. They said the "freedom ride" of the inter-racial groups would continue and fan out over the South from Montgomery, Ala., where violence broke out last weekend.

The first two buses were escorted by National Guardsmen and highway patrolmen along the seven-hour route from the capital of Alabama to the capital of Mississippi. Alabama officers turned the buses and their riders over to Mississippi officers at the state line.

Among those arrested on the second bus was James Farmer, national director of the Congress on Racial Equality (CORE) which started the "freedom ride" earlier this month from Washington, D.C.

Several hundred white persons—mostly silent — waited at the bus terminal in Jackson. Police with trained dogs on leashes held them back. There was no violence.

When the first bus pulled in after hitting non-stop speeds up to 90 miles an hour on the final stretch of the ride, the National Guardsmen who had boarded it at the state line stepped out first.

The men walked into the white rest room after reading a sign saying the Negro area was closed.

All were first held in lieu of $1,500 bond on three charges each of inciting to riot, breach of the peace and refusing to obey an officer. The inciting to riot charge—the most serious of the three—later was dropped against all 27 riders and the bonds reduced to $1,000 each on charges of disorderly conduct and refusing to obey an officer.

Arrested were Paul Deitrich, 29, of Washington, the only white person in the bi-racial group; Jean Thompson, 19, New Orleans; Harold Andrews, 23, Atlanta, of Morehouse Col.; Matthew Walker, Jr., 19, a Nashville student; the Rev. James M. Lawson, 32, a Nashville Methodist minister; Joseph Carter, 22, student from Brooklyn, N. Y.; Julia Aaron, 20, a Southern University student from New Orleans; James L. Bevel, 24, a Nashville student; Cordy T. Vivian, 36, a Nashville minister; Davis J. Dennis, 20, Shreveport; the Rev. Alexander Anderson, 35, a Nashville Methodist minister; and Bernard Lafayette, 30, a Baptist minister from Tampa, Fla.

FREEDOM RIDERS- JACKSON
ARRESTED

Lots of cell space available, says chief

The Birmingham News P-1

42 in jail; cases getting to be routine

Wed. 5-31-61

Birmingham, Ala.

By The Associated Press

JACKSON, Miss., May 3[illegible]—(AP)—Police in this Mississippi capital city of 150,000 were ready today with unlimited jail space throughout the state for more "freedom riders."

Already 52 persons testing segregation laws in bus and train terminals have been arrested and convicted on breach of peace charges. Ten have posted appeal bails or paid their $200 fines.

There are no new announced plans for more freedom rides.

"They may as well quit," said Police Capt. L. C. Bennett. "They're not worrying us. It's getting to be routine."

Yesterday, eight more freedom riders joined earlier groups in testing "Jim Crow" barriers. The newest arrivals—first to come by train—were speedily arrested and got $200 fines and 60-day suspended sentences. Their trial lasted five minutes.

THE 44 EARLIER freedom riders were jailed when they attempted to use white facilities in a cross-country bus terminal.

Thirty-four of the riders, including yesterday's arrivals, remain in jail. They will apparently work out their fines at the rate of $3 per day.

"We're a long way from being where we can't take care of them," Sheriff J. R. Gilfoy said. "If their idea is to saturate the jails, it will take a lot of people. the county jail here can hold 160 to 170 and the city jail between 150 and 175."

Eight whites are being held in the city jail and 26 Negroes in the county jail.

Gilfoy said that if necessary a circuit judge can be petitioned for permission to send prisoners anywhere in the state.

"I feel any sheriff would cooperate with me 100 per cent in keeping these prisoners," the sheriff said.

YESTERDAY'S ARRIVALS came from New Orleans aboard the crack passenger liner "City of New Orleans." The group included five whites—four students from Cornell University—and three Negroes.

Monday they had attended a special "workshop" in New Orleans on freedom ride tactics. The class was sponsored by the Congress on Racial Equality (CORE), one of the equal rights groups sponsoring the segregation tests.

They were arrested when they failed to obey police orders to move on following their arrival in Jackson, No incidents occured.

Both defense and prosecution attorneys agreed to skip a rerun of the two previous freedom rider trials and Municipal Judge James L. Spencer quickly convicted them.

CORE fied Secretary Richard Haley of Chicago, who observed the arrest and trial said they were "done in a business-like manner."

None of the eight would say if they planned to pay the fines or post appeal bonds.

Meanwhile, a group of Cornell students at Ithaca, N. Y., raised funds to get their classmates out of jail. Another Cornell group made plans to send more freedom riders into the South.

Eric Craven, 19, of New York City, chairman of the Cornell Committee against Segration, said his group planned to send one group of students South next week and another group the following week. He said the organization was taking instructions from CORE and would send the students wherever needed.

17 'Riders' Pass Through State, Jailed In Jackson

Birmingham Post-Herald

Birmingham, Ala.

Mon. 5-29-61

JACKSON, Miss., May 28 (UPI)—New waves of "freedom riders" made fresh assaults on bus terminal segregation practices today. They met expected arrest in Mississippi but surprisingly no resistance in Alabama.

Apparently arriving as part of a stepped up campaign by a new "freedom ride" co-ordinating committee, two groups of students, including 15 Negroes and two white youths, were promptly arrested when they entered the white waiting rooms at the two bus stations here.

The arrests brought to 45 the number of "freedom riders" jailed in this segregation stronghold within the past five days. The students rejected bond pending trial Monday on charges of breach of the peace.

One group of nine Negroes arrived at the Greyhound terminal early this morning from Nashville, Tenn. A second bi-racial group disembarked at the Trailways bus station this afternoon. There were no crowds, other than bus passengers, at either terminal.

No Trouble

The bi-racial group came here from Montgomery where they encountered no difficulty in using white facilities at the Trailways terminal. A similar attempt at the Greyhound station eight days ago touched off violence that brought U. S. marshals, National Guardsmen and limited martial law to the Alabama capital. Six Negroes entered the white rest room without resistance. The lunch counter and "colored" rest rooms were closed.

P-1

Under the eyes of armed Alabama guardsmen, the seven Negroes and two white students purchased tickets and boarded a bus for Jackson. The bus was escorted by Highway Patrol cars, carrying guardsmen, to the Mississippi border.

Alabama Adj. Gen. Henry V. Graham and Sheriff Mac Sim Butler saw the bus from Montgomery. Asked why the Negroes were not arrested when they used the white rest room, Butler replied, "None of us saw it. We were getting some sleep when the call came." Graham declined to comment " at the present time."

Police Waiting

Police officers were waiting for the nine Negroes who arrived in Jackson around dawn from Nashville. Appearing fresh from a night-long ride, the group, all students at Tennessee A&I University, gathered in front of the "colored" waiting room. Then they filed into the white waiting room.

"All right, you'll have to move on," an officer told them. When the order was ignored, he said 'Okay, you're under arrest." En route to the police wagon, one of the Negroes handed Det. Chief M. B. Pierce pamphlets entitled "Fellowship and Human Rights in America." Pierce laughingly agreed to distribute them.

The students joined 22 of the original 27 "freedom riders" in jail. Five of the students jailed last Wednesday were released under appeal bonds yesterday. one to graduate from college and four to fight charges against them in New Orleans for an earlier anti - segregation demonstration. The original 27 riders were convicted on breach of the peace charges last Friday.

The renewed "freedom ride" activity had been predicted Saturday in Atlanta by Edward B. King, a spokesman for a new coordinating committee for the anti-segregation rides. King said the new committee was formed Friday in the Atlanta office of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., top Negro integration leader in the South.

Birmingham, Ala.

Hearing Set Today

A hearing is scheduled to begin in U. S. Middle District Court in Montgomery Monday on a Federal injunction against interference with interstate bus passengers. Defendants include three Alabama Ku Klux Klan groups, Montgomery Police Commissioner L. B. Sullivan and Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal and Birmingham police officials. Another hearing is to be held in Montgomery Wednesday on a Federal court suit filed by "freedom riders" attacking Alabama segregation laws.

The students who used white facilities in the Montgomery bus terminal today expressed surprise at the absence of resistance.

Mon. 5-29-61

"It's so calm it's almost unbelievable in comparison with what happened there Saturday (eight days ago)," said Pauline Knight, 20. "I just hope the people are peaceful in their hearts."

Two white youths with the group, David Myers, 21, and David Forkhauser, 19, both students at Central State College, Wilberforce, Ohio, said they were "pleasantly surprised" at the Montgomery reception. Myers said he would "really be surprised" if they were not arrested in Jackson.

Jackson Suit Filed to Stop Riders' Arrest

JACKSON, Miss., June 9 (UPI)—Negro attorneys filed suit in Jackson today to stop the arrest of "Freedom Riders" under Mississippi segregation laws. The Justice Department, meanwhile, weent to the legal aid of the riders in Alabama.

The Mississippi suit was filed in U. S. District Court here just a few hours after local officials arrested another ground of five riders who arrived in Jackson by train from Nashville, Tenn., and attempted to use segregated facilities.

A total of 98 Freedom Riders have been jailed in Mississippi's capital city since May 24.

New Rides Planned

A Congress of Racial Equality spokesman in Atlanta said, meanwhile, that the movement was gaining momentum and new rides were being organized in Nashville, New Orleans, St. Louis, Memphis and Atlanta.

The spokesman, B. E. Cox, said some of the rides would have destinations other than Jackson. He said one group, including some "professional people was organizing in Maryland and would set out soon for Florida, "testing" facilities in Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia along the way.

The Jackson suit was filed by Thurgood Marshall, chief counsel for the NAACP and two local Negro attorneys—R. Jess Brown and Constance Baker Motley.

It asked that the city, the state and all bus lines and common carriers operating in the state be enjoined from continuing to enforce the state's racial segregation laws an dthe city's policy of segregation in waiting rooms and rest room facilities at transport terminals.

Defendants Listed

Named as defendants were State Attorney General Joe Patterson; the city of Jackson; Mayor Allen Thompson, City Commissioners Thomas B. Marshall and D. L. Luckey; Chief of Police W. D. # Station Mob Cries 'Kill 'Em,' Beats 5 Negroes in Mississippi

(Copyright 1961 by the New York Times Co.)

McCOMB, Miss. — A mob of whites shouting, "Kill 'em, Kill 'em!" set upon five Negro freedom riders Wednesday and drove them from the Greyhound bus station here.

Although the three youths and two girls were mauled severely, none was seriously injured. They fled to safety at a Negro hotel after escaping from their assailants in a waiting taxi.

A dozen white youths and men in the small but angry crowd joined in pummeling the Negroes. They chased them around and over counters and tables in the previously white waiting room of the terminal before kicking them out the door.

The mob tossed one youth into the air again and again in the street outside, kicking and beating him as he struck the pavement.

Five minutes after the Negroes had escaped, Chief of Police George Guy and Patrolman Edward (Big Eddie) Smith arrived on the scene from the City Hall, less than a block from the terminal. They cleared the streets and sidewalks with little trouble.

In an unrelated incident, a Columbia Broadcasting System television cameraman from Jackson, Johaan Rush, 19, was attacked Wednesday morning while taking films of the station and a group of whites standing around it.

The violence marked the first move in Mississippi's history to comply with a federal court desegregation order. The riders came here by bus Wednesday morning to test the city's compliance with a federal directive to halt the enforcement of segregation at bus and rail terminals.

The order was handed down in open court last week and filed Monday in Jackson. A U.S. deputy marshal served copies of it on Mayor C. H. Douglas, Chief Guy and the city's selectmen Tuesday.

FBI agents, who already were here, apparently as observers, began an immediate inquiry into the trouble.

The Justice department in Washington said the FBI will conduct a "complete investigation" into the incident.

The testing group, all members of the New Orleans chapter of the Congress of Racial Equality, said a further attempt would be made to use previously white terminal facilities.

"We'll be back," declared Doratha Smith, 18, after she had been examined by Dr. James Anderson.

The five Negroes came here under the leadership of Jerome Smith, 22, president of CORE's New Orleans chapter. The others are George Raymond, 18, Thoma Valentine, 23, and Alice Thompson, 22.

Gaither said Thomas Valentine was beaten and "thrown into the street."

Earlier, a crowd of whites attacked free lance photographer Johann Rush, 19, of Jackson, Miss., and reportedly tore his coat and damaged his camera.

The police chief said several men "whipped him around a little bit" but added he thought Rush "was okay." 11-30-61

The police chief said Rush remained at City Hall, discussing the incident with officers but was not charged with anything. There were no other arrests made.

By CLIFF SESSIONS

JACKSON, Miss. (UPI)—Six white "freedom riders," led by a blonde coed, were arrested Sunday when they sought service at a lunch counter in the Negro waiting room of the Greyhound Bus terminal.

The riders, four of them students at the University of Minnesota, came here from Nashville, Tenn., where they stopped off for instructions on "freedom riding" from the Nashville Non-Violent Movement.

Leading their invasion of the segregated waiting room was Claire O'Conner, a 22-year-old coed from St. Paul, Minn., and the only girl in the group. She and four other riders sat at the counter and were promptly arrested.

The sixth one, Eugene John Uphoff, 19, of Minneapolis, walked in later, struggling to carry a guitar, and he, too, was arrested after conceding he was part of the group.

Uphoff told officers he brought the guitar to "while away" his time in jail and to "keep spirits up." But it was taken from him under a policy against allowing metal objects in the cells.

Officers said Miss O'Conner told them she felt "stifled" by segregation.

Others in the group were identified as Marvin Allen Davidov, 29, of Minneapolis; Robert M. Baun, 19, Excelsior, Minn.; David Kerr Morton, 21, whose family recently moved from Minneapolis to Jackson, Wyo., and Zev Alcony, 23, of Minneapolis.

Officers said members of the group told them they answered a call for volunteers by the Congress of Racial Equality. They said six others from the university also agreed to make a "freedom ride" but later changed their minds.

FREEDOM RIDERS- JACKSON
FEDERAL JUDGE REFUSED TO RULE ON RIDERS UNTIL THE MATTER IS TAKEN THROUGH STATE COURTS

Judge Refuses Rule On Riders

Mize Says No Federal Role Is Proper Until State Courts Hear Cases

By United Press International

JACKSON, Miss., June 27.—A Federal judge refused Tuesday to rule on the constitutionality of Mississippi's arrests of the so-called "Freedom Riders" until the matter is taken through state courts.

District Judge Sidney Mize of Biloxi said it would be improper for Federal courts to step into the case at this time.

Judge Mize had been asked to deliver a ruling by attorneys who claimed Mississippi state courts are "behind segregation" and the matter should be "pried out of their hands."

Strategy Session

As Judge Mize was delivering his answer from the bench, high ranking members of the so-called "Freedom Rider" movement were en route here for a closed-door strategy session later Tuesday.

Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. of Atlanta, president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, and representatives of other groups which have sponsored the rides were to attend the meeting.

There were reports that some integration leaders want to ease off the rides but Richard Haley of Chicago, a representative of the Congress on Racial Equality, said his organization still favors the anti-segregation rides.

A total of 164 riders have been arrested here since May 24 after attempting to integrate waiting rooms in bus, train and plane terminals. All but one of them, a juvenile, have been convicted of breaching the peace.

Rejects Writ

Judge Mize's decision came as he rejected a habeas corpus plea to free one of the riders—Elizabeth Wyckoff, 45, a free-lance writer from Greenwich Village—from custody.

Her attorneys, William M. Kunstler of New York and Jack Young of Jackson, claim Mississippi authorities are using the breach of the peace statute unlawfully to enforce segregation.

Kunstler told Judge Mize in a hearing last week it was his duty to issue the writ even though Miss Wyckoff had not exhausted her legal remedies in Mississippi's courts.

"State courts are not going to be of any assistance to her," Kunstler said.

But Judge Mize said he was prohibited from entering the case under "an act of Congress. He pointed out Miss Wyckoff's city court conviction could be appealed in Hinds County Court, Circuit Court, and the state Supreme Court.

Expected To Appeal

Attorney Tom Watkins of Jackson, in arguing for the state in last week's hearing, said Kunstler was wrong in claiming Miss Wyckoff could not get a fair hearing in Mississippi courts, which he said were due "an apology" by the New York attorney.

Watkins claimed issuance of such a Federal writ would "pervert the entire system of state courts."

Kunstler and Young are expected to appeal Judge Mize's decision.

Students promise to keep riding

The Afro-American P1

Date 12-9-61

McCOMB, Miss. — "This is only the beginning. We plan to continue exercising our Constitutional right to ride in and out of this town as well as anywhere else in Mississippi."

This was what a spokesman for the Congress of Racial Equality told the AFRO, this week, in wake of the third Freedom Ride here over a four - day period, last week.

The ride on Saturday was by three former students of Burglund High School here who were expelled for participating in sitdown activities.

A total of 11 Freedom Riders from New Orleans came here Wednesday and Friday to test application of a court order which bans segregation of interstate travelers.

Those participating in Friday's test were Thomas Peete, Willis Bradford, Claude Reese and Patricia A. Tate, all of Baton Rouge; George Raymond and Jean Thompson, both of New Orleans.

THE FIVE WHO arrived on Thursday, including two girls, were beaten by a mob of approximately 25 men and boys. Six returned the following day and were threatened, but not beaten, by a mob of several hundred persons.

THE VICTIMS of the mob which gathered about the Greyhound bus terminal in McComb were identified as Misses Doratha Smith, 18, and Alice Thompson, 22; Jerome Smith, president of the New Orleans Chapter of CORE, 22; George Raymond, 18, and Thomas Valentine, 23.

In wake of the attack, telegrams from groups in Mississippi and other states requested U.S. Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy to act to insure the safety of interstate travelers in Mississippi, particularly in McComb, and enforcement of the Interstate Commerce Commission and Federal Court ruling banning racial discrimination in travel.

Such communication came from CORE, Mississippi State Conference of the NAACP, Woman Power Unlimited, a Jackson organization, and a number of Mississippi ministers.

IN WASHINGTON, the Attorney General expressed deep concern over the outbreak of mob violence.

He said the FBI had been asked to make a complete investigation and that the "matter will be vigorously pursued."

Mr. Kennedy added:—

"Officials of the Department of Justice have just talked by telephone to Mayor C. H. Douglas. We have received his personal assurance that the five persons who were subjects of violence, will receive full and complete protection while in the city.

"Only a relatively small nurber of persons are responsible for this inexcusable violence. We are certain that the vast majority of the people of McComb and other parts of the country deplore the incident."

He said that before arrival of the group from New Orleans the Mayor issued a public statement to the effect that he and the police would not attempt to enforce segregation, but were going to let the testers "get their heads skinned."

He said the group arrived at the bus terminal the second time at 2:59 and was almost immediately set upon by a waiting mob of about 25 men and boys.

* * *

"THEY WERE beaten until 3:10," the CORE official stated.

The actual attack was described as follows:—

When the group arrived at the terminal an elderly white man wearing work clothes and a gray felt hat attempted to block the entrance to the waiting room.

He stepped aside when the Freedom Riders pushed pass. Misses Smith and Thompson, Raymond and Valentine sat at the lunch counter. Smith went to the ticket window, while Raymond asked to be served.

* * *

UPON BEING ignored, Raymond again asked to be served. A. P. McGehee, walked from behind the operator of the terminal counter and said in a loud voice:—

"Greyhound does not own this building. Greyhound does not own this restaurant You get out of here."

While McGehee was ordering the group out, one of the members of the mob grabbed a cup of hot coffee from a table, went over to Raymond and poured the hot liquid down his back.

Smith, who still was sitting at the lunch counter, got up and motioned for the others to take seats in the waiting room. As the group got up to move, Raymond was then attacked by another member of the mob.

* * *

THE FREEDOM RIDER tried to protect himself from blows that were rained upon his head and body by the mob leader and others who joined the attack.

The Afro-American P1 Date 12-9-61 Baltimore, Md.

The whites were shouting and cursing: "Kell 'em! kill 'em! kill 'em!"

One of the male Freedom Riders was tossed again and again into the air. All of them were struck, knocked down and kicked inside the terminal and on the street after be ing forced outside.

All suffered bruises, cuts and contusions. Miss Smith was mauled so severely she had to be treated by a physician.

After the group escaped by taxi and was carried to a local hotel, Police Chief George Guy and Patrolman Edward Smith arrived on the scene and told the mob to clear the street. They left McComb at 9:30 p.m. Thursday, escorted directly to a bus by policemen.

No arrests were made.

EARLY THURSDAY morning, Johann Rush, television cameraman, was assaulted by members of the mob.

The violence followed by a week and one day a ruling by a three-judge Federal Court that the Nov. 1 Interstate Commerce Commission regulation banning segregation in railroad stations and bus terminals must be complied with.

Monday of this week, copies of the order, which also invalidated three Mississippi laws requiring segregation, were served by a Deputy U.S. Marshal or Mayor Douglas and Chief Guy.

It is understood that agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation were present during the violence and have first hand information on what actually occurred.

* * *

LATER MAYOR DOUGLAS announced that four of the men in the mob were arrested and charged with fighting and disturbing the peace. They were released on $100 bail, the Mayor said.

The official also pledged that police would prevent further violence, but despite this promise four newspapermen from Life magazine and the Associated Press were attacked by mob members.

Injunction Hearing To Follow Temporary Order

P. 1

McCOMB, Miss., Dec. 3 (UPI)—The Congress of Racial Equality today was ordered by a Federal judge to stop "freedom rides" into this strife-torn South Mississippi city. 12-4-61

Tom Gaither, a field secretary for CORE, was served a temporary restraining order in Jackson this morning. It was granted Saturday by U. S. District Judge Sidney Mize of Biloxi, Miss.

Mize took the action on request of city and state officials who charged CORE-sponsored rides were designed to "foment violence and to provoke breaches of the peace."

Birmingham Ala

Hearing Set Thursday

Mize scheduled a hearing in Jackson Thursday on a request for a temporary injunction against more rides. The restraining order is for a 10-day period and is designed to prevent rides until the injunction request can be acted upon.

Six riders and as many newsmen have been attacked here since the rider campaign into McComb began Wednesday and angry crowds of white persons have gathered in the streets. The integration campaign was touched off when two Federal Judges, over objections from Mize, ordered an end to segregation in the terminal recently.

Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson, McComb City Attorney Louis Alford and other lawyers claimed in their petition for an injunction that "agitation" by riders "was calculated to, did and will continue to provoke further incidents of violence in and around said bus terminal."

Terminal Closing Cited

They said Mr. and Mrs. Arthur McGee, operators of the terminal, had been forced to close it.

Failure of the court to stop the rides, they charged, would bring on "immediate and irreparable injury, loss and damage" to the McGees and to the city.

They requested that the court stop CORE "from continuing to utilize said terminal facilities for the purpose of fomenting violence and provoking breaches of the peace in or near said terminal facilities."

Gaither issued a statement pointing out that U. S. Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. "recently dissolved an injunction similar to the order just issued by Judge Mize."

Gaither said the United States government shares a view by CORE that "the right of an individual" cannot be limited.

Restrained By Judge's Order; McComb Editor Is Attacked

McCOMB, Miss. (AP)—A Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) field representative said today his group will oppose a federal order banning further CORE integration tests in McComb terminals.

"We are really exercising our rights as citizens under the Interstate Commerce Commission ruling," Tom Gaither, the CORE official, said in Jackson.

The ICC has ordered a halt to segregation in interstate travel facilities.

U.S. Dist. Judge Sidney J. Mize of Gulfport will hear CORE arguments in Jackson federal court Thursday. Judge Mize issued the temporary restraining order against CORE over the weekend in the wake of racial incidents here.

The restraining order forbids CORE to use terminal facilities "for the purpose of fomenting violence and provoking breaches of the peace in and near said terminal facilities."

The order lasts 10 days, but its effect could be extended if Judge Mize approves a request for a temporary injunction Thursday.

The latest disorder in this southwestern Mississippi city of 12,000 came Sunday when a white man punched J. Oliver Emmerich, 62, editor and publisher of the McComb Enterprise Journal.

Milton J. Stayton, 43, a McComb oil production man, met the editor in a drug store and asked Emmerich if he were responsible for bringing out-of-town newsmen to McComb.

The blow shattered Emmerich's glasses and opened a cut over his brow which had to be closed with stitches.

Stayton was freed on $1,000 bond after police booked him on assault and battery charges.

"He asked me if I were crazy," Stayton said. "When a man up and says I am crazy, I don't like it. I hit him because he said I'm crazy. It was not anything pertaining to integration."

Associates said Emmerich replied negatively to Stayton's query on reporters, saying he had only shown visiting newsmen professional courtesy.

A group of white men beat five Negroes Wednesday and threw them out of a McComb bus terminal. The Negroes rode here and used the white waiting room.

Four newsmen were struck by angry crowds of whites Friday as six Negroes — under heavy police guard — were successful in using the bus terminal.

It was during Friday's flare-up that the city announced it would seek a restraining order. McComb officials accused CORE of sending in its agents to "break down the peace and order in McComb."

A 3-judge federal court earlier ordered the city to remove waiting room segregation signs that appeared outside the terminal after the ICC ruling effected the removal of signs inside.

The federal tribunal enjoined city authorities from performing any acts to enforce segregation in interstate terminals.

In asking for the restraining order, McComb authorities said they not sit by and let CORE endanger the citizentry of McComb under a fictitious cover of interstate travel."

Three Jackson Negroes Cite State Segregation Laws —Case Is Postponed

From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., July 10. — Three Negroes challenging Mississippi segregation statutes dealing with transportation facilities are residents and businessmen of Jackson. They were in Federal Court Monday morning when a three-judge panel postponed the case until Aug. 7.

As the case was called, the Federal Government entered it with a brief supporting contentions raised by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People that state laws are invalid.

Although not related directly to the self-styled "Freedom Riders," the issue follows the arrests of more than 200 whites and Negroes who entered segregated facilities in Jackson in protest to their segregation by state law.

Government Brief

The Government brief notes it is "not concerned with the wisdom or utility of the so-called freedom rides in general, nor with the merits of any individual arrest." However, it cites that "Negroes are being arrested by the police if they do nothing more than to enter white terminal facilities."

The brief explains that the Government "is not attempting to have this court enjoin criminal prosecutions already begun in state courts. But simply to prevent the future enforcement of state enactments in situations which would bring such enforceemnt in conflict with the Federal Constitituon." That relates to the convictions of the protest riders for breach of the peace for refusing to leave segregated facilities when ordered to do so by police.

Relative to the state's use of the breach of the peace statute, the Federal brief asserts that "state-imposed racial segregation which is otherwise forbidden may not be accomplished or enforced through the vehicle of the application of otherwise valid statutes or ordinances or by arrests not pursuant to any specific statutory authority."

14th Amendment

"Thus, the arrests and convictions for breach of the peace, based solely on the defendant's use of facilities, which, under the 14th Amendment or other Federal consititutional or statutory authority, he has a right to use on a non "segregated basis, are necessarily illegal and void," the Government contends. "The state and its officials are acting beyond the scope of their lawful power if they make such arrests and obtain such convictions."

"Since a Negro has a constitutional right to the use of non-segregated facilities, his use of the white portion of those facilities cannot be taken into account to support the legality of his arrest or conviction," the Government said "Nor can arrests of those who lawfully exercise their constitutional rights be supported on the theory that others, unwilling to respect the law of the land and the rights of their fellow citizens, might riot and that breaches of the peace and violence might ensue."

Promise Of Arrests

The arrests were premised on the presence of the protest riders, who came here deliberately to test the laws, causing violence. However, the Government asserted in that relation that "the obligation of the state in such a situtation is not to violate the constitution by arresting those who act under it, but to punish those who would interfere"

"This court cannot permit these officals to avoid their constitutional obligation and it surely cannot permit them to punish those who are law-abiding merely because such a course may seem to the officials more convenient or more popular than dealing with the mob.

"Constitutional rights would be frail indeed if the courts were to cease protecting them because a mob willed it so," the Government said "Such rights depend neither on the mercy of the mob nor on any possible lack of sympathy of law enforcement with the objectives of those who assert their rights."

Mississippi Upheld on Bus Riders

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—Federal District Judge Sidney Mize said Monday Jackson's use of its breach of peace law in foiling "freedom riders" was not an effort to prevent integration.

The statement came in a written decision on a petition by Miss Elizabeth Wyckoff, 45-year-old New York free lance writer serving a jail sentence for breach of peace. Judge Mize said Miss Wyckoff should go through state courts before trying to get out of jail through federal court.

He said Miss Wyckoff contended the arrests were "an effort to prevent integration and to enforce segregation. This contention is without merit."

Judge Mize said breach of peace laws are common to many states and are "a very wise exercise of the police powers of the state."

The judge said he could not act on Miss Wyckoff's request because Congress forbade federal courts to act until such cases had gone through state courts.

Government Joins Case For 'Riders'

WASHINGTON, D. C. (Special) —The U. S. Justice Department today asked the federal court in Jackson to strike down nine Mississippi travel segregation laws as unconstitutional and restrain state authorities from arresting "freedom riders" who refuse to obey those laws.

The department filed a friend of the court brief with the three-judge court considering the case brought by three Jackson Negroes, Samuel Bailey, Joseph Broadwater, and Burnett L. Jacob, challenging the laws which require separate white and negro waiting rooms, rest rooms and restaurants.

U.S. Atty. Gen. Robert S. Kennedy said the brief did not support the plaintiffs' entire petition, which asked state authorities be barred from "harassing and intimidating" as well as arresting violators of the segregation laws. The justice department brief said this petition was "unnecessary, broad and ambigious" and would "complicate the work of the police, since it may sometimes be impossible to know in advance whether a particular arrest could be construed as harassment."

FEDERAL 'RESPONSIBILITY'

Department officials said they entered the case because "the United States is concerned when federal civil rights are violated on a massive scale." The federal government, they said, has a responsibility to insure the safety and uninterrupted movement of interstate commerce.

The brief stated that it is not concerned with the wisdom or futility of the so-called freedom rides in general, nor with the merits of any individual arrest."

Other department sources said the injunction, if granted, would not affect the more than 200 "freedom riders" already jailed but would prevent any future arrests on charges arising from the use of racially separated facilities.

The dpatmnt officials said they expected the U. S. Supreme Court to hand down a final ruling that the Mississippi laws requiring segregated facilities in terminals of common carriers are unconstitutional.

The Justice Department brief contended that the use of laws against such offenses as disorderly conduct, merely to enforce the segregated traffic facilities is unconstitutional. The brief said it is improper for the police to arrest the Negro attempting to use the white facilities, but instead should act against potential rioters.

The brief said Mississippi statutes are clearly unconstitutional and constitute "defiance" of the federal law.

"The Supreme Court of the United States ruled many years ago that state statutes which require racial segregation in interstate commerce are unconstitutional," the brief said.

"Nevertheless, the state of Mississippi has enacted, and its officials have continued to enforce laws which have no purpose other than to accomplish that which the federal government have repeatedly held may not be done."

All the "freedom riders" have been charged with breach of the peace, not violation of any segregation laws.

'ILLEGAL AND VOID'

"Arrests and convictions for breach of the peace—or anyother charge — based solely on the defendant's use of facilities which, under the 14th Amendment, the Commerce Clause, or any other federal constitution or statutory authority, he had a right to use on a non-segregated basis, are necessarily' illegal and void," the brief stated.

Asst. Atty. Gen. Ed Cates, who asked the court today to reject the brief, contended that the federal government, represented by Robert Owens of Washington, "cited conclusions, not facts" in the brief.

The court overruled Cates' motion and received the brief.

In two trials, Spencer sentenced the 34 to the maximum four months in jail and fined each $200. It was the largest number convicted in one day since the riders first rolled into Jackson May 24 to challenge segregation in transportation facilities. It brought the total convicted to 224 to date.

U. S. Dist. Judge Sidney Mize of Biloxi, a member of the panel, delayed until Aug. 10 hearings of a suit by James Meredith, Kosciusko Negro, seeking admission to the all-white University of Mississippi.

Meredith's hearing was scheduled for yesterday, but Mize postponed it due to his participation in the panel considering the NAACP suit.

Mize and U. S. Dist. Judge Claude Clayton of Tupelo voted to delay the NAACP hearing, scheduled yesterday, due to the illness of State Asst. Atty. Gen. Dugas Shands who has been handling race cases. Chief Justice Elbert Tuttle of the Fifth U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals objected to the delay.

Mize said the case was not simple, as Tuttle contended. Mize added that he delay "would not cause undue harm to the plaintiffs."

On another matter, Mize postponed from Aug. 7 to Aug. 14 two U. S. Justice Department voter registration suits against Forrest and Clarke counties. The government claims the registrars discriminated against Negroes seeking to register to vote. The delay was due to the Aug. 7 hearing date set for the NAACP case.

THE NAACP suit attacked what it called unconstitutional state laws requiring segregation in railroad cars, buses, rest rooms, waiting rooms and other areas. It claimed such laws subject Negroes to daily "public inconvenience, harassment and embarrassment."

The Justice Department joined NAACP forces as a "friend of the court." It asked for an injunction to stop Mississippi from enforcing nine state laws calling for racial segregation of travelers. Federal attorneys called such laws unconstitutional.

The government also asked that Mississippi be stopped from invoking valid laws, such as breach of peace statutes, to enforce what it called illegal segregation.

Mississippi Gov. Ross Barnett yesterday made public a letter from Minnesota Gov. Elmer Andersen thanking the governor for permitting two Minnesota officials to inspect jail and state prison facilities and treatment of Minnesota citizens jailed as freedom riders.

Andersen wrote that violation of state laws by the freedom riders strike "at deep fundamentals in our American way of life."

He added that if a law is wrong or bad, "there are proper ways to seek to change it. At no time can we condone deliberate breaking of any law."

Andersen said he believed the recent inspection trip "has been worthwhile from our standpoint, and I believe it has been beneficial from yours."

WHEN JUDGE SPENCER tried the riders yesterday, one acted as his own attorney.

Morton B. Slater, 18-year-old white student at New York City College, testified he sat in the Illinois Central Railroad terminal 90 minutes last Saturday without incident. He said he acted as an individual and had no intention of breaching the peace.

Officers said they arrested him for refusing to leave the Negro waiting room. Slater said he refused to leave becaues he believed the order was unreasonabl.

FREEDOM RIDERS - JACKSON

'Riders' Cause No Segregation Change

"Freedom Rider" assaults on Mississippi transportation terminals have caused no visible change in segregation in this Deep South state.

Separate facilities for whites and Negroes are maintained at all travel terminals and the jails which the Riders planned to fill are all but empty of the integration advocates.

The Riders reached Mississippi May 24 and continued at a steady pace through July. Only two riders arrived in Jackson in August and 15 Episcopal priests tested segregation in September.

In all, 297 riders and the 15 priests were arrested on breach of peace charges—failure to move as ordered by officers. Municipal court convicted 306, with one man acquitted and five juveniles turned over to juvenile authorities.

Only 10 riders remain in jail. Only three served out their sentences and only six of the small group in jail have been there continuously.

The rest gained freedom by posting $500 appeal bonds and taking their cases to Hinds County court.

Four of those who were out for a period under appeal bonds went back to jail after deciding against appeals or following their conviction by county court juries.

Thus far, county court has convicted 30 on appeal and 50 others entered pleas of nolo contendere—which means they decided not to contest the charges.

Those pleading nolo contendere were given fines and suspended sentences.

Almost 200 cases remain on the county court docket and most of the 30 who were convicted in county court are now free pending appeal to circuit court.

The county court trial docket, which lists several trials a week for riders, is filled until May with rider cases.

Jail, Threats Keep Mississippi Peace

By Elsie M. Carper
Staff Reporter

Mississippi profited from Alabama's mistake and avoided violence when "Freedom Riders" arrived in the capital city of Jackson. Mass jailings, though, offer no permanent solution to a problem that is boiling to the surface in the Magnolia State.

Public officials, like those in Alabama, are doing nothing to prepare the people for the day when a Federal court orders public facilities opened to Negroes.

Mississippi has no organized Ku Klux Klan, but the White Citizens' Councils, formed to preserve segregation, are the State's most potent political force.

The State, actively hunting for new industries and tourist dollars, has eschewed open violence. More subtle means such as economic pressures are used to maintain the status quo.

The Sovereignty Commission, a State agency with a big budget, has sent speakers out around the country to tell a story of racial harmony and Negro satisfaction with the progress being made in the State.

Undoubtedly, schools and other facilities for Negroes have been improved in Mississippi, but is this enough? The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People says emphatically "no."

Young Negroes in Mississippi, as in the rest of the South, form a great reservoir of discontent. White leadership which blames all troubles on "outside agitators" is whistling in the dark if it believes what it says.

There have been locally generated sit-ins at the library in Jackson and wade-ins on the long 26-mile stretch of beach on the Gulf at Biloxi, where Negroes are not allowed. There have been efforts to enter State-supported universities and an application is now pending from a Negro veteran to enter the University of Mississippi.

Other Intimidation

So far, Mississippi's solution has been arrests and, Negroes say, other and more subtle intimidation. Negroes who step out of line find the world closing in on them. They or members of their families face the loss of jobs or credit.

The example of Clyde Kennard is not lost on Mississippi Negroes.

Kennard's troubles began when he sought to enter Mississippi Southern University.

First, police found liquor in his car. Kennard said it was a plant. Then he was implicated in the theft of five sacks of chicken mash and given seven years in the state prison, more than the average term for manslaughter.

Mississippi's Gov. Ross Barnett used language nearly as explosive as that of Alabama's John Patterson when the Federal Government first sought safe passage for the Freedom Riders through Mississippi.

Then, after the Federal Government moved firmly into Alabama to end violence and restore interstate bus travel, Barnett gave assurances that there would be no repeat in Mississippi of the riots in Birmingham and Montgomery.

Governor Issued Plea

Barnett issued an appeal to Mississippi citizens to leave handling of the Riders to law enforcement officers. He said the laws of the State would be enforced.

In his pocket, Barnett had a batch of laws passed by the Legislature last year to deal with sit-in demonstrations. The laws made no mention of race or segregation.

When the Freedom Riders reached Jackson under escort of police and National Guards men, they were charged under these laws with disorderly conduct and committing a breach of the peace and put in jail.

In calling for a peaceful reception for the Freedom Riders Barnett had the help of John R. Wright, president of the Jackson Citizens' Council. Wright read a statement over radio and television urging residents of Jackson and members of the Council to leave law enforcement in the hands of police.

"Our public officials, most of whom are members of the Citizens' Council, are determined to prevent these bus loads of traveling agitators from causing trouble in Mississippi," Wright declared.

Jackson authorities have said they have plenty of room to take care of as many Freedom Riders as want to try out the jail. The strongly segregationist Jackson Daily News ran a box score on the front of last Sunday's paper. It listed new arrivals—13, those previouslyd reported—52 an vacant bunks—297.

Riders Denounced

The News in front page editorials described the Riders as "vulgar, restroom-loving quacks" on an "illegal, scummy mission."

Mississippi remained calm with the assurance of the Governor and the Citizens' Council head that the Riders would be arrested under State laws.

"So long as all of us remain determined and united," the Citizens' Council head said, "the segregation laws of Mississippi will be enforced."

Asked what will happen if the segregation laws are found in conflict with Federal law, the youthful-looking, 42-year old funeral director said: "We do not know, we haven't faced that yet."

Gov. Barnett, asked a similar question in a press conference, said so long as State laws have not been stricken down they are enforceable.

He gave no clue as to whether Federal laws will receive the same diligent enforcement. It would be hard to find someone in Mississippi who thinks that they will.

Mississippi Cottons to Riders

PARCHMAN, Miss., June 15 (UPI)—Forty-five "Freedom Riders" were transferred to Mississippi State Prison today by Gov. Ross Barnett, in a personal appearance at the prison, directed that they not be put to work in the fields like other prisoners.

Barnett told prison guards it would be "dangerous" to send the Riders—29 Negroes and 16 whites—to the cotton fields, because their "passive resistance" might result in a sitdown strike, which he said could spread to other prisoners.

"It would be dangerous to work these men in the fields," Barnett said. "I wish we could, but if they refused to work, what could we do? It would upset the whole prison routine."

"If we can avoid any incident or violence it will be the best thing for Mississippi," Barnett said. "I know it will be hard for you men to take what they may say to you, but I know you can do it. They want an incident and thereby publicity for themselves."

'Freedom Riders' Move Into Georgia, Florida

Associated Press

Segregation-testing "Freedom Riders" met scant resistance as they pushed into southern Georgia and northern Florida Thursday.

oFur groups of Negroes and white persons were thwarted only once in their efforts to make integrated use of facilities at interstate bus terminals on routes from Charleston and Sumter, S. C., to Jacksonville and Tallahassee, Fla.

The only refusal of service was at Lake City, Fla. Nine members of a group of rabbis and Negro and white Protestant ministers sat for 15 minutes at a bus station snack bar while no one waited on them.

The biracial groups were served at terminals in Jacksonville, Tallahassee and Savannah, Ga.

MISSISSIPPI JACKSON- FREEDOM RIDERS

Story They Didn't Dare Tell About Miss.

Blonde Freedom Rider describes days in prison

By ROSEMARIE TYLER

WASHINGTON

"The ride to Mississippi State penitentiary, 130 miles from Jackson, was just the beginning of the horror, the indignities we were to suffer.

"Those twelve days in jail will never be forgotten. I'll always remember what we went through."

The words came from the lips of an attractive, young blue - eyed blonde who looks as American as hot dogs at a Sunday afternoon baseball game.

Her name is Shirley Smith and she is the director of the Women's Committee of the African - American Institute.

In an exclusive interview with the Washington AFRO - AMERICAN, this well - groomed woman described the inhuman treatment she and others suffered during her arrest as a "Freedom Rider."

WHAT MADE Shirley who has been working with Africans, who had worked in Africa for nearly five years decide to cast her lot with the Freedom Riders?

* * *

"MY INABILITY to reach the Africans was because I had no emotional awareness of America's own problem, segregation. So that in an effort to understand them I had to return to my own country and its problems. It was all an experiment. The problem is now real.

* * *

"THE DRIVER OF THE jeep was white. He was lewd for the entire 130 miles. In the group, which included Jean Kidwell, a lawyer from California; Rosie Rosenberg, another lawyer, a mother of 4 children and about 45 years old; and about 4 ft. 5 ins. tall; Marilyn Eisenberg an 18 year old who had come with her family's consent and approval; Marilyn Freeman, a school teacher from Philadelphia and Shirley B. Smith, it was unique and horrifying experience to be called whores!

* * *

"EACH TIME, the driver stopped for cokes or coffee never for us — he would revile us before the curious public which gathered at each stop. He claimed we only waved at colored men as we traveled to the Hines County Jail, but this was not true. We waved at everyone we saw. Some waved back. Many were furtive, a little afraid to identify with Freedom Riders."

SHIRLEY continued: "The driver deliberately braked the jeep violently as many times as possible. By the time we reached the Hines County Jail, our insides were like jelly."

Certainly the ride was made worse by the vicious thrusts at the character of these women, who had many different reasons for volunteering for a Freedom Ride to Jackson to test interstate travel.

* * *

"We merely shrugged and ignored the driver. How can you respond to this kind of crudeness? The driver was a kind of degenerate who could certainly not understand that he was a minor character in a great American drama. I believe this fight which we are engaged in is an extension of the American Revolution. And in his way, he was the cause of what was happening to us, up to now and what was to happen," Shirley said firmly, her blue eyes deepening.

* * *

Stopping the jeep with a final jerk, the remaining caravan composed of three jeeps interspersed with armed cars carrying heavy sub-machine guns drew to a lumbering stop.

* * *

THE WOMEN alighted, making an effort to recover from their joustling. The prison yard was empty. Once through the main gate, the girls could see the watchful faces of the four men who occupied each of the corner watchtowers.

No sound could be heard as the five women entered the heavy door, leading to maximum security unit, later to be dubbed "Mississippi State University."

"I remembered seeing some men lined up in the hall, all eating peaches, just watching us. I remembered them so clearly, I guess, because I like peaches," admitted Shirley with a sudden laugh.

Recalling this incident, Shirley admitted it was her last light thought for sometime to come.

"The closer I came to the door in front of me, the greater was my dread. We all knew of the searches being made supposedly for dope. In fact, we were the first group to have prior knowledge. And we were the first to formally protest against this kind of barbarism."

* * *

"WE PASSED through a room where all the guards and drivers were standing around—around 20 or so — some leering, some making suggestive remarks and some looking at us with pure hatred.

We lined up. . .Jean Kidwell, Rose Rosenberg and then I was to be next..

"I knew that Rosie would protest, just as Jean would, I would and all the others after me. Rose asked for punishment instead of the search. I later learned she was told she would receive punishment and the search. One woman in the group had had female surgery only a few months ago. Her protests were futile, also.

"By now Jean Kidwell had entered the room..

"I was next.

"The door opened. My knees began to shake.

"IN THE DISTANCE I could hear the men singing, "Onward, Christian Soldiers."

The room where the search was conducted was small. The walls were beige. There was a chair, a desk. A set of bars led to cell block 12 which was to be Shirley's home for over a week. On this wall, was a panel board which controlled the lights to all the cells. And there was a bed.

Assisting in this search were 2 trustys, one colored and one white and a woman dressed in white uniform acting as a nurse.

And there was Mrs. Lee. She was an ex-con. Her present job was a reward for having been such an excellent prisoner.

"She faced me as I entered the room. One hand was covered with a rubber glove.

"She was snapping her fingers, as if in a hurry.

"From the room behind me, I could hear a man's voice saying 'we are going to have a hard time making those dames'."

Told to undress by the matron, Mrs. Lee, Shirley was unable to do this without a protest. She looked down at her dress: blue and white striped, with red buttons. Bought in New York to wear on the Freedom Ride, it had seemed so patriotic. She had smiled when she bought it. She could not smile now.

"I LOOKED at Rosie and Jean. I hoped they could communicate something to me. There was nothing in her eyes, but I knew the struggle had been futile.

"I knew now there was nothing I could do. My mind was crowded. I remembered the orientation we had received in Atlanta. We had been trained to be non-violent. What was non - violent in this situation? How could I be passive with what was about to happen to me?

"I was standing there, when suddenly.."

* * *

SHIRLEY WAS suddenly grabbed, her body stiffened. She felt someone grab her feet. Another pair of hands grabbed her wrists. She could feel herself being dragged still in an upright position to the cot on the other side of the room.

Tossed onto the bed, she could see the colored attendant was holding her hands the second attendant fell across her chest.

"I knew it was hopeless as I looked into the inscrutable eyes of Mrs. Lee. I talked fast, however. I told her of my UN connections. Words tumbled out about America's image."

The search was over. The colored trusty let go of her wrists. Her chest was free of a great weight.

It was now Wednesday, the 19th of July.

Their day began at 4:30 am. with breakfast served at 6: cold, stiff hominy grits, dried bacon and chicory coffee.

* * *

Lunch at one o'clock in the afternoon offered a break in the monotony, if not in the diet: 1/2 cup of milk, cold vegetables and usually cold biscuits or corn bread. Once during Shirley's internment, they were served meat- cold pork rind with the hair sticking out!

Dinner at 6 was as unappealing as lunch.

Shortly, after breakfast, there was a quiet hour. For two hours, none of the women in the 13 cells uttered a sound!

15 Clergymen Sentenced, Fined By Jackson Judge

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—Fifteen Episcopal priests -- including the son-in-law of New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller — conducted prayer services in the Hinds County Jail Saturday after their breach of peace convictions.

The clergymen — 12 white persons and 3 Negroes — were switched from city to county jail Friday after they stood trial. The Charges came after they attempted to desegregate a white waiting room in a bus terminal.

The Rev. Robert L. Pierson, 35, of New York and Evanston, Ill., Rockefeller's son-in-law, and the other 14 were fined $200 and sentenced to four months in jail, the same as most "Freedom Riders" received.

NO COMMENT

A spokesman for the group said they would not attend the opening of the 60th general convention of the Episcopal Church Sunday in Detroit, Mich. He said bond would not be posted until after the weekend.

In Albany, a spokesman for Gov. Rockefeller would have no comment on the sentencing.

Rockefeller has expressed admiration of the courage and dedication of the clergymen. He has said he did not intend to intercede for them for possible reduced sentences.

Meanwhile, Yale University Chaplain William S. Coffin, a Presbyterian and nine other "Freedom Riders" were convicted on breach of peace charges in Montgomery, Ala.

FINES, TERMS

Judge Alex Marks fined them $100 and handed down jail sentences ranging from 10 to 90 days Friday night. They immediately posted appeal bonds of $750 to $1,000 and were released.

In the trial involving the Episcopal clergymen, both City Judge James Spencer and Special Prosecutor Robert Nichols said they were Episcopalians.

"I find my duty clear," Spencer said before sentencing the ministers. "I believe they violated the laws of Mississippi and the articles of religion of their faith.

Jailed 'Prayer Riders' Go On Trial Friday

The son-in-law of New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller and 14 other Episcopal ministers will be tried Friday on breach of peace charges stemming from a lunch-room segregation incident.

The clergymen, part of a group of 28 ministers touring the nation on an anti-segregation "prayer pilgrimage," were lodged in two cells in city jail.

Twelve white ministers, including the Rev. Robert L. Pierson of Evanston, Ill., who is married to Rockefeller's daughter, Anne, were kept in a large cell with bunk beds. Three Negro clergymen were held in a smaller cell.

The ministers, most of whom wore clerical collars, were intercepted by police when they tried to enter the segregated restaurant in the Trailways bus terminal.

The clergymen were told by one of two officers at the door to "move on."

"We're hungry. We are interstate passengers," replied one of the ministers. Rubbing his chin, the policeman asked: "Are you all going to move on?" The minister answered, "After we have some lunch."

Police Capt. John L. Ray, a veteran officer who has arrested scores of "freedom riders" here, was summoned to the scene. He arrested the clergymen when they again refused to leave the terminal.

In Rochester, N.Y., Rockefeller did not appear surprised by news of his son-in-law's incarceration.

"He has been very interested in this cause," the New York governor said. "I admire the courage and dedication of these young people to the basic precepts on which this country was founded and their dedication to the cause of making a reality out of these precepts."

Judge Convicts 15 Clerics

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Municipal Judge James Spencer convicted 15 Episcopal clergymen—including New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller's son - in - law—on breach of peace charges Friday after their efforts to desegregate a Jackson bus terminal.

Spencer returned his verdict in the case of the 12 white and three Negro clergymen and handed each a $200 fine and four-month jail term.

The group was arrested Wednesday. All pleaded innocent to the breach of peace charges—failure to move as ordered by an officer—and were tried in a joint trial.

him he wanted to eat.

Police Capt. J. L. Ray told the court, "In my opinion the crowd in the bus terminal was in an ugly mood and was acting antagonistically toward these people. In my opinion there would have been a breach of the peace."

Under cross examination by the defense, Ray said, "I felt that had I not acted quickly, there would have been a riot in there caused by these defendants."

He also testified none of the ministers showed him any tickets or told him they were interstate passengers, but that the Rev. John Morris, 31, of Atlanta told

Rockefeller Kin And 14 Found Guilty in Sit-In

JACKSON, Miss (UPI) — The son-in-law of Gov. Nelson Rockefeller of New York and 14 others, were sentenced to four months in jail Friday for attempting to dine together in a segregated restaurant here.

The group of Episcopal ministers was arrested here Wednesday while making an anti-segregation "prayer pilgrimage."

In New York, a spokesman for Rockefeller said the governor would not intercede in any way in the case of his son-in-law, the Rev. Robert L. Pierson, husband of Rovkefeller's daughter, Anne

Riders face bail loss of $75,000

SPECIAL TO AFRO

JACKSON, Miss. — City authorities indicated, Tuesday, that unless the more than 125 Freedom Riders released on bond, return to the city Aug. 14, bail money totaling over $75,000 will be confiscated.

City Attorney Jack Travis, who is prosecutor in the Freedom Ride cases, told Jack Young, attorney for the riders, that each person released on bond must appear in person when County Court convenes, or bail money will be forfeited.

At least 125 of the over 300 persons arrested here have been released on $500 cash bond each, pending appeal to the county court.

TRAVIS INDICATED that decision to require the Freedom Riders to appear in person was made by high city and state officials.

The city's Freedom Ride strategy has been determined by Gov. Ross Barnett and Mayor Allen C. Thompson, both of whom insist that racial segregation in Mississippi must be maintained no matter what the cost.

Prior to being elected governor, Barnett volunteered to defend John Kasper, the segregationist who was arrested on charges of precipitating the 1956 school riots in Clinton, Tenn.

Mayor Thompson was quoted as recently stating that segregation laws will be enforced "if it takes a 5,000-man police force."

MONDAY, JULY 31, 22 more Freedom Riders were convicted in Municipal Court. City Judge James Spencer levied fines of $200 each and four-month jail terms.

All were arrested over the week end at the Greyhound bus terminal and the Illinois Central Railroad station on charges of breach of the peace after they failed to abide by local segregation rules.

Hilmar Enrenfried Pabel, 50, of Munich, Germany, who also was arrested on similar charges, was released.

Explaining his actions, Judge Spencer said he was releasing Pabel because he is a foreigner in a strange country.

THE JUDGE said he assumed the German was unfamiliar with the United States customs and language and "became confused and got in the way."

Attorney Young, who has represented the Freedom Riders arrested here since May 24, said the arrests are having an impact on local colored citizens.

"They are being aroused out of their state of lethargy," the attorney declared.

A group of women set up an organization for the specific purpose of supporting the Freedom Riders. Called Woman Power Limited, the group is headed by Mrs. Clarice Collins Harvey, a local business woman and civic and church leader.

* * *

"THE FACT THAT Freedom Riders are willing to suffer has caused us to realize that we're going to have to, too, to get some of these things we want," Mrs. Harvey declared.

She defined "these things" as "improved school facilities, better jobs and more police protection."

Richard Haley, CORE field secretary arrested here last week, fined $200 and sentenced to four months in prison, has been transferred to the state penitentiary at Parchman, Miss.

Thomas Gaither, who was leader of the sitdown movement in Rock Hill, S.C., last January, has replaced Haley as CORE representative here.

Trials Scheduled For 82 'Riders'

P.I.O Trial, 9-12-61

Hearings In Jackson Will Be Next Spring

The Commercial Appeal

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 11.— (UPI) — Eighty-two so-called "Freddom Riders" appeared in Hinds County Court Monday, pleaded innocent to breach of the peace charges and received trial dates for an eight-week period next spring.

Each member of the group — Divided about equally by races —was charged in connection with challenges thay made of segregation at transportation terminals here.

Last month 192 rides were arraigned and entered "not guilty" raigned and entered "not guilty" pleas. Their traisl will be held through February.

The group of 82 was made up of persons who were arrested later or were in jail at the time the 192 were arraigned. Each is free on appeal bond.

The riders will be tried at the rate of 10 a week beginning March 12 and ending May 11. The trials, before a jury in county court, are necessary in the appeal of convictions from police court.

Six riders scheduled for arraignment were absent.

The integrationists arrived here from throughout the nation for the mass court appearances. A blue and white bus from Tougaloo College, a church-supported Negro school, carried most of them from the Tougaloo campus to the courthouse where 10 or 12 policemen stood guard.

court breach of peace convict

Peter J. Ackerberg, 22, white, of New York City, and Elizabeth Adler, 21, white, of Brooklyn, N. Y., had been expected to plead guilty and go back to jail as had three predecessors, but Ackerberg asked for trial.

The Adler woman was expected to do the same this afternoon.

Three others are already in the Hinds County jail serving the balance of their city court sentence rather than paying their fines and going free. They each posted $500 bond which is being held in their names and is sufficient to pay their fines and still have a substantial balance.

SEEK NO REFUND

However, none of the three has asked for return of his bond as yet, according to the sheriff's office. Only two of the nearly 200 convicted riders have paid their fines and returned to their homes, these over the protest of CORE officials, who claimed it was not "policy to pay fines."

Defense Attorney Young said he did not know whether the six others scheduled for trial the balance of this week would follow the pattern now being set by these returning to jail.

Bob Nichols, special prosecutor who entered the court handling last week, said CORE "has been desperately trying to build this thing back up into a popular appeal. They undoubtedly want to get their hands on the appeal bond money."

Sheriff Bob Gilfoy said he had received no court order to release the bond money for those already returned to jail, and no request had been made by the individual riders for the money.

'Rider' Appeal Postponed In Jackson

The Montgomery Advertiser

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—The appeal trial of "Freedom Rider" Marshall Bennett, 17, of Jackson was postponed until Wednesday because of the illness of a witness.

Wed. 9-13-61

Earlier, Hinds County Judge Russel Moore sentenced two others and ordered forfeiture of three riders' $500 appeal bond because they did not show up for their arraignment Monday.

Bennett, a high school student, was arrested July 5 for trying to desegregate Trailways bus terminal. He was sentenced to $200 fine and 4 months in jail. He posted $500 bond and appealed.

Earlier, Charles Biggers, 21-year-old Wayne University Negro student from Boulder, Colo., declined to contest his breach of peace charge and drew a $200 fine and a suspended 4-month jail sentence.

Biggers was arrested July 7 in Trailways bus terminal. He appealed and was arraigned Monday. Judge Moore allowed him to enter his nolo contendere plea immediately instead of waiting until trial set for March 1962.

Court drops one complaint in riders' suit

Birmingham News P.33 Wed 9-6-61

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Sept. 6—(AP)—After hearing witnesses for "freedom rider" complainants yesterday, U. S. Dist. Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. dismissed a complaint against Circuit Solicitor William F. Thetford.

Tre judges' action means that the solicitor can proceed with prosecution of 11 "riders" arrested here May 25 on breach of the peace charges.

The dismissal action came after the complainants had rested their case, following testimony of seven witnesses in a suit attacking constitutionality of the state's breach of the peace laws and asking for a court order to prohibit bus lines or city and state authorities from "enforcing and pursuing a policy, practice, custom and usage of separation of the races."

After ruling out Thetford as a defendant, Judge Johnson refused to dismiss the cases against the other defendants — Greyhound Corp., Traliways Motor Lines, State Atty. Gen. MacDonald Gallion, Montgomery County Sheriff Mac Sim Butler, the Montgomery City Commission, Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal and the State Public Service Commission.

GALLION, denying enforcing segregation in buses or bus stations, told the court he obtained a state court injunction prohibiting "freedom riders" in Alabama before the May 20 violence to try "to maintain peace and safety of everyone" and that he "was not acting in the interest of any segregation customs."

A National Guard officer and legal advisor to Adj. Gen. Henry V. Graham during martial rule here said it was his decision which led to the arrest of the 11 "riders" May 25.

Lt. Col. Ralph Porch of Anniston said he determined that the "riders'" effort to be served at the Trailways depot lunch counter was "a breach of custom at a time and place which was calculated to provoke a breach of the peace."

One "rider" testified that a copy of an injunction was served on him as he lay on the pavement after being beaten.

John R. Lewis, 20, Troy, testified that he was beaten on arrival at the station and was lying on he pavement when he was served with the injunction by Gallion and Butler.

'FREEDOM RIDER' RELEASED AGAIN

Times Picayune 9-14

Bail 1-2-61

Wahlstrom was one of two riders the highway patrol charged had taken part in a visiit to Cuba last year by the "Fair Play for Cuba Committee," which the patrol said attended a Soviet-directed seminar on how to make desegregation efforts.

New Orleans La

He was first arrested with a group of riders June 2 and bonded out June 24 following his convition in city court on breach of peac charges. He returned alone July 31 and was convicted again on Aug 2.

The Hinds county sheriff's office reported he was one of seven riders who posted appeal bonds this week.

In addition, Richard Haley, 45-year-old Chicago Negro, field secretary for ride-sponsoring Congress of Racial Equality, gained his freedom by posting an appeal bond. He was arrested on breach of peace charges for ignoring police orders to move on as he picketed a southern governors meeting here July 19.

Freedom Riders View Is Given

Jackson Clarion-Ledger 9-6-61

PARCHMAN, Miss. (AP)—The editor of "Inside World" said "freedom riders" jailed in maximum security quarters at the state penitentiary were "suckered into coming down here to disturb the peace."

Atlanta Const. 9-6-61

In an editorial, James Hendricks said in the monthly prison publication a rider "is just as big a fool to break the law an cause disturbance in Jackson, Miss., as he would to cause a disturbance in his home town or state capitol.

New Orleans La

"Now I know it could not be because they are ashamed of what they did, are doing, and what they stand for, for this would make the comrades angry."

Hendricks said the "freedom rider does not care about what is laughingly known as the Negro problem in the South." His beef with the citizens of Mississippi is, and I quote, 'the flagrant disregard of the people of Mississippi of the U.S. supreme court rulings . . .'"

McComb tense after racial flareup

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 30—Mississippi's racial situation continued to boil ominously today in the wake of bus station violence Wednesday which saw five "freedom riders" beaten and kicked in McComb.

A McComb official predicted federal marshals will be sent into his city to restore order if further violence occurs.

The executive secretary of the Mississippi pro-segregation Citizens Council announced his organization is forming "Minuteman" units to counter integration attempts with non-violent protests.

And in Jackson tonight the pro-integration National Association for the Advancement of Colored People will meet to discuss a Negro boycott of white merchants who support the Citizens Council.

THE McCOMB official, who asked to remain anonymous, said he expected federal marshals to be sent in as they were after the Montgomery, Ala., race disorders. At the same time the McComb mayor pledged police protection for the "freedom riders."

In Greenwood, Robert B. Patterson, executive secretary of the Association of Mississippi Citizens Councils, said the "Minuteman" units are being formed over the South to combat racial integration.

Patterson said "their purpose is to peacefully assemble on short notice at any given point within their community to demonstrate a citizens protest against invasion of their institutions."

Patterson said the units would lend moral support to local law enforcement officers who might be outnumbered by "the invaders."

THE UNITS have a communications system with seven basic leaders or "colonels" telephoning five "captains" who call five "lieutenants" until the entire "Minuteman" unit is alerted.

In Jackson, the NAACP called its boycott meeting tonight despite the fact that two previous boycotts staged here have failed. White merchants and officials of the Chamber of Commerce reported no noticeable business letdown during the two boycotts.

A McComb official said the Federal Bureau of Investigation already has been called in to investigate the Wednesday attack on the "freedom riders."

McComb has become a center of racial disturbances in strongly pro-segregationist Mississippi since the "freedom rider" campaign waned in Jackson, the state capital.

Nearly 100 Negro pupils were dismissed from McComb's Berglund High School earlier this fall after they repeatedly demonstrated against segregation practices.

THEY ARRIVED in New Orleans early today.

City officials had ordered segregation signs removed from outside the bus station after a special three-judge federal court struck down Mississippi segregation laws late last week.

The Negroes—three men and two women—arrived at the bus station shortly before 3 p.m. and attempted to get service at a lunch counter in the white waiting room.

"I told them that the lunch counter was a private business and I couldn't serve them," said A. P. McGehee, husband of the bus station manager.

McGehee, working at the lunch counter, told the Negroes they could use waiting room facilities but would have to be served food at the Negro counter.

"THEY STARTED beating on the counter and demanding service," he said.

"Suddenly the place blew up," said McGehee, who left the eating facility momentarily to go to the ticket window.

Alex Gifford, managing editor of New Orleans' television Station WDSU, said a group of whites rushed into the bus station and began dragging the Negroes out.

Gifford said a white man poured a hot cup of coffee down the back of one Negro.

The Negroes fled in a taxicab.

Tom Gaither, field secretary for CORE, said Jerome Smith, 22, was the most severely beaten and suffered skull lacerations. The other Negroes were identified as George Raymond, 18; Thomas Valentine 23, Alice Thompson, 22, and Doratha Smith, 18, all of New Orleans.

Smith, president of the New Orleans CORE unit, was one of more than 300 "freedom riders" arrested during the Summer a Jackson, Miss.

EARLIER Wednesday, a crowd of whites attacked freelance photographer Johann Rush, a 19-year-old Jackson resident, who said he was on assignment from the Columbia Broadcasting System.

McComb has become the center of racial disturbances in pro-segregationist Mississippi since the "freedom rider" assaults on Jackson transportation terminals slowed down.

Nearly 100 Negro pupils were dismissed from Berglund High School earlier this Fall after they repeatedly demonstrated against segregation practices.

Mississippi Crowd Roughs 5 Negroes

MC COMB, Miss., Nov. 29 (AP)—Five Negroes were beaten and kicked by white persons at a bus station here this afternoon in what the Justice Department called "an outbreak of violence."

The Negroes left later for New Orleans under heavy police protection.

The bus station closed about 10 minutes before the New Orleans bound bus arrived. When the bus arrived, police blocked off the area and a taxicab brought the five Negroes — three men and two women — to the middle of the street. They boarded the bus under police protection and there were no incidents.

Earlier, in Washington, Atty Gen. Robert F. Kennedy said McComb Mayor C. H. Douglas had assured the Justice Department that the five negroes "who were the subjects of violence this afternoon will receive full and complete protection while in that city."

Kennedy said the FBI will investigate all aspects of the incident and "the matter will be vigorously pursued."

Tom Gaither, field secretary for CORE in Jackson, said the five arrived at the bus station just before 3 p.m. and were beaten for more than 10 minutes until McComb police arrived.

Gaither said Thomas Valentine was beaten and "thrown into the street." Jerome Smith, who Gaither identified as the chairman of the group, was the most severely beaten and suffered head lacerations. The two women, Gaither said, were knocked down and kicked.

Gaither said he understood the Negroes were planning to catch a 3:30 p.m. bus and he had planned to be there to try and prevent any trouble. But the Negroes arrived earlier than he thought they would, Gaither added.

Negroes Unavailable

Guy said that the disturbance involving Rush came after Rush took a picture of a bystander. The police chief said several men "whipped him around a little bit" but added he thought Rush "was okay."

---

GREENWOOD, Miss., Nov. 29 (AP)—A Mississippi citizens council leader said today that several Southern communities are forming "minutemen" organizations to meet integration attempts.

Robert B. Patterson, executive secretary of the Association on Citizens Councils of Mississippi, said the groups are being formed throughout the South.

"Their purpose is to assemble peacefully on short notice at any given point within their community to demonstrate a citizens protest against any invasion of our institutions," Patterson said.

The groups have a communications chain with seven basic leaders called "colonels" who telephone five "captains" who in turn call five "lieutenants" until the entire unit is alerted.

Patterson said the minutemen "are made up of a cross section of the finest white citizenry in each community." He said they would lend moral support to local law enforcement officers who might be outnumbered "by the invaders."

After McComb, South Must Start Over Again

The South resents being pictured as a violent and backward place where mobs beat up Negroes.

With cries of "Kill 'em, Kill 'em," a mob has now beaten up some Negroes in McComb, Miss.

And the South, saddened and wearied by so many setbacks, must start over once again to undo the ugliness which the violent few repeatedly smear like tar across the reputation of the just and gentle people who are Southerners.

No matter how long it may take, the South must and will reclaim her good name from the unclean hands of men who think it is all right to drag her down into the dirt of blood and brutality.

5 NEGROES BEATEN BY MISSISSIPPI MOB

Riders Attacked in McComb —Crowd Shouts 'Kill 'Em'

By CLAUDE SITTON

Special to The New York Times.

McCOMB, Miss., Nov. 29—A mob of cursing whites, shouting "Kill em! Kill 'em!", set upon five Negro Freedom Riders today and drove them from the Greyhound bus station.

Although the three youths and two girls were mauled severely, none was seriously injured. They fled to safety at a Negro hotel after escaping from their assailants in a taxi.

A dozen white youths and men in the small but angry crowd joined in pummeling the Negroes. They chased them around and over counters and tables in the waiting room of the terminal before kicking them out the door.

The mob tossed one youth into the air again and again in the street outside, kicking and beating him as he struck the pavement.

Five minutes after the Negroes had escaped, Chief of Police George Guy and Patrolman Edward Smith arrived on the scene from the City Hall, less than a block from the terminal. They cleared the streets and sidewalks with little trouble.

Johann Rush, a freelance television camera man from Jackson, was attacked this morning in an unrelated incident while taking film of the station and a group of whites standing around it.

The violence marked the first move in Mississippi's history to comply with a Federal Court desegregation order. The Riders came here by bus this morning to test the city's compliance with a Federal directive to halt the enforcement of segregation at bus and rail terminals.

The order was handed down in open court last week and filed Monday in Jackson, the state capital. A United States Deputy Marshal served copies of it on Mayor C. H. Douglas, Chief Guy and the city's selectmen yesterday.

Agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, who were already here apparently as observers, began an immediate inquiry.

Officials of the Justice Department in Washington were also seekinng to learn details of the outbreak.

The mob action here repeated on a smaller scale the riots that greeted Freedom Riders last May in Anniston, Birmingham and Montgomery, Ala.

New Tests Planned

The group, all members of the New Orleans chapter of the Congress of Racial Equality, said a further attempt would be made to use previously white terminal facilities.

"We'll be back," declared Doratha Smith, 18 years old, after she had been examined by Dr. James Anderson.

The five Negroes came here under the leadership of Jerome Smith, 22, president of the New Orleans chapter of the Congress. The others are George Raymond, 18, Thomas Valentine, 23, and Alice Thompson, 22.

Their first effort to enter the terminal was unsuccessful. Shortly before they arrived this morning, the station reported a gas leak in the building. The Negroes were warned when they approached the door that it would be dangerous to enter.

"Well, wasn't that a coincidence," remarked Charles Gordon, a city selectman and member of the Citizens' Council, a building; Greyhound does not own this restaurant. You get out of here."

At this point, a youth grabbed a half-filled cup of coffee from a table and walked rapidly down the line of stools at the counter. When he reached Mr. Raymond, he struck hi msharply at the base o fthe skull with the cup and caucer, spilling ocffee over the Negro's head and back.

Mr. Smith then waved to the four others to join him in a row of seats at the front of the waiting room. As they got up to move, a short, wiry white man of about 35 jumped at the Negro leader and began beating him with his fists.

The Negro doubled over and ducked his head under a rain of blows to the back of the neck, the shoulder and the stomach. "I'll kill him! I'll kill him! I'll kill him!," yelled the white.

The assailants then shoved and kicked the youths and the two girls through the door. They fled on the sidewalk and out into the street, where their taxi stood waiting.

Both Mayor Douglas and Chief Guy had asserted to newsmen that no further attempt would be made to enforce segregation in waiting rooms.

The weatehr was sunny but brisk as small knots of whites and Negroes gathered along the sidewalks of Canal Street near the pink stucco terminal. Youths in duck-tail haircuts and blue jeans crossed and recrossed the street from the terminal to the "City Billiard Parlor and Dominoes."

No policeman was in sight when the five Freedom Riders arrived in a taxi and walked up to the glass-jalousied entrance of the white waiting room.

An elderly white man in gray felt hat and work-stained clothes blocked the way and sought to persuade them not to enter. But he stepped aside and the five filed into the joint waiting room and cafe, past the brightly lighted pinball machines and back to the lunch counter in the rear.

Mr. Smith walked over to the ticket window and the four other Negroes took seats at the lunch counter. Mr. Raymond asked twice in a firm voice for service. He was ignored.

5 Told to Leave

A. P. McGehee, operator of he bus terminal, walked behind the counter. Tapping his finger on the counter for emphassis, he told each of the Negroes:

"Greyhound does not own this

Mob Drawn By 'Riders' Turned Back

MCCOMB, Miss. (UPI)— Three more "freedom riders" arrived here unannounced Saturday and police broke up a crowd of white youths who tried to attack them.

No crowd was present when the three riders stepped off a bus from Jackson and entered the Greyhound terminal waiting room, previously reserved for whites.

But a number of white youths spotted them when they emerged from the terminal and got into a waiting car occupied by Tom Gaither, a Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) field secretary, and two other CORE workers.

DOORS LOCKED

The whites attempted to open the doors, but found they were locked.

They kicked and pounded on the car until police arrived and chased them away.

CORE said the riders were 17-year-old high school students at Jackson who decided to join the "freedom rider" movement on a weekend trip to their homes here.

The three—Jerome Byrd, James Burnham and Joe Lewis — were among a group of about 100 Negroes expelled from school here last fall after a series of student protest marches.

Another CORE member, McArthur Cotton, said he bought a ticket in the white waiting room shortly before the riders arrived and was slugged by a white man.

HIGHLY SYMBOLIC

The terminal was first integrated Friday by six riders from Louisiana whose trip had advance publicity and drew about 400 angry, jeering whites to the scene. It was the first known instance of compliance with a federal integration ruling in Mississippi.

CORE spokesman Marvin Rich of New York hailed the riders' success as "highly symbolic." Rich said in New Orleans, "the bastion of segregation has been breached and (Mississippi Gov.) Ross Barnett will never be able to make it whole again."

The Jackson Daily News, an outspoken pro-segregation voice, said in Saturday afternoon's edition that Friday will "go down in history as integration day in Mississippi."

But local and state authorities, conceding one defeat in their efforst to preserve segregation, vowed that the battle is not over. City officials said they were preparing a lawsuit aimed at enjoining CORE from sending more riders here. More rides, they said, would endanger the community's citizens.

DEPOT VIOLENCE FLARES IN MISS.

Five Negroes Ejected at McComb

By W. F. MINOR

(Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

M'COMB, Miss.—Violence flared at the Greyhound bus station here Wednesday as five young Negroes who attempted to test removal of race barriers were roughed and hustled out of the station by white men.

Earlier a free-lance movie cameraman who said he was on assignment for CBS television, was hit and chased by a crowd in front of the bus terminal.

The five Negroes, who arrived from New Orleans during the morning, were unable to make a test of desegregation on their arrival because the station was temporarily closed.

They returned about 3 p. m. and attempted to get service at the lunch counter in the white waiting room.

A. P. McGehee, husband of the bus station manager, who was working at the counter, told the Negroes the food service was a "private business" and that he couldn't serve them there.

CAUGHT TAXI

He told them they could use the waiting room facilities but would have to be served food at the counter for Negroes.

McGehee told police that the Negroes "started beating on the counter and demanding service."

When he was distracted for a few moments to go to the ticket counter, police said, "suddenly the place blew up." Several white men in the station grabbed the Negroes and roughly hustled them out the front door.

The Negroes jumped into a Negro taxicab and left. Police said late Wednesday afternoon they were still looking for the five Negroes in order to "find out what happened to them."

Guy and Douglas had said earlier that the presence of officers may appear to be an indication that they would seek to enforce segregation of the waiting room facilities by police officers.

Segregation signs outside the bus station were taken down Tuesday night under the injunction order of a three-judge federal court which was served on the city officials earlier Tuesday.

Mayor Douglas said he would comply with the order and leave the bus station "wide open and see what happens."

The five Negroes who came here on a morning bus from New Orleans included Jerome Smith, 22, president of the CORE chapter in New Orleans; George Raymond, 18; Thomas Valentine, 23; Alice Thompson, 22, and Doratha Smith, 18.

When their bus arrived Wednesday morning, the bus station had been cleared about 15 minutes earlier because of gas fumes from a leaky hot water tank. A plumber had been called and was working on the faulty gas line when the bus came in.

PLANNED TO LEAVE

Because no one was being permitted inside the station, the five young Negroes caught a cab and left.

They said afterwards they intended to catch a bus out of McComb and return to New Orleans later in the day or Thursday morning.

The cameraman who was attacked was Johaan Rush, 19, from Jackson, a former student at Hinds Junior college.

Bystanders said Rush was outside the bus station about 2 p. m. Wednesday with his camera when a white man asked him if he "wanted to take my picture." Rush reportedly said "yes, I will," and the man hit him.

Rush's jacket was torn and then he started running, with several persons chasing him.

He ran into the rear of a dress shop on Main st. and asked for police protection. Police arrived a short time later and took him to the police station.

Rush told police he did not intend to file charges against his assailant.

McCOMB- FREEDOM RIDERS (CORE)
10 DAY RESTRAINING ORDER ISSUED BY FEDERAL JURIST AGAINST CORE AND THEIR AGENTS

Judge Orders CORE Halt McComb Activity

10-Day Restraining Order Issued By Federal Jurist

McCOMB, Miss. (AP)—The city of McComb Sunday was granted a federal temporary restraining order against the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) and their agents.

The order enjoined CORE from using bus terminal facilities in McComb for transporting passengers, mail and baggage to McComb and from continuing to use the facilities "for the purpose of fomenting violence and provoking breaches of peace in and near said terminal facilities."

The temporary restraining order was signed late Saturday night by U.S. Dist. Judge Sidney Mize.

It was requested by Asst. City Atty. W. A. Wiltshire, state Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson and Charles Clark, Jackson attorney who is special counsel for the city. Clark flew to Gulfport to give Judge Mize the request.

ISSUED SATURDAY

The injunction, which is good for ten days, was issued Saturday but could not become effective until it was served. Service was obtained Sunday on Tom Gaither, Jackson, field representative for CORE.

The injunction applies specifically to CORE and does not affect normal travel of any person in interstate commerce.

The Interstate Commerce Commission recently forbade segregation in interstate travel terminals.

No date for a hearing to extend the restraining order has been set.

The city's plans to seek a federal injunction were announced

ORGANIZED EFFORT

"There is now apparently an organized effort by CORE and its agents to break down peace and order in McComb by sending groups purporting to be interstate travelers to the bus terminal," city officials said in a statement.

"The fact has already been established that McComb authorities will not violate the injunction of the federal court that the city must not perform any acts to coerce or enforce segregation in interstate terminals. However, we feel that the city cannot sit by and let CORE endanger the citizenry of McComb under a fictitious cover of interstate travel."

The statement was issued after groups of white men attacked visiting newsmen. On the same day, a group of Negroes—with heavy police protection — were successful in using the bus terminal. Earlier on the previous Wednesday a group of whites attempted to use the bus station facilities.

McComb Seeks Court Order To Halt Riders

McCOMB, Miss. (AP) — Mayor C. H. Douglas and other city officials said Friday they would ask for a federal court injunction to prevent the influx of more "Freedom Riders" into the explosive McComb bus station.

They said they would ask that the injunction be directed against the Congress of Racial Equality.

Douglas met with Asst. City Atty. W. A. Wiltshire, and Selectmen Sam N. Alford and Charles B. Gordon.

They said, "There is now apparently an organized effort by CORE and its agents to break down peace and order in McComb by sending waves of groups purporting to be interstate travelers to the bus terminal here.

DAMAGE TO CITY

"The fact has already been established that McComb authorities will not violate the injunction of the federal court that the city must not perform any acts to coerce or enforce segregation in interstate terminals.

"However, we feel that the city cannot sit by and let CORE endanger the citizenry of McComb under a fictitious cover of interstate travel.

"We feel that this is an intended publicity play by CORE and can only be done at the expense of the city of McComb.

They recommended that the city board apply for such an injunction because "the federal government refuses to assist us in getting CORE from its dangerous actions."

RFK Congratulates McComb Officials

WASHINGTON (AP) — Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy congratulated officials of McComb, Miss., Friday on their efforts to end racial violence.

In a statement issued about 5 p.m., EST, Kennedy said:

"Department of Justice representatives in McComb, Miss., have reported that Mayor C. H. Douglas, Police Chief George Guy, and the officers and men of the McComb police department have maintained law and order under tense and difficult circumstances.

"I congratulate them. The situation still is tense and I hope that all persons will continue to respect and obey the orders of the police."

CORE Files Complaint In Mississippi

MCCOMB, Miss. (AP)—A Mississippi official of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) charged today that three Negro men and two Negro women were attacked by white persons at a McComb bus terminal.

Tom Gaither, field secretary for CORE in Jackson, said the five arrived at the bus station just before 3 p.m. and were beaten for more than 10 minutes until McComb police arrived.

Gaither said Thomas Valentine was beaten and "thrown into the street." Jerome Smith, whom Gaither identified as the chairman of the group, was the most severely beaten and suffered head lacerations. The two women, Gaither said, were knocked down and kicked.

In Jackson, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People sent a telegram about the McComb incident to U.S. Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy.

The wire told Kennedy that, "McComb has become a lawless community. Today, Negroes were beaten by mobs of white men when they tried to use interstate bus facilities."

The NAACP urged Kennedy to take steps "to preserve law and order and guarantee Negro citizens free and unobstructed access to travel facilities in the state of Mississippi and in McComb in particular."

Gaither said he understood the Negroes were planning to catch a 3:30 p.m. bus and he had planned to be there to try and prevent any trouble. But the Negroes arrived earlier than he thought they would, Gaither added.

Chief Guy said the disturbance involving Rush came after Rush took a picture of a bystander.

McComb Bus Test Barred; Editor Slugged

By CLAUDE SITTON

(Copyright 1961 by the New York Times Co.)

McCOMB, Miss. — A Federal District Court judge has issued a temporary ban against further tests of bus terminal desegregation here by the Congress of Racial Equality.

An official of the antisegregation organization was served with the order Sunday shortly before the McComb newspaper's editor was attacked in front of a downtown drug store.

Oliver Emmerich

Oliver Emmerich, editor and publisher of the Enterprise-Journal, was knocked to his knees by a white oil-field worker. The 61-year-old Emmerich, who recently recovered from a heart attack, received a deep gash across his left temple.

The publisher, who also is editor of the State-Times in Jackson, said his assailant had complained that out-of-town newsmen were using the McComb newspaper as their headquarters.

Police chief George Guy said he personally has arrested Milton Joins Stayton, a 43-year-old Texan who moved here a few months ago to work in a local oil field. He said Stayton was charged with assault and battery after admitting the attack. He was released on $1,000 bond.

PERSUADED OFFICIALS

Emmerich, one of Mississippi's most prominent residents, played a key role in persuading city officials here to take a stand for compliance with a three-judge ruling issued Monday. It directed the police to remove racially discriminatory signs they had erected at the Greyhound bus terminal and to take no other action to block implementation of a recent Interstate Commerce Commission regulation banning segregation.

Judge Sidney C. Mize of Gulfport, a dissenting member of the three-judge panel, granted the 10-day temporary restraining order Saturday at 4 p.m. against CORE, which has headquarters in New York. He set a hearing for Thursday in Jackson to determine whether the order should be extended.

Thomas Gaither, the organization's field secretary in Jackson, said he had been served with the order Sunday morning.

The ban was requested by Mayor C. H. Douglas of McComb and Mr. and Mrs. A. P. McGehee. The McGehees operate the Greyhound terminal and restaurant here.

CORE was forbidden from "sponsoring, financing or encouraging persons to utilize the facilities located in the city of McComb."

VIOLENCE BARRED

The organization and its agents also were prohibited from "continuing to utilize said terminal facilities for the purpose of fomenting violence and provoking breaches of the peace in or near said terminal facilities."

Judge Mize specifically excluded from the order the "normal, usual or ordinary travel of any persons in intra-state or inter-state commerce."

The following statement by CORE was issued by Gaither.

"CORE does not feel that the right of individuals to travel in dignity can be limited. We would like to point out that the United States government has previously shared this view in proceedings in the United States District Court in Alabama. Judge Frank M. Johnson has recently dissolved an injunction similar to the one just issued by Judge Mize.

"CORE hopes that the day will soon come when all can travel with dignity, without fanfare and without crowds all over America. CORE representatives will be present to defend their position at the hearing on Dec. 7, 1961, at 9 a.m."

GASH CLOSED

A physician closed the gash on Emmerich's temple with two stitches. He found no other injuries, according to the victim.

"I may be completely wrong, but I don't remember ever seeing that man before," Emmerich told newsmen later.

DESPITE VIGILANCE

3 Newsmen Attacked In McComb Violence

MCCOMB, Miss. (AP)—Despite increased police vigilance and the mayor's promise to suppress violence, disorders erupted on the streets of McComb Friday with groups of white men attacking visiting newsmen.

Four white men attacked Don Uhrbrock and Don Underwood of Life magazine and Simmons Fentress of Time magazine. The attackers pushed Uhrbrock through a plate glass window.

Later in the day, a group of six white youths attacked Associated Press Photographer Fred Kaufman. One of them hit him three times behind the right ear before Kaufman reached the office of the McComb newspaper, the Enterprise Journal.

When new Negro "freedom riders" arrived from Baton Rouge to test segregated facilities in the McComb bus terminal, a group of white men cursed other newsmen whom police hustled into City Hall for protection. The new riders apparently left McComb quickly by car.

Violence first erupted in McComb this week when five Negroes—three men and two women—were attacked and beaten Wednesday by a group of white persons. One of the Negro men, Jerome Smith of New Orleans, said later he was beaten by a man wearing brass knuckles.

MET BY FOUR MEN

Mayor C. H. Douglas said four white men were arrested in connection with the beatings, charged with fighting and disturbance of the peace, and later released on $100 bond each.

At the same time, Douglas said the city would enforce the new Interstate Commerce Commission ruling banning segregated facilities for interstate passengers in transportation terminals. He said he would end violence in the city.

Fentress said the three newsmen were walking toward the newspaper office when the four men met them.

One of them, Fentress said, asked "Are you from Time magazine?"

"I am here on business," Fentress said he replied.

"Your business is our business," one of them shot back, Fentress said, prodding him in the chest with a finger, and then striking him.

Fentress said the men then attacked Uhrbrock and Undrwood, shoving Uhrbrock through the glass window.

Uhrbrock suffered a swollen lip, but Underwood and Fentress apparently were not injured.

Shortly after the attack on the three newsmen, police arrested Haskel Boyd, 20, who was among the four men arrested in Wednesday's attack.

The bus station in McComb—the community is in Southern Mississippi and termed "The Camellia City"—shut down its restaurant facility today. Other sections of the terminal remained open.

Police turned out in full force at the single-story bus station, located a bit more than a block away from the police station. Officers cautioned all pedestrians to keep moving and not to congregate around the station.

Police Chief George Guy, who said he believed his force could cope with the situation, said offers of aid came from the state highway patrol and the Pike County sheriff's office.

Mississippi Gov. Ross Barnett said in Jackson he had no plans to call out the National Guard to preserve order in McComb.

Irate White Slugs Editor Over Policy

McCOMB, Miss. (AP) — Editor John Oliver Emmerich of the McComb Enterprise-Journal was slugged Sunday in the wake of racial disturbances here.

Police said Milton J. Stayton, 43, a white oilman, was charged with assault and battery. Bond was set at $1,000.

Stayton, married and the father of several children, was a former east Texas oilman who has been living in McComb about 18 months.

Associates said Emmerich stopped at a drug store for a cup of coffee when a white man approached and asked him whether he was responsible for bringing in out-of-state photographers and newsmen for coverage of racial violence last week. Five New Orleans Negroes who came to McComb to test segregated terminal facilities, and four visiting newsmen were beaten by white men.

Emmerich replied that he had only shown visiting newsmen professional courtesy.

The white man struck Emmerich on the left arm and hit him over an eye. Emmerich fell, fending off additional blows. Several stitches were taken to close the wound over his eye.

A drug store employe came to Emmerich's aid and told the attacker he ought to be ashamed of hitting a World War I veteran.

The assailant said, "Well, I'm a veteran of the Korean War," and walked off.

Four white men attacked Don Uhrbrock and Don Underwood of Life magazine and Simmons Fentress of Time magazine's Atlanta bureau. The attackers pushed Uhrbrock through a plate glass window.

Later in the day, a group of six white youths attacked Associated Press Photographer Fred Kaufman. One of them hit him three times behind the right ear before Kaufman reached the office of the McComb newspaper, the Enterprise Journal.

RIDERS EXIT FAST

When new Negro "freedom riders" arrived from Baton Rouge to test segregated facilities in the McComb bus terminal, a group of white men cursed other newsmen whom police hustled into City Hall for protection. The new riders apparently left McComb quickly by car.

Violence first erupted in McComb this week when five Negroes—three men and two women—were attacked and beaten Wednesday by a group of white persons. One of the Negro men, Jerome Smith of New Orleans, said later he was beaten by a man wearing brass knuckles.

Federal Court to Hear Mississippi Freedom Riders' Case Sept. 25; NAACP Files Suit

JACKSON, Miss.—(ANP)—A federal court test of segregation, the results of which will affect the future of Jackson's 300 freedom riders arrested on breach of the peace charges, was delayed last week.

Federal Judge Richard T. Rives set Sept. 25 as the date for the hearings both on temporary and permanent injunctions that would stop police from arresting freedom riders on such charges. The NAACP is seeking the injunctions.

Rives overruled motions for more definite information concerning the charges, but ordered the NAACP to furnish Jackson City Lines within 10 days the names and circumstances of bus drivers ordering Negroes to sit in the rear of buses.

The judge denied a motion for immediate hearing on a temporary injunction because of the addition for the Jackson City Airport commission as a defendant. The commission, included last week, was given until Aug. 27 to file information and until Aug. 17 to file motions in the case.

Rives, who presided over the three-judge case, told attorneys both for the NAACP and the defendants that he intends to try the Freedom Rider case on its merits.

While last week's action was spent in hearing preliminary motions, he said there will be no arguments on such motions when the court convenes in September.

The court declined to order the NAACP to post bond for court costs after the organization's Negro woman attorney from New York, Constance Baker Mot[illegible] said she would file a statem[illegible] with the court that the NAA[illegible] will pay any costs assessed.

Hearing the suit are Judge Ri[illegible]es and district Judges Claude Clayton of Tupelo and Sidney Mize of Gulfport.

Jackson attorney Tom Watkins, representing the city, asked the court to throw out the suit in which the NAACP seeks to enjoin the city and state and transportation officials from enforcing segregation.

He said the three-judge court is limited to determining whether existing segregation laws are constitutional and cannot rule on the enforcement of breach of the peace laws.

"There has not been an arrest made under the segregation statutes in the past 10 years," Watkins said of the statutes being tested for constitutionality by the NAACP.

Jackson's 300 "freedom riders" have all been arrested for breach of the peace after refusing to obey police orders to move on.

"The court's only function is to pass on the constitutionality of state statutes," Watkins contended.

"The method of enforcing a law cannot properly be heard by a three-judge court."

The NAACP argued that the city has enforced segregation "under color" of the breach of peace statutes.

Watkins contended that the case should be heard by a single judge district court.

The NAACP filed the suit on behalf of three Jackson Negroes, Samuel Bailey, Joseph Broadwater, and Burnett L. Jacob. None has been involved in the "freedom rider" invasion.

In another challenge against southern laws, a four-man civil rights staff in the office of the attorney general went back to work in defense of an attack on school segregation.

'RIDER' TRIALS TO START

First Of Appeals Cases To Begin Tuesday

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 18.—(AP)—The vanguard of 190 convicted "Freedom Riders" will go on trial Tuesday in Hinds County Court, seeking to overthrow the city court decision finding them guilty on breach of peace charges.

The two-a-day trials involve riders who posted appeal bonds before the August term of county court began. Those posting bonds after the opening of the term will go before a later court session.

The trials will be before Hinds County juries.

The first case will involve Henry J. Thomas of St. Augustine, Fla., one of the first group of riders who arrived May 24.

Agency Trying To Evade Suit

Airport Authority Asks To Be Removed From Action By 'Freedom Riders'

By The Associated Press

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 17. — The Jackson Municipal Airport Authority asked the Federal District Court Thursday to remove it from a suit to stop police from arresting so-called "Freedom Riders" on breach of peace charges.

The airport authority also filed a motion asking that the injunction plea be taken out of a three-judge court and sent back to the United States District Court, Southern District, where it was filed originally.

The airport authority was added to a list of defendants Aug. 7. This move delayed a hearing on the permanent injunction until Sept. 25.

Riders Arrested

The Riders and several Jackson Negroes have been arrested after they refused to move from transportation terminals, from terminal restaurants and from the front of city buses.

Attorney Rubel Phillips said the airport group is an agency and political subdivision of the State of Mississippi and the complaint fails to state a claim on which relief may be granted.

The injunction, he said, presents only factual issues and complaints of policies, practices, customs and usages.

The original motion, filed June 9 by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People on behalf of three Jackson Negroes, would prohibit police from arresting anyone testing segregation barriers in public travel facilities.

Defendants Named

Defendants in the case include Jackson City Lines, Illinois Central Railroad, Trailways and Greyhound Bus companies, the attorney general's office and the Airport Authority.

Presiding Judge Richard T. Rives has ordered the NAACP to furnish Jackson City Lines the names of circumstances under which bus drivers allegedly ordered Negroes to sit in the rear of buses

Attorney Believes Jury Will Be Fair

The first of 192 "freedom rider" appeals began in Hinds county court here today but it may be another day before testimony actually begins.

The appeal of Henry Thomas, 19, a Negro, of St. Augustine, Fla., was scheduled to begin at 9 a.m. before County Judge Russel Moore.

Jackson News

Freedom Rider Attorney William Kunstler at the opening of county court this morning withdrew his request for a change of venue but asked the court to instruct the Jackson Daily News to refrain from calling racial agitators "homosexuals and draft dodgers."

Kunstler said he decided to forego the request for a change of venue because "we've come to the conclusion the people of Jackson will not be influenced by the literature that has been in the local press."

Judge Russel Moore denied his plea for instructing the newspaper. Moore said the appeals will be heard as individual cases. "I don't care to get in an argument about the newspapers," Moore said.

Moore commented he wished he could instruct Life and Time magazines sometimes to be factual.

He protested the appearance of only two Negroes on the list of 60 prospective jurors.

"Rider" appeal cases have been scheduled at the rate of two per day in county court but the schedule would apparently be upset during the opening day.

Kunstler has subpoenaed more than 50 witnesses, including state officials and Jackson's leading 7 attorneys. In addition he said he planned to question prospective witnesses at length.

City Prosecuting Attorney Jack Travis has subpoenaed 13 witnesses, including several policemen, civic and business leaders and newspaper reporters.

Both sides obviously planned to make a lengthy record of the first trial.

Thomas, a student at Howard University in Washington, D. C., was arrested at the Trailways bus terminal here May 24, with the first group of "riders" to invade Jackson when the movement shifted here from Montgomery.

He was convicted in municipal court the next day and fined $200 with a 60 day jail term suspended.

He sat out the fine at the rate of $3 per day until July 5, when the Congress of Racial Equality secured his freedom on $500 bond.

In municipal court the city charged the "riders" came to Jackson only to break state laws and create an incident.

ALL THE WAY

Kunstler, an attorney for the American Civil Liberties Union, said he expects to take the cases to the U. S. Supreme Court if necessary.

He issued more than 40 summons yesterday, including requests for the appearance of Gov. Ross Barnett, former Gov. J .P. Coleman and other state officials.

Barnett rejected the subpoena and said he expected to be out of town today. Sheriff's deputies could not contact Coleman.

Barnett wa sin Miami, Fla., today to address the national convention of the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

PRIESTS TURN BACK

Meanwhile two Catholic priests who announced from New York they planned to come to Jackson as "riders" last night were halted en route by their superiors.

The two, both staff members of a New Orleans school, said they had permission of church officials to conduct the move in Jackson but as they reached Atlanta en route Jackson a diocese official telephoned them and ordered them to call off the ride.

The two white priests had planned to come to Jackson via airplane, then move to the Trailways bus terminal and sit in the Negro waiting room while awaiting transportation to New Orleans.

Attorneys for "freedom riders" scheduled to go on trial in county court here today have summoned more than 40 persons as defense witnesses, including Gov. Barnett and nearly every other state official.

"There will be no extra consideration nor undue attention over these cases," the judge said, "as they are simply breach of the peace appeal cases and nothing more."

No Fair Trial In Mississippi, Atty. Tells Rider Trial

Atlanta World

Atlanta, Ga

JACKSON, Miss. — (UPI)—Attorneys for a young Negro "freedom rider" called a parade of witnesses Tuesday in an attempt to show he could not receive a fair trial under Mississippi's predominantly white jury system.

Henry J. Thomas, 19, of St. Augustine, Fla., is the first of about 300 riders convicted in police court for breach of the peace to go on trial in appeal proceedings in Hinds County court.

Before selection of a jury could get underway defense attorney William A. Kunstler of New York asked that the 60-man venire, from which the jury would be selected, be declared ineligible to hear the case because only two of its members are Negroes.

To prove his charges that Negroes are allowed only token jury duty here Kunstler called eight white lawyers, 10 Negro voters and county officials and election commissioners.

The lawyers testified that they had never seen a Negro serve on a trial jury in cases they handled but said they frequently serve on grand juries and are called on venires from which trial juries are chosen.

Eight Negroes testified that they had been registered to vote—and thus eligible for jury duty—for 12 to 40 years and had never been called to jury service.

Freedom Riders' Trials To Run for 5 Months

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 15 (AP).—The appeal trials of nearly 200 convicted Freedom Riders will begin next Tuesday in Hinds County Court. They are expected to continue through January.

County Judge Russel Moore today scheduled arraignment for three additional riders after 188 others pleaded not guilty of breach of peace charges.

The riders are appealing City Court convictions after their arrests for refusing to obey police orders to move on while attempting to desegregate transportation terminal facilities in this State capital city of 70,000.

The first Freedom Riders reached Jackson last May 24. Since then, 297 have been arrested. Some remain in jail.

The three scheduled to be arraigned today were John Dolan, 20, of Berkeley, Calif.; George Marion Blevins, 21, of Los Angeles, and Frank Nelson of Brooklyn N. Y. All are white.

Three Given More Time

Judge Moore granted the three an additional day after they were jailed on other charges in New Orleans last Saturday and were unable to meet the Monday appearance deadline.

Attorneys went through formal legal procedure in the first of 197 cases called yesterday, then took an average of 25 seconds per person for the 188 who entered pleas and received trial dates. Nine defendants did not appear, including the three who were to be arraigned today.

Judge Moore said the other six must forfeit their $500 bonds or appear at the next term of court and show why they were not present yesterday.

Defense Attorney William Kunstler's motion to dismiss the charges failed. He contended that the application of the breach-of-peace law was unconstitutional and violated a Federal statute in regard to free use of travel facilities.

Motion Overruled

Judge Moore overruled the motion, saying it was premature and could be entered when the jury trails begin next week.

The defense also filed a motion for a change of venue on grounds prospective jurors in Hinds County had been prejudiced by newspaper and television editorials.

After consultation with the judge, Mr. Kunstler withdrew the motion and said he would re-enter it later. Judge Moore said testimony and arguments on the motion would be heard before the first rider appeal trial begins.

Most of the riders planned to leave Jackson and return home to await their trial dates.

Mr. Kunstler has had five other rider cases removed to Federal Court in Jackson. United States District Judge W. Harold Cox will hear arguments on whether civil rights are involved in the cases Saturday when the State attempts to regain jurisdiction.

Action Speeded for Two

Yesterday Judge Moore permitted two defendants to enter their pleas during the morning so they could return home by plane.

They were Mark Lane, 33, a New York State assemblyman, of Manhattan, and Percy Sutton, 40-year-old Negro president of a New York City branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Both pleaded not guilty.

Under procedure agreed upon by both Mr. Kunstler and city attorneys, two trials will be held daily five days each week until all cases are finished. The 188 are scheduled to complete their trials January 17.

Under the rules of Judge Moore's court, all Freedom Riders who had posted bonds were required to appear personally or forfeit bonds.

There were no demonstrations or incidents yesterday. Police kept a two-block area around the courthouse cleared of onlookers and Judge Moore banned applause, smoking and loud talking in the courtroom.

'Riders' Descending On Jackson to Appeal $500 Bonds at Court

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 12 (AP).—Freedom riders coming by bus, train, plane and cars—began arriving in Jackson Saturday to keep a date with a County Court judge.

More than 180 white and Negro riders who posted $500 appeal bonds after unsuccessful desegregation attempts of transportation facilities were expected in Jackson by Sunday night. They are to appear in court Monday to appeal breach of the peace convictions.

SUNDAY RALLY SET

A freedom rider rally will be held Sunday night.

The Hinds county sheriff's office and Jackson police prepared to prevent any outbreak of violence.

"We are taking extra precaution to see that proceedings are completed in an orderly manner," said Sheriff J. R. Gilfoy. "No loitering or congregating will be allowed around the courthouse Monday. No one will be allowed inside the courtroom except the defendants, their counsel, the prosecutors, the judge and the press."

TO BE POLICED

Chief of Detectives M. B. Pierce said "We will have adequate policemen on hand to assist the Sheriff at the courthouse and to see that if any laws are broken, whether it be by freedom riders or not, the persons involved will be arrested."

Riders began arriving in Jackson Saturday individually and in small groups, but the largest delegation was expected Sunday on the "City of New Orleans" train. New Orleans was one of the major gathering points for riders.

2 BUSES SATURDAY

Two chartered buses carrying riders were to leave Nashville Saturday night.

John Lewis, acting chairman of the Nashville Student Non-Violent Movement, said "We have the entire Minnesota dele-gation and some from Chicago and Cincinnati."

180 Riders Set Mass Trek to Jackson Trials

By the Associated Press

More than 180 convicted Freedom Riders were making plans today for a mass trek to Jackson, Miss., to start appeal proceedings Monday.

Trials of the appeal cases are expected to begin before county juries on August 21 at the rate of two per day, indicating it might be four or five months before final cases are heard.

Attorney William Kunstler of New York said he tried without success yesterday to win modification of a Hinds County court order requiring all defendants to be present on the opening day of the county court term handling their appeals.

Circuit Judge Leon Hendrick refused to order County Court to change its rule, Mr. Kunstler said, and Justice W. N. Ethridge, jr., of the Mississippi Supreme Court did not have the power to take the action he sought.

Advised to Appear

The attorney said he had advised the 187 convicted Freedom Riders to be in Jackson to appeal their breach of peace convictions in City Court to County Court.

At the same time, he said he was filing proceedings to transfer to Federal Court the cases of five convicted riders not expected to be able to return to Jackson.

Meanwhile, arguments resumed in Federal District Court at Jackson on the application of James H. Meredith, 28, a Negro, for a court order to force the University of Mississippi to admit qualified Negroes.

A survey by the Richmond News Leader showed that 529 Negroes planned to enter desegrated schools next month, compared with about 200 enrolled last year. That would raise from 37 to 67 the number of desegrated schools. However, Negroes would still account for less than one per cent of those enrolled.

10 Negroes to Enroll

The school board in Elizabethton, Tenn., agreed to abolish segregation in first grades on September 1. Officials estimated 10 Negro pupils would attend classes. Similar grade-a-year plans already are in effect in Knoxville and Nashville.

At Nashville, fines were levied against six of 15 persons arrested Saturday night during a racial clash between white youths and demonstrators picketing a supermarket. The stiffiest fine, $50, was on a disorderly conduct charge.

The State Board of Education in Georgia agreed to hold a special meeting Monday to consider an appeal of its decision to permit a white Atlanta girl to trasnfer from one high school to another.

Earlier Request Denied

The Atlanta Board of Education earlier denied the request of Sandra Melkild to transfer from Northside High, scheduled to be desegregated August 30, to Dykes High, a school which will remain segregated this year. The State board overruled this decision.

At Madison, Wis., Mrs. Vel Phillips, Democratic National Committeewoman for Wisconsin, joined a group of sit-in demonstrators in the rotunda of Wiscsin's Capitol. The sit-in participants are seeking housing legislation.

Mrs. Phillips, a Negro, said, "All I'm doing is representing the State Democratic Party's principles."

'Rider' Faces Jury Trial Tuesday

The Montgomery

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—Henry Thomas, a 19-year-old Negro, will become the first "Freedom Rider" to receive a jury trial Tuesday when he appeals his breach of peace conviction to county court.

Thomas, a lanky Howard University student, was convicted in City Court May 25 after he refused an officer's order to move out of the Trailways bus terminal May 24. He attempted to use all-white facilities.

City Judge James L. Spencer gave Thomas a $200 fine and a 60-day suspended sentence. Thomas posted a $500 appeal bond July 5 after serving out more than half his fine at $3 a day.

The St. Augustine, Fla., rider was in the second group of riders arriving May 24. He is one of 297 riders arrested in Jackson, of which 291 have been convicted, 237 have posted appeal bonds, four have paid fines, one has served the sentence and 49 remain in jail.

WOULD APPEAL

Defense attorney William Kunstler of New York said if Thomas were convicted in county court, the case would be appealed to the circuit court, State Supreme Court and the U. S. Supreme Court if necessary.

County Judge Russel Moore is scheduled to hear a motion for a change of venue at 8:30 a.m. Tuesday.

Riders' Pleas Being Studied

By BEN MCCARTY
Associated Press Staff Writer

U.S. Dist. Judge Harold Cox Saturday took under advisement until next week a suit to return five "freedom rider" cases to state court.

Attorney William Kunstler of New York earlier filed the suit which automatically placed an appeal of breach of peace convictions in federal court.

Tom Watkins, attorney for Hinds County, cited two cases which said the illegal enforcement of a law by police or administrative officers was not grounds for removal to federal court.

The petitioners, Watkins said, cannot come to this court and say a policeman improperly enforced a legal statute.

"If the alleged wrongs are committed by officers or individuals the remedy is the . . . highest court of the state and then to the Supreme Court of the United States."

Kunstler argued that removal to federal court when a state statute prevents the petitioners from enforcing a civil right in state court.

"It is not a breach of peace law," Kunstler said. "It is a segregation law—pure and simple.

"It is designed to punish people who violate segregation acts in public transportation terminals which are unconstitutionl."

These five petitioners, he said "cannot enforce their rights in state courts because they are faced by this breach of the peace conduct."

"There is no constitutional defense against the broad and vague staute designed to take the place of segregation statutes."

On a question by Judge Cox, Kunstler said the freedom riders, sponsored by the Congress of Racial Equality, used a non-violent approach and had no idea to provoke a breach of the peace.

"They came here to dramatize the segregation in interstate commerce as practiced in Mississippi," he said.

"The federal court is the proper place for these cases. They can't be resolved in state courts."

Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson said in rebuttal the removal to federal court was "a blatant attempt to nullify action in state court by coming in the backdoor.

"It's the business of the State of Mississippi which statute it acts under to enforce its law. The petitioner's contention is frivolous."

Patterson said the freedom riders decided, "we don't like your laws and we're going to break them. We dare you to stop us."

He added: "They were nonviolent provided nobody got in their way. They came here to provoke trouble and to create friction, confusion and riots."

In County Court Tuesday, appeal trials for 190 freedom riders will begin on the same breach of peace charges.

The five whose cases went to federal court were:

Judith Ann Frieze, 22, Waban, Mass.; Dr. James Carey, Berkeley, Calif.; Shirley Smith, 34, New York City; Orville Luster, Daly City, Calif., and Elmer Brown, 20, Akron, Ohio. Frieze, Carey and Smith are white and Luster and Brown Negro.

First Rider Trial Ready To Begin

Florida Negro To Appear In Jackson Court Tomorrow

By United Press International

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 20. — The first of 192 so-called "Freedom Riders" appealing breach of the peace convictions goes on trial Tuesday. The other 191 are scheduled to be tried from then until Jan. 19.

Henry J. Thomas, a 20-year-old Negro from St. Augustine, Fla., was the first rider to receive a trial date when the integrationists were arraigned last week. All the riders were convicted in Police Court and are being given jury trials as part of their appeal process.

Veteran Of Rides

Thomas' trial opens before County Judge Russell Moore Tuesday at 9 a.m. The state is expected to try to show Thomas was trying to provoke a breach of the peace when he entered a white waiting room. The defense will claim he was arrested for challenging segregation.

Thomas has been a member of the rider movement since its start. He was aboard the bus which was burned by segregationists in Anniston, Ala., and he was on the first bus which reached Jackson May 24 under massive police protection. Since that day about 300 persons have been arrested here as members of the movement.

Thomas served part of his jail sentence for breach of the peace, then was released on appeal bond. He made a 'protest ride' into Arkansas and now is a field director of the Congress of Racial Equality.

A Federal judge will make a decision next week which might take all the rider trials out of County Court.

William Kunstler, attorney for the riders, transferred the cases of five riders from the County Court to United States District Court. He said a Federal Civil Rights Act allows such transfers to be made when persons are arrested on state laws designed to preserve segregation.

Called 'Blatant Attempt'

In a hearing Saturday, state Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson called for United States District Judge Harold Cox to return the cases to County Court. Mr. Patterson said Kunstler's act was a "blatant attempt to nullify state court procedure."

Judge Cox said he will rule on the motion this week. Kunstler has said he will transfer the cases of all the riders out of the state courts if he gets a favorable ruling.

First Of Rider Trials Today In Mississippi

JACKSON, Miss. — (UPI) — Separate trials for each of 192 "freedom riders" appealing breach of peace convictions resulting from their integration activities begin here Tuesday. The trials are expected to extend well into 1962.

Henry J. Thomas, a 20-year-old Negro from St. Augustine, Florida, will be the first of the integrationists to appear before County Judge Russell Moore. He is scheduled for trial at 9 a. m. Tuesday. Thomas, a field director of the Congress of Racial Equality, has been a member of the rider movement since it started. He was aboard the bus which was burned by segregationists in Anniston, Ala, last May.

All the riders were convicted in police court on breach of peace charges after refusing to obey police orders to use segregated waiting rooms in bus, rail and air terminals here.

The entire group was required to appear in court here last week for arraignment.

A federal judge will make a decision next week which might take all the rider trials out of county court.

'RIDER' APPEAL TRIALS TO BEGIN

Henry Thomas Hearing Slated for Today

By BEN MCCARTY

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Henry Thomas, 19-year-old Negro, will become the first "Freedom Rider" to receive a jury trial Tuesday when he appeals his breach of peace conviction to county court.

Thomas, a tall Howard University student, was convicted in city court May 25 after he refused an officer's order to move out of the Trailways bus terminal May 24. He attempted to use all-white facilities.

City Judge James L. Spencer gave Thomas a $200 fine and a 30-day suspended sentence. Thomas posted a $500 appeal bond July 5 after serving out more than half his fine at $3 a day.

IN SECOND GROUP

The St. Augustine, Fla., rider was in the second group of Freedom Riders arriving May 24. He is one of 297 riders arrested in Jackson, of whom 291 have been convicted, 237 have posted appeal bonds, 4 have paid fines, 1 has served the sentence and 49 remain in jail.

Defense attorney William Kunstler of New York said if Thomas was convicted in county court, the case would be appealed to the circuit court, state Supreme Court and the U.S. Supreme Court if necessary.

County Judge Russell Moore was scheduled to hear a motion for a change of trial site at 8:30 a.m. Tuesday. Kunstler was expected also to enter a motion asking Moore to dismiss the case on grounds the defendant was within his constitutional right in using terminal facilities.

JURY SELECTION

After all motions are heard, attorneys will begin selecting a 12-man jury to decide the case. The jurors will come from a 53-man weekly jury list which includes two Negroes.

Judge Moore said the case would be heard just as any misdemeanor charge. Kunstler said he plans to exhaust all legal means in Thomas' defense so he will have a full record for appeal purposes.

Gov. Ross Barnett and former Gov. J. P. Coleman were sought as defense witnesses, but officers said Barnett declined to accept his subpoena and Coleman was not located by the deputies seeking to serve him.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. — Miss. Freedom Riders' trails held special interest here.

The ~~Rev. C. T.~~ Vivian, pastor of the Cosmopolitan Community Church here, was among the original riders and was back in Jackson for the mass grouping of ~~defendants~~.

A telephone conversation ~~with~~ the Rev. Mr. Vivian on his return to town revealed some interesting facts.

First of all he said, "We were treated very nicely. I noticed many little things that perhaps the press might have overlooked. They made no attempt to segregate us."

Further conversation brought out the fact that there was really no need for all of the riders to return to Jackson, because the way the trial dates are set, it will be 1962 before there will be an end to it, at the rate of two a day, five days a week.

Jan. 2, 1962

THE REV. MR. VIVIAN said his trial ~~date is set~~ for around January, 1962.

At a recent Freedom Meeting held here, the Highlander Folk School mixed choir under the direction of Guy Carawan furnished the music.

The group of colored and white students came from many southern states and elsewhere.

The back-to-school movement is taking shape again and in a few weeks, the teachers and students will return to the classrooms.

Around this town there were several changes and promotions among principals and a number of new teachers were employed.

The city school board this week approved five personnel changes involving principals and persons promoted to the status of principal.

Freedom Riders Convicted in Jackson Court; Appeals Will Be Heard Through January

JACKSON, Miss.—(ANP)—More than 180 "Freedom Riders" filed by twos before Hind County court here last week and pleaded innocent to breach of peace charges, setting the stage for a long series of appeal trials.

The convicted riders were arraigned and given trial dates in the county courtroom with a segregated but non-segregated atmosphere. They sat on benches on the first floor in an integrated manner, white and Negro defendants rose and stood side by side when their names were called in pairs.

Reporters Segregated

The attorneys' table before Hinds County Judge Russell Moore was integrated with Jackson Negro Attorney Jack Young sitting beside his co-counsel William N. Kunstlier of New York City. The courtroom balcony, where the reporters sat, was strictly segregated. However, Negroes and whites used the same rest rooms on the second floor, the doors of which read "male defendants" and "female defendants."

Most of the riders from at least ten states are currently free on appeal bond. The court intends to try at least two cases per day beginning Aug. 22, and continue two-a-day, five days a week until Jan 19, with three days off for Christmas and one for New Year's day.

Although originally billed as an appeal of their convictions the upcoming trials are legally the first appearance of the "Freedom Riders" in a court of record.

Recent Developments

HUSTN. — Eleven "Freedon Riders" from California — sever whites— were arrested last week in the Union Station Restaurant on John and Jane Doe warrants charging unlawful assembly. Attorney George Washington jr. bailed out four white "Freedom Riders", after they told him they had been beaten and roughed up by other prisoners.

MONTGOMERY.—A move to halt "Freedom Rides" into Alabama has been dropped in the local federal court.

CORINTH, Miss.—A "Freedom Rider," Leslie Word, was jailed and later ordered out of town last week when he used a telephone in the railroad waiting room reserved for whites. The Chicago real estate dealer told the Chicago Daily Defender that one of the seven white police who came for him said: "Can't you read? This hear-ah waitin' is for white folks only."

JACKSON, iMss.—Mayor Allen Thompson went down a checklist of areas in which integration attempts and segregation protests have been made in Jackson last week at the Neshoba County Fair and said neither the city nor Mississippi would tolerate any of them.

NEW ORLEANS.—Three "Freedom Riders" said that they were en route to Jackson to appear along with 188 other "Freedom Riders" when they were unmercifully beaten by police here after they had been forceably taken from a Negro home.

2 Riders Pay Fines, Drop Court Appeals

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Two Negro "Freedom Riders" withdrew their appeals from county court Monday and paid their fines.

Matthew Walker, 19, of Nashville, Tenn., and John H. Moody, 25, of Philadelphia, Pa., were convicted of breach of the peace May 26 in court after they arrived by bus two days earlier.

Sheriff J. R. Gilfoy said each paid a $100.95 fine, which included $17.95 in court costs, of the $200 fine and 60-day suspended jail sentence. Part of the fine was served off at $3 a day.

Field Secretary Tom Gaither of the Congress of Racial Equality in Jackson said Moody and Walker paid their own fines.

"Paying fines are strictly against CORE's policy," Gaither said. "We feel it is an admission of guilt. We came here to fight segregation, not to perpetuate it by hard earned money.

"Any future riders who get out by paying fines will do so on their own."

The next scheduled trials are Wednesday, with defendants Doris Castle, 19, and Jerome M. Smith, 22, both New Orleans Negroes.

Moody and Walker were the third and fourth of 190 "Freedom Riders" whose appeals are scheduled to run through January.

In appeal trials last week, all-white juries found two riders guilty of breach of the peace. They received a four-month sentence and a $200 fine.

Two 'Riders' Drop Appeals To Hinds Court

Two "freedom riders" scheduled for trials today, in a surprise move withdrew their appeals in Hinds county court and paid the balance due on their $200 city court fines.

John H. Moody and Matthew Walker Jr., convicted on breach of peace charges, had served out some of their fines sitting in jail. They had received 60-day suspended sentences.

One of the two was to have gone on trial before Judge Russel Moore this morning and the other this afternoon.

Trials of the remaining 188 convicted riders who have filed appeals from city court are scheduled at the same rate.

Last week, the opening trial consumed three days before a guilty verdict set the pace for subsequent such hearings. The second trial took less than six hours and court officials indicted the following cases would consume even less time.

The initial case included numerous motions and statements for the purposes of establishing a record, while following cases are expected to be limited to basic facts.

All of the appeals are based on city court convictions growing out of arrests for breach of the peace by failure to obey an officer. Fines of $200 and four months were meted in city court.

Defense attorneys said they would appeal both of the county court convictions to the Hinds circuit court for review and if necessary, would carry them on to the state supreme court.

There are 190 convicted riders who have appeals docketed for trial, at the rate of two a day, five days a week.

The second pair which were scheduled lost their place due to the length of the first action, and their cases were remanded to the bottom of the docket. They were Joseph Carter, and John R. Lewis, now scheduled for Jan. 21.

'Riders' Refused U.S. Jurisdiction

Mississippi Law 'Is Ruled 'Natural, Necessary' By Federal Judge

By KENNETH TOLER

From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 26. — Federal Judge Harold Cox ruled Saturday that Mississippi's Breach of the Peace Law, under which 200 so-called "Freedom Riders" were arrested for refusing to leave segregated facilities, "is a perfectly natural and necessary exercise by the state of well-known and well-recognized police power."

He refused to permit transfer of five "test" cases from Hinds County Court to Federal jurisdiction under an old civil rights act he said "has never been successfully invoked in a case of this kind."

The five riders—three whites and two Negroes—had charged they were arrested for violating state segregation laws which they contended had been stricken down by Federal court decisions and laws.

'Integration Not Involved'

However, Judge Cox said "this case cannot be treated or regarded by anyone in search of the truth or in quest of justice as a case in anywise or to any extent involving either integration or segregation."

"The statute is a pure and simple peace law enacted by the Legislature in good faith to assure peace and tranquility among its people," he said.

Judge Cox was the first appointee named by President John F. Kennedy under terms of a bill increasing the number of Federal judges in several states.

In refusing to accept Federal jurisdiction, Judge Cox asserted that "this court may not be regarded as any haven for any counterfeit citizens from other states deliberately seeking to cause trouble here."

'Objective Was Trouble'

"These petitioners heralded their arrival in Jackson from other states for provocative purposes," Judge Cox said. "Their status as interstate passengers is extremely doubtful—their destination was Jackson but their objective trouble.

"They were arrested and tried according to the local court because of the provocative circumstances under which they appeared at the time in this particular place," he said. "They had no civil right to incite a riot or provoke mob violence, and the arresting officer promptly and efficiently and very properly discharged his duty in arresting each of these criminals under such circumstances."

First 'Freedom Ride' Trial Begins

JACKSON, Miss. — (UPI) — The first "Freedom Rider" jury trial began Tuesday, Aug. 22, in county court. Selection of a jury was expected to consume most of the day.

William A. Kunstler of New York, an attorney for the American Civil Liberties Union, said he would dislike having segregationists on the jury which will hear the state's case against Henry J. Thomas.

Kunstler was expected to ask at the start of the trial that the jury be quashed on the grounds that only two Negroes were among the 50 veniremen from which it was to be chosen.

Thomas, 20, of St. Augustine, Fla., was on the first bus to reach Jackson when the "Freedom Rider" movement made the city its target May 24. A student at Howard university, he is a field director for the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE).

Ten Jackson Negroes were convicted in municipal court Monday on breach of peace charges for sitting on benches and picnicking at the city zoo.

Both races use the zoo, but until this summer only whites customarily sat on the benches. The benches were removed recently after Negroes began using them.

Kunstler summoned more than 50 persons to appear as witnesses in Thomas' trial.

They include Gov. Ross Barnett; Citizens Council Leader W. J. Simmons; State Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson; Public Safety Commissioner T. B. Birdson; State Adjutant Gen. W. P. Wilson; Mayor Allen Thompson; Detective Chief M. B. Pierce; Dist. Atty. W. L. Miller, Former Gov. J. P Coleman; the Hinds County Board of Supervisors; other state and local officials; numerous lawyers, and several newsmen.

Thomas is one of 192 riders whose trials are set for county court. The others are charged with breach of the peace and have trial dates set through Jan. 19, 1962

No Fair Trial In Mississippi, Atty. Tells Rider Trial

JACKSON, Miss. — (UPI)—Attorneys for a young Negro "freedom rider" called a parade of witnesses Tuesday in an attempt to show he could not receive a fair trial under Mississippi's predominantly white jury system.

Henry J. Thomas, 19, of St. Augustine, Fla., is the first of about 300 riders convicted in police court for breach of the peace to go on trial in appeal proceedings in Hinds County court.

Before selection of a jury could get underway defense attorney William A. Kunstler of New York asked that the 60-man venire, from which the jury would be selected, be declared ineligible to hear the case because only two of its members are Negroes.

To prove his charges that Negroes are allowed only token jury duty here Kunstler called eight white lawyers, 10 Negro voters and county officials and election commissioners.

The lawyers testified that they had never seen a Negro serve on a trial jury in cases they handled but said they frequently serve on grand juries and are called on venires from which trial juries are chosen.

Eight Negroes testified that they had been registered to vote—and thus eligible for jury duty—for 12 to 40 years and had never been called to jury service.

Under cross-examination Julian P. Alexander, district attorney from 1950-56, testified there was a mutual agreement by attorneys for both defense and state in cases he tried that Negroes would be excluded without either side losing its quota of challenges.

Kunstler will attempt to show that the riders were arrested as part of the state's efforts to preserve segregation. The state contends that they threatened a breach of the peace.

Release Of Riders Appealed To President JFK

Atlanta World
Aug 1-3-61

DETROIT — Release of imprisoned "freedom riders" in Jackson, Miss., is sought by the National Conference for Interracial Justice in an appeal to President Kennedy.

Atlanta Ga

In a convention resolution Aug. 28 the conference argued that the riders should be freed because "they are unjustly confined and have acted entirely within their constitutional rights."

The conference also asked President Kennedy in another resolution to issue a presidential executive order banning discriimnation in all housing which receives federal aid or mortgage guarantees. It urged governors in states without fair housing practice laws to initiate such legislation, and asked the AFL-CIO to end racial segregation in local unions and to stop discrimination in union - controlled appreticeship programs.

Bishop Victor J. Reed of Oklahoma City and Tulsa said that a Christian can take only one attitude toward racial injustice — condemnation. Speaking at mass, he said that a policy of silence is indefensible.

"Our country is today the world's leader," he said; "Her failure affects others than herself .... Her public image is being maliciously distorted by her enemies as a result of racial segregation difficulties .... With secularism trying to seize leadership and seeking to interpret life on every side, the church cannot delay. Her mission in the world is not to follow but to lead.

Jan 9-5-61

"Last winter the photograph of a Catholic priest being carried out of a public restaurant by two policemen appeared on the front pages of newspapers all over this nation and in other parts of the world. The incident took place in my own Oklahoma City."

Secretary of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg said that U. S. churches must fight racial discrimination or be false to their mission.

5 NEGROES BEATEN

McComb Hit By Violence

MCCOMB, Miss. (AP) — Five Negroes who were beaten and kicked by whites at a bus station here Wednesday afternoon in what the justice department called "an outbreak of violence" left Wednesday night for New Orleans.

The bus station closed about 10 minutes before the New Orleans-bound bus arrived. When the bus pulled in, police blocked off the area and a taxicab brought the five Negroes—three men and two women—to the middle of the street. They boarded the bus under police protection, and there were no incidents.

In the block there were numerous carloads of white men. Several of the men told a reporter: "It's a good thing they are leaving."

Earlier, in Washington, Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy said McComb Mayor C. H. Douglas had assured the Justice Department that the five Negroes "who were the subjects of violence this afternoon will receive full and complete protection while in that city."

Tom Gaither, field secretary for CORE in Jackson, said the five arrived at the bus station just before 3 p.m. He said they were beaten for more than 10 minutes until McComb police arrived.

Gaither said Thomas Valentine was beaten and "thrown into the street."

Jerome Smith, whom Gaither identified as the chairman of the group, was the most severely beaten and suffered head lacerations. The two women, Gaither said, were knocked down and kicked.

Gaither said he understood the Negroes were planning to catch a 3:30 P.M. bus and he had planned to be there to try and prevent any trouble. But the Negroes arrived earlier than he thought they would, Gaither added.

McComb Police Chief George Guy said "I can't find the Negroes to find out what happened"

CAMERAMAN HIT

Guy said that the disturbance involving Rush came after Rush took a picture of a bystander.

The police chief said several men "whipped him around a little bit" but added he thought Rush "was okay."

The police chief said Rush remained at City Hall, discussing the incident with officers but was not charged with anything. There were no other arrests made.

Guy said Rush talked with Columbia Broadcasting System's office in New York after the disturbance.

He was not reported seriously injured, but witnesses said his film was taken.

The incident came after an unsuccessful attempt by several Negroes to use what had been the white waiting room of the terminal. They found the doors locked and officials reported gas had escaped from a pipe.

NEGRO TEST IS DUE IN MISSISSIPPI CITY

Bus-Rail Racial Signs Going Down Today in McComb

By CLAUDE SITTON

Special to The New York Times.

McCOMB, Miss., Nov. 28—City officials said today they would cease to enorce segregation in rail and bus terminals tomorrow under terms of a Federal Court injunction.

They reasserted their intention to comply with the order shortly after they had been served with copies of it by John Daniels, deputy Federal marshal from Jackson.

make an immediate test of terminal facilities. Their use of previously white waiting rooms would mark the first desegregation under orders from the Federal judiciary in recent Mississippi history.

There were no indications tonight that the prospect had raised tension in this railroad and trading center in southwestern Mississippi near the Louisiana line.

Gets Call for Capital

Nevertheless, a Justice Department spokesman in Washington said that agency was watching developments. "We are hopeful that there will be orderly compliance," he said.

Mayor C. H. Douglas said that there will be orderly compliance," he said.

Mayor C. H. Douglas said that Jerome Heilbron, an attorney in the department's Civil Rights Division, had telephoned him from Washington this morning.

"He wanted to know if we had had any repercussions, favorable or unfavorable," Mr. Douglas recalled. "He wanted us to know that the Justice Department was interested in our problem."

The Mayor met with city attorneys, the police and other officials to discuss the city's policy on the matter. He said he would issue a statement calling on citizens "to comply fully with this enjoining order."

Mr. Douglas noted that the injunction, issued by a three-judge court and filed yesterday at Jackson, related only to the Greyhound bus terminal. The city was directed to remove signs designating one waiting room for "white intrastate passengers" and another for "colored intrastate passengers."

Will Confer on Point

The signs, mounted on steel stanchions embedded in the concrete sidewalk, were erected after the bus company had obliterated similar signs in compliance with an order from the Interstate Commerce Commission. The city had also placed signs outside the waiting rooms of the Illinois Central Railroad passenger terminal.

The Mayor noted that the court's order forebade the city from "otherwise seeking to enforce or coerce the segregation of the white and Negro races in their use of terminal facilities used in interstate commerce."

While he intends to confer with lawyers on this point, he said, he interprets it to mean that the railroad terminal is included.

He and George Guy, the police chief, said the signs would be removed "during the night when there's nobody around."

Referring to the bus station Mayor Douglas said: "We won't give it special police protection. If anything happens, of course we'll see to it.

"I think if it's left alone it will solve itself. We'll just leave it wide open and see what happens."

McComb Chief Orders Strong Police Force

McCOMB, Miss. (AP)—McComb Mayor C. H. Douglas ordered the city's police force strengthened Thursday and said "the South Mississippi Camellia City of America" is determined to halt violence in racial disputes.

The mayor's announcement came at a news conference, scarcely 24 hours after a group of white youths attacked Negro "Freedom Riders" at the Greyhound Bus Terminal.

Douglas said four white men had been arrested in connection with the beating of the three Negro men and two Negro women. The four whites were released on $100 bond after being charged with fighting and disturbing the peace.

The five "Freedom Riders" arrived in New Orleans Thursday. One of them, Jerome Smith of New Orleans, said he was hit by a white man wearing brass knuckles.

ICC EDICT

"The law regarding our bus and railroad terminals is a federal law," Mayor Douglas told newsmen at the conference. "We did not make it at the local level, but it is our purpose to enforce it. We are determined to this end."

He referred to the new Interstate Commerce Commission edict forbidding racial segregation at transportation facilities.

"We are immediately increasing our normal police force to cope with the present situation," Douglas said. "Our Police Department is capable in normal times of meeting any local development.

MUST MOVE ON

"But we now find ourselves in a situation where our resources are taxed by a sudden influx of outside, professional agitators who come with the announced intention of remaining in our city until an incident is provoked and photographed," Douglas said.

Newsreel and television cameramen were on hand during Wednesday's disturbance and photographed the attack on the five Negroes.

While not specifying the increase in the Police Department's strength, Douglas said the city is "now prepared to meet these emergencies." He indicated officers would double their shifts and work overtime.

"We are requesting the public not to congregate at the bus and railroad terminals," he said, "and any persons in the vicinity of these facilities who have no reason to be there will be required to move on.

"We want to make it clear," he said, "that the law will be applied to all persons—white and colored—alike. All white persons known to have participated in Wednesday's trouble have been arrested and taken into custody. We are determined to suppress violence."

Signs in Mississippi

In the Mississippi town of McComb last Nov. 1 a bus-terminal manager took down signs designating separate waiting rooms for whites and Negroes. Outside, the McComb police promptly put up new signs on the sidewalk indicating separate entrances to "White Waiting Room, Intrastate Passengers" and "Colored Waiting Room, Intrastate Passengers." Such segregation, the police contended, was required by state laws.

That was the answer in McComb to a new ruling by the Interstate Commerce Commission barring interstate bus and railroad lines from using terminals where facilities were segregated. Similar efforts to defy the order were the rule in Mississippi and Louisiana, and in parts of Georgia and Alabama. Elsewhere, compliance was more general, either because terminals had already been desegregated, as in the case of South Carolina, or in obedience to the new order.

Last week a three-judge Federal court in Jackson, Miss., ruled unconstitutional the Mississippi laws requiring separate terminal waiting rooms. The court also granted the Justice Department an injunction requiring removal of the offending McComb signs. The suit was one of several brought by the Federal Government in efforts to enforce the I. C. C. ruling.

The decision was in line with numerous Supreme Court rulings that have held unconstitutional laws requiring segregation in public places. It was considered doubtful, however, that the McComb ruling obviated the need for individual suits in other communities where the ruling was being violated.

Riders Beaten In Bus Terminal

Five Negro Youths Dragged From McComb Station— Photographer Attacked

By United Press International

M'COMB, Miss., Nov. 29. — Five Negro so-called "Freedom Riders," three boys and two girls, were beaten Wednesday by a group of white men at the McComb bus terminal, recently ordered integrated by two Federal judges.

They were dragged from the terminal's white waiting room after sitting at the lunch counter. The violence occurred shortly after a free-lance television photographer was beaten. No arrests have been made.

About 40 white men were waiting when the riders, who arrived here earlier Wednesday from New Orleans, turned up at the terminal.

They took seats at the lunch counter over objections of Aubrey McGee, who operates the terminal cafe. They were immediately grabbed by the whites.

Doors Locked

The Negro youths attempted to integrate the terminal earlier in the day but found that both the white and Negro waiting rooms were locked.

Terminal officials said the doors were locked because of a gas leak inside. No policemen were on hand.

One member of the rider group, Jerome Smith, said the beatings lasted for 10 minutes. He said they were knocked down and kicked. One of them, Thomas Valentine, was thrown bodily from the terminal, said Smith.

Police Chief George Guy said he received reports of violence. He had not posted policemen at the station for fear of violating a Federal injunction against city officials enforcing segregation there.

A few minutes earlier, Johamn W. Rush, 19, Jackson free-lance photographer, who said he was making film for CBS, was chased and beaten by some of the whites.

FBI Agents Watch

Rush said he suffered bruises and scratches but wasn't seriously hurt. He said several FBI agents witnesed the incident.

Rush said he would confer with attorneys for CBS before pressing any charges. He praised policemen and said they offered ot give him an escort anywhere in the city.

He said several local newsmen and an NBC cameraman were at the terminal but they were unharmed.

The Negro youths attempted to integrate the terminal earlier in the day but found that both the white and Negro waiting rooms were locked.

Terminal officials said the doors were locked because of a gas leak inside. But whites, anticipating their return, gathered at the terminal.

Rush told United Press International that a muscular white man in the group offered to pose for him with the crowd.

Rush said he shot several pictures and the man, about 45, grabbed him by the collar and started swinging.

"I knew it was time to leave then and I ran down the street, turning occasionally to shoot pictures," the cameraman said.

"One young fellow who looked to be about 19 grabbed me, knocked me down and started beating me in the face," he said. He suffered cuts and bruises, but apparently was not seriously hurt.

In Jackson, Miss. Trials

'Freedom Riders,' Lawyers Hit All-White Jury Set-up

JACKSON, Miss.—Attorneys for "freedom riders" questioned a parade of witnesses in an attempt to prove that a Negro could not get a fair trial under Mississippi's predominantly white jury system.

Before selection of a jury could begin, defense attorney William A. Kunstler of New York asked that the 60-man group from which the jury would be chosen, be declared ineligible to hear the case because only two Negroes were in the group.

To back his charges that Negroes were allowed token jury duty here, Kunstler called eight white lawyers, 10 Negro voters and county officials and election commissioners.

THE LAWYERS stated that they had never seen a Negro serve on a trial jury in cases they handled, but said they frequently serve on grand juries.

Fourteen Negroes testified they had registered to vote — and thus were eligible for jury duty —for 12 to 40 years and had never been called for jury service.

Two other Negroes said they had been called on a venire for jury duty but had never sat in a case.

FOUR HINDS COUNTY supervisors testified it is their duty to prepare jury rolls. Each said names are selected purely at random from a list of qualified voters.

"Does race, creed or color play any part in drawing up this list?" each was asked. "No," they answered.

"Freedom Riders" To Base Appeals On 2 Law Points

By HERB HERBERS

JACKSON, Miss. — (UPI) — Attorneys for 187 convicted "freedom riders" scheduled for court appearances Monday will base their arguments for appeal on two points of law.

The first is a U. S. Supreme Court decision on a Richmond, Va. case closely paralleling the Jackson arrests; the second is a direct attack on the breach of the peace statutes under which almost 300 riders were arrested here since May 24.

The Richmond case was decided by the high court last winter. A Negro law student, Bruce Boynton, staged a sit-in at a white restaurant in a Richmond bus terminal. He refused police orders to move on and was arrested under a state breach of the peace law.

OVERTURNED CONVICTION

The Supreme Court of Virginia upheld the conviction on grounds the arrest constituted proper use of police authority. But on appeal the U. S. Supreme Court overturned the conviction holding that the breach of the peace law — which was sound in itself — was used to maintain segregation in interstate travel facilities.

All of the Jackson riders were arrested for breach of the peace after they refused police orders to move from segregated terminals.

There is a difference in the breach of the peace laws used in the two states. The New York attorneys who are representing the riders-William Kunstler of the American Civil Liberties Union and Carl Richler of the Congress of Racial Equality — say they will ask that Mississippi's laws be struck down as well as the city's use of them.

DELEGATED AUTHORITY

They will contend that the legislature delegated too much authority to the police and that it enacted the laws specifically to preserve segregation.

There are two laws involved, one for single arrests and another for group arrests. They were enacted in the spring of 1960 when sit-in demonstrations were rampant in other Southern states. They were carefully drawn by some of the best legal minds in the state Capitol and were enacted swiftly and overwhelmingly without debate.

"Freedom Rider" Appeals Dismissed

JACKSON, Miss.—(UPI)—A federal judge threw out five "freedom rider" appeal cases Saturday contending his court had no jurisdiction in the matter.

U. S. District Judge Harold Cox said the five riders—three whites and two Negroes—"hearalded their arrival in Jackson from other states for "provocative" purposes.

"Their status as interstate pasengers is extremely doubtful. Their destination was Jackson but their objective was trouble," he said.

Cox handed down the opinion in granting a state motion to return the cases to county court. He said it was an "inescapable conclusion" that the five rider cases had "no jurisdiction" in his court and that they were "improperly removed here."

New York attorney William Kuntsler, counselor for the riders, sought to have the cases removed from Hinds County court. He said a federal civil rights act allows such transfers to be made when persons are arrested on state laws designated to preserve segregation.

3 Freedom Riders in 'lynch' jail

(Special to the AFRO)

POPLARVILLE, Miss. — The Justice Department has alerted the FBI to keep a watchful eye on the infamous jail here where Mack Charles Parker was abducted and lynched two years ago.

In the jail now are three Freedom Riders: Misses Alice Thompson, 21, and Patricia Smith, 18, and Frank Nelson, 23, a white engineer from New York.

With three other riders, they were en route from Mobile, Ala. to New Orleans where the two young women live. They were checking to see if the Nov. 1 order of the Interstate Commerce Commission was being obeyed.

Before boarding the bus in Mobile, they received service in the terminal. In the group were Misses Doratha Smith, 18; Jean Thompson, 19, and Betty Daniels, 21, also of New Orleans.

• • •

IN HATTIESBURG, Miss., two of them entered the main cafeteria and seated themselves while the other three went into the restroom. Police ordered the two in the restaurant out and, when the other three came from the restroom, escorted all five to the bus - loading area.

Mr. Nelson was in the main waiting room. He joined them outside.

In Poplarville, Misses Thompson and Smith went into the main cafeteria, ordered soft drinks and were served. There was no incident until they got ready to leave. Then, police placed them under arrest.

Mr. Nelson got off the bus and he was arrested too. All were taken to the Poplarville jail. The others continued to New Orleans, 90 miles away, where they reported the matter.

Trial for the three who were jailed was set for Monday.

• • •

ON THE following Monday, the first of two Justice Department suits against Mississippi bus jimcrow will open in Greenville. A second will be held in Jackson the following day.

A three - judge federal court in Greenville will hear the Justice Department motions to invalidate Mississippi laws requiring jimcrow facilities for bus passengers.

Judge Elbert P. Tuttle, Atlanta, will be chief judge. With him will be Judges Richard T. Rives, Montgomery, Ala., and Claude Clayton, Tupelo, Miss.

One of the defendants is Mississippi Judge Arthur Clark who ordered the Greyhound Bus Terminal in Greenwood not to remove jimcrow signs although the ICC had ordered them removed.

Other defendants are all county and district attorneys the state attorney general and the State of Mississippi. The suit aims at halting efforts by any or all of them to keep segregation.

The second suit, in Jackson, is against the City of McComb. When the local bus and train stations took down the "white" and "colored" signs in accordance with the ICC order, the city put signs up outside on the sidewalk.

The Justice Department wants those sidewalk signs removed.

• • •

A BOYCOTT OF city buses in Jackson was discussed late Saturday after Jessie Divens, 12, was arrested for refusing to sit in the back of the bus.

The youngster is one of 102 who were expelled from Burgland School in McComb for protesting the expulsion of sitdown leaders.

Now living in Jackson and attending Christ Mission and Industrial College, she was en route from her home in Jackson to school by city bus. The driver told a white man to tell her to move from a front seat to a rear one. She refused.

She still refused when told to move by a policeman. The officer took her to jail. Later that day, she had a hearing before Juvenile Court Judge M. Carter.

He asked her, informally, if she would in the future move when told. She replied: "No, I would not move."

He set her trial for Friday after telling her that if she refused to obey Mississippi's jimcrow laws, she would be sent to reform school.

She was released in the custody of the Rev. E. R. Houghton. Reaction was immediate and active to the extent of a boycott being seriously considered.

ALTHOUGH Mississippi terminal managers trying to comply with the ICC met some resistance, it took Birmingham, Ala. to plumb the depth of idiocy.

For the fourth time, Ralph R. Sizemore was arrested for serving colored bus passengers. Also arrested were two waitresses in the cafeteria. On the first two arrests, Mr. Sizemore received $25 fines and 30 - day suspended jail sentences.

He is appealing the conviction. The local U.S. attorney, Macon Weaver, agreed not to file for an injunction against the arrest of bus station employees for complying with federal regulations.

Eugene (Bull) Conner, police commissioner, said however that he would stop arrests only if the bus station stopped serving colored persons — at least until the matter is finally determined in court.

• • •

ALSO IN Birmingham, Judge Wallace Gibson fined the Rev. Fred L. Shuttlesworth $500 and sentenced him to three months in jail on a charge of conspiracy to commit a breach of the peace. The minister has appealed.

The charge grew out of the Freedom Rides earlier this year when Alabamans bombed a bus, mobbed Freedom Riders and threatened to lock them up.

The Rev. Mr. Shuttlesworth known nationally as an integration leader, was instrumental in feeding and housing the young Freedom Riders while they were in Birmingham. He also relayed to them funds sent from the New York office of CORE.

He told the court that he was not a CORE member and had no part in planning the rides.

ANOTHER JUDGE, U.S. District Judge Seybourn H. Lynn, dismissed a $9 million damage suit filed against the Greyhound Bus Company by the Rev. Mr. Shuttlesworth.

The case grew out of the arrest of the minister's three children when they refused to move to the back of the bus while traveling from Chattanooga, Tenn.

The arrests were made in Gadsden, Ala.

Gadsden Police Commissioner Mark Mashburn said that seating had nothing to do with the arrests but that the children "were making a deliberate and intentional effort to create a situation that would evoke a breach of the peace and cause a serious distrubance."

IN SELMA, ALA., Ralph T. Fertig, 31 - year - old white Chicagoan, pleaded guilty to a Freedom Ride incident and paid a $200 fine and court costs.

Sheriff Jim Clark arrested Mr. Fertig after a white woman accused him of trying to sit on her lap. The woman was described as a cripple who was occupying two seats on the bus.

IN SHREVEPORT, La., a surprised judge took under advisement the case of six youngsters arrested and charged with vagrancy. The six students were taken to jail as they left a church meeting where the successful boycott of the state fair that day was discussed.

Their attorney, Jessie Stone, attacked the Constitutionality of the state statute which labels anyone a vagrant who is not employed.

He surprised acting Judge Eugene Middleton by citing the 13th Amendment against involuntary servitude.

Mr. Stone says he is prepared to go all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court if necessary.

The NAACP Legal Defense and Education Fund has taken over the reins of defense for the 316 Freedom Riders jailed in Jackson, Miss. Already supporting the defense were CORE and the Student Non - Violent Coordinating Committee.

Freedom Rider relates jail experiences

By STEVE W. DUNCAN
NEWARK

D-Day for Newell Weber of East Orange was June 6, 1961.

That was the day the photographer and former engineer and six fellow Freedom Riders arrived at the Jackson, Miss., Trailways bus terminal from New Orleans.

Like Allied troops who landed on the beaches of France 17 years ago on that date, the mission of this band was to strike a blow for freedom.

SHORTLY AFTER the non - violent assault on the bastion of segregation, the seven were convicted by Judge James L. Spencer of breach of the peace, fined $200 each and given four-month prison terms, two months of which were suspended.

Mr. Weber, 52, of 279 4th Ave., East Orange, and Terry Sullivan of Chicago chose not to dignify Mississippi justice by posting bail or paying fines. They served their prison terms and worked out their fines at the rate of three dollars per day.

On their release from prison on Oct. 23 this pair became the first Freedom Riders to complete their sentences in a Mississippi prison.

Mr. Weber, a soft - spoken greying man, said ten Freedom Riders are presently in the Hines County Jail — six whites and four colored persons. Among them is a New Jerseyan, Robert Rogers, an English instructor at Douglass College in New Brunswick.

He noted that the lone white woman among the three female Freedom Riders is expected to serve out her full term and will be eligible for release by Christmas.

MR. WEBER spent nine days in the Hines County Jail and 130 days on the Parchman Prison Farm.

"In the State Penitentiary we spent most of the time in the maximum security unit," said Mr. Weber. "It was claimed that it was for our protection. Actually it was an attempt at harassment."

Mr. Weber said he never lost confidence during the twenty weeks of confinement. "I was pretty well conditioned for this sort of thing."

He admitted, however, that "of course we all missed books."

* * *

FREEDOM RIDERS were segregated by Mississippi authorities by sex and color, Mr. Weber said.

He said the "mild harassments" of Freedom Riders included such things as the occasional removal of mattresses, towels and sheets, openly hostile treatment by white guards and restrictions on the number of letters they were allowed to write or receive.

Once, he said, 44 colored Freedom Riders were placed in two 6-by-6 solitary confinement cells for a period as punishment for singing. Some, he stated, became hysterical and others lost consciousness.

"It was a demoralizing experience," Mr. Weber noted.

On July 11 Mr. Weber said he and other white prisoners were transferred to First Offenders Camp No. 11 where they remained till Aug. 18.

He described conditions there as better than in the previous confine. For instance, he said, they were permitted to shower daily instead of once a week.

THE NEW JERSEY Freedom Rider described Parchman as a huge 21,600-acre farm whose major crops are cotton, corn sorghum, peaches and vegetables. They also raise meat and dairy cattle, hogs and poultry.

The prisoners, according to Mr. Weber, received meat —mostly pork—on an average of three days per week. "Once — on the 4th of July —we received chicken."

Freedom Riders also received daily quantities of milk, which was denied regular prisoners.

Mr. Weber noted a dietary deficiency in most of the meals, and especially the lack of vitamin C. During the last two months in prison, he said, the inmates received no fruit at all.

He stated that while the colored trustys in the prison showed no open hostility toward the Freedom Riders, the white guards were another matter. The guards "let us know they hated our guts," he said.

"The treatment was at no time excessively abusive," said Mr. Weber. "The mild harassment was continuous."

Mr. Weber said that on his release from prison he received a bundle of 40 letters sent to him and some books. He suspects that while some of the letters addressed to him were returned to the senders others were destroyed.

* * *

IN ASSESSING the Freedom Rider movement, Mr. Weber said he felt the Mother's Day incident in Birmingham in which a number of riders were brutally beaten "did arouse the American public as few incidents have in the struggle for civil rights."

BUS MIX SUITS HEARINGS SET

At Greenville Nov. 20, Jackson Nov. 21

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Two justice department suits against Mississippi segregation will go before three-judge federal courts this month.

Judge Elbert P. Tuttle of Atlanta, Ga., chief judge of the US fifth circuit court of appeals at New Orleans, set one hearing for Greenville Nov. 20, and the other for Jackson Nov. 21.

STATE LAWS WINS

The Greenville suit asks the federal court to knock out state laws requiring segregated facilities for intrastate passengers, to stop Mississippi officials from enforcing segregation, to ban segregation signs at transportation terminals, and to forbid racial discrimination against interstate passengers.

Tuttle named himself, appellante Judge Richard T. Rives of Montgomery, Ala., and district Judge Claude Clayton of Tupelo, in whose district the suit was filed, to hear the case.

Named as defendants were circuit Judge Arthur Clark of Indianola, all county attorneys and district attorneys, the state attorney general and the state of Mississippi.

Judge Clark issued an order Oct. 27 in his state court forbidding the Greyhound bus terminal in Greenwood to remove segregation signs in compliance with an interstate commerce commission ban on terminal segregation.

Appointed to hear the Jackson case were Tuttle, Rives and district Judge Sidney Mize of Gulfport, in whose district that case was filed.

SIDEWALK SIGNS

The Jackson suit asks an order outlawing sidewalk segregation signs placed by the city of McComb near the Greyhound bus and Illinois Central railroad terminals. The petition, which named McComb Mayor C. H. Douglas and Police Chief George Guy as defendants charged the signs interfere with the carriers.

The petition also asked the court to forbid any encouragement of segregation.

In some Mississippi cities, when the ICC ordered an end to segregated terminal facilities, policemen were stationed to direct passengers to separate waiting rooms.

Some other cities installed their own segregation signs when the bus and train stations removed theirs.

All-White Jury Setup Charged In Jackson Freedom Ride Case

P, A8 The Washington Post. Wed. 8-23-61

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 22 (UPI)—Attorneys for a young Negro Freedom Rider called a parade of witnesses today in an attempt to show he could not receive a fair trial under Mississippi's predominantly white jury system.

Henry J. Thomas, 19, of St. Augustine, Fla., is the first of about 300 riders convicted in Police Court for breach of the peace to go on trial in appeal proceedings in Hinds County Court.

Before selection of a jury could get under way, defense attorney William A. Kunstler of New York asked that the 60-man venire, from which the jury would be selected, be declared ineligible to hear the case because only two of its members are Negroes.

To support his charges that Negroes are allowed only token jury duty here, Kunstler called eight white lawyers, 10 Negro voters and County officials and election commissioners.

The lawyers testified that they had never seen a Negro serve on a trial jury in cases they handled, but said they frequently serve on grand juries and are called on venires from which trial juries are chosen.

Fourteen Negroes testified they had been registered to vote—and were thus eligible for jury duty—for 12 to 40 years and had never been called to jury service. One was S. W. Miller, former State Republican chairman.

Two other Negroes said they had been called on a venire for jury duty but had never sat in a case.

Four Hinds County Supervisors—L. J. Beasley, Tom Virden, Shelby Hubbard and Dan Ferguson—testified it is their duty to prepare jury rolls. Each said names are selected purely at random from the list of qualified voters.

"Does race, creed or color play any part in drawing up this list?" each was asked under cross examination. "No," they replied.

Under cross-examination Julian P. Alexander, district attorney from 1950 to 1956, testified there was a mutual agreement by attorneys for both defense and State in cases he tried that Negroes would be excluded without either side losing its quota of challenges.

Forrest Jackson, long-time defense attorney, added that when the defendant was a Negro it still was the practice to dismiss prospective Negro jurors.

MOTION KILLED IN RIDER TRIAL

Judge Overrules Request for New Jury

Wed. 8-23-61

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—Judge Russel Moore Tuesday overruled a motion to throw out the jury list in the first "freedom rider" trial in county court, saying the defense failed to prove discrimination in selecting jurors.

Moore said several attorneys testified Negroes were called to serve on petit juries, but that most of them were excused, challenged or dismissed regardless of the attorneys.

"Some of the members of the colored race," the judge said, "testified they had not been called to serve on a jury. The court does not find this to be uncommon among the Caucasian race."

Three supervisors said the selection was made without regard to creed or color."

Defense attorney William Kunstler and Carl Rachlin sought to quash the venire on grounds it excluded Negroes systematically.

Kunstler, of New York, called a series of Negro voters and white attorneys to the stand to back his claim that jury lists included no Negroes or so few they could by systematically struck from the jury by lawyers.

The legal maneuvering preliminary to the trial of rider Henry Thomas, 19-year-old St. Augustine, Fla., Negro, occupied the first day of proceedings in Judge Russel Moore's Hinds county court. Moore dismissed prospective jurors until Wednesday.

Hinds county supervisor L. J Beasley testified he picked one jury roll from his district each April containing at least 300 names chosen at random alphabetically and submitted to the circuit clerk for inclusion in the new jury list with those from other districts.

He said the names were picked without regard to race and there was no stipulation of race on his roll.

The prospective jury list included 51 whites and two Negroes. Kunstler noted that Hinds county had 31,548 whites and 16,139 Negro males of voting age. Only male voters are eligible for jury duty in Mississippi.

The Thomas trial is the first of 190 appeals trials scheduled in Moore's court. All were arrested on breach of peace charges following failure to move as ordered by officers during attempts to desegregate transportation facilities.

All were convicted by a Jackson city court judge and appealed their cases to county court, where such cases are heard by juries.

Negro witnesses who testified they have never been called for jury duty included Dr. A. H. McCoy, 60-year-old dentist registered 30 years; the Rev. R. L. T. Smith, 57-year-old minister registered 36 years; and M. J. Lyells, 57-year-old high school teacher registered 14 years.

Among the lawyers called and asked whether they knew of Negroes who had served on trial juries in criminal cases were former Dist. Atty. Julian Alexander, who testified both sides in a case usually got together and agreed to reject Negroes without being charged with a challenge.

In cases such as the Thamas trial, each side may reject six prospective jurors without showing reason for the rejection.

Dist. Atty. Bill Waller and other attorneys testified they knew of no criminal trials with Negroes on the jury.

The prosecution had objected to Kunstler's questions on grounds court records would show whether Negroes were used, and the test was whether Negroes had been included on the list of prospective jurors rather than whether they had served.

Moore first sustained the objection, but later reversed himself.

Kunstler withdrew his motion for a change in trial site, telling the court he made the withdrawal because "I'm afraid they might move it to a segregation stronghold like Smith county."

The American Civil Liberties Union lawyer was unsuccessful in getting a court ruling to declare Jackson papers and news media in contempt of court for publishing editorials and articles unfavorable to the riders. As an alternative, Kunstler had asked an order to prohibit the publication of anything but facts.

Prosecutor Jack Travis said Jackson newspapers were well known for their factual reporting and the motives would violate freedom of the press.

10 Negroes Sentenced in Jackson

The Washington Post

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 21 (AP)—City Judge James Spencer today convicted 10 Negroes on breach of peace charges after sit-in incidents at the city zoo.

Spencer gave the 10 $200 fines and 4-month jail terms. Jack Young, Negro attorney for the group, said the cases would be appealed to Hinds County Court.

Police Capt. R. L. Ray, the only witness, testified all 10 had refused to move on as ordered by officers and he felt their presence "under the circumstances," would create a breach of the peace.

Ray said they were arrested not because they were Negroes, but because "they went out to cause trouble."

In handing down his decision, Spencer told the defendants that whites and Negroes had used zoo facilities for years without incident.

"Here in the midst of tension created we suddenly find several groups going to this facility and engaging in the acts about which the officers testified."

Seven of those convicted were students.

Meanwhile, two Roman Catholic priests planned to test segregation rules at transportation facilities in Jackson.

They are the first Roman Catholic clergy to join in Freedom Ride activities sponsored by the Congress of Racial Equality.

The two are the Rev. Richard Wagner, 29, chaplain at Xavier University in New Orleans and a teacher at St Augustine's high school there and the Rev. Philip Berrigan 37, also a St. Augustine's teacher.

About 50 other clergymen either Jewish or Protestant have taken part in Freedom Ride demonstrations. About 20 of them have gone to jail for it, among approximately 375 persons arrested in such cases this year.

RIDER CASE DRAGS INTO THIRD DAY

Defense Contends Cordon Prevented Breach Of Peace

By PAT FLYNN
Daily News Staff Writer

Mississippi's first "freedom rider" jury trial moved into its third day this morning after judge Russel Moore adjourned the second day's proceedings at 10:55 last night.

The unusual night session was carried on several hours after the defense had asked for an adjournment, but was finally halted after it became obvious that the testimony of the state was going to run past midnight.

The three-day trial of Henry J. Thomas, 19-year-old Negro field secretary for CORE, has set the crowded Hinds County Court docket behind five cases from its original schedule of two "rider" cases per day. The defense is expected to ask for a continuance of the remaining trials after the first case is completed.

The first witness was brought to the stand yesterday afternoon, after the first day of the case had been entirely taken up with a motion by the defense to quash the venire on the grounds that Negroes were "systematically excluded" from the jury and the morning session yesterday concerned solely with selecting that jury.

State prosecutor Jack Travis produced a dozen witnesses yesterday who testified to conditions on or before May 24, when Thomas was arrested on a breach of the peace charge at the Trailways bus station.

ALABAMIANS TESTIFY

Four of the witnesses were Alabama law officials who testified to the violence that accompanied the "riders" through their state. Also testifying yesterday afternoon and last night were Jackson police Captain Ralph Hargrove, State Highway Patrol investigator James E. Fowler, Chamber of Commerce president Robert Hearin, and news reporters Wallace Dabbs, Ed McHale and W. C. Shoemaker.

The state is expected to introduce four more witnesses this morning before resting its case.

In his opening statement to the jury Travis said the state would prove that the defendant came to Mississippi "for one purpose—to cause trouble, to create violence." He said the "most elaborate precautions were taken by the state to ensure peace," including the arrest of the defendant and his companions. He also said Jackson police had "no alternative" but to arrest the freedom riders.

The opening statement for the defense, made by Carl Rachlin, cheif counsel for CORE, said Travis was "inaccurate in his assumptions." He contended the situation the day of Thomas' arrest was completely in the control of the police at all times and there was no danger of a race riot ensuing. He said the arrests were planned beforehand.

"The only question you have to decide," he advised the jury, "is whether this defendant could possibly, under the circumstances, have committed a breach of the peace."

The state's first witness, Corp. Ell Cowling of the Alabama Highway Patrol, testified that he had been with the defendant and his fellow freedom riders when they were aboard the Greyhound bus which was burned at Anniston, Ala. May 14.

He said he had gone to Atlanta May 12 on assignment to escort the freedom riders through Alabama. He was not identified to them at that time, he said.

As the bus left Anniston, he said, two people lay in front of the bus and had to be removed by police.

"Were they arrested?" asked the defense.

Cowling replied, "They were not."

"Is that legal?" asked defense attorney William Kunstler.

"I don't know the city statutes of Anniston," retorted Cowling. "I know I wouldn't lie down in front of a Greyhound bus."

BUS STOPPED

Cowling further testified that the bus stopped about four miles outside Anniston because the tires had "gone flat" and the crowd which had followed the bus outside town grew unruly.

He said a smoke bomb was thrown inside the bus, the bus caught fire and all the occupants were taken to the hospital at Anniston for treatment. The FBI entered the case here, he said.

On cross-examination Cowling admitted he had not seen the defendant or any of the freedom riders do anything to provoke the riot.

Assistant police chief W. M. Stanle yof Montgomery testified that his city was under martial law by order of Gov. John Patterson on the day the defendant left Montgomery headed for Jackson. He, too, admitted the freedom riders had done nothing to provoke the riot which occured at the Montgomery bus station when they arrived, but said riot was definitely occasioned by their presence.

Two witnesses expected to be put on the stand by the state this morning were news reporter Bill Coppenbarger and Jackson police captain John L. Ray.

Jurors for the case include Harry Geotis, employee of Dixie Highway Express; T. L. McFarland, service supervisor for Mississippi Valley Gas Company; Golden E. Branch, retired lieutenant colonel with the U. S. Air Force; Chester Null, post office employee; H. P. Burt, draftsman for Michael Baker, Inc.; Samuel Bell, a freight company executive; Paul Sebren, self-employed contractor; Albert Armstrong, molder operator for Knox Glass Co.; D. L. Weeks, department manager for Sears, Roebuck and Co.; J. B. Thompson, Jr., partner in Jackson Paper Co.; Charles A. Jackson, partner in the firm Quick Roof, Inc.; and John L. Bell, clerk in the laboratory division of the State Highway Department.

After using all six of its preemptory challenges, the defense tried to have Jackson excused by the court since Al Binder, attorney for the state, had been employed to draw up partnership papers when Jackson joined Quick Roof last February. Judge Russel Moore ruled that sufficient evidence of a relationship between Jackson and Binder had not been established.

The defense then moved that Bell be removed for cause as a state employee since state officials would be testifying. Moore overruled the motion.

Kuntsler asked it be written into the record that the jury was composed entirely of white men.

Neither of the two Negro veniremen were called up.

One man was excused by the court when he answered a question by state attorney Jack Travis with the statement that he would accept the testimony of a police officer over that of a private citizen if the two testimonies conflicted.

Defense attorney Carl Rachlin asked that all the jury selection proceedings be included in the record due to the "nature of the case and the importance it has obviously assumed." Judge Russel Moore granted the request, although he stated he had no precedence for such a request being granted.

Venire Attack By Rider Fails

Negro Exclusion Claim Rejected

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 22 (UPI)—The first of several legal moves on behalf of "freedom riders" going on trial here was rejected today when a judge ruled that Negroes have not been systematically excluded from juries in Hinds County.

Attorneys for Negro Henry J. Thomas called 29 witnesses before County Judge Russell Moore in an attempt to show he could not receive a fair trial under Mississippi's predominantly white jury system.

Defense Atty. William A. Kunstler of New York asked that the 60-man venire, from which the jury which will hear Thomas' case is to be selected, be declared ineligible to sit in the trial because only two of its members are Negroes.

Moore ended the six-hour hearing on Kunstler's motion by declaring that the defense had "failed to show by any substantial evidence that there has been any systematic exclusion or discrimination in the selection of jurors."

Selection Begins Today

Selection of the jury to hear the breach of the peace case against Thomas, a 19-year-old rider from Florida, will begin at 8:30 a.m. tomorrow. The process might be as long as the hearing on the motion to quash the venire, since Kunstler has indicated he will be reluctant to have staunch segregationists hearing the case.

Trying to prove his charge that Negroes are allowed only token jury duty here, Kunstler called eight local white attorneys, 16 Negro voters, four elected county officials and a deputy circuit clerk.

The lawyers testified that they had never seen a Negro serve on a trial jury in cases they handled, though Negroes often served on grand juries and were called on venires from which trial juries are chosen.

Fourteen Negroes testified that they had been registered to vote—and thus eligible for jury duty—for 12 to 40 years and had never been called to jury service. One was S. W. Miller, former state Republican chairman when the "Black and Tan" faction enjoyed national recognition. Two other Negroes said they had been called on a venire for jury duty but never had sat in a case.

Statements Submitted

In an effort to reduce the effectiveness of the Negroes' testimony, the state obtained statements from 12 long-time white voters who have been subpenaed to testify later. The statements, introduced as evidence, said they never had been called for jury service.

Four county supervisors, the elected officials who are in charge of the county government, testified "race, creed or color" had nothing to do with their compiling of prospective jurors.

They testified they chose names at random from lists of voters. They said the lists have no designation of race.

Deputy Circuit Clerk Ben Lowry testified that the county kept records of voters listing their race, but he said the supervisors chose prospective jurors from a list not mentioning race.

Judge Moore said the testimony by the lawyers indicated that Negroes had been dismissed or excused from jury service by attorneys rather than by county officials. He called attention to one of the lawyers' testimony which said a Chicago Negro lawyer handling the Robert Lee Goldsby murder case had opposed the presence of a Negro on Goldsby's jury.

Regarding the Negroes' testimony that they never had performed jury service, Moore said, "The court does not find this to be an uncommon thing among members of the Caucasian race."

Thomas, dressed in an ivy league corduroy suit and vest, is the first of 300 riders convicted in police court for breach of the peace to go on trial in appeal proceedings in Hinds County Court.

City Drops Court Move To Ban 'Riders' Here

8-1 Tues. 8-15-61

Montgomery, Ala.

A move to halt "Freedom Rides" into Alabama has been dropped in the local federal court.

The action was dismissed at the request of Calvin Whitesell, attorney for city officials and police during a hearing which saw them and Ku Klux Klan leaders enjoined from attacking integrated riders or allowing mob violence against them.

It was Whitesell who offered the motion during the hearing to also enjoin the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) and other integrationist groups and individuals engaged in challenging bus and bus station segregation.

But Whitesell, in asking the injunction request be dropped, said that such action is now no longer needed.

He observed that, "the temporary restraining order issued by this court on June 2, 1961, curbed for 10 days the activities of these parties, thus preventing further violence. . ."

Since then, he continued, U. S. Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy has urged a "cooling-off" period in the bus segregation troubles.

Whitesell further asserted that "public disapproval of the activities of these parties (CORE, et al.) has been widespread throughout the United States."

"All these factors," he said, "have caused these concentrated activities to dwindle to the point that extraordinary relief such as a preliminary injunction in not needed at this time."

U. S. District Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. granted Whitesell's motion in an order issued Monday.

Whitesell had been appointed a "friend of the court" by Johnson to present the case against CORE after U. S. Justice Department attorneys asked to be relieved of the responsibility.

The federal judge had previously granted Whitesell's motion for a temporary restraining order against the "Freedom Ride" sponsors. This remained in effect for 10 days, then expired.

The preliminary injunction was sought at the same time. At a hearing last month, Johnson heard arguments on whether the injunction should be granted, then instructed both sides to submit briefs by Aug. 22.

Two More Riders Withdraw Appeals

Rather Return To Jail Than Pay Fines

Tues. 8-31-61

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 30. — (UPI)—Two more Negro self-styled "Freedom Riders" withdrew their appeals from Hinds County Court Wednesday and chose to return to jail rather than pay their fines.

Doris J. Castle, 18, and Jerome M. Smith, 22, both of New Orleans, were the third and fourth riders to withdraw their appeals. They were fined $200 each for breach of the peace last May 26 and 27 respectively.

An official of the Congress of Racial Equality (C.O.R.E.) in New York said a "significant number" of riders will drop their appeals and return to jail to serve out their fines. However, he said he would not "exactly call it a pattern."

Miss Castle and Smith each served one day in jail following their convictions and were released under $500 appeal bonds. Each must serve 91 1-3 days in jail.

Two other riders withdrew their appeals Monday. The first two to come up for appeal, however, stood trial in county court and were convicted by juries.

About 186 riders are out on appeal bond and their cases are scheduled for trial during the next several months.

Freedom Riders Refused Service In Missouri

The Call 8-31-61

WARRENTON, Mo. — (UPI) — A group of "Freedom Riders" tested a report of racial segrega- at the bus terminal here Saturday, Aug. 5, and were refused service at the terminal dining room.

The team, made up of two observers and three participants, drove to Warrenton to purchase bus tickets to East St. Louis. They entered the dining room and asked for service. Three hours later they had not been served.

Charles R. Oldham, national chairman of the Committee on Racial Equality (CORE) said the group plans to send a larger team to Warrenton next week-end.

He identified the participants as Miss Eleanor McCraty, 21, a student at Washington university in St. Louis; Robert Hollis, 35, a construction worker in St. Louis; and Herman Thompson, 31, a teacher in the St. Louis city school system.

The observers were Mrs. Francis Weinhold, 33, St. Louis, a white woman, and Miss Vera Williams, 27, a Negro.

Freedom Riders Ask For Protection During Trial

The Call 8-31-61

NEW YORK. — (UPI) — The Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) Saturday asked U. S. Attorney General Robert Kennedy and President Kennedy to provide U. S. marshals for protection August 14, when at least 186 so-called "Freedom Riders" will be in Jackson, Miss., to appeal their breach of peace convictions.

Tues. 8-31-61

The appeal was made in telegrams sent by James Farmer, national director of CORE.

Farmer said that an attorney for CORE had sought to have the appeals spaced out through "an orderly and peaceful series of trials" but Jackson Prosecuting Attorney Jack Travis turned this down.

". . . Travis has refused such a procedure and has ordered all defendants to be present though it will be physically impossible to try them all then, or even in the next few months," Farmer said in his telegram.

Kansas City, Mo.

Farmer said that CORE representatives in Jackson would "make every effort to see that our conduct is completely non-violent," but that "we cannot guarantee the conduct of hoodlum elements."

The CORE leader said there had been a total of 305 arrests, about half white and half Negro, of persons testing Jackson's compliance with desegregation laws.

The 186 who plan to appeal, however, are those who are out of jail already. Those in jail, he said, must post bond before they can appeal their arrests. Some of those still in jail may have been able to post bond and will join the others by Aug. 14, he said.

Farmer is one of those who will appeal, having served a 40-day sentence for breach of peace.

He said the Freedom Riders who will appeal their convictions will come to Jackson on Aug. 13 by bus from New Orleans, Nashville and Atlanta.

The CORE director said the Freedom Riders planned to arrive a day early because of a mass rally, at which he will be main speaker, will be held the night of Aug. 13 in Jackson.

A major problem facing the Freedom Riders, outside of the threat of possible violence against them, is securing places to stay during the period they will be in Jackson, since hotels there are segregated, he said.

188 Mixers Plead Innocent In Appeal Parade At Jackson

Montgomery Advertiser 8-31-61

Tues. 8-15-61

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Convicted "Freedom Riders" filed by twos before Hinds County Judge Russell Moore Monday and pleaded innocent to breach of peace charges, setting the stage for a long series of appeals trials.

Attorneys went through all the formalities on the first case, then streamlined procedures for the rest of the 188 "Riders" who almost filled the circuit court room where proceedings were held.

City Prosecutor Jack Travis read the indictment against Henry Thomas of St. Augustine, Fla., and the 19-year-old Howard University Negro student made his formal plea of "not guilty."

The affidavit of Police Capt. J. L. Ray against Thomas charged him with failing to move along in the Trailways Bus Terminal here as ordered by officers. Thomas was among the first "Riders" who arrived May 24.

Montgomery, Ala.

CASE SET JAN. 17

Judge Moore set Thomas' trial for 9 a.m. Aug. 22. The last of the trials was set for Jan. 17. All but nine of the 197 names called answered.

Under procedure accepted by both sides, two trials will be held daily five days each week until all cases are finished. The first date originally was set for Aug. 21, but it was delayed one day at the request of Carl Rachlin of New York, general counsel for the ride-sponsoring Congress of Racial Equality.

It took an hour to call 108 names and all but six defendants answered the call. Travis skipped reading the affidavit and the plea of innocent was entered automatically for the defendants who followed Thomas.

Only once was the routine broken during the first hour, when Rabbi Allan Levine of Bradford, Pa., asked to have his trial date changed from a Friday. It was moved to a Monday.

There were no demonstrations or incidents. Police kept a two-block area around the courthouse cleared of onlookers and Judge Moore banned demonstrations, smoking and loud talking in his courtroom.

The "Riders", mostly housed at Tougaloo Southern Christian (Negro) College just north of Jackson, arrived by special buses at the county courthouse just before the procedings began. They filed into the building and up the stairs to the courtroom on the second floor in a matter-of-fact manner.

Under the rules of Moore's court, all 197 "Riders" who had posted $500 appeal bonds were required to appear personally or forfeit their bonds.

Hinds Seeking Help To Finance 'Riders'

By BOB PITTMAN
Daily News Staff Writer

Hinds County will ask the Legislature in January to share the "freedom rider" financial burden.

Sheriff Bob Gilfoy has told Gov. Ross Barnett the county, hard hit by invasion of almost 300 "freedom riders," faces serious financial problems unless the state offers assistance.

The sheriff has suggested that the Legislature set up a $100,000 fund to help pay "freedom rider" costs.

Gov. Barnett said yesterday he will suport such legislation.

Gilfoy declined to estimate the "freedom rider" cost to the country but others have predicted the expense will reach a half million dollars.

The board of supervisors has estimated that county court trials alone will total more than $100,000.

The county court is hearing appeals of breach of peace convictions handed down in city court.

Expenses to the county include jury trials, witness fees and other court costs, housing, food, numerous trips to the Parchman State Penitentiary and other items.

The sheriff told Gov. Barnett the board of supervisors would submit itemized statements before drawing money from any fund set up by the Legislature.

The governor said the matter will not be presented to a special session planned for October but will be brought up in January.

The October session, he reemphasized, will be limited to measures clearing the way for a $125 million Standard Oil of Kentucky refinery in Jackson County.

Gilfoy pointed out that county assessment rolls have been established and Hinds County is unable to raise additional funds.

If the supervisors believe the fund will be appropriated by lawmakers, he said, they may borrow money in advance of the January session.

Gilfoy's report of the county's financial condition went to the governor in a letter.

Earlier this summer Hinds county Rep. Russell Davis recommended that the Legislature assist the county.

In a three-day special session last week Rep. B. S. Waddell of Copiah County told members of the House he believes the state should share the "freedom rider" cost with Hinds County.

Meanwhile, the board of supervisors today approved a doubling of the county court budget for fiscal 1961-62 to ease the court's burden.

The court's fiscal year begin September 1. The county court budget was increased from $50,000 to $100,000 for the year.

Money Is Needed For Rider Trials

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 30. — (UPI)—Hinds County faces serious financial problems because of the self-styled "freedom riders" unless the state offers some aid, Sheriff Bob Gilfoy said Wednesday.

Sheriff Gilfoy proposed the Legislature set up a $100,000 fund to absorb some of the cost of trying and housing the riders in county jail.

Gov. Ross Barnett said he would go along with such legislation.

Officials have estimated the riders' expense will reach $500,000 and that their trials alone will cost $100,000.

Freedom Rider Loses In First Appeal Trial

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 25 (AP).—A 12-man, all-white jury yesterday convicted Henry Thomas, 19, of St. Augustine, Fla., on a breach of peace charge in the first appeal trial of a convicted "Freedom Rider."

The jury deliberated 45 minutes.

Mr. Thomas, a Negro and student at Howard University in Washington, had appealed his earlier conviction in city court.

"Turn him loose . . . and blood will flow and there will be violence," said Hinds County Prosecutor Jack Travis in his final argument.

Defense Counsel William Kunstler countered: "What Travis is telling you is that if any person, including yourselves, fails to move on, regardless of whether he has committed an offense, blood will flow in the street."

Mr. Kunstler, the American Civil Liberties Union attorney from New York, who plans to defend all 190 integrationist riders who are appealing their convictions, said he would appeal the Thomas case—all the way to the United States Supreme Court if necessary.

Mr. Thomas was given a $200 fine and a four-month jail term by County Judge Russel Moore. The penalty was stiffer than the original city court sentence of $200 and a 60-day suspended jail term.

The teen-ager came to Jackson last May 24 as one of the first of nearly 300 Freedom Riders to attempt to desegregate bus, train and airline terminal facilities.

Today, Judge Moore will begin the appeal trial of Julia Aaron, a 19-year-old New Orleans Negro, who was also arrested on the first day.

Freedom Ride Rioter To Go Back For Trial

ATLANTA. — (ANP) — Gov. S. Ernest Vandiver decided last week to turn over to Alabama authorities, a Rome Ga., man charged with intent to murder during the Birmingham "Freedom Ride" riot.

The governor said he could find "no reasonable basis" for denying Alabama's request for custody of Herschel W. Acker, a Rome pulpwood plant worker.

Birmingham News photographer, Bud Gordon, a witness at Acker's extradition hearing identified the Rome man as one of a group beating a photographer at the Trailways bus terminal in Birmingham last May 14.

Four law enforcement officers at the hearing all testified they had heard Acker admit at the Rome police station that he had been in Birmingham on the day of the riot.

At the hearing Thursday, Acker, through his attorney, denied that he had been in Birmingham on May 14.

The indictment charges Acker with assault on a Negro man who was not taking part in the freedom rides but was merely a bystander at the station.

Freedom Riders Map Miss. 'Homecoming'

JACKSON, Miss. — Monday will be "homecoming day" for more than 175 Freedom Riders who were arrested then released on bond for testing segregated waiting room facilities in bus, railway and airport terminals in this city. Since the Freedom Rides began on May 24, approximately 300 persons have been arrested. Of this number, 294 have been convicted and given $200 fines and jail terms.

Approximately 175 of the convicted riders have appealed and have gained their freedom by posting $500 appeal bonds. However, under Mississippi law, persons who appeal must appear in court the first day of the new term or automatically forfeit their bonds. Monday, Aug. 14, is the first day of the next term.

BULLETIN

NEW YORK -- CORE National Director James Farmer has asked Attorney General Robert Kennedy for federal marshals to protect hundreds of Freedom Riders, attorneys and world press in Jackson, Miss., for the trial of 186 Freedom Riders beginning next Monday.

BREAK BARRIERS -- Two Freedom Riders who defied segregation barriers and were served in the bus depot in Jackson, Miss., last week, and in both the white and Negro lunchrooms in the New Orleans Union Passenger Terminal Station on Monday, are shown following a picketing stint on Canal street. Earl C. Bohannon, Jr., 21, is from Chicago; Mrs. Norma Wagner, a 33-year-old blind white woman, is from Rochester, New York. # Riders join vote drive; one jailed

By FRANK HUNT
AFRO Staff Correspondent

JACKSON, Miss. — About 15 percent of the Freedom Riders who left here following their arraignments Monday did not return to their original points of departure but headed for other hot spots in the South.

Twelve riders got off the chartered bus in Nashville to join the picketing now going on there and nine others headed for Monroe County, N.C. to participate in a voter registration drive.

Several stayed in Jackson to work with the local movement, and yet another group went to Pike County, Miss., to lead a voter registration drive.

IN CONNECTION with the Pike County movement, a student non-violent leader, who took four people to register to vote in Amit County, was arrested on his return trip on a charge of "interfering with the duties of a police officer."

Robert Moses, field secretary for the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee, which is sponsoring the Pike County drive, indicated he would stay in jail rather than pay a fine.

The arrest on Wednesday was the first since the project got under way in mid-July.

A spokesman for the group also reported that a man was shot at when he left the Voters Registration Office last week. Police have been unable to find the sniper.

ACCORDING TO Marion Barry Jr., also a field secretary for the committee, the group's goal is to get some 3,000 voters registered by next June.

"There are only a few hundred voters on the books in the county now, while the potential vote is easily two or three thousand," Barry said.

The project is being undertaken in three stages.

The first phase is the setting up of classes to teach potential voters how to pass the poll examination in all Mississippi counties.

The organization has copies of the registration exam and the students are drilled thoroughly in exactly how the examination will be given.

The second phase is taking the newly-educated citizen to register. If he fails the exam, he is drilled again, and repeats the examination until he passes.

• • •

ABOUT THREE out of the four of the prospects tutored so far have passed the exam, Barry reported. The project has been underway since mid-July.

The third phase involves recruiting teachers to instruct more voters.

The Freedom Riders reunion here at the command of Mississippi authorities, was the sounding board needed for that phase.

Barry said the SNCC would also be on the lookout for discriminatory practices in registration.

"Federal registration agents have been informed as to our program and they are standing by for such reports," he said.

Riders' lawyers set for trial

By FRANK HUNT
AFRO Staff Correspondent

JACKSON, Miss.—A flock of witnesses for both sides are expected to be summoned to appear at the first Freedom Riders appeal trial set Tuesday in Hinds County Court.

Lawyers for the Riders, William Kunstler and Jack Young, predict that the first two trials, given two days by the court, will probably last a week or more.

By Saturday the defense attorneys had summoned two dozen witnesses. They included Hinds County Board of Supervisors, the chancery clerk, 10 local lawyers as well as W. J. Simmons, head of the local Whites Citizens Council.

THE STATE'S witnesses include policemen, several newsmen, and chamber of commerce officials. They are expected to testify that the situation in Jackson was so tense that a breach of the peace would have resulted had the Riders not been arrested.

Set for trial Tuesday are the cases of Henry J. Thomas, a CORE field secretary from St. Augustine, Fla., and Judith Aaron from New Orleans.

Kunstler said his defense is based on the contention that the arrests were "attempts by the state to enforce its outright segregated statutes."

He said an initial move would be to squash the jury on the grounds that they are prejudiced against his integrationist clients.

• • •

HE SAID he plans to ask jury members direct questions designed to reveal their stand on the case. Simmons will be called upon to testify as to the purpose of the council to counter the anticipated contention that membership in the council does not necessarily indicate adverse feelings toward colored people.

There was early speculation that Mississippi Governor Ross Barnett may be called upon by the defense to testify as to the laws of the state and the situation surrounding the arrested persons.

Lawyers are expected to testify that there has never been a colored juror in Mississippi. Kunstler said he already has 15 qualified colored residents who can be selected for jury duty should it come to that.

180 Freedom Riders Show Up for Appeal

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 14 (AP).—More than 180 convicted Freedom Riders, rallied by hym-singing sympathizers, appear in Hinds County Court today for appeal trials.

County Judge Russel Moore convenes court at 2 p.m. (CST), and under a year-old rule all 192 riders who posted appeal bonds after their breach of peace convictions were required to appear or forfeit their $500 bonds.

But at least five of the segregation-defying riders earlier announced their intention of not appearing. Their attorney petitioned Federal Court to receive the five cases, and they were automatically transferred to United States district court.

Officials of the ride-sponsoring Congress on Racial Equality said at least 180 of the riders were in Jackson last night.

Two More Arrested

The convicted riders returned to this Mississippi Capital City of 70,000 in the same methods they had used to travel here earlier. But this time, they refused to enter any segregated facilities.

The total number of arrested Freedom Riders swelled to 307 yesterday, however, as two more persons tested segregation barriers in a bus terminal here. They were arrested by Jackson police as quickly as the earlier riders.

Jailed were Pauline Simes, 22, a white New York resident, and George Raymond, jr., 18-year-old New Orleans Negro.

Police planned to block off a two-block area around the courthouse before trials began and promised a quick trip in the paddywagon for any demonstrators. Several months ago, a hand-clapping crowd of Negroes was dispersed by trained dogs when they gathered outside city court for the trials of Negro students who attempted to desegrate a for-white-only public library.

Rally Draws Crowd

Last night more than 1,500 persons, including the Freedom Riders, attended a rally called to give moral support to the integrationists.

The audience, which ranged from 80-year-old women to a 5-year-old boy, clapped, sang and shouted as officials of CORE, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference spoke.

Time and again, the crowd interrupted speakers with the chant: "Oh, Jesus help us."

"Segregation is catching hell," said the Rev. Wyatt Tee Walker of Montgomery, Ala., SCLC executive director.

The Negro minister said his people used to sing "Old Black Joe," but now we sing:

"I'm coming, I'm coming,

"And my head ain't bending low.

"I'm coming, I'm coming,

"I'm America's new Black Joe."

Another speaker, the Rev. C. T. Vivian, a Negro methodist minister from Nashville, Tenn., said:

"We want more than integration. We want a community of love—whether they be black, white, yellow, pink or polka dot."

Judge Rejects Exclusion Plea

Attorney For 'Freedom Rider' Tries To Show Juries Are Stacked

By United Press International

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 22. — The first of several legal moves on behalf of the so-called "freedom riders" going on trial here was rejected Tuesday when a judge ruled that Negroes have not been systematically excluded from juries in Hinds County.

Attorneys for Negro eHnry J. Thomas called 29 witneses before County Judge Russell Moore in an attempt to show he could not receive a fair trial under Mississippi's predominantly white jury system.

Defense Attorney William A. Kunstler of New York asked that the 60-man panel from which the jury which will hear Thomas' case is to be selected be declared ineligible because only two of its members are Negroes.

Judge Moore ended the six-hour hearing on Kunstler's motion by declaring that the defense had "failed to show by any substantial evidence that there has been any systematic exclusion or discrimination in the selection of juriors."

Jury Selection Today

Selection of the jury to hear the breach of the peace case against Thomas will begin at 9:30 a.m. Wednesday.

Fourteen Negroes testified they had been registered to vote —and thus eligible for jury duty—for 12 to 40 years and had never been called to jury service.

The state then secured statements from 12 long-time white voters who have been subpenaed to testify later. The statements, introduced as evidence, said they too, had never been called for jury service.

No Race Listing

They testified they chose names at random from lists of voters. They said the lists have no designation of race.

Regarding the Negroes' testimony that they had never performed jury service, Judge Moore said, "the court does not find this to be an uncommon thing among members of the Caucasian race."

Thomas is the first of 300 riders convicted in police court for breach of the peace to go on trial in appeal proceeding in Hinds County court.

JACKSON-FREEDOM RIDERS
MISS JULIA AARON - WILL SERVE 6 MOS. HARD LABOR

Will serve 6 months hard labor

By FRANK HUNT
AFRO Staff Correspondent

JACKSON, Miss. — A 26-year-old New Orleans coed went to jail for the second time here Saturday rather than post the $2,000 bond demanded by County Court Judge Russell Moore.

Julia Aaron, second Freedom Rider to be convicted on appeal trial, left the court in the custody of Sheriff J. L. Gilfoy to serve six months at hard labor in Parchman State Penitentiary.

The first Freedom Rider to be convicted on appeal, 19-year-old Henry Thomas, a Howard University student, was released under $2,000 bond pending appeal "all the way to the Supreme Court, if necessary."

MISS AARON'S decision to go to jail came as a surprise to everybody and may have set the stage for a mass return to Mississippi jails by the more than 250 riders released on appeal bond.

"I think Mississippi justice is deteriorating the moral fibre of America, and I don't intend to dance to their tune," she said.

"They probably think that raising the bond will bankrupt CORE, and create dissension among the riders. By going back to jail, we can show them that we don't fear the worse and can strip them of their petty legal weapons," she asserted.

SHE SHOOK HANDS with defense attorneys and friends and smiled. Her head was held high and her steps determined and firm as she was escorted from the courtroom.

The less than 5 hour trial was a far cry from the prolonged three day first riders hearing. Only five witnesses testified, as compared to the 24 in the first cases. The defense again rested its case at the conclusion of the state's presentation. The all-white jury returned the guilty verdict in less than 15 minutes.

In an impassioned speech, city prosecutor Jack Travis called the Freedom Riders "rabble rousers," "outside agitators" and "riff-raff." He said that the jury had no other alternative than to convict the defendant or else "Blood will be running in the streets of Jackson."

The defendant was represented by local lawyers Jack H. Young, and Carsie Hall.

DEFENSE ARGUMENTS followed generally the pattern in the first trial.

"The state is saying in effect that if somebody throws a brick through your car window you ought not have had your car there. How stupid can you get?" Young asked the jury.

He told the jury that they would have to live with their consciences if they found the defendant guilty.

Two colored prospective jurors were the first to be eliminated by the state by preemptory challenges which do not require a reason. They were Manzie Reese, a maintenance man employed by the University of Mississippi Hospital and Earl Jointon, a barber.

She served six days in Hinds County jail under breach of the peace charges and was released on the usual $500 appeal bond to appear for a trial in New Orleans, where she had been arrested for picketing. The New Orleans trial has been postponed indefinitely.

* * *

A STUDENT at Southern University, she is an active leader in the New Orleans CORE Chapter, where she was arrested again two weeks before her Hinds County appeal trial for distributing handbills. Those charges were dropped.

"She's wonderful, she really is," Tom Gaither, CORE field secretary, said of Miss Aaron.

"I think her decision to stay in jail effectively dramatizes the nature of our fight and the tremendous faith that the Freedom Riders have in this method of protest."

Gaither said such a decision would be left up to individual Riders. "We are obligated to post bond and we'll get the money from somewhere," he said.

IF THE $2000 Bond was posted for all of the riders convicted here on their circuit court appeals, it could cost CORE more than $275,000 in addition to the approximately $110,000 already posted.

Freedom Riders to be tried this week include John Moody, from Philadelphia, and Matthew Walker, Nashville, Tenn., Monday; Doris Castle and Jerome Smith, both currently in jail in their native New Orleans, but will come out on bond for their Tuesday trial here; and Peter Ackenberg from York, Pa., and Elizabeth Adler, from Brooklyn New York, whose cases are set for Wednesday.

The court will then recess until Sept. 6, according to the original schedule.

Two other cases crowded out by last week's two prolonged trials were reset for Jan. 21. It is expected that future trials will be brief and anti-climactic with both sides facilitating speed.

FUTURE TRIALS may be handled by attorneys from all over the country. A CORE spokesman said that a great many well-known lawyers had offered to come in and fight the cases free of charge.

If so, the coming 190 trials may be contested as bitterly as was the first, some speculate.

Mississippi's latest tactic to freeze freedom riders, by requiring property bonds, failed miserably Friday as defense lawyers found a recently passed law allowing cash bonds to be used.

Henry J. Thomas, first convicted Freedom Rider paid the $2,000 bond last Friday after Judge Russell Moore had demanded that property bonds must be used or Thomas would have to go back to jail. The judge had said he found no statutory authority allowing the use of cash bonds under Mississippi law.

THOMAS, A CORE field secretary, had decided to accept the judge's ultimatum and serve out his time in jail, but was prevailed upon by co-workers that he could do more for the movement outside jail.

He was convicted in a three - day trial that was probably the hardest fought misdemeanor case in the history of Mississippi jurisprudence. Judge Moore ran his court with the rigidity of a capital punishment case. Attorneys for both sides seemed determined to make the pilot case a lengthy record for appeal purposes.

A reporter from Rotterdam, Holland left the courtroom during the second riders' appeal trial here when the judge called him to the bench for sitting in a section occupied by colored persons.

"IT IS the ruling of the court that the trial be segregated. Colored people sit in one section and whites sit in another. You can either stay or leave. but you've got to abide by the rules," Judge Russell Moore told the blond, fairheaded, blue-eyed Dutchman.

In heavily accented tones, the reporter, who said his name was Hugh Brandt Costius, told the judge, "I rather leave because I don't like a court where I can't sit with whom I choose."

* * *

CITY PROSECUTOR Jack Travis had told the jury in seven minutes of closing argument that they were the third link in the law enforcement chain.

The police department is the first . . . They have done their duty, the prosecutor is the second link, and you are the third link.

"If you want your property, your person, your family, protected from violence, from any person, subversive, riff-raff, then you must not turn him loose. . . The third links break the chain, no law enforcement, no police protection."

He said if a policeman does not have the authority to order a crowd to move one, it has nothing.

DEFENSE ATTORNEY Kunstler, who spoke for 15 minutes, said that Travis said essentially that "if any of the jury fails to move on when told to do so by a police officer, that person is subject to arrest.

"We say that a defendant should not be subjected to arrest merely because a policeman tells him to move on, whether he has committed an act of violence or not.

"The witnesses all testified that the defendant committed no such act.

"We can't go on what others did, or what Capt. Ray thought they did," he said.

"If you search your hearts and consciences to find out what he was arrested for, then you will find a different problem," Kunstler told the jury.

HE AGREED with Travis that it "is an extremely important case" and added that if the jury found the defendant innocent, they would have "done a lot to strip this matter of its undertones."

Instructions to the jury, three by the prosecutors and 28 from the defense, were clearly contradictory to the confusion of reporters, courtroom spectators, and presumably the jury.

Defense instructions implied that the defendant could not be found guilty unless it was proven that he himself had committed some act which broke the peace.

State instructions said that the defendant could be found guilty of the charge if his presence in a place of public accommodation occasioned a breach of the peace.

USUALLY JURY instructions are approved by the judge to place the case in its proper legal context.

In a surprise move Friday the defense rested its case, without bringing up any of the remaining 30 witnesses it had subpoenaed.

Attorney William Kunstler said that the defense's case had been proven for them by the testimony of states witnesses. The state finished its case at 1:30. Five minutes later Kunstler moved swiftly for a directed verdict, tried to introduce several sections of the state code dealing with segregation, and tried to read to the jury a Supreme Court decision of 1960 prohibiting segregation in interstate travel facilities.

Judge Moore as swiftly denied all three requests. The jury stayed out for 45 minutes before returning with the guilty verdict. There were about 40 courtroom spectators in the courtroom at the time, more than at any other time during the three - day trial. About half were colored.

* * *

THE STATE called up four more witnesses Thursday morning, a newsman and two police officials.

Jackson Police Captain John Ray, who was in charge of the arrests of the Riders, testified that he arrested them not for entering a white waiting room, but because they refused to move on when told.

He said police had ordered many people to move on and until the defendant and his group refused, all had moved without question.

Ray was held on the stand 2½ hours by detailed examination of both attorneys.

Both sides were stymied as the trial got underway Wednesday afternoon by objections sustained against the use of racial terms, and reference to Freedom Riders and to the group rather than the defendant, Henry Thomas.

This is not a racial case but a breach-of-the-peace case, Judge Russell Moore said. He had to say it again many times during the trial.

FREEDOM RIDER Attorney William Kunstler took exception to the ruling early in the hearing, after being stalled in his examination of the jury by a barrage of objections from City Prosector Jack Travis to his reference to a colored person's rights.

"I think it is impossible to overlook the fact that this is one of several cases that have been publicized all over the world and at this point it is impossible to separate these facts from the influence of others," Kunstler argued.

"If you want a fair and impartial trial you'll get it as long as this is a breach-of-the-peace case," the judge returned.

* * *

IT BECAME obvious as the state presented its case that it was bearing the brunt of the limitation when Judge Moore took under advisement a defense motion to disregard the testimony of four Alabama witnesses.

This testimony eventually rambled geographically from Atlanta, Ga.; Montgomery, Anniston and Birmingham, Ala., to Jackson, and, in subject, from the Freedom Riders to CORE.

THE DRAMATIC story of the Freedom Riders unfolded in deadpan, sometimes surly tones.

Kunstler later withdrew his motion to strike the Alabama testimony from the records. He told the AFRO afterwards that the State's witnesses proved to be extremely helpful in proving his case.

The State is charging that the Riders came here with the express purpose of breaking the peace and causing trouble .... to create a disturbance, that what they wanted was violence, nothing else Travis said in his opening statement to the jury.

He said if not for the heroic actions of Mississippi State police the Freedom Riders could have been killed.

Attorneys for the Riders, Carl Rachlin, chief counsel for the Congress On Racial Equality, and Kunstler, American Civil Liberties Union lawyer, maintain that the Riders came to test transportation laws.

"WE THINK that the facts will show that this defendant committed no other act, than to walk into a Continental bus terminal and refused to move on," Rachlin said in opening argument.

The defendant in the case is 19-year-old Henry Thomas, a Howard University student from St. Augustine, Fla. Thomas, appointed a CORE field secretary since his release from Parchman State Penitentiary July 5, was arrested in the Trailway bus terminal here May 24 with the first group of Riders to invade Jackson.

He was released on a $500 appeal bond.

The basic arguments in the case do not clash head-on, since one side considers it a civil rights case and the other a criminal case. Thus the testimony of state witnesses has tended to support both contentions to the frustration of the prosecutors.

* * *

FOUR ALABAMA police officials testified that a tense and disturbed siutation resulting in violence was occasioned by the Freedom Riders passing through the state.

* * *

BUT THEY also testified that the Riders themselves committed no acts of violence, broke no laws and did nothing to provoke violence.

"What is a Freedom Rider?" County Prosecutor Paul Alexander asked W. M. Stanley, Montgomery, Ala. assistant chief of police.

"I suppose it is used to describe those people who ride buses for the purpose of integrating its facilities," Stanley replied.

Asked why was he interested in the Freedom Riders in Alabama, Alabama State investigator Sgt. L. M. Cook, who said his duties involved investigating un-American groups, said, "Well, the members of the board are listed on the letterhead. Some of those men are known Communists."

Strong defense objections were sustained.

* * *

GWIN COLE, assistant director of the Bureau of Identification for the Mississippi Highway Patrol, testified that the Riders did nothing illegal or disorderly in transit or at the Jackson terminal.

Mr. Cole was in charge of escorting the Riders from the Alabama border into the city.

He also testified that the situation along the route was tense, but upon cross examination he could only specify having talked with a filling station attendant to determine the situation.

TWO JACKSON businessbusinessmen, president of the First National Bank and an automobile dealer, said that people were excited and disturbed about the arrival of the Riders prior to their coming.

Both admitted that the concern was not fear of the violence commited by Riders but by citizens.

Wallace Dabbs, reporter for the Clarion Ledger, admitted that his report that the Riders had been arrested upon entering the terminal was inaccurate. There was a 15-minute period after the entrance he said.

He said on cross examination that the police had the situation in control.

Ed Hale, State Times reporter, testified trat many of the people at the terminal were there out of curiosity, while others were there out of antagonism for the Freedom Riders.

Kunstler queried another newsman about the newspaper statement in which he wrote: "Meanwhile, police watched each incoming bus for more Riders to violate segregation laws."

The reporter refused to divulge the facts on which he based the story.

* * *

THE ALL-WHITE jury has listened attentively so far, laughing good humoredly at cracks made at the expense of Prosecutors Travis and Alexander. They are all men since women are not allowed to serve on jury duty in Mississippi.

Defense lawyers used up all six of their peremptory challenges to eliminate jury members and challenged two other jurors, but were overruled.

It took five hours to select the jury Wednesday.

Each member was questioned extensively about his background, his beliefs and his livelihood by both defense and prosecutors.

Kunstler requested that note be made of the fact that there were no colored persons on the jury for the record.

Judge Spencer Rules Episcopalians Broke Both State, Church Laws When They Refused Request To Leave Bus Terminal

By The Associated Press

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 15.—Municipal Judge James Spencer convicted 15 Episcopal clergymen—including New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller's son-in-law—on breach of peace charges Friday after their efforts to desegregate the Trailways bus terminal.

Judge Spencer returned his verdict in the case of the 12 white and three Negro clergymen and handed each a $200 fine and four-month jail term.

Among those convicted was the Rev. Robert L. Pierson, 35, of New York City and Evanston, Ill., son-in-law of New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller. The Rev. Mr. Pierson did not testify at the trial.

Do Not Post Bond

The clergymen made no move to post bond and sources close to them indicated it might be next week before most of them gained their freedom.

Before handing down sentence, Judge Spencer told the courtroom "I find my duty clear. I believe they violated the laws of Mississippi and the articles of religion of their faith."

In his closing arguments, Special Prosecutor Robert Nichols charged the clergymen violated an article of religion of the Protestant Episcopal Church when they ignored an order from Police Capt. J. L. Ray to move along.

He said one of the articles of religion admonished Episcopalians to obey civil authority.

Lawyer Questions Law

Defense Attorney Carl Rachlin of New York, chief counsel of the Congress of Racial Equality, contended the state breach of peace law was unconstitutional because it permitted an officer to make an arrest if he felt violence might erupt later. This, he said, made the officer a judge.

Mr. Nichols said if the officer "had to wait until violence occurred before the arrest would be constitutional, then there might have been two dead bodies — but they would have been constitutionally dead."

The 15 clergymen were arrested at the Trailways bus terminal Wednesday when they ignored a police order to move when it was issued by Captain Ray.

The arrests interrupted their "prayer pilgrimage" from New Orleans to Detroit, where the annual convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church will open Sunday. The tour was planned to study the racial question in Episcopal institutions en route.

Ministers Arrested At Sit-In

JACKSON, Miss. — (UPI) — Police arrested 15 Episcopal ministers, including the son-in-law of New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller, Wednesday when the biracial group attempted to enter a segregated restaurant at a bus station.

Officers rounded up the clergymen, from all parts of the nation, when ministers refused orders to "move on." Among the group was the Rev. Robert L. Pierson of Evanston, Ill., husband of Rockefeller's daughter, Ann.

They were part of a 28-member group which arrived here from New Orleans Tuesday night on a "Prayer Pilgrimage" to protest racial segregation.

The group spent the night at Tougaloo College, a Negro school near here.

The 28 ministers met in New Orleans Tuesday morning to make the "pilgrimage" to the national Episcopal convention which gets under way in Detroit Sunday. They planned to stop at points along the way for consultation with church and school leaders and demonstrations.

A spokesman for the group, the Rev. Malcolm Boyd, chaplain at Wayne State University in Detroit, said the clergymen were "witnessing or demonstrating for our church against racial discrimination."

Ministers Pray, Sing In Jail

By Herald Wire Services

JACKSON, Miss. — The Rev. Robert L. Pierson, son-in-law of New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller, and 14 other Episcopal priests prayed and sang hymns Thursday in their jail cells.

The ministers, arrested Wednesday for challenging segregation customs here, reported they were in "good spirits" and that officers were treating them courteously.

The 12 white and three Negro ministers from several sections of the nation are scheduled to be tried today on breach of the peace charges, filed after they attempted to dine at a segregated bus station restaurant.

Father Pierson, 35, of Evanston, Ill., said he had no complaints about his treatment in jail and the other ministers agreed.

Father Pierson, whose wife, Anne, is Rockefeller's daughter, was reported "quite embarrassed" about the publicity the integration attempt received as a result of his relationship with the governor. Most other ministers traveling with Father Pierson on an anti-segregation "prayer pilgrimate" did not know he was the governor's son-in-law.

In addition to Pierson, the priests arrested are:
The Rev. James Pleasant Breeden, 26, Boston, Mass.
The Rev. John Marvin Evans, 36, All Saints Church, Toledo, Ohio.
The Rev. Quinland Reeves Gordon, 44, Washington, D.C.
The Rev. Gilbert S. Avery III, 30, St. John's Episcopal Church, Roxbury, Mass.
The Rev. Myron B. Bloy Jr., 35, chaplain at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Boston.
The Rev. John Crocker Jr., 37, Providence, R.I.
The Rev. James Walker Evans, 31, St. James Church, St. Clair, Mo.
The Rev. James Garrard Jones, 34, Chicago.
The Rev. John Burnett Morris, 31, Atlanta.
The Rev. Merrill Orne Yung, 31, Boston.
The Rev. Geoffrey Sedgewich Simpson, 29, South Pewaukee, Wis.
The Rev. Robert P. Taylor, 29, St. Leonard's House, Chicago.
The Rev. William Andrew Wendt, 41, Washington, D.C.
The Rev. Vernon P. Woodward, 27, Cincinnati.

15 Ministers Put In Jackson Jail

Traveling Episcopal Priests Attempt To Test Bus Cafe Segregation

By United Press International

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 13.—A bi-racial group of 15 Episcopal priests attempted to have lunch Wednesday in a segregated restaurant but dined instead at city jail.

The ministers, part of a group of clergymen from throughout the nation on an anti-segregation "pilgrimage," entered the Trailways bus terminal's white waiting room and headed toward the restaurant. They declined police orders to leave, maintaining they were hungry, and were arrested on breach of the peace charges.

Those arrested included the Rev. Robert L. Pierson, 35, of Evanston, Ill., son-in-law of New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller. His wife, Ann, is the Governor's daughter.

JACKSON-FREEDOM RIDERS CLERGYMEN

Seven other members of the group were scheduled to leave, without challenging segregation, for the University of the South in Sewanee, Tenn., to continue the "pilgrimage." Five more planned to stay in Jackson, holding three prayer sessions daily and confering with local officials and residents about segregation.

There was no prior announcement of Wednesday's integration attempt and unlike most other so-called "Freedom Riders," the ministers were not met by a large contingent of police. However, two patrolmen were nearby and stopped the ministers as they reached the restaurant door.

Stopped By Officers

One of the patrolmen told them to move on and a priest replied, "We're hungry. We are interstate travelers." Another priest said the group would not leave until "after we have had some lunch."

A patrolman then called the nearby police station for Capt. J. L. Ray, who has been the arresting officer in most "Freedom Rider" incidents. He rushed to the station, issued new orders to "move on" and made the arrests.

The ministers, wearing clerical collars, were taken out of the terminal to a paddy wagon. One of them was reading the Bible aloud as the wagon pulled away.

Members of the group who did not take part in the integration attempt fired off a telegram to Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy reporting the arrests and urging Kennedy to immediately "solve problems of interstate travel for Americans."

Those arrested were the Revs. Gilbert S. Avery III of Roxbury, Mass., Myron B. Bloy Jr. of Cambridge, Mass., James P. Breeden of Roxbury, John Crocker Jr. of Providence, R. I., James W. Evans of St. Clair, Mo., John M. Evans of Toledo, Ohio, Quinland R. Gordon of Washington, James G. Jones of Chicago.

Met In New Orleans

The crusading ministers met in New Orleans Tuesday morning to begin the "pilgrimage" to the national Episcopal convention, which opens Sunday in Detroit. They planned to stop along the way for consultation, prayer and demonstrations.

They spent Tuesday night here at Tougaloo College, a Negro church institution, after confering earlier in the day with the Rev. John Allin, new bishop coadjutor of the Mississipp Episcopal Diocese.

The Rev. Mr. Allin, presently serving as rector of a segregated church school at Vicksburg, said he "disagreed with their strategy and could see no value in it." Allin said he asked the traveling ministers to continue their trip in a "quiet and orderly manner." One of the group, the Rev. Malcolm Boyd of Detroit, said of the conference with the Rev. Mr. Allin, "We had our different opinions."

Jailed Priests Hold High Mass

Integration Group Will Be Tried At Jackson This Afternoon

By The Associated Press

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 14.—Fifteen jailed Episcopal clergymen celebrated High Mass Thursday as they awaited trial on breach of peace charges following a desegregation attempt at the Trailways bus terminal here.

Mr. Pierson

The ministers, including New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller's son-in-law, set up a portable altar in the Jackson City jail for the service.

The 13 white clergymen in jail and two others not jailed took part in the service while the three Negroes in another cell made the responses.

The services ... er City Prosecutor Jack Travis and defense lawyer Jack Young, a Jackson Negro, agreed to hold the trial of the 15 at 3 p.m. Friday.

Carl Rachlin of New York, general counsel of the Congress of Racial Equality, was expected to aid in the defense. C.O.R.E. sponsored the so-called "Freedom Rides" into Jackson this year.

The Rev. Robert L. Pierson of New York and Evanston, Ill., Gov. Rockefeller's son-in-law, was embarrassed by the attion given his connection with Rockefeller, reported the Rev. Jack Malpas of Baltimore, Md.

Priests Hold Mass

The Rev. Mr. Malpas and the Rev. Niel Hastie of Boston visited the jailed clergymen during their religious services.

"We arrived as they began the singing service of the Eucharist," the Rev. Mr. Malpas said. "We were a part of the congregation. It was a good service."

The Rev. Mr. Malpas said the jailed clergymen's "spirits" were good. They are receiving messages of encouragement from their families and friends. There was no discouragement among them."

He said also he and the Rev. Mr. Hastie had conferred with Chief of Detectives M. B. Pierce and received courteous treatmen. They were permitted to take sacraments to the three Negro priests following the Mass.

The Rev. Mr. Pierson received a telegram from the Rev. H. J. Gary of Southampson, N. Y., saying, "I wish I could share your imprisonment as I share your conviction. God bless you."

It was the first arrest for the Rev. Mr. Pierson, 35, his wife, Anne Rockefeller, is one of the New York governor's five children.

Governor Rockefeller said of the arrests: "I admire all of them. I admire their courage and dedication of these young people to the basic precepts on which this country was founded and their dedication to the cause of making a reality out of these precepts."

The New York governor was asked if he planned to intercede.

"I know he wouldn't expect any special treatment or want it," Governor Rockefeller replied.

The 15 were participating in a "prayer pilgrimage" which left New Orleans Tuesday. Twenty-three white and five Negro priests started the pilgrimage scheduled to end at the church's 60th general convention which opens Sunday in Detroit.

'Freedom Riders' Bare Beatings In New Orleans

By ADOLPH SLAUGHTER

JACKSON, Miss. — Three bruised and badly mauled Freedom Riders left Jackson, Miss, late Tuesday for New Orleans where they said they were unmercifully beaten by police there after they were forcefully taken from a Negro home Aug. 12.

The three, George Blevins, 21, of Los Angeles; John Dolan, Berkeley, Calif., and Frank A. Nelson, 23, of Brooklyn, N. Y., were among nine Riders who failed to appear Monday in Hinds County Court house here for arraignment.

The riders said they were en route to Jackson to appear along with 188 other Freedom Riders who were given court dates for "breach of the peace" trials scheduled to begin here Aug. 22 and continue through Jan. 18, 1962.

Blevins, an artist, suffered a wound on the back of his head requiring stitches. Dolan, a student at the Uniiversity of California, in Berkeley, was injured about the face, while Nelson, a New York civil engineer, had bruises about his back and body inflicted by continuous club and blackjack pounding he said.

DESCRIBE ACTION

The young men said New Orleans police entered the home of a Negro girl they were visiting. They had met her during their freedom ride. The police told members of the girls' family that they had been sent there because of a reported disturbance.

The officers left the young men said when they saw there was no disturbance, but returned a short while later and entered the home without first gaining permission. All three were then taken to a police station.

It was at the completion of the ride to a second precinct station that the beating began, the young men said.

In the patrol wagon which transported them was a fourth white man between the ages of 25 and 30 who said his name was Jimenez and who told the three riders that he was an avid segregationist.

As the wagon pulled into the station where the men were subsequently finger printed and photographed, Jimenez attacked them they said and the police yanked open the door, entered the wagon with clubs and blackjacks swinging.

FLUNG INTO STREET

Dolan said he was picked up bodily and flung from the wagon out into the street where he landed on his face. An officer, Dolan said, attempted to jump from the wagon on top of him, but missed and landed on the ground dislocating his gun from his holster.

The officer then screamed, Dolan said, "Look out, they are trying to escape, they are after my gun," whereupon all three were grabbed and beaten some more.

One officer was holding Frank and hitting him in the back, Dolan said, and then later they shoved Frank and George against a wall.

ORDERED OUT OF TOWN

"When we got inside the building Nelson said an officer told him that if they were not out of town within 24 hours he would shoot them.

Blevins, when he complained about the injury on his head, an officer grabbed his hair on the pretense of looking at the wound, but in the process dug his nails into the injury and split it further. It later required three stitches.

Dolan said an officer who questioned him took his foot and kept kicking him in the chest.

Dolan added that the officers kept asking him "how much is CORE paying you?"

The three said they were held in jail from Aug. 12 until Aug. 14 making them late for their appearance in Hinds County court.

The men were charged with aggravated assault, simple assault and simple escape. Their bonds were originally set at $4,500 each.

Attorneys from the law firm of Collins, Douglas and Elie, in New Orleans, represented them, and got their bonds lowered to $1,000 each.

JACKSON- FREEDOM RIDERS T R I A L
U.S. DISTRICT JUDGE HAROLD COX
JURISDICTION DENIED 5 'FREEDOM RIDER' APPEALS

Negro Freedom Rider Loses Appeal Before All-White Mississippi Jury

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 24 (UPI)—An all-white jury that listened to three days of testimony took 40 minutes today to convict Negro Henry Thomas, the first Freedom Rider to appeal his breach of peace conviction here.

Thomas was fined $200 and sentenced to four months in jail—the same penalty prescribed in police court, where he was originaly convicted. He was expected to be freed on $2000 bond.

Attorneys for the defendant, in a surprise move, rested their case today without calling any witnesses.

Thomas' lawyers will appeal the case to State Circuit Court. They are counting on overturning the breach of peace conviction in Federal court after taking it through the State tribunals.

The State produced 15 witnesses in an effort to show Thomas, a Howard University student. was guilty of conduct which provoked a breach of the peace. Twenty-five minutes after the State closed its case, the defense said it, too was resting.

During that 25-minute period, the defense tried to have read into the record a Supreme Court decision banning segregation in interstate travel facilities. The judge, who had said earlier that the high court ruling had no relation to this case, rejected the motion.

William A. Kunstler, an American Civil Liberties Union lawyer from New York. told the jury that the basic issue in the case was "whether a person should be arrested merely because a policeman ordered him to move on."

Kunstler said Thomas "broke no law. He was peaceful. There isn't one shred of evidence that the defendant was about to breach the peace."

City Prosecutor Jack Travis said the basic question was "whether we will have law enforcement or whether there will be a complete brakdown of law enforcement."

Federal Judge Tosses Out 5 'Freedom Rider' Appeals

JACKSON, Miss. (UPI)—A federal judge threw out five "Freedom Rider" appeal cases Saturday contending his court had no jurisdiction in the matter.

U. S. District Judge Harold Cox said the five riders—three whites and two Negroes—"heralded their arrival in Jackson from other states for "provocative" purposes.

"Their status as interstate passengers is extremely doubtful. Their destination was Jackson but their objective was trouble," he said.

Cox handed down the opinion in granting a state motion to return the cases to county court.

He said it was an "inescapeable conclusion" that the five rider cases had "no jurisdiction" in his court and that they were "improperly removed here."

New York attorney William Kunstler, counselor for the riders, sought to have the cases removed from Hinds County court. He said a federal civil rights act allows such transfers to be made when persons are arrested on state laws designated to preserve segregation.

He referred to the breach of the peace statute on which the riders were convicted in police court.

However, Cox said "this statute is a pure and simple peace law enacted by the legislation in good faith to assure peace and tranquility among its people."

Cox said the riders "had no civil right to incite a riot or provoke mob violence. The arresting officer promptly and efficiently and very properly discharged his duty in arresting each of these criminals under such circumstances," he said.

"This court may not be regarded as haven for any such counterfeit citizens from other states deliberately seeking to cause trouble here. The record does not show that this statute destroys or abridges any civil right of either of these petitioners."

Kunstler had sought to get all rider trials out of the Hinds County court where the jury trials are presently in progress. Two riders have already been convicted in the appeal process.

The five riders, like the 192 arraigned in county court, were convicted after attempting to integrate facilities at Jackson's bus, train and airport terminals.

Six New Riders Join Comrades

White Group Is Arrested In Negro Waiting Room At Jackson Terminal

By United Press International

JACKSON, Miss., June 11.—Six white so-called "Freedom Riders," led by a blond coed, were arrested Sunday when they sought service at a lunch counter in the Negro waiting room of the Greyhound Bus Terminal.

The riders, four of them students at the University of Minnesota, came here from Nashville, where they stopped off for instructions on protest riding from the Nashville nonviolent movement.

Leading their invasion of the segregated waiting room was Claire O'Conner, a 22-year-old coed from St. Paul, Minn., and the only girl in the group. She and four other riders sat at the counter and were promptly arrested.

No 'Metal Objects'

The sixth one, Eugene John Uphoff, 19, of Minneapolis, walked in later, struggling to carry a guitar, and he, too, was arrested after conceding he was part of the group.

He told officers he brought the guitar to "while away" his time in jail and to "keep spirits up." But it was taken from him under a policy against allowing metal objects in the cells.

Officers said Miss O'Conner told them she felt "stifled" by segregation.

Officers said members of the group told them they answered a call for volunteers by the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE). They said six others from the university also agreed to make a "ride" but later changed their minds.

Their arrests brought to 110 the number of riders taken into custody on breach of the peace charges here since the anti-segregation movement was aimed at Jackson May 24.

About 85 were held in the city or Hinds County jails here and eight of them were reported to be on a "hunger strike" in protest to segregation.

Labor Backing Protested

Meanwhile, a Mississippi labor organization vigorously protested a $5,000 donation made to the so-called "Freedom Ride" campaign by the AFL-CIO.

W. H. Wood Jr., president of the Mississippi State Council of Carpenters, wrote AFL-CIO Vice President Walter Reuther protesting the organization's support of "misguided young people who are led by racial and social agitators."

"These funds were not entrusted to you and our other officers to be used to create and sponsor racial disorders, social upheaval and the destruction of everything sacred to the cause of peace and harmony among men of good will in any section of the country," the letter said.

"We are a peaceful and peaceloving people in Mississippi, but we will not be driven into nor tolerate any drastic change in our social order by fanatics and agitators who have no other desire than to stir up trouble."

More 'Riders' Are Arrested In Jackson

110 Travelers So Far Taken Into Custody

Jackson, Miss., June 11 (AP)—Police arrested six more "Freedom Riders" here Sunday, swelling the number of travelers taken into custody in Jackson to 110.

There were no crowds and no violence.

A group of five white men and one white woman—all from Minnesota—got off a Greyhound bus from Nashville, Tenn., and walked into a Negro waiting room.

Did Not Answer

Police Capt. J. L. Ray told the group to move on. They made no reply.

"Did you understant that I said you'll have to move out of the station," Captain Ray asked. They looked at him but did not answer.

He placed the five under arrest. As police took their names, a sixth "rider" approached carrying a guitar case and handbag.

Ray asked him to move on, too. When he refused, police arrested him.

The Nashville Student Nonviolent Movement identified the riders as Miss Claire O'Conner of St. Paul, Minn., and Dave Morton, Robert Baum, Zev Aelony, Marvin Davidoun, and Gene Uphoff, all of Minneapolis.

Lengthy Jail Terms Make Riders Glum

By W. C. Shoemaker
Daily News Staff Writer

Weekend arrests sent Jackson's "freedom riders" total to 110.

Twelve, including 11 whites, arrested in two groups Saturday and yesterday go on trial before Municipal Judge James Spencer this afternoon.

They are almost sure to receive the maximum penalty allowed for commiting a breach of the peace —$200 fines and four months jail sentences.

Six were arrested Saturday afternoon at the Greyhound bus station and six more were jailed when they refused police orders to leave the Greyhound station yesterday afternoon.

Saturday's group included one Negro and five whites while all those arrested yesterday were whites.

MISLED BY CORE

Some of those jailed yesterday complained they had been misled by the Congress of Racial Equality when they signed up for the troublemaking trip into Mississippi.

They said they had agreed to serve out in jail a $200 fine at the rate of $3 per day, but that CORE had told them nothing of the four months sentences which recent groups before them have been receiving.

Most said CORE bought their bus tickets and gave them a few dollars for food.

Yesterday's group was the 14th to invade Jackson and be arrested in three weeks. Arrests have come at both Trailways and Greyhound bus terminals, the Illinois Central Railroad depot and the Municipal Airport.

Early groups gathered in Montgomery for the ride to Jackson but 10 days ago switched to Nashville and New Orleans as an assembly point after a federal judge in Montgomery enjoined "freedom rides" through the area.

Those arrested yesterday included Robert M. Baum, 19, of Excelsior, Minn., student at the University of Minnesota; Allen Davidov, 29, of Minneapolis Minn., an art dealer; David Kerr Morton, 20, of Jackson, Wyoming, a free lance writer; Zev Aelong, 23, of St. Paul, Minn., University of Minnesota student; Claire O'Conner, white woman, 22, of St. Paul, University of Minnesota student; and Eugene John Uphoff, 19, student at the University of Minnesota.

Arrested Saturday were Leon Daniel Horne of Chicago, Tougaloo, Miss., native and Chicago junior college student and part-time waiter, the only Negro in the group; Stephen John Green, 21, of Rye, N. Y., student at Middlebury College, Vermont; Lowell A. Woods Jr., 34, of Chicago, reporter for the Crusader News; Katherine A. Pleune, 21, of Chicago, a mineograph operator; Leora Berman, 18, of Chicago, a student; and Richard P. Grisword, 34, of Brooklyn, N. Y., a social worker.

Complete information on the St. Louis CORE activities and its leaders was handed the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Instead, the attorney general might concentrate on how best to protect the public from the trouble-hunting Freedom Riders.

Undoubtedly some fuzzy-minded liberal will launch a campaign to ransom the riders from their Mississippi bastile.

They could call it "Mint Juleps for Mississippi" and it ought to go over big in the South.

Free Riders' Pattern Familiar To Reporter

By BERNIE WYNN
Political Writer, Arizona Republic, Phoenix, Arizona

Behind the Freedom Riders raising havoc in the South is a politically astute organization bent on inciting people to overthrow their own laws.

This column is well aware of the goals and tactics of the Congress of Racial Equality, having once been an undercover member of its St. Louis cell.

As a reporter for the Indianapolis Star, this writer was assigned to infiltrate an Indiana youth group suspected of being a front organization for Communists and fellow travelers.

Membership in this pinko organization led, as it ivariably does, to other fellow-traveling groups until the trail finally led to a "peacemakers training camp" at St. Louis.

Primarily the Peacemakers were working among youth groups in churches and colleges in an attempt to persuade them not to register for the military draft. This was during the Korean War.

Several of the Peacemakers also were active members of the Congress of Racial Equality, then bent on fomenting racial strife in St. Louis.

The St. Louis cell numbered 15 white men and women and a half dozen Negroes in their early 20s. Leaders of the cell were not from St. Louis. They had recently "drifted in" from New York, Chicago and Indianapolis.

Meeting in various homes and hotels, we were carefully briefed in CORE's technique of "passive resistance."

Our first assignment was to jam the food line of a downtown St. Louis cafeteria which did not serve Negroes.

With two Negroes in front, white men would enter the serving line during the busy lunch hour. When the Negroes were refused service, we would block the steam table and prevent others from being served.

If anyone started swinging, we were not to fight back, but immediately to demand police protection.

The first try was a failure. The manager simply closed the cafeteria. The second time we were taken to police headquarters, questioned and released.

Then we invaded a segregated swimming pool where police had to quell a near-riot. WE WERE ASSURED BY OUR LEADERS A RIOT WOULD BRING

CORE SEEKING NEW IMPETUS

Supporters of the "Freedom Rider" movement sought today on several fronts to breathe new life into the attack on deep South segregation laws involving interstate travelers.

A federal judge in Montgomery, Ala., was expected to rule on a motion asking that an order barring "Freedom rides" in the state be lifted.

Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr., who issued the original decree last month, will listen to arguments by anti-segregation organizations who claim "Freedom Riders" are merely exercising their constitutional rights and should not be barred from Alabama.

In Washington, the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) scheduled a news conference to announce the itinerary of more riders who will leave the capital later this week for points in the South.

CORE spokesmen said a biracial group of about 30 riders would make the trip.

CAREY SPEAKS OUT

Electrical Workers Union president James B. Carey told a mass biracial rally in Washington Sunday business and industry were "the real and final enemies" of "Freedom Riders."

Carey, secretary-treasurer of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Depart, urged "big business and industry lobbies" to stop supporting Alabama Gov. John Patterson and Gov. Ross Barnett of Mississippi.

He said organized labor, "with exceedingly tiny exceptions," backs the movement. But he told the rally "not one word of protest . . . has come from the National Association of Manufacturers or the U. S. Chamber of Commerce. . . ." Carey was referring to the rioting which occurred last month in Alabama and the mass arrests of riders in Mississippi.

Barnett said he was "too busy with other things" to comment on Carey's remarks and another in which the union leader said Barnett's career depended upon racial segregation.

"I had about 40 planks in my platform," Barnett said in Jackson, "segregation was just one of them."

Mississippi Governor Fears More Incidents By Riders At Prison Farm

PARCHMAN, Miss. (AP) — Gov. Ross Barnett said Thursday 45 "freedom riders" transferred to the state penitentiary would have a good opportunity to create an incident if put to work in the cotton fields.

Barnett said he went to the prison farm to warn prison officials to guard against any incident that would cast a reflection on the state.

"I didn't tell them not to work them as hoe hands," the governor said, "But I told them the freedom riders were looking for trouble and encouraged them to keep the chance of it down."

Barnett said if the riders were placed in the field and refused to work or started running around it would put the guards in a bad light if they could do nothing to control them.

"They couldn't punish them," he said, "because that's just what they want."

PRISON GARB

The riders were garbed in prison stripes in the maximum security unit at Parchman after their transfer from Jackson jails.

The riders will stay in the stone and steel building until next week when a new first offender barracks is due to be completed. It will open up space for 400.

The transfer of 16 white men and 29 Negro men was made to relieve crowded conditions at the Hinds County and city jails.

Officers left behind 13 Negro women, 11 white women, two Negro men and seven white men. There were no plans now to transfer the women.

Some of the men were left behind because of a regulation requiring that transferral come no earlier than ifve days following conviction.

The riders made the four-hour trip in three barred trucks. They loaded shortly after 2 a.m. under guard by armed deputies.

A few began singing freedom rider songs as they waited for the trucks to leave. But the singing died out quickly when the trucks began rolling on the 130-mile trip.

The sprawling prison farm is located in the agricultural delta area near the Mississippi River in northwest Mississippi.

When they arrived at Parchman, two white riders balked at leaving the truck and guards removed them from the vehicle. The same two refused to remove their clothing for a physical examination.

BONDS POSTED

Guards had to pull the clothing from their bodies. The civilian apparel was replaced with convict striped shirts and trousersm

The processing occupied most of the morning.

Nine hours before the convoy left, three of the riders decided to post $500 cash appeal bonds and gain their freedom.

They were: Gwendolyn Jenkins, 21. St. Louis, M[illegible] a Negro who arrived by air June 7; LeRoy Wright, 19, of Nashville Tenn., a Negro student at Fisk University who arrived by Trailways bus May 24; and Robert L. Heller, 19, of Rockville Centren N.Y., a white Tulane University student who arrived by Illinois Central train May 30.

The three brought to 29 the number released on bond. Four others have gained their freedom by paying their fines.

Since May 24, officers said 111 riders have been jailed in Jackson on breach of peace charges in attempts to desegregate bus train and air terminals.

The 110 convicted thus far received penalties ranging from a $200 fine and four months suspended sentence to the maximum $200 fine and four months in jail.

Although the 45 riders were transferred to the state penitentiary, they are still the responsibility of Hinds County

Hinds County OK's Transfer Of Agitators From Jail To Penitentiary

By United Press International

JACKSON, Miss., June 12.—Hinds County supervisors Monday authorized the transfer of self-styled "Freedom Riders" from the county jail to the state penitentiary.

They said the action was taken because the jail here "is overcrowded and without suitable facilities for the present county prisoners."

About 110 riders have poured into Jackson since May 24 in a campaign to "fill up the jails." All have been arrested while attempting to use segregated terminal facilities and later convicted on breach of the peace charges.

Last To Arrive

The last 12 to arrive—members of two groups which came in during the week end—were convicted late Monday afternoon in city court and received maximum sentences of four months in jail plus $200 fines. Earlier arrivals received only fines but most have refused to pay and 85 riders are still in custody.

The board of supervisors passed an order authorizing Sheriff J. R. Gilfoy to transfer the riders to custody of the State of Mississippi. Sheriff Gilfoy said he did not know when he would begin moving them or if all of them would be moved.

Those transferred will be put to work chopping cotton or performing other menial labor in penitentiary work camps in the Mississippi Delta. Prisoners may work off fines at the rate of $3 per day.

Emergency Cited

The board's order said "an emergency exists in Hinds County, Mississippi, with regard to suitable jail facilities." It said overcrowded conditions made Hinds County "unable with its own facilities to provide necessary housing and work as required by statute for its prisoners."

A survey was made, the order said, "and it is hereby determined that the most suitable additional jail facilities for the housing of Hinds County prisoners may be obtained from the State of Mississipip."

12 Riders Convicted

JACKSON, Miss., June 12 (AP)—Police here prepared today for fresh onslaughts by Freedom Riders.

Meanwhile, Municipal Judge James Spencer convicted twelve more Riders on breach-of-peace charges. They were arrested over the week-end. They brought to 110 the number convicted in more than three weeks.

The latest group drew maximum penalties of $200 fines and four months in jail.

Six Riders arrived Saturday. The others arrived yesterday. Both groups came on Greyhound buses.

At least fifty more Riders will move on Jackson this week, a C. O. R. E. official predicted.

There were these other racial developments today:

¶At Biloxi, Miss., a Federal Court hearing began in the first legal attempt to desegregate schools in Mississippi. James H. Meredith, a 28-year-old Negro veteran of the Air Force, seeks to attend the University of Mississippi.

¶Jacksonville, Fla., officials closed municipal swimming pools until further notice in an apparent effort to avoid additional integration attempts. Negroes tried to use the city pool yesterday and found it closed because of bad weather. George Robinson, Recreation Department director, said no decision had been reached as to when the pools would be reopened.

Miss. Prison Is Made Ready

PARCHMAN, Miss. (AP) — Superintendent Fred Jones of the state penitentiary said Wednesday he expects "freedom riders" now in the Hinds county and Jackson jails to be transferred to the penitentiary Thursday.

Jones said he has cleared the maximum security unit and has room for all 80 riders now convicted.

Next week, he said, preparations should be completed at the new first offender camp to house 400 prisoners.

The Hinds county board of supervisors authorized transferral to the state penitentiary of riders when needed to relieve crowded conditions in jails and to provide work for them.

Under the law, prisoners work off their fines.

Since May 24, 111 riders have reached Jackson with the announced intention of challenging the state's segregation laws.

41 In Jackson Jails Reject All Meals, Appeal To Robert Kennedy

The Commercial Appeal

By United Press International

JACKSON, Miss., June 1. — Forty-one jailed protest riders announced Thursday they were on a hunger strike to protest racial segregation. The riders rejected all meals Thursday.

"If they don't want to eat, that's their business," commented Police Chief W. D. Rayfield.

One of the white riders, Cornell University student Charles Haynie, said the strike would continue until Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy sees to it that "racial restrictions" on travelers are eliminated.

Fri 6-2-61

Haynie called his wife in Ithaca, N. Y., and dictated a telegram for Kennedy announcing the strike. It was sent to the attorney general by Mrs. Haynie.

Memphis, Tenn.

One Pays Fine

Another white rider, Peter Stirling, 20, paid his fine for breach of the peace and was released to be married and to take his examinations at Cornell. Stirling paid $197, having received $3 credit for one day in jail.

Earlier, 10 of the 52 riders who have been arrested here were released under appeal bonds. Six white riders remained in city jail and 35 Negro riders, including seven women, remained at the Hinds County jail next door.

Stirling said the white group decided on a hunger strike "to impress upon Atty. Gen. Kennedy that he must do something."

In the county jail, Nashville minister James Lawson said the Negroes agreed to strike "as a reminder to ourselves of the task of reconciliation we have before us."

Three Jackson Negro ministers conducted services for the Negro riders Thursday morning.

Officers in both jails said some of the riders had been seen munching candy and other items since the strike began.

Mayor Allen Thompson said, "The food will be put up for them and if they don't eat, that is entirely up to them."

May Fill Up Jails

So far riders have come in three groups from Montgomery, Ala., one from Nashville and one from New Orleans. All have been arrested while attempting to use white facilities at [redacted] or train depots.

Mayor Thompson told a meeting of city department heads Thursday that riders plan to fill up the jails here. "When we reach the saturation point in our jails," the mayor said, "we will transfer these prisoners to other county jails or to Parchman (state penitentiary) where there is plenty of space."

At Virginia Union University for Negroes, student Charles Sherrod said plans for sending more riders to Jackson by bus have been postponed.

A committee of Cornell University students announced it planned to send 10 or 11 students to Mississippi Saturday and a group of four or five sometime next week.

NAACP ASKS SUPREME COURT TO HALT ARRESTS

High Court asked to halt arrests

WASHINGTON

The NAACP moved on Wednesday to ask the United States Supreme Court to step in and stop the prosecution by Mississippi of some 300 Freedom Riders who attempted to use bus and railway terminal facilities in Jackson, Miss.

Jack Greenberg, counsel of the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, on Wednesday morning delivered a plea for a "stay injunction" to Justice Hugo L. Black, Circuit Justice of the Fifth Circuit.

A Supreme Court spokesman said just what action Justice Black or the Supreme Court will take in the matter would be announced later.

This action by the NAACP stemmed from a Nov. 17 judgment of the three-judge United States District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi, which retained jurisdiction but failed to grant, dissolve, or deny an injunction against the city of Jackson, Miss., its mayor and agents.

are allowed to proceed unchecked, the NAACP contends, more than 300 citizens will suffer imprisonment and fines for "merely attempting to use common carriers and terminal waiting rooms and other facilities," in accordance with the law of the land.

The organization estimated that the total cash bond required for the cases still pending will be approximately $372,000.

In its brief, the organization told the high tribunal that, beginning about May 24, 1960, the Jackson, Miss., chief of police, and other police officers arrested, jailed and then formally charged more than 300 persons with violating state disorderly conduct and breach of the peace statutes enacted as late as 1960.

THE NAACP declared that none of the persons arrested and charged engaged in any conduct other than entering rail and bus terminals and refusing to leave when directed by state authorities.

It said those arrested were held for trial in the city court at Jackson, prosecuted within a day or two, found guilty and sentenced. Some were fined $200 each and given sentences ranging from 60 days to four months.

More than 300 of the persons arrested and convicted appealed their convictions and posted $500 bonds to assure their appearance. Two individuals dismissed their appeals and served out their fines and sentences.

The NAACP asserted that to date, more than 40 additional persons who pleaded not guilty have been convicted, fined $200 and sentenced to serve four months in jail by the Hinds County Court.

* * *

IT IS SHOWN that law enforcement officers refused to agree to delay those cases not yet tried, pending a review by the Circuit Court of Hinds County or the Supreme Court of Mississippi, to which an appeal would normally go.

The NAACP's brief points out that Jack H. Young, Jackson attorney, represents over 300 of the defendants, and that he is hard-pressed in meeting his daily schedules with the court.

"The enormous daily impact and burden inflicted on the plaintiff's cases, by virtue of a vexatious multiple prosecution program now being carried on, is manifest."

the NAACP said.

Besides Greenberg, others representing the Freedom Riders are Mrs. Constance Baker Motley and Derrick M. Nabrit, III both of New York, and R. Jess Brown, of Vicksburg, Miss. Attorney William R. Ming Jr., Chicago attorney, has been named a counsel for the appellants.

If granted, the motion for a stay injunction would restrain the following individuals and concerns: Attorney General of Mississippi, City of Jackson, Jackson Municipal Airport Authority and its leased restaurant; Continental Southern Lines, Inc.; Southern Greyhound Lines (a division of Greyhound corp.); Illonois Central Railroad, Inc., and Jackson City Lines, Inc.

Judges may forbid Miss. to continue arrests of 'Riders'

The Ogo American p.3 Oct. 10-7-61
Baltimore Md.

JACKSON, Miss. — If the opinion of Richard T. Rives, chief judge of the 5th U.S. Circuit Court prevails, arrests of Freedom Riders and others who defy Mississippi segregation will be outlawed.

Saying that he spoke only for himself and that his opinion is not binding in his two fellow judges, Judge Rives says he is inclined to rule in favor of a suit to abolish all jim crow in bus, rail and air terminals in the state and on city bus lines.

He says also that city police should not be allowed to arrest persons who make orderly and peaceful attempts to break down segregation barriers. (So far, Jackson police have arrested 312 Freedom Riders.)

Associated with Judge Rives on the bench are District Judges Sidney Mize of Gulfport and Claude Clayton of Tupelo. Judge Rives has his headquarters in Montgomery, Ala.

THE SUIT was filed by NAACP attorneys on behalf of Samuel Bailey, Joseph Broadwater and Burnett Jacob, all of Jackson. It is a class action so the decision will have a sweeping effect.

Defendants are: the City of Jackson, State Attorney General Joe Patterson, Greyhound and Trailways bus companies, Illinois Central Railroad, Jackson City Lines, the Jackson Municipal Airport Authority and Cicero's Airport Restaurant.

Judge Rives said that if the three judges decide that the segregation laws are unconstitutional and that jimcrow signs should come down they can issue a preliminary injunction within ten days. The court is not definitely scheduled to rule, however, for another 20 days.

* * *

DURING TESTIMONY last week, the railroad and bus companies said they had no segregation policies and they merely obeyed state laws and city ordinances.

Junior O'Mara, lawyer for the bus companies, said company policy to let passengers seat themselves where they wish.

J. Will Young, attorney for the city bus line, urged that the court rule quickly on the issue. He said that in view of city segregation regulations, his bus line could be put out of action by a mass movement by colored persons to ride unsegregated.

MAYOR ALLEN THOMPSON testified that city policy calls for "separation of the races and not segregation ... to maintain the same peace and happiness that has existed over the past 100 years."

Attorney General Patterson said "The State does not attempt to supervise and regulate public transportation in Mississippi. The segregation laws reflect the attitude of the legislators at the time of their enactment."

Asked by the court about the popularity of segregation laws, Mr. Patterson said:

"The segregation laws have not been used since I don't know when. They are not in use."

Jackson City Police Capt. J. L. Ray said he arrested Freedom Riders after they refused to move on when told. He said their presence would provoke a breach of the peace.

City Police Chief W. D. Rayfield told the court: "I am convinced trouble would have occurred had we not arrested them."

He said he ordered that jimcrow signs be put up in train and bus stations "to direct the races to their respective rooms and to help police maintain law and order. I put them there under the segregation ordinance."

Should Judge Rives' two associates over-rule him, the case will probably be heard in the U.S. Supreme Court.

Temporary Order Extended —McComb Official Says Chaos Likely

Feb. 7, 1961

By United Press International

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 7. — A selectman from the strife-torn city of McComb testified Thursday that more so-called "Freedom Rides" to the South Mississippi community would "result in chaos."

Memphis, Tenn.

Charles Gordon delivered the testimony in a Federal Court hearing on a request by state and city officials that pro-integration groups be enjoined from sponsoring further rides to the city.

Following the one-day hearing, United States District Judge Harold Cox of Jackson took the matter under advisement. Judge Cox extended a temporary restraining order against the rides until he reaches a decision.

Order Ended Unrest

Angry crowds of whites roamed the streets and at least a dozen persons were beaten last week during racial unrest brought on by the rides, but Mr. Gordon said the situation "cleared up tremendously" after the restraining order was granted Saturday by District Judge Sidney Mize of Biloxi.

In the hearing, Mr. Gordon and five other witnesses gave testimony regarding the rides, the violence, the Congress of Racial Equality and advance publicity of the integration attempts.

Charles Clark, a special attorney for the city of McComb, said such rides were designed to stir up violence and they should be stopped to protect the civil rights of the city's residents. "I think the Federal court system has forgotten that white people have civil rights," Mr. Clark told Judge Cox. "Apparently your skin has to be black for you to have civil rights."

Mr. Clark charged that the riders came to McComb "in hopes that somebody would jump on them and they would get their picture taken." He said the "whole affair was to make a whipping boy of McComb, creating incidents and advancing these groups' financial interests so they can sponsor further agitation."

Carl Rachlin, a New York attorney representing the Congress of Racial Equality, said that the riders were not violent at McComb and should not be blamed for the violence. "This is like accusing a turkey of murder on Thanksgiving because he gets his head chopped off," Rachlin told the judge.

The restraining order is scheduled to end at 4 p.m. Dec. 12, but Judge Cox said it would be extended until he could make a ruling on the injunction request. However, he can extend it no longer than Dec. 22.

McComb Mayor C. H. Douglas testified that last week's violence "hurt business" in the city but that conditions returned to normal following issuance of the restraining order.

Restaurant Closed

Aubrey McGee, operator of the Greyhound Terminal, testified he had closed his bus station restaurant "to keep down violence" and was suffering financially. "I got word that C.O.R.E. would be there again and figured the best thing I could do would be to shut her up," said McGee.

Police Chief George Guy testified he had to send for reinforcements in order to preserve the peace during a publicized integration attempt. But, he said, when Negroes showed up at the terminal without advance publicity Saturday "there was hardly enough people there to start a good crap game."

State and city attorneys said the requested injunction would not prevent integration of the terminal.

Fri 12-15-61

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal government asked the Supreme Court Thursday night to halt action in Mississippi state courts in about 300 "Freedom Rider" cases until the high tribunal rules on the issues involved.

Montgomery Ala.

The brief was signed by Archibald Cox, solicitor general, and Burke Marshall, assistant attorney general in charge of the Civil Rights Division.

Since about May 24, 1961, it said more than 300 persons who attempted to use transportation facilities on a non-segregated basis have been arrested in Jackson. All 300 have been convicted in the Jackson city court and almost all have appealed to the county court of Hinds County, the brief said.

It added that state law enforcement officers in charge of the prosecutions have refused to delay the cases not yet tried pending review of a test case.

The justice department's brief joins an appeal by Negroes in seeking an injunction against further action in the state courts pending Supreme Court action.

A three-man U.S. district court in southern Mississippi turned down the appeal for an injunction by a 2-1 vote last month. The Negroes appealed to the Supreme Court last week and the court gave Mississippi until 9 a.m. Friday to file a response.

Thus, the Justice Department entered the case as a "friend of the court" as the deadline neared.

The department's brief said the defendants "are being prosecuted for exercising federal constitutional and statutory rights under a procedure imposing such onerous burdens as virtually to compel them to forego appellate remedies." It continued:

"The requirement of heavy bonds, the refusal of bonding companies write bail bonds, the necessity of making long and expensive trips to meet the requirement of personal presence, and the systematic refusal to stay proceedings in hundreds of cases pending the disposition or important questions of constitutional law, will, unless further prosecution is stayed, compel many of the Mississippi defendants to surrender substantial constitutional claims."

More 'Freedom Riders' Jailed In Mississippi

The News and Observer
Raleigh, N.C.
Mon. 5-29-61

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Seventeen "Freedom Riders" were arrested and jailed here Sunday in two separate incidents in a whites-only waiting room at a bus station.

Police charged them with breach of the peace.

Nine persons — seven Negroes and two whites — were arrested during the morning. Eight more — six Negroes and two whites — were arrested in the afternoon.

Did Not Budge.

Arrests were made after police Capt. J. L. Ray told them "you'll have to move on," and they didn't budge.

One Negro woman was arrested as she used a white waiting-room telephone.

Two persons were arrested and searched after they took seats in the white waiting room.

Otherwise there were no incidents as the number of prisoners grew to 17. The latest arrivals were from Montgomery, Ala.

Earlier, nine persons were arrested as they climbed off a Memphis-to-New Orleans bus and strode into the white waiting room.

Ray had told them to move on. When they did nothing, Ray said: "Did you hear me say move on?"

Into Paddy Wagon.

Officers then herded them into a paddy wagon under the watchful eyes of highway patrolmen and FBI agents. The officers were not needed, however, as there was only a handful of spectators at the station and no incidents occurred.

Last week, 27 riders were arrested and subsequently convicted by Municipal Judge James Spencer on breach of peace charges. Five gained freedom on bond, but 22 still were behind bars.

In Montgomery, scene a week ago Saturday of bloody rioting, no attempt was made to arrest the Jackson-bound riders when they used white rest room facilities at the whiet lunchroom, but it was closed. The two white riders then headed for the Negro lunchroom, but as they approached, it, too, was closed.

It was the same bus station where 11 integrationists were arrested last Thursday when they sat at a white lunch counter.

Were Convoyed.

A spokesman for the Congress of Racial Equality—CORE, Tom Gaither of Great Falls, S.C., said the nine riders were convoyed to the Montgomery bus terminal by National Guardsmen from the home of the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, where they had spent the night after arriving in Montgomery Saturday. National Guardsmen and state patrolmen escorted their bus toward the Mississippi line.

Included in the Montgomery group Sunday was Allen Cason, 19, Orlando, Fla., student at Tennessee A&I, who was with the original Freedom Riders group which was attacked by a mob in Montgomery.

Others in the Montgomery group as identified by Gaither were:

Formally booked on breach of peace charges in Jackson were: Catherine Burks, 21, Birmingham, Ala.; Frances Wilson, 22, Nashville; Frederick Leonard, 18, Chattanooga, Tenn.; Lester G. McKinnie, 21, Bolivar, Tenn.; Mary Jean Smith, 19, Nashville; Etta Simpson, 19, Nashville; William Harbour, 19, Nashville; William Mitchell Jr., 19, Oklahoma City, and Clarence Wright, 19, Nashville.

Bus Riders Choose To Stay In Jail

The News and Courier
Charleston, S.C.
Sat. 5-27-61

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—Twenty seven "Freedom Riders," convicted Friday of breach of the peace in a desegregation attempt, elected to remain in jail rather than post bond or pay the $200 fine and attend a National Association for The Advancement of Colored People rally.

Jack Young, attorney for the 27, told newsmen after conferring with his clients that they elected to remain in jail "at least for the present."

The 27 then transferred to Hinds County jail across the street.

Three hours earlier, City Judge James Spencer convicted them of breach of the peace and sentenced them to $200 fine and 60 days in jail. He then suspended the jail term at the request of the prosecution.

Meanwhile, the NAACP rally, attended by 125 persons, adopted a resolution urging Gov. Ross ...nett to "exert the powers of office to eliminate every legal barrier in contradiction to the rulings and decisions of the federal courts and in opposition to the U. S. Constitution."

Spencer told the riders their conduct already has led to mob action and it would appear that they wanted violence. He said they sought to inflame the people to fight it out among themselves instead of taking their cases through the courts.

The youthful-looking judge, talking in slow, deliberate tones, told the 27 — all but two of them Negroes — "the sole purpose that they came to Mississippi was to breach the peace."

He said that he was not trying any segregation laws or the defendants rights to ride on any particular buses in any way, or to eat at any place.

If any person wanted to challenge the laws, he said, orderly methods are provided by law.

"These people took the laws into their owns hands and flagrantly disobeyed the law," he said in a statement before he handed down the sentence.

COURTROOM QUIET

Defense attorney Jack Young said before any decision was made on a possible appeal he would have to talk to each of the 27 individually. Some may want to appeal and some may want to pay the fine, and some to sit it out, he said.

The small courtroom was quiet during the two-hour trial, witnessed by about 100 persons.

An aisle down the middle of the room divided the seats. White persons — all newsmen — occupied the right side. The defendants, Negro newsmen, and a few Negro spectators occupied the other.

Spencer permitted no cameras in the courtroom.

The defense charged that police herded the riders into the white waiting room of a Jackson bus station in a "plot to arrest them." They were originally arrested on charges of breach of peace and failure to obey an officer, but the latter charge was dropped by the city "because we don't want to be too harsh."

21 Riders–Including Legislator–Jailed In Mississippi

The Montgomery Advertiser 6-12-61 Montgomery, Ala.

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—Twenty-one more segregation-testing travelers — including a white New York State assemblyman — were convicted of breach of the peace charges here Thursday.

Municipal Judge James Spencer fined the riders $200 each and sentenced them to four months in jail. He suspended two months of the sentence.

The group included nine white persons and 12 Negroes who were arrested Wednesday and Thursday at Jackson bus, train and airline terminals.

One white man whose arrest had not been announced was also convicted.

He was Mike Audain of Vancouver, Canada. He was arrested at a bus terminal en route to New Orleans.

Police said Audain told them he read of the "Freedom Riders" while he was in San Francisco and came here on his own to test the laws.

Their arrest brought the total of jailed riders to 92. Only one continued a hunger strike. Police said there were 275 more jail spaces still available here.

As has been the pattern here there was no violence.

Mark Lane, 33, a New York state lawmaker from Manhattan, and Percy Sutton, 40, president of a New York City branch of the NAACP, were arrested soon after they got off a Delta Airlines plane.

They refused to leave the white men's rest room.

The two, who were served without incident at an earlier stop in a Montgomery, Ala., bus terminal restaurant, said they were merely curious travelers.

NOT CHALLENGING

"We're not challenging any racial customs," Sutton said in Montgomery. "We're just travelers curious to see what the situation is."

"I'm very concerned that some of my constituents have been arrested in the South and I'm looking into the situation," Lane said.

Later, nine riders from New Orleans—including four white girls — were arrested in the railroad terminal.

Police took the four white girls and a Negro girl into custody when they sat together in the railroad waiting room. Four Negro men, who took seats a few feet away, were arrested when they refused orders to move.

The white riders were: Jane Rosett, 18, Durham, N.C.; Joan Trumpower, 18, Washington, D.C., Helene Wilson, 26, Washington and Terry Perlman, 19, New York City, a student at the College of the City of New York.

The arrested Negroes were: The Rev. Robert Wesby, 33, of Aurora, Ill.; Travis Britt, 27 Brooklyn, N.Y.; John Triggs, 18, New Rochells, N.Y.; Gwendolyn Green, Washington, a Howard University student; and Stokely Carmichael, 19, New York, also a Howard student.

In Tallahassee, Fla., three Negroes were denied service at a white lunch counter of the Greyhound bus station Wednesday night. They continued their trip to Jacksonville after the unsuccessful attempt.

the maximum possible sentence to four months in prison and $200 fine.

Gov. Ross Barnett ordered the highway patrol to escort the group nonstop through Mississippi on its destination to New Orleans. But the riders ignored officers enforcing segregation laws at Jackson's depot.

The American Jewish Congress Friday asked Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy to intervene as a friend of the court in behalf of the riders arrested at Jackson.

The Jewish group also asked the Justice Department to seek injunction suits to prevent any further arrests of Freedom Riders in Jackson and to prevent a state judge in Alabama from prohibiting the riders use of bus terminal facilities.

At Montgomery, 11 Freedom Riders were arrested Thursday after their challenge of bus station segregation laws. A court hearing is set June 16 of charges of breach of the peace while trying to eat at a white lunch counter in the terminal.

Legislator From New York Joins 'Riders' In Jackson Jail

By CLIFF SESSIONS
United Press International Staff

JACKSON, Miss., June 8.—Eleven more so-called "Freedom Riders" arrived here Thursday and, along with 10 who came in Wednesday, were convicted in city court Thursday afternoon of breaching the peace.

Thursday's arrivals included Mark Lane, 33, a New York state assemblyman, and Percy Sutton, 40, president of the New York NAACP. They were taken into custody after using a segregated rest room at the Jackson airport.

Soon after they arrived by plane from Montgomery, Ala., another inter-racial group of nine came on a train from New Orleans and went to jail when they refused to leave a "white only" waiting room at the Illinois Central depot.

The arrests brought to 93 the number of integrationist riders who have been arrested and convicted in the past 15 days here.

Three of the 21 tried Thursday afternoon, two Negro men and a Negro woman who flew from St. Louis Wednesday, had no attorney and were tried separately from the others, who were represented by Jackson Negro lawyer Jack Young.

Canadian 'Lone Wolf'

None of the riders offered testimony on their own behalf and, following brief testimony by police Capt. J. L. Ray, were sentenced by Judge James L. Spencer. All drew $200 fines and four-month jail terms, with two of the four months suspended.

The defendants included a "lone wolf," Michael J. Audain, a 23-year-old white student from Vancouver, British Columbia.

Most of the riders have made previously-publicized trips sponsored by the Congress on Racial Equality. But Audain, who told officers he was not a C.O.R.E. member, came here alone and unannounced Wednesday night and was arrested for refusing to leave the Negro waiting room at the Greyhound bus station.

Detective Chief M. B. Pierce said Audain told him he was touring the United States when, in San Francisco, he read about the riders and decided to come here.

Among the defendants were persons who had been arrested at each of Jackson's two bus stations, the airport and the train depot.

The defendants — 10 Negro males, two Negro females, five white females and four white males—began talking in the courtroom during a brief recess and an officer told them, "Y'all had better be quiet now."

Refusing legal counsel and refusing to ask for a delay in their trial were Gwendolyn Jenkins, 21, Robert Jenkins, 27, and Ralph Washington, 24. Their arrival Wednesday was the first "fly in" of the movement.

The second came Thursday morning when Lane, a white New York City attorney, and Sutton, a Negro attorney from Springfield Gardens, N. Y., alighted from their flight and strode immediately into the terminal and through the door marked "white men."

One of the dozen policemen awaiting their arrival notified Capt. Ray, who was sipping coffee in the airport restaurant. Ray walked into the rest room and told the pair to "move on." They walked out, into the waiting room, but were arrested when they ignored orders to leave the terminal.

Asks About Jail

"I am an interstate passenger," Sutton protested, but Ray said, "You're under arrest for refusing to obey an officer."

Lane asked a policeman who escorted him to a waiting patrol car, "What kind of accommodations do you have in the jail here?" The officer said they were good.

Lane, who was elected to the New York Assembly from the Manhattan District after bucking Tammany Hall, is a former legislative assistant to United States Representative Alfred Santangelo. Sutton, born in San Antonio, Texas, was elected president of the New York Branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People last year.

Lane and Sutton, who were served orange juice without incident at a previously-segregated counter at Montgomery Wednesday, said they were getting a first-hand look at the racial situation in the Deep South.

They were to leave for Atlanta Thursday night after being released under $500 appeal bonds. Lane said he is "looking forward to these cases before the United States Supreme Court. But I'm sorry that Mississippi doesn't have a better case." He said he planned to bring his own legal actions against the state at a later date.

The remaining 191 "freedom rider" cases started marching through county court this morning after a jury found 19-year-old Henry Thomas, the first rider to be tried on appeal, guilty of the breach of the peace charge.

Julia Aaron, New Orleans Negro girl who arrived in Jackson with Thomas in the second busload of freedom riders at 4:45 May 24, went on trial this morning.

The trial was expected to take only one day, with the prosecution using only one witness to establish the defendant's coming into Jackson with the riders and one witness to attest to conditions at the Trailways bus station when the group arrived.

The defense may rest its case without putting any witnesses on the stand, as it did in Thomas' case.

The jurors deliberated 40 minutes yesterday afternoon filing back into the tense courtroom. They lined up behind the defense and prosecuting tables as jury forman J. B. Thompson Jr. read the verdict.

Defense attorney William Kunstler of New York immediately asked for a poll of the jury. One by one the 12 men repeated down the line, "I voted guilty. . .guilty . . .guilty."

FOUR MONTHS, $200

Thomas kept all expression from his face, both while the verdict was being read and as the judge pronounced sentence, four months in jail and $200 fine. Thomas has already served 45 days in the Jackson city jail, the Hinds county epenal farm and the state penitentiary at Parchman on his first sentence, $200 and two months in jail, imposed by city court.

The defense attorneys immediately announced they would file a motion for a new trial and, if that motion was overruled by Judge Russel Moore, would appeal to Hinds County circuit court. "We will appeal to the U. S. Supreme court if necessary," said Kunstler.

An argument broke out between counsel immediately after the verdict over whether nor not a cash bond of $2000 could be posted. Kunstler tried to post the bond with the clerk of the court.

Judge Moore told Kunstler that, although he had no personal objection, Mississippi law makes no provision for a cash bond, listing only surety and property bonds as acceptable.

Prosecuting Attorney Jack Travis asked that a written opinion be obtained from the Mississippi attorney general's office before allowing the bond to be posted. He said an oral opinion in favor of cash bonds was given by state Attorney General Joe Patterson when the riders were tried

First to Be Convicted on Appeal of Charge

JACKSON, Miss., (AP) — An all-white Hinds county jury convicted the first "Freedom Rider" on appeal Thursday of breach of the peace after his attempt to desegregate the white waiting room of a bus station.

"We, the jury, find the defendant guilty as charged, "the verdict read after the all-male jurors deliberated 45 minutes.

New Orleans La

The defense said they would appeal the county court sentence of four months in jail and $500 fine against Henry Thomas, 19-year-old Negro, to the circuit court, and if necessary, to the state and U. S. supreme courts.

County Judge Russel Moore set the trial date for the second rider on appeal for 9 a. m. Friday. The rider is Julia Aaron, 19-year-old New Orleans Negro.

The case went to the jury after the defense rested without placing a witness on the stand.

Prosecuting atty. Jack Travis told the jury in closing arguments the basic question in the case was "whether there would be law enforcement or a complete breakdown in law enforcement.

"That, gentlemen, lies in your hands."

'NO EVIDENCE'

Defense atty. William Kunstler said in summation the state did not "show one shred of evidence that the defendant committed or intended to commit any breach of the peace.

"A defendant should not be arrested without evidence he committed an act of violence or was on the verge of committing."

County atty. Paul Alexander said the jury must find Thomas guilty if he "willfully and unlawfully congregated under circumstances given that a breach of peace might be occasioned thereby.

"Every witness testified the situation was explosive, the people tense, upset and ready for a riot.

"The officer asked him to move on and what did he do? —Nothing! He refused to obey an officers order to move on."

Kuntsler said the instructions of the court provides the jury cannot find Thomas guilty if another party was about to commit a breach of the peace or if the arresting officer suspicioned that other people might breach the peace.

"The defendant broke no law," Kuntsler said, "He was peaceful, as every witness testified."

Travis said, "turn him loose and law enforcement breaks down. Blood will flow and there will be violence. You can't imagine what would happen."

Kuntsler said "what Travis is tellig you is that if any person, including yourselves, fails to move on, regardless of whether he has committed an offense, blood will flow in the streets."

He said this jury has the opportunity to decide favorably for the defendant, a decision which would have nationwide impact and do much to settle the undertones of the racial situation.

ARRESTED MAY 24

Thomas, a Howard university student from St. Augustine, Fla., a Negro, was arrested May 24 with the second bus load of riders from Montgomery and convicted the next day on breach of peace charges. He was one of 190 riders who appealed their city court convictions to county court.

The state had presented 15 witnesses, all testifying the presence of riders caused crowds to gather and threaten violence. They added, however, that the riders did not provoke the violence.

Defense attorneys unsuccessfully sought to read several Mississippi statuates and a constitutional provision providing for segregation of the races.

They also sought to read a U. S. supreme court decision (Boynton vs. Virginia) which ruled a Negro in Virginia had a constitutional right to use the white portion of a restaurant in on interstate bus terminal.

Capt. J. L. Ray, the arresting officer of most riders when they arrived in Jackson, said the arrests came because threats of violence from "foul, ugly" crowds and the riders' refusal to follow orders to move on.

He said, "some people told me if you'll let us handle this we'll take care of this outside group."

Julia Aaron Is Convicted As Jury Deliberates 15 Minutes

Sat 8-26-61

By The Associated Press

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 25. — A county court jury convicted a second so-called "Freedom Rider" on appeal from a city court conviction Friday after deliberating less than 15 minutes.

Memphis News

Julia Aaron, 19-year-old Southern University student from New Orleans, received a $200 fine and four months jail term. Henry J. Thomas, 19-year-old former Howard University student tried Thursday, received the same sentence.

Both were convicted of breach of peace after they attempted to desegregate the white facilities of the Trailways Bus Station May 24, the day the first "Riders" arrived in Jackson.

Appeal Bond Posted

Thomas posted a $2,000 cash appeal bond Friday and said he was going back to Washington. Miss Aaron said she planned to stay in jail.

Her attorneys told the all-white jury in closing arguments she was arrested while exercising her constitutional rights as an interstate passenger.

The state said her presence created a circumstance such that "a breach of the peace might be occasioned thereby."

Defense Attorney Speaks

Defense attorney Jack Young, a Jackson Negro, told the jury:

"The state is saying if someone threw a brick through the window of your car, you should be arrested for having your car there."

Prosecuting attorney Jack Travis asked jurors:

"Do you want this type of in city court, and at present, there is over $100,000 on deposit with Sheriff Bob Gilfoy.

Kunstler contended this was precedent enough for acceptance of cash bonds in county court.

AWAIT RULING

Moore released the defendant in Kunstler's charge until a ruling could be obtained from the attorney general this morning.

In his closing argument, Prosecutor Travis told the jury the case involved the basic question of "whether or not we have law enforcement or complete breakdown of our law enforcement."

He likened the decision to a three-link chain, the first link law enforcement, the next prosecution and the final one jurors.

"If you want protection from anyone that might come in," he said, "riffraff, subversives—then you must convict this defendant. Turn him loose and that three-link chain is broken. Anybody or group can converge on us and blood will flow.

8-25-61

"If we are to have law enforcement with the people of the state of Mississippi and the City of Jackson protected, there is no alternative but to bring in a verdict of guilty against this defendant who came to Jackson to provoke bloodshed just as he did in Alabama."

Chief Defense Counselor Kunstler jumped to his feet to object to the Alabama violence and was sustained by Judge Moore.

CONTENDS 'DID NOTHING'

Kunstler insisted by re-reading the specific defense instructions to the jury that Thomas could not be convicted of a breach of peace because he "did nothing."

He said Travis had made a fine political speech "declaring blood will flow, but he tells you that when a policeman tells you to

Protest Rider Is Convicted For Second Time

By United Press International

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 24. — Twelve white jurors took 40 minutes Thursday to convict a protect rider of breach of the peace after a prosecutor asked them to do their part to combat "riff-raff and subversives."

Thomas

It was the second time Negro Henry Thomas was convicted, the first being in police court after he entered the white waiting room of a bus terminal. He was the first of 192 riders scheduled to get jury trials in County Court as part of their appeal process.

Defense attorneys will appeal the case through the state courts and, if necessary, to the United States Supreme Court. The next stop is Hinds County Circuit Court.

No witnesses were presented by the defense, which rested immediately after Jugde Russel Moore rejected a motion that a United States Supreme Court decision banning segregation in interstate transporation facilities be read into the court record.

'Did Our Best'

After the trial, Thomas, a field secretary for the Congress of Racial Equality, shook hands with C.O.R.E. general counsel Carl Rachlin.

"Henry, we did our best," said the New York lawyer.

"Good show," replied the 19-year-old defendant. "We'll get 'em before it's over."

Julia Aaron, a 20-year-old Negro rider from New Orleans, goes on trial at 9 a.m. Friday. Rachlin was asked by a newsman how long her trial would take.

Gets Four Months

"Presumably as long as this one," he answered.

This one took two days, excluding a day the defense devoted to challenging Mississippi jury system practices.

Judge Moore sentenced Thomas to four months in jail and fined him $200. The penalty was twice as stiff as that he received in Municipal Court. Thomas was free on $2,000 bond.

City Prosecutor Jack Travis told the all-male, all-protestant jury that the "basic question" concerns "law enforcement . . . or a complete breakdown of law enforcement."

"If a police officer doesn't have power to have someone move on," Travis said, "law enforcement breaks down."

The prosecutor went on to say, "If you want your property protected from riff-raff and subversives you must return a guilty verdict."

move on and you don't you have committed a crime.

"We are not saying a policeman should not have the right to arrest, but we are saying the defendant should not be arrested merely because a police officer says "move on" just as though he was on the verge of committing an act of violence."

"We are so convinced that this defendant is not guilty, that we didn't put on a case," Kunstler said, "they proved our case for us. There isn't one shred of evidence that this defendant was about to breach the peace."

Special Prosecutor Paul Alexander concluded the arguments to the jury stating that Thomas' arrest was for the very thing "which he didn't do. He did nothing, he did not move on and the people of Jackson were upset and ready for violence."

"Mississippi has an excellent record of law enforcement, and Jackson particularly has a magnificent record. This is a question of whether the police has the right to protect us from violence and riots.

PERSONAL STAKES INVOLVED

"If you lived somewhere else, you might not be so interested in law enforcement here, but this is your home and you want to feel secure in your beds at night."

Alexander said that because of the defendant's presence here and under the circumstances, there was tension throughout the city and that police officers had no other choice but to arrest the man for refusing to obey their order.

The prosecution submitted only two instructions to the jury and the defense had 31 dealing with the manner of consideration of evidence and form of verdict.

Freedom Riders Stage Tougaloo Rally

The Courier

JACKSON, Miss. — Some 189 "Freedom Riders" gathered at Tougaloo College prior to entering Hinds County Court to appeal their convictions for breach of the peace.

Immediately afterwards a white businessman turned in his resignation as a trustee of the school, and charged the institution with becoming a "rallying place for outside agitators."

The riders came in all modes of transportation from all parts of the country. All of them had been arrested for challenging racial barriers in Jackson, and had been released on $500 bond each.

Judge Russell Moore, in charge of the proceedings, announced that he would dispose of the appeals on what amounted to a day-to-day basis. He said he would hear two cases a day, with some exceptions, until a final session, now scheduled for Jan. 28, 1962.

AFTER THE riders met for a briefing at Tougaloo, Stephen Meisburg, executive secretary of the Mississippi Pine Manufacturing Association, in a letter to Tougaloo President A. D. Beittel, said:

"I didn't want the college mixed up with the Freedom Ride business and I think it was very unwise for the institution to side with Northern agitators."

Meisburg said he did not know anything about the planned rally before it was held, and said he would have done "all in my power" to stop it if he had known about it in advance.

Weisburg added that "during the past 10 years, I have had a real interest in the program of the college to provide Christian higher education to our Negro boys and girls so that their people may have adequate leadership in the ministry and other professions.

"However since the college has become a rallying place for outside agitators, it has forestalled any efforts on my part to build goodwill between it and our community, and I feel I can no longer make a contribution."

Rider Is Sentenced In Jackson Court

Chicago Negro Given Fine, Suspended Term

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 8.—(AP) — Protest rider Frank Johnny Ashford pleaded no contention Friday in his appeal of a breach of peace conviction, and Hinds County Judge Russel Moore sentenced him to $200 fine and a suspended 4-month jail term.

Earlier, Judge Moore ordered forfeit for $500 bond posted by rider Harold Andrews, 23-year-old Negro student at Morehouse College in Atlanta.

When Andrews did not show up in court Thursday, Judge Moore gave him until 8:30 a.m. Friday. When his attorney was unable to locate him immediately, Judge Moore extended the time until 10 a.m., and finally ordered the bond forfeit when he didn't show up.

Ashford changed his plea from not guilty, declining to contend the issue and accepted the decision of the court. It was the first nolo contendere plea since the appeals trials began Aug. 22.

Earlier, the ride-sponsoring Congress of Racial Equality asked the appealing riders to withdraw their appeals and serve their original sentences because the cases were being bogged down in legal procedure.

Ashford, 22-year-old Chicago Negro, was a student at Marion College. He was arrested June 6 while trying to desegregate the Trailways bus terminal. He had been sentenced to a $200 fine and four months in jail, with two months suspended.

Another Rider Gets Term, Fine

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — A Hinds County Court jury convicted "Freedom Rider" Thomas Armstrong of Sliver Creek after another rider failed to show up for trial Thursday.

Judge Russel Moore gave Armstrong, 19-year-old Negro student at Tougaloo Southern Christian College, a four-month jail sentenc and a $200 fine. He posted $1,500 bond and was released.

Moore told defense attorneys that Harold Andrews, 23-year-old negro student at Morehouse College in Atlanta, Ga., must appear in court by 8:30 a.m. Friday or forfeit his $500 appeal bond. His attorney said be was late in arriving from New York.

The remaining 180 Freedom Riders must either plead guilty or stand trial on their appeals because a state Supreme Court ruling forbids withdrawal of an appeal, Moore said.

The Supreme Court ruled in three separate decisions, he said, that appeals from city or justice of the peace court were considered new trials and could not be withdrawn.

'Riders' Urged By CORE To Serve Jackson Terms

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Congress of Racial Equality Monday urged all "Freedom Riders" who have appealed their convictions on breaching the peace in Jackson, Miss. to return there and serve sentences imposed in city court.

It said 260 now are free on bond. The cases stem from the Congress' efforts earlier this year to break down racial segregation in bus, railroad and airport terminal facilities. Most of the sentences were for two months' imprisonment plus fines of $200.

At the same time CORE announced the launching of new campaigns to end discriminatory employment practices in national retail chain stores, to secure unlimited decent housing for all Americans and to continue and intensify its campaign for registering eligible Negro voters.

It said the attack on employment practices will place "particular emphasis" on Sears Roebuck and might later include a nationwide Negro boycott of its goods.

The decisions were made in resolutions adopted at the conclusion of the Congress' annual four-day convention here.

Convicted on Four Counts at Jackson

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — A Hinds county court jury convicted James L. Bevel, 24-year-old Congress of Racial Equality field secretary, on four counts Wednesday of contributing to the delinquency of a minor.

Bevel was accused of inducing juveniles to become "freedom riders."

Bevel, a native of Itta Bena, Miss., and a Negro, handled his own defense and cited bible teachings and principles of the nonviolent movement.

Prosecutor Robert Nichols said the bible was not involved in a legal case and that the Negro minors had given statements saying Bevel induced them to try to desegregate a Jackson bus terminal.

County Judge Russel Moore gave Bevel a $500 fine and six-month term on each count, a total of $2000 and two years. Moore said afterward he had advised Bevel he would get a suspended sentence if he chose not to contest the charges, but that Bevel had decided to fight the case.

Bevel made no move to appeal the conviction or gain freedom by posting an appeal bond.

Bevel was among the first riders to reach Jackson, May 24. He was sentenced to a $200 fine and 60-day suspended sentence and gained freedom June 13 by posting a $500 appeal bond. He was free on bond when arrested July 14 on the four counts involving juveniles.

He was convicted July 18 on the juvenile charges and given a $500 fine and six-month term.

Two rider cases also came up in Moore's court.

Mack Charles Wells, 20-year-old Jackson Negro, pleaded nolo contendere—no contest—to the breach of peace charge and Moore gave him a $200 fne and a four-month suspended sentence.

Wells was arrested July 6 as an outgoing passenger at the Illinois Central train station and received a $200 fine and four-month term. He gained his freedom Aug. 16 by posting a $500 appeal bond.

Leora Berman, 18-year-old Chicago white student, was convicted by a jury on breach of peace charges in her appeal trial and Moore gave her a $200 fine and four-month term.

She was arrested June 10 after seeking to desegregate a bus terminal here and received a $200 fine and four-month term.

She planned to appeal and gained her freedom by posting an appeal bond through her attor, William Harrell of Macon, Ga.

CORE Official Is Convicted

A convicted Freedom Rider former field secretary for the Congress of Race Equality, who served a sentence for breach of peace, stood alone in Hinds County Court yesterday and unsuccessfully defended himself on four charges of contributing to the delinquency of a minor.

James L. Bevel, 24-year old Negro, was convicted on all counts and sentenced to a total of $2,000 fine and two years in jail. He did not appeal.

Both Special Prosecutor Bob Nichols, Jr., and Judge Moore discussed the cases with Bevel prior to trial, suggesting he enter no contest pleas to the charges growing out of his recruiting of four local youths in a non-violent movement in connection with Freedom Rider activities.

Bevel refused to enter the changed pleading which might have brought a lesser sentencing and said he would plead his own defense. CORE did not provide any legal counsel.

Two more Freedom Rider cases are scheduled for trial today, with Mildred J. Blue, 16, of 1901 N. Lamar street, Jackson, and Travis Britt, 27-year old Brooklyn cafe worker, docketed.

Yesterday, Judge Moore sentenced Mack Charles Wells, Jackson Negro, to $200 fine and four months suspended sentence when he plead no contest rather than stand trial.

Negroes' Suit Would Put a Stop To Mississippi's Arrest of Riders

JACKSON, Miss., June 9 (UPI).—Negro attorneys filed suit in Jackson today to stop the arrest of Freedom Riders under Mississippi segregation laws. The Justice Department, meanwhile, went to the legal aid of the riders in Alabama.

The suit was filed in Federal District Court here just a few hours after local officials stepped in and arrested another group of five riders that arrived in Jackson by train from Nashville, Tenn., and attempted to use segregated facilities. They included Del Greenblatt, twenty-one, of 4407 15th Ave., Brooklyn, a white female student at Cornell University. Ninety-eight Freedom Riders have been jailed in Mississippi's capital city since May 24.

More Setting Out

A Congress of Racial Equality spokesman in Atlanta said, meanwhile, that the movement was gaining momentum and new rides were being organized in Nashville, New Orleans, St. Louis, Memphis and Atlanta.

The spokesman, B. E. Cox, said some of the rides would have destinations other than Jackson. He said one group, including some "professional people," was organizing in Maryland and would set out soon for Florida, "testing" facilities in Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia along the way.

The Jackson suit was filed by Thurgood Marshall, chief counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, R. Jess Brown, legal counsel for the Mississippi N. A. A. C. P., and Constance Baker Motley, of New York.

It asked that the city, the state and all bus lines and common carriers operating in the state be enjoined from continuing to enforce the state's racial segregation laws and the city's policy of segregation in waiting rooms and rest room facilities at transport terminals.

Named as defendants were state Attorney General Joe Patterson; the City of Jackson; Mayor Allen Thompson; City Commissioners Thomas B. Marshall and D. L. Luckey; Chief of Police W. D. Rayfield; Continental Southern Lines, Inc.; Illinois Central Railroad; Jackson City Lines Inc.; Southern Greyhound Lines, Inc., and Cicero Carr, of the restaurant at the Municipal Airport.

Three Jackson Negroes—Samuel Bailey, Joseph Broadwater and Brunett L. Jacob—were listed as the plaintiffs.

Panel Sought

The motion asked that the court summon a three-judge panel and provide for a speedy hearing of the case. However, court sources noted that the "vacation season is nearing" and that one of Mississippi's three judges will be required to hold a two-week session at Biloxi starting Monday.

At Montgomery, Ala., Justice Department attorneys filed a brief in United States District Court challenging a Federal judge's injunction that, in effect, barred further "freedom rides" in Alabama.

The injunction was handed down by Judge Frank M. Johnson jr. and was directed at sponsors of the "freedom riders." He further directed state and local officials and Ku-Klux Klansmen not to interfere with interstate travel.

The Justice Department contended in its brief that the riders were merely exercising their constitutional rights. It also formally requested that the Justice Department be relieved of the responsibility of acting in the case against the sponsor of the rides.

U.S. JOINS IN MISS. RIDERS' CASE SUIT

But Hearing Delayed on Injunctive Proceeding

By W. F. MINOR

(Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

JACKSON, Miss. — The federal government Monday joined in an injunction suit here to prevent Mississippi officers from further arrests of "freedom riders" in use of passenger terminals.

But a three-judge federal court here Monday to hear the injunctive proceedings granted a postponement until Aug. 7 because of illness of the specialist on civil rights in the state attorney general's office.

The justice department made a surprise entry into the case which was brought by three Jackson Negroes, represented by the National Association for Advancement of Colored People.

It seeks to prevent further arrests for harassment of Negroes in the use of interstate and intrastate passenger terminals.

In an amicus curiae brief (friend of the court), the justice department said its position was "not concerned with the wisdom or utility of the so-called 'freedom rides' in general, nor with the merits of any individual arrests."

OVER 215 ARRESTED

The government brief contended that the state and local officers in Mississippi could not use statutes which are otherwise valid for the purpose of restraining Negroes from using common carrier facilities on an unrestricted basis.

"Thus, the arrests and convictions for breach of the peace—or on any other charge—based solely on the defendant's use of facilities, which under the 14th amendment, the commerce clause or other federal constitutional or statutory authority, he has a right to use on a non-segregated basis, are necessarily illegal and void," the brief said.

Since May 24, more than 215 Negro and white "freedom riders" have been arrested by Jackson police at train, bus and airplane terminals here for breach of the peace.

Delay of the injunction hearing came over opposition of the presiding judge, Chief Judge Elvert Tuttle of the fifth circuit court of appeals, who admitted he was outvoted by the two Mississippi federal district judges serving on the special panel.

HEARING DELAYED

Later, after the delay of the "freedom rider" case, federal district Judge Sidney C. Mize also postponed until Aug. 10 the further hearing of an injunctive proceeding brought by James L. Merideth, 27-year-old Negro Air Force veteran, seeking admission to the all-white University of Mississippi.

Mize had been slated to resume hearing of the Merideth case Tuesday. He opened the hearing last month at Biloxi but continued it because of a rush of other court business.

The government brief was filed on behalf of Burke Marshall, chief of the civil rights section of the attorney general's office, Washington, and U.S. Attorney Robert Hauberg of the Southern Mississippi district.

Representing the justice department here Monday was Robert Owens, member of the justice department staff in Washington.

Robert Cates, assistant attorney general of Mississippi, was turned down by the three-judge panel in a request to prevent the United States from entering the suit.

ILLNESS OF SHANDS

He contended that the government would be putting itself in the position of "representing a class and not representing all of the people."

Cates asked for the delay of the case because of the illness of Asst. Atty. Gen. Dugas Shands, who has been the state's specialist in racial litigation.

He said Shands has "physically exhausted himself getting this case in shape to be tried." He said this was just one of several racial cases with which the attorney general's office is concerned.

Sitting at the bar with Cates was Atty. Gen. Joe T. Patterson. Cates, along with Shands and Asst. Atty. Gen. Pete Stockett work almost exclusively in the civil rights field.

Attorneys representing the city of Jackson, the Illinois Central railroad, Greyhound and Trailways bus companies and the Jackson airport authority, all defendants in the case, were also present.

The suit was filed by three Jackson Negro businessmen, Samuel Bailey, Joseph Broadwater and Burnett L. Jacob.

Mrs. Constance Baker Motley, New York, an attorney for the NAACP, represented them as chief counsel.

TUTTLE OBJECTED

Judge Tuttle, from Georgia, explained that the injunction process sought in the case was a "priority" type procedure which customarily must be expedited for hearing.

After a conference with the other two judges sitting in the case — Judge Mize and Judge F. Clayton of the northern federal court district of Mississippi, Tuttle announced the delay was granted "over my objections."

The circuit court justice said he did not consider the delay justified, "because of the organization of the attorney general's office of a great state."

Mize said it was "with a great deal of reluctance" that he voted for a delay. He said "I believe this to be a very important case which should be tried by attorneys who are prepared, rather than risk permanent injury to a man's health and mind. A delay will not seriously impair anyone's rights."

Prior to announcing the delay, Judge Tuttle questioned Cates if he agreed that the only real issues at conflict in the case were that "the statutes under attack are being enforced against these plaintiffs, and are these statutes constitutional or unconstitutional?"

Cates said he was not in a position to declare what the dedendants declared were the issues.

TWO QUESTIONS

The government brief said the two questions which the complaint should prove were: "1. The validity of statutes which on their face require the segregation of the races in certain transportation facilities in the state of Mississippi and the city of Jackson and, 2. The jurisdiction and equitable powers of the court with regard to the enforcement of statutes or ordinances valid on their face but which are alleged to be enforced in a discriminatory manner."

The government's role in the case, the brief said, was concerned "when federal civil rights and liberties are violated on a massive scale and a continuing basis."

"When as is alleged in this case to be true in Mississippi numbers of interstate travelers are arrested and their interstate journeys interrupted for constitutionally invalid reasons then it is incumbent up on the United States to officer the court its views on the legal problems involved.

TOO BROAD

The government said the court cannot permit officials "to avoid the constitutional obligation and it surely cannot permit them to punish those who are law-abiding, merely because such a course may seem to the officials more convenient or more popular than dealing with the mob."

The brief said the requests in the original suit were too broad and would complicate the work of police "since it may sometimes be impossible to know in advance whether a particular arrest could be construed as mere harrass- ment."

As a result, the government said, the court should enter an order "simply restraining the defendants from arresting Negroes soley for reason of their race or color or their use of facilities on common carriers or in terminals (including waiting roms, rest-rooms and restaurants) regardless of racial restrictions."

Such an injunction, the brief said, "would save to law enforcement agencies their valid power to make arrests and otherwise to conduct themselves in such a manner as is reasonably necessary for the preservation of law and order."

The Southern Christian Leadership Conference said Saturday the Negro who made the statement that "it was better to be in jail in Jackson, Miss., than to be free in Chicago" was forced to say that by threats.

Wyatt Tee Walker, executive director of the SCLC in Atlanta, said he talked with Leon Daniel Horne in Jackson jail and "learned his side of the story." Both Walker and Horne were jailed after "freedom bus" rides to Jackson.

Dem. 7-16-61

Walker said he had a statement in Horne's handwriting which was smuggled out of the Hinds County Jail.

THE STATEMENT, attributed to Horne, quoted him as saying he was "threatened and frightened" into making the statements.

". . . This is my home and the world knows they don't want anyone from Jackson to participate in anything that concerns integration," Horne was quoted as saying. "Before the news conference I was told what to say, and how to say it.

"And ever since I made that statement, I have been unable to sleep because I know that they were all lies, lies, lies.

". . . They threatened to beat me, put me in the sweat box (solitary confinement); send me to the county farm—even kill me."

Horne's statement went on to say that he realized he had been "disloyal" and wanted to "make up for the wrong I've done."

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 15—(AP)—The appeal trials of nearly 200 convicted "freedom riders" will begin next Tuesday in Hinds County court. They are expected to continue through January.

County Judge Russel Moore today scheduled arraignment for three additional riders after 188 others pleaded innocent of breach of peace charges.

Fri 8-15-61

The riders are appealing City Court convictions following their arrests for refusing to obey police orders to move on while attempting to desegregate transportation terminal facilities in this capital city of 70,000.

The first "freedom riders" reached Jackson last May 24. Since then, 297 have been arrested. Some remain in jail.

The three scheduled to be arraigned today were granted an additional day after they were jailed on other charges in New Orleans last Saturday and were unable to meet the Monday appearance deadline.

Birmingham Ala.

ATTORNEYS went through formal legal procedure on the first of 197 cases called yesterday, then took an average of 25 seconds per person on the 188 who entered pleas and received trial dates. Nine defendants did not appear, including the three who were to be arraigned today.

Moore said the other six must forfeit their $500 bonds or appear at the next term of court and show why they were not present yesterday.

Most of the riders planned to leave Jackson and return [illegible] to await their trial dates.

KUNSTLER HAS removed five other "rider" cases to federal court in Jackson. U. S. Dist. Judge W. Harold Cox will hear arguments on whether civil rights are involved in the cases Saturday when the state attempts to regain jurisdiction.

Under procedure agreed upon by both Kunstler and city attorneys, two trials will be held daily five days each week until all cases are finished. The 188 are scheduled to complete their trials Jan. 17.

Under the rules of Moore's court, all "freedom riders" who had posted bonds were required to appear personally or forfeit bonds.

There were no demonstrations or incidents yesterday. Police kept a two-block area around the courthouse cleared of onlookers and Moore banned applause, smoking and loud talking in the courtroom.

ABOUT 2600 pupils trudged off to still segregated public schools in Louisiana's troubled St. Helena Parish (county) near Greensburg. The Fall term began early to permit the children to be released in the Spring to help with strawberry picking.

The schools are under a federal court order to desegegate but no specific date has been set. However, parish voters decided last Spring to close the schools rather than desegregate them.

But the federal court told the parish it could not act on the election's outcome until the court rules on the constitutionality of the state's local option law under which the election was held.

THE NAACP asked the Supreme Court in Washington for aid in battling an order the group said blocks its organization activitie in Alabama.

The appeal said the NAACP believes "it will never be afforded an opportunity to have a hearing on the merits in Alabama state courts." It requested the high tribunal to direct lower federal courts hear the case.

The litigation developed from a 1956 complaint by the Alabama attorney general that the NAACP was doing business in the state without qualifying as an out-of-state corporation. Later the U. S. Circuit Court in New Orleans turned down an appeal on grounds the case should be tried first in state courts.

Freedom Riders Plead Innocent Upon Appeals

The Courier Journal

Fri 8-15-61

Jackson, Miss., Aug. 14 (AP)—A total of 189 "freedom riders" appeared in court under massive police protection Monday and pleaded innocent to their previous convictions for breach of the peace.

Louisville Ky.

Their appeal trials will begin next Tuesday and will continue at the rate of two a day and five days a week until January 19, with three days off for Christmas and one for New Year's Day.

The Hinds County court clerk called the names of 198 riders who had been convicted since May 25 in Police Court and released under appeal of $500 each. Nine did not answer, but three of these were being detained under arrest in New Orleans and will be allowed to enter their pleas later.

Judge Refuses To Modify Jackson Appearance Rule

Montgomery Advertiser p. 12A

Fri 8-11-61

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Circuit Judge Leon Hendrick refused Thursday to modify a Hinds County court order requiring convicted "Freedom Riders" to appear when their cases are presented Monday on appeal from city court.

Montgomery Ala.

Atty. William Kunstler of New York sought an order from Judge Hendrick to waive or modify the court rule that requires all defendants to be present on the opening day of the county court term receiving their appeals.

Hendrick's decision would be appealed to the state supreme court, Kunstler said, when an appointment can be set up with Justice W. N. Ethridge Jr. The court is in summer recess.

ENTERED ORDER

County Judge Russel Moore entered an order more than a year before the freedom rides began that all defendants must be present in person when the calendar for the term of court is called up, or forfeit their bonds.

Hendrick said the court order sought by Kunstler was not appropriate for the riders' cases, that under Mississippi law Kunstler would have to resort to an appeal after some action in the case.

"If Judge Moore should order the bonds forfeited because the defendants did not appear," Hendrick said, "you would have the right to resist forfeiture.

"I can't tell Judge Moore how to run his court."

Kunstler, representing 187 convicted riders who will appeal their breach of peace convictions in city court to county court, had sought a wr of mandamus, ordering Moore to void his appearance rule, or a writ of prohibitin, prohibiting Moore from enforcing it.

Hendrick said in Mississippi mandamus writs were issued only when a lower court refused to take any action, and prohibition writs to keep a lower court from acting when it properly had no jurisdiction.

Neither procedure, Hendrick said, was permissible in this case.

CAUSE TROUBLE

Kunstler said he sought to void Judge Moore's appearance rule because he felt it was an abuse of his discretion and would cost the riders an unnecessary $20,000.

He said bringing 187 riders into Jackson at one time "might cause trouble."

Opposing Kunstler's request were city prosecutors Jack Travis and Bob Nichols. They went into the limited use of the two writs Kunstler sought and argued that the riders had waited until the last minute to challenge Moore's rule.

Under an agreement between both sides, the trial of the appeals cases before county court juries will begin Aug. 21 and will be run off at two per day, or 10 weekly. The trials are expected to last 18-20 weeks.

RIDERS TO TEST LAWS OF STATE

Attorneys For 187 Will Review A Virginia Case

By JOHN HERBERS
United Press International

Attorneys for 187 convicted "Freedom Riders" who will be here Monday for their appeals plan to go into state and federal courts on two legal points for overturning the convictions.

The first is a U. S. Supreme Court decision on a Richmond, Va., case closely paralleling the Jackson arrests; the second is a direct attack on the breach of the peace statutes under which almost 300 riders were arrested here since May 24.

The Richmond case was decided by the high court last winter. A Negro law student named Boynton staged a sit-in at a white restaurant in a Richmond bus terminal. He refused police orders to move on and was arrested under a state breach of the peace law.

The Supreme Court of Virginia upheld the conviction, holding it was proper use of police authority. But on appeal the U. S. Supreme Court overturned the conviction holding that the breach of the peace law—which was sound in itself—was used to maintain segregation in interstate travel facilities.

All of the Jackson riders were arrested for breach of the peace after they refused police orders to move from segregated terminals.

There is a difference in the breach of the peace laws used in the two states. The New York attorneys who are representing the riders—William Kunstler of the American Civil Liberties Union and Carl Richler of the Congress of Racial Equality—say they will ask that Mississippi's laws be struck down as well as the city's use of them.

They will contend that the legislature delegated too much authority to the police and that it enacted the laws specifically to preserve segregation.

There are two laws involved, one for single arrests and another for group arrests. They were enacted in the spring of 1960 when sit-in demonstrations were rampant in other Southern states. They were carefully drawn by some of the best legal minds in the state capitol and were enacted swiftly and overwhelmingly without debate.

State attorneys are prepared to defend them in the courts on grounds that they properly delegate authority to local authorities under legal precedent.

The war between local officials and the riders seemed this week to have boiled down to an endurance race. Kunstler and Richler tried to arrange it so that the riders would not have to be on hand together Monday for call of their cases in county court. But the local judges stood fast.

They also refused to hold mass trials and the schedule calls for trials beginning Aug. 21 to run two a day, five days a week for at least 18 weeks.

Meanwhile, however, Kunstler transferred five of the rider cases to federal court where quicker appeal action could be expected. A hearing is scheduled on that next Friday to decide whether the federal court can take jurisdiction under the Civil Rights Act.

RIDERS GATHER FOR APPEALS

Will Appear in Jackson Court Monday

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—"Freedom riders"—coming by bus, train, plane and cars—began arriving in Jackson Saturday before their appeals start Monday in county court on breach of the peace convictions.

Over 180 riders who posted $500 appeal bonds after unsuccessful desegregation attempts of transportation facilities were expected in Jackson by Sunday night.

A giant rally will be held a 7:30 p. m. Sunday in the Negro Masonic temple in Jackson under the sponsorship of the Jackson Nonviolent Movement.

The Hinds county sheriff's office and Jackson police prepared to prevent any outbreak of violence while the integrated group is in the city.

"We are taking extra precaution to see that proceedings are completed in an orderly manner," said Sheriff J. R. Gilfoy.

"No loitering or congregating will be allowed around the courthouse Monday. No one will be allowed inside the courtroom except the defendants, their counsel, the prosecutors, the judge and the press.

Gilfoy said the citizens of Hinds county "have done a great job so far in letting the law takes its course . . . I will be grateful if you will stay away."

Chief of Detectives M. B. Pierce said "we will have adequate policemen on hand to assist the sheriff at the courthouse and to see that if any laws are broken, whether it be by freedom riders or not, the persons involved will be arrested."

Riders began arriving in Jackson Saturday individually and in small groups, but the largest delegation was expected at 10:10 a. m. Sunday on the "City of New Orleans" train. New Orleans was one of the major gathering points for riders.

Two chartered buses carrying riders were scheduled to leave Nashville at 9 p. m. Saturday.

John Lewis, acting chairman of the Nashville Student Non-Violent monent, said "we have the entire Minnesota delegation and some from Chicago and Cincinnati."

Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy said only three riders would leave from Montgomery for Jackson. They went to Mobile Saturday afternoon and were expected to arrive in Jackson at 4 p. m. Sunday.

Freedom riders will meet with their lawyers Sunday afternoon and attend the rally that night.

Some of the riders will be housed at Tougaloo Southern Christian (Negro) college just north of Jackson and others in rpivate homes.

'Riders' Plan Mass Trek Back to Dixie

By the Associated Press

Jackson, Miss.

More than 180 convicted "freedom riders" were making plans for a mass trek to Jackson, Miss., to start appeal proceedings Monday.

It was expected that trials of the appeal cases would begin before county judges on Aug. 21 at the rate of two per day, indicating it might be four or five months before final cases were heard.

William Kunstler, a New York attorney, said he tried without success Thursday to win modification of a Hinds County Court order requiring all defendants to be present on the opening day of the county court term handling their appeals.

Meanwhile, arguments resumed in federal district court at Jackson on the application of James H. Meredith, a 28-year-old Negro, for a court order to force the University of Mississippi to admit qualified Negroes.

A survey by a Richmond newspaper (News Leader) showed that 529 Negroes planned to enter desegregated schools in Virginia next month compared with about 200 enrolled last year. That would raise from 37 to 67 the number of desegregated schools. However, Negroes would still account for less than 1 per cent of those enrolled.

The school board in the upper east Tennessee city of Elizabethtion agreed to abolish segregation in first grades on Sept. 1. Officials estimated 10 Negro pupils would attend classes. Similar grade-a-year plans already are in effect in Knoxville and Nashville.

The State Board of Education in Georgia agreed to hold a special meeting Monday to consider an appeal of its decision to permit a white Atlanta girl to transfer from one high school to another.

The Atlanta Board of Education earlier denied the request of Sandra Melkild to transfer from Northside High, scheduled to be desegregated Aug. 30, to Dykes High, a school which will remain segregated this year. The state board overruled this decision.

At Madison, Wis., Mrs. Vel Phillips, Democratic national committeewoman for Wisconsin, joined a group of sit-in demonstrators in the rotunda of Wisconsin's capitol. The sit-in participants are seeking housing legislation.

Mrs. Phillips, a Negro, said, "All I'm doing is representing the state Democratic Party's principles."

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—A pair of "freedom riders" — a blind white woman and a Negro—broke the segregation barrier Saturday in a Jackson, Miss., bus depot.

The pair were served when they asked for milk shakes at the lunch counter in the Negro waiting room. Two policemen stood by but made no move to order them out.

The pair, Earl C. Bohannon Jr., 21, Chicago, and Norma Wagnor, 33, Rochester, N.Y., arrived in Jackson, at 1:24 p.m. after changing buses in Memphis. They started their trip from Nashville.

"We plan to sit here until we get arrested," Mrs. Wagnor said.

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—Fifteen Episcopal priests challenged Mississippi segregation today and police arrested them on breach of peace charges.

The group, on a "prayer pilgrimage" to study segregation, included the Rev. Robert Pierson, 35, of New York and Evanston, Ill., son-in-law of New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller.

The 12 white and three Negro clergymen went into the white waiting room of the Trailways Bus station in a group and patrolmen ordered them to move. They declined to move and the officers called Capt. J. L. Ray, who has handled most of Jackson's "Freedom Rider" arrests.

Ray's order was ignored and the arrests followed.

One of the clergymen bought tickets for all 15 about 30 minutes before they appeared after a taxi trip from Tougaloo Southern Christian College, a Negro school here where the 28 ministers had spent the night.

The ministers had tickets for Chattanooga, Tenn., from where they planned to visit the church's University of the South nearby.

The Rev. Layton Zimmer of Swarthmore, Pa., who went to the station in business clothes to observe, said seven other priests among the 28 on the pilgrimage bought tickets for Birmingham., Ala., on a plane to leave tonight and hoped to visit the Episcopal University at Sewanee, Tenn.

The Rev. John Dorr, chaplain at Oklahoma State University, said he and four other white priests would remain in Jackson until the ministers are out of jail.

The trials of the 15 arrested this morning were set for 3 p.m. Thursday.

Dorr indicated the 15 arrested probably would post bonds next week if convicted.

The group of ministers left New Orleans Tuesday to visit Episcopal institutions on their prayer pilgrimage and study segregation at the schools. They planned to close the tour Sunday at Detroit where the 60th general convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church is scheduled.

MAINTAIN UNITY

The Rev. Mr. Dorr said the group did not plan an effort to break state laws at the airport Wednesday night, but the Rev. Mr. Zimmer said the mixed group would "Maintain its unity" throughout the trip.

The Rev. Mr. Zimmer said after the 15 were arrested, other members of the party sent a telegram to Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy saying:

"Fifteen Episcopal priests have been arrested in Jackson while attempting to use interstate facilities en route to Detroit on a prayer pilgrimage . . . In view of your request to American clergy to exercise leadership in these areas, we urge you immediately resolve problems of interstate travel for Americans."

50 Subpenaed To Rider Trial

Top State, City Leaders Are Called To Testify By Defense At Jackson

By United Press International

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 21. — More than 50 persons, ranging from a high Citizens' Council official to the Governor, have been subpenaed to testify Tuesday in the first jury trial of a so-called "Freedom Rider" on a breach of the peace charge.

Henry J. Thomas, a 20-year-old Negro from St. Augustine, Fla., will go on trial at 9 a.m. He and 191 other riders were convicted in police court of breach of the peace and are being given jury trials in county court as part of their appeal process.

Gov. Ross Barnett was among the more than 40 persons subpenaed by Thomas' defense attorneys. However, the deputy sheriff who delivered the summons said Barnett told him he would be out of town when the trial opens.

Others Summoned

Other persons given summons by the defense included Citizens Council leader W. J. Simmons, state Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson, Hinds County Sheriff J. L. Gilfoy, Mayor Allen Thompson, Police Chief W. D. Rayfield, state Supt. of Education J. M. Tubb, city Schools Supt. Kirby Walker, state Adjutant W. P. Wilson, the Hinds County Board of Supervisors, several lawyers and a number of newsmen.

The state called for 12 witnesses, most of them reporters. The chief state witness was expected to be Police Capt. J. L. Ray, who issued the "move on" orders to most of the riders.

The trials of the 192 riders are scheduled to be held two a day, five days a week, from Tuesday until Jan. 19. Thomas' trial is scheduled to be held in the morning and Julia Aaron, Negro, is scheduled to be tried Tuesday afternoon. However, it appears certain the schedule will be changed on the first day.

"I expect we'll spend all day selecting a jury," said defense attorney William Kunstler of New York. He has indicated he will be reluctant to have staunch segregationists on the panel.

Plea to Quash

Kunstler also is asking that the jury be quashed on grounds only a "token number" of the venire from which it is chosen are Negroes. He said he understands two of the 60 veniremen are Negroes.

Thomas was on the first bus carrying protest Riders to Jackson when the movement hit Mississippi May 24.

In the trial before County Judge Russell Moore the state is expected to try to prove Thomas was guilty of conduct which would incite a breach of the peace. The defense will try to picture his arrest as one made simply to preserve segregation.

"I think this matter of transportation segregation is just as important as school segregation," said Kunstler.

Kunstler said he expected to be handling the defense of the rider cases at least through this week. He said lawyers from throughout the nation have volunteered to serve as defense attorneys without charge for the rest of the riders.

Young Minister Will Take 11-Jail Record Into Pulpit

Norfolk, Va.

When and if the Rev. James Edward Warren graduates from Union Theological Seminary in New York, or some other school of theology, he may assume his first pastorate as a minister who has been arrested at least eight times and spent varying periods in 11 prisons.

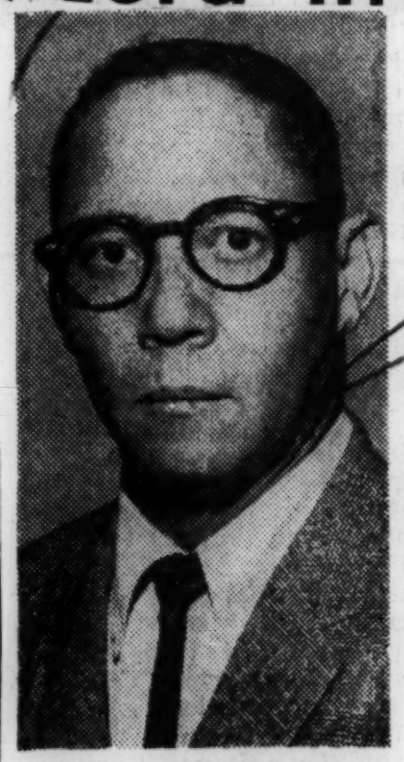
A native of Cincinnati who received most of his education in Florida, Rev. Mr. Warren began his trips to jail last year as a sit - in demonstrator, and this year graduated into freedom riding to Mississippi.

DIRECT from Parchman, Miss., state prison, where he spent 34 days after being sentenced to four months and fined $200, he was in Norfolk for four days (until Monday) as guest of Mrs. Florida V. Powell, "mother" of First Calvary Baptist church, at 1010 Mapole avenue.

He was ordained three years ago at Emanuel Institutional Baptist church of Philadelphia, where the Rev. William L. Bentley is pastor.

THE YOUNG minister is scheduled to return to Jackson, Miss., on Sept. 2 for arraignment on his appeal of sentence, along with seven white ministers whom he led from New York on a bus ride to Jackson.

They were arrested within five minutes after arriving at a Jackson bus station and refusing to leave the colored waiting room. Rev. Mr. Warren said that the group stopped in Memphis on the way to Jackson, and were served in the integrated lunch counter at a bus station.



REV. JAMES E. WARREN
His Date In Jackson

IN JACKSON they were charged with breaching the peace at a trial which the minister described as "hurried" and marked by a sing-song testimony of a police captain.

He said that Jackson police were very polite and diplomatic when they arrested the eight ministers, but that was the end of decent treatment from Mississippi authorities. Here is the gist of his report on his sojourn:

- Conditions in Jackson city jail are "not too bad."
- The county jail is rat-infested and prisoners sleep on mattressees placed on the floor.
- While being transported to Parchman, he and other prisoners from Jackson and elsewhere, convicted in civil rights cases, were insulted and abused by guards.
- While women convicted as freedom riders or sympathizing with them were scorned and accused of being prostitutes.
- White male freedom riders usually get extra verbal abuse and physical mistreatment as meddlers.
- Parchman penitentiary offers a strachy diet with a little fatback, solitary and blows from guards for failure to 'cooperate," a bath from high pressure fire hose, which Negro prisoners are forced to wield for protesting and singing hymns, sleeping on bare steel, and denial of soap and toilet articles for insinuating that prison conditions are less than ideal.

DESPITE all this, Rev. Mr. Warren says, he would not hesitate to go on another freedom ride to Jackson because he is determined to help stamp out discrimination, segregation and second class citizenship.

He was arrested seven times for participating in lunch counter sit - ins in St. Petersburg, Daytona Beach, Tallahassee, Jacksonville and St. Augustine, Fla., and in Savannah, Ga.

He says that variety store and bus station lunch counters have been desegregated in 21 counties in the Florida and Georgia areas with which he is familiar.

REV. MR. Warren is particularly gratified because he found scores of Jackson youth in Parchman prison for violating segregation customs and rules, and because of the backing Jackson ministers and others are giving to the civil rights movement.

The young minister plans to enter Union Theological Seminary in September if he is not back in jail.

First Freedom Rider Convicted On Appeal in Mississippi Case

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 24 (UPI)—An all-white jury that had listened to three days of testimony took forty minutes today to convict Henry Thomas, the first Freedom Rider to appeal his conviction for breach of the peace.

Mr. Thomas, a Negro, was fined $200 and sentenced to four months in jail, the same penalty prescribed in Police Court, where he was originally convicted. He was expected to be freed on $2,000 bond.

The testimony was dominated by the prosecution. Attorneys for the defendant, in a surprise move, rested their case today without having called any witnesses.

Mr. Thomas' lawyers will appeal the case to state Circuit Court. They are counting on overturning the conviction in Federal court after taking it through the state tribunals.

The jurors were locked up at 2:55 P. M. and returned with a verdict at 3:35 P. M. Each, when polled by the judge, said he found the defendant guilty of breach of peace as charged.

The state produced fifteen witnesses in an effort to prove Mr. Thomas guilty of conduct that provoked a breach of the peace. Twenty-five minutes after the state had rested, the defense said it too was resting.

During that twenty-five minute period the defense tried to have read into the record a United States Supreme Court decision banning segregation in interstate travel facilities. The judge, who had said earlier that the ruling had no relation to this case, rejected the motion.

William A. Kunstler of New York, a lawyer for the American Civil Liberties Union, told the jury that the basic issue in the case was "whether a person should be arrested merely because a policeman ordered him to move on."

Mr. Kunstler said Mr. Thomas had broken no law. "He was peaceful," he said. "Thus isn't one shred of evidence that the defendant was about to breach the peace."

City Prosecutor Jack Travis said the basic question was "whether we will have law enforcement or whether there will be a complete breakdown of law enforcement."

2 More Riders Choose Jail Over Fines

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—Two more "freedom riders" withdrew their appeals from court Wednesday and elected to return to jail to finish serving their sentences.

They were Doris Castle, 19, and Jerome M. Smith, 22, New Orleans Negroes who were arrested in the Trailways bus terminal here May 24.

They decided not to pay their fines from the $500 cash bond put up when they appealed their city court convictions. Each had received a $200 fine and a 60-day suspended sentence.

The two riders said they would serve time at $3 a day to pay their fine.

On Monday two other riders, John H. Moody, 25, of Philadelphia, and Matthew Walker Jr., 19, of Nashville, Tenn., withdrew their appeals and paid their fines. They had been arrested with Miss Castle and Smith.

Freedom Rider sees end of travel bias

NEWARK

James Peck of New York, severely beaten by a mob on a CORE - sponsored Freedom Ride in Birmingham on Mother's Day, predicted an end to segregation in interstate travel facilities here Sunday.

Mr. Peck told a Freedom Riders rally at Israel Memorial AME Church that while 295 Freedom Riders have been arrested in Jackson, Miss., "Jackson will come into line eventually."

He said he felt his harrowing experience in Birmingham was worthwhile for these reasons: (1) it exposed the kind of terror which can exist in the South, and (2) the first Freedom Ride set off a movement to end bias in travel facilities.

Mr. Peck was one of a number of speakers and musical groups appearing on the program which raised $200 in contributions and pledges for CORE.

THE RALLY was presented by Russell Proctor, a member of Israel Memorial, whose pastor, the Rev. John W. P. Collier Jr., was arrested on a CORE - sponsored Freedom Ride to Tallahassee, Fla.

Another speaker, John Harvard of Elizabeth, told of his experiences on a Freedom Ride which left the area July 12 for Chattanooga, Tenn.

Mr. Harvard said his group only ran into difficulty in Culpepper, Va., Elizabethton, Tenn., and Stutgart, Ark. He attributed the relative safety of the trip to "the long arm of the federal government" which notified the communities that the Freedom Riders were en route.

The Elizabeth public school teacher told his audience to rid themselves of apathy, lethargy and complacency if they are to advance.

The Rev. W. L. Pierce urged listeners to exercise such privileges as voting and selective buying to alleviate inequities in Newark.

OTHER PROGRAM participants included the Rev. Joseph R. Randall, pastor of Little Friendship Baptist Church and acting chairman of Essex CORE; William Stubbs, Republican chairman of the Central Ward, and Clarence Pace of Newark CORE.

Mrs. Georgie Winter, Central Ward GOP vice chairman, was mistress of ceremonies.

Among the groups rendering gospel selections were the National Singers of New York, the Buckmon Aires, Miss Clare Scott and the Good Neighbor Cathedral Choir, and the Joy Rits.

set for 9 a.m., and 1 p.m. today.

The pair will pay their fines and receive refunds on the $500 bond which they had posted when they appealed their conviction for arrest on breach of the peace charges.

They were arrested in connection with their activities as Freedom Riders on arrival at the Continental Trailways bus termina here in May. There are now 18 appeals pending.

Monday, John H. Moody, of Philadelphia, Pa., and Matthew Walker, Jr., 19, of Nashville, Tenn., withdrew their appeals and paid their fines to become the first of the Riders to adopt this procedure.

Special Prosecutor Robert Nichols, Jr., and Prosecutor Paul Alexander were present for the hearing and the defense was represented by Jack Young, Jackson negro attorney, and Ernst Rosenberg, of New York.

The next scheduled trials are set for Tuesday, Sept. 5 for Zev Aelony and Alexander M. Anderson.

2 More Freedom Riders Found Guilty In Miss.

Louisiana Weekly 8/2
Sept 2 1961

JACKSON, Miss. -- Two of the 190 appealing Freedom Riders were again convicted in the Hinds County Court following jury trials during the past week. They were appealing their breach of the peace convictions by the city court.

Convicted by all-white juries were Henry J. Thomas, 19, St. Augustine, Florida and Julia Aaron, 19, of New Orleans. Both received the same sentence imposed by the city court -- $200 fine and four months in jail.

Scheduled for appeal trials this week were Doris Castle, 19, and Jerome Smith, 22, both of New Orleans.

Two Freedom Riders, Matthew Walker, 19, Nashville, Tenn., and John H. Moody, 25, Philadelphia, Pa., who were convicted May 26, each paid a $100.95 fine and abandoned their appeals Monday. Each had served part of the fine off at $3 a day.

Tom Gaither, secretary of the Congress of Racial Equality which sponsored Freedom Rides to crack the race barriers in Southern travel facilities, said Moody and Walker paid their own fines. He said paying fines are strictly against CORE's policy.

Last Saturday, U. S. District Judge Harold Cox refused to allow the cases of five Freedom Riders be transferred from the state to federal court. He said the cases did not involve civil rights.

Other developments included the arrests during the week of three youths at Clarksdale, Miss.. for refusing to leave a white waiting room in the train station. They were Wilma Smith, Mary Jane Pigee and Adrian Beard. Miss Pigee is a student at Central State College, Wilberforce, Ohio. The others are high school students. Their bond was placed at $500.

In Shreveport, La., attorneys for six convicted Freedom Riders announced the filing of appeals. The Rev. Harold Bethune, 34, and David Dennis, 21, were sentenced to 45-day jail terms and $200 fines; the Rev. Harry Blake, $200 and 30 days; Leverett H. Taylor, 20, $150 and 30 days; Deloris McGinnis, 19, and her sister, Marie, 17, $150 fines and 15-day suspended jail terms. They were arrested Aug. 4 as Louisiana's First Freedom Riders while trying to integrate the white waiting room of a bus station in Shreveport.

Second 'Rider' Draws Conviction

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — A county court jury convicted a second "Freedom Rider" on appeal from a city court conviction after deliberating less than 15 minutes Friday.

Julia Aaron, 19-year-old Southern University student from New Orleans, received a $200 fine and 4 months jail term. Henry J. Thomas, 19-year-old former Howard University student tried Thursday, received the same sentence.

Both were convicted of breach of peace after they attempted to desegregate the white facilities of the Trailways bus station May 24, the day the first riders arrived in Jackson.

Thomas posted a $2,000 cash appeal bond Friday and said he was going back to Washington. Miss Aaron said she planned to stay in jail.

John H. Moody, 25, of Philadelphia, and Matthew Walker, 19, of Nashville, Tenn., were assessed $200 fines and given 60-day suspended sentences. The two paid the remainder of fines not served off at $3 a day.

They were the third and fourth of 190 convicted riders whose appeals were scheduled to run through January.

JACKSON, MISS.—"Freedom, give us freedom; freedom's coming and it won't be long." So sing the freedom riders as they ride through the South.

Jackson, named for Andrew Jackson, is the capital and the largest city of the state. It is a spacious city; its streets were laid out on a checkerboard plan before the first settlers arrived. In recent decades Jackson has enjoyed prosperity from industrial expansion and a considerable World War II business boom.

Jackson also is the modern capital of segregation. It is the home base of the Citizens' Council movement, which wields strong influence in state government. Governor Ross R. Barnett campaigned on a platform of unrelenting resistance to desegregation. He pledged to go to jail if need be to prevent its coming.

But the people of Jackson are fair within the confines of their mindset, as even their critics will admit. That's why the Freedom Riders who traveled U. S. Route 80 through the heart of the Black Belt from Montgomery, Ala., last May and June were greeted by arrests but none of the violence that had brought on the dispatching of 700 federal marshals to Montgomery. Carl Rachlin, counsel for the Congress of Racial Equality (C.O.R.E.), which organized the freedom rides, on August 14 said: "The people of Jackson are wonderful, decent people. You (the Interstate Commerce Commission) must help them get rid of a tradition which is morally wrong, even though they oppose change at the moment."

It is against this background that nearly 200 freedom riders are appealing convictions in Jackson—and fines of $200 each—for breach of peace in demanding equal treatment of races in buses and trains and in terminals.

Just as Jackson's freedom riders are asking for relief from the courts, the Interstate Commerce Commission is considering issuing regulations proposed by Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy for ending segregation in interstate bus travel. They were submitted on May 29 as a direct result of the Montgomery disorders.

Freedom Riders Are Arrested In Jackson

The key recommendation is that waiting rooms, rest rooms, eating places, and ticket counters serving interstate passengers will be open to white and colored alike. Vehicles will carry signs declaring that seating "is without regard to race, color, creed, or national origin." The Justice Department in a hearing on August 14 argued that even signs reading "Intrastate White" and "Intrastate Colored" constituted "a subterfuge and a device."

I.C.C. in 1955 banned segregation of passengers in buses and trains and in railroad terminals but said nothing about bus terminals. The U. S. Supreme Court on December 5, 1960, held that the Interstate Commerce Act prohibits segregation in bus terminal restaurants serving interstate passengers.

Should the I.C.C. approve the Attorney General's recommendations, as it is expected to, the result will be another step toward the kind of 20th Century "emancipation proclamation" demanded by the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., the Negro Baptist church leader who is one of the organizers of the freedom riders. But the immediate end of travel segregation is not necessarily in sight. At the August 14 I.C.C. hearing the Attorney General of Mississippi hinted that the state might erect signs advertising that "both races are free to enjoy the privilege of voluntary and self-imposed separation if they so desire, a right which is constitutionally theirs." The implication is that Negroes who then used white facilities would be arrested for breach of the peace, the charge used against the freedom riders.

JACKSON- FREEDOM RIDERS CLERGYMEN

Clergymen Convicted, Face Weekend In City Jail Here

Jackson Daily News P 11

By BILL COPPENBARGER
Daily News Staff Writer

Fifteen Episcopal Clegrymen, the greater portion of a prayer pilgrimage to Detroit Mich. by way of Jackson to "witness the weakness of the church leadership in racial relations" remain in Jackson City Jail today following their conviction yesterday on breach of peace charges.

City Judge James Spencer sentenced each of the 15 to $200 fine and four months in jail following a two-hour trial over the group arrest in the Trailways bus terminal here Wednesday.

JUDGE'S DILEMMA

Visibly affected by his obligation, Judge Spencer, of Episcopalian faith, told the hushed courtroom "as a judge of Episcopal faith, I find my position especially grievous and as I read the articles of religion of my faith and what I reasoned to be their faith, I find in Article 37 in the articles of religion in my prayer book," —and here he read the short paragraph which says "and we hold it to be the duty of all men who are professors of the Gospel to pay respectful obedience to the civil authority."

"I find my duty clear as a judge," he said, "I believe these definitely have violated the laws of the State of Mississippi as well as those of the Episcopal law of the articles of religion as I read them."

Bail 9-16-61

Whether the jailed clergymen will appeal their conviction and post bond was not yet known this morning.

Jackson

Carl Rachlin, New York attorney, and chief counsel for CORE, who served with Jack Young, Jackson Negro attorney as defense said he did not know whether any attempt to secure release would be made. He said no action would be taken immediately.

Robert Nichols, Jr., assistant prosecutor, who also said he was of the Episcopal faith, presented only one witness for the state.

Capt. John Ray, of the city police department, who has been the main figure in the Freedom Rider arrests and trials since last May, also made the arrest at the bus station when the Prayer Pilgrimage group appeared.

Defense Counsel Young presented Rev. John Crocker, Jr., 37, from Providence, R. I., who related the actions of the group prior to the arrest and said they were engaged in prayer and were creating no disorder.

Thirteen other clegrymen comprising the group were not involved or arrested, and most of them were present in the courtroom for the trial.

Judge Spencer prefaced his judgment by stating "several months ago a group of people came into the South under such circumstances as to stir considerable unrest to where there would be mob action, violence and bloodshed and in some places they definitely achieved this which resulted in the burning of busses, riots in the streets and mob action.

OFFICIALS DETERMINED

"Since that time," he said, "every civil official in the State of Mississippi has taken a vow to himself and dedicated himself to the proposition that Mississippi's problems would not be settled by mob action or bloodshed created by these outsiders, but rather would be settled in due course of time as human conduct will permit.

"We are faced here today with a situation where 15 Episcopal clergy engaged in a conduct which peace officers reasonably believed would result in a breach of peace, and refused to be obedient to the civil officers of the state and city."

Prior to ruling on the cases, Defense Attorney Rachlin asked that one of the priest be permitted to make a statement, but the jurist declined explaining that such permission would only open the way for request of others to speak and it could not be permitted, except through counsel.

Chaplain Is Convicted at Montgomery

Sept 6 1961

New Orleans, La.

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Fifteen Episcopal priests—including the son-in-law of New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller — conducted prayer services in the Hinds county jail Saturday after their breach of peace convictions.

The clergymen—12 white persons and three Negroes — were switched from city to county jail Friday after they stood trial. The charges came after they attempted to desegregate a white waiting room in a bus terminal.

The Rev. Robert L. Pierson, 35, of New York and Evanston, Ill., Rockefeller's son-in-law, and the other 14 were fined $200 and sentenced to four months in jail, the same as most "freedom riders" received.

A spokesman for the group said they would not attend the opening of the 60th general convention of the Episcopal church Sunday in Detroit, Mich. He said bond would not be posted until after the week end.

Meanwhile, Yale university Chaplain William S. Coffin, a Presbyterian and nine other freedom riders were convicted on breach of peace charges in Montgomery, Ala.

Judge Alex Marks fined them $100 and handed down jail sentences ranging from 10 to 90 days Friday night. They immediately posted appeal bonds of $750 to $1000 and were released.

The Birmingham News

By The Associated Press

An Episcopal clergyman—son-in-law of the governor of New York—and the chaplain of Yale University are among 26 persons who face trial today on charges growing out of attempts to desegregate Southern bus terminals.

The Rev. Robert L. Pierson of New York City and Evanston, Ill., awaits trial on breach of the peace charges at Jackson, Miss., along with 14 other jailed Episcopal clergymen.

Bail 9-13-61

A divinity professor at Yale, two professors of religion at Wesleyan University, and several Negro integration leaders were among the group arrested with Coffin at a Montgomery bus depot May 25. All have been free on bond.

THE EPISCOPAL clergymen were arrested when they tried to desegregate a Jackson bus station waiting room traditionally reserved for white persons. The group included three Negroes.

The ministers were participating in a "prayer pilgrimage" which left New Orleans Tuesday en route to the Episcopal Church's 60th general convention open Sunday in Detroit.

They said in a message prepared before their arrest that the "church must become . . . one holy fellowship where racial barriers have been done away."

THE PILGRIMAGE was sponsored by the Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity, an organization composed of clergymen and laymen. It is not an official arm of the church.

The 35-year-old Pierson, a son-in-law of Gov. Nelson Rockefeller, participated with the other clergymen in celebration of High Mass at the Jackson City Jail yesterday. A portable altar was used for the service.

The Rev. Jack Malpas of Baltimore, Md., who visited the clergymen, said their spirits were good and that they were not discouraged. "They are receiving messages of encouragement from their families and friends," he said.

ROCKEFELLER, whose daughter Anne is married to Pierson, expressed admiration for the 15 jailed clergymen.

"I admire the courage and dedication of these young people to the basic precepts on which this country was founded and their dedication to the cause of making a reality out of these precepts," he said.

But Sen. John Stennis (D. Miss.) said in a Senate speech that "certainly there is nothing in the Sermon on the Mount which calls for them to stir up agitation and to cause a breach of the peace and violation of the law."

Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R., N. Y.), defended the ministers after Stennis spoke. Javits said he knew the group felt that "a great moral issue was involved" and that they were acting in the right. He said he approved of the action and declared that while state laws are important they must bow to the federal Constitution.

ON THE OTHER HAND, Bishop Wilburn Campbell of the Episcopal Diocese of West Virginia, said "you cannot achieve a moral goal by immoral actions. This 'prayer pilgrimage' deliberately and definitely violated the known laws of municipalities and states, and they should be prepared to take the consequences."

Meanwhile, six other members of the pilgrimage visiting the University of the South at Sewanee, Tenn., announced they intended to seek service at a segregated restaurant on the campus.

Mrs. Clara Shoemate, who runs the restaurant under a contract with the Episcopal-operated university, said she wouldn't let the racially mixed group past the front door.

A SPOKESMAN for the clergymen, the Rev. Malcolm Boyd of Detroit, said if denied service "we not only will stage a sit-in but also a hunger strike until we are served as a group."

In Paris, an American Negro actor refused to take part in a French play based on U. S. racial problems. Herman Gantt said "the director's interpretation was an insult to my race and my country."

The Atlanta-born actor said he was asked to play an "Uncle Tom" type who is killed when he tries to marry a white girl in Atlanta. "I was reared in Atlanta and I have never had an ounce of trouble," he said.

THE EXCLUSIVE Union League Club of Chicago said that a Negro federal judge will be welcome to use club facilities with other federal judges. The announcement followed published reports of a possible color bar.

Back in Jackson, two women transfer students from the North became the first white outsiders to enroll at Tugaloo Southern Christian College since the Negro institution was founded six years after the Civil War. About half the faculty is composed of white persons, however.

Jackson Riders Drop Appeals, Are Sentenced

Rockefeller's Son-in-Law, 14 Others Jailed In Miss.

By CLIFF SESSIONS

JACKSON, Miss. — (UPI) — The son-in-law of Gov. Nelson Rockefeller of New York and 14 others, were sentenced to four months in jail Friday for attempting to dine together in a segregated restaurant here.

The group of Episcopal ministers was arrested here Wednesday while making an anti -segregation "prayer pilgrimage."

In New York a spokesman for Rocefeller said the governor would not intercede in any way in the case of his son-in-law, the Rev Robert L. Pierson ,husband of Rocefeller's daughter, Anne.

Municipal Judge James L. Spencer, himself an Episcopalian ordered a jail sentence and a $200 fine for each minister after a two hour trial in which assistant city attorney Robert L. Nichols, also an Episcopalian, served as prosecutor.

The ministers, like 307 "freedom riders" before them, were charged with breaching the peace after refusing police orders to move on."

Spencer said the "only conceivable result" on such visits to Jackson would be violence and bloodshed if civil officials did not act.

The only state witness was police Capt. J. L. Ray, who testified he believed a riot would have erupted in the local Trailways bus station if he had not arrested the ministers when they tried to have lunch at the terminals restaurant.

One of the ministers, the Rev. John Crocker Jr., of Providence, R. I., was the only defense witness.

The ministers planned to file appeals to their convictions but none was released under appeal bond immediately. They said that some may decide to serve out their sentences.

The 15 were among a group of 28 ministers who left NeNw Orleans Tuesday on the "pilgrimage," headed for the Episcopal Church's National Council meeting in Detroit next week.

Five of their companions remained here and attended the trial while the others continued the trip.

The ministers convicted, in addition to Pierson and Crocer, are: The Revs. Gilbert S. Avery, Ill., Roxbury, Mass., Myron B. Bloy, Jr. Cambridge Mass., James P. Breeden, Roxbury Mass., James W. Evans, St. Clair, Mo., John M. Evans Toledo Ohio, Quinland R. Gordon, Washington, D. C. James Jones Chicago.

Jackson Jails Rockefeller's Son-In-Law

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—Fifteen Episcopal priests challenged Mississippi segregation today and police arrested them on breach of peace charges.

The group, on a "prayer pilgrimage" to study segregation included the Rev. Robert Pierson 35, of New York and Evanston Ill., son-in-law of New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller.

The 12 white and three Negro clergymen went into the white waiting room of the Trailways Bus station in a group and patrolmen ordered them to move. They declined to move and the officers called Capt. J. L. Ray, who has handled most of Jackson's "Freedom Rider" arrests.

Ray's order was ignored and the arrests followed.

One of the clergymen bought tickets for all 15 about 30 minutes before they appeared after a taxi trip from Tougaloo Southern Christian College, a Negro school here where the 28 ministers had spent the night.

The ministers had tickets for Chattanooga, Tenn., from where they planned to visit the church's University of the South nearby.

The Rev. Layton Zimmer of Swarthmore, Pa., who went to the station in business clothes to observe, said seven other priests among the 28 on the pilgrimage bought tickets for Birmingham., Ala., on a plane to leave tonight and hoped to visit the Episcopal University at Sewanee, Tenn.

The Rev. Jonn Dorr, chaplain at Oklahoma State University, said he and four other whi priests would remain in Jackso until the ministers ate out jail.

The trials of the 15 arreste this morning were set for 3 p.r Thursday.

Dorr indicated the 15 arreste probably would post bonds ne week if convicted.

The group of ministers le New Orleans Tuesday to vis Episcopal institutions on the prayer pilgrimage and study se regation at the schools. The planned to close the tour Sundi at Detroit where the 60th genera convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church is scheduled.

MAINTAIN UNITY

The Rev. Mr. Dorr said the group did not plan an effort to break state laws at the airport Wednesday night, but the Rev. Mr. Zimmer said the mixed group would "Maintain its unity" throughout the trip.

The Rev. Mr. Zimmer said after the 15 were arrested, other members of the party sent a telegram to Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy saying:

"Fifteen Episcopal priests have been arrested in Jackson while attempting to use interstate facilities en route to Detroit on a prayer pilgrimage . . . In view of your request to American clergy to exercise leadership in these areas, we urge you immediately resolve problems of interstate convention, now under way.

Two To Stay In Cells

Two other members of the group arrested Wednesday, the Rev. James G. Jones and the Rev. Robert Page Taylor of Chicago, plan to remain behind bars a few days longer.

The 15 ministers, three of them Negroes, were part of an anti-segregation "prayer pilgrimage" and they attempted to enter a white restaurant together. They were convicted in City Court two days later of breaching the peace.

The Rev. John Dorr of Stillwater, Okla., a spokesman for the group, said those convicted would return here later for their appeal trials in Hinds County Court.

The Rev. Mr. Dorr said money to free the 13 had been donated by Episcopalians, including the presiding bishop of the Episcopal Church in the United States, the Rt. Rev. Arthur Lichtenberger, and Bishops Roger Blanchard of Ohio, Anson Stokes of Massachusetts, John Higgins of Rhode Island and Angus Dun of Washington.

Some Are 'Divided'

The Rev. Mr. Dorr conceded that congregations of some ministers making the "pilgrimage" were "divided" between approval and disapproval of the trip. But he said there was no "serious opposition."

The trip, he said, had been a "fine thing" for the Episcopal Church.

'Riders' Plead Innocent, Cases Set Next March

Freedom Riders fighting breach of peace convictions which began in arrests here last May will continue through May, 1962, following arraignment of 82 more white and Negro defendants yesterday.

Everyone entered not guilty pleading before Special County Judge John Countiss and had their trials set ten at a time, to be heard two a day beginning March 12, 1962.

The Riders, all wearing sheild-type badges advertising them as Freedom Riders, filled on side of the Circuit Court Room in the courthouse, seated together, white and Negro, male and female intermixed.

On the other side of the courthouse, Abraham Bassford, Brooklyn white youth, stood alone to try his own appeal case, and was convicted in slightly over an hour.

Judge Russel Moore fined him $200 and four months in jail. Bassford told the court he did not expect to be represented by counsel and later conferred briefly with Carsie Hall, Jackson Negro attorney who has been serving in the defense group for the Riders. Hall said the youth refused representation.

NO CONTEST

Another Rider entered a no contest pleading in the morning and got a $200 fine and four months jail sentence suspended. Herbert E. Bass, Jackson, Negro, expected to pay his fine and costs and not appeal any further.

This morning, Robert M. Baum, of Excelsior, Minn., was scheduled for trial and later in the day, Marshall Bennett, Jackson, is on the docket.

The mass arraignment of Riders yesterday saw them scheduled for trial dates in groups of ten, and one white defendant James Wahlstrom, 24, of Milwaukee, plead nolo contendre and got a $200 fine and four months suspended sentence. Court officials said he had two counts against him and both would be dropped with the no contest appeal.

Seven cases called were not present, and officers said one was still in Parchman, and two others were held in a Shreveport jail, having been arrested there on the way to Jackson.

The group was the second to be arraigned in this manner, the first comprised of 190 Riders, with their cases scheduled to run through Jan. 21, 1962, being tried two a day.

When the last case was read, the entire group was advised they could leave, and left the courthouse to board buses and cars in front of the courthouse.

City police and Hinds county deputies kept the Riders together and did not let them leave the transportation loading area. The officers kept passersby moving and did not permit any gatherings.

'Rider' Appeal Postponed In Jackson

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—The appeal trial of "Freedom Rider" Marshall Bennett, 17, of Jackson was postponed until Wednesday because of the illness of a witness.

Earlier, Hinds County Judge Russel Moore sentenced two others and ordered forfeiture of three riders' $500 appeal bond because they did not show up for their arraignment Monday.

Bennett, a high school student, was arrested July 5 for trying to desegregate Trailways bus terminal. He was sentenced to $200 fine and 4 months in jail. He posted $500 bond and appealed.

Earlier, Charles Biggers, 21-year-old Wayne University Negro student from Boulder, Colo., declined to contest his breach of peace charge and drew a $200 fine and a suspended 4-month jail sentence.

Biggers was arrested July 7 in Trailways bus terminal. He appealed and was arraigned Monday. Judge Moore allowed him to enter his nolo contendere plea immediately instead of waiting until trial, set for March 1962.

2 MORE RIDERS ARE CONVICTED

Had Appealed Cases of Jackson Court

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—Hinds county court juries convicted two "freedom riders" on breach of peace charges Tuesday in cases appealed from Jackson city court.

Convicted by the 12-man all-white juries were Peter Ackerberg, 22-year-old New York white man, and Elizabeth S. Adler, 21-year-old Brooklyn white woman.

Police Capt. J. L. Ray testified both were among integrated rider groups who sought to desegregate Jackson bus terminals.

Ackerberg, an Antioch college student, was among the 15 riders in the second wave to reach Jackson May 24, when the first groups hit Mississippi.

Ackerberg had received a $200 fine and 60-day suspended sentence from city Judge James Spencer on May 26 and gained his freedom on an appeal bond May 29.

Miss Adler, a University of Wisconsin student, was arrested June 16 in a party of five riders. She was convicted the same day and given a $200 fine and four-month term.

The two veridcts brought to four the number of riders found guilty by juries hearing their appeals. Four others have withdrawn their appeals, two paying their fines and two others returning to jail.

Meanwhile, field Secretary Tom Gaither of the Congress of Racial Equality said CORE officials planned to resume rides into Jackson.

"The purpose is to get on the offensive," he said. "To stay in court is to stay on the defensive."

Mississippi Roundup—

82 'Freedom Riders' Trials Set For Spring

JACKSON, Sept. 11 (UPI)—Eighty-two "freedom riders" appeared in Hinds County Court today, pleaded innocent to breach of the peace charges and received trial dates for an eight-week period next Spring.

Each member of the group—divided about equally by races—was charged in connection with challenges they made of segregation at transportation terminals here.

Last month 192 riders were arraigned and entered not guilty pleas. Their trials will be held through February.

The group of 82 was made up of persons who were arrested later or were in jail at the time the 192 were arraigned. Each is free on appeal bond.

The riders will be tried at the rate of 10 a week beginning March 12 and ending May 11. The trials, before a jury in County Court, are necessary in the appeal of convictions from police court.

Six riders scheduled for arraignment were absent.

The integrationists arrived here from throughout the nation for the mass court appearance. A blue and white bus from Tougaloo College, a church-supported Negro school, carried most of them from the Tougaloo campus to the courthouse where 10 or 12 policemen stood guard.

'Rider' Cases Clear Docket

Seven nolo contendere pleadings in Freedom Rider breach of peace conviction cases yesterday cleared the Hinds County court docket until Thursday.

Judge Russel Moore accepted the new pleas and withdrawal of appeals during the morning and later in the day sentenced Arthur Brooks, Jr., of Los Angeles, to $200 fine and four months in jail following his conviction by a jury.

The county judge also waived a bond forfeiture for Mary Magdalene Harrison, San Antonio, Texas, and gave her a $200 fine and four months suspended sentence.

Judge Moore said the girl explained she was unable to appear here several weeks ago for arraignment because her father would not permit her to return with the other Freedom Riders.

22 More Riders Jailed, German Newsman Freed

JACKSON, Miss., July 31 (AP)—City Judge James Spencer today convicted 22 "Freedom Riders" of breach of peace in desegregation attempts and reelased a German magazine photographer as innocent of the same charge because he became confused.

"This court does not intend to use the forces of law to prevent anyone in good faith from writing a story," Judge Spencer said.

He released Hilmar Ehrenfried Pabel, 50, of Munich, Germany, photographer for Quick Magazine in Germany.

The 22 riders were sentenced to $200 fine and four months in jail, the maximum penalty for breach of peace by disobeying a policeman.

Refused To Leave

Police Capt. J. L. Ray testified he arrested the riders for refusing to obey his order to move out of the terminal, nine in Greyhound Bus Terminal, and the rest in Illinois Central Terminal.

Ray said he arrested the riders because he felt their presence would tend to cause a breach of peace.

He said he arrested Pabel because Pabel refused to obey his order to move on and insisted in carrying on a conversation about the order.

Earlier, Ray said, Pabel had sought to enter the patrol wagon with the arrested riders and had to be ejected by force.

Barrier To Overcome

Pabel testified that he was acting in his professional capacity and sought only to do his job of reporting the facts objectively.

The police had allowed Pabel to shoot as many photographs of the arrest as he wanted and did not arrest him until he refused to leave the colored waiting room at the Greyhound Bus Terminal.

In handing down his decision, Judge Spencer said he was giving Pabel every benefit of the doubt because he was a foreigner in a strange country with some language barrier to overcome.

MADISON, WIS.,

White Rider Tries Again and Is Jailed Again

Wahlstrom, freed June 28 on bond after his first desegregation effort, returned by bus from Memphis Monday and entered the Negro waiting room of the Greyhound Bus Terminal. He ignored a police order to move and his new arrest followed.

He was one of two riders named by the Highway Patrol several weeks ago as members of an American student group who visited Cuba last December and attended a Soviet-directed seminar on how to operate sit-ins, walk-ins, kneel-ins and "freedom rides." Wahlstrom confirmed he went to Cuba with the "Fair Play for Cuba Committee," but denied attending any Communist seminar.

He became the first rider arrested on a second desegregation attempt at Jackson terminals. His first arrest was June 6 at the Trailways station, which brought his conviction in city court with $200 fine and a four-month sentence. Two months of the sentence were suspended.

Total of 'Riders' Jailed In Jackson Hits 216

JACKSON, Miss., July 9 (AP)—The number of "freedom riders" arrested in Jackson soared over the 200 mark today as 17 travelers tried unsuccessfully to integrate terminal waiting rooms.

Nine "riders"—eight Negroes and one white—came here by train from New Orleans. They were arrested when they refused to obey police orders to leave a white waiting room.

Less than three hours later, seven white and one Negro "riders" came in by bus from Montgomery, Ala. Police took them into custody when they sought to integrate the Negro and the white waiting rooms.

Jackson police now have arrested 216 "riders" since May 24.

The Alabama group had announced they came to talk over segregation policies with Mississippi Gov. Ross Barnett with a view toward mediation and a "fruitful exchange of views."

If they failed to meet with Barnett, a spokesman said they would go to jail.

After getting off the bus in Jackson, the Negro woman "rider" approached Police Capt. J. L. Ray and asked if a representative of the governor were present.

When told one wasn't, she asked if the group could see the governor this afternoon.

"It is my information," Ray answered, "that he's very busy and he can't see you."

Five white "riders" then entered the Negro waiting room. The Negro woman and two white "riders" went into the white waiting room.

Police ordered them to leave and arrested them as they tried to get service at crowded cafeteria counters.

Earlier, Gov. Barnett said he would be out of town Monday through Thursday and indicated he would not talk with the "riders" today.

"I don't see any need of wading in with that crowd and discussing these things," Barnett said.

Before arriving, the Alabama group had succeeded in getting service at both white and Negro lunch counters in Montgomery. A dozen policemen watched as white "riders" were served at a Negro counter for the first time.

In New Orleans, detectives watched the group as they bought tickets in the New Orleans terminal. The "riders" did not test New Orleans facilities. They were not bothered.

Group Of 17 Arrested For Breach Of Peace At Terminal

By United Press International

JACKSON, Miss., July 9.—Seventeen self-styled "Freedom-Riders" arrived here Sunday and, after ignoring orders to leave segregated waiting rooms, went to jail.

A group of nine came here by train from New Orleans shortly before noon and three hours later eight others arrived by bus from Montgomery, Ala.

The arrests brought to 216 the number of protest riders taken into custody on breach of the peace charges here since the massive integration campaign was aimed at Jackson May 24.

More Coming Monday

Three other travelers concerned with the riders' campaign were to arrive here by Monday morning. They are Federal judges who will hear a lawsuit seeking an end to arrests of the riders and an end to segregation in Jackson terminals.

The suit was filed June 9 by National Association for the Advancement of Colored People on behalf of three Jackson Negroes.

Elbert P. Tuttle, Chief Judge of the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, scheduled the hearing for Monday. It will be conducted by him and Mississippi's two district judges, Sidney Mize of Gulfport and Claude Clayton of Tupelo.

Witnesses Subpenaed

Among those subpenaed for the hearing are Mississippi Atty. Gen. Joe T. Patterson and representatives of the city, Illinois Central Railroad, Trailways and Greyhound bus companies and the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The second group of riders to come here Sunday sent a telegram to Gov. Ross Barnett before leaving Montgomery asking that he meet them at the Trailways terminal here "to peacefully and legally resolve this issue."

When they alighted from their bus, Lula White, 22, the only Negro in the group, asked Police Capt. J. L. Ray if she could contact Governor Barnett. Captain Ray replied, "That won't be necessary. He has already told us he won't come. He can't come."

Negro Woman Arrested

Miss White, who said she is a college teacher in Chicago, then walked into the white waiting room, accompanied by two men. They were arrested while their companions were meeting the same fate in the Negro waiting room.

Members of the bus travelers were from New York and Chicago. In the group which came by train were six from Los Angeles, one from Berkeley, Calif., one from College Park, Md., and one from Tucson, Ariz.

The train riders, eight Negroes and one white man, appeared in high spirits. They laughed and talked as they were put under arrest and escorted to a paddy wagon.

Twenty-eight so-called "freedom riders," some of them only 15 years old, joined the growing horde in Jackson jails today on breach of the peace charges.

Nine were arrested at the Illinois Central Railroad yesterday morning when they arrived here from New Orleans, eight were jailed at Trailways bus station when they arrived from Montgomery, Ala., yesterday afternoon, and 11 local youths were jailed when they tried to buy tickets from Jackson to Canton at the Trailways station late last night.

The arrests pushed the rider total to 227 arrested since May 24.

MORE ON WAY

Meanwhile five more were scheduled to leave St. Louis today on an integration tour through the south. They said they planned to go from St. Louis to Little Rock, Ark., Shreveport, La., New Orleans by bus and return via train through Mississippi, Tennessee and Illinois, attempting to break down station segregation facilities throughout the trip.

A Negro Baptist minister in Milwaukee, Wis., began recruiting participants in another ride to Jackson. He said he hopes to get 100 persons for the trip.

All those jailed yesterday were charged with breach of the peace when they integrated waiting rooms and refused police orders to leave.

The first group from Montgomery had sent a telegram in advance asking Gov. Ross Barnett to meet them at the station.

When they arrived a Negro woman member of the group asked Police Capt. J. L. Ray if the governor's representative was there.

Ray told her "It is my information that he's very busy and he can't see you."

Five whites in the group strode into the Negro waiting room and the Negro woman and two whites walked into the white waiting room. All were arrested.

New Appeals Method Sought For 'Riders'

An attorney for Jackson's ever increasing "freedom rider" population today planned to ask a judge to arrange for four of the 260 pending cases to represent the entire group in appeals.

William Kunstler of New York City, an attorney who represents some riders, said he will seek permission from Hinds County Judge Russel Moore to choose four cases as representative of the entire group.

Fate of the others would rest on outcome of the four cases, Kunstler said. 1st 12-14

Judge Moore was out of the state today and could not be reached for comment.

Of the 260 jailed after the many integration attempts at transportation facilities here during the past two months, more than 100 have been freed on appeal bonds and other are scheduled to be released under similar conditions.

FIRST APPEALS SET

The first appeals are expected to be heard in county court next month. Kunstler's request came as he appeared here yesterday in defense of Richard Haley, a Congress of Racial Equality official, charged with breach of the peace in municipal court.

Haley was among 15 persons conviceted by Municipal Judge James Spencer and sentenced to four moths in jail and fined $200.

Nine of those convicted were church leaders who attempted to integrate an airport restaurant Thursday night following a huddle at Tougaloo Southern Christian College.

Jackson Miss

Four others, all white were jailed yesterday morning when they refused a policeman's order to leave the Negro waiting room at the Greyhound bus terminal. They had arrived a few minutes earlier after a trip of several days from New Jersey with stops in several Tennessee cities.

A Negro girl was tried with Haley. The pair was arrested when they refused police orders to "move on" as they picketed the Heidelberg Hotel where several southern governors were meeting this week. Kunstler charged that police were using Mississippi's breach of the peace law to "thwart freedom of expression."

Judge Spencer ruled however that Capt. J. L. Ray, the arresting officer, acted to keep down violence such as that which erupted "in the bus stations of Montgomery, on the beaches of Chicago, playgrounds of Cincinnati and the streets of New York."

"We haven't had anything like that", Spencer said, adding that so long as "police authority can prevent these breaches of the peace such things will not happen."

Five of those arrested at the airport were released on bond last night and headed home.

Kunstler was in New Orleans today to arrange a date before a judge of the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals for hearing a habeas corpus petition testing constitutionality of Mississippi's breach of the peace law under which the riders have been convicted.

The habeas corpus petition was filed in behalf of Elizabeth Wyckoff, a white New York City free lance writer, U. S. District Judge Sidney Mize refused to hear it on grounds she had not sought relief in state court but a judge of the Court of Appeals agreed to hear the case.

Meanwhile in Washington U. S. Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy told an interracial group he can't understand "how anyone can wear a collar and not speak out a collar and not speak out against this evil racial discrimination."

His statement came after six of the group which met at Tougaloo called on him in behalf of integration of transportation facilities in the South.

In addition several more riders were reported en route Jackson from the West Coast with a stop in New Orleans to attend the CORE sponsored school in non-violence.

JACKSON, Miss., July 16 (UPI)—City Judge James L. Spencer today acquitted a Negro "freedom rider" who was charged with assault for allegedly stepping on a white man's foot in a bus terminal. P. 2. Jour. 7-18-61

Spencer concluded after one hour of conflicting testimony that Leo Washington, 24, New Orleans, "inadvertantly" stepped on the foot of Cecil Lindsay at the Greyhound Station Saturday night. Lindsay shoved him back against a wall.

The judge found Washington, a college student, not guilty of the assault charge but convicted him along with 19 other riders of breach of the peace in their test of Mississippi segregation laws. They were fined $200 and sentenced to four months in jail, bringing to 244 the number so convicted here since May 24.

Prison gets 'clean bill'—

Eight more riders go to jail in Jackson mixing attempt

By The Associated Press

Another attempt to crack the segregation barrier at Jackson, Miss., has brought to 299 the number of freedom riders arrested in the Deep South city.

The arrest of eight additional persons occurred the same day Minnesota officials reported five riders from that state had not been mistreated at the Mississippi State Penitentiary at Parchman, 130 miles northwest of Jackson.

The eight charged with breach of the peace at Jackson yesterday were described as the first group to stage a freedom ride from Montgomery, Ala., to Jackson since July 2.

TOM GAITHER, field secretary for the Congress of Racial Equality, said CORE sponsored the trip and that one white woman, three white men and four Negro men took part. No incidents were reported.

While the biracial group was making the trip, Acting City Judge W. B. Fontaine of Jackosn convicted 20 riders and handed down $200 fines and four-month jail sentences. The riders were arrested earlier this month.

At St. Paul, Minn., Asst. Atty. Gen. John Casey Jr. and Mrs. Wright Brooks, chairman of the Minnesota Human Rights Commission, reported on an investigation they made of the Mississippi Penitentiary at the request of Gov. Elmer L. Andersen. The governor said he had received some reports the five white per-

"A TOUR OF THE prison facilities has convinced me that there have been no examples of mistreatment or abuse," Mrs. Brooks told a news conference.

She said the riders voiced "some good natured chiding about the food, but no serious complaints as to the adequacy of the diet." She also said the young people needed exercise in the jail yard but had not been permitted to join other prisoners in work.

Mrs. Brooks said prison authorities explained the young Minnesotans were not allowed to work because of possible clashes with other prisoners who do not share their integration views.

AT OCALA, FLA., James R. O'Conner, 31-year-old economics instructor at Barnard College in New York City, was convicted of unlawful assembly by a Marion County court jury. He is slated to be sentenced July 17.

O'Conner, a white man, was the second person convicted in connection with a scuffle at the Ocala bus station June 16 when a group of freedom riders stopped on a bus trip to test integration practices.

Edward B. King Jr., head of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee, said at Roanoke, Va., the group will sponsor a "freedom walk" from Baltimore to Washington Sunday, July 16.

THE COMMITTEE has headquarters in Atlanta. King said the walk is to focus attention of government leaders on "imprisoned freedom riders in Jackson and continuing segregation of interstate facilities."

In Washington the Justice Department was reported planning a new move toward reopening the public school system in Prince Edwards County, Va., closed the past two years in an integration dispute. However, Justice officials declined comment on what the move might be.

The Chapel Hill, N. C., school board assigned about 40 Negro pupils to first grades in schools for white children. The board also was expected to act favorably on requests for assignment to white schools of Negro pupils in the third, eighth and ninth grades.

THE FIRST SCHOOL integration occurred at Chapel Hill last year when three Negro first graders were admitted to the Estes Hill School. They were promoted and will be in the second grade this Fall.

At Greenville, Miss., three Negroes picketed three Greenville variety stores for about 40 minutes, protesting alleged discriminatory hiring practices by the firms. No incidents were reported. Police patrolled the area in cars and on foot and one officer had a dog on leash.

In Cleveland, Mrs. Frances Lander Spain, president of the American Library Assn., said she could point with pride to "the wonderful advances already made in Southern cities in regard to integration" in library facilities.

Teen-age riders arrested in Jackson mixing attempt

JACKSON, Miss., July 6—(AP)—Police arrested nine teen-age Negro boys yesterday when they attempted to integrate the white waiting room of a bus terminal here and buy outgoing tickets as freedom riders.

Officers jailed them along with four other Negroes arrested yesterday after they refused to move from a bench restricted to white use in Jackson's city park.

The four were among a dozen Negroes who held a picnic in the park area usually used by whites. They were turned away from the ticket booth to the park swimming pool.

ALL 13 WERE charged with breach of peace.

Police arrested the six boys in the Trailways Bus Depot last night when they staged an impromptu integration attempt. They caught police of guard at first, but were arrested moments later when they refused to leave the white waiting room.

Earlier in the day police arrested three 18-year-old Jackson boys who entered the Trailways white waiting room.

They were Eugene Lee, Ralph Floyd and Robert Bass, all students at Lanier High School for Negroes and members of the Jackson student nonviolent group.

THE JACKSON office of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) issued a statement from the trio after their arrest saying:

"We who are citizens of Jackson are tired of second-class citizenship and are not satisfied with segregation.

"We still do not have the freedom for which our ancestors fought and died in wars. Their dying won't be in vain as we are striving for that same freedom . . . we are not afraid."

Police said Floyd was arrested in 1956 on charges of trespass and suspicion of grand larceny, and again in 1960 on charges of petty larceny. He was released to his parents both times.

THE FOUR arrested at the park were:

Charles D. Price, 19, of Natchez, student and employe of Campbell College in Jackson; Perry D. Thornton, 18, of Memphis, Tenn., also a Campbell student; Mary Lou Bell, 18, and Eddie Jean Thomas, 20, both Jackson girls.

Meanwhile, two representatives of Minnesota Gov. Elmer Andersen met with Gov. Ross Barnett today to plan a tour of the state penitentiary at Parchman where five freedom riders from that state are held.

Circuit Judge Leon Hendrick of Jackson yesterday told the Hinds County Grand Jury to inspect conditions at the penitentiary where many freedom riders have been sent.

HE PRAISED sheriff's officers and police officers in Jackson for handling freedom riders and the "provoking situation which has developed the past few weeks."

Hendrick added that the riders "had the deliberate intent of provoking our people, and what is behind it I don't know, but I suggest you send a committee to Parchman to check conditions there."

Meanwhile, a Negro integration leader released on bond from prison Tuesday after serving 40 days as a freedom rider returned to his New York home and repeated his intention of stepping up the pace of the freedom ride movement.

James Farmer, national direcotr of CORE, said that withing the next 10 days the riders would travel through "three centers in the South," other than Jackson. He did not specify.

The Afro American - P. 3
Baltimore, Md

JACKSON, Miss. — Two Freedom Riders, residents of Mississippi, were given sentences of two years in jail and a $2,000 fine and 18 months in jail and a $1,500 fine last week as the number of Freedom Riders jailed in Jackson soared to 273.

Nine of those jailed last week included members of the "Mission to Mississippi," composed of clergymen of the Protestant, Catholic and Jewish faiths, who planned to meet in Jackson to "study and to pray" for solution to the problems of race relations. Sat. 7-29-61

The two Mississippians, sentenced Wednesday and Thursday, are James Bevel and Bernard Lafayette, both charged with contributing to the delinquency of minors as a result of advising youthful Freedom Riders to accept jail terms in lieu of fines.

Mr. Bevel was convicted on four counts while Mr. Lafayette was found guilty on three. Each was given a $500 fine and six - month jail sentence on each count.

Jack Young, attorney for the pair, filed notice of appeal.

PRIOR TO the arrival of the members of the Mission to Mississippi, Jackson Mayor Allen Thompson rejected an invitation on Wednesday to meet with the group to discuss race relations.

Charles McCoy of the Pacific School of Religion at Berkeley, wired Thompson, requesting an appointment for the group. The request was also presented by Dr. A. D. Beitell of Tougaloo (Miss.) Southern Christian College, where the clergymen were scheduled to meet.

His reply to Dr. Beittell said that he would accept "if I believed anything constructive would result....

"However, the use of this office as a propaganda vehicle for a cause that is inflammatory, divisive and destructive will not be permitted."

The Mayor added that the Freedom Riders issue was before the courts and would be "fully aired before a Federal tribunal." Therefore, he said, he felt that nothing was to be gained by conferring with the group.

OTHER MEMBERS of the Mission to Mississippi conferred Friday with Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy, who urged that the nation's clergymen, especially in the South, play a more active role in fighting racial discrimination.

"I don't see how anyone could wear a collar and not stand against that particular evil," he told the ministers.

Before visiting the Attorney General the seven members of the delegation appealed to the Interstate Commerce Commission to give quick approval to the Attorney General's request for new rules to bar segregation in interstate bus terminal facilities.

ICC Vice Chairman Rupert L. Murphy told the group that the commissoin would act as fast as possible. A hearing is scheduled for next month.

Officials of the Greyhound Corp. and other bus lines said Friday that the rules proposed by the Attorney General would impose an unfair law enforcement burden on them.

HINDS COUNTY Sheriff J. R. Gilfoy said Thursday that Elmer Brown, a 20-year old Freedom Rider from Akron, Ohio, had tried to hang himself in a jail cell a day before he was scheduled to be released on bond.

Brown, a University of Akron student, had told newsmen earlier that CORE, sponsors of the Freedom Rides, had let him down. He was taken down before he suffered injury.

AT MONTGOMERY, Ala., U.S. District Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr., allowed the Gulf Transport Co., a Mississippi corporation, to withdraw as a defendant in a suit attacking bus segregation.

Judge Johnson said that Gulf does not do business in the Montgomery area.

Three other bus companies, however, remain as defendants along with Ala. Atty. Gen. MacDonald Gallion, the Alabama Public Service Commission, Mayor Earl James and City Commissioners Parks and Sullivan; Police Chief G. J. Rupenthal, Sheriff Mac Sim Butler and City Solicitor William F. Thetford.

Plaintiffs in the suit are the Rev. Ralph Abernathy and a group of Freedom Riders who seek to enjoin the Freedom Riders and public official from enforcing segregation on buses or in terminals.

Officials of CORE announced the transfer from Montgomery to Jackson, Miss., of its field secretary, Tom Gaither.

The move, described as an administrative step, leaves Montgomery without a full-time CORE employee for the first time since Gaither's arrival in May.

Federal Suit In 'Rider' Case Opens Today

A three-judge federal court was scheduled to make a third attempt today to hear a lawsuit challenging segregation in Mississippi's transportation facilities.

The suit has been postponed twice since its filing on June 9. But presiding Judge Richard T. Rives of Montgomery, Ala., has cautioned attorneys for the NAACP and the state to come to court today prepared to try the suit.

The suit, filed by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People after the first waves of "freedom riders" were arrested in Jackson, challenges segregation of rail and bus lines, city bus lines and the restaurant at the Jackson airport.

The suit was postponed the first ime because of the illness of Asst. Atty. Gen. Dugas Shands, Mississippi's civil rights expert; the court ruled that the NAACP's complaint was so broad that defendants needed additional time to answer it.

Judge Rives will preside over the three-judge court. The other two judges are Claude Clayton of Tupelo and Sidney Mize of Gulfport.

About 300 "freedom riders" have been arrested on charges of breach of the peace in Jackson's transportation terminals.

The NAACP contends the suit does not challenge the laws under which the "riders" have been arrested but only their use in allegedly enforcing segregation.

Defendants include the State of Mississippi, the City of Jackson, Jackson Airport Commission, Illinois Central Railroad, Greyhound and Trailways Bus Companies, Jackson City Bus Line, and Cicero's Restaurant at the airport.

Three Jackson Negroes, none a "freedom rider," are complaintants in the suit, which is being financed by the NAACP Legal fund.

Jackson Judge Finds 15 Ministers Guilty

12 White, 3 Negro Clergymen Each Get $200 Fines, Four-Month Jail Sentence

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 15 (AP)—Municipal Judge James Spencer convicted 15 Episcopal clergymen—including New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller's son-in-law—on breach of peace charges today after their efforts to desegregate a Jackson bus terminal.

Spencer returned his verdict in the case of the 12 white and three Negro clergymen and handed each a $200 fine and four-month jail term.

Among those convicted was the Rev. Robert L. Pierson, 35, of New York City and Evanston, Ill., son-in-law of Gov. Rockefeller. The Rev. Mr. Pierson did not testify at the trial.

The clergymen made no move to post bond and sources close to them indicated it might be next week before most of them gained their freedom.

'Find Duty Clear'

Before handing down sentence, Spencer told the courtroom "I find my duty clear. I believe they violated the laws of Mississippi and the articles of religion of their faith."

In his closing arguments, Special Prosecutor Robert Nichols charged the clergymen violated an article of religion of the Protestant Episcopal Church when they ignored an order from Police Capt. J. L. Ray to move along.

He said one of the articles of religion admonished Episcopalians to obey civil authority.

Defense Atty. Carl Rachlin of New York, chief counsel of the Congress of Racial Equality, contended the state breach of peace law was unconstitutional because it permitted an officer to make an arrest if he felt violence might erupt later. This, he said, made the officer a judge.

Nichols said if the officer "had to wait until violence occurred before the arrest would be constitutional, then there might have been two dead bodies—but they would have been constitutionally dead."

The 15 clergymen were arrested at the Trailways bus terminal Wednesday when they ignored a police order to move when it was issued by Ray.

The arrests interrupted their "prayer pilgrimage" from New Orleans to Detroit, where the annual convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church will open Sunday. The tour was planned to study the racial question in Episcopal institutions on the way and in the area in general.

The Rt. Rev. Arthur C. Lichtenberger, Detroit, presiding bishop of the Episcopal Church in the U.S.A., Friday praised the action of the 15 clergymen. He said they were "attempting to bear witness to their Christian convictions about racial matters and to make it evident to the whole country what the position of the Episcopal Church is."

West Virginian Disagrees

But Bishop Wilburn Campbell, Charleston, W. Va., head of the Episcopal diocese of West Virginia, said the "prayer pilgrimage deliberately and defiantly violated the known laws of municipalities and states..." He said the ministers "should be prepared to take the consequences.

"Personally, I have little sympathy for them, not because of their goals and ideals, but because of their tactics," Bisho Campbell said. "You cann achieve a moral goal by imm actions."

Clergyman Speaks of Prayer Trip

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — The Rev. Dr. Lee Belford of New York, one of 28 Episcopal clergymen on a "prayer pilgrimage" studying segregation, told Mayor Allen Thompson Friday their trip "would have been worth it" if it had touched off violence.

The Rev. Dr. Belford visited Thompson to present some of the views of the ministers as they waited in Jackson for the trial of 15 of their number of breach of peace charges after trying to desegregate a bus terminal.

When Thompson asked if he felt they would have been justified had one or two been killed the Rev. Dr. Belford said:

"Yes, I think it would have been worth it. Our church has a history of martyrdom."

Under questioning by the mayor, the clergyman admitted New York city was "sitting on a powder keg" which could blow up over strained race relations.

Jailed Clergymen Uphold Actions

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Fifteen jailed Negroe and white Episcopalian clergymen issued a statement Friday saying they could not submit to Mississippi's segregation laws because they are unlawful and immoral.

The 15 were charged with breach of peace when they ought to desegregate the Trailways bus terminal Wednesday.

"As ministers of the gospel of Christ," the statement said, "we appeal to the consciences of Christian everywhere to be faithful to the unity which Christ has given us and to banish all traces of racial segregation and discrimination from the church and from all parts of the land."

The ministers said if they had not been arrested under the segregation laws, they could have continued their "prayer pilgrimage" northward.

15 Clergymen Fined In Bus Terminal Case

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 15 (AP)—Municipal Judge James Spencer convicted 15 Episcopal clergymen — including New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller's son-in-lar, the Rev. Robert L. Pierson—on breach of peace charges today after their efforts to desegregate a Jackson bus terminal.

Spencer returned his verdict in the case of the 12 white and three Negro clergymen and handed each a $200 fine and four-month jail term.

The group was arrested Wednesday. All pleaded innocent to the breach of peace charges—failure to move as ordered by an officer.

Capt. J. L. Ray told the court that in his opinion "the crowd in the bus terminal was in an ugly mood and was acting antagonistically toward these people. In my opinion there would have been a breach of the peace."

Under cross examination, Ray said, "I felt that had I not acted quickly, there would have been a riot in there caused by these defendants."

He also testified that none of the ministers showed him any tickets or told him they were interstate passengers, but that the Rev. John Morris, 31, of Atlanta, told him he wanted to eat.

The Rev. John Crocker, 37, of Providence, R. I., testified that the ministers already had been arrested by an officer when Ray arrived.

He said a patrolman first asked them to move on and they told him they were interstate passengers and wanted something to eat.

15 Clerics Convicted In Desegregation Try

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 15 (AP)—Municipal Judge James Spencer convicted 15 Episcopal clergymen —including New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller's son - in - law—on breach of peace charges today after their efforts to desegregate a Jackson bus terminal.

Spencer returned his verdict in the case of the 12 white and three Negro clergymen and handed each a $200 fine and four-month jail term.

Among those convicted was Rev. Robert L. Pierson, 35, of New York City and Evanston, Ill., son-in-law of Gov. Rockefeller. Pierson did not testify.

The clergymen made no move to post bond and sources close to them indicate it might be next week before most of them gain their freedom.

Before handing down sentence, Spencer told the courtroom:

"I find my duty clear. I believe they violated the laws of Mississippi and the articles of religion of their faith."

Special prosecutor Robert Nichols charged the clergymen violated an article of religion of the Protestant Episcopal Church when they ignored an order from Police Capt. J. L. Ray to move along.

He said one of the articles of religion admonishes Episcopalians to obey civil authority.

CHAPLAIN AT YALE TELLS OF U.S. PLEA

Says Justice Aides Tried to Dissuade Freedom Riders

By RICHARD H. PARKE

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, May 28—The chaplain of Yale University said today that the Attorney General's office had tried to dissuade him and four fellow "Freedom Riders" from embarking on their trip to test bus segregation in the South.

The Rev. William Sloane Coffin Jr. made this known in his sermon this morning before an overflow congregation in the University's Battell Chapel. He said:

"People in high places in the Attorney General's office did ask us—most circumspectly—to reconsider our decision to make the trip. As you know of course, we did not."

Mr. Coffin, who declined to elaborate on the remark after the service, returned here yesterday. He and his companions each posted $1,000 cash bond after their arrest Thursday in Montgomery, Ala.

Opposes Kennedy Plea

The group also included the Rev. Gaylord B. Noyce, Assistant Professor of Religion at the Yale Divinity School; Dr David E. Swift and Dr. John McGuire, Professor and Assistant Professor of Religion, respectively, at Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn., and George B. Smith, a Negro law student at Yale.

In his sermon, Mr. Coffin, who is 36 years old, also questioned the wisdom of Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy in advocating a cooling-off period in tests of segregation in the South.

"If I had been the Attorney General, I might have done the same thing," Mr. Coffin said. "Perhaps this was a political maneuver. I don't know. But any return to normalcy means a return to injustice—any cooling-off period must have some promise, some hope of later adjustment."

King's Efforts Are Hailed

Then he asked: "Why should the Negroes be asked for a return to normalcy?" Why shouldn't Governor [John] Patterson be asked? Why should the Negroes have to be the ones to make the concessions?"

He praised the efforts of the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. and recalled that the Negro leader had "spent hour after hour on the telephone trying to explain to the people at the Attorney General's office what it was all about."

The 1,200-seat chapel was filled today and there were persons standing in the rear when the Congregational service began. The worshipers included a score or more of Negroes as well as faculty members, students and townspeople.

Mr. Coffin said, "Our hope in going to the South was to demonstrate that discrimination in the South or North is no longer a matter of local mores but a matter of national interest."

Defends Professors' Role

Another consideration, he continued, was the "dramatic failure of the moderates in dealing with the racial question." The moderates are acting under the "myth of time—the feeling that somehow time will work out everything," he said.

Defending the role of college professors in the anti-segregation movement, Mr. Coffin said that they were "as moderate a group as you can find."

He said he that was not going to ask members of the congregation to "do the same thing that we did—that's an individual decision."

General support for Mr. Coffin's participation in the Freedom Ride movement was evident on the campus today. A university spokesman said that the clerkyman, who was graduated from Yale's Divinity School in 1956, had received many expressions of approval from faculty and students.

Formal faculty and student petitions of support are expected to be circulated tomorrow. Both faculty and students have also already raised $7,000 in bail money.

'Riders' On Return Trip For Trials

Student "freedom riders" began leaving cities throughout the United States, Saturday by regularly scheduled buses for Jackson, Mississippi to arrange pre-trial conferences and trial scheduling for those jailed in there in recent months.

Glenda Gaither, 19, of Great Falls, South Carolina, and Henry James Thomas, 19, of St. Augustine, Florida, who visited the Atlanta World office Saturday morning were among a group of students that left Atlanta Saturday evening for Jackson.

Miss Gaither, a Claflin College coed, told of being confined for 37 days in Mississippi jails. Arrested on a breach of peace charge, Miss Gaither said that she was escorted by police to jail after entering the "white" waiting room in Jackson.

Thomas, a member of the staff of Congress On Racial Equality and Howard University student, stated that "approximately 30 students were arrested with me." The youthful student was jailed and sent to Parchman prison for 45 days after escaping death on a burning Greyhound bus at Anniston, Ala., when it was attacked by an angry white mob.

The Southern Christian Leadership Conference with its headquarters in Atlanta and headed by Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., has sponsored the riders.

Rev. Wyatt Tee Walker, executive director of the SCLC, commenting on the students having to return to Jackson for pre-trial hearings, stated "they are trying to break us financially."

In New York about 100 persons, many of whom said they would fast for 24 hours, demonstrated there Saturday in support of 187 "freedom riders" who will appeal their cases Monday in Jackson, Miss.

The Congress of Racial Equality CORE, sponsoring the demonstration, said that the fasting demonstrators would stay all night in Battery Park.

CORE's New York demonstration was marred by violence Friday night when 32 racially mixed "freedom riders" headed for Jackson by bus to appeal their breach of peace convictions.

An unidentified white man assaulted a newspaper reporter, William Doolittle, 24, of the New York Post, who was covering the departure rally. The man also hit one public relations man, Marvin Rich, 31, who rushed up to him after Doolittle had been hit.

Doolittle was treated at a hospital and released. Rich did not require hospital treatment.

Police were searching for their attacker.

The Congress of Racial Equality (CORE), sponsoring the demonstration, said that the fasting demonstrators would stay all night in Battery Park.

The demonstration began in Battery Park Saturday morning then moved to Liberty Island, where the Statue of Liberty stands. When the island was closed for the night, the demonstrations were to return to Battery Park.

IT HAPPENED IN JACKSON

Police interrupted prayer meeting to arrest ministers

(SPECIAL TO AFRO)

JACKSON, Miss. — The 15 Episcopal ministers convicted here last Friday on charges of "breach of the peace" were arrested twice, it was revealed at the trial in municipal court.

The double arrest was related by the Rev. John Crocker, 37, of Providence, R.I., who told the court the clergymen held public prayer services between the two arrests.

Denying that a riot was threatened, the minister said the people in the bus terminal at the time were quiet and reverent during the prayer services.

"You could have heard a pin drop," the Rev. Mr. Crocker testified.

THIS TESTIMONY was in conflict to that by Police Capt. J. L. Ray, who was not present when the minister first entered the waiting room reserved for whites at the Trailways bus terminal.

Capt. Ray, who has been assigned to arrest all Freedom Riders who challenged Mississippi segregation laws in Jackson, testified that he felt that if the ministers had not been arrested, there would have been a riot.

In response to this, Carl Rachlin of New York City, CORE attorney who defended the ministers, called the state law which authorizes such arrests unconstitutional.

Such a law, he charged, makes a police officer a judge.

IN CONVICTING the ministers, Municipal Judge James Spencer expressed the opinion that the minister violated both Mississippi state law and articles of religion of their faith.

The judge levied a fine of $200 and four-month prison term on each.

As of the week-end, all of the ministers still were in prison; the three colored ministers in the county jail and the 12 white ministers in the city jail.

When arrested they were en route to the annual convention of Protestant Episcopal Churches which opened Sunday in Detroit, Mich.

* * *

THE GROUP described the trip from New Orleans to Detroit as a "prayer pilgrimage."

Following their arrest, the ministers sent the following message to U.S. Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy:—

"Fifteen Episcopal priests have been arrested in Jackson, Miss., while attempting to use interstate facilities en route to Detroit on a 'prayer pilgrimage' to attend the General Convention of the Episcopal Church.

"In view of your request to American clergymen to exert leadership in these areas, we urge you immediately to apply your influence to resolve problems of inter state travel for Amer cans."

The Governor said: "I admire the courage and dedication of these young people to the basic precepts on which this country was founded and their dedication to the cause of making a reality out of these precepts."

13 Clerics Released From Jail

JACKSON, Miss. —(AP)— Thirteen of the 15 Episcopal clergymen jailed on breach of peace desegregation convictions were released on $500 bond Tuesday.

The Rev. Robert L. Pierson of New York, son-in-law of New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller, read a statement on the sidewalk in front of the city jail.

Pierson, 35, said the clergymen were arrested because they "have been engaged in a pilgrimage of prayer to testify to the nature of the Christian Church. We cannot submit to the immoral laws which demand that we separate racially."

The Rev. V. Powell Woodward of Cincinnati read a statement appealing "to the United States Supreme Court, if necessary, to obtain justice. We believe that our counsel showed conclusively that there is no evidence to support our conviction by the city of Jackson on a breach of peace charge."

Referring to City Judge James Spencer's comments that they violated Episcopal Church law as well as city law, Woodward said, "we do not believe that Judge James Spencer is competent to find us guilty of violating Episcopal Church law. His venture into canon law obscured the criminal issue."

Woodward led the 13 who gained their freedom and four other ministers who had maintained a vigil here in a prayer for justice before the clergymen left for the Jackson Airport. They will fly to Atlanta, Ga., en route to the general convention of the church under way at Detroit, Mich.

Pierson said he had received no communication directly from Governor Rockefeller during his stay in jail, where two white members of the group remain.

Besides Pierson and Woodward, those freed are the Revs. Gilbert Avery of Roxbury, Mass.; Myron Eloy Jr., of West Newton, Mass.; John Crocker Jr., of Providence, R.I.; James W. Evans of St. Clair, Mo.; John Morris of Atlanta; Geoffrey Simpson of Pewaukee, Wis.; William Wendt of Washington; Merrill Young of Boston; John M. Evans of Toledo, Ohio; Quinland Gordon of Washington, and James P. Breeden of Boston. The last three are Negroes.

Episcopal Priests Post Appeal Bonds

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 19 (UPI)—Thirteen Episcopal priests, including a son-in-law of New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller, posted $500 appeal bonds today and were freed after five days in city jail.

The bi-racial group, arrested after refusing orders to leave a segregated restaurant, convened on the sidewalk in front of the jail and prayed for the judicial system. The priests also issued statements taking issue with segregation and the judge who convicted them.

The ministers, who said they would appeal their breach of the peace convictions to the U. S. Supreme Court, if necessary, then left for Detroit and the National Episcopal convention.

The Rev. Robert L. Pierson of Evanston, Ill., whose wife is Rockefeller's daughter, read a statement saying that, as priests, "We cannot submit to immoral laws which demand that we separate racially."

Pierson's statement said the group is fighting racial separation throughout the nation, not just in the deep South. It said the church is "weak in its leadership" in the race relations field.

Pierson, in reply to a question, said he did not confer with Gov. Rockefeller on his plans before joining the "prayer pilgrimage," which was sponsored by the Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity.

Another statement on behalf of the group was read by the Rev. V. Powell Woodward of Cincinnati. It took issue with Municipal Judge James L. Spencer, an Episcopalian who convicted the priests Friday. In ordering four-month jail sentences and $200 fines, Spencer said he felt the ministers had violated an article of religion in the Episcopal Book of Common Prayer which urges all persons to obey legitimate civil authority.

Woodward said the priests "do not believe that Judge James Spencer is competent to find us guilty of violating Episcopal Church law. His venture into canon law obscured the criminal issue and endangered our American heritage of separating church and state."

Two other ministers who were arrested, James G. Jones and Robert Page Taylor of Chicago, chose to remain in jail.

ROCKEFELLER KIN READS STATEMENT—The Rev. Robert L. Pierson, son-in-law of New York's Gov. Nelson Rockefeller, reads a statement in front of the Jackson, Miss., jail after he and 12 other Episcopal priests were released on bond. # Federal Guards To Ride Planes

JFK Warns Against False Accusations

Jackson Daily News

FROM WIRE REPORTS

WASHINGTON—President Kennedy announced today that border patrolmen will be assigned to a number of airplanes to guard against new hijacking incidents. Thurs, 8-10-61

Kennedy warned against premature howls of protest before it can be ascertained exactly who has hijacked an airplane and for what purpose. His cautionary words apparently were directed at members of congress who have attacked Fidel Castro as the instigator of the two recent hijackings. Actually, the planes were hijacked by men with no known connections with Cuba. P. 1

Kennedy today renewed his call for use of every possible means to bring about a peaceful solution of the Berlin crisis.

The President told his news conference he did not consider Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev's recent speech to the Russian people as any change in the stand the Red leader already had taken in their talk at Vienna.

He promised that in the coming months "we will use every device available to us" to settle the Berlin problem peacefully.

While he did not get into specifics, Kennedy said it is America's "strong conviction... that every diplomatic measure should be employed.

Jackson, Miss.

WILLING TO MEET

As to whether there should be an East-West summit meeting, Kennedy said he still feels that none would be useful unless adequate groundwork were laid. But he said that if a summit meeting of Western leaders should prove desirable, he would "be prepared" to join in one.

The President, appearing for the most part quite relaxed in contrast to his grim mood at his previous news conference three weeks ago, made these other points to the record-high attendance of 433 reporters:

He cautioned against getting "over-excited" about plane hijackings before complete information is in. But he called for international action to prevent such incidents in the future and announced that hereafter the cockpit doors on American commercial planes would have to be locked from the inside, and that a number of Border Patrolmen have been ordered to ride on flights.

He is sending chief negotiator Arthur Dean back to Geneva Aug. 24 to resume "decisive" nuclear test ban talks with Russia. He said he has received a special scientific report which has made him "feel more urgently than ever" that only the type of inspection system proposed by this country can guard against secret testing.

He hailed Britain's decision to join the European common market.

He revealed that he has entered into an agreement with Vice President Lyndon B. Johnson similar to the one former President Eisenhower had with Richard M. Nixon, spelling out conditions under which the vice president would assume powers when the President cannot physically "fulfill his constitutional functions."

He said Sen. J. William Fulbright "performed a service" in challenging propaganda activities of military officers. He said that military leaders must be kept "removed from political life" not only to protect civilian control of the armed forces but also to prevent "exploitation" of uniformed officers.

The President is "very satisfied" so far with progress of the inter-American economic and social meeting in Uruguay. He said the free world must keep its sights trained on such efforts because "that is where the great struggle is going on" against communism.

The administration, he said, has asked for all the money and is devoting as much scientific effort as it can possibly use to the space effort, and the United States is "making a maximum effort." But the Russians will continue to lead in this field for a while because they started first.

AID PROGRAM PLANS

If Congress passes his long-term foreign aid program, Kennedy said, he is hoping to make the program "more effective" and expects to assign five new area administrators and 45 or 50 new heads of programs for specific countries.

He hopes Congress will approve his legislation to give permanent life to the Peace Corps because of the "wholehearted response of so many young men and women" to it. He said that if Congress does approve, there is an opportunity to have more than 2,700 volunteers "serving the cause of peace" in this fiscal year.

The President's statements on Berlin, in response to questions, bore none of the saber - rattling quality of Khrushchev's recent speeches.

C.O.R.E. Bid For Marshals Is Rebuffed By Government

The Commercial Appeal

Thurs, 8-10-61

By United Press International

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9.—The Justice Department Wednesday denied a request by the Congress On Racial Equality to provide United States marshals for protection of so-called "Freedom Riders" returning to Jackson, Miss., for court appearances next week.

Byron R. 'Whizzer' White, deputy attorney general, made the denial in a letter to James Farmer, national director of C.O.R.E. P. 33

Farmer had requested Federal protection for about 187 persons who were arrested in Jackson for challenging Mississippi's segregation laws. They were instructed to return to the city Monday for setting of trial dates.

Memphis

"The department has no information indicating any violation or threatened violation of Federal law," White wrote. "In the absence of any such violations, maintenance of law and order is solely a state and local responsibility.

"We have no basis to assume that the people in Mississippi will be lawless or that responsible law enforcement officials will be unable or unwilling to maintain law and order," White added.

Judge Declines To Change Order For Hearing

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 9.—(UPI)—Attorneys for 187 convicted so-called "Freedom Riders" made a last-ditch effort Wednesday to prevent a mass court appearance of the defendants here Monday. They said they feared violence.

The riders, who are scattered across the nation, were ordered to be in Hinds County Court together Monday to appeal their convictions on breach of the peace.

Carl Rachlin, general counsel for the Congress of Racial Equality, and William Kunstler of the American Civil Liberties Union first asked County Judge Russell Moore to rescind the order.

He refused, saying he saw no reason to fear trouble. The attorneys then appealed to state Supreme Court Justice W. N. Ethridge Jr., but Ethridge said he had no jurisdiction, that the appeal first had to go before a Circuit Court.

Rachlin and Kunstler, both white New York lawyers, said the appearance of all 187 riders in town might spark an "irresponsible act" by white Mississippians.

The Jackson Police Department said it is prepared to maintain peace and order.

The riders are scheduled to arrive in Jackson Sunday and hold a mass rally Sunday night.

The riders, both white and Negroes, were convicted in police court of breach of the peace for failing to obey police orders to move from segregated waiting rooms and restaurants in travel terminals.

The police court is not a court of record and in order to appeal the trials must be carried to county court where the cases will be heard by a jury and a record made for appeal to higher state courts and the United States Supreme Court.

Kunstler and Rachlin said they had been informed that separate trial dates would be set Monday for each of the 187 riders and, with a jury required in each case, that might take more than a year.

They want to be allowed to let three or four of the riders represent the entire group in the appeal route. They said there was legal precedent for such action.

The attorneys and Tom Gaither, local field representative for C. O. R. E., said they had no assurance that the riders would not again try to integrate segregated travel facilities should they arrive as scheduled Sunday. Police have promised to arrest them if they do. All 187 are now out on bond.

Rejects CORE Plea For U.S. Marshals

By FRANK VAN DER LINDEN
Daily News Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The U. S. Justice Department today refused a request to send federal marshals into Jackson next week for the trials of almost 200 "freedom riders."

Deputy Atty. Gen. Byron White told the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE), which sponsors the "freedom rides" and requested the marshals, that the maintenance of law and order "is solely a state and local responsibility."

White said the Justice Department "has no basis to assume that the people of Mississippi will be lawless or that responsible law enforcement officers will be unable or unwilling to maintain law and order."

He said there has been no indication there will be any violence or threats of violence during the litigation.

The "freedom riders" are scheduled to return to Jackson Monday to appear in Hinds County court on appeals of city court convictions.

All have been convicted of breach of the peace after refusing city police orders to move out of public transportation facilities.

White replied to CORE's request in a telegram today to James Farmer, national director of CORE, in New York.

Farmer has been convicted in city court in Jackson for breach of the peace after coming to Mississippi in one group of "freedom riders." He is scheduled to appear in Hinds County court Monday. All the "riders" scheduled to return have been released on $500 bond.

White replied in the absence of Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy, who is in Africa.

CORE asked for the marshals Saturday, expressing fear that the presence of so many "riders" in Jackson would lead to racial disorder.

The department takes the position, however, that it has no authority to send in marshals unless it is informed that local officers are not able or unwilling to protect citizens in "enjoyment of their civil rights."

An aide to Kennedy told the Daily News today that the department has every reason to believe local authorities will maintain law and order through the trials, as they did when the "riders" arrived.

The department said it is keeping in close touch with local officials in Mississippi.

U. S. refuses marshals for 'rider' trials

WASHINGTON Aug. 10—(AP)—The Department of Justice has told the Congress of Racial Equality CORE that maintenance of law order at the "freedom rider" trials starting in Jackson, Miss., Aug. 14 is a state and local responsibility.

James Farmer, national director of CORE, advised the department Saturday that the city of Jackson had insisted that all "freedom riders" who plan to appeal their convictions be present in court Aug. 14.

CORE had proposed that the 185 persons arrested in efforts to integrate bus facilities be called up in small groups.

Farmer requested federal marshals for the protection of those coming to Jackson "in view of the situation that may well arise from more than 150 Negro and white 'freedom riders', attorneys and would press in Jackson for extended periods of time beginning Aug. 14."

CORE estimated the proceedings, with trials of record required in cases to be appealed, will take six months.

In a letter dated Aug. 8 released by the department, Deputy Atty. Gen. Byron R. White told Farmer that he appreciates Farmer's desire to provide a legal defense for the defendants unmarred by any public disorder.

"However," White said, "the department has no information, either from your telegram or otherwise, indicating any violation or threatened violation of federal law in connection with the pending litigation.

"In the absence of such violations, maintenance of law and order is solely a state and local responsibility. We have no basis to assume that the people of Mississippi will be lawless or that responsible law enforcement officials will be unable or unwilling to maintain law and order."

IN JACKSON — attorneys for 187 "freedom riders" appealing their breach of peace convictions conferred with County Judge Russell Moore yesterday to work out trial procedure to avoid the possibility of trouble.

The two attorneys were William Kunstler of New York, attorney for the American Civil Liberties Union, and Carl Rachlin of New York, general counsel for the ride-sponsoring Congress of Racial Equality.

"We were fearful," said Rachlin, "that, having had that number (187) of 'riders' before, there might be trouble in Jackson."

Kunstler added that they wanted either a single appeal to apply to all riders or regularly and reasonably spaced trials for each rider.

UNDER A year - old order by Judge Moore, all persons free or bond must be in court on opening day or their bonds are subject to forfeiture.

The 187 "riders" were released on $500 cash bond after being convicted and sentenced to $200 fines and jail terms for refusing to obey a police order to move out of rail, bus and air terminals. The riders began arriving in Jackson May 24.

Rachlin said all but about 4 of the 187 "freedom riders" would be in Jackson in time for the opening of court Monday.

"If they (county officials) think we are going to forfeit the money," Rachlin told a news conference, "they are mistaken.

"We will arrange lots of lawyers and try these cases in shifts if necessary."

RACHLIN SAID the facts surrounding each "rider's" arrest and conviction were similar and a single trial could suffice for all.

At each of the "rider" trials City Judge James Spencer said he considered each trial a continuation of the first trial.

Other city and county officials said if CORE had wanted a test case, one rider could have come in instead of nearly 300.

CORE had said the intention was to saturate Jackson, overflow the jails and wear down the police and officials.

Rachlin said if Judge Moore upholds the lower court and reconvicts the 187 riders, "We will appeal all the say to the U. S. Supreme Court."

HE SAID CORE sought to strike down the state's breach of peace laws as "an improper delegation of power by the legislature to an administrative, or police, officer."

None of the riders was arrested under segregation laws, although they announced their intention of challenging segregation laws before arriving in Mississippi.

Each rider was arrested for refusing to obey police orders to leave the terminals because, as arresting officer Capt. J. L. Ray testified, their presence in the terminals could have caused a breach of peace.

Last week, CORE officials called upon state, county and city officials for protection of the returning "freedom riders."

City officials said they would not provide protection but would prevent law violations.

Rider Lawyers Dig Up Old Opinion In Trial Araument

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Attorneys for convicted integrationist "Freedom Ridrs" have unearthed an old Mississippi Supreme Court opinion which they hope can be used to block a rule requiring defendants in appeals cases to appear at the opening day of Hinds County Court.

County Judge Russell Moore has declined to waive a rule he instituted more than a year ago requiring the presence of appellants on the opening day of court.

William Kunstler, New York attorney for the American Civil Liberties Union, plans to confer with Circuit Judge Leon Hendrick today on the matter.

Wednesday, Kunstler met with State Supreme Court Justice William Ethridge Jr. on the matter, but was told that any action must be initiated in circuit court.

CONFERENCE TODAY

At issue are the appeals of at least 187 Freedom Riders. Under the present ruling they would be required to appear Aug. 14 or forfeit their $500 appeal bonds. The actual appeal trials won't begin until Aug. 21 and are expected to run 18 to 20 weeks.

In a statement, Kunstler, joined by Carl Rachlin of New York, general counsel for the ride-sponsoring Congress of Racial Equality, said:

"Since all of the defendants reside in other states, many of them thousands of miles from Mississippi, and since their trials will not start until Aug. 21, it is felt that Judge Moore abused his discretion by requiring defendants, instead of their counsel, to appear for the call of the August term calendar."

Kunstler, Rachlin and attorneys for the city agreed in conference with Judge Moore to begin the Freedom Rider appeals Aug. 21, handling two each day.

The attornevs for the riders found, however, an old state Supreme Court opinion that held that attorneys could appear for persons in criminal cases unless there is some reason for the personal presence of the defendant.

SEEKS HALEY'S RELEASE

In a related case, Kunstler filed petition in county court for an order to free Richard Haley, 45, Chicago, an official of CORE, who is currently in the state penitentiary on breach of peace charges—the same under which nearly 300 riders were convicted.

Haley was arrested as he picketed a meeting of southern govenors called by Mississippi Gov. Ross Barnett.

Judge Moore set a hearing on the petition for Friday.

Meanwhile, the Jackson Citizens Councisl warned its members of the possibility of kneel-ins by Negroes in white churches in the capital city.

In New Orleans, Municipal Judge Edwin Babylon continued the cases against a 33-year-old New York blind woman and six others for circulating hand bills describing the travels of the Freedom Riders.

The seven were arrested Wednesday night for distributing the handbills withouta permit. A city ordinance requires permits for distribution of handbills larger than 3½ by 5½ inches.

Babylon said he ordered the continuance to allow the group time to obtain the proper permit from the city attorney's office. The judge said the case would be moot if they obtained the permit.

The blind woman, Mrs. Norma Wagner, and a Negro companion, Earl Bohannon, 21, of Memphis, came to New Orleans Sunday after spending several days testing segregation customs at Jackson.

Mrs. Wagner complained that police would not arrest her as they had other Freedom Riders because of her blindness.

Court Nixes Mixer's Try For Freedom

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—"Freedom Rider" official Richard Haley lost his bid for freedom in Hinds County Court Friday and his lawyer said the case would be appealed to federal courts if necessary.

Haley, 45-year-old Chicago Negro, sought a court order from Judge Russel Moore to free him from the state penitentiary, where he is serving a 4-month sentence on breach of peace charges.

Moore ruled to grant the order—a writ of habeas corpus—would "circumvent the accepted procedure of appeal" under Mississippi law.

Haley, field secretary for the Congress of Racial Equality, was in Jackson co-ordinating CORE's freedom rides when he appeared in front of a downtown hotel July 19 to picket a meeting of Southern governors discussing segregation. His arrest followed his refusal to move along as ordered by police.

VIOLATED RIGHTS

William Kunstler of New York, who represented Haley, said the arrest violated Haley's constitutional right to picket peacefully. He said trial testimony showed there was no violance, only murmurs and angry looks from the crowds of 15 persons.

"If this is to be standard," he said, "freedom of speech means absolutely nothing."

Haley and a companion carried signs with civil rights slogans on them.

Tom Watkins of Jackson, one of three attorneys for the city, argued that the writ sought could not be used where an appeal procedure was available and he said Haley had not appealed his case.

He also quoted cases to support his argument that a breach of peace could take place without physical violence. He said the signs carried by the pickets "were insulting and libelous" and "under the circumstances a breach of peace could have resulted."

Riders' Plan Court Battle On 2 Points

JACKSON, Miss. (UPI)—Attorneys for 187 convicted "freedom riders" who will be here Monday for their appeals plan to go into state and federal courts on two legal points for overturning the convictions.

The first is a U. S. Supreme Court decision on a Richmond, Va., case closely paralleling the Jackson arrests; the second is a direct attack on the breach of the peace statutes under which almost 300 riders were arrested here since May 24.

The Richmond case was decided by the high court last winter. A Negro law student named Boynton staged a sit-in at a white restaurant in a Richmond bus terminal. He refused police orders to move on and was arrested under a state breach of the peace law.

UPHELD CONVICTION

The supreme court of Virginia upheld the conviction, holding it was a proper use of police authority. But on appeal the U. S. Supreme Court overturned the conviction holding that the breach of the peace law — which was sound in itself—was used to maintain segregation in interstate travel facilities.

All of the Jackson riders were arrested for breach of the peace after they refused police orders to move from segregated terminals.

There is a difference in the breach of the peace laws used in the two states. The New York attorneys who are representing the riders — William Kunstler of the American Civil Liberties Union and Carl Richler of the Congress of Racial Equality—say they will ask that Mississippi's laws be struck down as well as the city's use of them.

Tey will contend that the legislature delegated too much authority to the police and that it enacted the laws specifically to preserve segregation.

TWO LAWS INVOLVED

There are two laws involved. One for single arrests and another for group arrests. They were enacted in the spring of 1960 when sit-in demonstrations were ramfant in other southern states. They were carefully drawn by some of the best legal minds in the state capitol and were enacted swiftly and overwhelmingly without debate.

State attorneys are prepared to defend them in the courts on grounds that they properly delegate authority to local authorities under legal precedent.

The war between local officials and the riders seemed this week to have boiled down to an endurance race. Kunstler and Richler tried to arrange it so that the riders would not have to be on hand together Monday for call of their cases in county court. But the local judges stood fast.

They also refused to hold mass trials and the schedule calls for trials beginning Aug. 21 to run two a day, five days a week for at least 18 weeks.

Meanwhile, however, Kunstler transferred five of the rider cases to federal court where quick appeal action could be expected. A hearing is scheduled on that next Friday to decide whether the federal court can take jurisdiction under the civil rights act.

JACKSON, Miss. (UPI)—Attorneys for 187 convicted "freedom riders" scheduled for court appearances Monday will base their arguments for appeal on two points of law.

'RIDERS' ARREST CASE DEFERRED

Final Arguments Are Set for Sept. 25

By W. F. MINOR

(Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

JACKSON, Miss.—A three-judge federal court Monday deferred final arguments on an injunction to stop arrests of "freedom riders" until Sept. 25 after hearing a barrage of preliminary motions by state and city attorneys.

The move cut off the immediate goal of attorneys for the National Association for Advancement of Colored People who sought a preliminary injunction to stop further arrests at the passenger terminals under the state breach of the peace statute.

Judge Richard T. Rives, Birmingham, of the fifth circuit court of appeals, who is presiding over the special court, said the judges decided to hear the case both on the preliminary and permanent injuction at the same time on Sept. 25.

No decision, meanwhile, was made by the court on a motion challenging its authority to hear the case which Tom Watkins, special attorney for the city of Jackson, made at the opening of Monday's hearing.

SINGLE JUDGE

Watkins contended that the issues raised should be heard only by a single federal district judge, with right of appeal to the circuit court of appeals. Decisions of a three-judge court may be appealed directly to the United States Supreme Court.

Rives said the special court would continue to the final arguments of the case on the merits before deciding on the issue of its jurisdiction.

In the case, three Jackson Negroes are contending that local police officers have been using the breach of the peace law to enforce segregation in passenger terminals.

The justices joined in the suit in July when it was first called for arguments, but postponed because of the illness of the state's civil rights legal specialist.

A battery of 15 lawyers representing the city of aJckson, the state attorney general, the city airport authority, two bus companies and one railroad, all of whom are defendants in the case, were arrayed in opposition to the three NAACP attorneys.

Mrs. Constance Baker Motley o fthe New York legal staff of the NAACP, as chief counsel for the conmplainants, handled all the arguments for her side.

Mrs. Motley had asked the court to consider the preliminary injunction request immediately since, she said, "almost 300 people have been arrested" at local passenger terminals under the breach of the peace statute.

Watkins and Asst. Atty. Gen. Duga Shands, contested the hearing of the issue of the "Freedom Riders" arrests.

"It would be a travesty to proceed with hearing on a preliminary injunction now," Shands declared.

REJECT MOTIONS

Rives announced later when the final hearing were deferred that the court felt "material changes" had been made in the original complaint by the NAACP by an amendment which broadened its scope and that additional time should be given the defendants.

"It is the desire of the court however to get the case at issue so it can be finally disposed of" the judge said, when it is resumed Sept. 25.

He instructed the defendants to be prepared to go directly into the merits of the case when it is resumed.

Serving with Rives are two federal district judges from Mississippi, Sidney C. Mize of the Southern district and Claude C. Clayton of the Northern district.

The judges rejected motions by the state for a "more definite statement" of the allegations made in the complaint and for the addition of all common carriers as party efendants.

Asst. Atty. Gen. Ed Cates argued that the petition contained "broad general statements" which actually alleged a conspiracy on the part of the attorney general to invalidly enforce a state law.

"In what manner has the attorney general attempted to enforce the breach of the peace statute in an unconstitutional manner?" he asked.

Special Asst. Atty. Gen. Charles Clark said that some 40 other carriers other than Illinois Central railroad, Trailways Bus Company and Greyhound Bus Company are authorized to carry passengers in Mississippi and should be made defendants.

LIMITED BASIS

"I don't think the court can consider the petition on a limited basis when such sweeping authority is sought," he said.

Mrs. Motley said the rights of the plaintiffs involved only the three carriers named in the suit and that the other carriers 'a're obviously not indispensible" to the case.

She said that the proof will offer in the case "will show they are enforcing segregation under the breach of the peace statute. We do not say it is a conspiracy."

The court ordered the NAACP attorney to make several changes in the complaint to give the Jackson city lines, which also was made a defendant, names and addresses of people who have knowledge of complaints that the bus line separates passengers according to race in the city busses.

Also an amendment was ordered made in the complain relative to the Illinois Centra Railroad. The complaint in one place pointed out that the railroad does not enforce segregation on its trains, but only in the passenger terminals.

The judges said the language should be clarified to avoid an ambiguity.

Montgomery Minister, Two Children Convicted In Jackson

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — City Judge James Spencer convicted three Negroes and one white man on breach of peace charges in their announced attempts to desegregate the city airport July 24.

All four were sentenced to $200 fine and 4 months in jail.

They were the Rev. Mathew Petway, 47, of the AME Zion Church in Montgomery, Ala., a Negro, and his two children, Kreddle Petway, 20, a coed at Florida A&M, and Alfonso Kelly Petway, 16-year-old high school student in Pensacola, Fla.; and Dr. Cecil A. Thomas, 44, of Albany, Calif., a white YMCA secretary.

Immediately after the trial, the three Petways posted $500 appeal bond each and were released. The four came to Jackson after announcing in Montgomery they were headed here to test segregation laws.

The elder Petway was arrested when he sough to drink from a water fountain marked for whites, and he refused to obey a police order to move on. Thomas and the two younger Petways were arrested when they sought service in a white-only cafe.

Conviction of the four brought to 270 the total number of "Freedom Riders" convicted since they began challenging Mississippi's segregation laws May 24.

During the trial, Alfonso Petway testified he was not a freedom rider but merely accompanied his father. Miss Petway testified she came to attend a meeting at a Negro college in Jackson.

The two 16-year-olds obeyed police orders to move on and were not arrested.

Freedom Riders Arrests Sunday Total 236 Here

Sponsors Fighting Alabama Injunction

Eight more "freedom riders" were arrested here Sunday.

A biracial group of seven traveled here by bus from Nashville, Tenn., and were arrested in the Greyhound terminal's Negro waiting room. A lone rider from Los Angeles tried to integrate the white waiting room at the train station after coming here from New Orleans.

The arrests brought to 236 the number of riders taken into custody on breach of the peace charges here since May 24.

One Negro was charged with assault for stomping a white man's toe in the Greyhound white waiting room after he and 11 other integrationists arrived Saturday night.

Leo Washington, 24, a student from New Orleans, was seen falling back against a wall. Several witnesses in the station said they thought the white man hit him. But officers said the white man, Cecil Lindsay, a graduate student at Mississippi College, merely shoved Washington off his toe.

Police took Lindsay to headquarters to sign an affidavit charging Washington with assault.

The lone rider arrested Sunday was identified as James Emerson Dennis, 25, a Negro from Los Angeles and a student at Los Angeles State College.

Members of the group which came from Nashville were identified as Richard Lewis Zuchman, of Forest Hills, N. Y., a student, Rudolph Mitaritonna, 51, of the Bronx, N. Y., a union organizer; Mary Freelon, 42, of Telford, Pa., an unemployed teacher; Shirley Smith, 34, of New York, an employe of the American Institute; James Edward Warren, 28, of Philadelphia, a Baptist minister and the only Negro in the group; Williard Hooker Svanoe, 23, of New York, a student at the University of Minnesota, and Philip Jay Heavey, 31, of New York, associate editor of the Catholic Worker.

Meanwhile in Montgomery, Ala., Sponsors of "freedom riders" were to appear before a federal judge today to argue against a possible injunction restraining them from sending more anti-segregation demonstrators into Alabama.

The Justice Department has sided with the riders, claiming that Federal District Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. lacks the power to restrain "freedom riders" from normally exercising their constitutional rights.

In June, Johnson issued a temporary injunction against "freedom rides" into Alabama after mob violence here brought federal marshals and martial law in May.

Before the injunction expired last month, "freedom riders" had focussed their attention on Mississippi where eight more riders were arrested Sunday. The arrests brought to 236 the number charged with breach of the peace at Jackson, Miss., for challenging state segregration laws.

Today's hearing is a continuation of the Justice Department's complaint against Montgomery police officials and various Ku Klux Klan groups enjoined by Johnson from interfering with interstate travel.

Johnson also forbade a number of anti-segregation groups from sponsoring more "freedom rides" in Alabama.

Defense attorneys for the Montgomery police officials asked Johnson to renew his order.

The Justice Department has challenged Johnson's power to do so. The department contended in a brief that there were no precedents "in which the exercise of lawful, peaceful, constitutionallly protected activity has been proscribed because such activity was expected to arouse unlawful violence by others."

7 'Freedom Riders' Arrested in Jackson

JACKSON, Miss., July 23 (AP). Seven white "freedom riders"—five men and two women—were arrested in a Jackson train terminal today when they tried to integrate the Negro waiting room.

Their arrest raised the number of "riders" taken in custody here to 267.

The seven were booked on breach of peace charges. They made no response when police ordered them to move on.

Riders Appeal Sentences To State; Trial In Fall

P. 3 B Clarion-Ledger-Journal
Sun. 9-17-61

Eleven "Freedom Riders" given fines and jail terms for bus depot integration incident last spring probably will be tired in November on their appeals to state court.

The racially mixed group — including the Rev. William S. Coffin, chaplain of Yale University and son-in-law of pianist Artur Rubinstein — was convicted Friday night in the county Court of Common Pleas.

Ten of those who sought service at a customarily white only bus station lunch counter during racial tension here last May were convicted on breach of the peace and unlawful assembly charges.

ALL FINED

Judge Alex Marks fined the 10 "Freedom Riders" $100 and costs and ordered jail terms ranging from 10 to 15 days.

An 11th, the Rev. Wyatt Tee Walker, Atlanta Negro leader, was acquitted of breaching the peace after witnesses testified he did not sit down at the lunch counter. But he was sentenced to 90 days in jail for unlawful assembly.

All were released on bond after their lawyers filed notice of appeal to Montgomery Circuit Court. The next term of the court begins in mid-November.

Three colleagues sentenced along with the Rev. Mr. Coffin were Dr. Gaylord Noice of New Haven, Conn., divinity professor at Yale, and two religion professors at Wesleyan University, Dr. John Maguire and Dr. David Swift, both of Middletown, Conn.

The others were George Smith of New Haven, Joseph C. Jones and Clyde Carter, both of Charlotte, N.C.; Bernard Lee and the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, both of Montgomery, and the Rev. Fred Shuttlesworth of Birmingham.

Abernathy is president of the pro-integration Montgomery Improvement Association; Shuttlesworth leads the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights, and Walker is executive secretary of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference.

The group was arrested in a bus terminal May 25 during limited martial law which followed bloody race riots touched off by arrival of another band of "Freedom Riders" several days earlier.

Eleven "Freedom Riders" received fines and jail sentences in Court of Common Pleas Friday at the end of a day-long hearing.

Among them were the chaplain of Yale University, the Rev. William S. Coffin, and three other white educators on the faculties of Yale and Wesleyan Universities.

So were three Southern Negroes prominent in the fight on segregation barriers: The Revs. Ralph Abernathy and Fred Shuttlesworth, and Wyatt Tee Walker, director of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference.

The mixed group was arrested May 25 at the Trailways bus terminal as they sought service at the white lunch counter. National Guard troops ringed the area at the time, the city having been previously declared under limited martial law.

ALL WILL APPEAL

All served notice they will appeal. Each was fined $100, but Walker, who was sentenced to 90 days in jail.

Jail sentences for the other 10 were:

Abernathy and Bernard Lee, both of Montgomery, 10 days; Shuttlesworth, Clyde L. Carter, Coffin, Joseph Charles Jones, John David Maguire, Gaylord B. Noice, George B. Smith, David E. Swift, each 15 days.

Maguire and Swift are both professors of religion at Wesleyan University, and Noice is a divinity professor at Yale. The three are white.

Jones and Carter are Negro students in a seminary in Charlotte, N.C., and Smith is a Negro law student at Yale.

Lee works with Walker in the SCLC headed by Dr. Martin ther King.

The central argument in the case revolved around two questions: Was there a serious danger of mob violence at the time of the arrests? And, did the necessity to avert possible trouble outweigh the right of individuals to exercise their constitutional rights?

Sheriff Mac Sim Butler testified that, "It was my opinion, at the time, that if an arrest had not been made we would have had a serious riot at or near the bus station."

Col. Ralph Poarch, Anniston attorney and a National Guard staff judge advocate, testified that Butler arrested the 11 at the Trailways bus station lunch counter at his direction.

DID NOT WARN

He acknowledged he did not warn the mixed group they might be arrested or in danger. But, he said, "We were in effect walking a chalkline, trying to do our duty as we saw it."

Poarch called the action of the 11 in sitting at the counter "the height of folly." He also testified to threatening crowds outside the terminal.

Dr. Maguire, a Montgomery native, said he returned to the city "to affirm support" of Negroes challenging segregation after he heard of violence here. He said Coffin agreed to come with him after a telephone conversation.

As questioning tended toward a sociological discussion of conflicting points of view on segregation, Maguire said:

DENY CROWD

"Racism at any level is not to be tolerated." He said he came here to show that whites also shared the "abhorrence" which Negroes feel at segregation.

Both he and Walker denied that a large and hostile crowd was outside at the time of the arrests.

Deputy Solicitors Frank Riggs and Maury Smith presented the evidence against the defendants. Local attorney Fred Gray and a Yale law professor, Louis Pollak, conducted the defense.

Judge Alex Marks set appeal bonds of $400 for Lee and Abernathy, $750 for Walker, and $500 for the remaining eight.

'Freedom Rider' Appeal Trial Postponed Because of Ill Witness

The Clarion-Ledger
Wed. 9-13-61

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)--The appeal trial of "freedom rider" Marshall Bennett, 17, of Jackson was postponed until Wednesday because one witness was ill.

Earlier, Hinds county Judge Russel Moore sentenced two others and ordered forfeiture of three riders' $500 appeal bond because they did not show up for their arraignment Monday.

Bennett, a high school student, was arrested July 5 for trying to desegregate Trailways bus terminal. He was sentenced to $200 fine and four months in jail. He posted $500 bond and appealed.

Earlier, Charles Biggers, 21-year-old Negro Wayne university student from Boulder, Colo., declined to contest his breach of peace charge and drew a $200 fine and a suspended four-month jail sentence.

Biggers was arrested July 7 in Trailways bus terminal. He appealed and was arraigned Monday. Judge Moore allowed him to enter his nolo contendere plea immediately instead of waiting until trial, set for March 1962.

The three whose bonds were ordered forfeit were:

Edmon Dalbert Jr., 25, of Los Angeles, Negro postal clerk arrested July 9 in Illinois Central Railroad depot.

Elmer L. Brown, 20, of Akron, Ohio, Negro university of Akron student, arrested in Trailways bus terminal July 7.

Three 'Rider' Trials Slated

P. 17
Wed. 9-13-61

Three Freedom Rider trials on appeal from a breach of peace conviction are scheduled for disposition in Hinds County Court today if a witness too ill to appear yesterday is available.

Leora Berman, of Chicago, and James Bevel, of Nashville, are due to present their appeal from a city court sentence growing out of breach of peace arrests.

Judge Russel Moore continued the case of Marshall Bennett, 17-year old Jackson Negro, until this morning when a state witness was reported ill late yesterday.

Jackson Daily
Earlier in the morning, Robert M. Baum, 19, of Excelsior, Minn., was convicted and sentenced to $200 fine and four months in jail.

Three bond forfeitures for defendants who failed to appear for arraignment Monday were taken against Edmon Dalbert, Jr., 25, Los Angeles, Elmer L. Brown, 20, Akron Ohio Negro, and Frank Caston, Jackson Negro. They each had posted a $500 cash bond for appearance on an appeal from their city court sentence of $200 and 4 months in jail for bus and railroad station arrests.

There is approximately $150,000 on deposit in a special account under Sheriff Bob Gilfoy's custody, for Freedom Riders appealing their arrest convictions.

Those who have withdrawn their appeals and either plead guilty or entered no contest appeals, are paying their fines and court costs out of the posted $500 bond money, and will receive the balance when the court term minute books are signed and closed.

Trials are now scheduled through May, 1962 at the rate of two a day, ten a week following arraignment of 82 who appeared in one group Monday.

Judge Blocks Freedom Riders' Latest Move; Rockefellers' Son-in-Law, 14 Others Jailed

JACKSON, Miss.—(ANP)—The Freedom Riders' latest move, which was an attempt to drop their appeals and serve out the original city court sentences, was blocked here last week by County Judge Russel Moore.

Judge Moore's ruling preceded the trial of Alexander Anderson, 33-year-old minister from Nashville, who sought to withdraw his appeal on a breach of peace conviction.

In earlier cases before Judge Moore two riders returned to jail after withdrawing their appeals. They were following orders and a plea issued last week by the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) asking all convicted riders to withdraw their appeals and serve their original jail terms.

Blocked from withdrawing their appeals, the decision will force about 180 defendants to stand trial in county court or plead guilty to the charges. All freedom riders out on bond have filed for appeal.

Following Judge Moore's ruling, an all-white Hinds county jury convicted Rev. Anderson. He was given the same sentence as previously convicted riders tried to county court—4 months in jail and a $200 fine.

Rider Asks For Mercy

A University of Wisconsin student, Elizabeth S. Adler of Brooklyn, N. Y., asked the court for mercy as it handed down her sentence. She said she "didn't know what she was getting into and this was her first offense." Judge Moore told her she was "old enough and educated enough to know what she was doing."

Ten cases are scheduled for trial this week, two a day, with Monday's docket including Abraham Bassford of Brooklyn and Robert Bass of Jackson.

John Lowry, 20-year-old Freedom Rider from Flushing, N. Y., remains in jail in Monroe, N. C., without privilege of bond. Court officials there said Lowry apparently had not requested bond.

Lowry, with four other persons, is charged with abducting a white couple in the aftermath of a racial melee in Monroe, Aug. 27. The cases are expected to be called during the term of court opening Oct. 30. The white Queens (N. Y.) College student was arrested here July 7 in the Trailways bus terminal.

Rockefeller's Son-in-Law Jailed

Later last week, police here arrested an interracial group of 15 (3 Negro and 12 whites) Episcopal ministers, including the son-in-law of New York Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller, when the group attempted to enter a segregated restaurant at the Trailways bus station.

The Rev. Robert L. Pierson of Evanston, Ill., husband of Rockefeller's daughter, Ann, is vice chairman of Christ the King Foundation, Inc., an independently financed and governed project within and on behalf of the Episcopal church.

Rev. Mr. Pierson, interviewed in his cell, which confined him and the 11 other white ministers, said the police were "very polite." The three Negro ministers were placed in another cell. The 15 ministers were scheduled to be tried last Friday afternoon.

They were part of a 28-member group which arrived here from Vicksburg to tour All Saints College for white girls there, and were en route to Detroit to attend the 60th general convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

Wire Attorney General

Soon after the group was jailed, they sent a telegram to Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy asking him to resolve "the problem of interstate travel for Americans."

Rev. Malcolm Boyd, chaplain at Wayne State University in Detroit and spokesman for the group, said the clergymen were "witness-

When the Governor refused to see the students, 10 of the group formed a double line outside of the governor's office and said they would wait there until they could get to see him. Just after noon Ellington left his office by a side door, as is reportedly his custom, and the group departed about 30 minutes later.

The 14 A&I students were expelled June 2 after their convictions on breach of peace charges here.

A spokesman for the group said the governor sent them a telegram stating that there was no reason to discuss the matter for he was in accord with the suspensions.

Official Defends 'Rider' Arrests As 'Proper Duty'

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson testified Tuesday he had sworn to enforce all of the laws of Mississippi, including segregation statutes whose constitutionality was attacked in a three-judge federal court.

"My duty is to enforce all of the laws I am imposed upon by the law to enforce and I think proper to do so," he said.

Patterson gave the testimony in a federal court suit by three Jackson Negroes seeking a court order to force desegregation of transportation facilities.

Patterson said there was no effort by the state to segregate transportation facilities.

"The state does not attempt to supervise and regulate public transportation in Mississippi," he said. "The segregation laws reflect the attitude of the legislators at the time of their enactment."

NOT IN USE

Asked whether the segregation laws were popular or unpopular, Patterson said: "The segregation laws have not been sued since I don't know when. They are not in use."

Before adjourning until 9:30 a.m. Wednesday, the court heard testimony from Jackson Police Capt. J. L. Ray concerning the arrest of most of the 312 "freedom riders" who sought to break segregation barriers in air, rail and bus terminals during the summer.

Ray testified he arrested the riders only after they refused his order to move on, given after he decided their presence would provoke a breach of the peace.

Chief of Police W. D. Rayfield told the court he arrested the riders because "I am convinced trouble would have occurred had we not arrested them." He said he had several anonymous telephone calls before the first riders arrived May 24 advising him "police would not be needed.

MAINTAIN PEACE

Mayor Allen Thompson testified the city policy called for separation of the races and not segregation "to maintain the same peace and happiness that has existed over the past 100 years."

Rayfield, who has headed the city police department since 1952, said he ordered segregation signs in the Illinois Central Railroad, Greyhound Bus and Trailways Bus Terminals "to direct the races to their respective waiting rooms and to help the police maintain law and order. I put them there under the segregation ordinance."

He said riders were arrested because they refused to move when ordered by officers. He said he felt their presence would cause trouble.

Thompson said he recalled no arrests in his 12½ years as mayor under the city segregation ordinance and that separation "is agreeable to white and colored alike . . . The policy is to live together in peace and quiet."

3-JUDGE COURT

Part of Thompson's testimony went into the record in the event the case goes to the U.S. Supreme Court on appeal. It will not be considered as evidence by the three-judge court.

Testifying for the judges, Thompson said he had "given no instructions to the police in any manner except to maintain law and order."

The suit was filed for Jackson Negroes Samuel Bailey, Joseph Broadwater and Burnett Jacob by National Association for the Advancement of Colored People attorneys.

The suit is being tried before Judge Richard Rives, Montgomery, Ala., of the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals; District Judge Sidney Mize, Gulfport, Southern District of Mississippi; and District Judge Claude Clayton, Tupelo, Northern District of Mississippi.

Judge Won't Let Rider Withdraw Appeal
Mississippi Moves To Block CORE Plan

Jackson, Miss. — County Judge Russel Moore blocked a move by a Freedom Rider to drop his appeal, indicating Mississippi may prevent a CORE plan for riders to serve out their court sentences.

Judge Moore's surprise ruling came before the trial of Alexander Anderson, 33-year-old Negro minister who asked to withdraw his appeal on breach of the peace charges. The judge said the Mississippi Supreme Court has held that cases similar in nature appealed from city court cannot be withdrawn.

Returned to Jail

In earlier cases before Judge Moore, two New Orleans CORE leaders Jerome Smith and Julia Aaron, withdrew their appeals and returned to jail.

The Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) has issued an appeal for the Freedom Riders to withdraw their appeals and return to jail in a group. Judge Moore's ruling effectively blocks that plan.

Sentenced

Following Moore's ruling, an all-white Hinds County jury convicted Anderson. He received the same sentence as five other riders tried in county court, four months in jail and a $200 fine. The case is being appealed and Rev. Anderson is free on $1,500 appeal bond furnished by CORE.

MIX TRIAL

Patterson 'Cleared' In Court

By BOB PITTMAN
Daily News Staff Writer

The NAACP and three Jackson Negroes apparently have failed in their effort to place responsibility for arrest of about 300 "freedom riders" on Mississippi Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson.

A three-judge federal court declared late yesterday Patterson was not responsible for enforcement of breach of the peace statutes in the City of Jackson, the law under which the "riders" have been arrested and convicted.

The ruling came as the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People continued a court test of segregation in public transportation facilities.

The attorney general was made a defendant in the suit, along with the City of Jackson and several transportation companies.

Presiding Judge Richard T. Rives of Montgomery, Ala., made the ruling yesterday as NAACP attorneys sought to present evidence regarding arrest of one "freedom rider" against the attorney general.

Judge Rives told the attorneys the attorney general "is not responsible for every criminal arrest in the state."

Meanwhile, the NAACP paraded a group of public transportation officials to the witness stand to have them testify segregation signs were placed at their terminals under city or state law.

Representatives of the Illinois Central Railroad, Greyhound and Trailways Bus Cos., Jackson City Lines and the Jackson Airport Authority told the court signs separating the races in waiting rooms, rest rooms and at drinking fountains appear in their facilities.

The company officials said, howeverever, their companies have no policy of racial segregation.

The suit, filed by three Jackson Negroes with assistance from the education and legal fund of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, is expected to take up one or two more days.

The suit was brought on behalf of the Negro race by Joseph Broadwater, Burnett Jacobs and Samuel Bailey, all of Jackson.

Testifying for the utilities were Everett Renegar, manager of the Jackson Greyhound terminal; Phillip A. Dobyns, regional manager of Southern Continental Lines (Trailways); G. E. Pickle, district passenger agent for the Illinois Central Railroad; and A. B. Smith, superintendent of Jackson City Lines.

NOT COMPANY POLICY

All said their companies have no policies of racial segregation and said separation of the races was carried out under state and local laws.

Capt. T. A. Turner of the Jackson Airport Authority and Cicero Carr, owner and operator of Cicero's Restaurant at the airport also testified as to separation of the races in their facilities.

Two Negroes, including NAACP field secretary Medgar Evers, told the court they had been subjected to segregation in public transportation facilities.

Tougaloo Southern Christian College student Thomas Armstrong was testifying as to his arrest as a "freedom rider" in the Trailways terminal in Jackson when Judge Rives made his ruling as to the attorney general.

Bus Rider Case Heads For Mississippi Courts

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 18 (AP)— The federal-state dispute over Mississippi transportation segregation is headed for state courts after a three-judge federal court refused to rule in the case.

In a 2-1 verdict, the court ruled that suits filed for three Negro "freedom riders" by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People should first go to state courts for rulings on the state laws involved.

Judge Richard T. Rives of Montgomery, Ala., of the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, issued a sharply worded dissent from the majority view of two Mississippi federal judges, Sidney Mize of Gulfport and Claude Clayton of Tupelo.

"The continued refusal to rule (on this case), although it has been pending since June 9, is in violation of this court's duty under the law," Rives said.

Judges Mize and Clayton made no mention of the time the court had the case under study. The suit was filed in June and testimony was taken in September.

The two district judges said the principle of routing the cases through state courts had been backed up by U.S. Supreme Court decisions.

Justice Dept. Challenges Ala. Ride Injunction

Suit Filed To Halt Mississippi Arrests

By CLIFF SESSIONS

JACKSON, Miss. — (UPI) —Negro attorneys filed suit in Jackson Friday to stop the arrest of "freedom riders" under Mississippi segregation laws. The Justice Department, meanwhile, went to the legal aid of the riders in Alabama.

The suit was filed in U S District Court here just a few hours after local officials stepped in and arrested another group of five riders that arrived in Jackson by train from Nashville, Tenn., and attempted to use segregated facilities.

CHALLENGE INJUNCTION

At Mongomery, Ala., Justice Department attorneys filed a brief in U. S. Middle District Court challenging a federal judge's injunction that, in effect, barred further "freedom rides" in Alabama.

The injunction was handed down by Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr., and was directed at sponsors of the "freedom riders." He further directed state and local officials and Ku Klux Klansmen from interferring with interstate travel.

The Justice Department contended in its brief that the riders were merely exercising their constitutional rights.

A total of 98 "freedom riders" have been jailed in Mississippi's capital city since May 24.

Friday's riders were convicted of breach of the peace in a 10 -minute trial in municipal court. They were given the maximum penalty: $200 fines and four months in jail.

Those sentenced were Patricia Bryant, 20, a Negro from Elmira, N. Y ; Heath Rush, 20, Canterbury N. J.; Del Greenblatt, Brooklyn, N. Y ; Edward Bromberg, 24, Chestnut Hill, Mass., and Winonah Beamer, 19, of Dayton, Ohio.

A Congress of Racial Equality CORE spokesman in Atlanta said, meanwhile, that the movement was gaining momentum and new rides were being organized in Nashville, New Orleans, St. Louis, Memphis and Atlanta.

The spokesman, B. E. Cox, said some of the rides would have destinations other than Jackson.

TO "TEST" FACILITIES

He said one group, including some "professional people," was organizing in Maryland and would set out soon for Florida, "testing" facilities in Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia along the way.

The Jackson suit was filed by Thurgood Marshall, chief counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People NAACP, R. Jess Brown, legal counsel for the Mississippi NAACP, and Constance Baker Motley, New York.

It asked that the city, the state and all bus lines and common carries operating in the state be enjoined from continuing to enforce the state's racial segregation laws and the city's policy of segregation in waiting rooms and rest room facilities at transport terminals.

Named as defendants were state Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson; the city of Jackson; Mayor Allen Thompson; City Commissioner Thomas B. Marshall and D. L. Luckey; Chief of Police W. D. Rayfield; Continental Southern Lines, Inc.; Illionis Central Railroad; Jackson City Lines Inc.; Southern Greyhound Lines, Inc., and Cicero Carr, of the restaurant at the Municipal Airport.

WOMAN TESTS RIDER ARREST

A New York woman called on a federal court today to test the constitutionality of the law under which she was arrested as a "freedom rider".

Attorneys for Elizabeth Porter Wyckoff, a white woman writer, were to ask U. S. District Judge Sidney Mize today for a writ of habeas corpus to free her from the Hinds county jail where she is serving out a $200 fine.

The petition asked Judge Mize to examine constitutionality of the law under which the Wyckoff woman was convicted on a breach of the peace charge.

She is one of 118 self styled "freedom riders" who have been convicted in municipal court here since May 24.

She was arrested with several other whites and a group of Negroes at the Trailways bus terminal June 2.

ACLU INVOLVED

Her attorneys are Jack Young, Jackson Negro who had handled nearly all the "freedom rider" cases, and William M. Kunstler, New York City white attorney and author, who said he represents the American Civil Liberties Union in the case.

The Wyckoff woman charged in her petition that she was arrested because she accompanied Negroes into a white waiting room at the bus terminal.

She said she sought relief in the federal court because any new proceeding via Mississippi court "would be unsuccessful" and too expensive.

Young was to present her petition to Judge Mize at his home in Gulfport today.

Meanwhile Municipal Judge James Spencer yesterday sentenced six "riders" to four months in jail and handed them $200 fines on breach of the peace charges.

Five of the group—three white women, a Negro man and a white man—were arrested at the Greyhound bus station at noon yesterday and the six was arrested at the Greyhound station Wednesday.

The three men will probably join earlier "riders" in Parchman after a five day waiting period.

Arrested yesterday were Elizabeth Hirshfeld, 24, white woman, of Ithaca, N. Y., who said she is on leave from a laboratory technician job at Cornell University where she worked on a project for the Atomic Energy Commission; Kay Kytle, 18, white of Oklahoma City, Okla., a business school student; Jo Alder, 21, white, of Brooklyn, N. Y., student at the University of Wisconsin; Robert Filmer, white 19, of New York City, Cornell student; and Leon N. Rice, Negro 24, of Chicago, a University of Chicago student.

FREEDOM RIDERS- COUNTY JAIL
JACKSON, MISS.

Way Cleared For Transfer Of 'Riders'

JACKSON, Miss (AP) — The Hinds County Board of Supervisors authorized Sheriff J. R. Gilfoy Monday to transfer "Freedom Riders" convicted on breach of peace charges to the state penitentiary.

The county governing body said the county jail, where Negro "Riders" are housed, "is overcrowded and without suitable facilities for present county prisoners."

The board said an emergency exists and it authorized Gilfoy to transfer "Riders" to the state penitentiary at Parchman when and where a transfer is needed.

In its order, the board said "By reason of such overcrowding Hinds County is unable with its own facilities to provide necessary housing and work as required for its prisoners."

The order said arrangements have been made with the state for use of Parchman facilities as a jail for housing such prisoners. Reports indicated a barracks-style building with space for 600 persons is being readied for "Riders" if the transfers are made.

Gilfoy did not say when any "Riders" would be transferred.

The board said at Parchman "Adequate public work may be made available to them so they may lawfully receive credit for time spent in confinement.

Under the law, prisoners are given credit for $3 per day on their fines for work. The "Riders," who have not been put to work, have been credited with the time nevertheless.

At one time, "Riders" were transferred to the county penal farm, but they were returned in a short time after charges arose they were beaten at the farm. Officials said Superintendent Max Thomas had hit one while defending himself.

County officials said the "Riders" were returned to the county jail to keep them from other prisoners.

The board said any transfer to Parchman was subject to several conditions, including proper housing and food for them and work as permitted by law.

Court Upholds Negro's Right To Criticize

JACKSON, Miss (AP) — The Mississippi Supreme Court upheld Monday Negro leader Medgar Evers' right to criticize a court action, but it labeled his statement intemperate, unwarranted and false in several respects.

In a unanimous decision written by Justice W. N. Ethridge, the court overruled circuit Judge Stanton Hall of Hattiesburg and set aside the $100 fine and 30-day jail sentence given Evers for contempt of court last December.

Evers, Mississippi field secretary for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, was cited for contempt for saying Hall's court committed a "mockery to judicial justice" when it convicted a Negro for theft against what he called the overwhelming weight of the evidence.

Evers accused the court of trying to put Negro chicken farmer Clyde Kennard away legally as reprisal for his ill-fated attempt to desegregate Mississippi Southern College in 1959.

Kennard was convicted of taking five sacks of chicken feed from a Hatteisburg cooperative store.

The supreme court said Evers' statement was inaccurate because the supreme court reveiwed the theft conviction and found it was not contrary to the evidence. In addition, Kennard's attorney, Jack Young of Jackson, told Judge Hall he thought the trial was fair.

After the supreme court decision, Evers issued a statement saying:

"It is encouraging that there is a court of law in our state that regards freedom of speech as a cornerstone of our American heritage, whether that speech is uttered by an official of the NAACP, the mayor of one of our major cities, or a United States senator."

Although the supreme court decision was unanimous, Chief Justice Harvey McGehee said he disagreed with the wisdom of the court in quoting some legal principles and making the observation it did in the opinion because they would "have a tendency to encourage such agitators as Evers to unjustly criticize our courts . . .upon the theory that he has a license from this court to do so."

27 'Riders' Begin Jail Terms Here

By W. C. SHOEMAKER
Daily News Staff Writer

Twenty-seven "freedom riders" began serving jail terms here today in payment of fines while Jackson Negroes protested a suggestion of the U.S. Attorney General that they "cool off" mix attempts in the South.

The 27 arrested in the Trailways bus station here Wednesday were convicted in municipal court yesterday of committing a breach of the peace. They were fined $200 each and given 60-day suspended jail terms.

They did not offer to pay fines or post appeals immediately and were placed in the Hinds county jail.

The fine will be reduced at the rate of $8 for each day they serve in jail.

SMALL ATTENDANCE

At a mass meeting called by the Jackson NAACP a few hours after the trial, the Rev. John D. Mangram, chaplain at Tougaloo Southern Christian College on the outskirts of Jackson, expressed disappointment at U. S. Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy's request for a temporary end of "freedom rides" through the South.

"I would like to see the attorney general begin to enforce the federal laws as effectively as the state of Mississippi enforces its segregation laws," he told a crowd of about 125 persons at the Negro Masonic Temple.

It was the smallest attendance at an NAACP mass meeting here in years.

PLAN TRAIN RIDE

Meanwhile in Nashville, a spokesman for a Negro student group said more "freedom riders" would leave Nashville today for Birmingham with plans to continue their ride to Jackson.

"We might get to Jackson," Bob Lillard said. "But we are going to Birmingham first."

Another group was reported planning to move on Jackson by train. Jackson, Miss.

The 27 arrested Wednesday came here via Birmingham and Montgomery. Sat, 5-27-61

The group first faced charges of committing a breach of the peace and failing to obey the command of an officer, but as the trial began before Municipal Judge James Spencer yesterday City Attorney Jack Travis withdrew the "failing to obey" complaint. P-14

ONE WITNESS

The city presented only one witness. Veteran Police Capt. J. L. Ray, who said he ordered the group to leave the Trailways bus station and arrested them when they refused.

It was common knowledge what they did in Montgomery," Ray testified, referring to a riot which broke out when the same group alighted from a bus at the Montgomery trailways depot.

"It was common knowledge that they were in Jackson to create an incident that would start a riot," Ray continued in answer to questions from Young.

Charges against the two bus loads of "freedom riders" were filed under an anti-riot law passed by the 1960 Legislature.

The Rev. James M. Lawson Jr., of Nashville, one of the 27 arrested, complained in testimony of not being allowed rest stops between the Mississippi state line and Jackson and of the fact that armed national guardsmen were aboard the bus which brought him here.

"The bus was under the control of the National Guard," he said.

DOOR CLOSED

He said he noted that the door to the Negro waiting room carried an "out of order" sign and that police funneled him toward the white waiting room at the Trailways station. One of four doors leading to the Negro waiting room was out of order when the group arrived.

Lawson admitted he was once given a three year sentence as a conscientious objector from military service.

He denied he came to Jackson to create an incident but sa came "simply because I was taking a trip on a bus."

The Rev. C. T. Vivian of Nashville, another of the defendants, also complained of guard control of the bus which brought him to Jackson.

James Farmer of New York City, national director of The Congress of Racial Equality who was arrested with riders on the second bus Wednesday, claimed his group created no disturbance here.

Questioned by Travis he said he came here because of "my belief in America." I wanted to find out what Negro travelers would encounter" in a tour of the South, he continued.

R. Jess Brown, of Vicksburg, one of four defense attorneys, asked for a verdict of innocent on grounds the city showed no violation. Spencer denied his motion.

'REFUSE TO OBEY'

Assistant City Attorney Robert G. Nichols Jr. argued that the 27 committed a breach of the peace by failing to obey police commands to move. "You'll never have democracy unless you keep the peace," he said.

Young claimed that arrests of the 27 was a "pre-planned thing even before they left Montgomery." "The city police were parcel and part of it," he continued.

Wiley Branton of Pine Bluff, Ark., leader in the Little Rock school integration drive four years ago and a member of the defense counsel here yesterday, argued that the Negroes were arrested "because they went into a white waiting room" and the two whites were arrested "because they traveled with Negroes."

Travis charged that the 27 came to Jackson "in an attempt to breach the peace of this community and they did it." "That was the sole purpose of their trip to Mississippi."

"If these defendants had arrived in town and obeyed our state laws and observed our city ordinances they would have been welcome," he continued.

Travis suggested a maxium fine of $200 and 60 days in jail with the jail sentence suspended if Spencer ruled the 27 guilty of the breach of peace.

The law allows a maxium of $500 and six months.

Spencer said there was no question "but what the statutes are constitutional on their face. Every state and every goverment needs laws to prevent, when necessary, crowds from gathering. Every state has some such statutes," he said.

NO SEGREGATION TEST

"We must bear in mind we're not here trying any segregation laws or the rights of these peopl eot sit on any buses or to eat in any place," he continued.

He said the 27 "chose to take the law into their own hands and announced their intention to do so. They were not traveling for the purpose of traveling but for the purpose of violence. Their avowed purpose was to inflame the public. They sought to have people fight out legal issues among themselves," he continued.

"Their action led to mob action wherever they have been, the judge continued prior to announcing his verdict and the sentence.

During the trial about 50 policemen surrounded police headquarters where the courtroom is located. They allowed no loitering.

Jacksonians generally ignored the trial. Half of the courtroom reserved for whites was filled with news reporters and the other side was jammed with Negro reporters and the 25 Negro defendants.

Two white men arrested with the group were seated on a front row in the white section.

The trial began at 4 p.m. and ended at six. The 27 returned to the city jail, ate dinner and conferred with their attorneys, moving across Congress St. to the county jail at 8:30 p.m.

Joining Young, Brown and Branton in defense of the 27 was Charles Oldham of St. Louis, a white man who was identified as chairman of CORE.

The defendants could remain in the Hinds county jail until their fines are paid, appealed or served —or they could be transferred to the Hinds county prison farm at Raymond.

ADOPTED RESOLUTION

The NAACP last night approved a resolution calling on Gov. Ross Barnett to "exert the powers of his office to eliminate every legal barrier in contradiction to rulings of the federal courts and in opposition to the U.S. Constitution" and to "use his influence and executive power to secure for all citizens equal access to all public facilities of this state."

The resolution was presented by the Rev. C. A. Jones, dean of religion at Campbell College, who presided at the rally.

Mark Lane in Jailed Group of Freedom Riders

JACKSON, Miss., June 8 (UPI)—Two new groups of Freedom Riders were arrested today. They included four young while girls, a New York State legislator and the president of the New York branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The four white girls were in a group of nine Freedom Riders who took a train from New Orleans to Jackson. A Negro girl and four Negro males made up the rest of the group. They were also arrested.

The arrests, eleven in all, brought to ninety-two the number of integrationist riders who have been jailed for breaching the peace during the past fifteen days.

One of the girls was identified as a recent employe in the Washington office of Senator Clair Engle, Democrat of California.

The lawmaker arrested was Mark Lane, Democratic Assemblyman of Manhattan. Mr. Lane, who is white, and his companion, Perry Sutton, 40, head of the New York N. A. A. C. P., arrived in Jackson by air from Montgomery, Ala.

They were arrested when they attempted to use segregated restroom facilities at the terminal.

In Alabama Wednesday

The two men arrived in Montgomery yesterday and said they were in the South to get a first-hand look at the racial situation. Policemen watched while they had orange juice at the segregated lunch counter in the Montgomery bus terminal, but made no attempt to arrest them.

Neither Mr. Lane nor Mr. Sutton mentioned joining the Freedom Ride while in Montgomery, but when they arrived in Jackson they walked immediately into the terminal and through a door marked "white men."

A police officer told them to "move on," and Mr. Sutton replied:

"I am an interstate passenger."

"You're under arrest for refusing to obey an officer," Police Capt. J. L. Ray said.

The girls in the group arriving from New Orleans were arrested when they refused to leave a segregated waiting room. The four Negro men were arrested in a similar incident.

One of those arrested, Joan Harris Trumpower, 19, of Washington, said she had worked in Senator Engle's Washington office until a few days ago.

The other girls were identified as Jane Allen Rosett, 18, of Washington; Helen Dorothy Wilson, 19, of Washington; Terry Suzanne Pearlman, 19, of the Bronx, a student at City College of New York; and the Negro girl, Gwendolyn T. Greene of Washington, a student at Howard University.

The men were identified as Robert Wesby, 33, of Aurora, Ill., a Baptist minister; Jan Leighteon Triggs, 19, of New Rochelle, N. Y., a student at Howard; Stokley Carmichael, 19, or New York, a Howard student; and Travis O. Britt, 17, of Brooklyn, a cafeteria employe.

Reform Movement Leader

Mark Lane represents Manhattan's Tenth Assembly District in the State Assembly at Albany and is a leader in East Harlem's reform movement in the Democratic party.

He was born in the West Bronx on Feb. 24, 1927 and was brought up in Brooklyn. After graduating from Brooklyn Law School he took graduate courses in labor law at New Yorw University Law School. He opened law offices in East Harlem in 1952.

Mr. Lane was campaign manager for John Harrington, reform candidate elected as Democratic district leader for the Tenth Assembly District South in 1959. He also helped found the East Harlem Reform Democratic Club, which is affiliated with the New York Committee for Democratic Voters, an anti-Tammany group.

He was elected to the Assembly last year after defeating the Tammany incumbent in the primary.

N. A. A. C. P. Official

Percy E. Sutton was born in San Antonio, Texas, on Nov. 24, 1920. He attended San Antonio High School and the Hampton Institute in Virginia before serving in World War II as a captain in Air Force intelligence.

After the war he attended Columbia University and was graduated from Brooklyn Law School in 1951. He served in the Korean War as an Air Force captain of intelligence.

In 1953 he and his brother Oliver formed the law firm of Sutton & Sutton with offices in Harlem. Percy Sutton was elected president of the Manhattan branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People last December, after serving on its board for three years.

Jackson Jails Seven Negroes In Mixing Try

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—Seven Negroes sought to break the color line in Jackson Wednesday and police arrested all of them on breach of peace charges.

Four arrests came at the city park as the Negroes refused to move from a park usually used by whites. Three others were arrested shortly afterward as they sought to use the white waiting room at the Trailways bus terminal.

The four at the park were among a dozen Negroes who went into the area normally used by whites and staged a picnic. Afterwards, they strolled around the swimming pool area and were turned away from the ticket booth.

NO VIOLENCE

Some whites jeered at the group, but officers said there was no vilence.

Arrested on the park benches were two youths and two young women.

At the bus station, the three entered about 2 p.m. and officers ordered them to move on before they could get to the ticket counter.

The three ignored the request of Capt. J. L. Ray and the officer ordered them arrested on breach of peace charges—failure to obey the order of an officer.

They brought to 172 the number arrested since "Freedom Rider" attempts to desegregate transportation terminals began here May 24.

8 More 'Riders' Jailed In Jackson

One Charged With Assault On White Man

JACKSON, Miss., July 16. — (UPI) — Eight more so-called "Freedom Riders" arrived here Sunday and one who came Saturday night was charged with assaulting a white man.

A bi-racial group of seven riders, most of them from New York, traveled here by bus and were arrested in the Greyhound Terminal's Negro waiting room. A lone Negro rider from Los Angeles came by train from New Orleans and was arrested in the depot's white waiting room.

The arrests brought to 236 the number of riders taken into custody on breach of the peace charges here since May 24.

Charged with assault was Leo Washington, 24, a Negro college student from New Orleans. He allegedly stomped a white man's toe in Greyhound's white waiting room after he and 11 other integrationists arrived Saturday night.

Washington fell back against a wall a second later, and several persons in the bus station thought the white man hit him. But officers said the man—Cecil Lindsay, a graduate student at Mississippi College—merely shoved Washington off his toe.

Lindsay, who is a teacher in Arkansas, was taken to police headquarters to sign an affidavit charging Washington with assault.

The lone rider arrested Sunday was identified as James Emerson Dennis, 25, a Negro from Los Angeles and a student at Los Angeles State College.

'Riders' Appeals May Be Dropped

Outcome Of Trials Called 'Fairly Predictable'

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1. — (AP)—The Congress of Racial Equality gathered Friday for a four-day convention with indications it will decide to urge dropping of appeals in the so-called "Freedom Rider" cases in Jackson, Miss.

As about 150 bi-racial delegates registered for a night opening session, C.O.R.E. national director James Farmer, one of the first arrested for breach of the peace in Jackson, told a newsman that he and other self-styled "Freedom Riders" might withdraw their appeals.

But he said a final decision would be left to the convention which runs through Monday. Dropping of the appeals to the county court would mean that more than 180 riders would serve out the sentences imposed on them in city court.

The riders were convicted of breach of the peace in refusing to obey police orders to move on while attempting to end segregation of bus terminal facilities in Jackson.

Farmer said the results of the appeals trials are "fairly predictable." He said the county court juries have given the maximum sentence, compared with a lighter sentence in city court, in two of about 190 cases appealed.

"Our feeling is," Farmer said, "the authorities of Mississippi are merely harassing us by demanding that each person return to Mississippi for an individual trial.

"It seems clear that each will receive the maximum sentence in the appeal trial regardless of the sentence previously received.

"For example the two already tried in county court received two months' suspended sentence plus $200 fine originally. In the appeal trial, they received the maximum four months, nothing suspended, plus $200."

Two other riders have dropped their appeals and gone back to jail, Farmer said.

C.O.R.E. Tells 'Riders' To Serve Terms At Jackson

Drive Planned To End Job Discrimination

From Wire Dispatches

Washington, Sept. 4. — The Congress of Racial Equality Monday urged all "freedom riders" who have appealed their convictions of breaching the peace in Jackson, Miss., to return there and serve sentences imposed in City Court.

It said 260 now are free on bond. The cases stem from the congress' efforts earlier this year to break down racial segregation in bus, railroad, and airport terminal facilities. Most of the sentences were for two months' imprisonment plus fines of $200.

James Farmer, C.O.R.E.'s national director, said the decision to urge dropping of the appeals was made for two reasons. One was the prospect that the appeals, like those so far heard, would be lost. The other was the desire "to move into the area of nonviolent action rather than be bogged down in litigation."

Farmer added that Hinds County Recorder's Court, where the appeals are being heard, had increased sentences of some of the appellants. He said he was one of those free on appeal and that he would return to jail.

He made it plain that this would not mean the end of the "freedom-rider" effort in Jackson. The congress' annual convention here voted, he said, to begin recruiting a select "trained and disciplined" group prepared to go on more rides to Jackson and "when and if arrested stay in jail for their maximum sentences."

At the same time, C.O.R.E. announced the launching of new campaigns to end discriminatory employment practices in national retail chain stores, to get unlimited decent housing for all Americans, and to continue and intensify its campaign for registering eligible Negro voters.

It said the attack on employment practices will place "particular emphasis" on Sears Roebuck and might later include a nationwide Negro boycott of its goods.

No definite allegations were made against Sears, but a C.O.R.E. spokesman said later that numerous C.O.R.E. local groups had reported discrimination against hiring Negroes at their local Sears stores, particularly in the better-job categories and asked the national organization to help change this policy.

The spokesman said Sears stores do hire some Negroes, but C.O.R.E. wants equal opportunities on all levels, up to and including the management.

The decisions were made in resolutions adopted at the conclusion of the congress' annual four-day convention.

Judge Adds 23 To Jailed Riders

Total In Prison Now 163 As Pending Cases Are Closed

By The Associated Press

JACKSON, Miss., June 26—City Judge James Spencer convicted 23 more self-styled "Freedom Riders" on breach of peace charges Monday boosting to 163 the number found guilty since the riders reached Jackson a month ago.

The group included 19 arrested at the Illinois Central Station Sunday and four arrested at the Trailways Bus Terminal Friday. Judge Spencer handed down $200 fines and four-month sentences.

Officials declined to try Robert William Mason, 17, a Los Angeles Negro arrested at the train station with Sunday's group, because he is a juvenile. He was turned over to his lawyer to be sent home.

The trial came only hours after a white rider, Kenneth Shilman, 18, of Oceanside, N. Y., told newsmen in New York that "terribly brutal treatment" was inflicted on the desegregationists at the state penitentiary.

Sheriff J. R. Gilfoy, custodian of the prisoners, termed the story exaggeration and colored-up facts, adding, "We're leaning over barkward in handling them."

Hunger Strike Ends

Because of crowded conditions at the Hinds County Jail here, most riders are transferred to the state penitentiary after remaining in Jackson five days after sentencing.

Sheriff Gilfoy also disclosed that Price Chatham, 29-year-old white rider from East Rockaway, Long Island, N. Y., had ended a "hunger strike."

The sheriff said Chatham began eating only three days after he was placed in a cell alone with no chance of getting food from other prisoners.

Chatham had claimed for 22 days he was not eating, but prison physician Dr. Hector Harrell said he had lost only 3½ pounds.

Dr. Harrell said he believed Chatham was eating and asked that he be isolated to permit a check of his food intake.

All Cases Handled

With Monday's trial and release of the juvenile rider, officials disposed of the last cases pending. Of the 163 convicted, 58 remain at the state penitentiary and 50 in Jackson jails.

Four riders have paid fines and returned home and 52 others have gained their freedom by posting $500 appeal bonds. Eight, including Shilman, posted bonds over the week end.

The latest trial was as brief as all recent ones have been.

Police Capt. J. L. Ray testified he felt it best to order the riders to move on as "they were coming to cause an incident."

He said they refused to obey his order and he ordered them arrested.

The defense asked Captain Ray if he would answer questions asked at previous trials in substantially the same manner as he answered when originally asked. Captain Ray answered in the affirmative and defense attorney Jack Young, a Jackson Negro, asked no further questions.

The trials were held on the first trial day in court after the arrests at the request of attorney Young. Riders do not get credit for time served before sentencing.

Maximum Sentences

Judge Spencer made no comment in convicting or sentencing the riders, saying he regarded their cases as continuations of the original rider trials and had outlined his position at that time.

The sentences were the maximum permitted by law under the charges.

The first riders received suspended jail terms, but did not pay fines and served until they posted appeal bonds. When the rides continued, Judge Spencer stiffened penalties after warning future riders they would be increased to the maximum.

JUDGE FINDS 23 RIDERS GUILTY

Total of Convicted Now Stands at 163

By W. F. MINOR

(Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

JACKSON, Miss. — The total of convicted "freedom riders" rose to 163 here Monday as 23 more persons were found guilty by City Judge James L. Spencer for breach of the peace.

Spencer administered the maximum sentence under the 1960 statute—$200 fine and four months in jail.

Nineteen of those convicted had arrived by train Sunday from New Orleans and were arrested at the Illinois Central passenger terminal.

Four others were Negroes from this area who entered a white waiting room at the Trailways bus station Friday to catch a bus.

YOUTH SENT HOME

One Negro youth arrested Sunday, Robert William Mason, Los Angeles, was not tried Monday because he is a juvenile. The 17-year-old Mason was released and sent home.

In the group convicted Monday were mostly students under 20 years of age. Fourteen of them were Negro and the remaining nine were white.

Over the week end Hinds county Sheriff J. R. Gilfoy transferred the first group of women prisoners to the state penitentiary at Parchman.

Meanwhile, Sheriff Gilfoy said Monday Price Chatham, 29, a New York script adviser, had ended his alleged "hunger strike" at Parchman penitentiary.

SLIGHT WEIGHT LOSS

Chatham had notified his wife in a letter last week that he had not eaten in several weeks. But Dr. Hector Harrell at the penitentiary checked him and found he had lost only 2½ pounds.

After Chatham was isolated from other prisoners, Gilfoy said, he began eating. Chatham's wife visited him over the week end.

Gilfoy also denied charges made by white rider Kenneth Shilman, 18, Oceanside, N. Y., that "terrible brutal treatment" was given the freedom riders at Parhcman.

"We're leaning backwards in handling them," the sheriff said.

23 MORE RIDERS FINED AND JAILED

Ruling by Judge in Jackson Raises Convictions to 163

JACKSON, Miss., June 26 (AP)—City Judge James Spencer today convicted twenty-three more Freedom Riders on breach of the peace charges, raising to 163 the number found guilty since the rides reached here a month ago.

The group included nineteen arrested at the Illinois Central Station yesterday and four arrested at the Trailways Bus Terminal Friday. Judge Spencer handed down $200 fines and four-month sentences.

Officials declined to try Robert William Mason, 17 years old, a Los Angeles Negro arrested at the train station with yesterday's group, because he is a juvenile. He was turned over to his lawyer to be sent home.

The trial came only hours after a white rider, Kenneth Shilman, 18, of Oceanside, L. I., told reporters in New York that "terribly brutal treatment" was inflicted on the desegregationists at the state penitentiary.

Sheriff J. R. Gilfoy, custodian of the prisoners, termed the story exaggeration adding "we're leaning over backward in handling them."

Because of crowded conditions at the Hinds County jail here, most riders are transferred to the state penitentiary after remaining in Jackson five days following sentencing.

Mr. Gilfoy also disclosed Price Chatham, 29, a white rider from East Rockaway, L. I., had ended a "hunger strike."

The sheriff said Mr. Chatham began eating only three days after he was placed in a cell alone, with no chance of getting food from other prisoners.

Mr. Chatham had contended for twenty-three days he was not eating, but prison physician Dr. Hector Harrell said he had lost only 2½ pounds.

MISSISSIPPI FREEDOM RIDERS—JACKSON

Mr. Harrell said he believed Mr. Chatham was eating and asked that he be isolated to permit a check of his food intake. Mr. Chatham's wife was permitted to visit him over the week-end.

Meanwhile, Medgar Evers of Jackson, state field secretary for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said Mississippi representatives would take part in a "freedom train" scheduled to journey July 12 from the N. A. A. C. P. convention at Philadelphia to Washington.

The N. A. A. C. P. said 1,000 white persons and Negroes would make the trip to press Congressmen to support pending civil rights legislation.

The N. A. A. C. P. has not been involved directly in the Freedom Rides at Jackson, but has offered legal aid to riders.

With today's trial and release of the juvenile rider, officials disposed of the last cases pending. Of the 163 convicted, fifty-eight remain at the state penitentiary and fifty in Jackson jails.

Four riders have paid fines and returned home and fifty-two others have gained their freedom by posting $500 appeal bonds. Eight, including Shilman, posted bonds over the week-end.

23 Females In 'Rides' Sent To Prison

PARCHMAN, Miss. (UPI)—Female "Freedom Riders" today began getting a taste of life at the Mississippi State Penitentiary.

Twenty-three women who had been jailed in Jackson were transferred to the penitentiary here Friday night. They and three men who came with them boosted the prison's rider population to 66.

They were the first women riders to be sent to the penitentiary, where all the integrationists are housed in the maximum security cellblock.

Most of them clad in shorts, the women climbed into a van to begin their three-hour trip. The three men came in an enclosed pickup truck.

Earlier Friday, four young Negroes walked into the white waiting room of the Trailways bus terminal in Jackson to buy tickets for a trip. Seconds later police ordered them to "move on." They refused and were arrested on charges of breach of the peace.

They were identified as Thomas Armstrong of Silver Creek, Miss., Mary Harrison of San Antonio, Tex., both students at nearby Tougaloo College, Joe Ross of Tennessee A&I University, and Elnora Price of Raymond, Miss.

State Gets Delay In Mix Showdown

The State of Mississippi won a month's delay of a federal court test of segregated public transportation facilities yesterday over the objections of the senior member of the three-judge court.

The court continued until August 7 a suit in which the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People seeks to enjoin city and state officials from "continuing to enforce statutes requiring racial segregation" of transportation facilities.

The U. S. Department of Justice filed a brief in the suit as a friend of the court yesterday morning and the court rejected a motion by the stat eto prevent the federal gvoernment from participating.

Jackson

The delay granted today also caused rescheduling of other civil rights actions pending before the Southern District of federal court.

Judge Sidney Mize postponed a university integration suit from yesterday afternoon until August 10 and moved a voting suit back a week from August 7 to August 14.

The state won the delay on grounds that Asst. Atty. Gen. Dugas Shands, who heads the state's defense in civil rights cases, was "physically exhausted" and unable to appear.

Mississippi's two federal Judges, Mize of the Southern District and Claude Clayton of the Northern District, voted to permit the delay.

TUTTLE OBJECTS

Judge Elbert P. Tuttle of Atlanta, chief judge of the U. S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, voted against the continuance and made clear his objection.

"I think this delay is not justified and the decision was reached over my objections," he said. "The status expressly set forth that cases such as this should be expedited."

Judge Tuttle said he shares concern for Shands' condition with the other two judges but added "the plaintiff is presumed to have a good cause of action and should not be delayed."

Tuttle said he believes the issues "are simple" with only two issues involved.

These he said, are whether segregation laws are being enforced in Mississippi and, if so, whether they are unconstitutional.

Mize voiced his disagreement with Judge Tuttle.

"I cannot agree that this is a simple case," he said. "I think it is very important. It is a highly complicated case that should be handled by competent attorneys.

Judge Mize said he knows "personally" that Shands has conducted the states defense in civil rights actions and commented "I am not willing to force a litigant to go to trial if the attorney of his choice is unable to be in court."

Tues. 7-11-61

He cautioned the state, however, to be prepared to go to trial August 7 with or without Shands.

Judge Clayton offered no comment.

Judge Tuttle called for a five-minute, recess to determine whether the delay would be granted but the three took 28 minutes to make the decision.

On the unsuccessful motion to bar the U. S. government from the case Asst. Atty. Gen. Ed Cates argued that the government represents a class of citizens in filing the brief and contended that it "cannot by law represent a class. It must represent all the people."

He also contended that the brief was premature and "cited conclusions, not facts."

The motion was overruled and the Justice Department, represented today by Robert Owens of Washington, was permitted to file the brief.

In the suit the NAACP and three Jackson Negroes — Samuel Bailey, Joseph Broadwater and Burnett L. Jacobs—seek to enjoin state and city officials from enforcing segregation laws by arresting those who refuse to observe them.

The suit seeks to end segregation in facilities of Trailways and Greyhound lines, the Illinois Central Railroad, Jackson's city bus lines and Cicero's Restaurant at the Jackson airport.

These are the spots in which the 227 "freedom riders" who have come to Jackson have been arrested.

None, however, has been charged with a violation of segregation laws. All have been charged with breach of the peace after refusing police orders to move on.

The petition claims Negroes "have suffered and shal continue to suffer irreparable injury as a result of the enforcement or threat of enforcement of state segregation laws while they are traveling."

'DENIED RIGHTS'

It also alleges that Negroes are subjected to "daily public inconveniences, harassment and embarrassment in violation of their constitutional rights."

Named as defendants are Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson as chief law enforcement officer of the State of Mississippi, the City of Jackson, Mayor Allen Thompson, Commissioners D. L. Lucky and Tom Marshall, Police Chief W. D. Rayfield, Trailways Greyhound, Illinois Central Railroad, Jackson City Lines and Cicero Carr of Cicero's Restaurant.

In the school integration suit rescheduled for August 10, 28-year-old Negro James H. Meredith of Kosciusko, a student at Jackson State College, seeks to restrain officials at the University of Mississippi from preventing his enrollment.

His suit also seeks to open the doors of all state white colleges and universities to Negroes.

The voting suit was filed by the U. S. Department of Justice and seeks to end alleged discrimination in voter registration in Clarke and Forrest counties.

Segregation In Bus, Rail And Air Terminals Is Target Of Suit

By KENNETH TOLER
From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., July 10.—The Federal Government Monday joined the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in a Federal suit challenging Mississippi statutes calling for segregation of the races in bus, railroad and airport terminals.

A three-judge Federal Court permitted the Government to enter the case "as friend of the court" over the protest of Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson of Mississippi. The state official said the United States was seeking to represent a class rather than the welfare of all its citizens.

However, Robert Owens of the Washington staff of the Justice Department said the brief "merely presents legal views."

State Wins Trial Delay

The action came just prior to the state winning a delay until Aug. 7 of the trial due to the illness of Asst. Atty. Gen. Dugas Shands, who directs civil rights litigation for the Mississippi department.

Mississippi's two Federal district judges sitting in the case approved the delay over the objection of Chief Judge Elbert Tuttle of Atlanta, of the United States Court of Appeals, third member of the panel. Favoring the delay were Judges Claude Clayton of Tupelo and S. C. Mize of Gulfport.

Judge Tuttle, after about a 30-minute conference of the judges, announced "the court has reluctantly and over my objection granted the delay."

"However, I don't think the delay is justified because the courts have held that cases of this kind should be expedited," Judge Tuttle said. "I personally think the issues are simple and the attorney general could answer."

Judge Mize, speaking for the majority, countered that "this is a very important case and should be fully tried by attorneys who are prepared to handle it."

Request Is Defended

"I know personally that Mr. Shands has directed all civil rights actions and others on his staff are not fully capable of going to trial without him," Judge Mize said. "I am not willing to force the litigants to go to trial without a lawyer of their choice and a slight delay will not impair the rights of the complainants."

Later, Judge Mize postponed until Aug. 10 a suit by James Meredith, 28-year-old Negro of Kosciusko, seeking to transfer from Jackson State College for Negroes to the all-white University of Mississippi. It had been scheduled to follow the transportation segregation case and likewise is being handled by Asst. Atty. Gen. Shands.

Judge Mize also announced a Federal Justice Department suit filed against registrars of Clarke and Forrest Counties for asserted discrimination against registration of Negroes for voting would follow the university case.

Government Joins In Suit By NAACP Against Mississippi

BY CLIFF SESSIONS
United Press International

JACKSON, Miss., July 10—The Federal government entered today a suit which seeks to strike down Mississippi's travel segregation laws. It charged local authorities have gone "beyond the scope of their lawful power" in the arrests of "freedom riders."

The state tried to block the government from entering the suit, which was brought by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and constitutes an all-out assault on Mississippi segregation laws.

But a three-judge Federal panel agreed to accept the Federal government into the case as "a friend of the court."

The panel simultaneously agreed to accept a motion by the state to delay hearing of the suit until Aug. 7. The trial was to have started today.

A total of 216 "freedom riders" have been arrested in Jackson since the integrationists began challenging segregation practices in air, bus and train terminals last May.

The suit filed by the NAACP asks for a permanent injunction against the City of Jackson, the State of Mississippi and various bus and railroad lines barring them from "continuing to arrest, haress, intimidate, threaten or coerce Negroes" in connection with their use of interstate and interstate transportation facilities.

In the complaint filed today the Federal government pointed out that the Supreme Court has consistently ruled that racial segregation in interstate commerce was unconstitutional.

"The United States is concerned when Federal civil rights and liberties are violated on a massive scale and continuing basis," it said.

The complaint contended that there was no legal basis for the arrest of persons for refusing to observe segregated travel customs.

"The state and its officials are acting beyond the scope of their lawful power if they made such arrests and obtain such convictions," the complaint said.

It asked for an injunction to prohibit future arrests based on

Justice Dept. Wants Miss. To Stop Jailing Freedom Riders

3-Judge court sets hearing for Aug. 7; arrests near 250

JACKSON, Miss. — The U.S. Department of Justice entered the Freedom Riders controversy last week by filing a friend-of-the-court brief.

In it, Justice Department attorneys ask a three-judge federal court to declare Mississippi's travel laws unconstitutional and to stop colored persons merely for using bus and train station facilities marked "white only."

The suit was originally filed by the NAACP asking an injunction to keep the state from arresting Freedom Riders. The three judge court voted to delay the case until Aug. 7 because Mississippi's assistant attorney general handling the case has a cold.

Cold or not, the state tried to block the Justice Department from entering the case but was overruled by the court.

THE FREEDOM RIDERS case attacks the Mississippi laws which require segregation in bus terminal lunch counters, waiting rooms and rest rooms. The state requires that terminals have segregated facilities for intrastate passengers and also facilities for interstate passengers.

This confusion was created by the state after a Supreme Court ruling that segregation of interstate passengers is illegal. Mississippi laws, however, are so constructed that anybody, whether inter-or intrastate, can be arrested for using the "wrong" facility.

In its brief, the Justice Department said these laws are unconstitutional and conflict with federal laws; that railroads and bus lines must not discriminate.

Mississippi's laws, the brief says, have "no purpose other than to accomplish that which the federal courts have repeatedly said may not be done.

"Such defiance of law not only fails to promote lawful behavior but also breeds a cynical disregard for the commands of the law which must be obeyed if the fabric of the constitutional society established 172 years ago is to be preserved."

The Department said that the Freedom Riders' arrests are illegal. To a Mississippi judge's contention that the Freedom Riders were not arrested for breaking segregation laws but for creating a condition under which the peace might be broken, the Department said:

"The obligation of the state in such a situation is not to violate the Constitution by arresting those who act under it, but to punish those who would interfere.

Constitutional rights would be frail indeed if the courts were to cease protecting them because a mob willed it so."

* * *

WHILE THIS CASE is pending, however, Mississippi continues to stock its jails and prison farms with Freedom Riders. By last weekend, the total number arrested approached the 250 mark.

With Jackson still the principal objective, Freedom Riders opened a "second front" in Arkansas

After being arrested and detained in jail, a group of four Riders continued their journey with Shreveport and New Orleans, La. as their destination.

They were first arrested in the Little Rock for refusing to leave a bus station waiting room when ordered by police. City Judge Quinn Glover sentenced them to six months in jail and fined them $500 each.

After spending the night in jail, the four accepted the judge's offer to suspend the sentences and fines if they left the state and stopped segregation tests.

The four were: the Rev. B. Elton Cox, 30, Highpoint, N.C., CORE field secretary; Mrs. Janet Reinitz, 23, New York; Miss Bliss A. Malone, 23, St. Louis and the Rev. John C. Raines, 27, Setauket N.Y.

Police Chief R. E. Glasscock said that the bus station had been integrated without incident for three years. He said he only arrested the Freedom Riders because of "advance publicity."

* * *

AS THE ARRESTS mounted, the Interstate Commerce Commission refused to enter the issue on the grounds that it might not have the power to issue anti-segregation regulations.

Everett Hutchinson, ICC chairman, said a hearing would be held Aug. 15. He said most cases of travel segregation had been referred to the Civic Rights division of the Justice Department.

* * *

STILL ANOTHER aspect of the nation-wide passive resistance movement cropped up as "wade-ins" were staged in Gulfport, Miss. and Chicago, Ill.

In Gulfport, officers from the highway patrol, sheriff's office and city police were present but did not bother any of the 24 swimmers.

A federal suit is pending which asks that the beach, a public one, be desegregated.

In Chicago, wholesale arrests were made as disorder accompanied the visits of interracial parties to Rainbow Beach. The demonstrations are sponsored by the local NAACP youth group.

White youths assaulted and molested the swimmers.

A SEQUEL TO one of the earliest Freedom Rides was played in Montgomery, Ala. Frederick Gach was fined $25 and his wife, Mrs. Anna Gach was fined $50 on being found guilty by a jury.

They were charged with disorderly conduct when they protested the beating of a colored Freedom Rider who was lying unconscious on the ground during the Montgomery disorder.

Police said they used profanity; they denied this charge.

MEANWHILE, RECRUITS for Freedom Rides came forward from every part of the country — despite the certainty of being arrested and jailed.

Five left New York and headed for Chattanooga and Alabama. A Milwaukee, Minn. pastor, the Rev. Raymond Lathan, is recruiting 100 from his area to journey to Montgomery and Jackson.

A 12-member, interracial delegation left Los Angeles headed for Jackson and Shreveport, La. Officials closed the terminal on learning that another group was headed there by bus.

Can Mississippi Afford To Retain Political Prisioners

Last week, Edward R. Murrow, the distinguished journalist, radio and television commentator, now head of the U. S. Information Service, spoke about the difficulties U. S. Representatives are having to face in attempting to properly present the nation's image in foreign lands, as a result of the violence in Alabama, and the arrest and imprisonment of Freedom Riders in this state.

For those Mississippians of intelligence who look to world leadership by the United States to properly present the ideal of democracy and freedom, and thus save the world from communist domination; in the light of Mr. Murrow's remarks, the question should immediately arise, Can political prisoners be retained in Mississippi, or anywhere else in the United States for that matter, while at the same time hoping for high appreciation for the nation's image in foreign lands.

We intelligent Mississippians are not fooling ourselves anymore than we are fooling the peoples of foreign lands with the legal rationalizations made to justify the arrest and imprisonment of Freedom Riders in this state.

We can appreciate the reluctance of those in positions of high elective political offices to move in the opposite direction, after so many statements pledged to maintain the status quo in racial segregation in the state, but we would suggest that Mr. Murrow's remarks makes it all to evident that the future welfare of the nation has become to be of far more importance than maintaining the status quo in racial segregation in this state.

We can also appreciate the reluctance of those in high political position to act as though being forced to such action by the NAACP, CORE, or by the Communist, but there appears no alternative to what Mr. Murrow has pointed out but to remove the segregation signs in bus and railroad stations, and other public facalities in the state.

We hasten to point out to those who have a deep seated and irrevokable hatred and objection to the idea of integration, that no white person would be forced to sit by, talk with, or otherwise associate with Negroes, in public places open to free and unsegregated use by all citizens. White people in Mississippi can conduct themselves toward Negroes exactly as is done in other sections of the country where no signs and no segregation laws have ever existed.

In conclusion, and in spite of the militant speeches loud hand-clapping, and boasting, at NAACP and other Negro meetings, we recognize the real challenge of Mr. Murrow's remarks as being directed to those who occupy the positions of power and responsibility in this state; for neither today nor tomorrow, if its image is to be a model for the rest of the world, political prisoners cannot be retained in Mississippi, nor any where else in this nation.

Federal Judge Declines To Stop Arrests Of Freedom Riders

Biloxi, Miss., June 28 — Federal District Judge Sidney Mize, Tuesday, declined to hear a plea filed to stop the arrest of Fredom Riders.

The plea was brought before Mize by two attorneys who claimed state courts are "behind segregation" and the matter should be "pried out of their hands" by federal courts.

A total of 164 riders have been arrested here since May 24 after attempting to integrate waiting rooms in bus, train and plane terminals. They have been convicted on breach of the peace charges.

Judge Mize said he rejected the plea because remedies in state courts have not been exhausted. He said an act of Congress prohibits the entrance of Federal courts into such a matter unless state remedies have been exhausted or do not exist.

"The right of appeal is available to them" in state courts, he said.

However, attorneys William M. Kunstler of New York and Jack Young of Jackson, in their plea, claimed Mississippi authorities are using the breach of the peace statute illegally to enforce racial segregation.

The plea was brought on behalf of Elizabeth Wycoff, 45, a free lance writer from Greenwich Village, N. Y. who was arrested here June 2 with an interracial group of riders.

In a hearing on the plea last week Kunstler told Mize it was his duty to issue the writ even though Miss Wyckoff had not exhausted her legal remedies in state courts. "State courts are not going to be of any assistance to her," he said.

Attorney Tom Watkins of Jackson, arguing for the state, claimed that issuance of such a federal writ would "pervert the entire system of state courts."

Watkins said Kunstler was wrong in claiming Miss Wyckoff would not get a fair hearing in Mississippi courts and he said Kunstler owed "an apology to the state courts of Mississippi."

Mize upheld Watkins' argument

U.S. ENTERS CASE

Federal Panel Postpones Mississippi Racial Suit

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—A three-judge federal panel—with one dissenting — Monday postponed a suit asking for a halt to the arrest of segregation-testing "Freedom Riders" in Mississippi.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People filed the court action, and the Justice Department joined forces as a "friend of the court."

Despite objections lodged by Chief Justice Elbert Tuttle of the U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals, the panel postponed the case until Aug. 7 because of the illness of a Mississippi assistant attorney general.

Since the first of the Freedom Riders began May 24, 27 whites and Negroes have been arrested on breach of the peace charges for trying to desegregate bus, train and air terminals in Jackson, Mississippi's capital city.

The suit attacked what it called unconstitutional state laws requiring segregation in railroad cars, buses, rest rooms, waiting rooms and other areas. And such laws, the suit said, subject Negroes to daily "public inconvenience, harrassment, and embarrassment . . ."

The Justice Department's "friend of the court" brief asked for an injunction to stop Mississippi from enforcing nine state laws calling for racial segregation of travelers, and called such laws clearly unconstitutional.

ASK LAW HALT

The department also asked that Mississippi authorities be stopped from invoking valid laws, such as breach of the peace statutes, to enforce what the department called illegal segregation.

The Mississippi attorney general's office asked for the delay in Monday's scheduled hearing because of the illness of Asst. Atty. Gen. Dugas Shands who has been handling race cases.

Federal District Judges Sidney Mize of Gulfport and Claude Clayton of Tupelo voted to postpone with Tuttle disagreeing.

Mize said the case was not simple, as Tuttle said. The slight delay, Mize added, "would allow the attorney general to have Shands or another attorney ready and it would not cause undue harm to the plaintiffs."

In other racial developments Monday:

Five more Freedom Riders — two whites and three Negroes — were scheduled to leave St. Louis by bus to test segregation practices at terminals in Arkansas, Louisiana and Mississippi.

The group was to go to Little Rock, Ark., Shreveport, La., and New Orleans and return by train through Mississippi, Tennessee and Illinois.

One of the five was the Rev. B. Elton Cox, a Negro who is field secretary for the Congress of Racial Equality.

Judge Mize also set Aug. 10 for a hearing on a Negro's suit asking for admission to the all-white University of Mississippi.

The hearing was to have come up Monday, but it was postponed because of Mize's participation on the three-judge panel considering the NAACP request.

Attorneys for James Meredith had filed a motion for preliminary injunction which would have allowed him to enter the university for the second summer session.

The matter was to have been considered Tuesday but Mize said Shands' illness prohibited this.

3 Judges To Hear Rider Suit Monday

By BEN McCARTY
Associated Press Staff Writer

A three-judge federal court will hear a suit Monday to prevent police from arresting "freedom riders" and other Negroes who attempt to use all-white public facilities in Mississippi.

Since May 24, 198 freedom riders have been arrested for attempting to crack segregation barriers at bus, train and plane terminals. They were all charged with breach of the peace.

Numerous Jackson Negroes have been arrested on the same charge after using park benches reserved for whites, for sit-ins at the white city library and for taking front seats on city buses.

Chief Judge Elbert P. Tuttle of the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals ordered the court to hear the injunction request filed by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Tuttle, of Atlanta, and Federal District Judges Sidney Mize of Biloxi and Claude Clayton of Tupelo will serve when the court convenes.

The suit was filed in the name of Samuel Bailey, Joseph Broadwater and Burnett L. Jacob, Jackson negroes. They have not been arrested for desegregation attempts.

Defendants named were Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson, Mayor Allen Thompson and the City Council, Police Chief W. D. Rayfield, the Trailways, Greyhound and Jackson City Bus lines, the Illinois Central Railroad, and the Airport Restaurant.

At least eight of those named as defendants had been served subpoenas by the U. S. Marshal's office Saturday as witnesses when the case begins Monday.

They include G. E. Pickle, district passenger agent, Illinois Central Railroad; A. B. Smith, manager, Jackson City Lines; T. A. Turner, secretary-manager, Jackson Municipal Airport Commission; Everett Renegar, local manager, Southern Greyhound Lines Inc., Joe T. Patterson, attorney general of Mississippi; J. L. Ray, Jackson Police Department, Ray Atherton, Interstate Commerce Commission and Cicero Carr, owner-operator, Cicero's Airport Restaurant.

Mize Upholds Rider Arrests

U.S. Judge Says Breach Of Peace Law Was Used Properly

By KENNETH TOLER
From The Commercial Appeal
Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., July 3.—Mississippi's use of a breach of the peace statute in the arrest of self-styled freedom riders was upheld Monday by a Federal district judge.

Judge S. C. Mize in so ruling said that use of the statute, which "is common to many states," apparently prevented "bloodshed" and racial violence when the protest riders invaded Jackson.

He cited that when the riders, in protest to Southern segregation customs in bus, railroad and airport terminals, invaded Montgomery, Ala., that "bloodshed" resulted when the white and Negro groups disregarded state anti-mixing laws.

Judge Mize pointed out, however, that the riders had not been arrested in Mississippi for a violation of any law with reference to integration or segregation, but for breach of the peace in refusing to disperse and move on under the direction of a lawful officer.

Writer's Plea Denied

The decision was given in refusing to release Elizabeth Porter Wyckoff, a white woman free-lance writer of New York, from jail. She was sentenced in Jackson Municipal Court June 5 along with other protest riders, and has failed to make bond or pay her fine.

Judge Mize pointed out that Miss Wyckoff has legal avenues available to gain her release through posting of bond and appealing. He said if she does not have the money for that purpose, she can take a pauper's oath and appeal without posting bond. On that premise, Judge Mize said, there was no emergency in her appeal.

Pointing to the state breach of the peace statute, Judge Mize said, "the wisdom of this statute is exemplified by the oral arguments of her counsel when he refers to the bloodshed that occurred in Montgomery, Ala."

"No such occurrences happened in Mississippi, but had it not been for the orderly enforcement by the officers of the state under the provisions of this statute (breach of the peace) such occurrences could have happened," Judge Mize said.

Common Statute

He said "this statute, or one similar, is common to many states in the Union and is a very wise exercise of police powers of the state."

"Petitioner's own state, New York, has a very similar statute and with the same purpose as is the Mississippi statute," he said.

Judge Mize said Miss Wyckoff's contention that her arrest was to prevent integration or to enforce segregation "is without merit." He said she was not arrested for that "but for breach of the peace in refusing to disperse and move on under the direction of a lawful officer."

He said that the Federal courts, as well as Congress, are reluctant "to interfere with the enforcement of the criminal statutes of a state, but leave that function to appropriate action of each state."

"Every question of procedural due process of law—with its far-flung and undefined range—would invite a flanking movement against the system of state courts by resort to the Federal forum, with review if need be by . . . (the United States Supreme) court to determine the issue," the opinion cited by Judge Mize stated.

Five More 'Riders' Arrested in Jackson

JACKSON, Miss., July 2 (AP)—Five "freedom riders" arrived by bus from Montgomery, Ala., today and police arrested them shortly after they entered the terminal's white waiting room here.

The riders"—three white and two Negro—brought the number of arrested travelers in Jackson to 169.

Capt. J. L. Ray ordered the group arrested when they failed to respond to his order to move on. Police charged them with breach of the peace.

JACKSON ARRESTS 7 WHO TEST COLOR BAR

JACKSON, Miss., July 5 (AP)—Seven Negroes sought to break the color line in Jackson Wednesday. All were arrested on charges of breach of the peace.

Four arrests took place at the city park after the Negroes had refused to move from a bench usually used by white persons. Three others were arrested shortly afterward when they sought to use the white waiting room at the Trailways bus terminal.

The four at the park were among a dozen Negroes who entered the area normally used by white persons and picnicked. Afterward, they strolled around the swimming pool area and were turned away from the ticket booth.

Some white bystanders jerred at the group, but the police said there had been no violence.

At the bus station, officers ordered the three Negroes to move on before they could get to the ticket counter. The three ignored the request of Capt. J. L. Ray. He ordered them arrested.

They brought to 172 the number arrested since attempts by Freedom Riders to desegregate transportation terminals began here May 24.

FOUR NEGRO RIDERS JAILED AT JACKSON

JACKSON, June 23 (UPI)—Four young Negroes were arrested in a Jackson bus terminal here Friday—before starting a Freedom Ride.

Unlike the 140 riders already arrested here, the Negroes had not just arrived in town, but were trying to catch a bus out of town.

They entered the Trailways Bus Terminal's white waiting room and were ordered to move on by the police. They ignored the order and were arrested for breach of the peace.

Richard Haley, a Congress of Racial Equality spokesman, said the four young people were joining the Freedom Rider movement to show that Jackson Negroes support the riders who have come to Mississippi from elsewhere.

Also at Jackson, a 13-year-old Negro girl, arrested with six companions after trying to integrate Jackson zoo benches yesterday, was charged with assault today.

The police said a white woman filed a complaint that the girl pushed her 4-year-old child away from a water fountain at the zoo.

The Jackson zoo is integrated, but by local custom only whites sit on zoo benches and use the water fountains.

Five More 'Riders' Get Routine Trials

New Cases Are Continuation Of Old, Judge Says

JACKSON, Miss., July 3 — (AP) — City Judge James Spencer convicted five new self-styled "Freedom Riders" on breach of peace charges Monday, bringing to 168 the number found guilty since the rides began May 24.

Judge Spencer handed down $200 fines and four-month sentences to the riders, who were arrested as they sought to desegregate the Trailways bus terminal here Sunday.

Only 10 persons witnessed the trial, four of them newsmen, three police officers and three spectators.

Capt. J. L. Ray, who arrested the five, was the only witness. He testified he had information the group was coming to create an incident and ordered the five to move on. When they ignored his order, he said, he arrested them.

Judge Spencer said he had made the court's position in the rider trials clear at earlier proceedings and would have no statement. He said he regarded Monday's trial as a continuation of the earlier ones.

FREEDOM RIDERS- JACKSON

Mississippi Still Is Key Battleground

Mississippi remained the main battleground in the Nationwide desegregation struggle last week as state officials charge that "Freedom Riders" arrested at the Jackson bus terminal were under Communist influence.

T. B. Birdsong, Mississippi Commissioner of Public Safety, told the Associated Press he had ordered the State Highway Patrol to investigate the backgrounds of Freedom Riders in an effort to discredit them in the eyes of the Nation.

The disclosure came as the patrol charged that two Freedom Riders had gone to Cuba to attend a seminar conducted by Soviet agents and dealing with methods of arousing racial tension. The two were identified as Katherine Pleune, 21, of Chicago, and James Robert Wahlstrom, 24, of Milwaukee.

Wahlstrom said in Madison, Wis., his attorney, Franklin P. Hall, had wired Birdsong denying the charges and demanding a public retraction.

In New York, Gordon Carey, field director of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE), also denied the charges and called Birdsong's statements a "smear campaign." Carey admitted Miss Pleune had been in Cuba but denied that "she or any other Freedom Riders was trained or inspired by any foreign agents."

Also in Mississippi, James Meredith, a 27-year-old Negro Air Force veteran, asked a Federal court to prevent the all-white University of Mississippi from barring him because of his race.

Meredith, of Kosciusko, Miss,. sought a preliminary injunction against the university and the state that would allow him to enroll in a summer term beginning July 17.

In other parts of the Nation there were these development last week:

• Negro attorneys in Jacksonville, Fla., lost a bid to have city recreation officials cited for contempt of court for closing four public swimming pools last month.

A Federal judge rejected the attorneys' motion, which said the closings violated a Federal court order forbidding segregation of city-owned facilities. The city said the pools were closed because of a thunderstorm.

• The school board in Atlanta, Ga., cut short a hearing on appeals by 38 Negro students who have been refused admission to white high schools.

The hearing ended when attorneys for the students tried to get board staff members to testify regarding the criteria used to turn down the Negroes. The board refused to allow the testimony and adjourned abruptly, saying it would rule on the appeals sometime this week.

• In Memphis, Tenn., two Negro photographers, E. C. Withers and G. E. Hardin, each were fined $26 for taking pictures of lunch counter sit-in demonstrators at a downtown drug store. They had been charged with disorderly conduct.

• The Illinois legislature meeting in Springfield passed and sent to Gov. Otto Kerner the first fair employment practices legislation in the history of the state.

The bill would apply only to employers of 100 or more persons the first two years it is in effect. In succeeding two-year periods, it would apply to employers of 75 and 50 persons.

• Chicago Police Supt. Orlando W. Wilson ordered an inquiry into police conduct at a racial disturbance outside a South Side church last week.

Some witnesses have charged that police allowed a crowd to form outside the Holy Cross Lutheran Chrch and threaten 75 Negroes, who had been given shelter after their hotel was burned out. Police, who made no arrests, said the crowd was orderly.

Some 6000 members of the NEA's Representative Assembly passed the resolution after a two-hour debate in which southern delegates argued heatedly against the move.

Eight more riders go to jail in Jackson mixing attempt

By The Associated Press

Another attempt to crack the segregation barrier at Jackson, Miss., has brought to 198 the number of freedom riders arrested in the Deep South city.

The arrest of eight additional persons occurred the same day Minnesota officials reported five riders from that state had not been mistreated at the Mississippi State Penitentiary at Parchman, 130 miles northwest of Jackson.

The eight charged with breach of the peace at Jackson yesterday were described as the first group to stage a freedom ride from Montgomery, Ala., to Jackson since July 2.

TOM GAITHER, field secretary for the Congress of Racial Equality, said CORE sponsored the trip and that one white woman, three white men and four Negro men took part. No incidents were reported.

While the biracial group was making the trip, Acting City Judge W. B. Fontaine of Jackosn convicted 20 riders and handed down $200 fines and four-month jail sentences. The riders were arrested earlier this month.

At St. Paul, Minn., Asst. Atty. Gen. John Casey Jr. and Mrs. Wright Brooks, chairman of the Minnesota Human Rights Commission, reported on an investigation they made of the Mississippi Penitentiary at the request of Gov. Elmer L. Andersen. The governor said he had received some reports the five white persons had been mistreated.

"A TOUR OF THE prison facilities has convinced me that there have been no examples of mistreatment or abuse," Mrs. Brooks told a news conference.

She said the riders voiced "some good natured chiding about the food, but no serious complaints as to the adequacy of the diet." She also said the young people needed exercise in the jail yard but had not been permitted to join other prisoners in work.

Mrs. Brooks said prison authorities explained the young Minnesotans were not allowed to work because of possible clashes with other prisoners who do not share their integration views.

AT OCALA, FLA., James R. O'Conner, 31-year-old economics instructor at Barnard College in New York City, was convicted of unlawful assembly by a Marion County court jury. He is slated to be sentenced July 17.

O'Conner, a white man, was the second person convicted in connection with a scuffle at the Ocala bus station June 16 when a group of freedom riders stopped on a bus trip to test integration practices.

Edward B. King Jr., head of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee, said at Roanoke, Va., the group will sponsor a "freedom walk" from Baltimore to Washington Sunday, July 16.

THE COMMITTEE has headquarters in Atlanta. King said the walk is to focus attention of government leaders on "imprisoned freedom riders in Jackson and continuing segregation of interstate facilities."

In Washington the Justice Department was reported planning a new move toward reopening the public school system in Prince Edwards County, Va., closed the past two years in an integration dispute. However, Justice officials declined comment on what the move might be.

The Chapel Hill, N. C., school board assigned about 40 Negro pupils to first grades in schools for white children. The board also was expected to act favorably on requests for assignment to white schools of Negro pupils in the third, eighth and ninth grades.

THE FIRST SCHOOL integration occurred at Chapel Hill last year when three Negro first graders were admitted to the Estes Hill School. They were promoted and will be in the second grade this Fall.

At Greenville, Miss., three Negroes picketed three Greenville variety stores for about 40 minutes, protesting alleged discriminatory hiring practices by the firms. No incidents were reported. Police patrolled the area in cars and on foot and one officer had a dog on leash.

In Cleveland, Mrs. Frances Lander Spain, president of the American Library Assn., said she could point with pride to "the wonderful advances already made in Southern cities in regard to integration" in library facilities.

17 Riders Arrested in Mississippi Jailing in Tests Pass 200 Mark

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — The number of "freedom riders" arrested in Jackson soared over the 200 mark Sunday as 17 travelers tried unsuccessfully to integrate terminal waiting rooms.

Nine riders—eight Negroes and one white—came here by train from New Orleans. They were arrested when they refused to obey police orders to leave a white waiting room.

8 FROM MONTGOMERY

Less than three hours later, seven white and one Negro riders came in by bus from Montgomery, Ala. Police took them into custody when they sought to integrate the Negro and the white waiting rooms.

Jackson police now have arrested 216 riders since May 24.

About a third of the riders are out on bond. Eighty-two are held at the state prison at Parchman and 52 are in Jackson jails.

The Alabama group had announced they came to talk over segregation policies with Mississippi Gov. Ross Barnett with a view toward mediation and a fruitful exchange of views."

WOULD GO TO JAIL

If they failed to meet with Barnett, a spokesman said they would go to jail.

After getting off the bus in Jackson, the Negro woman rider approached police Capt. J. L. Ray and asked if a representative of the governor was present.

When told he wasn't, she asked if the group could see the governor Sunday afternoon.

"It is my information," Ray answered, "that he's very busy and he can't see you."

Five white riders then entered the Negro waiting room. The Negro woman and two white riders went into the white waiting room.

ORDERED TO LEAVE

Police ordered them to leave and arrested them as they tried to get service at crowded cafeteria counters.

Earlier, Gov. Barnett said he would be out of town Monday through Thursday and indicated he would not talk to the riders Sunday.

"I don't see any need of wading in with that crowd and discussing these things," Barnett said when reached by telephone.

"I'll be tied up all afternoon. I'm extremely busy."

Before arriving, the Alabama riders had succeeded in getting service at both white and Negro lunch counters in Montgomery. A dozen policemen watched as white riders were served at a Negro counter for the first time.

In New Orleans, detectives watched the group as they bought tickets in the New Orleans terminal. The riders did not test New Orleans facilities. They were not bothered.

Five More Riders Go To Jail

Five more "freedom riders" were to go on trial here this afternoon bringing to 169 the total arrested here since May 24.

The new group, three whites and two Negroes, entered the Trailways bus terminal white waiting room yesterday afternoon and were arrested after refusing to obey police orders to leave.

The ride originated at Montgomery, Ala.

The new arrivals were identified as Negroes Barbara Jane Kay, 35, of Inglewood, N. J., a housewife, and Leotus Thornton, 23, of San Jose, Calif., a student at San Jose City College; and whites Michael Leon Pritchard, 18, of New York City, a student at San Francisco City College; Harry Pete Stoner, 22, of Chicago, a student at the University of Chicago; and Robert Allen Miller, 22, of Warren, Mich., a student at Duke University.

They were to be tried on breach of the peace charges in city court this afternoon.

While new attempts were being made on Jackson, state prison Supt. Fred Jones denied reports six Minnesota Freedom Riders were being mistreated at the state prison at Parchman. He added, however, he's "not going to turn the prison into a country club."

Minnesota Atty. Gen. Walter F. Mondale had telegraphed Mississippi Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson and asked him to investigate reports the riders were "incarcerated like felons." Mondale told Patterson he had been told they were not allowed to have privacy.

Mondale's concern stemmed from a letter written by one of the riders, a 22-year-old University of Minnesota coed, Claire O'Connor of St. Paul, to her parents.

Miss O'Connor said their the riders' privacy was invaded because they are under constant supervision of male prison guards.

Jones said at Parchman that four matrons—one hired employe and three women trustees—supervised the women riders, who are isolated in a separate wing of the maximum security unit.

"Male guards bring in their meals, but the guards tell them in advance, they're coming," he added.

The parents of Miss O'Connor said the letter received from her was written on a prison mimeographed form saying "no visitors allowed in this unit."

Jones said the prison does not have enough spare employes to supervise visits for the Freedom Riders. Every visitor has to be screened for contraband articles, he said.

"If they the riders show no respect for the customs and laws of Mississippi," Jones said, "I'm not going to turn the prison into a country club."

Jones said the six were being treated "like any other prisoners that come here to Parchman" They were arrested June 11 at a Negro lunch counter in a Jackson bus depot. They are all white.

In another development, Brig. Gen. T. B. Birdsong, head of the Mississippi Highway Patrol, denied making any statement about James Wahlstrom, a 24-year-old Madison, Wis., Freedom Rider who is now out or bail.

Walstrom has denied a charge that he learned Freedom Ride techniques from Russians in Havana.

Birdsong was reported as saying that Wahlstrom and Katherine Pleune, 21, of Chicago, had attended a Soviet-directed seminar in Cuba.

The names of the two came up at a news conference last Thursday. Art Richardson, patrol public information officer, identified Wahlstrom as one of the two and said to quote Birdsong as making the identification. Birdsong made no objection.

Wahlstrom's lawyer telegraphed Birdsong from Madison and in reply, Birdsong wired back, in part:

"When being interviewed by the press with respect to so-called 'Freedom Riders' on last Thursday, it was mentioned that a Katherine Pleune and another rider had been among a group of approximately 200 Fair-Play-

For-Cuba committeemen who recently spent a considerable length of time in Havana being lectured by Castro and a group of Russian Communists.

It was stated by someone other than myself that Wahlstrom was that person."

Birdsong said, however, Wahlstrom could clear up the misunderstanding if he would reveal the truth or untruth of the matter, "what transpired in Cuba and who financed the trip to Cuba and to Mississippi.

"Since the statement was erroneously credited to me, I would appreciate this and any other information about Wahlstrom so that I can make a correct statement."

The Wisconsin Freedom Rider said he went to Cuba last December but denied there was a "Soviet seminar for Freedom Riders. As far as I know I never talked with a single Russian during my entire Cuban visit."

And, in Minneapolis, Minn., Mrs. Caren Rockowitz of St. Paul, chairman of the University of Minnesota Students for Integration (SFI) committee, said another group of riders from that state may head South late this month.

SFI sponsored the first busload of Minnesota riders.

Jury May Visit Riders In Pen

By BILL COPPENBARGER
Daily News Staff Writer

A Hinds County Grand Jury committee may visit Parchman before the weekend to inspect conditions affecting Hinds County Freedom Rider prisoners there following a charge by Circuit Judge Leon Hendrick yesterday.

Judge Hendrick told the newly empanelled grand jury that one of their main functions was to inspect the county jail, and since the so-called Freedom Riders which have been transferred to the State Penitentiary are Hinds county prisoners, they are still under county supervision.

"I particularly want to congratulate and commend Sheriff Bob Gilfoy, his deputies, the police officers of the City of Jackson and officials here for their handling of that provoking situation which has developed here during the past few weeks," he said.

"These people had the deliberate intent of provoking our people, and what is behind it I don't know, but I suggest you send a committee to Parchman to check conditions there."

He further requested that when they submit their report, they bring in one or two paragraphs making mention of the excellent handling of the recent racial agitation move here.

Judge Hendrick dwelt at length on the increase of crime in the and distribution of pornographic literature as the three greatest menacing contributors to crime. nation, listing gambling, drinking

He said that observance of traffic laws was also another greatly needed item, although he admitted he didn't "know a thing the Grand Jury could do about traffic laws except educate the people about their obligations."

He deplored the 496 traffic deaths reported over the Fourth of July holiday in the nation, and said this was the largest number of fatalities ever.

He further charged the jury to look into between 40 and 50 felony cases to be presented by District Attorney Bill Waller, and to make inquiry into any other matters which they feel should be investigated.

MAYOR TELLS FAIR

Jackson To Stand Firm In Segregation Fight

Jackson Daily News 1-12

By JIM CLEVELAND
Daily News Staff Writer

PHILADELPHIA, Miss. —Jackson Mayor Allen Thompson went down a checklist of areas in which integration attempts and segregation protests have been made in Jackson yesterday at the Neshoba County Fair and said neither the city nor Mississippi would tolerate any of them.

Thompson, speaking for the crowd on hand as Neshoba fair folks rolled out the welcome mat for Jackson Day, followed Governor Ross Barnett to the podium. Earlier in the day, the Jackson Day program, provided by the Jackson Chamber of Commerce, delighted a packed and overflowing pavilion crowd with an array of top talent. Fair-8-11-61

"Unlike Germany, Japan and many other countries," Thompson said, "the South pulled itself together after a war without any help from the federal government." He said the South didn't need any help now and would not tolerate any reconstruction.

"We've got money in Jackson to fight it, and if we need money, we know you folks will give it to us."

He said the unsuccessful efforts of CORE to cause violence and bloodshed in Mississippi has been "the most humiliating thing ever to happen to that organization," and he called the NAACP, "the most dangerous organization that ever existed in the United States."

In emphasizing that the policies of the Capitol City would remain firm and unchanged, Thompson added that any boycott to merchants in Jackson would fall on "deaf ears."

Wilson, Miss.

JAIL AGAIN PROMISED

"We have the wholehearted endorsement of our merchants who say if they can't make a living as merchants, they'll make a living some other way." And if those nearly 200 Negroes coming back to Mississippi to post appeal bonds break our laws again, they're going right back to jail."

He said these are the most dangerous and turbulent times in Mississippi since reconstruction and is "no time for moderates."

"I've been in sections where there is discontent, unhappiness, stagnation and fear to get on the streets at night. We have no reason to apologize for the way we live, our policies, or our tremendous progress in Jackson and in Mississippi."

Thompson earlier had turned down a speaker's invitation because of a Southern Municipal Officials' Conference in Memphis, but decided to stop at the fair en route to the Bluff City.

ENTERTAINMENT PROVIDED

The much applauded Jackson Day program featured music by the Jerry Lane Orchestra, and singing duet Nanette Workman and Jean Ann Bishop. The Coachmen from Millsaps College furnished the folk singing air and Neshoba County Fair officials presented a special plaque to the wholesale committee of the Jackson Chamber of Commerce who have brought the program to fairgoers for over 25 years.

W. F. Bond, former state superintendent of education delivered the other afternoon address. Bond, 79, is an annual fixture at the historic campgrounds.

COLEMAN ON HAND

Superintendent of Education J. M. Tubb, a scheduled speaker, was unable to atteend yesterday due to a conflicting conference on Mississippi blind institutions, and Lt. Governor Paul Johnson and former Governor J. P. Coleman turned up as routine fairgoers.

Coleman laughed, talked and shook hands and replied to queries if he would speak, that he was just "meetin', eatin' and greetin'." Numerous requests couldn't get him to the speaker's rostrum.

Judge Hears Rider's Plea For Freedom

Jackson Daily News 8-14-61

County Judge Russell Moore was scheduled to hear arguments today on whether Richard Haley, 45-year old Chicago Negro "Freedom Rider" official. should be freed from the state penintentiary.

The hearing was set for 10 a.m. in Moore's Hinds County Court, but may be delayed slightly because opposing attorneys have a federal court appearance during the morning. Fair-8-14-61

William Kunstler, New York lawyer handling several rider cases, filed Wednesday for a court order to free Haley on grounds his arrest was not constitutional.

Officials of the ride-sponsoring Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) said at least 180 of the riders were in Jackson Sunday night.

The convicted riders returned to this Mississipp capital city in the same methods they had used to travel here earlier. But this time, they refused to enter any segregated facilities.

Jailed were Pauline Simes, 22, a white New York resident and George Raymond Jr., 18-year-old New Orleans Negro.

Jackson Daily News
8/14

Attorney William Kunstler planned to confer with a U.S. district judge here today after transferring the cases of five convicted "Freedom Riders" into federal court.

Tue 8-14-61

Kunstler, representing the American Civil Liberties Union, Thursday lost his bid to avoid a mass trek of Freedom Riders back to Mississippi to start appeal proceedings in state courts.

The New York attorney attempted to win modification of a Hinds County Court order requiring all defendants to be present on the opening day of court—Aug. 14.

Jackson, Miss.

Both Circuit Court Judge Leon Henderick and State Supreme Court Justice William Ethridge Jr. said they did not have the power to tell County Judge Russel Moore how to run his court

Some 187 convicted riders are free on $500 appeal bonds after being convicted in city court for breach of peace. Under Judge Moore's rulling—instituted more than a year ago—they would forfeit the bonds if they failed to appear next Monday. The actual appeals trials won't begin until Aug. 21 and are expected to last 18-20 weeks.

Kunstler, in a surprise move, filed proceedings to transfer the cases of five of the segregation-cases of five of the segregation-defying riders to federal court. He charged that the arrests were "blatant attempts by the state to enforce its outright segregation statutes."

Kunstler said he selected the cases of five riders who probably would not return for the appeal trials.

The federal court proceedings were filed under a 1958 civil rights act which, Kunstler, said, made the removal of the cases to federal court automatic. The act previously had been used in vote discrimination cases elsewhere.

'Riders' Flock Back To Jackson

The Hinds County
P. 8-B

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—Scores of "riders" renewed acquaintances in the sweltering heat of Mississippi's capital Sunday as they flocked here to appeal convictions for crossing color lines.

Over 100 of 187 riders due here had arrived by bus, plane, train and auto. All have posted $500 bond and are to start appeals of their breach of peace convictions Monday.

Mon. 8-14-61

The riders were to meet with their attorneys to go over procedural matters and attend a rally Sunday night in a Negro Masonic temple.

About 100 riders—Negro and white—were quartered in Tougaloo Southern Christian College, a Negro school just north of Jackson. Others stayed in private homes.

Lunching at a campus grill, girls wore pedal pushers and many went barefooted in the oppressive 90-degree heat.

One rider strummed a guitar and they sang Rider songs as they greeted returning travelers who had unsuccessfully tried to integrate transportation terminals.

Charleston, S. C.

"We don't have any expectations," one told a newsman. "We're here to find out what's going to happen."

The rides started here May 24. Since then, 293 travelers have been convicted of breach of peace charges.

A little over 100 are serving sentences. The remainder posted appeal bonds and gained their freedom. These are the riders who returned this weekend to start their appeals.

James Farmer, 41, Negro National director of the Congress of Racial Equality, earlier charged that a requirement that the riders must appear in person for the setting of trial dates amounted to an economic reprisal against CORE.

Aim For U.S. Court With 4 Rider Cases

Jackson Daily News
Fri. 8-11-61

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Atty. William Kunstler of New York said yesterday he would file action to transfer the cases of four convicted "freedom riders" to federal court.

Kunstler said he would act under a little used federal statute of 1948 to move the cases into the court of District Judge Sidney Mize.

Jackson, Miss.

Under the Civil Rights law, Kunstler said, the transfer was automatic and the state would have to petition the federal court for the return of the cases.

He said he would use the cases of four riders not expected to return to Jackson for their trials, scheduled to begin in the court term opening next Monday.

The four included the cases of: Shirley Smith, 34-year-old New York City white woman who said she had prior commitments in Washington where she works for a group placing American teachers in Africa. She said she hoped for a stay so she could appeal her case here later.

Orville Luster, a Daly City, Calif., Negro on the American Friends Service Committee and member of a group of religious leaders who tested segregation here July 20 after meeting to discuss the moral and religious aspects of segregation.

Elmer Brown, 20-year-old Akron, Ohio, Negro student who was bonded out after attempting suicide in jail.

Dr. Cecil Thomas, 44-year-old Albany, Calif., white man, a YMCA secretary who attended the meeting of religious leaders and was arrested four days later during another desegregation attempt.

All four were convicted on breach of peace charges, failure to obey the order of an officer to move along.

JACKSON, MISS. — Approximately 186 persons from every section of the country are scheduled to go on trial here next Tuesday on charges growing out of their participation in Freedom Rides.

Jackson, Miss.

James Farmer, National Director of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE), said the state of Mississippi indicated last week that all of the people on cash appeal bond must return for the trial.

Wyatt Tee Walker, Director of the Southern Conference Leadership Conference, said that the trials should be held individually and would probably last some several weeks.

The Freedom Ride Co-ordinating Committee meeting in emergency session this week at Atlanta, was aimed at mobilizing the forces for the mass return via chartered buses and car pools to Jackson.

Attending the conference were Farmer, Rev. Walker, Miss Diane Nash, of the Nashville Christian Leadership Council; Edward B. King, Executive Secretary and Charles Sherrod, Field Secretary of the SCLC and Rev. James Lawson, staff consultant to the SCLC.

189 Enter Innocent Pleas At Arraignments In Jackson

Tues. 8-15-61

From The Commercial Appeal
Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 14. — Hinds County Judge Russel Moore Monday set trials of so-called "Freedom Riders" to begin Aug. 22 and continue at a two-a-day pace until next Jan. 18.

Memphis, Tenn

He set the dates as 189 riders filed before him to brand as unconstitutional breach of peace statutes under which they were arrested in refusing to leave segregated terminals. They entered pleas of innocent.

Their personal appearances were on appeals from convictions in the Jackson Municipal Court and sentences ranging from fines of $200 to four months in jail. Many of the riders, who filled Jackson jails, have been held at the state penitentiary pending their appeals.

Judge Moore took no action on the contentions of the defendants, which he said had been prematurely raised.

Three other riders, detained in New Orleans where they had been arrested en route to the trial, will be arraigned Tuesday to bring the total set for trial to 192.

Six other riders failed to appear personally as required in Judge Moore's court and their $500 cash bonds each were declared forfeited. An appeal is planned.

William M. Kunstler, New York attorney for the rider-sponsoring Congress of Racial Equality, withdrew a formal petition challenging constitutionality of the statutes with the understanding it will be refiled when the trials begin. He also withdrew temporarily a motion for a change of venue on grounds the defendants can not receive a fair trial in Hinds County with an agreement with Chief Prosecutor Jack Travis that the issue will be argued Aug. 22.

189 Riders Appeal Jackson Conviction

The New York Times

By RICHARD H. PARKE

Special to The New York Times.

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 14—One hundred and eighty-nine Freedom Riders appeared in the Hinds County Court today to appeal their convictions for breach of the peace.

They came by bus, train and plane from all parts of the country. All had been arrested in recent weeks for challenging racial barriers here. They had been released in $500 bond each, most of them after having served a portion of their sentences.

Judge Russel Moore began the proceedings in the heavily guarded court house by setting next Tuesday for the opening of arguments.

He announced, with the consent of attorneys for both sides, that he would dispose of the appeals on what amounted to virtually a day-to-day basis. He said he would hear two cases a day, with some exceptions, until a final session, now scheduled for Jan. 18, 1962.

The first week, beginning Tuesday, should, in the opinion of court observers, set the pattern for the defense arguments, and could result in a curtailment of the long schedule.

Only four defendants are to appear next week. Two, Henry Thomas, 19 years old, a Howard University student, and Julie Aaron, 20, of New Orleans, will appear on Tuesday. Joseph Carter, 22, of 98 Liberty Avenue, Brooklyn, and John Robert Lewis, 21, of Troy, Ala., are scheduled to appear Thursday. All are Negroes.

The two-a-day schedule prevails generally thereafter, except for time out to enable the defense to appear in Federal Court here. The cases of five of the Freedom Riders have been transferred there by petition.

William M. Kunstler, specia counsel for the Congress of Racial Equality, said the defense would cite the Federal Judiciary Act, which provides that civil rights cases may come under Federal jurisdiction. The Defense must prove, however, that testing segregation facilities involves a question of civil rights.

The appeal hearings beginning here inext wek will take the form of trials, since the municipal court in which the defendants were convicted originally is not a court of record. Thus the cases will be explored from every legal angle.

Defense Maps Line

The defense is understood to be planning to base its arguments on two points of law. One is a Supreme Court decision in a Richmond, Va., case, the other an attack on two Mississippi laws governing breach of the peace.

In the Richmond case, the court last winter overturned the conviction of Bruce Boynton, a Negro law student, for staging a sit-in at a restaurant. Mr. Boynton was arrested under a state breach1of-peace law, but the Supreme Court ruled that the law had been invoked in his case to maintain segregation in interstate travel facilities.

In all, 307 Riders have bee arrested here since May 24. Th total includes two persons wh were arrested here last night fo testing segregation in a bus ter minal. They identified them selves as Pauline Sims, 22, o New York, who is white, anc George Raymond Jr., a New Orleans Negro.

There was no disorder in the courtroom today. The defendants sat quietly until their names were called. They were brought to the courthouse in buses and escorted by the motorcycle police.

HALEY CASE TESTED

Riders Determined To Enter U.S. Court

By JAMES SAGGUS
Associated Press Staff Writer

Mississippi's "Freedom Rider" legal cases seem destined for the federal courts if their attorneys can push their strategy to success.

Questions of federal law have been raised in several rider and related cases and riders attorneys have hinted they expect to see all of the cases before the Supreme Court eventually.

In his unsuccessful attempt to gain the freedom of rider official Richard Haley in Hinds County Court Friday, attorney William Kunstler of New York submitted a written memorandum to support his case. It went into several federal law questions that could be raised in other cases.

Haley, who was in Jackson to coordinate rides, was arrested on breach of peace charges for picketing a southern governors meeting. The charge—failure to move as ordered by an officer—was the same as that lodged against Freedom Riders.

Kunstler said the prosecution witness against Haley, Police Capt. J. L. Ray, testified "he saw no violence, heard no remarks or saw no signs that a breach of the peace had occurred."

Ray testified merely that he heard murmurs from the 15 onlookers and that their faces looked angry, Kunstler said. He charged arrests under such circumstances put freedoms "in the hands of a police chief" because he could arrest on ground something might happen.

Many of the Freedom Rider arrests have occurred with fewer onlookers and no display of emotion.

The state could be expected to counter in federal court along same lines it met Kunstler's arguments in county court— that under conditions existing "a breach of peace could have resulted."

The Freedom Rides to Jackson began after they had met violence in Alabama and the first riders received heavy escorts. Some officials say privately that things might have been different had not the escort been provided.

Kunstler said after losing his county court fight that he would appeal to the federal courts if necessary, either on Haley's conviction or on the denial of the writ Friday.

In arguing before Judge Russel Moore in county court, Kunstler said he felt that the Haley case would be overturned in federal court—that he felt it had less chance to stand up before the Supreme Court than the rider cases would have.

The statement came only one day after Kunstler filed proceedings which transferred the cases of five riders to federal district court under the 1948 Civil Rights Act. The filing automatically placed the cases in federal court and the state will make its effort to get them back in a hearing before U.S. Dist. Judge Harold Cox next Saturday.

If Cox rules the cases should remain in federal court, all other rider cases may follow the same route.

In the petition to transfer the cases, Kunstler, an American Civil Liberties Union lawyer, charged their arrests were "blatant attempts by the state to enforce its outright segregation statutes."

Kunstler said in his arguments for Haley's release that Chief Justice Harvey McGehee of the State Supreme Court said in a St. Louis talk Aug. 6 that state courts "are. . .favorable to maintaining segregation."

In seeking the freedom of rider Elizabeth Wyckoff of New York in a federal habeas corpus hearing recently, Kunstler argued the attitude of state courts on segregation made appeals through them usless.

The federal court turned Miss Wyckoff down, but on grounds it did not have the power to issue such an order.

Almost all of the riders now free on appeal bonds will return to Jackson this weekend preliminary to opening the new term of county court, which will hear their appeals. The first of their trails will begin a week later.

The procedure will be simpler in federal court when and if federal courts get jurisdiction. All cases would probably be considered together.

But the appeal procedure and one by one trials in state courts could delay matters a long time if the trials themselves are the basis for the appeal to the federal courts.

JACKSON-FREEDOM RIDERS

FREEDOM RIDERS STAGE 2ND INVASION

BY FRANK HUNT

JACKSON, Miss. — The lid is clamped tight on Jackson, Miss. and even though officials predict that no violence will greet the arrival of some 187 Freedom Riders, there is an air of expectancy about the town.

Both police officials and CORE are keenly aware of the explosive situation involved in the presence of the young civil rights fighters in this bastion of segregation and both camps are taking precautions to avoid possible incidents.

Hinds County Sheriff J. R. Gilfoy said there would be an "adequate number" of men on hand to discourage troublemakers.

"We don't expect any trouble. So far none of those people has received a scratch here. We're going to keep it that way."

"AN ADEQUATE number" promises to be Gilfoy's full corps of 75 deputies plus a large portion of M. B. Pierce's (chief of detectives) men.

Gilfoy said the men would be "properly deployed" and there would be no loitering in the courthouse area Monday, or in the area of the Masonic Temple, where the Riders held their mass meeting Sunday.

No spectators are to be allowed in the courtroom during the trial, with exception of certain corps officials.

THE FREEDOM Riders were converging on the city in answer to the order that they must be present for the opening of the term of court during which their cases will be heard.

Actually, it will be impossible for all the cases to be heard on Monday. Attorneys for the Riders went before Circuit Judge Leon Hendrick last week asking that all of the Riders not be required to come at the beginning of the term but should only be required to be present when their trials are actually scheduled.

Judge Hendrick refused to grant the request. His refusal is being appealed to the state supreme court which is currently in summer recess.

In making their plea, the Riders' attorneys were seeking to have Judge Hendrick either waive or modify the court rule requiring all defendants to be present at the beginning of the court term.

Pleading for the Riders were William Kunstler and Carl Rachin of New York; opposing them were Jack Travis and Bob Nichols, city prosecutors.

The trials, two per day, beginning Aug. 21, are expected to last from 18 to 20 weeks.

IN A SMALL secnnd floor office at 1114 Lynch St., Thomas Gaither sat behind a crowded desk, shirtsleeved, and phone to ear. The office was the headquarters of the Jackson Non - Violent Movement, an offspring of the Freedom Riders assault on the city.

Mr. Gaither, a CORE field secretary, said CORE is doing its best to avoid friction.

"The police will hold sternly to their right to keep us from using first-class facilities as their way of alleviating trouble," he said.

He added that Riders have been advised to keep off the streets as much as possible and to fraternize only in the privacy of local homes rather than public places.

Police broke up an integrated group of Riders eating in a Lynch St. restaurant whose patrons are predominantly colored, and one Rider was threatened with police dogs for posting a placard announcing the rally on a telephone pole Saturday afternoon.

RIDERS ARE being housed at Tougaloo College, about eight miles from Jackson, and at Campbell College, on Lynch St., about 10 blocks from the courthouse. Private homes are also being used.

Although they were not due in until Sunday, Riders began arriving early Saturday morning. About midnight Saturday, about 25 Riders had arrived.

Mr. Gaither praised the "cooperation of the Jackson community." The massive task of housing Riders has largely been facilitated by the new organization, Womanpower Unlimited.

Appeal Convictions

Freedom Riders Gathering

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)— Scores of "Freedom Riders" renewed acquaintances in the sweltering heat of Mississippi's capital Sunday as they flocked here to appeal convictions for crossing color lines.

Mon. 8-14-61

Over 100 of 187 riders due here had arrived by bus, plane, train and auto. All have posted $500 bond and are to start appeals of their breach of peace convictions Monday.

Raleigh N.C.

The riders were to meet with their attorneys to go over procedural matters and attend a rally Sunday night in a Negro Masonic temple.

At Negro School.

About 100 riders—Negro and white—were quartered in Tougaloo Southern Christian College, a Negro school just north of Jackson. Others stayed in private homes.

Lunching at a campus grill, girls wore pedal pushers and many went barefooted in the oppressive 90-degree heat.

One rider strummed a guitar and they sang Freedom Rider songs as they greeted returning travelers who had unsuccessfully tried to integrate transportation terminals.

"We don't have any expectations," one told a newsman. "We're here to find out what's going to happen."

The rides started here May 24. Since then, 293 travelers have been convicted of breach of peace charges.

Serving Time.

A little over 100 are serving sentences. The remainder posted appeal bonds and gained their freedom. These are the riders who returned this weekend to start their appeals.

James Farmer, 41, Negro National director of the Congress of Racial Equality, earlier charged that a requirement that the riders must appear in person for the setting of trial dates amounted to an economic reprisal against CORE.

Most of the riders will have to make another trip for their actual trial dates.

The Hinds County sheriff's office and Jackson police said they were taking extra precautions to see there were no outbreaks of violence. There has been no violence in Jackson.

Protest Riders Hold 'Reunion'

P. 13

Mass Court Appearance Is Scheduled Today In Jackson

Mon. 8-14-61

By United Press International

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 13. — About 170-so-called "Freedom Riders" arrived by bus, train and plane from throughout the nation Sunday and held a "reunion" prior to their mass appearance Monday in court.

All but a few of the 187 riders free under bond will be on hand for a hearing at 2 p.m. Monday in the Hinds County Courthouse. They had been jailed for breach of the peace for making protest rides here but got out on $500 bonds. Failure to appear Monday would mean forfeiture of the bonds.

The riders came here in orderly fashion. Police stood by in case they repeated integration attempts at transportation facilities but none occurred.

Meeting Chapel

The integrationists met at mid-afternoon in the chapel of Tougaloo Christian College for Negroes just north of here. It was a closed session and afterwards James Farmer, national director of the Congress of Racial Equality, said the group had a "first reunion, renewed acquaintances and decided on the purposes of our being here."

"We discussed the question of decorum, morale and behavior," said Farmer. "We do not seek to repeat our arrests and we hope such does not occur while we are here but we are prepared to face any eventuality with dignity."

Farmer said it had been estimated that the trips to Jackson for the mass court appearance would cost C.O.R.E. as much as $45,000, "but we were not under any illusions that freedom would come cheaply."

He said attorneys briefed them on how to act when they appear in court Monday. Before the meeting began the group sang sit-in songs published by C.O.R.E. and distributed on the campus.

C.O.R.E. held a rally for the protest riders Sunday night in a Negro meeting hall on Lynch Street.

Only about a dozen of the 187 riders will apparently miss the court date Monday. Five have had their cases transferred to Federal court and apparently will not be required to be on hand.

Three of the missing were detained by police in New Orleans. The three — all-white — were charged with vagrancy, simple escape, simple battery and aggravated battery.

In Negro's Home

They were staying in a Negro home in New Orleans awaiting a Sunday morning train to Jackson when the arrests were made. Police said they had no visible means of support.

The three — George Blevins, 24, Los Angeles; John Dolan, 20, Berkley, Calif., and Frank Nelson, 25, New York—were taken in a police paddy wagon to police headquarters for fingerprinting and mug shots.

In the wagon, they got into a fracas with another prisoner, police said.

170 'Riders' Into Court

Jackson Daily News

More than 170 "freedom riders," cheered on by hymn-singing sympathizers, appear in Hinds County court here this afternoon for appeals of their convictions in Jackson city court.

"The "riders" poured into Jackson from across the nation yesterday to appear in county court at 3 p.m. today.

Mon. 8-14-61

All have been convicted for breach of the peace in Jackson after refusing police orders to move on in public transportation facilities.

They are part of the 300 "freedom riders" who have come to Jackson since May 24.

County Judge Russell Moore convenes court at 2 p. m. and has required all "riders" who posted bonds after convictions to appear or forfeit their $500 bonds.

Officials of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE), which sponsors the rides, said more "riders" were expected today.

Set for call in county court were 182 cases in which "riders" were arrested.

Jackson, Miss.

Some have elected to serve their sentences rather than post bond and these are in the Hinds County jail or at Parchman State Penitentiary.

Sentences range from $200 fines and suspended two month jail sentences to $200 fines and jail sentences of four months.

POLICE ALERT

City police, who have handled the "freedom rider" attacks on segregation of transportation facilities without incident, were determined to maintain that record today.

Officers announced a two-block area would be blocked off around the courthouse before the trials and promised a quick trip in the pady wagon for any demonstrators.

The "riders" came back to Jackson yesterday and held a mass rally last night without incident.

They arrived just as they did when they came to test segregation policies—in public transportation facilities.

But the "riders" were careful this time to obey all laws and signs.

They waited outside at the Illinois Railroad and Greyhound and Trailways Bus terminals to be picked up by automobiles.

All were arrested previously when they entered the waiting rooms.

P. 6

SHUN TROUBLE

The "riders" attended a "planning session" at Tougaloo Christian College yesterday afternoon and received instructions to stay clear of additional arrests.

More than 1,000 persons attended a "freedom rally" called last night to hail the "riders."

Police stood guard at the racially mixed meeting but there was no disturbance.

The audience clapped, sang and shouted as officials of CORE, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference spoke.

RIDES 'REVIVED'

James Farmer, national director of CORE and himself a convicted "freedom rider," told the crowd that the movement had almost "run out of steam" but Mississippi officials saved it by demanding that the "riders" appear together in court.

"The 'freedom rides' now must continue no matter how much it costs," he said.

Farmer estimated that CORE spent $45,000 returning the "riders" to Jackson for appeals of their convictions.

Another convicted "rider," Negro minister Wyatt Tee Walker of Montgomery, Ala., said Negroes used to sing "Old Black Joe" but now sing:

"I'm coming, I'm coming.
"And my head ain't bending low.
"I'm coming, I'm coming,
"I'm America's new Black Joe."

Most of the "riders" were lodged at Tougaloo last night although several, both Negro and white, spent the night at homes of Negroes in Jackson.

They will have to return to Jackson to face trials.

After the docket is set today Judge Moore has said trials will be held two each day, five days per week beginning next week.

FIVE GIVE UP

Five "freedom riders" won't be here. They have filed petitions to remove their cases to federal court.

8-14-61

Meanwhile, two "freedom riders" were arrested here yesterday but this was their first trip to Jackson.

Jailed were Pauline Simes, 22, a white New York girl, and Negro George Raymond Jr., 18, of New Orleans.

They were arrested in the white waiting room of the Trailways terminal.

The Negro youth got off a bus and walked into the waiting room where the girl was waiting for him. They stood together until police arrested them.

Rider Chief Loses Plea For Freedom

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

County Judge Russel Moore denied a request yesterday to order the release of "freedom rider" official Richard Lee Haley and Haley's attorney said the case would be appealed to federal courts if necessary.

Moore held that the order sought by Haley could not be issued because it would "in effect circumvent the accepted procedure of appeal."

Atty. William Kunstler of New York, who represented Haley, said he would appeal the 45-year-old Chicago Negro's case to the U. S. Supreme Court if necessary. He said he had not decided whether to appeal the conviction or Judge Moore's action.

Haley, an oficial of the Congress of Racial Equality which sponsored freedom rides, was arrested July 19 as he picketed a Jackson hotel, where a group of Dixie governors met to discuss segregation.

He was charged with a breach of the peace—failing to move as ordered by an officer. He received a $200 fine and 4 months in jail.

Kunstler charged testimony at the City Court trial showed 15 persons watched the picketing and there were murmurs. But, he said there was nothing to show violence was impending.

"If this is to be standard," he said, "freedom of speech means absolutely nothing."

Kunstler also said the removal of Haley to the state penintentiary violated the state constitution, which provided for those convicted in misdemeanors to serve their time in county jails or penal farms.

Tom Watkins, one of three attorneys for the city handling the case, said the court order—a writ of habeas corpus—could not be used where an appeal of the conviction and sentence was available. He said Haley had not appealed.

Watkins also quoted several court cases supporting his argument that a breach of the peace could occur without physical violence taking place.

Haley, he said, carried signs "insulting and libelous" to the governors and "under the circumstances a breach of the peace could have resulted."

Haley was in Jackson coordinating the freedom rides.

Watkins also held that the law premitted the transfer of prisoners in cases of necessity. Officers said earlier that the riders were tansferred from the Hinds county jail because of cowded conditions and were placed in the maximum security unit at the state penitentiary because other prisoners might harm them.

Rider Appeal Centers On Breach Statutes

Attorneys for 187 convicted Freedom Riders in Jackson, Miss., will base their arguments for appeal of the breach of the peace convictions today on an attackon the breach of the peace statutesthemselves.

Some 300 Riders have been arrested under those statutes in Jackson since May 24.

The attorneys will invoke a U. S. Supreme Court decision in a Richmond, Va., case to the effect that breach of the peace statutes were inappropriately applied to the maintenance of segregation in interstate travel.

Also in Jackson, U. S. Supreme Judge Sidney Mize granted another delay in a Negro suit to desegregate the University of Mississippi.

He left open the question of whether the suit, brought early in the summer, applies to the regular school year or only to the summer school term which has already ended. He will hear arguments on this question when the case resumes today.

Racial developments elsewhere in the Nation include:

In rural St. Helena Parish, La., public schools will open today o na segregated basis. A court order to desegregate the schools is being held up while the Federal Fifth District Court called on the attorneys general of all 50 states to submit briefs on the question of state termination of public education. The predominantly white voters of the predominantly Negro county voted to close the schools rather than desegregate them.

The Alabama Senate gave swift approval Saturday to a House-passed bill prohibiting "freedom rides" in the State. The statute establishes up to $300 in fines and six months in jail for anyone who announces and then carries out a challenge to Alabama's racial barriers.

In Fort Lauderdale, Fla., the City Commission has filed suit for an injunction barring the NAACP "and others" from organizing wade-ins at the city's public beach.

Fort Lauderdale's police chief spoke in favor of the action and said police efforts to preserve the peace would be aided if agitators were kept from the beach.

St. Louis swimming pool and a restaurant were ordered by the St. Louis Council on Human Relations to end discrimination against Negroes. Refusal or failure to comply could result in fines up to $500.

The International Association of Milk and Food Sanitarians will hold its convention in Des Moines, Iowa, this week after it ran into segregation problems twice in Georgia. The meeting, originally scheduled for Jerkyl Island, Ga., was switched to Savannah, Ga., "to avoid trouble." It switched again when it ran into "trouble."

Two Negro families, attempting to move into a predominantly white Bloomsfield, N. J., house, have run into opposition. One woman has received death threats and a cross has been burned on the property. One of the men is a school teacher in Orange, N. J., and the other is an insurance underwriter.

APPEAL HEARINGS START MONDAY

Over 180 riders who posted $500 appeal bonds after unsuccessful desegregation attempts of transportation facilities were expected in Jackson by Sunday night.

A giant Freedom Rider rally will be held at 7:30 p.m. Sunday in the Negro Masonic Temple in Jackson under the sponsorship of the Jackson Nonviolent Movement. Sun. 8-13-61

The Hinds County Sheriff's Office and Jackson police prepared to prevent any outbreak of violence while the integrated group is in the city.

"We are taking extra precaution to see that proceedings are completed in an orderly manner," said Sheriff J. R. Gilfoy. "No loitering or congregating will be allowed around the courthouse Monday. No one will be allowed inside the courtroom except the defendants, their counsel, the prosecutors, the judge and the press.

Gilfoy said the citizens of Hinds County "have done a great job so far in letting the law take its course. I will be grateful if you will stay away."

Chief of Detectives M. B. Pierce said "we will have adequate policemen on hand to assist the sheriff at the courthouse and to see that if any laws are broken, whether it be by freedom riders or not, the persons involved will be arrested."

NEWSMAN SLUGGED

Earlier in New York, a white youth knocked down a newspaperman and a staff member of the Congress of Racial Equality just after 31 riders left by bus for Washington, D.C., on the way to Jackson.

The assailant, who escaped with a white companion, struck William Doolittle, a reporter for the New York Post, and Marvin Rich, 31, community relations director of CORE. Both were taken to a hospital for treatment.

The New York bus, was headed by James Farmer, 41-year-old Negro, CORE's national director. The bus was to pick up six more riders in Washington.

Riders began arriving in Jackson Saturday individually and in small groups, but the largest delegation was expected at 10:10 a.m. Sunday on the "City of New Orleans" train. New Orleans was one of the major gathering points for riders.

Two chartered buses carrying riders were scheduled to leave Nashville at 9 p.m. Saturday night.

John Lewis, acting chairman of the Nashville student No-Violent Movement, said "we have the entire Minnesota delegation and some from Chicago and Cincinnati."

The Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy said only three riders would leave from Montgomery for Jackson. They went to Mobile Saturday afternoon and were expected to arrive in Jackson at 4 p.m. Sunday.

Freedom Riders will meet with their lawyers Sunday afternoon and attend the rally that night.

Some of the riders will be housed at Tougaloo Southern Christian (Negro) College just north of Jackson and others in private homes.

Farmer charged it was an "economic reprisal" against CORE for Mississippi officials to require the defendants to appear in person for the setting of trial dates. It will require another trip for most of the riders to attend their actual trial.

Meanwhile, the Justice Department revised the proposed regulations it is asking the Interstate Commerce Commission to adopt to ban segregation in interstate bus transportation.

Under the revision, the department suggested that the sign to be displayed on buses say that "seating aboard this vehicle is without regard to race, color, creed or national origin."

The department said the original language might mislead a passenger to believe that he has an absolute right to any seat at any time regardless of his personal comportment or the convenience of other passengers.

Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy petitioned the ICC last May 29 to issue the regulations. Oral argument on the petition is set for Aug. 15.

Gov. Ross Barnett aid yesterday he is confident Jackson police officers can handle an invasion of up to 200 "freedom riders" scheduled to return to the city next Monday. Wed. 8-9-61

There will be no change in the successful method of handling "riders" employed by the state and city the past two months, he said. Jackson Miss

As many as 200 could return Monday when appeals of their city court convictions for breach of the peace are called in Hinds County court.

Officials of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE), the organization which sponsors the "freedom rides," has indicated some of those returning may test local segregation laws again.

In connection with Monday's court activity, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has asked U. S. Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy to send federal marshals into Jackson to "protect" the returning "riders."

Gov. Barnett said he has had no word from Kennedy about that request.

Kennedy declined to send federal marshals into Mississippi early in the "freedom rider" campaign in May when state and city officials assured him the situation could be handled by local officers.

"We don't need any federal marshals. We don't want any federal marshals," the governor said.

"We will handle "freedom riders" who violate local laws in the usual manner."

The "usual manner" has been for city police officers to order the "riders" to move out of transportation terminals and place them under arrest for breach of the peace when they refuse.

Although National Guard personnel accompanied the first group of "riders" into Jackson there has been no threats of violence and city police since that time have handled them in routine fashion.

FREEDOM RIDERS-JACKSON
MR. LEON DANIEL HORNE (FREE RIDE FROM CHICAGO TO MISSISSIPPI (HOME)

Negro Says C.O.R.E. Junket Was Free Ride Home To Him

To Commercial Appeal
P. 34
Wed. June 14, 1961

By United Press International

JACKSON, Miss., June 13.—A jailed Negro said Tuesday he took a bus ride from Chicago with the so-called "freedom riders" simply to get a free ride back to Mississippi.

"To those others it might have been a freedom ride, but to me it was just a way to come home," Leon Daniel Horne, 24, told newsmen.

Horne could draw a four-month jail term for breaching the peace, said, "I'd rather be in jail here than free in Chicago."

Horne, who first told officers he was from Chicago, admitted that he is from the Jackson area after he was confronted with a bill he owed here.

Authorities arranged a news conference for him at the police station.

Stranded In City

Horne said he went to Chicago about two weeks ago after losing a seasonal job in a Florida restaurant, but could not find a job there. "I was stranded, and up there they'll let you lay on the sidewalk and die. I knew if I could get back home, everything would be all right. But I didn't have any money to make the trip."

He said he met a representative of the Congress on Racial Equality in Chicago last week and agreed to take a "protest ride" to Jackson. He did not tell C.O.R.E. he was from Mississippi, Horne said.

Horne, wearing a neat sport shirt, criticized the riders in his news conference, attended by 10 reporters and a few officers. "They are a radical group," he said.

Horne said that Rev. Martin Luther King, a Negro integration leader, is "a shrewd fellow—if he wasn't, he wouldn't be making as much money as he is off the Negro."

Larger Collections

He said racial incidents in the South make it possible for integration forces to take up larger collections in the North, "then King can buy a new pair of shoes and Mrs. King can buy a new dress."

Chuckling over his free ride home, Horne said, "C. O. R. E. is making a fool out of some Negroes; why not turn this thing around?"

He said C. O. R. E. gave him $20 for a bus ticket to Nashville and there gave him $15 more to come to Jackson. He was arrested here Saturday with five other riders in a "white only" waiting room.

One of his companions, he said, told him she had been associated with the Communist Party. He said riders were "demoralized characters." He said, "they say God is on their side, but He's not."

Some of them, he said, are "gradually changing their attitude" in jail. "They don't think it's such a picnic anymore."

Horne said he was glad Mississippi Neroes had not entered the "rider" movement. "He knows his economy lies in you-all's hands," he told the white newsmen.

Minnesota Officials Begin Probe Of 'Rider' Treatment

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Two Minnesota officials launched an investigation Thursday into Mississippi's treatment of "Freedom Riders" arrested in efforts to desegregate transportation terminals here.

Representing Minnesota Gov. Elmer Andersen in the firsthand check were Mrs. Wright Brooks, chairman of the Minnesota Human Rights Commission, and Asst. Atty. Gen. John Casey Jr.

The two conferred with Gov. Ross Barnett and went on a guided tour of Jackson jails and schools before leaving for the state penitentiary at Parchman, where most of the convicted riders are held.

The Minnesota study began as Federal District Judge Sidney Mize turned down a bid by convicted white rider Elizabeth Wyckoff, 45-year-old New York writer, to appeal his ruling last week, denying her effort to get into federal court. He said she must exhaust state remedies first.

Mayor Allen Thompson an

MORE ARRESTED

Police arrested six Jackson Negro riders in the white waiting room of the Illinois Central Railroad terminal as they sought to buy tickets to Canton, 25 miles to the north. They brought to 184 the number arrested since the riders reached Jackson May 24.

The Justice Department filed suits here seeking federal court orders to halt what it charged was discrimination against Negroes seeking to register to vote in Forrest and Clarke counties. The government charged qualified Negroes were denied registration.

A group of Negro students completed plans for their organizational meeting of the Jackson Student Nonviolent Movement Thursday night, with the Rev. Martin Luther King of Atlanta as speaker.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People suggested to Hinds County officials here that Negroes be included on any grand jury making a study of treatment of riders in the county or at the state penitentiary, where the county supervises those transferred because of crowded conditions here. Circuit Judge Leon Hendrick charged the jury Wednesday with such an inspection.

The Minnesota officials began their inspection tour in Jackson after conferring with Barnett. They maintained silence about their impressions.

Prison Head Denies Report Female 'Riders' Mistreated

PARCHMAN, Miss. (AP) – State Prison Supt. Fred Jones Sunday denied reports six Minnesota women "Riders" were being mistreated but added he's "not going to turn the prison into a country club."

Jones said the six were being treated "like any other prisoners that come here."

Minnesota Attorney General Walter F. Mondale Saturday night asked the Mississippi attorney general to investigate reports the young women were "incarcerated like felons."

Mondale, in his wire, said he was told the women were not allowed visitors and that their privacy was invaded because they are under constant supervision of male prison guards.

The women riders were arrested June 11 at a Negro lunch counter in a Jackson bus depot. All six are white.

Sentenced to four months on charges of breach of the peace, they were transferred to the state prison after masses of riders poured into the Jackson jails.

Jones, in a telephone interview, said the women are not allowed visitors for security reasons and in keeping wit the rules of the maximum security unit.

Jones said the prison did not have enough spare employes to supervise visits for the riders. Every visitor has to be screened for contrabrand articles, he said.

9 RELIGIOUS RIDERS CONVICTED

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — City Judge James Spencer Friday convicted nine religious leaders and four "Freedom Riders" for breach of peace in their attempts to desegregate an airport terminal and a bus station.

He sentenced all 13 to $200 fine and 4 months in jail, the maximum sentence.

The four riders offered no testimony, according to an agreement between their attorney and the city attorney that their trial was a continuation of earlier riders trials that convicted 243 others.

Rabbi Allan Levine of Bradford, Pa., one of the religious leaders arrested at the airport, testified that after seeing a group of fellow ministers off on an airplane Thursday night, he and eight other ministers tried to get coffee in the airport cafe.

He said Police Capt. J. L. Ray stopped them short of the door, ordered them to move out of the terminal and arrested them when they refused.

Defense Atty. Jack Young asked Levine if he intended to breach the peace and Levine answered: "I don't appreciate or like belligerence of any sort."

He said he was in Jackson to attend a meeting of religious leaders discussing racial problems in the north and South.

Before the meeting broke up Thursday, a spokesman for the group said some of the ministers planned to act individually and test the state segregation laws at the transportation terminals.

Such testing landed the 243 riders in jail.

Didn't Mean Suicide Try 'Rider' Says

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Elmer Brown, a Negro "Freedom Rider" who tried to hang himself in Hinds County Jail the day before he was freed on bond, Friday described the attempt as a despair of the moment.

"I didn't mean it," he told the Associated Press in a telephone interview set up by the ride-sponsoring Congress of Racial Equality (CORE).

"It was an act to try to relieve pressure, or something."

Brown, 20, a University of Akron, Ohio, student, was sentenced to $200 fine and four months in jail for breach of peace in desegregating a Trailways bus station July 7.

LET HIM DOWN

Sheriff J. R. Gilfoy said Brown tried to hang himself Thursday with his belt but he was cut down by jailers before he could hurt himself.

Earlier Thursday, Brown accused CORE of letting him down when he didn't get the $500 bond money he had requested.

CORE officials said they had been working on the bond but that it took time to process.

Brown said in the interview he was under pressure of the sheriff during a press conference when he told newsmen CORE had let him down.

'I was sort of threatened with other charges if I didn't give in to what he (Gilfoy) was saying," Brown said.

'FUNNY SPOTS'

The other charges to which he referred apparently were implications that he had taken narcotics. Gilfoy said he found 17 pills in Brown's Bible case and was having them analyzed.

Gilfoy said he had small needle spots on his arm.

"I never used narcotics," Brown said. "I never will. But I have needle spots on my arm and I don't know how they got there. I don't know when this occurred."

Is Mississippi Handling Freedom Riders With Care?

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is a frank, revealing article which The Courier has pieced together, based on evidence. It shows that even vicious, ignorant, segregation-steeped Mississippi "can be different" when it serves its evil purpose so to do!

JACKSON, Miss.—Those Freedom Riders . . . Negro and white . . . who have been jailed in Mississippi, are being given the VIP treatment.

By this, we don't mean that Mississippi has suddenly changed its segregationist beliefs. Far from it!

But with the eyes of the entire country . . . and other countries . . . on her, she is showing a restrained courtesy to people for whom she has nothing but utter contempt.

Mississippi believes in separation of races. It's a belief based on the ignorance of its citizens . . . an ignorance which gives the state the lowest I. Q. rating in the nation.

But Mississippi saw what happened in Alabama!

Six . . . seven weeks ago, when "Freedom Riders" served notice that they would invade Mississippi, stronghold of monolithic segregation, they figured to get smart.

Result is that these things have happened:

Police officers have been warned against using force and violence in making arrests.

Freedom Riders are treated as "special guests" who must be looked upon as violators of the law, but who are to be handled with kid gloves.

Mississippi is determined to protect the "image" of a tourist heaven for the state . . . an "image" she has been selling with some success.

Mississippi is hoping that the Freedom Riders just go away . . . because the cost is beginning to be felt. Promised reduction in city taxes on autos withdrawn because of drain on city cash.

Latest rumor . . . Freedom Rider battalions movement was hatched in Cuba early this year, with mine Soviet agents on hand.

THE JAILS? Theye're not comparable to the big hotel chains. In fact, they're among the worst in nation. But those where "Freedom Riders" are guests, are better than average in these parts.

FOOD? It's best at City Jail, where riders are first taken after being arrested . . . and held until convicted.' This jail sits atop the new municipal court building here.

When the riders are moved across the street to the Hinds County Jail, things get roughter. There the Sheriff and his deputies take over. Food isn't as good. The County Jail doesn't have adequate facilities to take care of the complete "guest list."

Facilities for women are totally inadequate, with 20 white women crowded into a cell that had four permanent bunks.

Even less adequate (you know it, too) are accommodations for Negro "guests." There's one toilet to serve 20 persons, and it won't work part of the time.

Privacy for men or women is impossible.

An exhaust fan stirs up the breeze, but when the temperature hits 90 degrees outside . . . the cells become veritable sweat-boxes.

Freedom Riders can work out their fines in County Jail at $3 per day. But they've stopped sending them to the county work farm. Reason for this is the brutal treatment which the work farm guards accord any person whose skin is black.

The 77 Riders now at Parchman (State Penitentiary) are housed in the section where maximum security is practiced.

This is the part of the prison which houses the lethal gas chamber and death row, used only for the most vicious and hardened criminals.

The only reading material is the Bible.

They can write two letters . . . and receive two letters . . . weekly.

The cells are stark . . . bare!

Plumbing is minimal . . . They say . . . because deathly weapons might be fashioned.

Only two prisoners to each cell.

Court Postpones Segregation Suit

Three Federal Judges Allow NAACP Time To Itemize Charges In Jackson

By KENNETH TOLER

From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 7.—A three-judge Federal Court Monday postponed until Sept. 25 a suit challenging segregation in transportation terminals in order to give the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People time to pinpoint certain allegations of discrimination charged against Mississippi officials.

The case arose following the arrests of more than 300 self-styled "Freedom Riders" in Jackson for breach of the peace when they entered segregated facilities. It is designed to stop further use of the statute in enforcing segregation under state statutes.

The delay was ordered by the court after counsel for the state and City of Jackson contended the accusations needed clarification in order to properly defend the issues.

Broad Scope

Circuit Judge Richard T. Rives of Montgomery, Ala., who presided, said the scope of the case is so broad that it necessitates amendments in some of the allegations filed by the NAACP on behalf of three Jackson Negroes charging violations of Federal laws against segregation in bus, railroad and airport terminals.

Sitting with Judge Rives were Dist. Judge Claude Clayton of Tupelo and Dist. Judge S. C. Mize of Gulfport. The action was ananimous, in contrast to a delay granted July 10 when Chief Judge Tuttle of the Circuit Court of Appeals opposed such action based on illness of the state's chief counsel in civil rights cases. Judge Tuttle later recused himself and designated Judge Rives to sit with the two district judges.

In announcing postponement, which was ordered after counsel for the NAACY agreed to amend the suit to clarify accusations against the Illinois Central Railroad and the Jackson city lines, Judge Rives said when the case resumes it will be carried to a conclusion.

The court took under study two state motions, one for dismissal of the suit and the other for dissolution of the three-judge court on grounds that the issues involved should first be tried in the state courts or by a single district Federal judge.

Motions Overruled

Motions by the state to include all common carriers, instead of singling out the Illinois Central Railroad and the Trailways and Greyhound bus lines, and to require the NAACP to provide more definits statements as to conspiracy of the officials, were overruled by the court.

Tom Watkins, chief of the defense counsel, in asking for dissolution of the three-judge court, said the suit seeks to involve state statutes on breach of the peace in its challenge of the constitutionality of state laws on segregation in transportation facilities.

"The gist of the controversy is not the constitutionality of the segregation statutes bu the enforcement of the breach of the peace law," Mr. Watkins said. "For that reason, it is not a case for a three-judge court."

He was joined in that position by Asst. Atty. Gen. Ed Cates.

Mrs. Constance Baker Motley, NAACP attorney of New York, said the suit seeks a temporary injunction against enforcement of several segregation statutes on the basis of policy, custom and usage of discrimination.

U. S. Backs NAACP

She said the breach of the peace statutes, under which the self-styled "freedom riders" have been arrested, is not attacked as such but is referred to in relation to the use of that law in enforcing segregation.

She asked that the court decide the issue as speedily as possible. She opposed both delays since she said the temporary injunction should be heard without going into the merits which would be done when the issue of a permanent injunction is considered.

The Federal Department of Justice entered the case on the side of the NAACP. Robert Owens of the Washington staff was in the court room.

Blind Mixer Tries Orleans Train Depot

A white blind woman who has failed in two desegregation attempts here charged today that Jackson police officers discriminated against her by refusing to place her under arrest.

Mrs. Norma Wagner, 33, of Rochester, N. Y., sat in Negro waiting room of the Trailways bus terminal for five hours Saturday and ate at the Negro lunch counter but officers ignored her.

She sat with Earl C. Bohannon Jr., 21-year-old Chicago Negro. Police ignored both.

Late yesterday Mrs. Wagner and her Negro male companion left Jackson for New Orleans where they announced they would attempt to desegregate the Union railroad terminal.

Mrs. Wagner declared from the Jackson Negro waiting room Saturday that "we plan to sit here until we get arrested."

She said she felt police discriminated against her by not arresting her just because of her handicap.

Police said the pair were not arrested Saturday because there was no violation of the law since no police officer ordered them to move.

The 300 "freedom riders" who have been arrested in Jackson have been charged with a breach of the peace after refusing to move on under police orders.

If the pair Saturday had been ordered to move on and refused, an officer said, they would have been arrested.

Saturday's attempt was the second time Mrs. Wagner has sought unsuccessfully to get arrested in Jackson.

On July 29 she arrived with several other "freedom riders" at the Trailways terminal.

Police removed her from the Negro waiting room and made some arrests but would not arrest her.

Three Judges Open Mixing Case Today

Segregation in Mississippi's public transportation facilities was put to the test again today but a batch of preliminary motions was expected to slow the federal court action to a snail's pace.

A three-judge federal court reopened the case this morning in which the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People seeks to enjoin city and state officials from enforcing segregation in bus, rail and air facilities.

Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson, the City of Jackson, Cicero's Restaurant at the Jackson airport and the Illinois Central Railroad, Trailways, Greyhound and City Bus Lines are named as defendants.

The suit opened July 10 but was delayed when the state asked for additional time on grounds Asst. Atty. Gen. Dugas Shands, who heads the state's defense team in civil rights matters, was ill.

Shands was expected to appear in court today although Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson has retained another assistant, Charles Clark of Jackson, to assist in civil rights matters.

The federal government entered the suit on the July 10 opening date, filing a brief in which it claimed the city and state are enforcing segregation with breach of the peace laws.

The state objected to the filing of the brief but the three-judge court overruled the objection.

The state was expected to offer several preliminary motions today and the city has others to offer once the state has completed its motions.

District Judge Sidney Mize of Gulfport and Claude Clayton of Tupelo agreed July 10 to the continuance but Circuit Judge Elbert Tuttle of Atlanta objected.

Tuttle has since withdrawn from the case and named to replace him Circuit Judge Richard T. Rives of Montgomery, Ala.

German Is Freed After Court Hears His Explanation

By The Associated Press

JACKSON, Miss., July 31.—City Judge James Spencer Monday convicted 22 so-called "Freedom Riders" of beach of peace in desegregation attempts and released a German magazine photographer as innocent of the same charge because he became confused.

"This court does not intend to use the forces of law to prevent anyone in good faith from writing a story," Judge Spencer said.

He released Hilmar Ehrenfried Pabel, 50, of Munich, Germany, photographer for Quick Magazine in Germany.

The 22 riders were sentenced to $200 fine and four months in jail, the maximum penalty for breach of peace by disobeying a policeman.

Police Capt. J. L. Ray testified he arrested the riders for refusing to obey his order to move out of the terminal, nine in Greyhound bus terminal, and the rest in Illinois Central terminal.

Officer Ray said he arrested the riders because he felt their presence would tend to cause a breach of peace.

He said he arrested Mr. Pabel because Mr. Pabel refused to obey his order to move on and insisted in carrying on a conversation about the order.

Earlier Officer Ray said Mr. Pabel had sought to enter the patrol wagon with the arrested riders and had to be ejected by force.

Mr. Pabel testified that he was acting in his professional capacity and sought only to do his job of reporting the facts objectively.

The police had allowed Mr. Pabel to shoot as many photographs of the arrest as he wanted and did not arrest him until he refused to leave the colored waiting room at the Greyhound bus terminal.

In handing down his decision, Judge Spencer said he was giving Mr. Pabel every benefit of the doubt because he was a foreigner in a strange country with some language barrier to overcome.

He said he assumed Mr. Pabel was working in good faith and was unfamiliar with United States customs and language and "became confused and got in the way."

At the same time, Judge Spencer said, Officer Ray arrested Mr. Pabel in good faith because he gave him every opportunity to keep from getting arrested. Judge Spencer said Officer Ray arrested Mr. Pabel only when he could see no other course of action.

Bonded Riders May Test Anew Mississippi Laws

The Montgomery Advertiser
P. 3B

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) —Some of the 175 convicted and bonded "Freedom Riders" returning to appeal to Hinds County court may challenge anew Mississippi's segregation laws when they begin arriving Aug. 13.

Tom Gaither, field secretary for the ride-sponsoring Congress of Racial Equality, told the Associated Press: "There is every possibility that they will attempt to desegregate facilities because they will be using first class transportation."

Sat 8-5-61

If they do, they probably will be arrested. Jackson officials have promised to arrest anyone refusing to obey police orders to move out of bus, rail and air terminals.

All of the convicted riders were convicted on charges of breach of peace by refusing to obey police orders to move out of terminals.

Montgomery, Ala.

Since the rides began May 24, 294 persons have been convicted. They received $200 fines and jail terms, suspended for some of the earlier riders.

In Atlanta, the Rev. James M. Lawson, chairman of the Freedom Ride Coordinating Committee, said plans were being made to return all of the 175 bonded riders to Jackson by Aug. 13.

A Hinds County Court order entered more than a year ago requires all bonded appellants to appear in court in person on opening day—Aug. 14 this year—or be liable for their bonds.

The Rev. Wyatt Tee Walker of Atlanta, executive director of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, said the state must guarantee protection for the returning riders because "Some Jackson people may not welcome our return."

Walker, a bonded rider himself, said the state "Won't guarantee protection, we'll have to get it somewhere—maybe from U.S. Marshals."

Chief of Detectives M. B. Pierce of Jackson said the police force assigned to bus, rail and air terminals would be adeqdate to handle any situation and maintain law and order.

He said any violations of the law would result in arrests.

Gaither said plans were being worked out for housing and feeding riders whose return would be paid for by CORE.

Mississippi Rider Suit Hearing Set

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—Federal Judge Richard T. Rives Monday set Sept. 25 as the date for hearing both preliminary and permanent injunctions that would stop police from arresting "Freedom Riders" on breach of the peace charges.

Rives overruled motions for more definite information concerning the charges, but ordered the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to furnish Jackson City Lines within 10 days the names and circumstances of bus drivers ordering Negroes to sit in the rear of the bus.

Rives denied a motion for immediate hearing on a preliminary injunction because of the addition of the Jackson City Airport Commission as a defendant. The commission, included Monday, was given until Aug. 27 to file information and until Aug. 17 to file motions in the case.

DEFINITE DATA

Attorneys for the Illinois Central Railroad, Trailways and Greyhound bus companies, Jackson City Lines and the attorney general's office had asked for more definite information concerning the charges by the NAACP.

Ed Cates, assistant attorney general, said the information was necessary "if we are to be able to answer the charges. Otherwise, we don't know how to properly defend ourselves against the preliminary injunction."

Mrs. Constance Baker Motley, NAACP attorney, said of the charge, "this is not a new or novel issue. That segregation is being enforced is common knowledge."

During the afternoon, several of the Negro spectators dozed in the courtroom.

Earlier, Asst. Atty. Gen. Charles Clark asked the court to delay the case until all bus and railway companies were made a party to the case. He said the NAACP wanted the case to cover all carriers, but had named only four.

Rives, of Montgomery, Ala., president of the three-judge panel, announced the decision turning down the motion. Rives, from the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans, said the decision in the case would be binding only on those named in it.

The NAACP filed the suit for three Jackson Negroes, who said they acted in behalf of all Negroes.

Capt. J. L. Ray, the versatile, smiling, polite police officer who has been in charge of greeting most of the "freedom riders" who have invaded Jackson, has done a commendable job thus far, but CORE is about to pull a fast one on him. Traveling with the next batch of crackpot hip-to-hip restroom mixers is a chap from Indonesia named Wiejonarko Gjokroadisumurto. If you were an arresting officer, how would you like to step up and say, "Wiejonarko Gjokroadismurto, move on or I'll have to arrest you?"

Jackson Daily

CORE apparently is having trouble getting recruits trying to crack the restroom barrier down heah in Dixie. After several days of peace and quiet, CORE is shipping another gang into town. One is a blind woman from Rochester, N. Y. What's the matter? Has CORE run out of preachers and prostitutes and is now dragging blind people off the streets of New York?

P. I.

Attention Associated Press, United Press International and newspapers across the land: CORE has dug up some money and has bonded 16 "freedom riders" out of Parchman. Get ready to be called into press conference across the land and hear some real sad lies about how horrible they were treated while vacationing at Mississippi Parchman "plantation."

In every big news story there is considerable behind-the-scenes activity involving police officers, the press and others in close contact with developing facts. This has been true in the now well-publicized "freedom rider" stuff. Today, we're going to relate an interesting sidelight on CORE's cute little heroes.

We do so, we know, at the risk of boring you with this enduring subject.

Upon arriving at the office Friday morning, there was another story (it happens sometimes several times a day) off the wire about how Mississippi has been mistreating the "riders." This story came out of Los Angeles, where CORE—with clockwork precision—has assembled four erstwhile residents of Parchman to tell the Los Angeles press of the prison wickedness down heah in Deep Dixie. They spouted off according to CORE's plan, just as others have done upon release from prison.

Jackson Miss.

Sheriff Bob Gilfoy has been asked some 20 times to comment on these wild falsehoods spawned in the warped mind of some CORE official.

Anyway, after reading the sob story off the wires, a check was made on the four complainers. Records reveal that one of them had a long record of burglary, narcotics traffic, traffic violations, and probation violations, while a deah, deah "lady" rider had been booked extensively for burglary, vagrancy, narcotics traffic and—if you'll pardon the expression—prostitution, procuring and other illicit activities, including public drunkenness.

Contact was made via the Associated Press and a telephone call to a newspaper editor in Los Angeles to confirm these reported violations with the Los Angeles Police Department.

Mrs., a "freedom rider" and the beloved, ever-loving wife of one of CORE's precious heroes, then don't be surprised if CORE's publicity chief commits suicide and leaves a note describing how that mean ol' place known as Dixie did it to him in violation of his "Rights."

Word began to flow back that two of these "riders," John Rogers, 30, Negro boxer, and his mate, Janice Rogers, 23, were picked upon April 20, 1961, on the LA freeway for traveling too slow. After book-ed on a narcotics charge. A few weeks later both show up here in Jackson as "freedom riders" alongside some Cloud 9 ministers who left their crime-packed congregations and communities to take a ride with dopeheads and prostitutes.

A Los Angeles reporter, his curiosity aroused by a Daily News inquiry yesterday, found out that Rogers, when booked last April, was carrying the identification of a white naval reserve lieutenant, Ralph Rogers of New Brunswick, N. J. Further investigation by this reporter revealed that the same white Lt. Rogers, a teacher at Douglas College and Rutgers university in New York, is also in jail in Mississippi as a "freedom rider." Jackson police records reveal a Ralph Rogers, said to be a reserve Navy lieutenant, is now in Parchman.

Now, newspaper people and police authorities in both Los Angeles and Jackson are wondering—and intending to find out—how Fighter Rogers, a Negro from Los Angeles, happened to have a military ID card of Lt. Rogers, a white college professor in New York last April, when the former was arrested for narcotics investigation way out yonder in California while the professor was presumably teaching his college students all about good government and such stuff up yonder in New York. Strange, isn't it? But that's not all!

Police authorities are also, for some "strange" reason, checking on a gal named Sally Roberts who was picked up in Oakland, Calif., for prostitution and a gal named Michelle Lamar who was picked up, also for prostitution, in Denver.

If these two names turn out to be the same dark-skinned

One Negro 'Troublemaker' Has Long Record, Says Hinds Sheriff

By The Associated Press

JACKSON, Miss., July 28.—Hinds County Sheriff J. R. Gilfoy said Friday protest rider John Rogers of Los Angeles was the wrong man to complain about Mississippi jails.

"He's got a record that goes back 10 years," said Sheriff Gilfoy.

The sheriff made the statement after Rogers, 28, his wife, Janice, 23, and Marcia Rosenbaum, 23, of Los Angeles, and Rita Carter, 18, of Berkeley, Calif., complained during a press conference Thursday of mistreatment in Mississippi jails.

Freed On Bond

Miss Rosenbaum is white; the others are Negroes. All were convicted of breach of peace in attempting to desegregate the Jackson railroad station last month. They were sentenced to $200 fine and four months in jail but posted $500 appeal bonds and were freed.

Sheriff Gilfoy called Rogers, a former protessional lightweight boxer, a troublemaker.

"He led a lie-down at the state penitentiary," Sheriff Gilfoy said, "until I threatened him with another charge of disobeying an officer."

On his return from the penitentiary to Jackson, Sheriff Gilfoy said, Rogers threatened to beat up police Capt. J. L. Ray, his arresting officer. Later, Rogers apologized, said Sheriff Gilfoy.

Of Miss Rosenbaum's accusation that she was served horse meat and an improper diet at the jail, Sheriff Gilfoy said:

"That's absurd. With the price of horses in Mississippi, we can't afford it."

Some 'Complaints' Correct

Sheriff Gilfoy said Miss Rosenbaum's complaint that her outer clothing was removed was correct. "We strip all prisoners when they go in there," he said, "but we give them prison garb. All of them."

He denied her complaint that male guards reviled the women and that no women guards were on duty.

"We've got more to do than sit up there and castigate those people," he said. "And you know we have matrons up there."

Rogers complained that his clothing and mattress were taken from him and he was confined to a death row cell once with three other Negroes.

The freedom riders are housed in the maximum security unit to relieve crowded conditions in the Hinds County Jail.

Sheriff Gilfoy said every prisoner was issued a mattress and no clothing but underwear because they don't work and don't leave the cellblock.

"And the only time mattresses are removed is when prisoners misbehave," he said.

In addition, maximum security rules prohibit smoking and the only reading matter allowed in the cells is a Bible.

During his press conference, Rogers vowed to return to Mississippi.

Sheriff Gilfoy commented: "I doubt it. I don't think he's coming back. But he must like it here or he wouldn't have said that."

Fort Worth, Tex.—Let me commend the recent editorial by Ralph McGill in criticism of the way the Alabama authorities managed — or mismanaged — the freedom riders affair.

He is a Southern leader aware that we are facing with a grueling climacteric in our history and that many cancerous walls must tumble. If we are to insist upon states rights we must face up to states responsibilities.

After the freedom riders left Alabama they passed over into Mississippi. Whatever else may be said of the Mississippi authorities in that state, they showed the world that they were the authorities. They did not abdicate. They did not turn the situation over to the goons.

Judge Dismisses Charge Of Assault, But Fines And Jails Agitator

By United Press International

JACKSON, Miss., July 17 — City Judge James L. Spencer Monday acquitted a Negro protest rider who was charged with assault for allegedly stepping on a white man's foot in a bus terminal.

Judge Spencer concluded after one hour of testimony that Leo Washington, 24, of New Orleans, "inadvertently" stepped on the foot of Cecil Lindsay at the Greyhound Station Saturday night. Lindsay shoved him back against a wall.

214 Sentenced

The judge found Washington, a college student, not guilty of the assault charge but convicted him along with 19 other riders of breach of the peace in connection with their test of Mississippi segregation laws. They were sentenced to 244 days in jail, bringing the number so convicted here since May 24.

One, Mrs. Rose Schorr Rosenberg, an attorney of Los Angeles, made a statement during the trial protesting being sent to Parchman State Penitentiary, where other convicted riders were sent when the Jackson jail was filled.

Treatment Opposed

She said the penitentiary was for felons but those riders convicted of a misdemeanor were treated worse in that they were denied use of the library or reading material from it and forced to obey police orders to leave a white waiting room.

ARRESTS NOW 216 IN JACKSON RIDES

17 More Held in 2 Groups —Barnett Views Sought

JACKSON, Miss., July — (AP) — The number of Freedom Riders arrested in Jackson soared over the 200 mark today as seventeen travelers tried unsuccessfully to integrate terminal waiting rooms here by nine white—came here by bus and one Negro—eight Negroes from New Orleans. They were arrested when they refused to obey police orders to leave a white waiting room.

Six Negroes Arrested In Georgia Buses

COLUMBUS, Ga., July 17 (UPI)—At least six Negroes were arrested here Monday in an attempt to integrate Columbus Transit System buses.

The Negroes, some of them students, were arrested at two different locations by police after they allegedly refused the orders of drivers to move to the rear of the buses. They were charged with violating the state's bus seating law.

A Negro attorney said bond of $100 was posted for each of the defendants. Seven Negroes were released without any charges being filed.

The bus integration attempt was taken into custody but one was followed a warning by a Negro spokesman who informed City Commissioner Bryson that attempts Columbus would be made by Negroes to integrate city buses.

Monday afternoon that attempts would be made by Negroes to integrate city buses.

Rev. E. B. Bryson said Rev. E. B. Bryson said there is another group of impatient citizens who will be riding your buses today as a protest against segregation."

12 Seized in Chicago

CHICAGO, July 9 (UPI)—Twelve persons were arrested today during a "wade-in" demonstration at Rainbow Beach, a city-owned beach on Lake Michigan.

The police said the twelve had been arrested because they refused to obey orders of the police task force patrolling the area. Those arrested were eleven white persons and one Negro girl. They were charged with disturbing the peace, the police said.

MISSISSIPPI

Less than three hours later, seven white and one Negro riders came in by bus from Montgomery, Ala. The police took them into custody when they sought to integrate the white waiting rooms.

Jackson policemen now have arrested 216 riders since May 24.

About one-third of the riders are out on bond. Eighty-two are held at the state prison farm. Parchman and fifty-two are in Jackson jails.

The Alabama group had announced that they came to talk over segregation policies with Gov. Ross Barnett, with a view toward mediation and a "fruitful exchange of views." If they failed to meet with Mr. Barnett, a spokesman said, they would go to jail.

Ask to see Governor

After getting off the bus in Jackson, the Negro woman rider approached Police Capt. J. L. Ray and asked if a representative of the Governor were present. When told he was not, she asked if the Governor could see the group this afternoon.

"It is my information," Capt. Ray answered, "that he's very busy and he can't see you." Earlier, Governor Barnett said he would be out of town Monday through Thursday and indicated he would not talk to the Riders today.

"I don't see any need of discussing things," Mr. Barnett said when reached by telephone. "I'll be tied up all afternoon. I'm extremely busy here. I'm in with that crowd and watching in the Riders today."

Before arriving here, the Alabama group had succeeded in getting service at both white and Negro lunch counters in Montgomery. Ala. A dozen detectives were served at a Negro counter for the first time as they watched the group leave for New Orleans, in the New Orleans terminal. The Riders bought tickets in New Orleans facilities. They were not bothered.

FREEDOM RIDERS—JACKSON

The so-called Freedom Riders, seventy in all, including whites and Negroes, stayed on the beach for almost two hours and then left under police escort. As they left, others on the beach, numbering thousands of persons, cheered.

Test in Detroit Suburb

DEARBORN, Mich., July 9 (AP)—A group of Negroes and whites forty-nine invaded this Detroit suburb for a discrimination test of public facilities during the week-end and away, saving the group had encouraged.

Those who participated in the interracial Freedom-Ride, included members of the Michigan Youth Congress of Racial Equality, and Detroit and Ann Arbor chapters of Democrats. The group concentrated its efforts on restaurants. Service was directed at only two of twenty-three places tested, a spokesman said yesterday. In a third, service was not refused but Negroes were met with hostility and insults, the spokesman said.

Oak Park Effort Fails

OAK PARK, Mich., July 9 (UPI)—About fifty boys and girls, both Negro and white and mostly students, today tried unsuccessfully to integrate a swimming club in this Detroit suburb.

Oak Park policemen kept a watchful eye on the group throughout the day and there was no trouble.

Henning Rylander, manager of the Crystal Pool, closed the pool when the first Negro appeared in the group with a membership card. He took the card and the group left. The group returned later with only one card by a Negro member.

Mr. Rylander said the club, in existence for twenty-six years, was a private organization, operated by a corporation. If we like their looks we let her in," he said. "No. There Riders" have never been any Negroes here May 24.

NO VIOLENCE

Some whites jeered at the group, but officers said there was no violence.

Arrested on the park benches were two youths and two young women.

At the bus station, the three entered about 2 p.m. and officers ordered them to move on or get to the booths.

The three ignored the request and the officers ordered them arrested on charges of failure to obey the order of an officer. They were brought to 172 since "Freedom attempts to desegregat transportation terminals bega

Jackson Ja... Seven Negroe... In Mixing Try

JACKSON, Miss., (AP)—Seven Negroes sought to break the color line in Jackson Wednesday and all of them were arrested on breach of peace charges.

Four arrests came at the city park as the Negroes refused to move from a park usually used by whites. Three others were arrested shortly afterward as they sought to use the white waiting room at the Trailways bus terminal.

The four at the park were among a dozen Negroes who went into the area normally used by whites and staged a picnic. Afterwards, they strolled around the swimming pool area and were turned away from the ticket booth.

Two Negro Mix Leaders Draw New Terms

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — City Judge James Spencer convicted two Negro leaders Wednesday for contributing to the delinquency of minors who were arrested on breach of peace charges in desegregation attempts.

The two leaders were James Luther Bevel, 24, of Itta Bena, Miss., field secretary for the Congress of Racial Equality; and Bernard LaFayette, 20 of Tampa, Fla., field secretary for the Jackson Nonviolent movement. Both were free on $500 bond pending appeal of their own convictions for "Freedom Riding" May 24.

Bevel was convicted on three counts and LaFayette on two. They were sentenced to $500 fine and 6 months in jail on each count making a total of 2 years in jail and $2,000 fine for Bevel and 1½ years in jail and $1,500 fine for LaFayette. They were convicted Tuesday on another charge of contributing to the delinquency of a Negro for a sit-in.

Bevel posted a $2,000 appeal bond and LaFayette posted $1,500.

One of the minors involved was sentenced to $200 fine and 4 months in jail and the other three were placed on probation by youth court.

Freedom Rider Arrests Hit 163, Plan TV Appeal

JACKSON, Miss. (ANP) -- Federal Judge Sidney Mize on Tuesday overruled the petition of a Freedom Rider, Miss Elizabeth Wyckoff, who challenged the Mississippi "breach she must exhaust remedies in Mississippi state courts before bringing her case to federal court. She was convicted of breach of the peace in an attempt to desegregate bus terminal facilities June 2 and was sentenced to a $200 fine which she is working out at $3 a day.

Her attorneys, William M. Kuntsler, New York, and Jack H. Young, had filed the petition charging her civil rights were violated. They took the case to federal court on the basis that she was a short-term prisoner and did not have time to exhaust legal remedies in state courts.

RIDES TO CONTINUE

Leaders of the Freedom Riders, however, displayed tenacity of purpose last week during a private talk-session with Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy who urged that they shift their emphasis from travel facilities to voting registration.

Kennedy told the seven Congress of Racial Equality leaders -- six Negroes and one white -- that the bus riders had made their point, that no further advantage could be gained in continuing the protest campaign.

FAILED TO BE SWAYED

Leaders failed to be swayed by the attorney-general's views and the Freedom Rides continued.

Jackson, Miss., is still the focal point for Freedom Rides. Sunday, Jackson police arrested 20 riders who had left New Orleans by train that morning. They were carted off to jail after they took seats in the white waiting room.

City Judge James Spencer on Monday convicted 24 Freedom Riders bringing to 163 the total found guilty of "breach of the peace." One person tried Monday was 17-years-old and was dismissed because of his age.

More than 50 of the convicted Freedom Riders have been transferred from the Hinds County jails at Jackson to the state penitentiary at Parchman, Miss.

CORE national director James Farmer, one of those held in the penitentiary, reported last week, "We are treated decently enough by Mississippi standards...The cells are 6 by 9 and each has two prisoners...No printed matter is allowed..."

Since the letter was written, Prison Supt. Fred Jones has announced that he will move the Freedom Riders into isolation cells.

BACK TO ALABAMA

Freedom Riders returned to Montgomery, Ala., last week, after a federal ban was lifted. They were met by almost 100 armed police officers and an orderly but sullen mob of whites. This was a marked contrast to the violence which erupted there last month.

In New York, CORE will sponsor a television appeal July 7 over WNTA-TV to seek financial support to continue the Freedom Rides. The telecast, to be aired continuously for 16 hours, will feature the entire cast of the off-Broadway play, "The Premise," and other famous personalities.

NEW ATTACK PLANNED

'Rider' Invasion Fails As Jackson Notes Fourth

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — A Negro leader promised Tuesday that the "Freedom Rider" movement would expand into new fields for a frontal attack upon racial segregation in the South.

The leader, James Farmer, 42, national director of the Congress on Racial Equality, said the new assaults would include more Freedom Rides and "much more to follow along this and different lines in the spirit of nonviolence."

He did not elaborate.

Meanwhile, this capital city of 150,000 quietly observed Independence Day as threats of a mass invasion of the segregation-defying riders failed to materialize.

LAWS INTACT

The state's rigid "Jim Crow" barriers are apparently just as firm today as they were 42 days ago when the first biracial group of riders came to Jackson.

No violence has occurred in the state as police quickly jailed the integrationists.

Farmer, who posted a $500 appeal bond Monday night after spending three weeks in jail, called in newsmen Tuesday for a news conference.

Earlier, he huddled with CORE field directors to discuss training of future riders.

Asked what had happened to the announced CORE plan to fill up Jackson jails with hundreds of riders by Independence Day, Farmer would only say:

"I've been in jail."

SLACK SOUGHT

At that point in the news conference, James McCain of New Orleans, a CORE field director in charge of training activities, said he had called for a slack "because we need more time to screen the applicants more thoroughly."

Last week, the Mississippi Highway Patrol said its investigators had found evidence of Communist planning and participation in the Freedom Rides.

One leader of the movement, Dr. Walter Bergman of Detroit, forecast on June 1 that the Freedom Riders would successfully obtain their goal of integrated transportation facilities in the South by July 4.

"By then, we want real independence for the South," said the former Wayne State University professor. Bergman, who is white, was roughed up by segregationists in Alabama in mid May.

GOAL REACHED

One of Bergman's goals for the Freedom Riders has been accomplished. In that Chicago press conference, he said that the organizations sponsoring the desegregation assaults planned to make law enforcement agencies at Jackson farm their prisoners out.

Hinds County Sheriff J. R. Gilfoy has sent 92 of the convicted Freedom Riders to the sprawling state penitentiary at Parchman in the Delta. Confined in the prison's maximum security section, they are serving their sentences.

Federal Court Hears Crucial Mixing Cases

Three-Judge Court Sits Here Today To Weigh Rider Law

BULLETIN

The Federal Government today joined the NAACP in a court move to halt the arrest of "freedom riders" and to eliminate segregation in public transportation in Jackson.

The government's request to enter the case was filed by an assistant attorney general and was approved by Elbert P. Tuttle, chief judge of the U. S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals.

By BOB PITTMAN
Daily News Staff Writer

A three-judge federal court was scheduled today to hear a petition asking an end to segregation of public transportation facilities in Mississippi.

The petition, filed by the NAACP, also seeks to enjoin city and state officials from arresting persons who refuse to observe state law requiring segregation of waiting rooms and other facilities.

Judge Elbert P. Tuttle of the U. S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals of New Orleans headed the three-judge court. Also scheduled to sit were federal district judges Sidney Mize of the Southern District of Mississippi and Claude Clayton of the Northern District.

The suit seeks to end segregation in facilities of Trailways and Greyhound bus lines, the Illinois Central Railroad, Jackson's city bus line and Cicero's Restaurant at the Jackson airport.

RIDER ARRESTS

These are the spots in which the 227 "freedom riders" who have come to Jackson have been arrested.

None, however, has been charged with a violation of state segregation laws. All have been charged with a breach of the peace after refusing police orders to move on.

The suit was filed by the NAACP on behalf of three Jackson Negroes arrested at the terminals.

The petition claims Negroes "have suffered and shall continue to suffer irreparable injury as a result of the enforcement or threat of enforcement of state segregation laws while they are traveling."

It also alleges that Negroes subjected to "daily public inconveniences, harrassment and embarrassment" in violation of their constitutional rights.

Named as defendants are Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson, the City of Jackson, Mayor Allen Thompson, Commissioners D. L. Lucky and Tom Marshall, Police Chief W. D. Rayfield, Trailways, Greyhound, Illinois Central Railroad, Jackson City Lines and Cicero Carr of Cicero's Restaurant.

The city has asked to be removed from the suit on grounds that a city cannot violate any law and because the complainants have failed to show a denial of rights or injury because of their arrests.

Jackson City Lines has asked for more definite information in order to prepare an answer.

The three-judge hearing was scheduled to open at 10 a. m.

Meanwhile, Judge Mize was to hear this afternoon additional testimony in a suit in which 28-year-old Negro James Meredith of Kosciusko seeks to enroll at the all-white University of Mississippi.

Meredith's case was opened at Biloxi several weeks ago and continued until today.

He seeks to restrain University officials from preventing his enrollment and, at the same time, seeks to open the doors of all white state colleges and universities to Negroes.

'Rider' Suit To Come Before Court Monday

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—A three-judge federal court will hear a suit Monday attempting to prevent police from arresting "riders" and other Negroes who attempt to use all-white public facilities in Mississippi.

Since May 24, 1958 riders have been arrested for attempting to crack segregation barriers at bus, train and plane terminals and charged with breach of the peace.

Numerous Jackson Negroes have been arrested on the same charge after using park benches reserved for whites, for sit-ins at the white city library and for taking front seats on city buses.

Chief Judge Elbert P. Tuttle of the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals ordered the court to hear the injunction request filed by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored Poeple.

The suit was filed on behalf of Samuel Bailey, Joseph Broadwater and Burnett L. Jacob, Jackson Negroes. They have not been arrested for desegregation attempts.

Defendants named were Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson, Mayor Allen Thompson and the City Council, Police Chief W. D. Rayfield, the Trailways, Greyhound and Jackson bus lines, the Illinois Central Railroad, and the Airport Restaurant.

The petition is a class action asking the court to consider the request for protection against arrest of Negroes seeking to use all public facilities.

The suit attacked what it called unconstitutional state laws requiring segregated railroad cars, buses, rest rooms, and waiting rooms and the posting of segregation signs at terminals.

City Judge James L. Spencer has said the riders and others were not arraigned for breaking segregation laws, but their presence in these places create a condition "whereby a breach of the peace may be occasioned therefrom."

U. S. Brings 2 Vote Suits In Mississippi

Action Claims Negroes Being Denied Rights

By The Associated Press

Jackson, Miss., July 6.—The Federal Government whacked Mississippi Thursday with two suits charging discrimination against eligible Negro voters in two counties.

Mississippi Governor Ross Barnett promptly labeled the action as interference with local self-government.

Attorney General Kennedy said in Washington that Justice Department investigations showed "a clear-cut pattern of discrimination."

Other Probes Pending

The suits, he said, were field Thursday "because the situation has not been rectified nor are there assurances that it ever will be rectified by local action."

The legal maneuver contended eligible Negroes in Clarke and Forrest counties, in south-central Mississippi, were denied voting rights.

Other voting-rights investigations, the Justice Department said, are pending "in a number of additional Mississippi counties."

District Judge Sidney C. Mize set a hearing on the Government's petition for preliminary injunction for August 7, probably at Jackson, the State capital.

This was the first such action brought in Mississippi and came under the 1957 and 1960 Civil Rights acts. Similar suits have been filed in Louisiana, Alabama, Georgia, and Tennessee.

No Complaints, Clerk Says

Clarke County Circuit Clerk A. L. Ramsey, who is the County's registrar of voters, said he knew of no complaints from Negroes.

"We haven't had any Negroes ask to vote," Ramsey said.

Circuit Clerk Theron Lynd of Forrest declined comment. John Doar of the Justice Department's Civil Rights Division said that at least 54 Negroes in Forrest have tried to register and failed. He claimed none of them were permitted to file applications to vote.

In the Clarke County case, the Government charged that although there are 2,988 Negroes of voting age in the county, none are now on the voting rolls.

In Forrest County, the suit alleged, there are only 25 of 7,495 Negroes of voting age on the rolls.

VOTING BARRIER SUITS LAUNCHED

Justice Department Cites Miss. Counties

By W. F. MINOR
(Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

JACKSON, Miss.—The justice department launched a long-awaited frontal attack on alleged Negro voting barriers in Mississippi, filing suits in Forrest and Clarke counties under federal civil rights acts.

"I'm not surprised," declared Atty. Gen. Joe T. Patterson. "All I can say is we're going to try the lawsuits and employ the full facilities of this office."

Gov. Ross Barnett, on his way out of town, said: "I don't understand why they want to interfere with local self government."

Announcement of the voting suits was made in Washington by Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy Thursday morning. Later United States marshals here served process on Patterson and circuit clerks of the two counties.

Governor Barnett was to be served Thursday afternoon, but because he was out of town, marshals planned to call on him Friday.

The government charges that only about 25 of the more than 7400 Negro adults in Forrest county are registered to vote, and no Negroes have been registered in the past 12 years.

'SIX REGISTERED'

In Clarke county, the federal suit charges that none of the 2988 Negro adults in the county have been registered to vote.

Circuit clerk A. L. Ramsey of Clarke county contended later: "We haven't had any Negroes ask to vote. We have six registered this year. One of them sat on a trial jury in circuit court."

Circuit clerk Theron Lynn of Forrest county would make no comment on the suit naming him for "arbitrarily denying Negroes the opportunity to register to vote."

The suits seek injunctions under the 1957 and 1960 civil rights acts to prevent the clerks from preventing registration of "any Negro applicant who possesses the same or similar qualifications of the least qualified white person who has been registered."

The Clarke county suit charges that since 1950 at least 10 Negroes have made "one or more attempts" to register to vote and have not been permitted to apply for registration.

In Forrest county, the federal suit charges that in the last 12 years at least 34 Negroes have sought to register but were not permitted.

REJECTION CHARGED

The litigation accuses the circuit clerks as registrars of the two counties of "failing and refusing to afford to Negro applicants for registration the same or equal opportunity to register to vote as is afforded to white applicants," and with "failing and refusing to register Negroes who possess the same or similar qualifications as white applicants who have been deemed qualified and who have been registered."

The Forrest county suit says a majority of the 22,431 white persons of voting age are registered to vote but "only about 25" of the 7495 Negro adults are registered.

A 1954 survey of Negro voter registration made for the state legal educational advisory committee in Mississippi showed 16

Negroes registered in Forrest county. The survey showed no Negroes registered in Clarke county.

The justice department said it would produce records to show that Forrest county officials have been "applying different and more stringent standards to Negroes than to white applicants," and rejecting qualified Negroes.

A federal suit was filed in Jefferson Davis county on behalf of a Negro whose registration had been rejected during a re-registration in 1956, after he was previously registered.

A three judge federal court had ruled that the Negro was not apparently qualified and had properly been rejected by the circuit clerk.

Jackson suit seeks to ban rider arrests

By The Associated Press

A suit to prevent police from arresting "freedom riders" and other Negroes seeking to use public facilities in Mississippi headed for a federal court test at Jackson today as the number of riders arrested soared to 227.

A three-judge federal court planned to hear the injunction request filed by the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

The suit attacked what it called unconstitutional state laws requiring segregated railroad cars, buses, rest rooms and waiting rooms and the posting of segregation signs at terminals.

Such laws, the suit contended, subject Negroes to "daily public inconvenience, harassment, and embarrassment [and] violate rights secured . . . by the due process clause of the 14th Amendment to the U. S. Constitution."

POLICE IN Jackson contended the presence of the riders, after announcing their intentions to violate a law, was a breach of the peace, and was compounded by refusal to move on as ordered by officers.

City Judge James L. Spencer said recently the riders were not arraigned for breaking segregation laws but because their presence created a condition "whereby a branch of the peace may be occassioned. . . ."

Nine riders from New Orleans and eight from Montgomery, Ala., were arrested yesterday when they tried unsuccessfully to desegregate terminal waiting rooms.

Eleven more were arrested in Jackson late last night on breach of peace charges. This raised the total number arrested since May 24 to 27.

The riders—All Neroes and six of them juveniles—attempted to buy tickets at the Trailways Bus terminal for Canton, some 20 miles north of Jackson. They were taken into custody when they refused to move on when ordered to do so by a police captain.

ABOUT A THIRD of the 28 riders arrested since May 24 out on bond. A total of 82 are held at the state prison at Parchman, 130 miles from Jackson, and 63 are in Jackson jails.

A spokesman for the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) said five "freedom riders" planned to leave St. Louis today to test bus and railroad facilities in Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Tennessee and Illinois.

The Rev. Raymond Lathan, pastor of the New Hope Baptist Church at Milwaukee, said he hoped to recruit as many as 100 riders for a trip South. The Negro pastor did not set a date for the start of the journey.

In another development, two Negro integration leaders urged the federal government to take a firmer stand on civil rights issues.

The Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., of Atlanta, president of the SSouthern Christian Leadership Conference, said at Pittsburgh that there is a need for a federal fair employment practices act. He also called for federal legislation to end literacy tests for voting and poll taxes in the South.

Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the NAACP, told a news conference at Philedelphia that President Kennedy has sought to implement the nation's present civil rights laws by executive order "and this is very fine." Then he added:

"But we need more laws immediately, not only action under existing laws . . . a complete attack on civil rights by the Kennedy administration requires new legislation besides executive action."

Judge Denies Appeal in Riders' Case

BILOXI, Miss., July 6 (UPI) U. S. District Judge Sidney Mize today rejected a new attempt to have arrests of the "Freedom Riders" ruled unconstitutional.

Mize turned down attorney Jack Young's request that he be allowed to file an appeal in the case.

The Judge ruled last week against Young's plea for a writ of habeas corpus to free one of the Riders, Elizabeth Wyckoff, 45, of New York City. Such a writ would, in effect, void arrests and convictions of all Riders on breach-of-the-peace charges.

Mize said last night that it would be improper for him to enter the case until it had been taken through the State courts and he repeated his opinion today.

In the appeal hearing, Young claimed that State courts are behind segregation and could not be expected to render a fair verdict.

Shortly after Mize ruled against the Freedom Rider appeal, six more Negro college students were arrested at Jackson when they tried to buy tickets in the white waiting room of the Illinois Central railroad terminal.

The six, all members of Jackson's "nonviolent movement," were trying to buy tickets to Canton, Miss., and refused police orders to "move on."

Two officials representing Minnesota Gov. Elmer L. Andersen went to the Mississippi State Prison at Parchman today to inspect living conditions for five Freedom Riders from Minnesota. And Mississippi Gov. Ross Barnett called a meeting of high State officials to discuss "Freedom Riders and Communism."

Probers Link Ride Training With Red-Inspired Figures

Another positive link between the CORE training centers for Jackson-destined Freedom Riders and Communist-inspired instructors was revealed today in testimony presented before the United States Senate Internal Security subcommittee.

Alva Buxenbaum, 25-year old native of New Orleans, and identified as an officer in the NAACP and student at Fisk University in Nashville, Tenn., where she was a member of the student council and active in student sit-ins to desegregate railroad coaches, was definitely identified as chairman of the Progressive Youth Organizing Committee in the hearing.

Testimony presented before the committee to investigate the administration of the internal security act and other internal security laws, under the direct chairmanship, of U. S. Sen. James O. Eastland, of Mississippi, with U. S. Sen. Thomas J. Dodd, of Conn. vice-chairman conducting the hearing, bought voluntary and full details from a Herbert Romerstein, of New York City, who said he had been a member of the Communist Party, joining when 15½ years old but left the movement in 1950 after having been expelled in 1949.

He told the investigating group that an organization called Advance was formed in New York in 1960 for the purpose of organizing youth in the city of New York for Communist activity.

He identified Alva Buxenbaum as being from Philadelphia and produced a bulletin published by the Progressive Youth Organizing Committee which contained the pictures of the Buxembaum woman and Marvin Markham, identified as vice chairman of the youth group.

Another bulletin published by the Advance youth organization said this: "We are part of an emerging national youth movement to protest against the House Committee on Un-American Activities in San Francisco; of citizens in the South, and of Easter peace marches throughout the land. We are one of the cooperating organizations of the Progressive Youth Organizing Committee that is helping to organize hundreds of groups all over the land."

The registrar at Fisk University in Nashville disclaimed any knowledge of the Buxembaum woman, told the Daily News that they had never had a student by that name, did not have an instructor by that name, and so far as they could determine had never had anyone in their race relations classes by that name.

The school official said it was possible she might have attended under another name, or perhaps by a married name, but they had no record of her attendance.

The document identifying her with Markham was placed in the official record of the Senate investigation and shows their pictures, together with original captions and the official form for soliciting funds for the group.

Many of the so-called Freedom Riders who have arrived in Jackson and subsequently gone to jail for violation of the peace ordinances were trained in CORE-sponsored and financed classes at Fisk University in Nashville thoroughly indoctrinated in how to act, what they might expect in official and public reaction when they attempt to cause racial disturbances and agitation.

SPECIALLY RECRUITED

Most of this CORE-trained element has been specifically recruited for activity in Jackson and former sit-in demonstrators, racial agitation leaders and veterans of jail terms for their interracial disturbances are used as instructors.

In detailing his testimony to the Senate committee on Communist party youth activity in the United States, Romerstein said the last nationwide Communist youth organization in the United States were called the Labor Youth League. "During the faction fight within the Communist Party, USA, in 1956-57, the Labor Youth League suffered great losses, and in 1957 was dissolved. So from 1957 to date, there has been no nationwide Communist youth organization. In 1958, some attempts were made by the Communist youth, some of whom were not members of the Communist Party but were ideologically friendly to the party, to set up an organization.

"This was frustrated by the Communist Party because they felt that these young people were not yet ready for such an organization, and there is reason to believe that these young people were affiliated to a faction of the party that was not in accord with the national leadership.

"So, at a meeting held in 1959 in New York City, where these young people attempted to form a Marxist-Leninist youth organization, the Communist Party sent two national committee members, Herbert Aptheker, and Irving Potash. They instructed these young people that the Communist Party looked with disfavor on the formation of a Marxist youth organization at that time, and they desired them to delay the formation of this organization.

"In February of 1960, in New York City, an organization called Advance was formed, which has the function of organizing youth in the City of New York. Similar organizations were setup in various parts of the country."

He went on to list officers of Advance and their headquarters, a building where "there are certainly a considerable number of legitimate tenants, but there are quite a number of Communist-front organizations in this building."

CUBA MOVE

Romerstein also said there had been frequent connections between Advance and the Fair Play for Cuba Committee, which now claims to have student chapters on the campuses of at least 37 colleges and universities.

"When young people get involved in the Communist-led marches to ban the bomb or in the Fair Play for Cuba Committee activities, and so on," he testified, "where they just run through the streets shouting, they have no idea that the Communists are leading them. This was true at the San Francisco riot against the Un-American Activities Committee."

"But they are whipped up to a state of hysteria," he told the committee. "The Communists pick out those who seem most susceptible and bring them slowly closer and closer to the Communist Party, and finally into the Communist Party."

Many of those arrested in Jackson in the "Freedom Rider" program have denied being Communists, while others have refused to answer at all.

EXPELLED BY REDS

Romerstein said he was expelled from the party for some minor deviations and for asking some questions about the Communist Party policy. I remained in the Communist youth organization."

He said he began some study on his own as to what the Communists believed and how they operated, and by 1950, was "pretty well disgusted with the Communist organization and I contacted some outside people to tell them what I knew."

The committee also called on a number of other witnesses, including Markham, who repeatedly refused to answer any questions of a direct nature, and consistently hid behind the first and fifth amendments, when he wasn't deliberately rambling in his answers.

He used the fifth amendment 44 times to refuse answer to questions regarding his party affiliations, his association with other known communists, and just minor questions.

Effectiveness Of 'Rider' Attack Remains In Doubt

By DOUGLAS STARR
Associated Press Staff Writer

The effectiveness of the massive "Freedom Rider" attack upon Mississippi segregation laws apparently remained sufficiently in doubt after eight weeks to cause a group of religious leaders to urge more widespread attack and a broad follow-up campaign.

More than three dozen clergy and lay leaders from throughout the nation met this week at Tougaloo Southern Christian (Negro) College near Jackson for two announced reasons:

1. To search for constructive steps to relieve racial tensions throughout the nation.

PLAN MORE RIDERS

2. To seek means of carrying forward the Freedom Rider movement and of following up with sit-ins and kneel-ins as well as with more rides.

Also, nine members of the group were arrested on breach of peace charges for attempting to use the white-only airport restaurant.

The existence of such a meeting showed doubt was cast on the effectiveness of the movement.

In the eyes of many Mississippians, this state has remained the last bastion in the struggle to retain segregation in all phases of society, despite the actions of the riders.

In the first eight weeks of the ride movement, 260 men, women and children, Negro and white, have been arrested in Jackson on breach of peace charges. Not one was arrested, charged or convicted of anything hinting at segregation.

Arresting officers and city officials say the Riders' presence in Jackson, after announcing their intention to break the law, is an occasion whereby a breach of peace could occur.

Although the Negro and white riders mingle obviously in the transportation terminals and wave to each other in court during their brief trials, county officials say that's as far as it goes.

Sheriff J. R. Gilfoy says when the riders are released from jail on bond, the Negroes and whites segregate themselves both to change into civilian clothing and for the long truck ride from state penitentiary to Jackson.

LACK OF ATTENTION

Another angle of the possible lack of effectiveness of the rider movement is the lack of attention the riders draw from local citizens upon their arrival in the city.

So far, only persons in the terminals on legitimate business watch the riders arrive, desegregate, and get arrested. No violence has erupted.

Although the rider movement, sponsored by the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE), is described as a nonviolent action, the riders are schooled for the possibility of volence. Violence did erupt in some Southern cities, but not in Mississippi.

A third angle is the fact that the riders are not saturating the jails as they claimed they would.

Of the 260 arrested, only five riders have elected to serve out their whole sentences.

A fourth angle is that four paid their fines, admitting they broke the law by paying the penalty.

And a fifth angle is the defection of three riders:

The Rev. Richard Gleason, a white Chicago Baptist, who paid his fine and left Jackson, advising "anyone thinking of joining the rides to look them over carefully" before deciding.

He told newsmen he would "not knowingly be a part of any questionable group."

Leon Daniel Horne, 24, a Madison County, Miss., Negro who said his only interest in the rides was to get home from Chicago where he was stranded.

Horne told newsmen he would advise anyone against affiliation with the riders. "They are making fools out of some Negroes," he said.

And the third rider, Elmer Brown, 20, of Akron, Ohio, a Negro university student, who accused CORE of deserting him when he requested bond and, according to jailers, attempted suicide in his cell with a belt.

CORE came through with the bond money after Brown was in jail only 11 days.

The general agreement between the riders and CORE is that they will remain in jail 39 days—the maximum before bond is cut off—to give CORE time to raise the $500.

Whether the added push by the religious leaders can help the Freedom Rider movement remains to be seen.

Indonesian 'Rider' Puzzles Officials

An Indonesian "freedom rider" has tried for the second time to get arrested in Jackson and law enforcement officers aren't sure how to handle the determined intruder who could set off an international incident.

Widjonarko Tjokroadisumarto, a 24-year-old graduate student at the University of Washington and son of an Indonesian diplomat, arrived here Saturday with nine other "freedom riders" from Nashville.

Police took him to jail but refused to arrest him.

Fifteen new "riders" came to town yesterday and the Indonesian, who answers to the nickname "Wee-Jo" was waiting for trying to change Mississippi's segregation customs.

"That's for Mississippians to do. In my opinion, however, the customs of segregation and discrimination are wrong, ethically and otherwise."

"Wee-Jo" has police baffled with his dark complexion.

..em at the Illinois Central railroad terminal.

"Wee-Jo" went first to the Negro waiting room.

No luck there, so he hurried back to the white waiting room.

Officers ignored him.

Then he badgered policemen to arrest him as they escorted the other "riders" to the paddy wagon.

Officers insisted he remain free.

"I wouldn't mind going to jail," said "Wee-Jo," the son of a former Indonesian ambassador to Pakistan. "I would like to know the situation in jail. I am trying to learn all I can about the nonviolent movement."

"Wee-Jo" told officers he's not

He wanted to know whether officers classed him as white or Negro.

Police didn't offer an answer so he figured he could use either facility.

He also decided police would have to arrest him regardless of which facility he used.

Jackson chief of detectives M. B. Pierce said "Wee-Jo" was not arrested "as a courtesy because he is a visitor to this country."

Tjokroadisumarto has ignored a request from the Indonesian embassy in Washington that he call off his integrationist activities.

He says he plans to remain in Mississippi for several weeks for a closer look at segregation.

The U. S. State Department is studying the situation but hasn't come up with a solution.

Indonesian Is Refused Arrest In Mississippi

JACKSON, Miss. — (UPI)— Police arrested 15 more "freedom riders" here Sunday while the son of an Indonesian diplomat who met them at the train station tried in vain for the second straight day to follow them to jail.

Widjonarko Tjokroadisumarto, 24, an exchange student at the University of Western, said he was perplexed over the Jackson police department's refusal to arrest him as a "freedom rider."

He said he had no diplomatic immunity from arrest, but determined officers insisted he go free. He told them Saturday when they arrested eight of his companions at a bus station here he was perfectly willing to go to jail.

Officers Saturday refused to arrest the youth and a blind white woman, Norma Wagner, 44, of Rochester, N. Y., when they arrived here Saturday by train and tried to integrate the white waiting room at the Illinois Central terminal. They were immediately arrested on breach of the peace charges.

Saturday's arrest brought to 284 those jailed here on similar charges since May 24.

Tjokraodisumarto's father, a former ambassador to Pakistan, is an officer in Indoensia's Department of State of Foreign Affairs in Jakarta.

Indonesian Rider Freed In Mississippi

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Widjonarko Tjokroadisumarto (Wee-jo -nar' - ko Cho - cro - ah' - dee-su-mar'-tow) is an Indonesian exchange student with a jaw-busting name who tried, but couldn't get arrested as a "rider" on his 24th birthday.

"Wee-jo," as he is known by his American friends, said he was sympathetic with the motives and methods of the riders and wanted to observe their attempts to solve a social problem.

"I do not intend to change Mississippi customs," he said. "That's for Mississippians to do. In my opinion, however, the customs of segregation and discrimination are wrong, ethically and otherwise."

Wee-jo, whose father was formerly ambassador to Pakistan, was slightly baffled Saturday when police forcibly escorted him out of the Negro waiting room of the Greyhound bus station and took him to headquarters without booking him.

The brown-skinned rider, who is of the Mongolian race, also slightly baffled police. He asked in which category they placed him, white or Negro? Police were indefinite on this point, so he surmised he could use facilities for either.

Meanwhile, police had arrested eight riders who came with Wee-jo from Nashville and sent a blind woman rider back to New York.

Chief of Detectives M. B. Pierce told the economics student working on his master's degree at the University of Washington he wasn't arrested "as a courtesy because he was a visitor to this country."

Wee-jo recalled that after his two-day bus trip from New York to Nashville he received a message from the Indonesian Embassy that the U.S. State Department didn't want him to make the trip to Jackson.

He wired back that he thought his trip was neither illegal nor political because of the Supreme Court ruling on interstate travel and President Kennedy's opinion on the individual' right to travel.

"Thus, there was no solid ground for the U.S. State Department to prevent my trip," he said. "And it didn't appear my life was endangered."

Before he arrived, police received information that Wee-jo's father was ambassador to Pakistan until a month ago and charge d'affaires of the Indonesian Embassy in Manila, Philippines from 1953-57.

Wee-jo said after meeting with the directors of the Congress of Racial Equality while doing research in New York, he decided to join the group as an observer although he had no immunity from arrest.

"Freedom Riders" Picture Mississippi Jail As Inhuman

ATLANTA (SCLC Release) Wyatt Tee Walker, executive director of Martin Luther King's Atlanta-based SCLC and his wife, Mrs Theresa Ann Walker, returned to Atlanta recently, upon their release from the Hinds County jail in Jackson, Mississippi.

The Walkers were the first husband-wife team to take the "Freedom Ride." Mr Walker, upon his return immediately filed a memorandum citing the violations of ICC regulations governing interstate travel and the inhumane treatment of jailed "Freedom Riders."

During their stay, no one was permitted the bare essentials for personal cleanliness, (toothbrush, towels, etc). As many as 20 persons were crowded into a 13 x 15 foot cell.

Mrs Walker rported that women prisoners conducted classes in non-violence, French, Spanish and ballet. "This helped to relieve the tension of the crowded cell, said Mrs Walker."

In the men's section, push-ups to thwart physical deterioration, devotions twice daily and song-sessions filled most of the day.

"Generally, the morale was very high considering the pig-pen conditions," remarked Mr Walker.

As to the Attorney General's suggestion to call off the "Freedom Rides." Mr Walker responded: "Mr Kennedy does not really understand that there's a social revolution going on in the South. He protests because the matter is in the courts. This has been in the courts since 1947 (Irene Morgan case) and delay by city authorities. Mr Huddo demanded they deposit Manilla Envelops in a box saying, "they'll be all right." This financial and sentimental loss certainly warrants some remedy and can only be deemed a direct by-product of a system that is entirely bad.

It must be said in all fairness to the Jackson City Police, particularly in the case of Chief Pierce and his Lieutenants, that despite a sincere difference of opinion, he and his men were extremely polite and cordial. The transfer to the Hinds Couny jail was almost like going to another world.

It is our sincere opinion that regardless of the crime committed, every prisoner, should be treated as a numan being and accorded the bare essentials to maintain a modicum of personal cleanliness, cided. We are insisting on enforcement, and until the Federal Government enforces the law and the ICC regulations, there will be a need for "Freedom Rides." A part of the memorandum follows.

JAIL CONDITIONS

The conditions that exist in the Hinds County jail post June 20th, (the date of our entry) resembles something out of the Middle Ages. From the time Mr Walker and his wife were transferred from the Jackson (Miss) city jail, in the treatment of inmates, particularly the "Freedom Riders," every code of minimal sanitation and personal hygiene was violated..

Mr Walker's cell housed eight other men. There were no beds at all. A blanket, mattress cover and ancient mattress were provided upon entering the 13 x 15 foot cell. This was the first and last physical 'comfort' provided by jail authorities. For seven days, repeated requests were made for the barest essentials for personal cleanliness. This was done vocally and in writing. A Mr Huddo made promises: a Mr Kelly remarked that he didn't send for us and didn't give a G—D—— if we never got our things.

The shower stall was inoperative; the open commode was at half-efficiency; the stench was amost unbearable; we bathed as best we could, using our pocket handkerchiefs as washcloths. There is no need to mention the Food - for jail diet is about the same all around the South.

Mrs Walker reports that one of the female prisoners was forced to strip to the waist for 'frisking' by male jailers. In neither jail were any matrons on duty, if employed. This was a humilation for female prisoners that seemed wholly unnecessary. The servicing of the women's section of the jails for feeding, cleaning, etc, was always done by male 'trustys'.

Upon the Walkers' release, they discovered that $75.00 of their funds had been removed from their envelopes containing "valuables" previously surrendered to Hinds County authorities. As they registered the loss of funds in Sheriff Gilfoy's office, Mrs Walker discovered her one-quarter carat wedding ring had also been removed (adjudged value, $275.00). Both of the Walkers upon transfer insisted on receipts for their valuables. They were denied and both requested the privilege to retain same in lieu of no receipting as practiced

Freedom Riders Continue To Fill Up Jackson Jails

JACKSON, Miss. -- Neither arrests, nor fines, nor terms in jails can halt the stream of Freedom Riders which pours into this Deep South city to test the segregated travel facilities in airport, bus and railway terminals. This week a total of 271 had been jailed since the integration attempts began May 24th.

At least 16 of the jailed Freedom Riders were scheduled to be released Tuesday after posting $500 bonds, according to Atty. Jack H. Young, their legal counsel.

Meanwhile, four persons were arrested Monday while seeking to desegregate facilities at the Jackson Municipal Airport. They were Cecil Thomas, a white UMCA official, Berkeley, Calif.; the Rev. M. Petaway, Montgomery, Ala., his daughter, Kredelle, 20, and his son, Alfonso, 16.

Shortly after their arrests, City Judge W. B. Fountaine convicted seven other riders who were jailed from the railraod station Sunday and fined them $200 and gave them four-month jail terms.

Last Friday, City Judge James Spencer convicted, fined and sentenced nine religious leaders and four Freedom Riders on charges of breach of the peace for attempting to desegregate an airport terminal and a bus station. They received the usual $200 fine and four months in jail.

The same day, the convicted Richard Haley, 45, of Chicago, field secretary for the Congress of Racial Equality which sponsors the Freedom Rides; and Helen Jean O'Neal, 20, Clarksdale, Miss., a former Jackson College student, because they picketed a meeting of a Southern governors called to discuss means of maintaining segregation here last week. They, too, received the maximum sentence.

Earlier last week, Judge Spencer convicted two Negro leaders, James Luther Bevel, 24, Itta Bena, Miss., CORE field secretary; and Bernard Lafayette, 20, Tampa, Fla., field secretary of the Jackson Non-Violent Movement on charges of contributing to the delinquency of two minors who tried to desegregate a Walgreen Drug Store lunch counter.

Bevel was convicted on three counts and Lafyaette on two. They were sentenced to $500 fines and six months in jail on each count. Both were free on $500 bond pending appeal of their own convictions for "Freedom Riding" May 24. They posted $2,000 and $1,500 appeal bonds, respectively, on the latest convictions.

Another development was the denial by the U. S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans of a white woman Freedom Rider's writ for habeas corpus. Elizabeth Porter Wyckoff, 46, New York was appealing a lower-court rejection for the writ. She is serving a term in the Mississippi penitentiary following her conviction as a Freedom Rider last month.

U. S. Circuit Judge John Minor Wisdom on Saturday upheld the lower court's ruling on the contention that Miss Wyckoff had not exhausted remedies available to her in the Mississippi state courts.

Early this week, Chief Judge Elbert T. Tuttle, Atlanta, Ga., of the U. S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, recused himself from a three-judge court which is scheduled to hear an NAACP case Aug. 7 calling for an end of the Freedom Rider arrests in Jackson. He replaced himself with Judge Richard T. Rives, Montgomery, Ala. The other two judges are Sidney Mize, Gulfport, Miss. and Claude Clayton of Tupelo, Miss.

'Riders' Announce Plan To Fill Jackson Prison

ITHACA, N.Y. (AP)—Students engaged in Freedom Rides into Jackson, Miss., hope to fill the jails there in an effort to have their cause widely known, spokesmen said Wednesday.

In another approach in their crusade to end racial segregation, three Cornell University white students jailed there have decided not to pay their fines or post bail for two to three weeks, the spokesmen said. The students were fined $200 each but were told they could work it out in jail at $5 a day.

The general plan calls for finding people who will serve out full terms and thereby fill the jails, the spokesmen here said.

Cornell's freedom walk committee is raising funds to cover fines and other expenses of the movement. The committee is made up of students and Ithaca residents.

A committee spokesman, David Smock, a graduate student and son of a Cornell professor, had indicated earlier that the money would be used to free the Cornell men immediately.

Four Cornell students, all white, were jailed Tuesday after having been found guilty on charges of breaching the peace. They were among eight white and Negro students who were arrested when they refused to move out of a waiting room for whites in the Jackson railroad station.

Another group of Cornell students is expected to go south next week, and another group the next week, Eric Craven, 19, a member of the Cornell committee against segregation, said.

Craven, of the Bronx, said that his organization, which will send the two groups south, was taking instructions from the Congress Of Racial Equality (CORE). That group has been leading the crusade to end segregation practices in interstate travel in the south.

Of the Cornell men jailed, one —Peter Sterling, 20, of Rye—will return here this week to take final examinations, the spokesmen said.

Jailed with Sterling were Charles A. Haynie, 25, of Douglaston; Paul Green, 22, of New York City, and Joe H. Griffith, 26, of Corpus Christi, Tex.

Riders Talk Of Hunger Strike, Occasional Lack Of Mattresses

By BONITA APPLETON
Daily News Staff Writer

Two Minnesota visitors got a taste of southern hospitality at Parchman's Maximum Security Unit yesterday and were allowed to talk to five Freedom Riders from their state.

The five, all men, told Minnesota Assistant Attorney General John Casey, Jr., Mrs. Wright Brooks, chairman of the Minnesota Human Welfare Committee they hadn't been mistreated "except for being without mattresses for a while."

Wearing tee-shirts and striped prison "ring-around" pants they talked through the steel bars of their six by nine feet cells.

"Ring-around" pants are trousers with the strips running horizontally and are for those prisoners who must still be kept under gun guard. Trusties and half-trusties wear pants with stripes running vertically.

Zev Aelomy, 23 held up his pants with hands. He said he didn't know how many pounds he had lost on a self imposed hunger strike. "But I had lots of reserve," he admitted with a laugh.

He usually drank two swallows of coffee in the morning and two swallows of milk in the evening, he said, and all the water he wanted.

"But I ate on July 4th," he admitted. The meal was standard holiday fare of fried chicken served to all the prisoners on the 22,000 acre farm and Supt. Fred Jones said the Freedom Riders were given the same food.

Aelomy rationalized that the prison officials had "gone to the trouble to prepare the fried chicken and he felt he ought to do them the favor of eating it."

He "didn't know" if he would go on a hunger strike again if it were all to do over, and he "didn't know if he would continue his present one too much longer.

Jackson Daily News

"One of the other Freedom Riders has already gone off his hunger strike because the doctors told him he had a calcium deficiency and "he had a choice of eating or dying, so he ate," Aelomy said.

Sat. 7-7-61

Aelomy's cellmate was slightly built, blue eyed Gene Uphoff, also of Minnesota. Uphoff, a Quaker, said he was a freshman at the University of Minnesota and would "probably" major in Political Science but he "didn't know."

Many of the Freedom Riders in the Maximum Security Unit were clad only in shorts and the visitors had to wait outside while they scrambled for pants.

The cells had double-decker beds with mattress and sheets, a commode and a wash stand. The prisoners are taken out twice a week and marched by twos to the front of the unit for showers. The unit is not airconditioned.

We're not mistreating anybody but this is a prison, not a hotel," Supt. Jones said. "The prisoners are allowed to receive all the mail that comes to them but they can only write two letters a week. This is a privilege that is earned by good behavior."

Jones said that the Freedom Riders refused to work, couldn't be taken outside in the yard for exercise because of their uncooperative attitude and often disturbed other prisoners and guards with "shouting and hollering."

This is against maximum security regulations and "we took their from them for awhile." The prisoners also refused to hand back their tin food trays after eating, another violations, and for this their mattresses were taken away for awhile.

Jackson Daily

Minnesota Freedom Rider Dave Morton, 21, was taken from his from his cell and interviewed by Casey and Mrs. Brooks in the corridor.

Sun. 7-7-61

Tall with a bad complexion, he had greasy yellow hair that could easily have been set in a stylish bouffant by any beauty operator, he told reporters he was a member of the Unitarian Church but he didn't believe in God. He wouldn't admit to being an atheist but "that depends on how you define atheist."

In the women's section of the Maximum Security Unit, the electrically operated doors opened with a loud click that resounded the cell block and warned the prisoners of visitors before the matron loudly announced them.

After a few seconds wait at the door visitors walked down the block. The self styled spokesman of the group, a slight blonde was clad only in panties and a dirty white cotton slip, although her cell was at the far end of the corridor and she had more than ample warning.

Her cell mate had a sheet wrapped around her. The whole group of women, with one or two exceptions looked very young and one of them gave her age as 18.

NO BATH

" Don't come too close, bragged one, "I haven't had a bath since I've been here."

When asked about this later R. L. Patterson, education director for Parchman said that if this were the case the "matorn would have bathed her personally because there's a federal regulation that all prisoners will bathe twice a week."

The prisoners all said their morale was very high but they complained about their reading matter. The only book the Maximum Security regulations allow is the Bible.

One of the prisoners told Mrs. Brooks that he had written a letter to his grandmother that "contained lots of code."

Before talking to the prisoners, Grant Tyson of the Hinds County Sheriff's Department took visitors on a tour of the Maximum Security unit.

They were taken through the kitchen where dinner was being prepared and placed on Army-Navy style tin trays. Fare for the evening included spaghetti and cheese with onions, two slices of cornbread, garden butter beans and fresh peaches. Prisoners also have all the milk they want from the prison dairy.

TOUR PRISON

After talking to Minnesota Freedom Riders Mrs. Brooks and Casey toured the 22,000-acre prison farm by car.

They saw the 60-bed hospital, the new first offender camp being built, the first chapel going up, the honor camps, the broom and mop factory, the fields of head high corn, peach groves with ripe peaches and patches of sugar cane, beans and tomatoes.

The tour was concluded with dinner at the guest house where Supt. Jones and his wife sat them down to country fried ham, crisp hot biscuits with melted butter, fresh peaches in thick cream, and an assortment of "home-grown" garden vegetables.

Before traveling to Parchman in cars driven by state Highway Patrolmen Grady Gilmore and Charlie Snodgrass the visitors had toured Jackson city jail and Hinds county jail.

At the Hinds County jail they talked to a Negro woman who identified herself as Barbara Jane Kay of Englewood, N. J., and insisted that being deprived of her toilet articles was a mistreatment. She expected a Saturday transfer to Parchman.

Assistant Attorney General Garland Lyell of Jackson escorted the visitors on their tour of Jackson and Hinds County jail facilities and introduced them to Parchman Supt. Jones.

Jones told them "this is a prison and we have to make rules and regulations. These Freedom Riders aren't doing any work, aren't cooperating, and expect to be given plush treatment. We aren't mistreating any of them but when they break our rules they lose some of their privileges, such as writing and receiving letters."

Probers Report 'Riders' Unhurt

The Montgomery Advertiser
Sat. 7-8-61

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — Minnesota officials who interviewed five "Freedom Riders" imprisoned at Parchman, Miss., reported late Friday they found the young Minnesotans had not been mistreated.

Montgomery

Asst. Atty. Gen. John Casey, Jr., and Mrs. Wright Brooks, chairman of the Minnesota Human Rights Commission, made the investigation at the request of Gov. Elmer L. Andersen, who said he had received some reports the "riders" had been mistreated.

Mrs. Brooks and Casey returned Friday and held a news conference at the state capitol. They said they heard some complaints from the prisoners, but none was of a serious nature.

TOUR OF JAIL

"A tour of the prison facilities has convinced me that there have been no examples of mistreatment or abuse," Mrs. Brooks said.

The "riders" from Minnesota, arrested June 11 in a Negro waiting room at a Jackson, Miss., bus depot, were Zev Aelongy, 23; Marvin Davidov, 20; David Morton, 21; Eugene Uphoff, 19, and Robert Baum, 19. All are white. Arrested at the same time was a University of Minnesota coed, Claire O'Connor, since released on a $500 appeal bond.

Mrs. Brooks said the "riders" voiced "some good natured chiding about the food, but no serious complaints as to adequacy of the diet."

As of last Sunday, Mrs. Brooks said, the "riders" have had permission to send out two letters a week. She said they previously were deprived of writing privileges as a disciplinary action. Mrs. Brooks said prison officials explained the action was taken because the inmates sang at time the cells were to be kept quiet. Aelongy was further disciplined for his leadership in the singing, Mrs. Brooks said, and had his mattress taken away for a time.

Mrs. Brooks said prison authorities explained the young Minnesotans were not allowed to work because of clashes they might have with other prisoners who do not share their integration views.

Minnesota's Governor Hits Mixing Riders

Jackson Daily News
Thurs. 7-11-61

The governor of Minnesota, who sent two representative to Mississippi last week to investigate this state's handling of "freedom riders," criticized the "riders" yesterday in a letter to Gov. Ross Barnett.

Gov. Elmer Andersen of Minnesota told Barnett, "If a law is wrong or bad there are proper ways to seek to change it.

"At no time can we condone deliberate breaking of any law."

The "freedom riders," including five from Andersen's state, have sought to end racial separation in public transportation facilities in Mississippi by violating local and state laws.

The "riders" deliberate violations of state laws, Andersen told Barnett, "strike as deep fundamentals in our American way of life."

Jackson Daily News

The governor fo Minnesota made the comment ina letter thanking the governor of Mississippi for permitting two Minnesota officials to inspect prison facilities and treatment of Minnesota citizens jailed as "freedom riders."

The five Minnesotans were in state penitentiary's maximum security unit, a legal imprisonment to relieve crowded conditions in Hinds County jail.

The two Minnesota officials Andersen said, reported "The prisoners indicate they have in no way been mistreated, that there was some delay about mail earlier but that this has now been worked out."

Andersen said he believed the trip and the visit has been worthwhile from our standpoint, and I believe it has been beneficial from Governor Barnett."

'Rider' Protests Jail Treatment

Claims Conditions Aimed At Turning Prisoners Into Animals

By United Press International

JACKSON, Miss., July 4. James Farmer, national director of the Congress of Racial Equality, charged Tuesday Mississippi's treatment of imprisoned protest riders is aimed at "turning them into animals."

Farmer, of New York City, made the charge in a news conference 12 hours after he was freed under bond following 40 days behind bars.

The 41-year-old Negro, who was among the first 27 riders to come here, said he and other riders in the state penitentiary's maximum security cellblock were forced to sleep for three nights in their underwear "on hard, cold steel floors," with fans "going full blast to freeze us out."

Breathing Difficult

Then, he said, "the fans were turned completely off for three days, making the heat unbearable and the stench stifling. It was difficult to breathe."

Farmer said the action was taken against the riders because they sang.

Penitentiary Supt. Fred Jones confirmed that the mattresses were taken away as punishment "for hollering and carrying on. I told them I would take their mattresses if they didn't agree to keep quiet. They were keeping other prisoners awake."

Mr. Jones said the mattresses were returned after the riders agreed "to stop hollering."

"A penitentiary must have some order and discipline," said Mr. Jones.

As to the stench mentioned by Farmer, Mr. Jones said, "It comes from the population in there."

No Regard For Law

"This is a bunch of troublemakers without regard to laws who came here to make trouble," said the superintendent. "They thought they could come down here and take over, but they're not going to take over as long as I'm here."

Farmer returned to New York late Tuesday after meeting here with C.O.R.E. repreesntatives who are organizing further rides to Jackson, Nashville, New Orleans and Montgomery. Farmer said he was instructing the workers "what new riders can expect from the penitentiary."

---

Miss O'Conner, one of 168 riders convicted of breaching the peace, was freed from the state penitentiary Monday night under $500 bond.

She and five other young persons from Minnesota were arrested here June 12 after refusing orders to leave a Negro lunch counter at the Greyhound Bus Station.

She was the first of the group to be freed.

CORE Director Returns From Mississippi

NEW YORK (AP) — James Farmer, national director of the Congress of Racial Equality, returned from Mississippi Wednesday night strengthened in his determination to continue to sponsor riders in the South.

He told this to newsmen after his arrival by plane at Idlewild Airport. He was released Tuesday from the Mississippi State Penitentiary on a $500 appeal bond after serving 40 days of a 60-day sentence.

Farmer, 41, a Negro, was arrested May 24 when he tried to enter a restaurant in the bus terminal at Jackson, Miss.

He said that within the next 10 days riders will travel through "three centers in the South" other than Jackson. He did not specify further.

Leader of 'Riders' Charges Prison Hardships

JACKSON, Miss. July 4 (UPI)—The National director of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) charged today that Mississippi prison officials are inflicting "psychological creulty" upon jailed "Freedom Riders."

"My three weeks at the (Mississippi State) Penitentary tried my faith in human nature," said James Farmer in a news conference 12 hours after his release on bond. He accused officials of trying to turn "Freedom Riders into animals."

Prison Supt. Fred Jones denied any unjust treatment of the "freedom riders." He said the group was rowdy and he had to deal out some punishment to maintain "order and discipline."

Farmer, 41-year-old New York Negro who was among the first 27 freedom riders to test segregation laws at bus terminals here, said he and other triders were forced to sleep for three nights in their underwear "on hard, cold steel floors" with fans "going full blast to freeze us out."

Then, he said, "the fans were turned completely off for three days, making that heat unbearable and the stench stifling. It was difficult to breathe."

Jones confirmed that the mattresses were taken away as punishment "for hollering and carrying on. I told them I would take their mattresses if they didn't agree to keep quiet. They were keeping other prisoners awake."

Farmer said the Riders are "still in good spirits" and he said the massive integration campaign, which has brought 169 riders to jail here since May 24, "is just beginning."

"There's much more to follow along this and different lines," he promised.

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Police arrested eight "Freedom Riders" Friday in the white waiting room of the Trailways bus terminal as they attempted to crack the segregation barrier.

Police Capt. J. L. Ray ordered the group, four white and four Negro, to move on. When they refused, he placed them under arrest and led them to the paddy wagon for the short trip to the station.

The eight, who came to Jackson from Montgomry, Ala., brought the total arrested to 198.

OUTSIDE DOOR

Earlier, acting City Judge W. B. Fontaine convicted four groups of young Jackson "Freedom Riders" and handed down $200 fines and 4-month jail sentences. Twenty "riders" were in the four groups arrested earlier this month.

Montgomery

Ray made the latest arrests as the group neared the entrance to the white lunch counter inside the station. The white waiting room was practically filled with passengers, but there were no incidents.

Tom Gaither, field secretary for the Congress of Racial Equality, said CORE sponsored the trip and that it was the first group of "Freedom Riders" to leave Montgomery for Jackson since July 2.

SOFT DRINKS

The bi-racial group left Montgomery late Friday morning after several of them had soft drinks at the white lunch counter at the Trailways Bus Station.

A large number of city detectives and patrolmen were at the scene, but there were no incidents and no unusual crowds.

Two white youths and three Negroes sat down at the white lunch cunter and ordered soft drinks. They were served by a Negro waiter who handed them the drinks in paper cups.

Later, the five riders joined their colleagues seated in the waiting room. Several white persons sitting nearby stood up and walked away when the group took seats.

Ray was the only witness at the trial of the 20 "Freedom Riders" convicted Friday. He testified he had information beforehand that the four groups were going to transportation terminals to create an incident.

Ray said the "Riders" were arrested after officers told them to move on and they failed to do so.

42 RIDERS BEGIN A HUNGER STRIKE

The New York Times

Group in Jackson Jails Asks Restraints on Segregation

June 2-61

JACKSON, Miss., June 1 (AP)—A group of jailed Freedom Riders began a fast today to protest segregation in southern train and bus depots.

The fastors—both white and Negro—told their jailers their action was not a reflection of the treatment in the jail here. One white rider said the fast would continue until Federal officials obtained injunctions to halt segregation in transportation facilities in the South.

Jailers said all riders still in jail were apparently taking part in the fast.

New York Times

Fifty-two Freedom Riders were arrested when they arrived in Jackson by bus and train and tried to use facilities reserved for white persons at the depots.

All fifty-two refused at first to post appeal bonds or pay the $200 fines levied against each for a breach of the peace. However, ten later posted bond and were released. Those in jail are working out their sentences at $3 a day.

Prisoners Segregated

White and Negro prisoners are segregated. Seven white riders refused their breakfasts and the Negro prisoners joined at noon. The white prisoners are in the city jail and the Negroes are in the county jail.

Acting Gov. Paul Johnson of Mississippi said the Freedom Riders wanted only publicity and "when pubilicity is absent, their entire mission has failed."

Authorities in Hinds (Jackson) County promised an investigation today of reports of beatings of Negro Freedom Riders while they were held at the county prison farm. This group was later transferred to the county jail in downtown Jackson.

The first to complain of beatings was the Rev. C. T. Vivian 36-year-old minister from Chattanooga, Tenn. He said guards at the county penal farm had clubbed him when he failed to address them as "Sir."

The most recent complaint came from Jean Thompson, 19, of New Orleans, a Negro who went to jail with the first wave of Freedom Riders to arrive last week from Montgomery, Ala.

Says She Was Struck

She charged that the superintendent of the county prison farm, Max Thomas, had struck her when she refused to address him as "Sir."

She also contended that prison guards had struck Henry Thomas, 19, of St. Augustine, Fla., a student at Howard University in Washington.

The superintendent was ordered to "take a few days off" during the investigation of the alleged beatings.

Sheriff J. R. Gilfoy, who will conduct the inquiry, discounted Miss Thompson's accusations.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation said it had made an inquiry into Miss Thompson's complaints, as it had the reported beating of Mr. Vivian.

The next freedom riders reportedly will start at Richmond, Va., in the next few days and head for Jackson. More groups of Cornell University students said they planned such trips. Several Cornell students were among the fifty-two arrested here.

Clergymen Back Riders

ALBANY, June 1 (AP) — Lutheran clergymen from New York and New England voiced overwhelming support today for the efforts of Freedom Riders to break down racial barriers in the South.

The resolution was adopted at the closing session of the three-day convention of the United Lutheran Synod of New York and New England.

The resolution did not mention Freedom Riders. It voiced the synod's "warm and sympathetic support" to those seeking to eliminate racial bars in public transportation "through non-violent techniques."

Twenty newly convicted "freedom riders" waited today transfer to the state penitentiary at Parchman to begin serving jail terms.

Municipal Judge James Spencer convicted the 20 on breach of the peace charges yesterday but freed one member of the group on an assault charge filed in connection with his arrival here Saturday.

Breach of the peace sentences were the same as many before them—$200 fines and four months in jail.

Twelve of the group were arrested at the Greyhound bus terminal Saturday night, seven were arrested at Greyhound Sunday morning and one was arrested at the Illinois Central Railroad depot Sunday morning.

Leo Washington, Negro, of New Orleans, was charged with assault in an incident at his arrival with the Saturday night group.

Cecil Lindsay of Missouri, a graduate student at Mississippi College, charged that Washington deliberately tramped on his foot at the bus terminal.

RULED ACCIDENTAL

But Spencer ruled that the incident was apparently accidental and set Washington free on the charge. However, he was convicted of breach of the peace along with other member of his group.

Washington claimed Lindsey struck him as he started to sit next to the white man in the terminal.

Judge Spencer said he had no doubt that Lindsay's foot was tramped but that it was apparently accidental.

Rose Rosenburg, 55, Los Angeles white woman attorney, called on Judge Spencer to seek better treatment for riders held at Parchman.

She complained that riders convicted of misdemeanor were treated worse in that they were denied use of the library or reading material and were lodged in the maximum security cellblock near the lethal gas chamber."

She also claimed women in the group were submitted to humiliating search.

Spencesr told her his court had no authority to act on jail regulations.

But Prison Supt. Fred Jones said prison officials were "forced to start the checks after the first group of riders slipped in some goof balls and dope pills." He said the contraband items were discovered in a cell check while riders were taking showers.

Searches are conducted by women, he said.

The county began moving convicted riders to Parchman when it became apparent they would overflow jail facilities here.

Yesterday's convictions raised the total sent to jail to 244 since the Congress of Racial Equality rides began here May 24. Three juveniles among the 247 arrested are awaiting youth court hearings.

Meanwhile four persons arrested among early riders passed appeal deadlines and must sit out the sentence.

CORE has posted $500 appeal bonds for 99 convicted riders, all before they had been in jail 40 bays. Convicted riders have 40 days in which to appeal.

Yesterday, however, four rejected the appeal offer and chose remain in jail to serve their erms.

Three of the four were convicted June 6 and one was convicted

FREEDOM RIDERS- JACKSON
ATTY. THURGOOD MARSHALL

Thurgood's suit is new legal blow

(SPECIAL TO AFRO)

JACKSON, Miss. — The Freedom Riders and Thurgood Marshall, chief legal counsel for the NAACP, this week joined hands in a massive, double-barrel assault on Mississippi's laws for racial segregation of interstate travelers.

The dual action takes the form of a lawsuit in Federal Court to bar enforcement of the state's discriminatory laws and a massive invasion by Freedom Riders, with July 4 as the target date for Mississippi and other Southern states to capitulate on jim-crow travel laws.

The suit to stop the arrest of Freedom Riders was filed, last Friday, by Marshall in behalf of three local residents, Samuel Bailey, Joseph Broadwater and Brunett L. Jacob.

Associated with Marshall in the case are two other lawyers, R. Jess Brown, legal counsel for the Mississippi NAACP, and Mrs. Constance Baker Motley of New York, a member of the NAACP's legal staff.

THE SUITS ask that the City of Jackson, the state and all bus lines and common carriers operating in the state be enjoined from continuing to enforce the state's racial segregation laws in waiting rooms and rest room facilities at transport terminals.

The defendants are State Attorney General Joe Patterson, the City of Jackson Mayor Allen Thompson City Commissioners Thomas B. Marshall and D. L. Luckey, Chief of Police W. D. Rayfield, Continental Southern Lines, Southern Greyhound Lines, Illinois Central Railroads and Cicero Carr of the restaurant at the Municipal Airport.

The step-up in the Freedom Ride invasion of Jackson and other southern cities was voted at a three - day meeting of the Students Nonviolent Coordinating Committee in Louisville, Ky.

FRANK STANLEY JR., leader of the Louisville Youth Movement said approximately 50 delegates from 15 states attended.

All of the speakers urged an all out assault on all forms of racial segregation in the United States, particularly in the South.

During the past week, a total of 40 persons were arrested in bus terminals, railroad station and municipal airport here. All were convicted, fined and given jail sentences.

THOSE ARRESTED included Mark Lane, member of the New York Assembly, and Perry Sutton, president of the New York City NAACP.

The men, who traveled to Jackson via Montgomery, Ala., were taken into custody in a restroom marked "White only." Sutton, an attorney, told the arresting officer that he was an interstate passenger when ordered to "move on."

The officer, Capt. J. L. Ray, told the pair "You're under arrest for refusing to obey an officer."

THE ARRESTS occurred on the following days:

Tuesday, June 6 — seven who arrived aboard a bus from Nashville.

Wednesday, June 7 — six, via bus from Nashville; two, via plane from St. Louis, Mo.

Thursday, June 8 — two, via plane from Montgomery; nine, via train from New Orleans.

Saturday, June 10 — eight via train from Nashville.

Since May 24 when two busloads of Freedom Riders were arrested upon arrival from Montgomery, a total of 112 had been arrested, convicted and sentenced as of the weekend.

Judge Rejects Rider Protest

Can't Bypass State Court, Rules Mize

A federal judge today denied a plea which challenged the constitutionality of Mississippi's arrests of the "freedom riders."

District Judge Sidney Mize of Biloxi, Miss. said it would be improper for him to grant a writ of habeas corpus until the matter is taken through the Mississippi state courts.

The plea was brought before Mize by two attorneys who claimed state courts are "behind segregation" and the matter should be "pried out of their hands" by federal courts.

A total of 164 riders have been arrested here since May 24 after attempting to integrate waiting rooms in bus, train and plane terminals. They have been convicted on breach of the peace charges.

However, attorneys William M. Kunstler of New York and Jack Young of Jackson, in their plea, claimed Mississippi authorities are using the breach of the peace statute illegally to enforce racial segregation.

The plea was brought on behalf of Elizabeth Wyckoff, 45, a free lance writer from Greenwich Village, N. Y. who was arrested here June 2 with an interracial group of riders.

In a hearing on the plea last week Kunstler told Mize it was his duty to issue the writ even though Miss Wyckoff had not exhausted her legal remedies in state courts. "State courts are not going to be of any assistance to her," he said.

Attorney Tom Watkins of Jackson, arguing for the state, claimed that issuance of such a federal writ would "pervert the entire system of state courts."

Watkins said Kuntlser was wrong in claiming Miss Wyckoff would not get a fair hearing in Mississippi courts and he said Kuntlser owned "an apology to the state courts of Mississippi."

Mize upheld Watkins' argument in his brief ruling delivered from the bench this morning. He said that law provides a person's legal remedies in the state court be exhausted before a case is brought to federal court."

'Riders' Seek More Steam In Civil Rights

NEW YORK (AP) — A "Freedom Train," carrying more than 1,000 Negroes and whites, will roll into Washington next month to try to put some steam into civil rights legislation.

John Morsell, assistant to the executive director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP), said yesterday the plan will be carried out as part of the organization's annual convention.

On July 12, the third day of the week-long convention in Philadelphia next month, delegates from throughout the country will board the special train for the trip to Washington.

They will spend the day there contacting their home-state congressmen and senators, urging them to take immediate and affirmative action on pending civil rights legislation.

Principal measures for which they will urge support, as spelled out in a bill sponsored by Sen. Joseph Clark (D-Pa.) and Rep. Emanuel Cellars (D-NY); include:

1. Setting of a mandatory deadline of not later than September, 1963, for all school districts to begin implementing the 1954 Supreme Court decision banning racial segregation in schools.

2. Authorizing the attorney general's office to initiate federal court action against any kind of civil rights violations, in addition to violations of voting rights.

3. Applying fair employment practices in additional areas not now covered by the president's commission on equal employment opportunities.

Negro 'Riders' Try New Twist

Four Arrested In Jackson Say They Were Trying To Leave Town

By United Press International

JACKSON, Miss., June 23.— Four young Negroes gave the so-called "Freedom Rider" movement a new twist Friday.

They walked into the Trailways Bus terminal's white waiting room and were arrested.

Unlike the 140 riders already arrested, the Negroes had not just come to Jackson. They were trying to catch a bus out of town.

However, like their predecessors in the movement, they were taken into custody on breach of the peace charges.

Order Is Ignored

A policeman ordered them to move on as soon as they entered the waiting room but they ignored the order and were arrested.

One of them held a statement they had prepared for the press, but an arresting officer took it before he could hand it to a newsman.

Richard Haley, a worker for the Congress on Racial Equality, later issued a statement on the group's behalf, saying they joined the rider movement to show that Jackson Negroes are behind the riders who have come here.

However, according to the addresses the Negroes gave police, none of them is from Jackson.

Mr. Haley's statement said the riders were taking issue with public statements by Mayor Allen Thompson that "Negroes in Jackson get a square deal" and that "they either ignore or resent the 'Freedom Riders' and their cause."

'Serving Notice'

By entering the station, Mr. Haley said, the Negroes were serving notice "that Negroes in Jackson have graduated from the wish for freedom to the act."

Those arrested included Thomas M. Armstrong, 19, of Silver Creek, Miss., and Mary M. Harrison, San Antonio, Texas, both students at Tougaloo Southern Christian College near here; Joseph Lee Ross, 25, of Nashville, a student at Tennessee A&I, and Elnora R. Price, 26, of Raymond, Miss.

Meanwhile, seven Negroes arrested at the city zoo on breach of peace charges gained their fraedom on $500 bonds. Officers said they would be tried next week. The trial of the four arrested Friday is expected to be held Monday.

---

JACKSON, Miss., June 23.— (UPI)—A 13-year-old Negro girl who was arrested with six companions after sitting on benches at the Jack on Zoo Thursday was charged with assault Friday.

Officers said a white woman filed a complaint that the girl pushed her 4 - year - old child from a water fountain at the zoo.

Th girl and her companions also face charges of breaching the peace. Customarily, only white persons use the benches and water fountains at the zoo.

---

SIOUX FALLS, S. D., June 23. (UPI)— A Negro family has filed a half-million-dollar civil suit against the United States District attorney for South Dakota and the Sheriff of Yankton County on grounds of racial discrimination.

The suit charged that Harold C. Doyle, while Yankton County state's attorney, and Sheriff Ed Sampson denied the family "equal protection of the law."

According to the suit, the negroes were forced to leave their farm near Yankton by illegal "acts of force and violence."

Local Negroes Propose Ride To Washington

NAACP Would Let State Solons Know It Opposes Them

By W. C. SHOEMAKER
Daily News Staff Writer

Jackson's latest load of "freedom riders" awaited trial today while the NAACP here planned a march on Washington to protest voting records of Mississippi's Congressional delegation.

Twenty "riders" — 11 Negroes and nine whites—were arrested on breach of the peace charges at the Illinois Central Railroad terminal yesterday morning, a few minutes after they stepped off a train from New Orleans. Several members of the group told police they have prior criminal records.

They were to go on trial in municipal court this afternoon along with four arrested at the Trailways bus terminal Friday.

Yesterday's arrests pushed the total taken into custody to 164 since the rides began May 24. Plans for the protest ride to Washington were announced at an NAACP rally at the Lynch St. Masonic Temple yesterday afternoon.

'REMINDER' RIDE

An official of the organization told a crowd of about 350 persons that the NAACP hopes to recruit 1,000 persons from Jackson to ride a special train to Washington to discuss racial problems with Mississippi congressmen. "We know how far we will get," the spokesman said, "But we want to let them know we know they are there," he said.

The trip was scheduled for July 12.

The Rev. G. E. Haughton, pastor of the Pearl St. AME Church, told the group Negroes "have no alternative now but to rise." "We are going to have sit-ins, read-ins and all kinds of ins," he said.

Haughton said he had served on committees which fought unsuccessfully for Negro policemen, school crossing guards and the integration of Negroes into business and industry here.

Samuel Bailey, a Negro insurance salesman here, told the crowd his daughter was one of seven arrested at the Jackson Zoo last week.

He called on the state Legislature to consult with the NAACP before passing any new segregation laws next session. "Somebody is going to the penitentiary, the federal pen," he said, referring to segregation laws passed by the state.

The Rev. John D. Mangram, chaplain at Tougaloo Southern Christian College, presided at the meeting and told the group that Vickers Inc., last week removed segregation signs from water fountains and restrooms at its North Jackson plant.

PASTOR VISITS JAIL

The Rev. Edward Harrison, pastor of St. Andrew's Episcopal Church, Saturday called on the Rev. Grant Muse in the city jail and made arrangements for him to observe communion in jail yesterday morning.

The Rev. Muse of Berkeley Calif. is serving four months and a $200 fine as a "freedom rider."

The Rev. Harrison took bread and wine to the jail so that Muse and another Episcopal rider could celebrate communion.

Yesterday's arrests were as peaceful as the many before them have been.

The group stepped off the IC's northbound City of New Orleans at 10:10 and walked into the white waiting room.

Police Capt. J. L. Ray told them to "move on". When no one moved he said "Did you hear the order that I gave you?" A leader of the group answered that they did.

"Are you going to obey it?" Ray asked.

"We can't," was the answer.

"Then you're under arrest," Ray said.

Nine minutes after the train stopped the group was headed to jail.

Those arrested, their home towns and occupations were:

John Copeland Rogers, 30, Negro, Los Angeles, professional boxer; his wife, Janice Rogers, 25, Negro, unemployed secretary and model; Marian Alice Kendall, 35, white, Leandro, Calif., social worker; Richard Thorne, 24, Negro, Berkeley, Calif., free lance writer; Norma Lisbon, 27, white, Berkeley, student at the University of California;

Frank Johnson, 21, Negro, Tuscon, Ariz., student at the University of Arizona; Wayne Leslie Taylor, 23, Negro, Los Angeles, unemployed; Gordon L. Harris, 23, white, Rochester, N.Y., student at the University of Rochester; Louise Jean Ingram, 26, white, Los Angeles, Calif., housewife; Claire Toombs, 18, white, Silver Spring, Md., sales clerk;

Claude Albert Liggins, 20, Negro, Los Angeles, student at Los Angeles City College; George M. Blevins, 21, white, Los Angeles; student at an art institute; Arthur Brooks Jr., 22, Negro, Los Angeles, student at Los Angeles City College; Marcia Rosenbaum, 23, white, Los Angeles, painter; Mary Lucille Hamilton, 25, Negro, Los Angeles, grammar school teacher;

Frank Arthur Nelson, 22, white, Brooklyn, N.Y., civil engineer; Gloria Bouknight, 20, Negro, Columbia, S. C., legal secretary; Eddora Mae Manning, 19, Negro, Los Angeles, student at Los Angeles City College; Robert W. Mason, 17, Negro, Los Angeles, high school student.

Jackson Detective Chief M. B. Pierce said Thorne told officers he had been involved in a hassle with immigration authorities in Okinawa three years ago. Frank Johnson said he had a juvenile record in Tucson.

Gordon Harris said he is a conscientious objector to military service and was once arrested in Rochester, N. Y. for vagrancy. Claude Liggins said he was held once in Lake Charles, La., for investigation of the theft of a motor bike and in Los Angeles during the investigation of a burglary.

Blevins said he had been held for a traffic violation and failing to appear in a Los Angeles court. A burglary charge against him was dropped, he told police.

Brooks said he drew a year's probation in Los Angeles for auto theft in 1957.

The Rogers woman said she served eight months in Chicago on a larceny charge while her husband said he served six months and paid a $250 fine for burglary in Los Angeles in 1954.

"Freedom Riders" To Base Appeals On 2 Law Points

By HERB HERBERS

JACKSON, Miss. — (UPI) — Attorneys for 187 convicted "freedom riders" scheduled for court appearances Monday will base their arguments for appeal on two points of law.

The first is a U. S. Supreme Court decision on a Richmond, Va. case closely paralleling the Jackson arrests; the second is a direct attack on the breach of the peace statutes under which almost 300 riders were arrested here since May 24.

The Richmond case was decided by the high court last winter. A Negro law student, Bruce Boynton, staged a sit-in at a white restaurant in a Richmond bus terminal. He refused police orders to move on and was arrested under a state breach of the peace law.

OVERTURNED CONVICTION

The Supreme Court of Virginia upheld the conviction on grounds the arrest constituted proper use of police authority. But on appeal the U. S. Supreme Court overturned the conviction holding that the breach of the peace law — which was sound in itself — was used to maintain segregation in interstate travel facilities.

All of the Jackson riders were arrested for breach of the peace after they refused police orders to move from segregated terminals.

There is a difference in the breach of the peace laws used in the two states. The New York attorneys who are representing the riders-William Kunstler of the American Civil Liberties Union and Carl Richler of the Congress of Racial Equality — say they will ask that Mississippi's laws be struck down as well as the city's use of them.

DELEGATED AUTHORITY

They will contend that the legislature delegated too much authority to the police and that it enacted the laws specifically to preserve segregation.

There are two laws involved, one for single arrests and another for group arrests. They were enacted in the spring of 1960 when sit-in demonstrations were rampant in other Southern states. They were carefully drawn by some of the best legal minds in the state Capitol and were enacted swiftly and overwhelmingly without debate.

'Riders' On Return Trip For Trials

Student "freedom riders" began leaving cities throughout the United States Saturday by regularly scheduled buses for Jackson, Mississippi to arrange pre - trial conferences and trial scheduling for those jailed in there in recent months.

Glenda Gaither, 19, of Great Falls, South Carolina, and Henry James Thomas, 19, of St. Augustine, Florida, who visited the Atlanta World office Saturday morning were among a group of students that left Atlanta Saturday evening for Jackson.

Miss Gaither, a Claflin College coed, told of being confined for 37 days in Mississippi jails. Arrested on a breach of peace charge, Miss Gaither said that she was escorted by police to jail after entering the "white" waiting room in Jackson.

Thomas, a member of the staff of Congress On Racial Equality and Howard University student, stated that "approximately 30 students were arrested with me." The youthful student was jailed and sent to Parchman prison for 45 days after escaping death on a burning Greyhound bus at Anniston, Ala., when it was attacked by an angry white mob.

The Southern Christian Leadership Conference with its headquarters in Atlanta and headed by Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., has sponsored the riders.

Rev. Wyatt Tee Walker, executive director of the SCLC, commenting on the students having to return to Jackson for pre -trial hearings, stated "they are trying to break us financially."

In New York about 100 persons, many of whom said they would fast for 24 hours, demonstrated there Saturday in support of 167 "freedom riders" who will appeal their cases Monday in Jackson, Miss.

The Congress of Racial Equality CORE, sponsoring the demonstration, said that the fasting demonstrators would stay all night in Battery Park.

CORE's New York demonstration was marred by violence Friday night when 32 racially mixed "freedom riders" headed for Jackson by bus to appeal their breach of peace convictions.

An unidentified white man assaulted a newspaper reporter, William Doolittle, 24, of the New York Post, who was covering the departure rally. The man also hit one public relations man, Marvin Rich, 31, who rushed up to him after Doolittle had been hit.

Doolittle was treated at a hospital and released. Rich did not require hospital treatment.

Police were searching for their attacker.

Delay Is Asked In Racial Suits

Mississippi Wants 40 More Days To Prepare For Registration

From The Commercial Appeal
Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 11.— Postponement for 40 days of Federal Justice Department Negro voter - registration suits against Clarke and Forrest county registrars—scheduled to begin Monday—was requested Friday by state Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson.

Federal Dist. Judge Harold Cox, recently appointed, Saturday will hear the petitions, based on inability of the state to prepare for the trials because of a "flood" of other civil rights actions. Other pending Federal suits involve desegregation of the University of Mississippi and a challenge of state statutes for segregation in transportation terminals stemming from the recent "invasion" of self - styled Freedom Riders.

The Justice Department, which filed the actions charging the county officials with arbitrarily refusing to register qualified Negroes because of their race, will resist the postponement.

Filed For Defendants

Requests for postponement were filed on behalf of Circuit Court Theron Lynd of Forrest County at Hattiesburg, and Circuit Clerk A. L. Ramsey of Clarke County at Quitman.

Specifically, the petitions ask for 40 days from Monday for production of voting records requested by Federal officials; and 40 days from Aug. 21, the date set for answers in the cases.

The petitions for postponement point out that special counsel employed by the registrars to assist the attorney general and his staff have had no "acquaintance with the field of law basically involved," and that the two groups have other private practice which require "their proper and constant daily attention."

The petition states that these cases "involve many important, far-reaching, intricate and complicated questions of fact, law equity and constitutional interpretations involving and requiring intensive and extensive preparation, research, investigation and analysis prior to the hearing."

"The said counsel for Lynd and Ramsey, who are general practitioners, and the assistant and special assistant attorneys general have been unable to properly prepare and investigate the law and the facts and confer among themselves and with the defendants in order to properly prepare for the hearing," the petition for the registrars asserts.

'Heavily Burdened'

The petition also states that the attorney general and his assistants and special assistants "are heavily burdened with cases in this (Southern) District Court and one in the Northern District in the field of civil rights."

It cites that although defense attorneys "have been diligent in the preparation and defenses of the cases, that further time is necessary for said attorneys to properly investigate the law and the facts so as to properly discharge their duty to their clients and this court."

"This motion is made so that justice may be done in the premises and the postponement requested is not made for delay only," the petition states. "Unless the said hearings are postponed and further extension of time granted, these defendants and their rights and privileges will suffer grave injustice and they will be sorely prejudiced."

Three other Negro voter-registration suits have been filed. They involve registrars in Jeff Davis, Walthall and Bolivar counties, the latter one in the Northern District.

Report Monday, Riders Ordered

Efforts To Avoid Mass Trek To Mississippi Lost By New York Lawyer

By JAMES SAGGUS
Associated Press Staff Writer

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 10. — Self-styled "Freedom Riders," previously convicted, lost their fight Thursday to avoid a mass trek to Mississippi to start appeal proceedings and their lawyer gave them the signal to begin the trip.

Attorney William Kunstler of New York tried in circuit court and the state Supreme Court to win modification of a Hinds County court order requiring all defendants to be present on the opening day of the county court term handling their appeals.

Circuit Judge Leon Hendrick refused to order county court to change its rule and Kunstler conferred with Justice W. N. Ethridge Jr. of the Supreme Court by telephone later in the day.

Kunstler said he advised Justice Ethridge of his arguments and Ethridge told him he did not have the power to take the action Kunstler sought. Kunstler said he did not ask for a formal hearing on the matter.

No More Appeals

"This is it," he said. "There are no more appeals. I've called and told them to have all the defendants here for the opening of the term."

Kunstler sought an order from Judge Hendrick to waive or modify the County Court rule requiring all defendants to be present in person on the opening day of the term Monday, rather than be represented by lawyers.

County Judge Russel Moore entered an order more than a year before the protest rides began that all defendants must be present in person when the calendar for the term of court is called up, or forfeit their bonds.

Hendrick said the court order sought by Kunstler was not appropriate for the riders' cases, that under Mississippi law Kunstler would have to resort to an appeal after some action in the case.

"If Judge Moore should order the bonds forfeited because the defendants did not appear," Hendrick said, "you would have the right to resist forfeiture.

"I can't tell Judge Moore how to run his court."

Sought Writ

Kunstler, representing 187 convicted riders who will appeal their breach of peace convictions in City Court to County Court, had sought a writ of mandamus, ordering Moore to void his appearance rule, or a writ of prohibition, prohibiting Moore from enforcing it.

Hendrick said in Mississippi mandamus writs were issued only when a lower court refused to take any action, and prohibition writs to keep a lower court from acting when it properly had no jurisdiction.

Neither procedure, Hendrick said, was permissible in this case.

Kunstler said he sought to void Judge Moore's appearance rule because he felt it was an abuse of his discretion and would cost the riders an unnecessary $20,000.

Opposing Kunstler's request were city prosecutors Jack Travis and Bob Nichols. They went into the limited use of he two writs Kunstler sought and argued that the riders had waited until the last minute to challenge Moore's rule.

Under an agreement between both sides, the trial of the appeals cases before County Court juries will begin Aug. 21 and will be run off at two per day, or 10 weekly. The trials are expected to last 18-20 weeks.

Two Beaten as Riders Leave N. Y. for Jackson

The Washington Post p.A7

Dem. 8-13-61

A New York Post newspaper reporter and a public relations man for the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) were beaten minutes after the riders left here late last night. The riders are traveling to Jackson to apeal thpeir recent for their attempts to break Mississippi racial barriers.

William Doolittle, 24, Post reortepr who covered the departure, was attacked by a burly white man who cursed him. The man knocked Doolittle down, and then hurled a challenge at nearby CORE members.

Washington

Marvin Rich, 31, public relations man for CORE which sponsored the riders, walked up to the man, who immediately knocked him down. Police were called and a friend of the assailant persuaded him to flee as another reorpter went to Rich's aid.

Police were searching for the attacker.

CORE sponsored a 24-hour fast which began today in Battery Park at the tip of Manhattan, then shifted to Liberty Island, where the Statue of Liberty is located. About 100 persons were on hand for the demonstration which CORE said would continue tonight.

The demonstrators were to return to Battery Park tonight when the island is closed for the night.

Doolittle was treated at a hospital and released. Rich did not require hospital treatment.

The riders were being led by James Farmer, national director of CORE, which held a rally before the bus departure. Farmer said their appearance in Jackson Monday will consist of filing appeals and having individual trials set.

A total of 187 "Freedom Riders" from New York, Los Angeles, New Orleans, Nashville and Cincinnati and Atlanta are converging on Jackson to appear Monday in the Hinds County Recorders court.

New York Rider Relates Harrowing Tale Of Life In Maximum Security

NEW YORK (AP)—A teen-age "Freedom Rider," who was imprisoned for three weeks in Mississippi, said yesterday that "terribly brutal treatment" was inflicted on some antisegregation demonstrators confined there.

Kenneth Shilman, 18, of Oceanside, N.Y., one of the white youths in the group held in the Mississippi State Penitentiary, said "cattle shockers" and "wrist breakers" were used on some of them.

In Jackson, Hinds County Sheriff J. B. Gilfoy denied any inhuman treatment and said "we're leaning over backward in handling them."

He said the general picture painted by Shilman about prison clothing and cells was correct and was normal procedure "in most penitentiaries for handling prisoners."

Shilman's accusations — termed exaggerated by Gilfoy — involved two riders.

"We were kept in maximum security—two-man cells—in our underwear and with the light burning day and night," he said.

From his cell, he said he saw two Chicago Freedom Riders, Felix Singer and Terry Sullivan, both whites, dragged naked along 60 yards of concrete corridor after they refused to strip and walk to their cells.

"Their clothes were ripped off of them," he said. "As they were dragged past us, the skin was tearing off their bodies, and the extreme pain showed on their faces," he said.

Electric shockers, generally used on livestock, had first been used on them before they were dragged, he said, adding: "I saw the burns afterward on Sullivan's arms and legs."

Later, Shilman said, when the two were taken to be fingerprinted, "wrist-breakers," clamps with a handle for applying pressure to the wrists, were put on them.

"When they were pulled along the hall, Felix was yelling 'you're breaking my arm,'" Shilman related. "He fell and his head hit the concrete floor and then he was dragged nude on his stomach. It was indescribable."

Afterward, he said, Sullivan's wrists were swollen "twice the size."

Shilman, who was among the first group of whites and Negroes shifted in mid-June to the penitentiary after their arrest June 2 in Jackson, Miss., said he lost 30 pounds in 21 days of hunger strike.

He was released Saturday on a $500 appeal bond, he said, but three of his colleagues remain here on prolonged hunger strikes.

He said that one of them, Price Chatham, 29, of East Rockaway, Queens, N. Y., was in his 25th day, and was down from 150 pounds to 120 pounds.

Describing conditions in the two-man, 4-by-9 foot cells in which the Fredom Riders are kept without clothing at the penitentiary, Shilman said, "We are offered three meals a day, and allowed a shower twice a week, but nothing else, no cigarettes, no books, nothing."

Sheriff Gilfoy said Singer and Sullivan were dragged about 15 feet along a smooth concrete hallway, a surface incapable of tearing flesh.

All prisoners are undressed when they arrive and are given prison garb in exchange for civilian clothes.

Gilfoy said the two lay down in the truck which transported them from Jackson to the state penitentiary at Parchman, and had to be moved bodily.

He said they then lay down at the hall entrance and said:

"You're going to have to make us do what you want us to do."

Turning to Chatham, the sheriff said the New Yorker had lost only 2½ pounds during his "hunger strike" and had started taking meals as soon as he had been placed in a cell alone. Previously, he had access to the food of other prisoners.

RIDER LEADERS HUDDLE TODAY

Negro organization chiefs called a strategy session in Jackson today to plan more "freedom rides" into the city.

The meeting came a day after 23 of the latest riders arrested were sentenced to four months in jail and fined $200 on breach of the peace charges. Yesterday's convictions pushed the total to 163 since May 24.

Another a 17-year-old Los Angeles Negro boy, was sent home by his attorney because he is a juvenile. He was among 20 arrested at the Illinois Central Railroad station Sunday.

The strategy meeting was called today by the Freedom Rider Coordinating Committee, composed of leaders of four sponsoring organizations.

Scheduled to attend the meeting were Bernard Lee of Atlanta, an official of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference; Gordon Carey, field director of the Congress of Racial Equality; Diane Nash of the Nashville Christian Leadership Council; and Charles Sherrod, field secretary for the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee.

Lee said he will attend in the place of the Rev. Wyatt Walker of Atlanta, who was arrested as a "rider" here last week and is still in jail.

Lee said the group meets regularly in different places to plan new moves. He said today's huddle is "just another routine session."

"We may look into the legal ramifications of the freedom rides," he said.

Lee said the group does not plan to discuss the possibility of discontinuing the rides into Jackson.

The Rev. Martin Luther King of Atlanta, president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, said he hopes to attend today's meeting but wasn't sure he would make it. He was in Indianapolis last night.

New 'Freedom' Panel Promptly Put in Jail

Jackson, Miss., June 6 [Special]—Seven more self-labeled "freedom riders" including two from Chicago, came here today to get arrested and were promptly accommodated.

While their arrest routine was the same as that accorded their 65 jailed predecessors, there were indications their court treatment would be varied.

When the latest arrivals were processed yesterday, being given the usual penalty of a $200 fine and a suspended 60 day sentence, City Prosecutor Jack Travis said henceforth he would seek the maximum penalty of a four month jail sentence in addition to the $200 fine on the breach of peace charge placed against the freedom riders.

Losing Some of Its Steam

All except one of the new group were from the north, the source of a majority of the latest riders as the assault on bus and train depot segregation appeared to be losing some of its steam.

Today's group of five white persons and two Negroes came here by bus from New Orleans, marched into the segregated waiting room and stood just inside the door, apparently waiting to be arrested. Their spokesman said when they left New Orleans they expected to be arrested and would serve out their fines in jail, as have a majority of their convicted predecessors.

The white riders in the group are Terry Sullivan, 22, Chicago; James Wahlstrom, 24, Madison, Wis.; Newell Weber, East Orange, N. J.; Abraham Bassfield, 24, Brooklyn, and James McDonough, 22, Huntington, N. Y. The Negroes are John Ashford, 22, Chicago, and Shirley Thompson, 18, New Orleans.

We're Coming by Plane

The first "freedom fly-in" was expected tomorrow from St. Louis. A group sponsored by the Jackson chapter of the Committee on Racial Equality [C. O. R. E.], said they would take off aboard a Delta air liner to come here tomorrow to challenge the use of facilities at the Jackson airport.

Meanwhile, tension remained high at Trinity, N. C., where a roadhouse battle between young whites and Negroes last night threatened to become a full scale race riot.

Squads of highway patrolmen, sheriff's deputies and police broke up a battle that involved about 40 Negroes and 10 whites and later resulted in numerous armed persons of both races gathering at the crossroad community's Negro district.

Negroes Come Back Fighting

The dispute was touched off at a store and cafe which earlier had refused service to two Negro youths. A crowd of young Negroes returned last night, as the ignored youths had threatened, and a fist fight between them and some white youths ensued.

Robert Parris, 20, owner of the store, was knocked down and severely beaten with belts and sticks. He disappeared at the height of the fight, arousing the belief he had been kidnaped. Armed bands of white persons roamed the area looking for him.

Parris returned home this morning and explained he had fled to safety beneath a house where he passed out. His body bore the marks of the beating but he was not seriously injured.

He said that during the mass assault on him he "was on the bottom most of the time and they couldn't get at me very well." He said he "finally rolled out from under them," adding: "I couldn't see anything but Negroes so I took off."

Rider Charges Mississippians Used Shockers, 'Wrist-Breakers' in Prison

NEW YORK, June 26 (AP) A teenage "Freedom Rider," who was imprisoned for three weeks in Mississippi, said today that terribly brutal treatment was inflicted on two antisegregation demonstrators confined there.

Kenneth Shilman, 18, of Oceanside, N. Y., one of the white youths among the group held in the Mississippi State Penitentiary, said "cattle shockers' 'and 'wrist-breakers" were used on some of them.

Shilman spoke in an interview here after his return from Mississippi, where he wa sreleased Saturday.

In Jackson, Hinds County Sheriff J. R. Gilfoy denied any inhuman treatment and said: "We're leaning over backward in handling them."

"We were kept in maximum security, two-man cells in our underwear and with the light burning da yan dnight," Shilman said.

From his cell, he said, he saw two Chicago Freedom Riders, Felix Singer and Terry Sullivan, both whites, dragged naked along 60 yards of concrete corridor after they refused to strip and walk to their cells.

"Their clothes were ripped off of them," he said. "As they were dragged past us, the skin was tearing off their bodies, and the extreme pain showed on their faces." he said.

Electric shockers, generally used in livestock, had been used on them before they were dragged, he said, adding: "I saw the burns afterward on Sullivan arms and legs."

Later, Shilman said, when the two were taken to be fingerprinted, "wrist-b r e a k-ers," clamps with a handle for a p p l y i n g pressure to the wrists, were put on them.

"When they were pulled along the hall, Felix was yelling, 'You're breaking my arm,'" Shilman related. "He fell and his head hit the concrete floor, and then he was dragged nude on his stomach. It was indescribable."

Shilman, who was among the first group of whites and Negroes shifted in mid-June to the Penitentiary after their arrest June 2 in Jackson, said he olst 30 pounds in 21 days of hunger strike.

He was released Saturday on a $500 appeal bond, he said, but three of his colleagues re-m a i n there on prolonged hunger strikes.

He said one of them, Price Chatham, 29, of East Rockaway, Queens, N. Y., was in his 25th day, and was down from 150 to 120 pounds.

"He was a thin, 6-foot-3 fellow to begin with, but he's extremely thin now," Shilman said. "He's quite weak. He hasn't eaten since June 2, and says he will not eat until the Interstate Commerce Commission enforces a rule against segregated transportation facilities.

In Parchman, Miss., Chatman stold his wife in a visit yesterday that he was calling off his strike. He had been placed alone in a cell Friday to check whether he was really fasting, after a prison physician expressed belief Chatman was eating and reported he had lost only 2½ pounds.

He said the only reporter allowed to see them after their arrest was Westbrook Pegler, who asked them some "leading questions" such as whether they admired Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt or thought she was Communist-inclined.

Pegler was not immediately available for comment.

Sheriff Gilfoy said Singer and Sullivan were dragged about 15 feet along a smooth concrete hallway, a surface incapble of tearing flesh.

All prisoners are undressed when they arrive and are given prison garb in exchange for civilian clothes.

Gilfoy said the two lay down in the truck that took them from Jackson to the Penitentiary, and had to be moved bodily.

He said they lay down at the hall entrance and said: "You're going to have to make us do what you want us to do."

Reports denied—

Riders said not mistreated in jail

BY AL FOX
News staff writer

JACKSON, Miss., June 27—Mississipians are "bending over backwards" to insure that freedom riders are not mistreated during their confinement in jail here and at the Parchman State Prison.

The "preferential" treatment given the integrationist prisoners was announced today by Acting Gov. George Yarbrough of Red Banks. Yarbrough, Senate president pro tempore assumed his executive duties during the absence of Gov. Ross Barnett and Lt. Gov. Paul Johnson, who are attending the National Governors Conference in Honolulu.

Yarbrough said he visited Parchman last week to get an "on-the-spot" view of the situation and found the prisoners being treated "humanely" with "no mistreatment of any type."

"Freedom riders are being treated as good as they would be if they were in jail in New York or any other state," Yarbrough said.

"WE ARE HAPPY for the outside world to know how well we are treating them. This is because we realize they would relish the possibility of claiming they had been mistreated," he added.

Yarbrough said Barnett "cautioned all guards and other prison officials prior to his departure to see that they were well protected and not mistreated in any way."

The acting governor said the prisoners are confined to the maximum security area of Parchman.

"The prisoners are not being worked and receive all the food they can eat, three times daily," he said. "They are confined two to a cell and, as all prisoners in this section, are issued prison clothing consisting of T-shirts and shorts, normal attire for all prisoners in the maximum security area," he added.

This is done, he pointed out, for the prisoner's own safety and is a routine precaution.

Of the 163 convicted since May 24, 58 are a Parchman and 50 in Jackson jails; 52 have been released on $500 cash bonds and four have been released after they paid $200 fines.

"WE WOULD MUCH rather they would stay away, we don't want them," Yarbrough said, "just as we don't want anyone who is breaking the law. But if they comehere we are going to see that they abide by the lawor stand trial."

Yarbrough said he personally talked to two of the riders last week during his visit to Parchman. He identified them as James Audain of Canada, a white man, and a Negro CORE leader, James Farmer.

The acting governor said that Price Chatham of East Rockaway, Queens, N. Y., who allegedly had been on a hunger strike, has been removed to a private cell upon advise of the prison doctor.

Chathamclaimed he had not eaten for 23 days but the doctor said he had lost only 2½ pounds and not the 30 pounds Chatham claimed.

The doctor, Yarbrough said, could find no evidence Chatham had been on a hunger strike and that Chatham was transferred so his food intake could be checked. Prison officials reported Chatham began eating three days after being isolated, which indicated he had been getting food from other prisoners.

YARBROUGH SAID the maximum security area is located behing an electrically-charged wire fence to prevent the escape of prisoners.

However, he termed "completely false" the report that "electric cattle shockers" had been used on prisoners. "As far as I know there are no shockers at the prison."

Meanwhile, Sheriff J. R. Gilfoy, custodian of all prisoners, disputed a story of Kenneth Shilman of Oceanside, N. Y., an 18-year-old white rider was released Saturday on appeal bond after three weeks in jail and prison.

Shilman said in New York that he saw officers at Parchman torture two of the riders and mistreat others.

Gilfoy charged Shilman's "whole story is exaggerated. The facts are distored. . . . They're all being treated well and everybody knows it."

Shilman said officers strpped the clothes off Felix Singer, 32, and Terry Sullivan, 23, both of Chicago, and dragged them along a concrete corridor after the two refused to take off their clothes and walk to their cells.

"WHEN THEY WERE pulled along the hall," Shilman said, "Felix was yelling 'You're breaking my arm.' He fell and his head hit the concrete floor and he was dragged nude on his stomach. It was indescribable. Their skin was tearing off their bodies. . . ."

Gilfoy said Singer and Sullivan had refused to leave the truck which transported them from Jackson to Parchman.

He said "We had to take them bodily to the entrance to the maximum security unit where they were jailed.

"They lay down and told us, 'You're going to have to make us do what you want us to do.'

"We dragged them 15 feet along the concrete hallway inside the building. That concrete is smooth finished and couldn't tear them. I saw them myself and there wasn't a mark on them.

Gilfoy also discredited Shilman's claim of the use of "cattle shockers" and "wristbreakers" on the two.

"Our procedure for handling prisoners are routine for almost every penitentiary," Gilfoy said.

More 'Riders' Bound for Mississippi

NEW ORLEANS (UPI)—A new group of "freedom riders," possibly 18 or 20, made plans here today for another sortie to Jackson, Miss., and almost certain arrest.

Thirteen riders, mostly from California, arrived here yesterday. A spokesman for the Congress on Racial Equality, which sponsors the rides, said the riders would meet today to discuss the trip to Jackson, but it was not revealed when they would leave. He said members of the group came from San Francisco, Los Angeles, Berkeley and Oakland, Calif., and Tucson, Ariz.

Ten riders, five Negroes and five whites, arrived last night by train. Three others flew in earlier in the day.

Four Negroes from Jackson added a new twist to the "freedom rides" by trying to leave the capital city yesterday for New Orleans. They were not successful.

Jackson police arrested them at the bus terminal when they entered a segregated white waiting room.

Mississippi Unlocks Prison Gates To 'Riders'

By Bicknell Eubanks
Staff Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

Jackson, Miss.

"They're going to get very tired sitting up there in the maximum security section of the state prison."

Gov. Ross R. Barnett was referring to the "overflow" of the "freedom riders" who have been arrested as fast as they come into the capital of Mississippi.

The Governor is a very relaxed man, because he feels the state of Mississippi has met the problem head on and has worked out a system of handling it with a minimum of difficulty.

'We Have Our Laws'

"We've had no violence and our people have shown a wonderful restraint," Governor Barnett said. "A cooperative group of peace officers—city, county, and state—have shown that they know how to deal with it. Back of them are local and state officials and back of all of us are the people of Mississippi.

"I don't think Missisippians pay much attention to it any more now."

The Governor wasn't sure just how many "freedom riders" have been arrested here in Jackson—most of them at the bus terminal, and quite a few at the Union Depot (rail).

"We didn't ask for this trouble," Governor Barnett told this correspondent. "We have our laws and we intend to enforce them."

He pointed out that the laws which the "freedom riders" are being charged with violating make no mention of segregation. He feels they are laws wnich are justified and needed during these tense weeks here in this part of the Old South.

They are state laws which have been enacted by the Mississippi Legislature since the 1954 decision of the Supreme Court of the United States outlawing racial segregation in tax-supported schools.

Loiterers Warned

"If an individual or a group of people loiter outside a public place or on a sidewalk and a peace officer has reason to believe their presence there might lead to trouble," the Governor explained, "then he has a right to order them to move on. It is entirely within his judgment to decide what to do.

"If they don't move on, then they are violating the law, and we have no recourse other than to arrest them. Then it is up to the court what the punishment will be, within the prescribed limits of the law."

More than 100 "freedom riders," Negro and white, have been arrested in Jackson in the past month. As they filled the jail cells here in the "escape-proof" Hinds County Jail, the Hinds County Board of Supervisors took advantage of a state law which permitted them to have the overflow transferred to the Mississippi Penitentiary at Parchman, in the cotton lands of the Mississippi River bottoms.

Writer Jailed

Among those arrested is one white woman, Miss Elizabeth Porter Wyckoff of New York, a former professor of Greek at Mount Holyoke College in Massachusetts who now is a free-lance writer. As with the others, she was given a two-month jail sentence and fined $200. She refused to pay the fine and is working it off in jail at the rate of $3 a day. She was not among the prisoners transferred to the state prison.

Asked whether the "freedom riders" would be put to work in the lowland fields working with other prisoners cultivating the cotton crops, Governor Barnett answered with a crisp "no."

He said he had given specific orders that they not be put into the fields.

His principal reason, he explained, was that they might cut down the verdant cotton stalks instead of the weeds and grass which have to be worked out constantly to keep them from choking out the cotton. Here in the cotton South the process is known as "chopping cotton."

"They might take it literally and chop down the cotton stalks," Governor Barnett said smilingly.

Prison Visited

He also explained that they might try to stage a sit-down strike in the field and refuse to work.

"We couldn't make them work," he said, "and you can imagine what effect that would have on the morale of the regular prisoners. We might have all kinds of trouble."

Too, the officials feel that the "freedom riders," who are not accustomed to manual labor, might suffer ill effects from the intense heat under the hot Mississippi sun.

Governor Barnett explained that he had made a trip to the prison to confer with penitentiary officials and to talk with the guard. He said he had given personal orders that none of the "freedom riders" was to be given corporal punishment, "no matter what the provocation."

"Instead," he said, "I ordered that they be confined to maximum security, where they will have nothing to do and no privileges, not even soft drinks. I think they'll get very tired after a while."

Passengers Debarked

The Governor explained how the state was prepared to handle the first group of "freedom riders" which came by bus from Montgomery, Ala.

The first Mississippi community of any size which they were scheduled for was Meridian. State officials first asked the bus company to refuse to sell tickets to the "freedom riders." The company replied that it could not refuse to sell tickets under interstate regulations.

Then, when state officials were informed that a large crowd of persons was gathering around the Meridian bus terminal, the transportation company was asked to debark the passengers at some other point.

It was pointed out that the ticket did not specifically state they had to be let out at the depot, but said only "Meridian." The passengers were put out several blocks away from the terminal, and local police provided transportation for them to any place in the city where they wanted to go.

Meanwhile, one of the "freedom riders," Miss Wyckoff, is awaiting action in federal district court on her petition asking for release from jail. United States District Judge Sidney Mize, sitting at Biloxi, Miss., has taken the petition under advisement. Lawyers representing the City of Jackson have opposed the petition on the ground that Miss Wyckoff should try her case first through the state courts.

Many of the "freedom riders" already have been released after posting $100 appeal bonds.

Governor Barnett said that Mississippi has not felt any economic impact as a result of the "freedom rider" troubles. He insisted that, on the other hand, many industrialists had informed him they were impressed with the "calm and orderly way our people have met the situation here in Mississippi."

Jackson Police Jail 20 More Race Invaders

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—Twenty more integration-testing "Freedom Riders" arrived in Jackson Sunday by train. Nine minutes later, they were en route to the police station.

The group of Negro and white riders 14 of them from California—were arrested in the depot's white waiting room. Most had taken seats.

Police Capt. J. L. Ray ordered them to move out of the station Marian A. Kendell of San Leandro, Calif., the group's spokesman, answered, "We can't."

UNDERSTAND ORDER

Ray asked if each had understood his order. When no one answered to the contrary, Ray placed them under arrest.

"Thank God, it's over," Janis Rogers of Los Angeles said. She made the trip with her husband.

Police charged them with breach of the peace. Their arrest boosted the number of travelers taken into custody here since May 24 to 164.

The riders came to Jackson from New Orleans where detectives watched the group closely in the depot earlier Sunday. A police photographer took pictures as they got tickets and boarded their train without incident.

A LITTLE SICKENING'

The riders did not try to test New Orleans facilities.

Before embarking for Jackson, Miss Kendell told newsmen she was making the trip because "when it's all boiled down, the way humanity treats humanity down here is a little sickening."

"I feel once there's equality under the law, other areas of equality will develop," she said.

Mary L. Hamilton, a Los Angeles teacher, said she intended to stay in jail a full six months.

"We are taking these jail terms because the courts have bogged down our civil rights for hundreds of years."

7 Freedom Riders Heading for Jackson

Associated Press.

JACKSON, Miss., June 6.—Seven more Freedom Riders headed here by bus today and other planned new moves by air to test Mississippi segregation laws despite threats of stiffer punishment.

Five white persons and two Negroes left New Orleans and were due in Jackson this afternoon.

Lewell Weber of East Orange, N. J., spokesman for the group, said they expected to be arrested in Jackson and would serve out their fines in the city or county jail.

Fly-in Expected.

The first freedom flight in to check on segregation at the Jackson airport was expected to arrive from St. Louis tomorrow.

Plans were announced for students from a half-dozen cities to leave Louisville early next week for Freedom Rides to several Southern cities. The cities were not identified but Jackson has been the most popular target.

Thirteen more Freedom Riders were convicted in Jackson yesterday, raising the total to 65 since the first wave arrived May 24.

None has been charged with violating segregation laws. Instead they were fined $200 and given 60-day suspended sentences on breach of peace charges. The maximum penalty on that charge is a $200 fine and four months in jail.

Issues Warning.

City Attorney Jack Travis said he would demand penalties for future Freedom Riders and added that other charges might be filed against them. The city court can assess a maximum fine of $500 and six months in jail.

Most riders have elected to stay in jail to work out their fines at $3 a day. Some have started hunger strikes to emphasize their protests over segregation.

Three Cornell University students, all white, broke their hunger strike last night. They said they believed the Interstate Commerce Commission could accomplish their objective—unsegregated travel facilities for everyone. They had fasted since May 31.

The three were Charles A. Haynie, 25, Douglaston, Queens; Paul Green, 22, New York City, and Joe H. Griffith, 26, Corpus Christi, Tex.

Five Still Fasting.

The decision of the students to resume eating left five white and three Negro prisoners still refusing food.

One of the 13 convicted yesterday was the Rev. Richard Gleason, a white 24-year-old Baptist minister from the Bible Witness Mission in Chicago. The minister announced that he had broken connections with the Freedom Riders because they included atheists, persons with police records and some who talked of communism.

A twice-postponed Freedom Ride from Richmond, Va., to Jackson by 11 Virginia Union University students apparently fizzled out. Only the spokesman, Charles Sherrod, was aboard a bus which left last night, and he had a ticket only as far as Atlanta.

Jackson Jails More 'Riders'

Group Of 20 Is Largest Since Integration Test Began

By United Press International

JACKSON Miss., June 25.—The largest single group of self-styled "Freedom Riders" to challenge segregation here arrived Sunday and went to jail.

Twenty riders from six states, most of them from California, came here by train from New Orleans and were arrested after refusing orders to leave a segregated waiting room at the Illinois Central Depot.

Arrests of the 11 Negroes and nine whites brought to 164 the total number of riders taken into custody on breach of the peace charges here since the massive integration campaign began last month.

Isolation Ordered

At the state penitentiary in Parchman, officials ordered one rider isolated from other prisoners to learn if he is actually on a hunger strike. The rider, Price Chatham, 29, of Long Island, N. Y., claims he has not eaten since he left home to take a protest ride. He was arrested here June 2.

Chatham, one of 58 riders transferred to the penitentiary to relieve crowded conditions in Jackson jails, signed a statement Saturday saying he was remaining on the strike "until all the transportation facilities in the city of Jackson are integrated—completely integrated." He said he was also protesting "unjust and unwarranted prison sentences for all the Freedom Riders."

But the penitentiary physician, Dr. Hector P. Harrell, examined Chatham and said, "It is my opinion this man is eating."

Food Intake Checked

Dr. Harrell said Chatham apparently was "unduly alarming the officers of the maximum security unit" with claims that he is striking. "I recommend isolation, so that his food intake can be checked," said the doctor.

Officials, who said Chatham had lost only 2½ pounds, moved him to a cell alone in order that he cannot eat other prisoners' food.

A local Episcopal minister, the Rev. Edward Harrison, took bread and wine to the city jail here Sunday morning in order that a California minister who joined the rider movement could give communion to himself and another rider who is an Episcopalian. The jailed minister is the Rev. Grant Muse of Berkeley, Calif.

This raised to 164 the number of riders taken into custody here since May 24.

The twenty had traveled from New Orleans they did not try to test facilities there.

Mary L. Hamilton, a Los Angeles teacher, said she intended to stay in jail six months.

"We are taking these jail terms because the courts have bogged down our civil rights for hundreds of years," she declared.

In the group was Frank Nelson of Brooklyn, New York.

Say 'Rider' Has Criminal Background

A Chicago Negro newspaper reporter arrested here as a "freedom rider" has a criminal background involving narcotics, police said yesterday.

An FBI report on Lewell A. Woods, Jr., 34, Negro, of Chicago, shows he was arrested August 23, 1954 in Chicago for possession of narcotics.

He drew a six month jail sentence and two years probation on the charge.

Woods was arrested in Jackson June 19 and sentenced to four months in jail and fined $200.

Woods told police here he is a police reporter for the "New Crusader" newspaper in Chicago. He said he is a member of the Congress of Racial Equality, which sponsors the rides to Jackson, and that he has been active in integration picketing in Chicago.

Riders' Attempts 'Service To State'

Sovereignty Official Says Mississippi Benefited

Special to The Commercial Appeal

POCATELLO, Idaho, June 22.—A Mississippi Sovereignty Commission official told a Rotary meeting here Thursday that self-styled "Freedom Riders" had "actually done the state a service."

Erle Johnston Jr., public relations director for the segregation watchdog agency, asserted that the riders had failed "in their effort to embarrass Mississippi or to provoke violence."

"Instead, they brought many representatives of news media into Mississippi who were able to learn first-hand how the two races work and live in harmony under a system of segregation," the state agency's spokesman said.

Mr. Johnston, editor of the Scott County, Miss., Times at Forest, said Mississippians "followed a recommendation of Gov. Ross Barnett to ignore the riders and leave the situation to law enforcment officials."

He told residents of Pocatello, a city of 30,000 with a small Negro population, that "you are far away from our problem, but it is a problem of states' rights, and the people of Idaho may now or in the future have a situation which should be solved by your state and yet the Federal Government would try to move in and tell you what to do about it."

Asserting that Mississippi is giving Negroes "a square deal in education, courts, job opportunities and recreation," Mr. Johnston said. "The vast majority of Negroes prefer this square deal program to the integration advocated in Washington. We can work out our problems if outsiders leave us alone."

RACE ACTION RAPPED

Use Of Marshals To Hurt Democratic Party

GULFPORT, Miss., June 22.—(UPI)—Mississippi's Democratic chairman said Thursday the use of federal marshals in Alabama following last month's racial violence will hurt the Democrats in future elections.

Richard Adam said, "Southern people resent the sending of marshals to Alabama just as much as they resented the use of troops at Little Rock, Ark. under a Republican administration.

"If they keep on," he said, "there's not going to be either a Republican or a Democratic party left in the South.

"All Southerners, regardless of their party affiliations, should unite and stand up against this type of thing," he said.

FREEDOM RIDER- JACKSON, MISS.
LEON DANIEL HORNE, MISSISSIPPI NEGRO

Blast 'Turn Coat' Rider In His 'Smear' Attempt

By HILLARD J. McFALL

In Chicago, Earl Hopson, assistant administrator of International Wings Church Corporation, a non-denominational religious organization chartered by the State of Illinois, blasted Leon Daniel Horne, a 24 year old Mississippi Negro who was taken from his cell in the county jail at Jackson, Miss., for the purpose of making a statement to the press concerning his trip from Chicago with a group of "Freedom Riders."

WON'T STARVE

Hopson referred to a statement by Horne in which he said, "I would rather be in jail in Mississippi than starve in Chicago." In an official communique from the church organization Hopson said, "we do not feel that Horne was justified in his effort to berate the courageous Freedom Riders who are fighting for first-class citizenship and the provisions of the Bill of Rights and the Constitution of the United States."

CHURCH HELPS

Hopson told of how his organization helped Rena Spencer, an immigrant to Chicago who has six children and no job. He said, "Chicago is a great city and anyone who wants to work can find it. We help people find jobs every day through my office in the Hayes hotel and we help to feed them."

According to reports Horne begged officials of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) for a free ride from Chicago to Jackson.

GIVEN MONEY

He was given $20 to get from Chicago to Nashville, Tenn., and then given $15 to get from Nashville to Jackson. Upon his arrival in Jackson with the "Freedom Riders" he was jailed along with loyal members of the group.

Back in the Deep South again, Horne quickly turned against his benefactors and began to berate them. He called for the (High Sheriff) and told him how happy he was to be in jail in Jackson instead of starving in Chicago.

CONFRONTS REPORTERS

When confronted by newsmen Horne reportedly said "they are making fools out of some Negroes, why not turn this thing around . . . ?" Horne said, he would not advise anyone to affiliate with the "Freedom Riders."

He then added "they are demoralized characters. That's as nice a thing as I can say about them."

Horne said, one of the white women "Freedom Riders" told him on the bus that she had been to Cuba. He (Horne) said he was interested in why she had gone to Cuba.

CHARGES COMMUNISM

The woman allegedly told him that she was associated with the Communists. Horne ended his (Press Release) saying "As far as the Freedom Riders are concerned, I want nothing to do with them, my only interest was to come home."

Officers took Horne out of jail long enough to be interviewed and to hurl accusations at the "Freedom Riders." He was then returned to jail.

CORE officials criticized Horne whom they tried to help for making such remarks.

FREEDOM RIDER-
MISS ELIZABETH PORTER WYCKOFF, NEW YORK
TESTS ARRESTS IN U.S. COURT

Woman Rider Tests Arrests In U.S. Court

New York Writer Charges State Law Is Unconstitutional

By BOB PITTMAN
Daily News Staff Writer

BILOXI, Miss. — A white woman "freedom rider" went into federal court here today in an effort to show that the Mississippi law under which she was arrested and convicted is unconstitutional.

The hearing for Elizabeth Porter Wyckoff, 45-year-old free lance writer from New York, will have a direct bearing on legal maneuvering of the other 130 "freedom riders" who have already been jailed in Jackson and others expected to follow.

Federal District Judge Sidney Mize was to hear the woman at 10 a. m.

She filed a petition for writ of habeas corpus Friday and Negro attorney Jack Young of Jackson, who has represented all the "freedom riders," delivered it to Judge Mize Saturday.

The writ asks Mize to determine whether Miss Wyckoff's rights were denied when she was arrested and jailed.

Miss Wyckoff arrived in Jackson June 2 in a group of 33 "freedom riders." She was the first white woman to come to Jackson as a "rider."

BREACH OF PEACE

Like the other "riders" she was charged with committing a breach of the peace. Upon conviction she was sentenced to pay a fine of $200 and a two month jail term was suspended.

She is serving a jail term now to pay off the fine—at the rate of $3 per day. She still has about 50 days to serve.

Miss Wyckoff flew from Jackson to Biloxi early this morning in the custody of Hinds County Sheriff Bob Gilfoy.

Jackson city police officers were also on hand for the hearing.

Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson was scheduled to represent the state in the hearing.

He will be aided by Ed Cates and Pete Stockett, both attorney general staff members.

SEPTEMBER
JACKSON- FREEDOM RIDERS

Pastors Jailed In Fight on Bias

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 15 (UPI).—A judge gave four-month jail sentences Friday to 15 Episcopal priests, three of them Negroes, who attempted to dine together in a segregated restaurant here.

The ministers planned to file appeals of their convictions, but none was released under appeal bond immediately. They said that some may decide to serve out their sentences.

ON BIAS PILGRIMAGE

The group, including the Rev Robert L. Pierson, 35, a son-in-law of New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller, were arrested here Wednesday while making an anti-segregation "prayer pilgrimage."

Municipal Judge James L. Spencer, himself an Episcopalian, ordered a jail sentence and a $200 fine for each minister after a two-hour trial in which Assistant City Attorney Robert L. Nichols, also an Episcopalian served as prosecutor.

Spencer said it was "especially grievous" for him to pass the sentences because the defendants were ministers of his church. However, the judge said, he believed they had not only violated Mississippi law but also "the articles of religion of my faith."

CITES CHURCH ARTICLE

The judge cited an article of religion from the Episcopal Book of Common Prayer. It said: "The power of the civil magistrate extendeth to all men, as well clergy as laity, in all things temporal; but hath no authority purely spiritual. And we hold it to be the duty of all men who are professors of the Gospel, to pay respectful obedience to the civil authority, regularly and legitimately constituted."

The ministers, like 307 "freedom riders" before them, were charged with breaching the peace after refusing police orders to "move on."

Judge Spencer said the "only conceivable result" of such visits to Jackson would be violence and bloodshed if civil officials did not act.

Trial Delayed For Student Held As 'Rider'

MITE, La. (UPI) — The case against a German student, who was arrested in Hammond, La., as a "freedom rider" last week, was postponed indefinitely yesterday.

Dist. Atty. Duncan Kemp confirmed that Willie Heinrich Hoever, 30, of Issum, Germany, was being allowed to rejoin a group of foreign students touring the South.

Hoever had been scheduled to appear in court at Hammond today to face a breach of the peace charge.

It had been reported earlier that the charges against Hoever were being dropped following talks between Tangipahoa officials and James O'Grady, a representative of the U. S. State Department.

Neither O'Grady nor Kemp would comment on any "negotiations" between them and O'Grady told United Press International that he thought the case should be played down.

Hoever said Monday he did not mean to cause any trouble when he tried to eat in the Negro section of a bus station restaurant. Hoever stated he did not know he was breaking the law.

But Hammond Police Chief Robert W. Smith said, "We didn't arrest him until he made it clear that he knew what he was doing."

FEARED 'RIOT'

The only State witness was Police Capt. J. L. Ray, who testified he believed a riot would have erupted in the local Trailways Bus station if he had not arrested the ministers when they tried to have lunch at the terminal's restaurant.

A statement, drafted by all 15 ministers, said there is no place in the Episcopal Church for "separation by race, class, or culture." It also said there was separation in the North as well as the South.

FREED—Thirteen Episcopal clergymen file from Jackson (Miss.) City Jail after gaining freedom by posting $500 bonds. They were convicted on breach of peace charges after seeking to desegregate a Trailways bus terminal. They left by plane for Atlanta.

Freedom Riders Draw Up to Two-Year Sentences, $2,000 Fines; Priests Out on Bond

JACKSON, Miss.—(ANP)—Freedom Riders' hearings continued last week in two of the South's most racial troubled cities—Montgomery (Ala.) where 11 Riders were convicted, fined and sentenced, and in Jackson (Miss.) where an interracial group of 15 Episcopal ministers were convicted and released under bond.

Ten of the 11 Freedom Riders convicted in Montgomery were fined $100 each and sentenced from 10 to 15 days in jail. The other rider was sentenced to 90 days in jail

The interracial group of 11 included Yale University Chaplain Rev. William S. Coffin and three other white educators on the faculties of Yale and Wesleyan universities. Also included were three Southern Negroes prominent in the fight for integration: The Revs. Ralph Abernathy, Fred Shuttlesworth and Wyatt Tee Walker.

Judge Alex Marks of the Court of Common Pleas singled out Rev. Walker for the heavier (90-day) sentence because of his (Walker's) work in publicizing activities of the integrationists. "Very little trouble would have happened in Alabama if so much publicity had not been given to the papers, radio and TV stations," Judge Marks said.

The judge set appeal bonds of $400 for Abernathy and another rider, $750 for Walker and $500 for the remaining eight.

Two Years and $2,000

In Jackson last week, CORE iFeld Secretary James L. Bevel, 24, stood alone in Hinds county court and unsuccessfully defended himself on four charges of contributing to the delinquency of a minor.

Bevel, a native of Itta Bena, Miss., was convicted on all four counts and sentenced to a total of $2,000 fine and two years in jail. He did not appeal.

County Judge Russel Moore advised Bevel he would get a suspended sentence if he chose not to contest the charges. But Bevel chose to handle his own defense and cited Bible teachings and principles of the non-violent movement.

Prosecutor Robert Nichols said the Bible was not involved in a legal case and that the Negro minors had given statements saying Bevel induced them to try to desegregate a Jackson bus terminal.

Priests Released on Bond

Also in Jackson, a bi-racial group of 13 Episcopal priests, including New York Gov. Rockefeller's son-in-law, who were arrested for attempting to dine together in a segregated restaurant were released last week under bond.

Two Remain

The 13 released, among a group of 15 arrested, said they would appeal their breach-of-the-peace convictions to the United States Supreme Court, if necessary. Two Chicago priests—the Revs. Robert Taylor and James Jones—elected to remain in jail.

The 13 freed on appeal bonds prayed in front of the jail for courts of justice before catching a flight for Atlanta en route to the National Episcopal Convention in Detroit.

Praise and Censure

Both praise and censure came from Episcopal bishops across the nation.

Presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church in the U. S. A., the Rt. Rev. Arthur C. Lichtenberger of Detroit, praised the action of the 15 clergymen. He said they were "attempting to bear witness to their Christian convictions about racial matters and to make it evident to the whole country what the position of the Episcopal Church is."

Bishop William Campbell of Charleston, W. Va., head of the West Virginia Episcopal Diocese, said the "Prayer Pilgrimage deliberately and defiantly violated the known laws of municipalities and states . . . Personally, have little sympathy for them . . . not because of their goals and ideals, but because of their tactics."

To Raise $1,000

The Chicago Chapter of the Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity appealed to its members last week to raise $1,000 for appeal bonds for two of the three Illinois priests arrested in the group of 15. An official source said that the third Illinois priest—the Rev. Robert L. Pierson, Rockefeller's son-in-law—will apparently have his bail paid from another source.

Clifford Phelps Morehouse of New York, newly elected president of the Episcopal House of Deputies, said he does not expect the church convention to challenge Mississippi's jailing of the clergymen.

"I hardly think it's in the convention's competence," Morehouse said. "It is not within our province to rebuke Judge Spencer."

Episcopal Priests Released On Bond

Chicago Pair To Return To Jackson Trial Oct. 9

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 29.—(UPI)—Two Episcopal priests who challenged racial segregation here were released under bond Friday after two weeks in city jail.

The Revs. Robert Taylor and James Jones, both of Chicago, were freed under $500 appeal bonds. They each presented a bouquet of roses to Capt. J. L. Ray, the officer who arrested them, as a going-away present.

They were among a bi-racial group of 15 priests who attempted to dine in a segregated restaurant here while on an anti-segregation "prayer pilgrimage." The others were released under bond last week but the Rev. Mr. Taylor and the Rev. Mr. Jones decided to remain for a while.

All 15 ministers are scheduled to return here Oct. 9 for arraignment in Hinds County Court pending their appeal trials on breach of the peace charges.

One of the ministers who were released earlier, the Rev. Canon John Crocker Jr. of Providence, R. I., told a church audience in Providence Thursday night the Episcopal Church features "incredible hypocrisy" toward racial problems in the North as well as the South.

Jailed Rector 'Rider' Found South Friendly

By Kenneth Dole
Staff Reporter

When "things change" in Mississippi, a young Jackson police officer will get an invitation from a Washington Negro rector to join him for a cup of coffee.

The Rev. Quinland Gordon, who has just returned after serving a few days in the Jackson jail, considers the policeman a symbol of a South on the move—away from segregation.

The policeman, a detective, fingerprinted and photograped Father Gordon after his arrest with 14 other Episcopal clergy on a charge of breaking the peace at a bus station.

The detective, about 30 years old, impressed Father Gordon as "rather embarrassed and a little apologetic." On learning the Episcopal priest was born in Greenwich, Conn., he felt it necessary to explain that racial segregation in bus stations is a Southern custom.

"He was just as nice and polite as he could be," the rector said. "I asked if I could have his name. After things change in Mississippi I am going to write and ask if he will have a cup of coffee with me."

The police captain who arrested the ministers in a Trailways bus station as they were about to leave for Chattanooga told a judge that onlookers were in an "ugly mood" and "acting antagonistically" toward the clergy. "I felt that if I had not acted quickly there would have been a riot," the policeman said.

Father Gordon, rector of the Church of the Atonement, 5073 East Capitol st., noticed nothing disturbing. The 15 people in the waiting room were "just quiet and curious," he said. When the ministers, after their arrest, bowed their heads and said the Lord's Prayer, three women coming downstairs "just stopped and stood still."

There was "no reaction at all from the onlookers," it seemed to the Washingtonian. "They were completely passive, as if to say this is just something else that is happening."

The courtroom crowd was equally quiet, Father Gordon said.

When the judge convicted the clergymen of violating local law and said they also violated Episcopal canon law, a man whom the minister took to be a city official exclaimed vigorously, "Good, good, good—just what it should be."

Among the ministers, who were sentenced to four months in jail and a $200 fine, was another Washingtonian, the Rev. William A. Wendt, rector of St. Stephen and the Incarnation Episcopal Church, 16th and Newton sts. nw. He is returning to the city early next week.

Suit Defending Riders Heads for Court Test

JACKSON, Miss., July 10 (AP).—A suit to prevent police from arresting Freedom Riders and other Negroes seeking to use public facilities in Mississippi headed for a Federal Court test at Jackson today as the number of riders arrested soured to 227.

A three-judge Federal Court planned to hear the injunction request filed by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The suit attacked State laws requiring separate racial facilities in railroad cars, buses, restrooms and waiting rooms and the posting of notices at terminals.

Such laws, the suit contended, subject Negroes to "daily public inconvenience, harassment, and embarrassment (and) violate rights secured . . . by the due process clause of the 14th Amendment to the United States Constitution."

Police in Jackson contended the presence of tre riders, after announcing their intentions to violate a law, was a breach of the peace, and was compounded by refusal to move on as ordered by officers.

City Judge James L. Spencer said recently the riders were not arraigned for breaking laws but because their presence created a condition "whereby a breach of the peace may be occasioned . . ."

Nine riders from New Orleans and eight from Montgomery, Ala., were arrested yesterday when they tried unsuccessfully to mix the races in terminal waiting rooms. Eleven more were arrested in Jackson late last night on breach of peace charges. This raised the total number arrested since May 24 to 227.

The riders arrested late last night—all Negroes and six of them juveniles—attempted to buy tickets at the Trailways bus terminal for Canton, some 20 miles north of Jackson. They were taken into custody when they refused to move on when ordered to do so by a police captain.

Third Out on Bond

About a third of the 28 riders arrested since May 24 are out on bond. A total of 82 are held at the State Prison at Parchman, 130 miles from Jackson, and 63 are in Jackson jails.

A spokesman for the Congress of Racial Equality said five 'Freedom Riders' planned to leave St. Louis today to attack separate bus and railroad facilities in Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Tennessee and Illinois.

The Rev. Raymond Lathan, pastor of the New Hope Baptist Church at Milwaukee, said he hoped to recruit as many as 100 riders for a trip south. The Negro pastor did not set a date.

Tension in Chicago

At Chicago, nine arrests were made as 80 Negroes and white persons staged a wade-in for the second day at Rainbow Beach. More than 280 policemen patroled the beach while the demonstrators sat in small groups amid about 10,000 bathers and onlookers.

Police said there were no serious disturbances at the beach. However, a car loaded with demonstrators was stopped on the way home from the beach and one youth pulled out and kicked and another slapped.

Those arrested and charged with disorderly conduct included eight white persons and one Negro.

Freedom Riders Roll On In Defiance of Miss. Jail

JACKSON, Miss—Authorities in this city over the past week-end were holding and estimated 220 or more Freedom Riders while expecting more arrivals from at least a half dozen scattered points throughout the nation.

From the local scene police arrested two Jackson youths, both Negroes, who sought service at a Walgreen Drug Store lunch counter reserved "for whites." They were Jimmie Travers, 18 and Luvaughn Brown, 16.

The Jackson arrests began last May 24. About one-third of those arrested are said by police to be out on bond, 82 were still being held in prison at Parchman, and 52 remain in Jackson jails.

RABBI SIDNEY D. Shanken, leader of Temple Beth El congregation at Cranford, N. J., set out at mid-week with a group of 13 persons from Newark to further test Deep South attitudes on Freedom Riders actions. Backing the group is the New Jersey Committee to Support Freedom Riders.

Four Freedom Riders from St. Louis, headed by the Rev. Elton B. Cox, last Wednesday were given suspended sentences of six months each, and fines of $500 provided they left town.

Included in the group were Mrs. Janet Reintiz, a white housewife from New York, and the Rev. John C. Raines, 27, of Long Island, also white. The fourth was Miss Bliss Anne Malone, a colored St. Louis teacher.

LOS ANGELES—Headed from this city last Wednesday, traveling by bus to test interstate traveling facilities, and enroute to Jackson, Miss., was a group including four Negroes and eight whites. They were expected to arrive in Jackson.

The nine-man, three-woman contingent was being led by the Rev. Douglas A. Williams, pastor of Greator Cornerstone Baptist Church. A church group raised more than $2,500 to finance the trip through the South.

At mid-week, also, the Federal Government through the Department of Justice had joined a suit at Jackson in which the NAACP had asked a District Court to knock down Mississippi's trave segregation laws. The U. S. was charging that the state had gone "beyond the scope of its legal powers" in the arrests of Freedom Riders.

AT DEARBORN, Mich., last week, a group of 49 Negroes and white split up and begun tests in this all-white suburb, of various facilities where Negroes had not, as a rule, been getting service. The places included swimming pools, restaurants and bowling alleys.

Represented in the groups were Michigan Young Democrats, and Detroit and Ann Arbor chapters of CORE. At Oak Park, Mich., similar testing efforts were undertaken.

In Baltimore, the "Jackie Robinson Youth Council" of the NAACP was continuing in picketing demonstration against the city's Gas and Electric Company and the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone, as firms which refuse to hire Negroes in skilled or higher level jobs.

The telephone company hires a token number, but the Gas and Electric Company hires no Negroes as clerks or in skilled jobs.

Freedom Riders Tactics Opposed By Governor Of Minnesota

Governor Refuses To Condone Deliberate Breaking of Law

The Governor of Minnesota, home state of Negro State Dept. aide who recently attacked former President Truman for his statement criticizing the Freedom Riders, has written a letter to the Governor of Mississippi which expresses his opposition against the tactics of the Freedom Riders.

"We believe everything should be done to encourage good human relationships but at no time can we condone deliberate breaking of the law", Minnesota's Governor Elmer L. Anderson said in a letter to Governor Ross R. Barnett of Mississippi.

"If a law is wrong or bad there are proper ways to seek to change it, but deliberate violations strike deep at fundamentals in our American way of life," the Minnesota governor declared.

Gov. Barnett was commended for the excellent treatment extended freedom riders and representatives from Minnesota who came here last week to investiagte treatment given Minnesota freedom riders.

Barnett said Monday that he appreciated the attitude of the Minnesotan.

Mississippi's governor ordered public officials to conduct Mrs. Wright Brooks, Human Relations Committee director and Asst. Attorney General John Ed Casey, of Minnesota, on a tour of Jackson jails and the Parchman penitentiary maximum security unit where freedom riders are kept prisoner.

They also were shown extensively around Jackson by order of Mayor Allen C. Thompson. Hinds County Sheriff Bob Gilfoy personally guided a tour of his jail.

Gov. Anderson's letter to Gov. Barnett was as follows:

"Mrs. Wright Brooks and Mr. John Casey have returned to Minnesota. They tell me they were treated with the greatest courtesy and that they had a full opportunity to visit the Jackson jail and the prison at Parchman, and to see the Minnesotans who are imprisoned there.

"They are reporting to our people that the prisoners indicate they have in no way been mistreated, that there was some delay about mail earlier but that this has now been worked out.

"We are indicating that we believe everything should be done to encourage good human relationships but at no time can we condone deliberate breaking of any law. If a law is wrong or bad there are proper ways to seek to change it, but deliberate violations strike at deep fundamentals in our American way of life.

"I believe the trip has been worthwhile from our standpoint, and I believe it has been beneficial from yours, Governor, and I hope it seems that way to you."

8 Freedom Riders Arrested; Total Now Numbers 236

JACKSON, Miss.—(UPI)—Eight "freedom riders" were arrested in segregated waiting rooms at bus and train stations Sunday. The arrests brought to 236 the number of integrationists taken into custody on breach of the peace charges since May 24.

Seven of the riders were arrested at the Greyhound bus terminal after the bi-racial group arrived from Nashville. Tenn. A lone rider was arrested at the Illinois Central Railroad depot after he entered the waiting room reserved for whites.

A Negro college student from New Orleans, Leo Washington, 24, was charged with assaulting a white man Saturday night during the arrival of 12 "freedom riders" at the bus station.

Washington allegedly stomped on the toe of the man who shoved him off his foot and against a wall. The white man, Mississippi college graduate student Cecil Lindsay, accompanied officers to police headquarters to sign an affadavit against Washington.

Sponsors of "freedom rides" in Alabama are scheduled to appear in federal district court in Montgomery, Ala., Monday to show cause why they should not be enjoined from backing further rides into the state.

The hearing on the preliminary injunction petition is scheduled before federal Judge Frank M. Johnson, Jr., who several weeks ago issued a temporary restraining order against the groups. The temporary order remained in effect for a period of 20 days only.

The case is a continuation of the U. S. Justice Department's complaint against Montgomery Police Commissioner L. B. Sullivan, Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal, and various Ku Klux Klan groups, all of which were enjoined against interfering with interstate travel in Alabama.

Freedom Riders To Step Up Tests Of Bias Travel

JACKSON, Miss. -- Techniques remained the same on all phases of the Freedom Ride situation early this week. The Congress of Racial Equality, seeking to break the racial barriers in bus, railway and airport terminals of the Deep and City Judge James Spencer continued to convict the riders as fast as they were brought into his court.

There were two interesting developments in the Freedom Ride situation on Monday which could affect two suits which have been filed in the U. S. District Court.

The first was a written opinion of Federal Judge Sidney Mize in turning down a move aimed at having the arrests of Freedom Riders declared unconstitutional.

The second was a motion filed by the City of Jackson seeking to be removed as a defendant from a suit filed by the NAACP seeking to halt the arrests of Freedom Riders.

Five new Freedom Riders were arrested Sunday in the Trailway Bus terminal on "breach of the peace" charges. They were tried Monday before Judge Spencer and were found guilty.

Judge Spencer handed down $200 fines and 4-month jail sentences to the five, bringing to a total of 168 Freedom Riders tried and sentences since May 24. Of the total 169 arrested, one was freed and sent home because of his youth. He was 17-years-old.

Of the 168 convicted, 59 hae posted appeal bonds, four have paid fines to gain their freedom; 23 remain in Jackson jails, and 77 have been transferred to the state penitentiary at Parchman.

Federal Judge Sidney Mize, who last week rejected a plea for a writ of habeas corpus in the case of one Freedom Rider, Elizabeth Wyckoff, delivered a written opinion on the decision Monday.

Attorneys for Miss Wyckoff claimed her arrest under a "breach of the peace" statute was an unlawful enforcement of racial segregation in a bus station terminal.

Judge Mize, in his opinion, said Miss Wyckoff was "not convicted of any law with reference to integration or segregation."

"The state's breach of the peace statute is common to many states and is wise exercise of police powers of the state," he said.

"The wisdom of the statute was exemplified," the judge said, in Miss Wyckoff's attorney's reference to "the bloodshed that occurred in Montgomery, Alabama."

"No such occurrences happened in Mississippi but had it not been for the orderly enforcement by officers of the state of Mississippi, they could have," Judge Mize said.

Judge Mize will be a member of a three-judge panel here July 10 to consider the suit filed by the NAACP. Others on the panel are Chief Judge Elbert Tuttle of the U. S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, and Federal Judge Claude Clayton, Tupelo, Miss.

The City of Jackson on Monday asked the Federal Court to remove it from the NAACP suit aimed at halting Freedom Riders' arrests.

The city petition contends the City of Jackson is incapable of violating the law and the suit is not really a class action. It contends further that the three Negro plaintiffs "have not shown they were denied rights or suffered injury."

Prisoners Charged With Theft Of Ring And Money in Miss.

JACKSON, Miss. — (UPI) — Two Negro prisoners in the Hinds County jail here were charged with stealing $75 and a diamond ring belonging to an integration leader and his wife.

The items disappeared from the belongings of the Rev. Wyatt Tee Walker, a Negro from Atlanta, and his wife last week while they were held after making a "freedom ride" here.

Robert Simpson and Ballard Catchings, local Negroes who were "trusties" in the jail, admitted the theft, officers said.

Sheriff J. R. Gilfoy reported the two prisoners said they used a coat hanger to lift Walker's overnight bag from a locked cell, removed the money and ring, and put the bag back in the cell.

Gilfoy said the two trusties, who are often sent on errands throughout the city, had spent the money. He said they hid the ring in a steel door casing and officials had been unable to figure out how to get it out. "It might be cheaper to replace the ring," said Gilfoy.

Simpson and Catchings have been charged with grand larceny.

'FREEDOM RIDERS' ARE LOADED INTO CITY POLICE VAN AFTER ARREST IN JACKSON WEDNESDAY

Bail Set at $1,500 Each But Riders Said They Chose to Remain in Jail as Part of Their Protest

Mississippi Jails 27 Bus Riders

The Atlanta Constitution

By BRUCE GALPHIN
Constitution Staff Writer

JACKSON—Twenty-seven "Freedom Riders" on two buses were rushed under heavy guard Wednesday from Montgomery to this capital, where all were promptly clapped in jail.

No incidents of violence were reported on either trip, though one rider protested what he called "police state" tactics of a Mississippi National Guard officer.

2 WHITE MEN

Arrested on charges of disorderly conduct and failure to obey police orders were 12 riders from the first bus and 15 riders from the second. A white man was on each bus. The rest were Negroes.

Charges of inciting to riot were originally brought against the riders but later dropped. Bail for each was set at $1,000, but all chose to remain in jail as part of their non-violent protest against segregation.

Their cases probably will come to trial Friday.

Among those jailed was James Farmer, national director of the Congress on Racial Equality, the organization which organized the "Freedom Riders." Frank George Holloway, a student at Morehouse College in Atlanta, was also among those arrested.

SCORES OF GUARDS

The riders were whisked out of Montgomery, scene of a bloody clubbing incident when a bus-load of demonstrators arrived last Saturday, under the protection of scores of Alabama National Guardsmen and state patrolmen, as well as National Guard airplanes.

Most of the riders Wednesday were fresh volunteers who relieved the original battered crew. Despite a state injunction against the demonstration, there were no arrests in Montgomery.

Eight Negroes in the first group ate at a white lunch counter without interference before leaving Montgomery. They were served by Negro waitresses.

The Trailways bus on which they rode left at the scheduled time, but it was a special section which carried only the demonstrators and newsmen. A second bus for regular passengers left some 15 minutes later.

The removal from Alabama was carried out with intricate military precision under the command of Maj. Gen. Henry V. Graham, adjutant general.

The block around the terminal was surrounded and barred to traffic by 250 guardsmen. There were few civilian spectators.

A convoy consisting of 16 Highway Patrol cars, each carrying three guardsmen and two troopers, escorted the bus to the Alabama line.

NEWSMEN IN CONVOY

Newsmen were allowed to drive in the convoy. Others rode on the bus with the demonstrators and more national guardsmen.

Graham had set up extra guard units at a number of points along the route to Mississippi. Two and sometimes as many as four National Guard planes circled slowly above the caravan.

The bus made rest stops at the side of the road about once an hour while in Alabama so it never stopped in a city or a bus terminal.

The first stop, a short distance out of Montgomery, was unscheduled: one of the riders was ill with an intestinal upset.

Graham clapped a hand on the embarrassed man's shoulder and said, "That's all right. We all get sick."

At one of the stops, the Rev. James Lawson Jr., former theology student at Vanderbilt University, asserted that the riders did not want protection.

The guarded trip, he declared, "does not help to reveal the character of segregation in the South."

Asked about possible physical injury, he replied:

"Only through nonviolent demonstrations in which we accept violence without return . . . will the American people understand."

Near Demopolis, two cars flying Confederate flags and driven by teen-agers pulled into the convoy. Patrolmen quickly ordered them out.

At the Mississippi line, Magnolia State guardsmen replaced the Alabamans on the bus.

HIGH SPEEDS

The bus, preceded by Misssissippi State Patrol cars, roared through the countryside at speeds up to 90 miles per hour without making a stop.

As soon as the bus stopped in Jackson, the first two female demonstartors were told to move out of the terminal. When they hesitated, they were immediately arrested. Eight of the men were arrested while trying to use white restroom facilities.

There were few spectators around the terminal in Jackson, although the building and its restaurant were packed. More than 50 helmeted policemen and two German Shepherd police dogs were waiting for the "Freedom Riders."

Rides Should Halt, Dixie Liberals Say

JACKSON, Miss. — Some liberal Southerners of both races joined moderates and others Thursday in asserting that the "Freedom Rides" should be hatled. But leaders of the movement pledged to continue and extend it into other states.

These liberals said the Negroes' struggle for civil rights possibly had been set back by the roving bands of white and Negro students and adults challenging segregation on buses and in terminals. The demonstrations have led to three bloody riots, the burning of a bus and other racial violence in Alabama.

The Rev. Martin Luther King, principal spokesman for the "Freedom Riders," denied that the demonstrators had damaged their cause or that their methods had been improper.

He said that despite a series of setbacks the riders would resume their efforts "in full force" next Monday or Tuesday, with this Deep South capital of segregation remaining as the chief target. He was interviewed by telephone at his Atlanta office.

Three of King's top lieutenants in the Southern Christian Leadership Conference were arrested Thursday in Montgomery, Ala., while saying goodbye to four white professors and three Negro students who were catching a bus for Jackson. The latter group also was jailed.

The Negro leader said the movement would be hampered by the absence of the three SCLC aides, the Rev. Wyatt Tee Walker of Atlanta, the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy of Montgomery and the Rev. Fred Shuttlesworth of Birmingham.

2 OTHERS JAILED

Two others in the movement were imprisoned here Wednesday along with 25 freedom riders. They are James Farmer of New York, national director of the Congress of Racial Equality, and the Rev. James M. Lawson of Nashville, Tenn. Lawson is one of King's chief disciples in the campaign of nonviolent direct action.

Atl. Au. 5-26-61

All 27 face trial here Friday in Municipal Court on charges of breach of the peace and refusing to obey an officer. They had sought to use dining and restaurant facilities in the white waiting room of the Trailways Bus terminal after their arrival from Montgomery Wednesday under a heavily armed military and police escort.

Legal observers predicted that they would be given suspended jail terms and warned that the suspension would be revoked if they staged a repetition of Wednesday's demonstration. However, a source high within the movement said the group undoubtedly would return to the bus station for another test of segregation after their release.

MAXIMUM POSSIBLE

All 27 could receive maximum penalties totaling $700 fines and 10 months imprisonment.

The Freedom Riders were jailed here after refusing to post bonds of $1,000 each. Although they rode to the city jail in an integrated Black Maria, they were placed in segregated cells.

M. B. Pierce, the assistant police chief, said the group had received the same treatment accorded other prisoners except that regulations regarding telephone calls had been liberalized somewhat.

He said regulations prohibit interviews but reported that the prisoners had told officers they thought the jail was clean and comfortable and that the food was good.

ENFORCE LAWS

In a news conference Thursday, Gov. Ross Barnett of Mississippi asserted that authorities would continue to "enforce all the laws of the state when efforts are made to violate them."

He avoided saying that the riders had been arrested for flaunting the segregation laws, which he termed paramount as long as they remain on the statute books.

Among the liberal critics of the riders was a white leader who has played a role in the civil rights struggle and an equally well-known Negro.

Judge Tuttle Quits Riders Case

JACKSON, Miss., (AP)—Judge Elbert P. Tuttle, Atlanta, chief jurist of the U.S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, has withdrawn from the three-judge court that will hear a request to halt the arrest of "freedom riders" in Jackson.

Judge Tuttle assigned U.S. District Judge Richard T. Rives of Montgomery, Ala., to replace him.

U.S. District Judge Sidney Mize of Gulfport and Claude Clayton of Tupelo were named earlier to hear the request.

The request was made by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in an effort to stop the arrest of freedom riders seeking to test Mississippi's segregation laws. So far, 267 riders have been arrested on breach-of-peace charges.

Mize and Clayton voted against Tuttle two weeks ago in allowing a delay until Aug. 7 on grounds Asst. Atty. Gen. Dugas Shands, assigned to civil rights cases, was ill.

5-MINUTE TRIAL

Jackson Judge Fines 8 'Riders'

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—In a trial that lasted only five minutes, Municipal Court Judge James Spencer found eight newly arrived "Freedom Riders" guilty Tuesday of a breach of the peace.

The penalties were the same Spencer handed 44 earlier Freedom Riders—$200 fines for each and suspended 60-day jail sentences, suspended at the request of the prosecution.

The eight — five whites and three Negroes — took a different trail from earlier Freedom Riders, making the trip into Jackson by train instead of bus. But they followed the same path to jail when they tried to use white facilities at the train depot.

STILL IN JAIL

Except for a handful that posted appeal bond, the earlier Freedom Riders, defying Southern segregation laws, are still in jail.

Segregation remained intact for Tuesday's hearing. The five white Freedom Riders sat on one side of the courtroom, the three Negroes on the other. They arrived from New Orleans in midmorning.

The only witness was Jackson Police Capt. J. L. Ray, who made the arrests at the train depot. He had ordered the riders to move on when they tried to use the white facilities at the segregated depot—the train on which they rode was desegregated—and when they refused, he told them they were under arrest.

GIVEN OPTION

As in earlier cases, they will be given the option of paying the $200 fine, posting appeal bonds or going to jail to work out their sentences at $3 per day.

Richard Haley, field representative for the Congress of Racial Equality which sponsors the Freedom Riders, had this explanation for the swap to the train:

"So far the emphasis has been on bus depots, to the exclusion of train depots," Haley said. "We want to give them all a fair shake."

Jackson Police Capt. J. L. Ray, who has supervised most of the Freedom Riders' arrests, told the group to move out of the white waiting room, and when the riders refused, he arrested all of them on charges of breach of the peace.

All previous Freedom Riders have been convicted and fined on charges of breaching the peace.

Among the whites arrested Tuesday were Peter Sterling, 20, of Rye, N.Y., Tom S. Green of Ithaca, N.Y., Charles A. Haynie, 25, New York City, and Joe H. Griffith, Ithaca, all students at Cornell University, and Robert Heller of Rockville Centre, N.Y., a student at Tulane University, New Orleans.

Those who boarded the streamliner in New Orleans were students at a special "workshop" set up in New Orleans Monday by CORE, and taught methods of non-violence.

At Ithaca, Cornell graduate Davis Smock said a campaign to raise funds was underway in Ithaca with residents asked to contribute $800 to pay fines that may be imposed on the latest arrivals. Smock said he had $150 in pledges.

Earlier Freedom Riders were given 60-day suspended jail sentences—suspended at the request of the prosecution—and $200 fines. Most of those convicted preferred to go to jail or the County Work Farm rather than pay the fines or post appeal bonds.

Hinds County Sheriff J. R. Gilfoy moved the convicted Freedom Riders from the county farm to the County Jail in downtown Jackson.

8 More Riders Fined After 5-Minute Trial

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—In a trial that lasted only five minutes, Municipal Court Judge James Spencer found eight newly arrived "Freedom Riders" guilty Tuesday of a breach of the peace.

The penalties were the same Spencer handed 44 earlier Freedom Riders—$200 fines for each and suspended 60-day jail sentences, suspended at the request of the prosecution.

The eight — five whites and three Negroes — took a different trail from earlier Freedom Riders, making the trip into Jackson by train instead of bus. But they followed the same path to jail when they tried to use white facilities at the train depot.

Except for a handful that posted appeal bond, the earlier Freedom Riders, defying Southern segregation laws, are still in jail.

Meanwhile, in Montgomery a defense attorney Tuesday asked the Justice department to bring Attorney General Robert Kennedy to that city as a witness in a race riot injunction hearing against police officers.

The request was made by Calvin Whitesell of Mongomery to Justice department attorney John Doar during a recess in the federal court hearing which seeks to compel Montgomery and Birmingham police in the future to protect "freedom riders" from attacks by whites.

On the second day of the hearing an FBI agent testified that he had repeatedly warned Birmingham officials of the advent of the "Freedom Riders," who were attacked in that city.

Two witnesses invoked the Fifth Amendment as the government sought to link the Ku Klux Klan with the burning of a bus carrying "Freedom Riders" near Anniston, Ala., on May 14.

One witness, Cecil L. Lewallyn, 21, Anniston, who was linked to the bus burning in previous testimony at a federal hearing, was turned over to the U.S. marshal's office after he refused to say whether he was there when the bus was set afire May 14. He pleaded the Fifth Amendment.

FIFTH AMENDMENT

Another witness, Kenneth B. Adams, Anniston, also pleaded the Fifth Amendment on advice of his attorney.

Still another witness, Ku Klux Klan leader Robert M. Shelton, Tuscaloosa, Ala., drew a warning from Johnson for what the court called evasive answers when he was questioned about membership in his KKK organization.

Shelton finally talked but gave little information. He said he keeps no records and cannot tell just who the members are.

Segregation remained intact for Tuesday's hearing in Jackson. The five white Freedom Riders sat on one side of the courtroom, the three Negroes on the other. They arrived from New Orleans in midmorning.

AT TRAIN DEPOT

The only witness was Jackson Police Capt. J. L. Ray, who made the arrests at the train depot. He had ordered the riders to move on when they tried to use the white facilities at the segregated depot—the train on which they rode was desegregated—and when they refused, he told them they were under arrest.

'Ride-In' Arrests Spark March on Mississippi Bias

Jackson, Miss. — The NAACP's "Operation Mississippi" rolled into high gear here this week as a capacity crowd, attending a protest mass meeting in the Masonic Temple heard a call for "more and varied jobs for Negroes."

The speaker was Medgar Evers, NAACP field secretary for Mississippi. The gathering (April 20th) was in protest of the arrest of four NAACP college students for staging the state's first ride-in demonstration against segregation on public buses, April 19th.

Employment

Evers called for employment of Negroes by local factories such as Vickers and General Electric, which don't have a single Negro employee. He also called for employment of Negroes in all Mississippi plants holding government contracts, thereby obeying President Kennedy's executive order on employment. In addition, Evers asked that Negroes be hired on Jackson's police force; that Negroes be hired by the local internal revenue bureau; and that Negro office workers be hired in the local VA hospital.

Public Facilities

Evers told the cheering crowd that the time has come for unrestricted use of public facilities, such as parks and libraries, by Negro Mississippians. He added that the time has also come for removal of humiliating segregation signs in train depots, and the end of segregated seating on buses.

The four students, out on $500 bond and charged with "breach of the peace," attended the meeting. Their hearing was held Friday in the same municipal court where nine Tougaloo College NAACP youths were tried March 29. It was during this session that German police dogs were used to rout peaceful Negro citizens awaiting the results of the trial across the street from the courthouse.

IN SUPPORT OF FREEDOM RIDERS

CORE Ends 24-Hour Fast In New York

NEW YORK (AP) — Members of the Congress of Racial Equality — CORE — ended a 24-hour "Fast for Freedom" demonstration Sunday in support of "Freedom Riders."

The fast began at 9 a.m. Saturday on Liberty Island, site of the Statue of Liberty, where about 100 young men and women, mostly white, spent the day until the island closed at 7:30 p.m.

The demonstrators then went to Battery Park, at the tip of Manhattan Island. As the night wore on, the group dwindled to 60. Those remaining slept on park benches or sat about in a group talking.

There were no incidents. Eight policemen remained on duty during the night.

As soon as the 24-hour mark was reached Sunday morning, the group promptly lined up for coffee and doughnuts in a park snack bar.

Last Friday night, 32 Freedom Riders left here by chartered bus for Jackson, Miss. They are scheduled to appear there Monday with 155 others to appeal their convictions for violating breach of peace laws in that city while attempting to desegretate interstate bus facilities.

TV Appeal for CORE Slated for WNTA-TV

NEW YORK—Another history-making venture will be undertaken by the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) next week, when the first television appeal ever staged by a civil rights organization is presented over WNTA-TV (Channel 13), July 7.

The Community Relations Director of CORE announced last week that the telecast will be seen from 10:30 P.M. until 2:30 A.M. and will feature some of the top personalities in radio, TV and stage. The program is being organized by the well known writer and broadcaster, Louis E. Lomax. Among those stars already confirmed for the telecast are Orson Bean, Nina Simone, Theodore Bikel and the entire cast of the off-Broadway hit "The Premise."

Lomax said that several other top stars are committed to the telecast and their names will be released as soon as final confirmations have been received from their agents.

The appeal will seek to raise $100,000 to finance Freedom Rides during the summer months. "We are convinced that all forms of segregation in interstate travel facilities can be eliminated by the end of the summer," CORE's Marvin Rich said. "We hope the community will respond to our appeal for funds and support."

Louis Lomax and Betty Frank of Radio Station WLIB will serve as anchor announcers.

POLICEMEN NOT PROSECUTED
WHO CONFESSED PRISON ASSAULT ON WHITE
FREEDOM RIDER, RICHARD GRISWOLD

U. S. lets policemen go free

BY WILLIAM WORTHY

NEW YORK—The Justice Department this week informed civil rights attorney Conrad J. Lynn that it will not prosecute Monroe, N. C., police or the local prisoner who confessed to carrying out a prearranged prison assault on white Freedom Rider Richard Griswold.

Federal statutes provide fines and imprisonment for police who conspire to deny constitutional rights and equal protection of the law to any person.

The attack by Howard Stack took place inside the Union County, N. C., jail shortly after mass arrests of Freedom Riders and local pickets during several days of race rioting in late August in Monroe.

A free-lance photographer from Booklyn, N. Y., Griswold had incurred the special rancor of the police during his picket-line filming.

STACK, ALSO white, was under arrest and awaiting trial on five charges of passing worthless checks and on two charges of assault.

In the signed and unsolicited confession that he slipped out of the jail, Stack declared that the Monroe police promised him his freedom if he would give Griswold "a going over" in a basement cell.

To other prisoners, Stack revealed he had originally been promised a knife for the job. He smashed the nose of the non - resisting Freedom Rider, drew blood from his eyes, and left him moaning in a semi - conscious condition.

From a corridor outside, the beating was overheard by another arrested white Freedom Rider, Kenneth Shilman of Oceanside, N. Y.

Shilman demanded that Griswold be removed from the cell immediately to prevent his being killed by Stack.

STACK WENT free for two weeks, but was then picked up and sentenced to prison. Outraged at the police doublecross, he wrote out the confession and managed to get it to Lynn, attorney for the man he had attacked.

In early October immediately on receipt, Lynn referred the original document, in Stack's handwriting, to the FBI. The November 30 letter from the Justice Department, closing the file on the case, was a belated response to queries by Lynn as to the progress of the FBI investigation.

The only known result of the federal investigation was the sudden decision by Monroe authorities on Nov. 2 to commit Stack to a mental institution. While under arrest in August and after sentencing in mid-September the question of Stack's sanity had never been rasied.

ON OCTOBER 6 Lynn made public the text of Stack confession and revealed that the case had been turned over to the FBI. The daily press, including the New York Times, did not deem the story "fit to print."

Observers familiar with the genuine legal difficulties of proving the role of police officers in cases of brutality regarded Stack's confession and the readiness of two reputable Freedom Riders to testify as providing the federal government with a virtually airtight opportunity to prosecute.

In a report last month on nationwide police brutality the U.S. Civil Rights Commission called on the Justice Department to be less timid in bringing sadistic police to trial.

SUMTER, S.C. — "For the first time I felt that I had had a glimpse of what it would be like to be colored."

Mrs. Frances Bergman, 57, of Detroit, one of two white women among CORE's 1961 Freedom Riders, hushed an audience here with that statement.

Her date with the stark viciousness of race hate came in Winnsboro, S.C. where her queries about a colored and white team which had been arrested turned hostile eyes and words on her.

Mrs. Bergman, a retired school administrator, recalled policemen who told her "We have no use for your kind here" and that "the best thing for me to do was to get out of town."

* * *

IT WAS A harrowing experience for the silver-haired matron, who while fearful she too would be arrested, trooped in the rain past unfriendly people seeking help in a city closed nearly tight to observe Confederate Memorial Day.

It did not help her any that many of the contact people she was to telephone in case of arrests in her group, could not be immediately reached.

Recalling the arrest of Henry Thomas, 19, a Howard University student, for using the main terminal waiting room (charges later were dropped), Mrs. Bergman said: "I thought how awful it was to be doing nothing wrong and get arrested. I know his very soul was enraged."

The white man arrested with Thomas at Winnsboro and later freed also, was James Peck of New York, CORE labor editor.

MRS. BERGMAN described things as "so hostile it seemed the storm was about to break." She added: "The rehearsing we had done in Washington for such situations seemed so far off."

Finally having done all she could in Winnsboro and unwilling to wait there for a bus, Mrs. Bergman hired a cab to Columbia where her husband, Dr. W. G. Bergman, 61, also a Freedom Rider, went to be with her.

But if Winnsboro had hoped to discourage Mrs. Bergman in her fight for equality for all, the town failed miserably.

When called on later by Freedom Rider leader James Farmer, CORE director, to talk, she said: "This thing made me realize what it is to be scorned, humiliated and made to feel like dirt. . . . The whole thing was such an eye-opener for me.

"I WAS TREATED the way I've seen so many colored persons treated (because she associated herself with one).

"This was one day for me. They (colored persons) get it every day from birth."

"It left me so filled with admiration for the colored people who have to live with this all their lives.

"It seems to me that anything I can do now, day or night, would not be enough."

Mrs. Bergman said her husband also has vowed to rededicate himself.

"I think our hope seems to be in the young people," Mrs. Bergman said, "But I don't think the older persons should sit back and wait for them to do it.

"Somehow you feel there is a new urgency at this time. You see the courage all about you."

Five other students joined the Freedom Rider entourage enroute. Included was the first colored woman participant, Miss Mae Frances Moultrie, 25-year-old Morris College senior of Sumter, S.C.

Two other Morris College students began the trip to Sumter. They were Ivor Moore, 21 of the Bronx, N.Y., and Herman K. Harris, 21, of Englewood, N.J. Others in entourage are Gus Griffin, 20, of Tampa. Fla., a J.C. Smith student; and Isaac Reynolds, 27, of Detroit.

The death of Dr. J. Leonard Farmer, 75, at Freedmen's Hospital, Washington, saddened the group. He was the father of James Farmer, CORE leader of NYC.

PRISON TERM- DRUNKENNESS CHARGE

'Freedom Rider' Begins Term for Drunkenness

DONALSONVILLE, Ga. (UPI— A 19-year-old Negro "Freedom Rider" who said he quit the movement at the request of his parents began a 12-month sentence here Saturday following his arrest Friday on a drunkenness charge.

Allen Kason of Nashville, Tenn., was removed from a passenger train and brought before Judge Walter I. Geer, who speedily imposed the one-year sentence after Kason pleaded guilty.

KASON, in a signed statement given to authorities here, said he was one of a group of riders who reached Montgomery, Ala., on May 20. He said he currently is free on bond on a breach of peace charge at Jackson, Miss.

Seminole County Sheriff Dan White quoted Kason as saying he left the movement at the request of his parents and was en route to their home at Orlando, Fla.

Kason was arrested aboard the ACL passenger train Southwind which made an unscheduled stop here. Conductor R. L. Sears charged Kason with being drunk and disturbing passengers.

for Cason to continue on the train.

The officer said Cason entered a plea of guilty Thursday before Judge Walter I. Greer and was given 12 months in a public works camp.

Cason told officers his home is in Orlando, Fla., and that he has been attending Tennessee A. and I. University in Nashville, Tenn.

He said he was in a group of "Freedom Riders.. that visited Montgomery May 20 and "escaped from a mob without injury."

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 8 (UPI)—A group of young students formed a line outside the Tennessee Governor's office today and demanded an appointment to protest the expulsion of Freedom Riders from Tennessee Agricultural and Industrial State University.

Eleven whites and Negroes formed a double line stretching across the marble corridor in forn of Gov. Buford Ellington's office in the Capitol.

A spokesman said Mr. Ellington had refused to see them and they intended to stay there until he had changed his mind. Other members of the group weer outside the Capitol, making a total of about twenty-five demonstrators.

Mr. Ellington left his office by a side door, the route he normally uses, a little more tahn an hour after the demonstrators had arrived. His press secretary, Don Binkley, said Mr. Ellington would have no comment.

Fourteen students were expelled from the Tennessee school last spring after having been convicted of breach of the peace in Jackson, Miss.

One of the expelled students in the demonstration today said that a citizens group had attempted unsuccessfully all summer to negotiate with state officials.

HOUSTON, Tex. (AP) — The mass trial of 18 persons, including 11 California Freedom Riders, began Wednesday before Judge George Miller of County Court at Law.

A Negro attorney, Hamah King, told Miller prosecution of the 11 Negroes in the group stems from race and color. He said prosecution of the seven whites results from "their association with members of the colored race."

Montgomery Ala.

The 18 were arrested Aug. 11 and charged with unlawful assembly after appearing at the Union Railroad Station to protest segregation policies at a restaurant.

Miller ordered selection of a jury after denying King's motion to dismiss the complaints on ground they do not allege a violation against the state.

"These defendants are not being prosecuted for the purpose of enforcing any valid law," King said.

DALLAS* FREEDOM RIDER
22 YEAR OLD LONDON, ENGLAND WOMAN
REPORTED SHE HAD BEEN RAPED

White 'Rider' Is Raped By Negro

British Girl Names 'CORE Sympathizer'

Jackson Daily News

DALLAS, Tex. (UPI)—A 22-year-old London, England woman who said she had been a freedom rider for the Congress of Racial Equality, told police yesterday she was raped by a 260-pound Negro posing as a sympathizer for the organization.

Detectives L. D. Montgomery and Harvin Johnson said a physician examined her and reported she had been raped, and apparently had had no relations prior to the assault.

Sat 9-30-61

Police arrested the Negro and were holding him on investigation of forcible rape. They said he had admitted to "almost all" of the girl's story.

The green-eyed, brunette said she joined the CORE movement in New Orleans during the summer and was jailed at Jackson, Miss., for one month as a freedom rider. She said she was released after core posted her $500 bond three weeks ago.

The woman said she came to Dallas looking for a job. She said the National Advancement for Colored People fixed her up with a hotel room.

She said she met the Negro at a cafe near the hotel and that he identified himself as a "friend" of the organization (CORE). He told her he owned the hotel and also was a newspaper publisher, she said.

The 40-year-old Negro later came to her hotel room, she said, and interviewed her "to determine how I could better serve CORE" and "he suggested I could help most as a model."

She said he took her measurements and told her how she would "have to get used to being handled and posed by photographers."

He then threw her on a bed and raped her, she said, and told her there would be $200 for her at the desk and that $150 of it could go to CORE and the rest she could keep.

She said she told a priest what had happened and he called police.

Negro Accused Of Raping 'Rider'

F-2A The News-Times

June 10-1-61

DALLAS, Tex. (AP) — Anthony Thomas Davis, 41, a Negro disc jockey, was charged Saturday with raping a 22-year-old British girl who was a Freedom Rider in Mississippi.

Police said Davis, a 260-pounder denied he raped the 95-pound girl, but otherwise confirmed much of the incident as she told it to police.

The girl, who spent a month in a Jackson, Miss., jail before officials of the Congress of Racial Equality posted $500 bond, said she met Davis after checking in at the all-Negro Oakland Terrace Hotel Thursday.

She said that after the assault she was so frightened she stayed in the room. Friday, she went to a Catholic priest who called police.

Capt. Will Fritz said the girl agreed to be booked into the city jail as a material witness because she had no place else to go.

He said the girl still seems to be sympathetic with the cause of Negro rights, but says, "I can't go on like this."

She eventually wants to go to San Francisco, Fritz said.

Dallas police said Davis once received a one- to two-year sentence for larceny in Philadelphia, Pa., and was arrested here in 1953 on a rape warrant from Hot Springs, Ark.

Charged With Attack On 'Freedom Rider'

The Call A1 Fri-10-6-61

Kansas City Mo.

DALLAS, Texas. — (UPI) Dist. Atty. Henry Wade said he would take a disc jockey before the grand jury which took office Monday and press for an early trial on charges he raped a British girl who spent a month in jail as a "Freedom Rider."

Pauline Kathleen Sims, 22, the victim, was back in jail as a material witness but Police Captain Will Fritz said this time it was a "kindness" because she had no place else to go.

Anthony Thomas Davis, 40, a 240-pound ex-convict who has been working for a Negro radio station in Dallas, admitted much of the girl's story, but denied he raped her.

Rape is punishable by death in Texas.

Wade said an examining trial would be held to "determine whether the case against Davis is bailable" and if so to fix the amount.

He said he would try to bring Davis to trial during October.

Miss Sims told authorities Davis posed as a friend of the Congress of Racial Equality to which she belongs to gain access to the room in which she was staying at a Negro hotel.

She joined CORE three months ago and spent a month in a Jackson, Miss., jail before se was released three weeks ago on bond and came to Dallas. She found a job as a secretary and put up at the YWCA.

Miss Sims, who has spent two years in the United States on a seven-year visa, said the ousted her because her room was "needed for someone else" and she telephoned the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People for assistance. The NAACP got her a room at the Negro hotel.

FREEEDOM RIDERS INTEGRATE JAIL

HOUSTON, Tex., Aug. 12 (AP).—The first Freedom Riders to test desegregation in Houston failed in the attempt but succeeded in integrating the city jail for a while.

Eleven Freedom Riders from California — seven of them white — were joined by seven Houston Negroes in an effort to get service in a union train station coffee shop yesterday.

All 18 were arrested on unlawful assembly charges and placed in the Harris County Jail when they refused to post $500 bonds. There was no violence at the coffee shop, where Houston Negroes have made integration attempts in the past.

After the arrests the riders were put in the same cell for a time at City Jail. Negro and white prisoners customarily are kept separate.

Robert Kaufman, a 23-year-old white student from Berkeley, Calif., said they were treated kindly by police.

Roundtrip Tickets Used

He said the riders came to Houston on round-trip train tickets from Los Angeles to make a definite attempt to test integration here.

"We are on vacation," he said. "We hate for it to be this kind, but we feel we are doing our duty."

Elsewhere in the Nation, more than 180 convicted riders out on bond were preparing to converge on Jackson, Miss., to enter pleas for their second trials. All served time in Mississippi jails for convictions of breach of the peace and appealed.

A white youth knocked down a newspaperman and a staff member of the Congress of Racial Equality in New York just after 31 riders left by bus for Jackson.

Assailant Escapes

William Doolittle, a reporter for the New York Post, and Marvin Rich, community relations director of CORE, were taken to a hospital for treatment. The assailant and a white companion escaped.

In Atlanta, the Rev. Wyatt Tee Walker, executive director of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, said buses also will leave for Jackson from Nashville, New Orleans and Atlanta. Other individual riders will make the trip by plane or train.

Mr. Walker said plans called for the riders to reach Jackson around noon tomorrow and attend a rally tomorrow night. The riders are due to report in the Hinds County Recorder's Court in Jackson at 9 a.m. Monday.

'Riders' integrate Va. motel

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. — A group of five Freedom Riders, en route from New York to Chattanooga, Tenn., last week integrated the Thomas Jefferson Inn (motel) here.

Other stops by the group, which included Henry Thomas, 19, of St. Augustine, Fla., who just finished a 40-day sentence in Mississippi for freedom riding, are scheduled for Roanoke and some communities of Tennessee.

In addition to Thomas, also in the group were John C. Harvard, 39, psychologist at Howard University; Rabbi Herman S. Stern, 30, River Edge, N.J.; Rabbi Sidney Shanken, 39, of Cranford N.J.; and Woolcott K. Smith, 20, a Michigan State University student.

IN MISSISSIPPI, six Jackson youths were arrested for staging a sit-in at Walgreen Drug Store lunch counter — the first such protest demonstration in the Delta State since the movement mushroomed in Feb., 1960.

At press time, two of six were convicted of breach of peace and fined $200 and sentenced to four months in jail.

The youths, Lavaghn Brown, 16, and Jimmie Travis, 18, have vowed to stay in jail for 39 days and seek an appeal on the 40th. Jack H. Young has been retained by CORE as their attorney.

AND IN FLORIDA, five teenagers were arrested during a sit-in demonstration at a downtown Pensacola variety store.

Police arrested the youths on charges of unlawful assembly and refusing to obey a police order when they failed to move on at a store where a lunch counter had closed for the day.

Another interesting demonstration downtown included an "opposition" sitdown by white youths at Woolworth. The youths took all available seats, yielding only for members of their race who wished service.

AND IN TENNESSEE, a Zebulon Recorder's Court for the third time postponed the trial of three teenagers who attempted to get service at the bus station cafe. Postponements were due to the illness of the owner, Herbert Perry.

The youths, Leon Dunn, 18, and Misses Rebecca Bailey, 19, and Janie Louise Battle, 18, all of Nashville are due to be tried Sept. 12.

BIRMINGHAm- PARKS CLOSED ✓

'Park closed, no trespassing signs to go up over city

B'ham News p.1 Sat. 12-9-61

B'ham Ala.

BY LOU ISAACSON, News staff writer

"This park closed . . . no trespassing."

Signs with this wording will be placed in Birmingham parks as officials here, acting under court orders to integrate public recreation facilities next month, set machinery in motion to close most of them by Jan. 1.

Mayor Art Hanes and other members of Birmingham's Park and Recreation Board, declaring they were acting under necessary budgetary retrenchment, approved a skeleton budget of $295,000 for the next nine months (through Aug. 31).

THIS WAS about 20 per cent of the original budget of $1½ million for the park facilities through that period.

Mayor Hanes said that Legion Field, Jimmy Morgan Zoo, Vulcan Park and Woodrow Wilson Park would remain open.

The Park Board took this drastic action at a a stormy meeting Friday afternoon, with former Mayor James W. Morgan, board member, opposing it as "grossly unfair."

MRS. J. H. BERRY, Dan Gaylord and Mayor Hanes voted for the reduced budget, with Mrs. Berry declaring: "I think it's a shame that this should happen to such a fine segment of our city, and I think the blame should be placed where it belongs—on the City Commission."

The commission earlier had reduced appropriations for the park board.

Park Board President James J. Downey was absent from the meeting because of a death in his family.

Replying to Mrs. Berry's comment, Mayor Hanes said he also regretted the board's action, adding "but it's a matter of the people of this city making up their minds whether they want integrated or segregated parks."

Hanes rapped the federal courts, asserting " I personally resent the federal courts telling us we've got to integrate our parks. I think the U. S. Supreme Court has gone far afield in not interpreting our constitution but in making special laws."

THE BOARD Friday instructed City Parks Supt. Frank Wagner to:

1. Immediately give all classified and unclassified employes notice that they will be dismissed as of Jan. 1.

2. Prepare signs which will read "this park closed . . . no trespassing."

3. Prepare for operating a skeleton maintenance crew at the site of all parks.

4. Prepare to board up the park system's 14 community centers.

For the next nine months the system will operate on a budget of $295,000 compared to $1,024,000 last year. The board had requested $1.5 for the current fiscal year.

OF THE BUDGET amount allocated, approximately $90,000 will be needed to operate the zoo.

Another $160,000 will be needed to pay off discharged employes which will include vacation pay.

This will leave in effect about $5,0000 a month to operate the system as compared to $90,000 last year.

The skeleton budget will cover a period from Dec. 1, 1961 to Aug. 31, 1962.

How many park system employes will be affected by the lay-off order has not yet been determined. The best estimate so far is that about 125 will be dismissed.

Hanes several times during the meeting asked board members point blank if they favored integration. Board members replied "no."

AFFECTED by the decision are 67 parks and playgrounds, 14 community houses, four golf courses, a hobby shop, a greenhouse-nursery, and eight Negro and white swimming pools.

Park system properties cover approximately 1,500 acres of land, and are attended annually by millions of people.

A breakdown on the number of personnel in the parks show 165 classified employes and 62 unclassified.

Another 150 persons are employed during the four summer months to work at swimming pools and playgrounds.

During the football season, another 213 are hired as ticket takers and parking attendants at Legion Field.

Hanes said there might be a chance that some of the park properties might be leased to private groups.

HE SAID the recent federal court ruling definitely had some bearing on the City Commission's decision to drastically cut the Park Board budget.

Asked about Legion Field, the Art Museum and Municipal Airport., Hanes replied that they would continue to operate.

Both the stadium and auditorium, he said, are self-sustaining.

Earlier the Park Board voted to charge an entrance fee at the zoo.

The charge will be 25 cents for each person except for children under 7 who will pay 10 cents.

Hanes said this would help make up the deficit in the zoo allocation caused by the drastic cut in appropriations.

Recreation Area Race Ban Voided By Judge

Fed. 10-25-61

Montgomery, Ala.

BIRMINGHAM (AP) — A federal judge ruled Tuesday that segregation of public recreation places in Birmingham is unconstitutional.

The ruling by U.S. District Court Judge H. H. Grooms came on a suit brought by 15 Negroes, including the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, former pastor and Negro integration leader here.

The judge reserved a ruling butcher knives from the kitchen the convicts started to leave. Bu they were driven back inside apparently by the barking of Kilby bloodhounds that were trailing them.

"They came back into the bed room where we were tied and told us they would wait for my husband to come home. They said they wanted his car," the policeman's wife said.

WALKED INTO ROOM

She said Whatley hid in the closet, about five feet from the foot of the bed where her hands were bound, and Butler moved into an adjacent bedroom with the shotgun.

The policeman said he saw nothing amiss when he arrived home, at 2:15 p.m., from his shift at the city jail.

"I walked into the bedroom," he said. "There was my wife and her mother tied up and this man with his hands in the air yelling 'don't shoot.'"

Shipman credits his mother-in-law with perhaps saving all their lives. Her scream of warning, he said, was the first instance he knew two men were in the house

He whirled in time to see the muzzle of the shotgun sliding slowly around the door. He said he fired "four or five times."

HIT FOUR TIMES

A physician at Kilby Prison hospital said Butler had three bullets lodged in his midsection and another had passed through the body. Butler died within an hour at the prison, attendants said.

Whatley was knocked down by the pistol whipping but apparently suffered no major injuries. Kilby officials said he was given first aid and moved to a cell segregated from the other inmates.

Defendants in the suit were Birmingham's three city commissioners and members of the city park and recreation board.

Protest Made Against Park Shut-Down

The Montgomery Advertiser

BIRMINGHAM (AP) — Four organizations asked city authorities Tuesday to keep Birmingham's park facilities open while one group sided with City Commission action on the issue.

The city last week slashed the park and public recreation board budget by 30 per cent and announced that most public recreation facilities in the state would close Jan. 1.

P. 8A

A federal judge ruled recently in a suit broght by Negroes that the recreation areas would have to integrate by Jan. 15. The ruling is being appealed.

Ala. 12-13-61

Mayor Arthur J. Hanes said letters continue to come to his office concerning the parks.

"I haven't had time to count the pros and cons today," he said. "But offhand, I'd say there are more letters opposing the closing of the parks than in favor of it."

Montgomery Ala.

Groups which adopted resolutions Tuesday opposing the shutdown of parks included the Birmingham Downtown Improvement Association, the Junior Chamber of Commerce, the North Birmingham Chamber of Commerce and the Jefferson County Association for Mental Health.

The Carpenters Local Union 103 announced in favor of the commission's action. The local has about 1,300 members.

Belong To All

Our public parks and our recreational facilities are a part of our cultural and freedom life. They belong to all, not merely the angry voices in City Hall. Close down these recreational facilities and you cut off the stream of cultural life.

These thoughts came to mind as some angry voices in City Hall began to sound off following the ruling by Federal Judge H. H. Grooms that the law as interpreted by the U.S. Fifth Circuit and the United States Supreme Court applies in Birmingham the same as it applies anywhere else. As a federal judge he said he had no alternative but to follow the law as defined by the higher federal courts.

What Birmingham needs at this hour are leaders of responsibility and patriotism. Our municipal image is already blurred. Our city's name is too often identified with something less than bold, fresh, stimulating enlightenment. The voice of the city is too often negative. Brutal negatism may be emotionally popular but it is never civicly sound.

Far better would it be to let reason, understanding, and powerful goodness work their way in. It is too much to expect any deprived, disadvantaged, and cheated group or individual to abandon his aspirations and constitutional rights under some spurious and specious notion of obtaining civic goodwill. Goodwill which asks a man to lose his will to be respected and to be accorded his just due as an American citizen and as a self-respecting human being is only vile hypocrisy.

Birmingham simply cannot continue to live apart from the United States and be a part of the United States. Birmingham must live according to the law to set the example for abiding by the law. Rash statements are poor substitutes for rational sentiments.

Judge Grooms' ruling should open the way for a new, wiser and more thoughtful leadership to come forward. Our city has lang been in need of bold, clear and bright voices which are willing to face the progress which beckons us forward. This decision should test the goodness of local civic relations based upon the Golden Rule and the American credo of the dignity of opportunity. Those old voices which have soured with bitterness, screeched with narrowness, and quivered with fear of change have no message of benefit.

The plaintiffs in this case obviously reflect the basic aspirations of the group for whom they went to court and won a decision which reaffirms the American promise. If there are some willing to give major credit to the Reverend Fred Lee Shuttlesworth for his leadership and Attorney Ernest D. Jackson of Jacksonville, Florida, for his skilled legal talent, let us applaud.

America should love any leader who respects, uses and relies upon the traditional American process in seeking to enrichen, enlarge and endear freedom. At least the plaintiffs worked within the law, constructively, and with tools of freedom. On that angle the angry voices are silent.

The implications of Judge Grooms' decision are massive and far reaching. In the light of these fundamental impilcations there is ground for hope and encouragement. This is where our group's leadership might begin to find a way to build genuine goodwill based upon justice, dignity and mutual respect. Goodwill should know neither class nor color lines, it seems to us.

Orders Birmingham Parks Desegregated

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — (UPI) — A federal judge Tuesday ordered integration of Birmingham's park and recreation facilities. The directive brought a promise of closure of the facilities.

U. S. District Judge H. Hobart Grooms declared unconstitutional a section of the city code requiring segregation in "any room, hall, theater, picture house, auditorium, yard, court, ball park, public park, or other indoor or outdoor places to which both white and Negro persons are admitted."

He said that under higher court rulings he had no option in the matter but to order the integration. After City Attorney J. M. Breckenridge ended a plea for the city's side of the argument, Grooms turned to the lawyer and told him, "You are addressing the wrong court, Mr. Breckenridge. These matters have already been decided by higher courts."

In reply to the judge's ruling one of three city commissioners, Eugene Conner said, "So far as I am concerned all white and Negro parks, swimming pools, golf links will be closed."

Grooms ordered the city to open immediately to Negro use 67 parks, four golf courses and 38 playgrounds.

He also directed the plaintiffs in the case they might amend their petition to include operators of the city auditorium, the city art museum, and various leased concessions on other city-owned properties.

Breckenridge said he was of the opinion the ruling should be and would be appealed.

B'ham Facility J'Crow Outlawed

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.- (UPI)—Federal Judge H. Hobart Groom Tuesday ordered desegregation of all Birmingham parks, swimming pools and other recreation facilities.

Grooms issued the order at the close of the hearing which heard testimony from several Negro and white witnesses that the city facilities are "customarily" segregated. The suit was brought by 15 Negroes.

The city was expected to appeal the decision.

Involved are 67 parks, four golf courses, 38 playgrounds and various swimming pools and other recreational facilities

In making the decision Groome said he had "no other choice" in view of recent decisions of the U. S. Supreme Court.

He directed the plaintiffs in the case, the Rev. Fred L. Shuttlesworth and 14 other Negroes, to amend their petitions to include the controlling bodies of the municipal auditorium and the city art museum.

The verdict touched off a jumping and shouting demonstration in the courtroom where about 200 Negroes had sat quietly throughcut the session of the court

Grooms ordered that all public recreational areas and parks, the city zoo and the municipal auditorium be ordered opened to Negroes on the same basis as whites.

Birmingham Takes Steps In Closing Some Parks

The Montgomery Advertiser Sat. 12-9-61

P-1

BIRMINGHAM (AP) — Faced with a federal court order to integrate public facilities next month, Birmingham officials took the first step Friday toward closing most of them Jan. 1.

The City Parks and Recreation Board approved a skeleton budget of only $295,000 — compared with an original budget of $1.5 million — for the operation of parks, playgrounds, swimming pools, golf courses and community centers through next Aug. 31.

Montgomery closed its parks Jan. 1, 1959, after an integration suit was filed. U.S. District Court Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr., later ruled that the parks must be integrated if re-opened, but he said that the city could not be compelled to operate parks.

Birmingham's Mayor Art Hanes said Legion Field, where upwards of 50,000 fans watch major college football, and the municipal zoo would remain open. So will Vulcan Park atop Red Mountain and Woodrow Wilson Park in downtown Birmingham, he said.

But the other parks will post signs the first of the year reading: "This Park Closed . . . No Trespassing."

Hanes directed Frank Wagner, head of the parks board, to dismiss all but the few maintenance men needed to keep up what remains in operations after Jan. 1.

Hanes, a member of the park board, said:

"I regret it, but it's a matter of the people of this city making up their minds whether they want integrated or segregated parks."

About one-third of Birmingham's population of 340,000 is Negro.

U.S. District Judge H. Hobart Grooms, ruling last October in a suit brought by Birmingham Negroes, threw out a Birmingham city ordinance requiring segregation in virtually all types of public recreation facilities.

The ruling covers Birmingham's municipal art museum, the municipal auditorium, six swimming pools, four golf courses, 38 playgrounds and 68 parks.

The city has appealed the ruling, but barring a delay order from federal court, the ruling will go into effect Jan. 15 even if the appeal still is pending.

Legion Field, although under the parks board, has a budget of its own. It is self-sustaining.

Neither the museum nor the auditorium is under the parks board.

Wagner said it would be up to him, as parks director, to recommend to the board a breakdown of the $295,000 for the various facilities remaining open.

The zoo alone last year cost $150,000.

BULLDOZER WORK

The park board's budget decision — by a 3-1 vote — followed an earlier announcement by Hanes that hinted at subsequent developments. The "no" vote came from former Mayor James W. Morgan, now a member of the park board.

Hanes, a few hours before the park board meeting, said he was slashing the budget by more than half, cutting $800,000 from the board's original $1.5 million.

Then the board, in formal session, approved an even lower figure.

Before the park board's meeting, work crews with a bulldozer showed up at Woodrow Wilson Park in downtown Birmingham and began tearing down concrete-based benches.

Newsmen at the scene got varying answers about who ordered the demolition work.

Hanes then called off the work crews, saying, "There is no reason to close Woodrow Wilson Park."

FLOWER GARDENS

He said the benches—now nothing more than concrete supports with the seats and backrests gone—would not be replaced.

Woodrow Wilson Park, composed of carefully manicured flower gardens, trees and trenches, is located between the City Hall and the Jefferson County Courthouse.

Morgan, the one member of the parks board who voted against slashing the budget, was mayor until last month. He retired from public office without seeking reelection.

He said only that he considered the proposal to starve the parks into closing as "grossly unfair."

As mayor, he was a staunch backer of public recreation facilities. The zoo bears his name today, and the city is in the process of putting up a botanical garden at the urging of Morgan.

If the parks close, Birmingham will become the second major city in Alabama to lose its recreation facilities in the battle over racial segregation.

Birmingham Cuts Budget In Park·Close

P. 36 The Atlanta Journal and Constitution

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Dec. 9 (AP). Birmingham officials, under court order to integrate public recreation facilities next month, have started the machinery to close most of them Jan. 1.

The City Parks and Recreation Board has approved a budget of $295,000—about 20 per cent of the original budget of $1.5 million—for the facilities through next Aug. 31.

Birm. 12-10-61

Affected by the move will be public parks, playgrounds, swimming pools, golf courses and community centers.

Columbus, Ga.

Mayor Art Hanes said Legion Field, the city's football stadium; the Municipal Zoo; Vulcan Park atop Red Mountain, and Woodrow Wilson Park in downtown Birmingham, would remain open.

BUT THE OTHERS will close.

Hanes told Frank Wagner, head of the parks board, to dismiss all but the maintenance men needed to keep up those facilities remaining open after Jan. 1.

"I regret it," said Hanes, "but its a matter of the people of this city making up their minds whether they want integrated or segregated parks."

U. S. District Court Judge H. Hobart Grooms ruled last October that a city ordinance requiring segregation in most public recreation facilities is unconstitutional. The ruling came on a suit brought by Birmingham Negroes.

He set a Jan. 15 deadline for complying with the order.

The city has appealed, but no delay order has been issued for Grooms' ruling.

THE RULING covers Birmingham's Art Museum, the Municipal Auditorium, six swimming pools, four golf courses, 38 playgrounds and 68 parks.

The budget cut came on a 3-1 vote of the parks board. Former Mayor James W. Morgan, now a member of the board, cast the dissenting vote.

A few hours before the parks board meeting, Hanes said he was cutting $800,000 from the board's original $1.5-million budget.

Then the board, in formal session, approved the even lower budget figure.

Before the parks board met, work crews began tearing down concrete-based benches in Woodrow Wilson Park. Newsmen got varying answers about who ordered the work.

Closing Parks In Birmingham Opposed

After Park Closing?

BIRMINGHAM (AP) — Faced with a federal court order to integrate public recreation facilities next month, Birmingham city officials have moved to close most of them Jan. 1.

The City Parks and Recreation Board approved a skeleton budget which would result in the closing of parks, playgrounds, swimming pools, golf courses and community centers.

Mayor Arthur J. Hanes said Legion Field, where upwards of 50,000 fans watch college football, and the municipal zoo would remain open.

Two other parks—Vulcan Park atop Red Mountain and Woodrow Wilson Park in downtown Birmingham—would not be affected, Hanes said. Both parks are showplaces with well manicured flower beds.

U. S. District Judge N. Hobart Grooms ruled last October that the city must integrate its parks by Jan. 15. The ruling covers the art museum, municipal auditorium, 6 swimming pools, 4 golf courses, 38 playgrounds and 68 parks.

Former Mayor James W. Morgan has said he believes the city commission is acting too hastily. Morgan said he favors segregation, but added that the commissioners should wait until they see what effect integrated parks would have on the city.

CIVIC, CHURCH GROUPS

Morgan was a staunch supporter of public recreation facilities. He said to move to starve the parks into closing was "grossly unfair." The municipal zoo was named after Morgan.

The city commission has faced strong opposition from civic and church groups who have petitioned the city officials to keep the parks open.

Other commissioners besides Hanes are Public Safety Commissioner Eugene Connor and Public Improvements Commissioner J. T. Waggoner.

Among those seeking to keep the recreation facilities open are the Birmingham Committee of 100, composed of businessmen seeking new industry; the Chamber of Commerce and the Birmingham Ministerial Association.

C OF C STATEMENT

The Chamber of Commerce issued a statement from its board of directors saying in part:

"We view with grave concern the recent decision to close the public recreational and cultural facilities in Birmingham. Understandably, such a decision was difficult to reach.

"While it is easy to criticize, it is our hope the citizenry will react with understanding and objective expressions of opinions rather than with inflamatory comments or injurious criticisms."

The Chamber of Commerce said the city apparently has one of two choices:

1. To operate the facilities in compliance with the federal court order.

2. To close all of the facilities.

IF BIRMINGHAM public parks and other facilities are closed, it would be because elected officials think this is public desire.

But already a variety of public expressions have been forthcoming possibly indicating otherwise. The Downtown Improvement Association, a ministers' group, the Jaycees composed of younger men who necessarily must look far ahead, suburban groups such as the North Birmingham Chamber—these and other such groups already have said park closing is no answer.

Other such sentiment is certain to be expressed. Though no one can say how many, numerically, within Birmingham favor or oppose closing parks, city officials and all can see that much responsible civic leadership now doubts and says it doubts that closing is a solution to the federal court-created problem.

THIS IS OPINION that ought to and presumably will receive thorough attention from city officials. It is known well enough in City Hall that it is just such groups of Birmingham citizens who share much of the burden for creating in this community a sound sense of progress.

City commissioners do not need to be told by anyone that when such men speak, they do so after thought. Their opinion should be given great weight.

Elected officials are responsible to the people who vote. But the officials know that cities are heavily dependent for much of their direction on those who, over the years, have proved their service to the community through action, dedication and plain, hard work.

It is obviously the thought of such groups as have spoken that, since park closing is no solution, something else should be tried. This involves a basic acknowledgement of the inescapability of the federal court ruling. There is no real hope for reversal, though the judgment has been appealed.

Admittedly an answer to the question "What should be tried?" is not readily at hand. But an important first step to determining if there is such an answer would be evidence of a desire to study the situation more before a hard decision to close park and recreational facilities.

A very pertinent question for city officials and for every Birmingham citizen is this: If parks are closed, is it the assumption that Birmingham never will have such facilities again? Do either officials inclining toward closing or rank and file citizens assume this decision at hand is one for all time?

If there is a thought that at some future date parks and other facilities might be reopened, to provide this city with assets every other comparable city certainly will have, then why delay trying to find a way now to keep parks open? What is to be gained by closing, only to face a reopening at some future date?

There is, in this situation, a requirement for positive leadership. No action except to close down is not a satisfactory response. No thinking man deep down can believe that doing nothing is a substitute for doing something.

The problem before the commissioners is fully understood. The basis for much of reaction also is understood. The difficulty is indeed enormous. Final responsibility is in fact on those men elected to head our government.

But there is a great well of understanding and many hands, hearts and minds are ready to join an effort toward solution if aid is only sought by those responsible. To ask at the very least that all most directly involved and concerned gather and discuss the matter, would be a most heartening and courageous decision within City Hall.

There is time. But there is not much. The measure of men is now being taken by those who in future will write Birmingham's history.

This is the kind of hour in which real leaders come to full stature. It is hard. But a way could be found.

CLOSE THE PARKS

The [Ala.] Industrial Press

WE'RE with Mayor Art Hanes and Commissioner Eugene Connor and Jabo Waggoner! We salute their action in closing city parks in lieu of financial difficulties, and in face of federal court dictatorial rulings against Birmingham and Alabama laws.

The commission has acted in accord with the wishes of the majority of Birmingham residents, we believe. It is now up to those who favor this measure to take a strong stand with our elected officials.

There are those who will seek to have the commission revoke its order, being unwilling to take any stand on principle that will bring about a sacrifice on their part.

Consequently, those who feel that this action is vital in the resistance against encroachment of local rights by federal court edict, must take a firm stand now, and acknowledge their support to the City Commission.

We are glad the decision was made to close parks and park facilities in preference to the sale of the properties. We do not think that now is the time for the city to dispose of land which at some later date could again be useful for recreational purposes.

Closing parks today does not mean that they will be closed forever. Financial matters will be better in years to come. It's still possible for people of Birmingham and the South to win over political and federal intervention with our local laws and rights.

Those of us who want our liberties preserved must be willing to back our desires with some sacrifices for now; and, we must back the elected officials who are willing to carry the fight for us.

Letters, calls mounting in park battle

BY IVAN SWIFT
News staff writer

"I wish I had a crystal ball or the wisdom of Solomon."

The wisher is Birmingham's Mayor Art Hanes, and he wished it many times Tuesday as petitions, letters and phone calls cascaded in on him, telling him he's right or he's wrong for ordering Birmingham's parks closed.

Right or wrong, the parks—except the zoo, Legion Field and Vulcan—will close Jan. 1.

Hanes has made that plain and he has said it over and over again. And he's also said the real reason the parks will close is to thwart a federal court integration decision.

"There's an awful lot of people on both sides of this issue," Hanes told a crowd of Junior Chamber of Commerce members who crammed into his office Tuesday to protest the closing order.

Minutes before they came another protest against the closing by the Downtown Improvement Assn. landed on his desk.

He put it on the pile of messages for keeping parks open. Topping the stack for closing the parks was a petition from a resolution committee of Carpenters Local 103, saying "close the parks."

JAYCEE PRESIDENT Tom Moxley handed Hanes the terse, two-paragraph resolution and said "we'd like to deliver in person a resolution to you . . .

"Thank you very much," Hanes cut in.

"To let you know by our appearance here," Moxley continued, "our feelings against closing the parks."

Hanes walked around his desk, shaking hands with the Jaycees.

"I wish I knew what the best course is," he said. "I don't know it. But I appreciate your interest.

"As long as this much interest in our town is shown by these many people, we're going to progress. We're going to get ahead."

THE PETITIONERS aren't going to get an answer for a while, he said.

The question of a referendum, a vote of the people of Birmingham, on whether parks stay open or closed, was put to him.

Hanes said he was "all for it."

"Let 'em go out and get 10,000 signatures like we did a few years back to get an athletic segregation ordinance passed."

That ordinance is now dead. It died in the same federal courtroom as the segregated park system ordinance.

The parks are dead too, as of Jan. 1, petitions or no petitions, Hanes said.

But at the same time he proffered one way of resurrecting them—petitions asking for a referendum vote on the closing.

Attorneys who have been following the parks situation since the dilemma crested have discussed that.

They have also hashed around the possibility that the federal court will call the parks closing a defiance of its integration order.

THE LAWYERS say the federal court can't make the city appropriate any more money for the parks than city commissioners want to. But the lawyers say the court can order the city not to put up its no tresspassing signs Jan. 1.

Some court may get a chance to decide exactly what those "no tresspassing" signs would mean.

Mayor Hanes has told questioners that the sign wouldn't mean children couldn't go into a park and play, so far as he is concerned.

But so far as Police Commissioner Eugene Connor is concerned no tresspassing means exactly what is says—stay out.

Connor said officers will "run 'em out" if they find persons in the parks after the signs go up.

His reasoning is double-barreled:

First, a law means what is says, and "no tresspassing" means stay out.

Secondly, if whites can come in the parks, then Negroes can come in the parks. And after Jan. 15—if the parks are open — whites and Negroes can come in together.

SPOKESMAN for keeping the parks open say this won't happen, that Negroes will still stay in their own areas and not invade white parks.

"Maybe," says Hanes, "but can we afford an experiment?"

Meanwhile, over the city, protests rise, petitions pass, and the mayor hears from the people.

From some, he hears only once.

Those are the ones who said what they thought and got the phone calls in the night from the opposition. The phone calls usually come two ways.

One is with a blast of verbal filth an da threat of death.

The other is early in the morning, 2 a.m., 3 a.m. 4 a.m., when the phone rings, it's picked up—and there is only a click on the other end.

Both sides get them, it's part of the price you pay for taking sides.

Carpenters Opposed—

Four More Groups Ask Parks Be Kept Open

Four more organizations yesterday asked city authorities to keep Birmingham's park facilities open, while another group declared itself in favor of closing them.

Meanwhile, letters from individuals expressing their opinions on the matter continued to mount on the desk of Mayor Arthur J. Hanes.

"I haven't had time to count the pro's and con's today," said Mayor Hanes. "But offhand, I'd say there are more letters opposing the closing of the parks than in favor of it."

Monday, the letters were about 3-1 for closing the parks.

The Birmingham Downtown Improvement Assn., the Junior Chamber of Commerce, the North Birmingham Chamber of Commerce, and the Jefferson County Association for Mental Health adopted resolutions protesting the imminent shut-down of the park system.

The Jaycees came to Hanes' office in a group yesterday afternoon to present their resolution.

The Carpenters Local Union 103, which has about 1300 members, declared itself in favor of the City Commission's decision to cut the Park and Recreation Board's appropriation in half, thus forcing the subsequent closing of most park facilities.

Mayor steadfast for closing parks

BY IVAN SWIFT, News staff writer

Birmingham's parks will close Jan. 1 and they will stay closed, Mayor Art Hanes said—and re[illegible] times—at a public meeting in City Hall Monday

"The truth of the matter is, the parks were closed because of the integration ruling. That is plain as I know how to make it," Hanes said.

About 100 men and women, some for keeping the parks open, some for closing, others undecided, listened to Hanes bat a batch of questions back at the audience.

The speakers for closing the parks concentrated their arguments on the idea that anay break in the segregation wall would mean all-out integration in Birmingham.

The speakers for keeping the parks open saiad maintaining the parks will help Birmingham grow and prosper, and that open parks would result in only token integration.

CAUGHT IN the middle of the muddle were the representatives of groups which sponsor athletic activities for children at the city's parks.

Many of them have "begged" equipment and money to build up the parks in their areas.

Milton Fullman, a young father from West End, asked the question that hurt.

Fullman, a segregationist down the line, said "my boy's been playing ball for four years at Lowery Park, behind Jackson School.

"I got out and begged heavy equipment companies for a tractor to level the field. We scraped it off.

"NO NEGRO is going to play in that park with my boy and me. I can see to that.

"But does all this mean my boy and I cana't go up there and knock a ball around?"

Art Hanes held his answer for a few seconds, then he spoke slowly.

"If I saw an open park and I wanted to shag a few flies with my boy, I'd do it," he said. "I don't know what the police commissioner is going to do, but so far as I'm concerned, nobody is going to bother you."

Many in the crowd interpreted the mayor's answer to mean that even though the parks are ruled closed, children will be able to play in them.

WHEN REPRESENTATIVES of organized groups asked him about easing the parks, Hanes told them there is a big legal problem involved in leasing or selling the properties.

He said the court ruling integrating the parks would make it illegal for a park to be rented to whites but denied to Negroes who might try to rent it the following day.

Most of those who spoke — but not most of those in the meeting at City Hall—were for keeping the parks open.

CARL MILLER, chairman of the just formed People's Park Committee, told Hanes his group is against integration but for keeping the parks open.

He asked Hanes why the already almost totally integrated zoo will be kept open, and the parks will be closed.

"The zoo is a walk-around facility," Hanes said. "Besides, the City Commission isn't telling the Park and Recreation Board that it has $295,000 it can do anything with.

"They can operate anything they want to with it."

Earlier, Hanes pointed out that after the park board pays its bills, it will have barely enough to operate the zoo for the year.

Several times during the hour and a half long session, things got tense, and the words got bitter.

"You're a cold, cruel man," one person told Hanes.

"I'm one of the warmest hearted people you've ever seen," Hanes said. "Don't think I'm not being put out by this. I've lost sleep over it."

CHARLES MORGAN Jr., Birmingham attorney, asked Mayor Hanes just what effect the closing of the parks would have on the likelihood of Homewood and Mountain Brook merging with Birmingham.

"They won't merge with Birmingham because they are not faced with integration," replied Hanes. "Yet they want us to integrate."

Hanes said he watched desegregation in Washington, D.C., where the white people moved out and where Negroes moved in to make up a large part of that city's present day population.

"If you integrate these parks, and roll over and play dead, you hasten integration in the schools," emphasized Mayor Hanes.

S. T. Shumate told the group "I want to see the Pony League and the Little League kept going, but I do not advocate integration in any way."

HANES MADE IT PLAIN that if integration ever comes to Birmingham while he is mayor, it will be "at gunpoint."

He made the blunt statement when a woman asked him if he thought he "could keep segregation forever."

He agreed that "it may be true we can't keep segregation forever, but that doesn't mean we can't hold the line wherever the line can be held."

Asked if he meant closing the library and the schools, Hanes repeated "if they integrate, it will be at gunpoint."

He listened to attorneys, to representatives of the Young Men's Business Club, the Jefferson County Mental Health Assn.

The answer was the same—the parks are closed. Only the zoo, Legion Field and Vulcan stay open.

"PARKS AND RECREATION facilities are necessary to run a modern metropolis. If you're not up to date, you're not prosperous.

"Are we going to board up our community houses? Are the kids going to play in the streets?

"Isn't there some reasonable solution?"

And he heard the pleaders for closed parks say:

"I'd rather see them boarded up than integrated."

"If we integrate the parks and roll over and play dead, the schools will be next."

"Park integration is just a foot in the door. Schools are going to be next."

The talk rocked back and forth, from merger to new industry, but the questions were answered before the session began.

As of now, Birmingham's public recreation system is dead.

Citizen groups battling for parks

BY IVAN SWIFT, News staff writer

Opposition to closing Birmingham parks was voiced here Sunday, and groups were being organized over the city today to fight the City Commission budget chop that woudl curtail recreation here Jan. 1.

The first organization to get going strong was the People's Park Committee, headed by two West End men, Carl Miller and Ferman Kelly.

Miller, a salesman, and Kelly, a druggist, are officials of youth sports groups such as Little League and Pop Warner Football.

"We got started Saturday morning, and we've mushroomed. Right now we've got 20 to 25 people—representatives of Wahouma, Ensley, Southside, Central Park — we've met with and discussed this," Miller said.

"WE WANT TO ASK some questions," he said.

"What's really causing the parks to close?

Is it really integration?

"Is it financies?

"Or is it politics?"

"We don't think it's finances, we think it's politics," Miller said.

MILLER SAID there are no politicians in his group, and "none of us has any political aspirations."

Tonight they will be at Mayor Art Hanes office to let him know they are against closing the parks.

Meanwhile, other meetings are being set up for the rest of the week.

"This happened so fast, people are saying it really isn't going to happen," Miller said.

"But when you show them it is happening, they want to stop it."

At Charlie Boswell Golf Course, a petition protesting the closing started circulating at 1 p.m. Sunday. It had 68 signatures before the course closed.

Those at the course said only one person read it and refused to sign.

"WE, THE UNDERSIGNED, respectfully protest the closing of the Roebuck Golf Course and other golf courses and parks. This petition is not an endorsement of integration but is an appeal for not allowing integration to deprive the people of our city of the recreation facilities of our golf courses and parks.

"The undersigned feel that by the very nature of the game of golf, that even though the golf courses be integrated, that segregation could and would be practiced in that there would be no mixing of the races within foresomes. With the exception of the areas adjacent to the tees, considerable distance would separate the foursome as they played the courses.

"We, the undersigned, realize and appreciate that integration is unpopular with a great many people in our city, but we feel that it is more desirable to integrate our golf courses and parks than to close them."

Ministers add appeal—

Commissioners stand firm against 'keep parks' pleas

BY IVAN SWIFT
News staff writer

Birmingham's city commissioners stood like pre-cast concrete Saturday against power-packed pleas from business, religious and civic groups for a new look at the park closing situation.

But at the same time the commissioners said the parks will close to prevent integration, the Ministers' Association of Greater Birmingham asked members to preach against it "right away," possibly this Sunday.

Other developments

AND THESE OTHER developments came into the picture this weekend, less than a month from the day public recreation is ordered ended in this city:

1. A group of Negro leaders offered to meet and discuss the parks situation with white leaders.

2. About 100 members of the golf clubs at Highland Park, North Birmingham and Roebuck voted—with one nay—to keep the courses open, even if it means desegregated greens.

3. Ringling Brothers Circus officials said the circus had reserved Feb. 14-18 at Municipal Auditorium, but it was canceled by city officials about 10 days ago.

The minister's, following up last week's statement to the City Commission opposing the closing, asked that "every pulpit, as soon as possible, preach against the sinful situation that might well bring a day of tragic darkness to our beloved city."

The message asked the 200 Protestant clergymen who belong to the association to "please preach such a sermon, if you agree."

All must join

BUT IT POINTED out that "unless every pulpit preaches against it, our city parks and other recreational areas involved will be closed down.

"This will take place on or before Jan. 15, unless the clergy join with lay citizens—with the plea and the prayer that this day of darkness does not come upon us.

"Unless thousands upon thousands of people in greater Birmingham make their feelings known to City Hall, this day of darkness may well come next month, Jan. 15," the message said.

And it urged ministers to ask heir governing boards to "take an official stand against this coming day of darkness."

One church, Woodlawn Presbyterian, already has. Others are known to be considering it.

The message points out that large group of church members met with the ministers at the ministers' invitation.

Connor stands firm

COMMISSIONER Eugene Connor, aware of the statements from the city's business and civic leaders against the closing, isn't budging.

"I'll never vote to integrate our parks, our swimming pools, our community centers, golf links or Legion Field."

Mayor Art Hanes, who is getting the bulk of the mail and the calls on the parks situation, said, "I have received hundreds of letters and hundreds of phone calls. The vast majority of these calls and letters indicate to me they want the line to be held against integration and communism."

Commissioner J. T. Waggoner couldn't be reached Saturday, but Connor said Waggoner told him and Hanes he is solidly with them on the parks closing issue.

The Birmingham Bar Association took the matter up but voted not to approve a resolution asking that the parks decision be held up until a committee could be organized to study the problem.

It was beaten by a small vote, after some attorneys argued that the bar association should not make a recommendation because the parks closing is a "political" issue.

Legal action looms

THE POSSIBILITY of legal action, either from citizens who want open parks, or from the federal court, is obvious.

Some Birmingham residents believe they have a legal case based on the closing of some facilities, but the continued operation of Legion Field, the zoo and possibly several playgrounds.

Attorneys point out that the federal court might consider the city's budget chop to prevent desegregation a violation of its order integrating the parks.

There are other legal angles to the issue, but all are thorny, including the possibility of private groups taking over the facilities.

The groups which have come out already against closing—the Chamber of Commerce, the Committee of 100, the Junior Chamber of Commerce, the Young Men's Business Club, the Ministerial Association, the Downtown Improvement Association—say they are working to change City Hall's mind on closing.

But City Hall is sticking to its stand.

Said Connor:

"After receiving a copy of its resolution, I wrote the Birmingham Chamber of Commerce and stated that if it can come up with an idea how we can keep the parks segregated, then I would vote to keep them open.

Won't integrate

"I'LL NEVER vote to integrate our parks, our swimming pools, our community centers, golf links or Legion Field.

"I would like to see citizens of our city form a corporation and buy the golf courses and Legion Field and operate them as private facilities.

"The great majority of the people who are doing most of this talking and passing resolutions to keep the parks open don't even live in the City of Birmingham.

"And I've had at least a dozen persons who belong to these organizations that have passed these resolutions write me and tell me they didn't even vote for these resolutions.

I've had two ministers call me and tell me they didn't vote for the resolution passed by the ministers group, and tell me to hold the line.

"This yapping which is being done, mostly by those living outside our city, is causing unrest among both races and, if it isn't stopped, it's going to cause some serious consequences in Birmingham.

"If Mountain Brook and Homewood want integrated parks, let them buy some property and integrate them.

"At the last meeting I had with the other two commissioners, Mr. Hanes and Mr. Waggoner, all three of us were unanimous in closing the parks.

Ask other views

"I'D LIKE TO know what our Jefferson County legislators, including our state senator, and also our lieutenant governor, who lives in the City of Birmingham, have to say about closing the parks in our city. They represent Birmingham in our Legislature.

"This is my final statement about the parks."

Said Hanes:

"I will never knowingly, consciously, or wittingly aid and abet integration or communism in any form, or communism which is pushing integration in any form.

"On the contrary, I will fight it and resist it with every ounce of my strength.

"I have received hundreds of letters and hundreds of phone calls. The vast majority of these calls and letters indicate to me that they want the line to be held against integration and communism.

"Tnis makes me doubly happy. It coincides with my own personal beliefs.

"The thinking of those who say hold the line is based solely on good old Southern and American principles."

Negro leaders offer to meet with whites on park issue

Birmingham Negro leaders Saturday offered to meet and discuss the parks situation with white leaders.

The announcement came from 14 Negroes, including A. G. Gaston, who has large business interests here and Arthur D. Shores, widely known Negro attorney.

It points out that "first-class citizenship" is the goal of the group. But it explains that Negroes know responsibility goes with citizenship.

Will affect both

AND CLOSING the parks Jan. 15 will affect Negroes as well as whites, both economically in proportion to area growth, and individually regarding a place to play.

The Negro group said meetings to talk about ways of solving the problem could serve a double purpose.

It was pointed out this could help ease the parks situation and reestablish communication between the races here.

Here is the statement:

"The Negro community, united in its determination for first-class citizenship, is willing and anxious to assume its full share of responsibilities and duties incident thereto.

"We are vitally concerned with the present image of Birmingham and Alabama, and with its future development. The economic and cultural growth and development of our area are dependent on the climate of race relations. We are concerned, just as all citizens should be.

"IN OUR DEEP concern for the progress of our community, and in keeping with our traditional attitude, we are ready and willing to meet with the white citizens of Birmingham and Jefferson County to discuss ways of solving the problems facing our community—in a spirit of reason, understanding, and Christian goodwill.

"Dedicated to progress and cooperation, we welcome the opportunity to establish good, sound communication between the races.

It is in this spirit that we stand ready and willing.

"The above statement is subscribed to by the following committee of citizens.

Chamber Calls Bi-Racial Meet

BIRMINGHAM (AP)—The president of the Birmingham Chamber of Commerce, Sidney W. Smyer, called Monday for a bi-racial meeting on the dilemma facing Birmingham's parks.

As it stands now, most of Birmingham's public recration facilites will be closed down after the first of the year.

The city, facing a Federal court order to integrate the facilities by Jan. 15, has curtailed budgets sharply, virtually assuring the closing of most parks.

A group of Birmingham Negroes offered Saturday to meet with white leaders to discuss the situation. The Negro group included A. G. Gaston, a prominent businessman, and Arthur D. Shores, a well-known attorney.

Mayor Art Haynes said he would meet with any group with a plan for keeping the parks open and segregated, but added he would not discuss any degree of integration.

Smyer urged the meeting of the races, saying, "Nobody has come up with a plan, and to get a plan you need agreement between the two groups."

A City Without Parks—

The beginning of a new year has been set as D-Day (Dooms Day). That's when Birmingham's public parks are to be padlocked and no trespassing signs posted.

The city has lost the Birmingham Barons. Now it is losing a tremendous athletic program for the young and old alike.

With one mark of the pen, years of city-provided recreation comes to an unjust end. Community houses are to be closed, many Little Leagues put out of business and Park Board baseball, basketball and football will no longer exist.

Kids will have to look elsewhere for a place to play. Will streets, vacant lots or street corners offer adequate gathering sites?

Adults will be without meeting halls. Dancing schools, kindergartens, craft classes and others must look for new facilities.

Why? That's the same "why" asked when the city lost its professional baseball club.

Ironically, exceptions have been mentioned. The zoo which is located in Lane Park is to remain open. Wahouma Park which houses a vast Little League project is to be closed.

Why one and not the other?

Legion Field which stands adjacent to McLendon Park will still host athletic contests. The Ensley Community House where men's and boys' basketball games are played goes under the lock.

Why this and not that?

Will McLendon Park still be used as a parking lot during football games after the edict?

The auditorium, too, keeps its doors open. The Central Park Community House's doors will be shut tight.

Why the auditorium and not the Central Park Community House?

To trespass is to violate. Does that mean reprimands for youngsters who can't resist the urge to fly a kite or play a game of scrub in posted public parks? Or fines, maybe, or jail sentences for repeated violations?

Will Birmingham's attraction as a playing site for college football games be dimmed? Will a college team be willing to play at Legion Field and run the risk of becoming involved in another's turmoil? Rich bowl invitations have been shunned for less reasons.

These are only questions. Every Birmingham voter must seek his own answers on how it will be to live in a city without parks and without city provided recreation.

City Hall roundup—

Park Board's skeleton expenses are outlined

BY LOU ISAACSON
News staff writer

How will the Birmingham Park and Recreation Board's skeleton appropriation of $295,000 be distributed?

After a week of cutting personnel to the barest minimum, Parks Supt. Frank Wagner has come up with the answer.

For the balance of December and January the board will spend $132,194, most of which will go to pay employes being laid off.

From Feb. 1 to Sept. 31 of next year Wagner will have $162,806 to work with, of which $114,481 will go for salaries and wages.

A breakdown of figures shows that for the seven-month period $15,733 will be for administration and office; fire insurance on closed facilities will take $2,505; nursery, $23,726; Jimmy Morgan Zoo, $75,415, and maintenance, $45,425.

A further breakdown by classification of the $162,806 for February through September shows $114,48 will go for salaries and wages; insurance, $2,589; telephone, $371; fuel, lights and water, $5,075; supplies, $435; zoo food, $21,000; vehicular operation and repair, $3,920; cost to install charge at zoo, $9,935; zoo veterinary service, $1,400, and repairs and maintenance, $2,600.

THERE IS A CHANCE the board will save the $9,935 set up for installing the admission charge at the zoo.

At its meeting Friday former Mayor James W. Morgan opposed charging an admission fee to the zoo.

Morgan, who earlier advocated the charge, said he felt the zoo would be the only thing left in Birmingham for children and to add an admission charge would "add insult to injury."

Wagner said Legion Field, although it is operated on a separate fund, is maintained by the board.

Another problem Wagner faces is what to do with furniture and other equipment no longer used when park facilities are shut down.

Wagner said that each community center houses about $15,000 worth of inventory. All available storage facilities are now filled to capacity.

The board also is concerned about meeting current obligations on projects such as those at Roebuck Community Center and in North Birmingham. Both projects have overrun original cost estimates by about $15,000.

The board's only alternative to meet these obligations is to ask City Commission for permission to appropriate money from the Downey Fund, which was originally set up to construct a Negro community center.

License hearing set

UNLESS FEDERAL authorities intervene, City Commission will conduct a hearing Tuesday on whether the Greyhound Bus Station restaurant license should be revoked.

Mayor Art Hanes said that "Ordinance 369 is still on the books and as long as it is we will conduct the hearing."

Hanes referred to an ordinance relative to separation of the races. Ralph Sizemore, restaurant manager, is accused of violating the ordinance.

The U. S. Government has filed an application for injunction asking the city be enjoined from further interferring with desegregation of bus station facilities.

Two weeks ago the commission adopted a resolution ordering the Greyhound Post Houses, Inc., operators of the restaurant, to appear before it at 10 a.m. Tuesday to show cause why its license should not be revoked.

Lease investigated

City Atty. J. M. Breckenridge is expected to have ready next week an opinion on the legality of a parking concession lease at Municipal Airport.

Mayor Hanes asked Breckenridge to investigate the lease between the city and Airport Parking Co.

Hanes said he asked for the investigation to determine if there is anything wrong in the contract.

"If there is any fraud, bribery, conflict of interest or violation of public trust," Hanes said, "legal proceedings will be instituted to cancel the lease."

Hanes cancels trip

Mayor Art Hanes has canceled a trip to two Army installations and will hold "open house" at City Hall Monday night.

Hanes said he canceled the tours at the last minute because "of pressing problems here and a hearing scheduled for Tuesday before the commission."

Hanes had planned to travel to Fort Polk, La., and Camp Hood, Tex., at the invitation of Maj. Gen. Henry V. Graham, to visit units of the 109th Evacuation Hospital to inspect recalled National Guard personnel.

Birmingham plans city park closing

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — This Deep South city, faced with a federal court order to integrate public facilities next month, took the first step Friday toward closing most of them Jan. 1.

Birmingham's Mayor Art Hanes said Legion Field, where upwards of 50,000 fans watch major college football, and the municipal zoo would remain open.

So will Vulcan Park atop Red Mountain and Woodrow Wilson Park in downtown Birmingham, he said.

MAYOR HANES directed Frank Wagner, head of the parks board, to dismiss all but the few maintenance men needed to keep up what remains in operation after Jan

Montgomery, Ala. closed its parks Jan. 1, 1959, after an integration suit was filed U.S. District Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. later ruled that the parks must be integrated if reopened but he said the city could not be made to operate parks.

U.S. District Judge H. Hobart Grooms, ruling last October in a suit brought in Birmingham, threw out a city ordinance requiring segregation in virtually all types of public facilities.

* * *

THE CITY has appealed the ruling, but barring a delay order from federal court, the ruling will go into effect Jan. 15 even if the appeal is still pending.

SAVE BIRMINGHAM—

Dealing With Facts Is The Park Solution

THERE IS NO question but that the three commissioners of the City of Birmingham believe they have in very real effect a "mandate" from a majority of the voters of Birmingham proper—within the City of Birmingham limits—to enforce segregation at all costs.

It is naive to deny that this is the case. Their "mandate" is a matter of plain fact by all political reckoning.

It is obviously true, further, that the overwhelming majority of business, professional and civic leaders of the Birmingham and Greater Birmingham area see in projected closing of parks and recreation facilities an immediate tragic blow to this community—both Birmingham proper and the Greater Birmingham area.

THIS GROUP also sees this kind of action as a signal flag hoisted to the master over City Hall which says to the entire nation that Birmingham plans to be absolutely "diehard" in the racial matter, that it intends to resist all court orders by any and every device which can be achieved within law, short of violence hopefully.

Closing the parks, to be fully candid about the problem, would have to be regarded as a probable forecast of further closing of any other publicly-supported institutions which were threatened by integration. This means, foremost, schools.

THUS THE PRESENT situation. It is one in which the POLITICAL position of the commission is defensible. It is one in which the city commissioners do not interpret their public offices as requiring them to exercise creative leadership. Rather—and they have logic from a pure political standpoint—they judge the people who put them in office as having spoken. And they judge their political requirement as being basically to follow what they estimate to be the Birmingham voters' wishes.

THE POSITION of the business and civic leadership of the Greater Birmingham area, in The Birmingham News' opinion, is sound. In the opinion of men who keep our work wheels turning and work to bring new industry to Birmingham, to make this an economically healthy area with plenty of jobs for the citizens, parks closing will suspend a pall over this district.

This step of closing parks could imperil ALL the Birmingham district.

Businessmen do not think this idly. They think it in terms of the economic barometer. This district already is suffering from unemployment and from short work weeks for numbers who still hold jobs.

Business leadership of the community is arguing that, despite any political "mandate" the commissioners believe they have, the City Commission to fulfill its TRUE duty to Birmingham's people should look beyond the immediate emotions and desires of our people. They, too, must think of workers' future pay checks.

The businessmen believe that, at the absolute minimum, City Commission should reverse a policy of obvious haste in reaching a decision.

The business leaders think that if all could get together and discuss the situation, including the expressed opinions of Birmingham voters of course, then we would at least understand each other better. If there is a way out short of closing parks, then we might come up with it.

The plea of organizations asking the City Commission—numbers of such organizations—is NOT for integration. It IS for studying whether most of our facilities can be kept open, for examining whether a condition of understanding can be developed among whites and Negroes of Birmingham to prevent a loggerheads situation from developing.

IT IS VERY important that city commissioners and EVERYONE in Birmingham proper and in the Greater Birmingham district as well realize that we still have time here in our community to get and keep control of this situation.

You CANNOT do it if the policy of ANYONE is to be flat closing of anything and everything threatened. This invites challenge from extremists among the Negroes not just in Birmingham—but over the nation.

It invites Negro leaders—CORE leaders—to make an example of Birmingham. Some of these have shown the lengths to which they will go. The prospect of violence, let everyone fully understand—and we know this right here in Birmingham—does NOT stop the most ardent Negro activists.

Let us in City Hall and out of it NOT provoke trouble we may be able to escape. Let us use the opportunity we yet have to prevent Birmingham from being sewed into the racial fabric that includes, right today, Albany, Ga., and Baton Rouge, La.

MAYOR ART HANES has spoken a great deal about this problem during the past week. He now appears to be in a position of rejecting the advice of many responsible business and civic leaders.

Some of these leaders are among the people who vigorously supported him in his candidacy. Any rejection of their views by him would change his previous policy of counseling with those whom he knows as both friends and concerned supporters. This in itself should be very seriously thought out by our new mayor.

CITIZENS OF BIRMINGHAM, citizens of Greater Birmingham, human qualities of emotion and concern are involved, and they are the experience of all. Certainly these give us great difficulty. But no matter what has been said so far, let us not allow the CRIME of omission—the crime of not trying every inch of the way to reach a common bond of understanding, a common policy, a common basis on which we can try to save as much as we can of the customary way of Birmingham life.

If we do not use our best brains, if we do not use LONG-RANGE political wisdom, then all, in and out of City Hall, will find that troubles of today are small indeed compared with those which might be dropped upon us in the tomorrows ahead.

THIS COMMUNITY must not be put upon the cross of total despair. Commissioners, citizens of all this district, let us show faith in ourselves, belief in ourselves, consideration of the problems of each in a position of responsibility—be it elective responsibility or that of maintenance of a sound and prosperous industrial district.

se Birmingham city officials today faced their biggest itegration problem so far—a federal court ruling desegregating recreation facilities here.

U. S. District Judge H. H. Grooms listened to a full day of testimony Tuesday before he ruled that segregated city parks are illegal.

Judge Grooms made it plain that he based his ruling on previous decisions by the U. S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals and the U. S. Supreme Court.

"Under rulings from (those courts)," Judge Grooms said, "we have no alternative but to grant the relief prayed for."

THOSE WORDS — "the relief prayed for"—are legal terms, but Negroes at the trial took them as an omen.

"Le me go to church, I got to talk to Jesus," a stout Negro woman said, as she bustled out of the court room.

The decision doesn't mean that Birmingham's public recreation facilities desegregate today. Judge Grooms has to write and sign his order.

The city has the right to ask for reviews and it has the right of appeals.

Judge Grooms also withheld his decision regarding leased recreation facilities such as Fair Park, Birmingham Zoo Railroad and a pitch and putt golf course at Green Springs Park.

But he said that under the law as interpreted by courts higher than his, segregation at public parks is unconstitutional.

CITY ATTY. J. M. Breckenridge's defense was eloquent and strong.

"We are making progress in this town," he said.

But he told the court "to maintain a public park system in this city, it's necessary that Negroes and whites use separate facilities

"The government can't require integration, it can merely prohibit enforced segregation."

Negro Attys. Ernest Jackson Sr. and W. L. Williams Jr., systematically showed that the city's park and recreation facilities are segregated.

JACKSON, who fought and lost a school integration case here, brought witness after witness to the stand, to show that Birmingham public facilities are segregated.

Actually, the testimony showed that recreation facilities are not as segregated as most area residents believe.

James H. Ball Jr., operator of a food concession at Jimmy Morgan Zoo the past five years, admitted that his stand used to have signs saying "colored" and "white."

Ball said the "colored" sign disappeared when "the wind blew it down. We never did put it back. It didn't mean nothing no way."

He told Breckenridge that he served Negro and white equally, and that both races stood in the same line for service.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (UPI)—Federal Judge H Hobart Grooms Tuesday ordered desegregation of all Birmingham parks, swimming pools and other recreation facilities.

Atlanta Geo

Grooms issued the order at the close of the hearing which heard testimony from several Negro and white witnesses that the city facilities are "customarily" segregated. The suit was brought by 15 Negroes.

The city was expected to appeal the decision.

Involved are 67 parks, four golf courses, 38 playgrounds and various swimming pools and other recreational facilities

In making the decision Groome said he had "no other choice" in view of recent decisions of the U. S. Supreme Court.

He directed the plaintiffs in the case, the Rev. Fred L. Shuttlesworth and 14 other Negroes, to amend their petitions to include the controlling bodies of the municipal auditorium and the city art museum.

The verdict touched off a jumping and shouting demonstration in the courtroom where about 200 Negroes had sat quietly throughout the session of the court.

Grooms ordered that all public recreational areas and parks, the city zoo and the municipal auditorium be ordered opened to Negroes on the same basis as whites.

U.S. Ruling Affects Public Recreation Spots

Fri 10-27-61

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — A federal judge ruled Tuesday that segregation of public recreation placges in Birmingham is unconstitutional.

The ruling by U. S. district court Judge H. H. Grooms came on a suit brought by 15 Negroes, including Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, former pastor and Negro integration leader here.

Wed 10-25-61

The judge reserved a ruling on segregation of leased facilities at public parks. This include such businesses as children's rides and concession stands.

Grooms gave the Negroes time to specifically name defendants in those sections of city recreational facilities which are leased.

Affected by the ruling are the city's 67 parks, four golf courses and 38 playgrounds.

HELD UNCONSTITUTIONAL

Specifically ruled unconstitutional was section 859 of the Birmingham city code. The section requires segregation in any room, hall, theater, picture house, auditorium, yard, court, ball park, public park, or other indoor or outdoor places to which both white persons and Negroes are admitted.

Grooms said he based his decision on rulings by the U. S. Fifth Circuit court of appeals and the U. S. supreme court that segregation in public recreation facilities in unconstitutional.

The ruling came at the end of a one-day hearing.

Shuttlesworth, first of several witnesses to testify, said he was rebuffed when he sought to use facilities at a children's park and a golf course here.

Shuttlesworth said he has not attempted to integrate the city zoo. Later testimony brought out that it is segregated only in restrooms and concession stand facilities.

OTHER NEGROES HEARD

W. E. Shortridge, a Negro funeral director, testified he has lived in Birmingham for over 50 years and that Ensley Park is used exclusively by white persons.

Nathaniel C. Lee, a young Negro church organist, told the court he wrote to the Birmingham art museum asking if a Negro group could visit the facility.

The letter he received in reply, read into the court record, said the museum would be "delighted" for the group to make the tour. The letter also said the museum has separate, but equal, restroom facilities.

Lee also showed pictures he had taken at the city zoo showing signs over segregated facilities there.

Defendants in the suit were Birmingham's three city commissioners and members of the city park and recreation board.

City May Appeal Order Of Federal Judge

Wed 10-25-61

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Oct. 24. —(UPI)—Federal Judge H. Hobart Grooms Tuesday ordered integration of Birmingham parks and recreation facilities after a day-long hearing on a 2-year-old suit brought by 15 Negroes.

Birmingham, Ala.

Judge Grooms issued the order in a surprise ruling at the close of the hearing which included testimony on the part of several Negro and white witnesses that the city facilities are "customarily" segregated.

City Atty. C. L. Breckenridge was not available for comment on whether an appeal would be undertaken. It was believed the appeal would be the probable course with the parks facing possible closure pending outcome of the appeal.

Involved are 67 parks, four golf courses, 38 playgrounds and various swimming pools and other recreational facilities.

In granting the order, Judge Grooms said he had "no other choice" in view of recent decisions of the United States Supreme Court.

He directed the plaintiffs in the case, Rev. Fred L. Shuttlesworth and 14 other Negroes, to amend their petitions to include the controlling bodies of the municipal auditorium and the city art museum for presentation for a hearing later on.

Excluded from the order were lessees who operate on city owned property but are not under city jurisdiction.

Second city law on mixing voided

A second Birmingham segregation ordinance wil become void next Jan. 15.

Federal Judge H. H. Grooms Wednesday formally issued the ruling he made recently in a suit brought by a group of Negroes, against City Commission and the Park and Recreation Boarc Ordinance 597, which made unlawful "Negroes and white persons to play together."

Thus, in nine weeks, segregation will no longer be legal here at any public theater, auditorium, ball park, playground, or at "all types of entertainment, games, sports, amusement or recreation therein to which the public is admitted."

This includes Municipal Auditorium, the Musem of Art, Legior Field, Jimmy Morgan Zoo, anc public parks, golf courses, swimming pools and tennis courts.

CITY ATTY. J. M. Brecken ridge said the city would "defi nitely appeal" the ruling, whicl pertained to City Irdinance 859.

The formal order noted some temporary exceptions to the seg regation ban.

These are the public library system; the Birmingham Zoo Rail road Inc.; Bertis F. Carroll, operator of a pitch and putt goli course; James H. Ball, operator of a food concession at Lane Park; and the Alabama State Fair Authority, operator of the fair grounds and Kiddieland. Operators were given 60 days to show why the inqjunction should not include them.

Grooms' order made it clear he was bowing to authorities in higher courts. He noted the Supreme Court has the last say in the matter.

"This court is chained by the array of authorities . . . apart from whatever personal opinion it may entertain, it must of necessity bow to the same," said the ruling.

IT CONTINUED: "Whether under color of law, statute, ordinance, policy, practice, custom of usage, or as a means to preserve the public peace, or as a claimed valid exercise of state police power, such unlawful discrimination, having been found to exist, may not be puermitted to continue.

Grooms ruled the city is not required to operate recreational facilities, btut if it does, "they have to be on a non-segregated basis."

Earlier, the judge had overruled

Birmingham's Parks Open On 'Closed' Basis Tuesday

BIRMINGHAM (AP) — Effective Tuesday, the public parks in this Deep South city will be closed—but they'll still be open.

Apparently both Negroes and white persons will be able to use them—but the parks won't be integrated.

The paradoxical situation developed out of Birmingham city officials' latest efforts to combat court-ordered integration.

U.S. Dist. Judge H. Hobart Grooms ruled last October that segregation in public recreation facilities—the golf courses, swimming pools, playgrounds and picnic grounds—is unconstitutional.

He set Jan. 15 as the deadline for integration.

BUDGET SLASHED

The city commission then reacted by slashing the city parks and recreation board budget drastically, leaving little more than a shadow of the $1 million plus the board had asked.

The reduced budget wiped out most maintenance and all improvements for all but a couple of parks, leaving little doubt that they would be closed down.

The park board approved the posting of "no respassing" signs on community center buildings. The signs started going up Thursday. The centers will be boarded up later.

NO SECOND TO MOTION

But how do you close a golf course? Or an open playground?

Mayor Art Hanes went before a special meeting of the Parks and Recreation Board, of which he is a member, and moved that "no trespassing" signs also go up at the parks.

He got no second to his motion.

He made the motion again, and a second time it failed to get a second.

Obviously angered, Hanes told the board:

"In effect you've kept your parks open to integration after Jan. 15. I've told you what the city commission's wishes are and that is to post the parks. If you don't think you can work with the city commission and stomach such a decision, the commission will consider accepting any of your resignations."

None of the board members offered a resignation.

Except for the 16 community centers, which include the city's six public swimming pools, all of the city's recreation facilities apparently will be open on a first come, first served basis—minus maintenance, and minus the segregation ordinance that was overturned in federal court.

About one-third of Birmingham's population of 340,000 is Negro.

Board Balks Mayor On 'No Trespass' Signs For Facilities

BIRMINGHAM (AP) — The Birmingham Parks and Recreation Board voted Thursday to close most of the city's public recreation facilities but took no steps to see that the facilities are not used.

Tempers flared several times as the five-member board twice refused to go along with Mayor Art Hanes' request that the parks be posted with "no trespassing" signs.

Such signs were posted Thursday at the 16 community centers here. This was in support of an earlier park board vote to close the parks as of Jan. 1.

NO SECOND TO MOTION

Twice Hanes moved for posting the signs. Both times he failed to get a second to his motion.

Obviously angered, Hanes told the board:

"In effect you've kept your parks open to integration after Jan. 15.

"I've told you what the city commission's wishes are, and that is to post the parks.

"If you don't think you can work with the city commission and stomach such a decision, the commission will consider accepting any of your resignations."

'NO CONTROL NOW'

Park Board member Jimmy Morgan, former mayor, stood up and, shaking his finger at Hanes, said:

"You are wrong, Art. We are not for integration."

Another board member, Mrs. J. H. Berry, told the mayor she resented very much being called an integrationist.

Hanes told her:

"You've got no control over it now."

The public recreation facilities here are under federal court order to integrate by Jan. 15.

The closing of most of the facilities became all but definite earlier this month when the board, at the urging of Hanes, approved a drastically slashed budget for their operation this year.

WITHOUT SANCTION

However, the board's action Thursday apparently means that the parks will be available to anyone who wants to use them without city sanction.

The board voted earlier to close the 16 community centers.

City Attorney J. M. Breckenridge said the board's action means that if there is any reason for police action at the recreation facilities officers will have to act under ordinances unrelated to segregation, such as disorderly conduct.

Recreation facilities not affected by Thursday's action are Vulcan Park, Woodrow Wilson Park in downtown Birmingham, and the City Zoo.

POOLS AT CENTERS

Neither Vulcan nor Woodrow Wilson parks have any picnic facilities. Such facilities are available adjacent to the city zoo but reservations for the sites will no longer be made.

Club houses at the golf courses are being closed but the courses will remain open on a first-come first-serve basis. It was not clear whether parks employes would be retained to collect greens fees.

Breckenridge suggested that the board adopt a resolution forbiding anyone from wakling on the golf courses but no action was taken.

Birmingham Weighs Close Of All Parks

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. Oct. 28 (AP). Caught up in the legal battle over segregation, the immediate future is uncertain for Birmingham's public recreation facilities.

The picnic grounds, the playgrounds, the swimming pools, and golf courses—these and other facilities may remain segregated, may become integrated, or they may be closed down or sold to private operators.

The future clouded over Tuesday when a federal judge in this city of 340,000—one-third of which is Negro—ruled that racial segregation in public facilities is unconstitutional.

THE RULING gave Birmingham its first major threat of court-enforced integration on a large scale.

Specifically, U.S. District Judge H. Hobart Grooms, ruling in a suit brought by a group of Negroes, threw out a Birmingham city ordinance requiring segregation in virtually all types of public recreation facilities, both indoor and outdoor.

The ruling covers Birmingham's art museum, the municipal auditorium, six swimming pools, four golf courses, 38 playgrounds and 67 parks, including Legion Field, where upwards of 50,000 watch major college football.

The facilities now are no more integrated—or segregated—than they were before the ruling. The judge so far has not signed and issued the formal directive.

* * *

BUT THE REACTION to the ruling was immediate.

"It is our intention to appeal," said city Atty. J. M. Breckenridge after a meeting with city commissioners.

Also, the city has asked the judge to hold off his order until the city has a chance to appeal.

"We hope he will," said Commissioner Eugene Connor. "If not, we will close the parks immediately, including Legion Field, swimming pools, golf links and all other facilities affected by the decision.

"These will be put on the market for sale to private concerns."

Connor added:

"The great majority of the people of Birmingham do not want integration. It will cause nothing but chaos and bad relations between the two races.

"We have given our Negroes public parks, swimming pools, community centers and golf links, and I don't believe the great majority of Negroes are behind this Negro lawyer from Jacksonville, Fla., and the so-called Rev. Shuttlesworth, who now lives in Cincinnati."

His reference was to Ernest Jackson Sr., the Negro attorney who handled the suit, and Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, one of the Negroes who brought the suit. Shuttlesworth formerly was a Negro leader here.

MIXING ORDER APPEAL DECIDED

Birmingham Facilities May Be Sold

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — The city of Birmingham moved Wednesday to overturn or at least delay implementing a federal court order desegregating recreation facilities.

Mayor James W. Morgan and city commissioner Eugene Connor told city attorney to:

1—Prepare an appeal to higher courts.

2—Prepare a request that the integration order be held off until higher courts have a chance to rule.

U. S. district Judge H. Hobart Grooms ruled Tuesday that Birmingham's city ordinance requiring segregated facilities in virtually all public amusement places—golf courses, auditoriums, ball parks, picnic grounds and the like — is unconstitutional.

Rather than integrate immediately, the city will rid itself of these recreation facilities, Connor said.

If Grooms refuses to delay implementation of the order, he said, "We will close the parks immediately, including Legion Field, the swimming pools, the golf links, and all other facilities affected by his decision. These will be put on the market for sale to private concerns."

The ruling grew out of a suit filed by a group of Birmingham Negroes.

Bias Underlies Pool Tragedies In Jacksonville

By WILLIAM KENNEDY

JACKSONVILLE, Fla.—While this city's politicos fought a last-ditch battle to maintain segregated swimming pools, a Negro boy has drowned and a white boy has been snake-bitten.

There is more than circumstantial evidence that these events are not unrelated. Many Jaxons see in them another sacrifice upon the altar of Jim-Crowism, and are fearful lest the continued closing of the pools result in further tragedies as the city's youth of both races, driven by summer heat, take to polluted and snake-infested swimming holes.

It was in June, when the pools were briefly opened on the condition that they be "voluntarily" segregated, that the body of Charles Wilson, age 9, was found lying upon the bottom of the Jefferson St. pool "for Negroes." That afternoon there were 931 paid admissions to the 75 x 125 foot pool. One of the two lifeguards on duty, Julian Walton Jr., age 16, has testified that it was impossible to see to the safety of so many.

THE CASE of snake-bite occurred in polluted Hogan's Creek, where white and Negro youth had gone splashing, within sight of the closed Springfield pool. Both pool and creek straddle a line between white and Negro neighborhoods.

The closing of the pools after a day and a half of "voluntary" segregation has come as another black eye to a city whose eyes were heavily blackened already, most notoriously during the rioting of last August.

Under Federal Court order since Dec. 7 to desegregate all city recreational facilities, Jaxons have been free since then to sit together at the coliseum and stadium, play together in the parks, and eat together at the zoo. But for reasons best known to themselves, the city fathers (white, that is) have now chosen to draw the line against Jaxons of different races swimming together in the public pools.

A NEW ODITY was added to the "Jim Crow Museum" by the manner in which officials sought to circumvent desegregation of the pools. George G. Robinson Sr., executive director of the recreation department, was widely quoted in the press as saying that the pools would open June 10 and remain open so long as no attempt was made at integration. The big idea back of this blackmail was evidently to enable officials to claim that it was not they who were doing the segregating, but the people themselves.

Sure enough, when, on June 11, a group of Negroes led by civic leader Frank Hampton, sought to enter the "white" Springfield pool, they were barred at the door by George Robinson Jr., supervisor of the city's pools, who told Hampton they were all closed "as of now."

Hampton, originator of the suit which won the original injunction restraining the city from segregating its recreational facilities, lost no time in having the Robinsons, father and son, together with the members of the recreation board, hauled before U. S. District Judge Bryan Simpson to show cause why they should not be cited for contempt.

Junior swore under oath that it was not Hampton's appearance at the door but the appearance of a dark cloud upon the horizon which impelled him to close the city's pools, "so help me God."

Senior swore he never said the things thrice attributed to him in the papers. Under examination he admitted that he had made no move to deny the stories either.

CARL M. WILSON, chairman of the five-white-man board of recreation, didn't mind admitting that it was because of Hampton's visitation that the board voted informally on June 12 and formally on June 27 to keep the pools closed permanently.

Judge Simpson evidently saw nothing contemptuous of himself, the law, his injunction, or the Constitution, in all this, for he promptly gave his sanction to all that the city officials had done. Upon leaving the courtroom, The Courier overheard someone saying a fervent "Amen!" to the clerk's invocation, "God save the United States and this honorable court!"

RESULT OF SEGREGATION — Driven by summer heat, Jacksonville youth, Negro and white, have been forced into polluted and snake-infested swimming holes, by the decision of the city fathers to close swimming pools rather than desegregate them. The above scene is of polluted Hogan's Creek, which flows past the closed Springfield pool (and the State Board of Health). Street sewers and nearby outhouses drain into it. On this same spot, a white youth was bitten by a moccasin last week.

Drowning Of Boy Called 'Needless'

Tragedy follows closing of pools

LYNCHBURG, Va. — The drowning of a 12-year-old boy in an abandoned canal following the closing of city swimming pools here has stirred a lively controversy.

The body of the boy, Brian Robinson, was pulled from the waters of the canal Thursday. Reports were that he was climbing down a ladder into the canal when he apparently slipped. The swift current sucked him through a canal lock, and he bobbed up on the other side.

His older brother, Tyrone, 14, yelled for him to hold on and ran for help, but the boy lost his grasp and sank.

ON JULY 4th, the Lynchburg Recreation Department and city police closed the three municipal swimming pools following an attempted swim by colored citizens. Two of the pools were open only to white citizens, but when the Lynchburg Improvement Association urged that all of them be opened to all citizens, all were closed.

The Rev. Virgil Wood, president of the Lynchburg Improvement Association and one of the leaders in the July 4 swim attempt, issued a statement Friday, declaring:

"We view with regret the needless drowning that occurred here Thursday. If our officials had upheld the law, then the city pools would have yet remained open and this tragedy would not have occurred.

"We then call upon our city officials to reopen the pools as the court has indicated or directed."

* * *

THE REV. MR. WOOD is pastor of the Diamond Hill Baptist Church, where the boy and his parents are members.

The Rev. Mr. Wood said the courts have clearly stated that all public pools should be open to all citizens, citing the Dec. 7, 1960 decision in the Jacksonville, Florida case.

MEANWHILE, IN St. Louis, the Maplewood City Council of the nearby suburb, voted to admit all residents of Maplewood to the municipal swimming pool after an earlier unsuccessful effort by 40 colored persons to purchase admission tickets.

Mayor Thomas A. Richardson said the council discussed the subject an hour in a closed meeting and voted unanimously to lift the ban.

But, in Nashville, Tenn., authorities on Thursday said they were closing all city park swimming pools which had been the target of democracy - seeking citizens.

The City Park Commission cited "financial reason," but Leo Lillard, member of the "non - violent movement" in St. Louis, said the closing of the pools was solely for the purpose of "perpetuating the cause of segregation."

* * *

IN ATLANTA, Georgia, attorneys have asked a federal judge to proceed with a hearing on desegregating Atlanta pools and parks. D. L. Hollowell and Horace Ward represent the plaintiffs.

In petitioning the court, the lawyers specifically called the court's attention to another Atlanta case in which the federal court ruled that segregation of Atlanta's municipal golf course was illegal.

ATLANTA, Ga.—Four Atlanta students have filed a suit for $1,000,000 damages against the city of Atlanta; Virginia Carmichael, director of recreation for the city of Atlanta; George I. Simons, general manager, Department of Parks, and James Webb, judge of the Municipal Court.

The suit charges that the city and officials named "require and enforce racial discrimination in the use of public (parks) facilities."

The students charged that they were refused the right to use the tennis facilities at Bitsy Grant Tennis Center on May 13.

Jack Rogers was said to have denied them use on the grounds of race. They were all obviously Negro. Rogers is manager of the tennis court. P-2

The students attempted to gain admission to the Municipal Auditorium on May 12, 1961, to watch wrestling matches open to the public. The manager, H. H. Niegruegge denied them admission and stated that it was the policy of the Auditorium to exclude them because of race.

LONNIE KING JR., who was jailed for five hours by order of Judge Webb on Feb. 9, 1961, for failure to move from the section of the courtroom reserved for white persons, is a student leader of the commnity.

The students' complaint asked for an immediate temporary injunction barring all racial discrimination in all facilities owned, operated, controlled, or maintained by the city of Atlanta, Ga.

This suit, filed in the U.S. District Court, follows a meeting of local Negro and white leaders with Mayor Hartsfield in which they sought an exchange of views and discussion of the park segregation. It was agreed by the group which met in the Mayor's office, that there would be no publicity. This was stated in answer to a question by the Mayor asking whether there should be reporting members of the press present.

THERE WAS no discussion of the issues and virtually no exchange of views.

The Mayor did most of the talking during which he stated his personal stand that integration of the parks at this time would not be suitable. He was supported in this by Mr. Leftwich, Mr. Simons, and Miss Carmichael who sat with the Mayor.

The purpose of the integrated group talking with the Mayor was to request that the Mayor take the initiative in desegregating the parks. The Mayor stated to the press, in an article published in the Atlanta Journal (May 9, 1961) that he had convinced the group not to press the park issue at this time. This was emphatically denied by the members of the group and a pool taken to confirm the denial.

The integrated group consisted of Carl Holman and Jesse Hill, members of the Atlanta Committee for Co-operative Action, an integration group; Liza Paschall and Harry Boyte, officials of the Greater Atlanta Council on Human Relations; Q. V. Williamson, a member ACCA; and James R. Wood, director of public relations for the Southern Christian Leadership Conference.

Await Court Decision, Asks Lawyer After Tennis Push

By BRUCE GALPHIN

The attorney for Negroes challenging Atlanta's park segregation urged all Negroes Thursday to refrain from any further demonstrations until the case is legally settled.

Attorney D. L. Hollowell made the appeal after four Negroes attempted unsuccessfully Wednesday to play at the Bitsy Grant Tennis Courts.

The city has contended in a pending federal court suit that segregation ordinances are no longer enforced in the parks. Negroes who went to the tennis courts Wednesday said they were testing that contention.

'FOR REPAIRS'

The facility was abruptly closed "for repairs" and remained closed Thursday until further notice.

Hollowell commented that "it appears that there may be some contradictions between the allegations of the defendants and the actual situation.

"However," he continued, "I am asking not only the plaintiffs but all other Negro young people to refrain from making any further tests of the park situation until we can clarify and adjudicate the current situation."

The desegregation suit, brought by four Atlanta University students, seeks to end racial barriers in all city-owned facilities, including swimming pools. The pools will be closed for the season next week, under normal procedure.

It was understood that Wednesday's tennis court test was unfavorably received by part of the adult Negro community.

Negro leaders reportedly expressed fear that continued demonstrations might have a bad effect on plans for peaceful school desegregation next week.

The Bitsy Grant courts remained closed Thursday. George Simons, city park superintendent, was not available for comment about the length of the closure. Rain would have prevented play most of the day in any case.

Pool Closed As Negroes Show Up

SAVANNAH, Ga. (UPI)— Two small groups of Negro boys and girls attempted Thursday to integrate a large all-white municipal swimming pool in a neighborhood of expensive homes but were balked by a surprise "closed" sign. Atlanta, Ga. Jn. 8 25-61

City police arrived at the scene but made no arrests.

"Closed" signs were displayed both for the would-be ticket buyers, mostly Negro teen-agers, and for a large number of white children who were already swimming in the pool.

The Negroes left without disorder and the white children returned to dressing rooms and went home. The pool remained closed, apparently for the remainder of the day at least.

There was no official announcement of the reason for closing the pool, which is located in huge Daffin Park and centered in an area of expensive homes, but the signs apparently were kept in readiness for such integration attempts.

Negroes attempted to integrate the same pool earlier this year but were similarly thwarted by closed signs.

City officials maintain they have no policy of segregating the parks and pools but say that Daffin Park should be reserved mainly for the surrounding residential area it was intended to serve.

Other white pools are located in several other white residential areas and others are located in each of several Negro residential areas, the officials pointed out.

SAVANNAH, Ga (AP) — The United States Department of Justice has ordered a civil rights investigation in connection with the arrest of seven Negroes for playing basketball in Daffin Park playground last week.

Charles Brown, special agent in charge of the Federal Bureau of Investigation office here, said his office had begun an investigation on orders from the Department of Justice in Washington.

Brown said he could not comment further other than to say that results of the investigation will be forwarded to Washington.

Brown said he did not know whether the investigation had been ordered on the basis of a complaint or the initiative of the Department of Justice.

The seven Negroes were arrested on the charge of violating a state law prohibiting unlawful assembly. City police jailed the Negroes after the incident was called to their attention Jan. 23 by a white woman passing through Daffin Park, a public playground used by white persons.

A city recorder's court hearing is scheduled for Feb. 7. E. H. Gadsden, attorney for the Negroes requested postponement when the case went before Judge George E. Oliver last week.

Gadsden and W. W. Law, city and state president of the National Asssociation for the Advancement of Colored People, said they knew nothing about the civil rights investigation.

Law said, however, that he was "very much encouraged at this point. We feel the Justice Department ought to take the initiative when there is a possibility of a civil rights violation."

U. S. District Attorney William C. Calhoun of Augusta, whose office has jurisdiction in the Savannah area, said he had not heard of the Washington order on the investigation nor has his office received any complaint in connection with the Daffin Park case.

City Police Sidney B. Barnes Jr. said FBI agents asked for police records on the Daffin Park case Monday. Barnes says he turned the information over to the agents, although he did not "receive any details" from them on the investigation.

The seven Negroes were arrested when they refused to leave the city-operated basketball court in Daffin Park. Cpl. C. C. Dickerson, Chief Barnes said, read the state law covering unlawful assembly to the Negroes before taking them to jail.

Police took the position that the appearance of the Negroes at a public facility used only by whites in the past served to create a public disturbance and therefore resulted in a violation of the state law regarding unlawful assembly. The city operates separate playground facilities for Negroes but spokesmen for groups seeking full integration say those provided for Negroes are inadequate. Besides, they argue, all city facilities should be open to all regardless of race.

SAVANNAH — A civil rights investigation in connection with the arrests of seven Negroes for playing basketball in Daffin Park Playground last week, has been ordered by the United States Justice Department.

The probe was revealed by Charles Brown, Special Agent in charge of the Federal Bureau of Investigation in Savannah. Mr. Brown said his office has begun a probe on orders from the Department of Justice in Washington, D. C.

He told reporters he could not comment further other than to disclose that the findings would be forwarded to the nation's capital.

Brown was asked if the investigation had been ordered on the basis of a complaint, or the initiative of the Department of Justice. He said he did not know.

The seven were arrested on January 23 after a white woman reported to police that she had seen them using the public park, which is used by white people. They were arrested on a charge of violating a state law prohibiting unlawful assembly. The white woman was reportedly passing through the park

7 Negroes' Arrest at Game In Park Studied for Breach

SAVANNAH (AP)—The FBI has launched a hush-hush investigation of whether the civil rights of seven Negroes were violated in their arrest for playing basketball in Daffin Park.

Police Chief Sidney B. Barnes Jr. said FBI agents have obtained police records of last week's arrests although volunteering no details of the injury. Charles Brown, agent in charge, confirmed the investigation but would not comment on it.

He said it was undertaken on orders from the Justice Department in Washington and the findings would be transmitted to the department.

The Negroes, ranging from 20 to 32, were charged with unlawful assembly when they refused to leave the park reserved for white persons. Police maintained that they were guilty of this offense because they knew their appearance at the playground would create a disturbance.

The city maintains separate playgrounds for Negroes. Integrationists held, however, that these are inadequate and that all public parks should be open to all persons regardless of race.

One of the Negroes had been arrested for sit-down or picketing activity. Another, Nathaniel Wright, 32, was recently convicted of charges of assault and battery on Chatham County Tax Commissioner J. Archie Johnson while at theh courthouse urging other Negroes to register to vote.

A hearing for the seven is scheduled in Recorders Court for Feb. 7.

U.S. Attorney William C. Calhoun of Augusta and Negro spokesmen said they have heard nothing of the civil rights inquiry. W. W. Law, city and state president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said, however, that he is "very much encouraged" that the Justice Department should initiate such an investigation.

Official Raps Chicago Police Handling Of Race Incidents

The Montgomery Advertiser

P 10 A

CHICAGO (AP) — Chicago police need to be more decisive in handling of racial and religious incidents, a Chicago police official said Thursday.

A new order to insure that prompt police action is taken to protect the rights and property of all citizens "will be successful for demonstrations," Minor K. Wilson, administrative assistant to Police Supt. Orlando W. Wilson, said, "but police are going to have to be more decisive in their action in the future."

Minor Wilson made the statement when asked for comment by newsmen on two recent racial incidents on the city's South Side.

In one of the incidents last week, a jeering crowd of white teen-agers formed a semi-circle around a group of Negroes at a South Side beach and dared police to try and disperse them. Police did not attempt to break up the group, Minor Wilson said, "because there were not enough at the scene to handle the crowd."

The Negroes, mostly teen-agers, had gone to the beach to swim, but left voluntarily when the crowd formed.

The other incident occurred when 92 Negroes, dislodged by a hotel fire, took refuge in a church located in an all-white neighborhood on the South Side. Police said about 150 white persons gathered outside the church, most of them youths, and greeted the Negroes with catcalls as the Red Cross conducted them to another church.

An official of the National Association for the Advancement for Colored People expressed disapproval to Supt. Wilson because police did not attempt to disperse the crowd.

The superintendent, after an investigation of police conduct at the scene, defended his men, saying, "If it had been handled in any other way, what might have occurred would be anybody's guess." Wilson said if more police had been called to the scene, it might have attracted thousands of onlookers and possible violence.

Beach Mixing Group Cuffed In Chicago

Montgomery Advertiser

CHICAGO (AP)—Nine persons were arrested Sunday as 80 Negroes and white persons staged a four-hour "wade-in" for the second day at largely white Rainbow Beach.

More than 280 policemen patroled the beach while demonstrators sat in small groups in the sand amid 10,000 bathers and onlookers.

Police said there were no serious disturbances at the beach, but a carload of demonstrators on their way home was curbed three blocks from the beach and its occupants attacked.

David Komatsu, 20, a Roosevelt University student, was pulled from the car, punched and kicked by seven attackers, police said. Another youth, Jeremy Wills, 19, was slapped before the attackers fled. Neither required medical treatment.

POLICE PATROLS

None of those in the car stopped by the attackers was a Negro.

Fifty Negro and white plainclothesmen under the command of Capt. James P. Hackett moved among the crowds on the South Side beach. Thirty uniformed patrolmen also patrolled the area. Another 160 were held in reserve at a nearby parking lot.

As an added show of strength, a police boat cruised offshore.

Under the direction of Norman Hill, 24, a Negro, the demonstrators sat quietly in groups. Some sang songs, including, "We Shall Not Be Moved."

Police Arrest 3 In Chicago 'Wade-Ins'

Birmingham Post

CHICAGO, July 9 (AP)—Negro and White demonstrators today duplicated yesterday's wade-in" demonstration at the South side's racially tense Rainbow Public Beach, traditionally an all-white facility.

About 70 waders—a third of of them Negros—arrived in chilly mid-morning air while 250 city policemen stood guard on or near the beach. A blue and white Chicago police boat cruised off-shore.

Under the direction of Norman Hill, 24, a Negro, the members of the group dispersed through the beach and sat down on the sand in small groups. When they arrived, only about 30 persons were on the beach. Shortly after noon, the crowd had swelled to 3000.

Capt. James P. Hackett strode the beach with a megaphone, barking orders to the crowds. He warned bathers and onlookers to keep moving and not to form large groups.

There was little incident otherwise, but, by midafternoon three persons had been arrested. A white woman was taken into custody after she kicked sand at another. Several hours later, a white youth and a Negro were arrested after a brief shoving match.

Yesterday, nine persons, three of them Negroes, were hustled off to jail when they did not obey police commands.

Today's group disclaimed any connection with the contingent of youths from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) that braved the white crowds yesterday.

WASHINGTON, July 15 (UPI)—Rep. John Bell Williams, D-Miss., demanded today that Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy take action to stop racial violence in Chicago.

He also sent Kennedy a telegram asking whether the federal government intended to protect the civil rights of "white victims" of the racial strife.

Williams acted after reading news reports of violence which swept a southside Chicago neighborhood after the fatal shooting of a Negro boy.

At least six persons were injured last night and today. They included a man who was beaten with an ax handle by Negro teenagers. Another was pulled from his car and beaten, and two white girls who were injured when some sort of bomb was thrown onto their front porch.

Atlanta, Ga.

WILLIAMS TOLD Kennedy that "roving gangs of Negro teenagers have attacked, beaten and mutilated 18 innocent and law-abiding white people in one section of Chicago alone, inflicting a reign of terror against law-abiding white people of that city."

"In view of the precedent you set in Alabama," he said, "I would like to know what steps you have taken to stop this violence in Chicago.

"Have you offered to send swarms of federal marshals to protect those innocent citizens? Have you sent a personal representative there to insure that the civil rights of these white victims are safeguarded? Have you demanded that the governor of Illinois and the Chicago police provide protection for these people?"

* * *

WILLIAMS added: "It would seem to me that white citizens should be able to enjoy the basic civil right of being free from criminal molestation on the public streets and to be safe and secure in their own homes.

"What action, if any, have you taken or do you contemplate to insure these basic rights for the white people of Chicago?"

He said he was calling Kennedy's attention to the Chicago violence "because the Eastern metropolitan press historically has taken delight in headlining even the most minor incidents of racial unrest and violence which occur in the Southern states, but deliberately censor and suppress news of major racial incidents which occur outside the South."

By UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

Alabama Atty. Gen. MacDonald Gallion Saturday cabled U.S. Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy from Montgomery to ask if he intended sending federal offices to quell further racial violence in Chicago, Ill.

Jun. 7-16-61

The telgram, sent to the Justice Department in Washington, said:

Montgomery

"News media reveals racial violence in Chicago for the third straight day with Negroes wielding ax handles, setting explosives and vicious attacks of all kinds on white persons. Eighteen white persons have been injured and 64 Negroes arrested for defying police orders.

POSITION REQUESTED

"Since U.S. marshals were so speedily dispatched to Alabama in a situation far less serious, I ask that you reveal publicly whether or not you contemplate sending marshals into Chicago and if not, your reasons behind any position you take."

Some 500 federal marshals were flown to Montgomery the weekend of May 20 following a week of racial violence sparked off by the arrival of an interracial group of "freedom Rider" here. The town was later placed under martial law and the marshals withdrew.

Gallion and Gov. John Patterson claimed at the time the federal government was interfering with Alabama law and that local officers could handle the situation.

The attorney general said he was unaware if Patterson knew of the cable. "I run my own department," he said.

"I have no further comment," he added. "The telgram speaks for itself."

Police Club White Boy; 11 Arrested

The Montgomery Advertiser Mon. 7-17-61

CHICAGO (AP) — The second weekend of organized integration "wade-ins" at Rainbow Beach ended in violence Sunday as police clubbed one white youth unconscious, arrested 10 others, and ordered the beach cleared of 10,000 persons.

The flare-up on the South Side lakefront strand came in mid-afternoon after a quiet day.

Some 100 Negro and white integrationists sat on the sand without incident until afternoon when four white youths were arrested for refusing a police order to sit down.

A short time later, police arrested seven more youths.

GROWING UNREST

One of them angrily attacked policemen and was knocked inert on the sand by police billy clubs. He was carried to a police car unconscious as the crowd murmured.

As unrest grew, police Capt. James Hackett faced the crowds with his megaphone and told them: "The crowd on the beach constitutes an unlawful assembly. You will disperse or be arrested in the name of the people of the State of Illinois."

The outbreak came as the integrationists were preparing to leave at the scheduled hour of 3 p.m. They drifted away almost unnoticed as antagonism mounted between the white crowd and some of the 250 police detailed to the beach.

The first sign of friction between the crowd and police came about an hour earlier, when Capt. Hackett ordered 35 uniformed patrolmen from their reserve station to a spot on he beach.

'GO, GO, GO'

Forty to 50 youths milled around the detachment, but quickly dispersed when ordered.

Capt. Hackett ordered the crowd home after they surrounded him and his men and began chanting: "Go, go, go."

There was no violence reported between Negroes and whites.

Sunday's wade-in was organized by the Congress of Racial Equality—CORE, the Negro American Labor Council, the West Avalon Community Association, the Positive Action Committee for Equality, and the Temporary Woodlawn Organization, a neighborhood group.

ADVANCE NOTICE

Through Norman Hill, an advisor for CORE, the groups sent out advance press notices announcing the demonstration at the beach, as well as their place of assembly some blocks away.

They arrived in 20 automobiles, escorted by four police squads.

The crowd of 10,000 that dotted the 75th to 79th St. beach was described by police as normal for a midsummer Sunday.

On the West Side of Chicago, police prowled the troubled Lawndale district, where 20 white persons have been attacked by roving gangs of Negro juveniles.

Police said the district Sunday remained quiet. Only 14 squad cars patrolled the district, but the force was expected to be swelled Monday when summer school resumes at Harrison High School, scene of many disorders.

Rep. John Bell Williams, D-Miss., sent Kennedy a telegram Sunday asking him if he planned to send marshals to Chicago, as he did in Alabama's "Freedom Riders" incidents.

A similar telegram sent to Kennedy by Atty. Gen. MacDonald Gallion of Alabama said the situation in Alabama was "far less serious" when Kennedy sent marshals there than it is in Chicago.

Violence broke out last week in a racially mixed section of Chiago's Southwest Side, where gangs of young Negroes beat a score of whites. At least 65 Negroes were taken into custody.

Kennedy's aide said the marshals were sent to Alabama only "when it was clear that local authorities were unable to guarantee the safety of interstate travelers and to maintain order." The situation in Chicago is different, he said, because "local authorities are taking action to restore order."

Kennedy was not available for comment on the telegrams. He is at Hyannis Port, Mass., where he and President Kennedy are spending the weekend.

64 Chicago Negro Youths Seized to Halt Gang Terror

CHICAGO (AP)—Police took 64 Negro youths into custody Friday and restored order to a Southwest Side neighborhood that was beset by race disorders for the second consecutive day.

Calm was restored within two hours after police threw a huge emergency control around the neighborhood of Harrison High School.

At least nine white persons were injured in scuffles with gangs of Negro youths. Of the 64 youths seized, 45 were 16 years of age or younger.

It was in this neighborhood that a Negro youth was shot to death Wednesday while walking home from summer classes at Harrison High.

Police blocked off the area to automobiles.

John T. Connors, deputy superintendent, said 10 Negro youths were seized in Douglas Park, a short time after Harrison High, where summer classes are in session, let out for the noon hour. Shortly afterward 50 more were picked up in the area and taken to a district police station.

Officers also seized a teen-age Negro girl in a large group of girls who jeered police picking up youths in Douglas Park.

DEFIED POLICE

The youths were seized when they defied police orders to break up their groups and keep moving.

Fernando Molina, 16, was beaten in a fist fight in front of the school and taken to a hospital. He is white.

Some groups of roving Negroes threw stones at windows.

A bus was halted and some of its windows broken. A policeman fired three warning shots over the head of a youth who broke away from him.

Earlier Joseph Zan, 69, was kicked and beaten with a bicycle chain but he did not require medical treatment.

STRUCK BY BRICK

Shortly afterward Herman Goodman, 65, was struck on the head by a brick under elevated railroad tracks at 2106 S. Kedzie Ave., and Harry Talmennid, 68, was cut on the arm in a scuffle nearby. They were treated at a hospital.

Two white youths were set upon Thursday by groups of Negro youngsters in separated incidents.

Some general rowdyism in the Harrison High area included stoning of house windows, a march through the high school where a door was broken open for admittance, and a false bomb report to high school authorities.

Racial Hatred Spinning Web Over Chicago

CHICAGO (AP)—Pointless violence that erupted fitfully and ruthlessly in a racially mixed section of Chicago's Southwest Side appeared under control Saturday.

Shouting matches between groups of unruly youths, seldom requiring police action, continued however.

Some 200 extra police from outlying areas were ordered into the Lawndale and Fillmore districts Friday to help maintain order. Extra police were withdrawn Saturday.

Twelve two - man squad cars normally patrol the two districts during the day. They had help from an additional dozen squad cars Friday.

SENSELESS ATTACKS

The swift, senseless attacks by roving gangs of youthful Negroes started Thursday after the mysterious slaying of a Negro boy who was shot from ambush as he walked home from summer school. The gunman has not been found.

Seldom numbering more than six, the gangs appeared suddenly where a single white man or woman walked or was driving an automobile. Swiftly, sometimes shouting obscenities and sometimes silently, the hoodlums swarmed around their victims.

Wielding ax handles, sawed-off baseball bats, short lengths of chain and rubber hose, the marauders beat down their prey in seconds. Before fleeing, they generally rifled the victim's purse or pockets for valuables.

In three days, the victims numbered 20. Some were hospitalized. Among them were two young girls—one 12 years old, sitting on the front porch of her home. The girls suffered cuts and bruises when the gang hurled a homemade bomb at them.

MAN BEATEN

One man, 68 years old, was beaten and slashed by razors when a gang of 15 Negroes attacked him.

Sixty-five Negroes of all ages were taken into custody. Police said at least 45 of them were boys and girls under 16. Some older Negroes were charged with aiding a riot, breach of peace and unlawful assembly.

There was no pattern to the attacks, police said. As quickly as a victim was attacked and robbed the gangs fled assembling again at a distant, prearranged location.

Sometimes the gangs would stone a passing bus, taxicab or private car.

Civic and church leaders deplored the violence. They appealed to parents and other adults in the area to control the youthful violators.

Dr. Edgar H. S. Chandler, executive vice president of the Church Federation of Greater Chicago, urged a "return to sanity" in the district.

Dr. Chandler said, "I earnestly hope that every public instrument will be used to restore a sense of responsibility" in the area.

Edward Marciniak, executive director of Mayor Richard J. Daley's Commission on Human Relations, blamed the violence on "unruly teenagers" and pleaded that youths show "a good, clean, Americanism."

While an enlarged police force searched for clues to the mysterious shooting of the negro youth Wednesday, Walter Karlblom, assistant deputy police superintendend, said in a statement:

"We don't even know who shot the boy. We don't even know why he was shot."

YOUTH SLAIN

The boy, Matthew Tolber, 16, was slain as he walked from Harrison High School, a mile from his home.

The high school is in the Lawndale Police District, which covers about five square miles of a section southwest of downtown Chicago. Adjacent to Lawndale, is the Fillmore Police District, of about 4½ square miles.

While both districts are southwest of the Loop, this section is locally termed the West Side.

It is densely populated, mostly by Negroes, with a few whites and some orientals.

11 Whites Arrested At Chicago Beach

The Atlanta Constitution
P. 2 mon. 7-17-61

CHICAGO (AP)—Police Sunday cleared a South Side beach packed with 10,000 persons and arrested eleven white youths—one of whom had kicked a policeman—during the second weekend of organized integration "wade-ins."

Those arrested, police said, were among more than 500 white youths who jeered officers and a mixed group of some 175 integration demonstrators at Rainbow Beach, traditionally an all-white facility.

The beach is about 12 miles from a West Side area of the city in which racial unrest flared during last week.

Police said the beach emptied peacefully without incident. Later, several white families and a few bathers wandered back and police allowed them to sit on the beach and swim. Otherwise, the beach was deserted.

Police said the 19-year-old who kicked an officer was subdued by several other policemen with nightsticks drawn. The youth, who passed out during the struggle, told authorities he was not knocked unconscious by officers' nightsticks but passed out in the excitement. He said he suffers from epilepsy.

Police said none of the eleven would be charged immediately. They were being held for more questioning.

The kicking incident came in midafternoon several hours after the integrationists had arrived. The integrationists disbanded and left the beach peacefully shortly thereafter.

Four white youths were arrested for refusing a police order to sit down and keep quiet. A short time later seven more were arrested.

The crowd grew restive after the youth who kicked a policeman was carried away unconscious to a police squad car.

Chicagoan Gets 'Wade-In' Response

Birmingham News

(Editor's Note: The News recently offered a reprint of Chicago Daily News Columnist John Justin Smith's views on the beach "wade-ins" in that city. He has received letters about his column advising moderation—a calling-off of wade-ins, though he has supported integration. The editors offer a follow-up column by him to show Southern readers what is the opinion of some Northerners who have become involved in the Negro activist situation.)

8/7

ONE OF CHICAGO'S most vexing problems today is racial segregation. No problem faced by the city is so complex and confusing. This is obvious in letters from readers of this column. 8/6 7-31-61

The readers have expressed almost as many shades of opinion on the subject as there are shades of skin on Chicagoans.

A week ago, in sizing up the wade-in demonstrations at Rainbow Beach, I suggested we should ALL stop pushing. That did it. Here are excerpts from some of the letters:

Memphis, Tenn.

John A. McDermott, executive director, Catholic Interracial Council, one of the sponsors of the wade-ins—"Strong though it has been, I don't think our work at Rainbow has been a mistake. We have not acted capriciously. . . .

Sparks Could Fly

"NEGROES WHO HAVE tried to use Rainbow Beach have been harassed, intimidated, and even beaten, on a continuing basis.

"As a result, integration has not been able to take care of itself or to happen normally at Rainbow Beach as you and I hope it would.

"In the face of this kind of opposition, the choice is either to stand up or surrender. We decided to stand up."

No thoughtful person can dispute that the public beaches belong to the public. But I do dispute the idea that there is a need for wade-ins at Rainbow Beach (see the last letter in this column). And, having seen racial violence over the years, I believe the beach demonstrations could, on a hot afternoon, spark terrible fighting. I'm against it.

Both Sides Wrong

BEN COHEN, South Crandon Avenue—"The alternative to wade-ins is continued segregation. . . . the results of wade-ins may sc[illegible] violence on the part of those who oppose demonstrations that does not make the wade-ins wrong.

". . . I hope you see my point. Violence is no reason for not continuing the exercise of one's rights."

I see your point. But I don't agree. Desegregation has occurred in many places without the least dangerous demonstration. And about violence: Once a fight has started, both sides are violent. And both sides become wrong.

No Push To Violence

RUBY DES SELLES, South Park—"What exactly do you mean by we will need peace to solve our racial problems? Peace perhaps that comes with another 100 years of waiting?

". . . I am entitled to the same privileges that others enjoy and you and your kind can't get it through your heads that the Negro is an American citizen."

Here's exactly what I mean: Segregation is bad when it deprives you of your constitutionally guaranteed rights. It should be ended with deliberate haste—but without pushing to the point of violence.

Reader Was Shocked

ROSEMARY BILO, South Parnell—"I was shocked to read your column. . . . It seems to me you are doing everything to escape the real issue involved—that of freedom in this country for all."

Peggy Roach, North Rogers—"Segregation, by its nature, does cause a man to lose his individual rights—therefore it should be ended. Each of us . . . must accept a personal responsibility for the problem and its solution."

Gordon Wilcher, Lake Park Avenue—"It has been over 100 years since the Negro was legally freed. Now I may ask you, how many years would you suggest we 'quit shoving' and wait patiently for you to fulfill the moral and legal codes. . . ."

Barbara J. Beatty, Sheridan Road—"People with a little bit of knowledge are dangerous. . . . You, Mr. Smith, are lethal. . . . (You) tell these people to stop pushing: everything's coming up roses. . . . I'm tired of waiting."

And the letters went on and on. It's interesting to note that with one exception, all were well tempered. The exception came from a man who was radically and foolishly anti-Negro.

Mix Without Pushing

BUT ONE LETTER seemed to stand out from all others. It came from Mrs. Martin C. Lasky of South Bennett Avenue. She told of taking her family to Rainbow Beach on a Sunday when a wade-in was staged. They sat on the beach two blocks away and Mrs. Lasky noted:

"There was a young colored woman and two little tots on a blanket not 20 feet from us . . . there she was on the sand at the water's edge with the children.

"She was just another mother showing her children a good time and other families nearby respected their rights to the public beaches. . . ."

There you have it—desegregation without pushing. And this happened two blocks from a wade-in.

Beach integrated on fourth attempt

The Birmingham News

By The Associated Press

Peaceful integration has come to a traditionally white beach in Chicago after three week-ends of antagonism among police, bathers and "wade in" demonstrators.

Some 65 Negro and white demonstrators sat on the sand and talked Sunday in their fourth consecutive integration attempt at the beach. A few went swimming.

Several persons were arrested on disorderly conduct charges in the previous demonstrations, and a police detachment of 200 patrolmen stood guard as the integrationists congregated Sunday.

Beach guards estimated that the hot sunny weather attracted about 30,000 bathers to the beach, and about 300 gathered to watch the "wade in" demonstrators. There were no arrests.

CHICAGO (AP)—Some 65 Negro and white demonstrators staged without incident a fourth consecutive weekend integration "wade-in" at traditionally all-white Rainbow Beach on Chicago's South Side Sunday.

A police detachment of 200 patrolmen under Capt. James P. Hackett stood guard as the integrationists congregated in a group on the sand about 75 yards from the edge of Lake Michigan. A few went swimming, but most of them sat talking on the beach.

Beach guards estimated that the hot, sunny weather attracted about 30,000 bathers to the beach. About 300 of the bathers gathered to watch the "wade-in" demonstrators.

Birmingham News

There was no shouting Sunday and no arrests," commented Capt. Hackett. The three previous weekend "wade-ins" resulted in some antagonism among police, bathers and demonstrators. Several persons were arrested on disorderly conduct charges.

Sunday's demonstration broke up after about three hours.

The demonstration was organized by the NAACP, CORE (Congress on Racial Equality and PACE (Positive Action Committee for Equality.)

Racial Tests Hit 2 Areas In Michigan

DEARBORN, Mich. (AP) — A group of 49 Negroes and white persons invaded this Detroit suburb for a discrimination test of public facilities during the weekend and came away saying the group was encouraged.

Those who participated in the integrated "Freedom Ride," as they termed it, included members of the Michigan Young Democrats and the Ann Arbor and Detroit chapters of the Congress on Racial Equality (CORE).

The group concentrated on restaurants.

Service was directly refused in only two of 25 places tested, a CORE spokesman said. In a third, service was not refused but Negroes were met with hostility and insults, the spokesman said.

Officers of the three organizations which participated said they were "encouraged by their findings and feel that continued use of public accomodations by Negroes will establish a clear - cut pattern which will help end discrimination in housing and employment."

An attempt by another group of approximately the same size to integrate a swimming pool in nearby Oak Park resulted in the pool's manager closing operations for the day and sending pool employes home.

Henning Rylander, manager of the Crystal Pool, closed the pool when the first Negro in the group showed a membership card.

Rylander said the pool was a private club, operated by a corporation, and no Negroes ever have been admitted during the pool's 26 years in operation.

The nearly 50 white and Negro teen-agers said they were members of CORE and the Detroit Brotherhood Youth Council.

50 Attempt To Integrate Swim Pool

OAK PARK, Mich., July 5 (AP)— About 50 boys and girls, both Negro and white and mostly high school students, today tried unsuccessfully to integrate a swimming club in this Detroit suburb.

Oak Park police kept watchful eyes on the effort and there was no trouble.

Henning Rylander, manager of the Crystal Pool, promptly closed the pool when the first Negro boy in the group appeared with a membership card.

He took the first card and the group retained only one card by a Negro member.

Rylander said the club, in existance for 26 years, was a private organization, operated by a corporation.

"If we like their looks we let anyone in," he said. "No, there have never been any Negroes admitted."

Spokesman for the intergrationists, said the group objected to making color the basis for admission.

"We can understand Mr. Rylander's not wanting to admit roughnecks or persons who would cause trouble," said Botkin, who said he often swam at the pool himself, "but there has never been a Negro admitted to the pool so he can't say people are turned away just on the basis of being roughnecks."

PARK BENCH- SIT-IN
JACKSON, MISS.

Park Bench Sit-In Nets Jail For Two

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Police arrested two young Jackson Negroes Friday as they used park benches reserved for white. They were charged with breach of the peace for failing to move on.

Chief of Detectives M. B. Pearce identified the two as Amos C. Brown, 20, of Jackson, student at Morehouse College in Atlanta; and James M. Hopkins Jr., 19, of Jackson, student at Mary Holmes Junior College, Negro school at West Point, Miss.

Pearce said Capt. J. L. Ray arrested the two at the city zoo in Livingston Park after they refused his order to move on.

The action was similar to methods used in arresting 98 "Freedom Riders" now in jail. They also were convicted on breach of the peace.

Negroes are allowed to visit the zoo, but are not allowed to sit on benches reserved for whites. There are no benches marked for Negroes. Also, Negroes are not allowed to use the white drinking fountains.

The action Friday followed two previous attempts this week to use all the public facilities at the zoo.

JACKSON-
TEN NEGROES-SENTENCED TO FOUR MONTHS IN JAIL AND FINED $200 FOR SITTING ON BENCHES AT CITY ZOO

Ten Negroes Sentenced For Zoo Incident

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 21. — (UPI) — Ten Jackson Negroes were sentenced to four months in jail and fined $200 each Monday for sitting on benches and picnicking at the city zoo.

Police Capt. J. L. Ray told Municipal Judge James L. Spencer the Negroes had gone to the zoo "for the purpose of having other people become irritated and for the purpose, apparently, of creating an incident."

Benches Removed

Both races use the zoo but until this summer only whites customarily sat on its benches. After Negroes began sitting on the benches this summer the benches were removed.

The 10 were convicted of breach of the peace, the same charge used in the cases of almost 300 so-called "Freedom Riders."

Ray said he ordered the Negroes to "move on" but they refused. He said a group of whites had "volunteered" to help police get some of the Negroes out of the area.

The 10 were in separate groups which visited the zoo on different days.

PARK CLOSINGS HINTED

Mayor of Jackson, Miss., Would Act to Block Integration

JACKSON, Miss., July 6 (UPI)—Mayor Allen Thompson said today that he would close parks and other public facilities if necessary to prevent integration.

In an address to seventy-five city department heads, the Mayor said that Jackson apparently was "the target of agitators seeking to stir up immature young people and greedy old people."

He urged local Negro citizens to take a public stand for continued segregation of public facilities.

Jackson has been the principal target of the Freedom Riders. In all, 169 of the riders has been arrested here since May 24 for challenging segregation in bus, train and plane terminals.

The latest local demonstration came at mid-day today when six Negroe students attempted to buy tickets in the white waiting room of the Illinois Central Railroad and were arrested after refusing orders to leave.

13 Negroes Use Park For Picnic

Four Arrested On Benches At Swimming Pool At Jackson

By United Press International

JACKSON, Miss., July 5.—Thirteen Negro picnickers enjoyed a brief outing Wednesday under a bright sun at the city park and then tried to integrate facilities customarily reserved for whites only.

Four were arrested after refusing orders to leave. The rest dispersed quietly without incident.

At about the same time, three Negro youths tried to integrate the white waiting room at the Trailways bus station here and were promptly arrested for breach of the peace.

Meanwhile, a Hinds County Grand Jury committee was told it should visit the jailed protest riders at Parchman State Penitentiary and inspect conditions there.

It's Their Responsibility

Circuit Judge Leon Hendrick who made the suggestion, said it was their responsibility to inspect the conditions since the riders were still under county supervision.

Several riders who have been released on appeal bonds have charged that the riders are "mistreated" at the prison and Judge Hendrick suggested "you send a committee to Parchman to check conditions there."

The 13 Negroes, wearing beach clothes and carrying sandwiches and a portable radio, held a picnic on a grassy area near Livingston Park swimming pool. A crowd of about 50 white persons, some of them jeering, gathered about 20 feet away across a small drainage ditch but there was no violence.

The Negroes, some sitting on blankets, talked and laughed freely. There were seven male youths and six girls.

One of the girls, Eddie Jean Thomas, 20, Jackson, said when asked why she was there, "I can resist anything but temptation. I'm tempted."

She was one of the four arrested. She and Percy D. Thornton, 18, of Memphis were stopped at the pool's entrance when they attempted to buy tickets to enter and swim. They then went to a bench and after refusing to "move on," they were arrested for breach of the peace.

Two other Negroes also were arrested when they refused to leave the beach. The other Negroes dispersed.

Group Includes Students

The group included students from Tougaloo Christian College, Campbell College, Jackson State College and several high schools.

The incident was the latest in a series of integration attempts that have purged Jackson in the past several months. Several attempts had been made to integrate park benches at the city zoo, which also is a part of Livingston Park and not far away from where Wednesday's arrests took place. The benches at the zoo were removed on order of Mayor Allen Thompson to prevent further incidents.

State Parks And Courts Are Target Of NAACP

Dat. 7-8-61
Charleston, S. C.

COLUMBIA (AP) — The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People is filing a federal suit to integrate all the South Carolina state parks.

The complaint was reported mailed from Columbia Thursday by attorneys for the state NAACP chapter to the clerk of court at Charleston. It names the State Forestry Commission and officials, who operate the multi-million dollar park system.

However, court officials in Charleston said late Friday that no complaint has been received.

The last time Negroes brought an action against a state park, it was permanently closed by the legislature. That is Edisto State Park, closed for the past three years.

State officials have yet to state what their position will be about the parks in the face of the new suit.

The complaint enumerates that Negroes were unable to gain access to two state parks — Myrtle Beach Aug. 30 last year, and Sesquicentennial near Columbia last June 25.

In addition to Edisto, the state has 22 parks. Not all have social and swimming facilities, however. For instance, Brookgreen Gardens, in the state park system, is open to all. It features a mammoth outdoor display of sculpture.

And there are some park facilities for Negroes. As an example, Hunting Island State Park operates a first class beach front for Negroes.

Many of the parks have no swimming areas, but nearly all have picnic facilities.

Negroes Gripe As Nashville Pools Close

Jackson Daily News
p. 1
Sat. 1-22-61

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (UPI) — A group of Negroes today planned to draft letters protesting the closing of the city's swimming pools and send copies to the Board of Park Commissioners, City Council and the mayor.

The park pools were closed Thursday afternoon. Edwin Crutcher, chairman of the Park Commission, said the action was taken for "financial reasons."

Negro Z. Alexander Looby, a city councilman, said the Negro group is asking for a detailed explanation of the "financial reasons" for which officials said the pools were closed.

Crutcher and other city officials have refused to discuss the matter with newsmen.

Text Of Opinion By Judge On City Park Integration

The text of yesterday's opinion by Federal Judge Marion S. Boyd, approving the Park Commission's plan of gradual integration of its system, follows:

Gentlemen, we have had a full hearing today of all of the matters involved, and here briefly are the Court's views.

The plaintiffs, invoking the Court's injunctive powers, are asking in this proceeding that the defendants be enjoined forthwith from operating certain public facilities under the jurisdiction of the Park Commission of the City of Memphis, including golf courses, tennis courts, playgrounds, parks, and the Pink Palace Museum, upon a racially segregated basis.

Restrictions on a number of the facilities here involved, including the Brooks Memorial Art Gallery, the boat dock at McKellar Lake, and the Zoo were lifted some time ago.

At least 21 parks, I believe, are now open to general use without restriction.

Now, the defendants are voluntarily proposing in this proceeding to remove the restrictions with respect to the amusement facilities at the Fairgrounds, and all municipal golf courses, according to a plan which they claim is necessary to an orderly transition of its heretofore segregated system to one which will admit all comers without regard to race or color.

Museum Deal Cited

The defendants seem to have no objection to a removal of the restrictions with respect to the Pink Palace Museum, but because of certain expressed conditions in the deed conveying this property to the city over thirty-five years ago, there is a risk which might result in a reverter to the original grantor, or its successors. That is, in the event of the integration of that facility. With respect to this particular facility, the defendants are requesting of the Court at this time that the legal questions involved be left to the state courts for a ruling under the doctrine of abstention.

Now, the City of Memphis, through its Park Commission, carries on a very large and extensive operation in the City of Memphis. Its activities are many and varied. All things considered, the plan it proposes in this proceeding to take care of the Fairgrounds amusement facilities and the golf courses the Court is convinced is about as good as can be devised. In getting up this plan, many things necessarily had to be considered. The effective dates with respect to one or two of the golf courses are projected into the future to some extent, but the whole program under the plan, as the Court understands, may and will be accelerated in the light of new developments. The Court is well satisfied it is the purpose of the defendants to do this with all deliberate speed.

Of course, in passing upon this plan, local conditions to be encountered with respect to maintenance of law and order, the avoidance of violence and confusion in the community, revenues available from concessions, though not absolutely controlling, may, among many other things, as practical matters be weighed and considered by the Court on application for an injunction of the type here sought. Time to organize the change-over to integration after all of these years is to the Court important. The legal rights of all citizens, white and colored, are not to be overlooked in what we do here today.

Stairstep Plan Favored

Apparently the defendants have given consideration to these matters. And they, as I say, are matters for the Court to consider on application for the injunctive relief sought.

It is true no case dealing with a plan or program of integration of facilities as here involved is cited, but we do know that our Court of Appeals in Kelly against the Nashville Board of Education, cited by the defendants, approved a so-called stairstep plan for integrating the Nashville schools. The reasoning in that case seems to the Court to have application in this case. The problems here are somewhat comparable to the problems faced by the Nashville schools.

No valid objection to this plan in the Court's opinion is offered in this case. The plaintiffs merely say they want all of these facilities fully integrated now. Nothing else seems to matter.

The Court believes that good will and understanding between the races in this city can be best preserved and promoted by the plan here suggested by the defendants. The defendants, who are high minded public officials, have put much thought and effort into this plan. It is sound, fair, feasible and equitable. It is reasonable and within the spirit of the law, and the Court is convinced is proposed in utmost good faith. The Court approves it in all things.

It should be stated here that pending the transition period under the plan offered no citizen will be deprived of his right to play golf or to avail himself of other activities sponsored by the Memphis Park Commission.

With respect to the Pink Palace Museum, the Court thinks it wise that it stay any adjudication which might affect the title to this valuable property until the state courts can have an opportunity to decide the complex questions involved. The doctrine of abstention in matters of this nature of course has been recognized by the courts, including the Supreme Court, many times.

'Should Take Initiative'

The Court thinks the defendants, however, should take the initiative on this particular matter and get a suit under the declaratory judgment act of Tennessee filed in the Shelby County Chancery Court. This should be done within 90 days.

Incidentally, it occurs to the Court that additional parties will be necessary to a full adjudication of the matter. But this, of course, will be left for you lawyers to decide.

The John Rogers tennis courts on Jefferson Avenue in all probability will be abandoned as such at an early date before the year is out according to the proof, since the ground upon which they stand, presently owned by the City of Memphis is too valuable for the purpose for which they are presently being used and plans are on foot to sell the property. The Court suggests to the defendants under their over-all plan that they consider opening up these particular facilities by Jan. 1, 1962, on an integrated basis if the property has not been disposed of by the City or the tennis courts at that location are not abandoned.

Now, no plan is offered in this proceeding concerning the integration of other recreational facilities of the Park Commission. That is, the playgrounds and community centers.

The proof is that integration of the races and utilization of these facilities is a matter which in the interest of all the citizens of Memphis calls for more study. The defendants are not prepared to offer a plan to cover this highly importtnt phase of the Park Commission's activities at this time.

The superintendent of this department has been asked by the Park Commission to get up a plan which will accomplish this objective. The proof is that a target date for such integration of the races in the use of these particular facilities cannot be set at this time.

As the Court understands, additional time is necessary for additional study and planning for an orderly transition of these activities on an integrated basis.

Immediate Move 'Unwise'

The Court in the circumstances wil lnot order through injunction at this time the immediate integration of these particular recreational facilities of the Memphis Park Commission. It would be unwise for the Court to do so for many reasons. Additional time in the Court's opinion is of the essence. It is absolutely necessary for a full consideration of this troublesome matter by the defendants so that adequate plans for the transition may be devised and agreed upon.

The Court will hold this case open so that these particular matters can be given further study and consideration by the Board of Park Commissioners. The proof is that something in the way of a plan could be ready for submission to the Court in approximately one to two years.

The Court in the circumstances does invite the department to submit such a plan in this proceeding, but thinks this should be done within a period of six months.

Since the defendants have been acting for some time on a voluntary basis and have desegregated a number of its facilities, and are in perfect good faith proceeding in an orderly and effective manner to complete the whole job with respect to those remaining which are here involved, the Court rules that an injunction is unnecessary.

Up To State Courts

So, gentlemen, get up a judgment right away approving the plan submitted with respect to the Fairgrounds and the golf courses and sustaining the defendants' request for stay with respect to the Ping Palace Museum, so that the state courts may pass upon the questions there involved.

The judgment should also provide for the filing of a plan with respect to the playgrounds and community centers within six months.

The costs in this proceeding will be equally divided between th eplaintiffs and defendants.

Now, the Court in these remarks has only hit the high spots. They will serve, at least temporarily, as the Court's findings and conclusions under the rules. Others in more detail will probably be necessary, so the Court suggests you gentlemen who represent the defendants might within the next week get up additional ones to be filed with the Court. The Court will need an original and about five copies.

Counsel for the plaintiffs may if they desire also propose findings and conclusions to the Court.

Negroes Appeal Memphis Ruling

MEMPHIS (AP) — Negro attorneys have appealed a federal court ruling against an injunction that would have opened the city's parks to all races immediately.

The appeal, which will go to the Sixth U.S. District Court of Appeals at Cincinnati, protests to a ruling by federal Judge Marion Boyd, June 15 in favor of a gradual desegregation plan for the citys parks. The judge had approved a city park commission plan.

The appeal was filed Friday.

The Negro attorneys also objected to the judge's postponing adjudication on the desegregation of Memphis' museum for 90 days until a question of title could be cleared up.

The museum's deed apparently restricts its use to caucasians. If the clause is violated, the museum may revert back to its original owners.

38a 1961 VIRGINIA CITY POOLS

'We insist,' swim-in group says; all city pools close

LYNCHBURG, Va. — "We insist."

These two words resulted in the closing of the three city swimming pools here last week.

The words were uttered by Virgil Wood in reply to a threat that if a group of colored youngsters insisted on swimming at Miller Park, the pool would be closed.

When Mr. Wood, president of the Lynchburg Improvement Association, "insisted," the Miller Pool was closed as well as the pools at Riverside Park and the jimcrow pool at Jefferson Park.

Except for the pool, Miller Park was "integrated." The colored group — not allied with either the NAACP or CORE, held a picnic at the park and enjoyed other activities before attempting to swim.

FLOYD K. McKENNA was the recreation supervisor who made the decision. He was backed up by City Manager Robert Morrison and police chief, Maj. R. D. Brooks, both of whom were on the scene.

They had been alerted to the possible "swim-in" attempt when the Rev. Mr. Wood called to ask about park facilities including the pool.

Three times, Mr. McKenna said, he pleaded with the Rev. Mr. Wood not to let his group try to use the pool.

An interracial crowd watched at the pool entrance when the colored group attempted to buy tickets. There was no disorder, however.

• • •

MR. MORRISON, city manager, said later: "As far as I'm concerned, the pools are closed to the public. Any decision I make, of course, is subject to the will of the city council.."

He said the closing was "a matter of public safety."

The city attorney had already advised him that according to a U.S. court decision, "the city does not have the right to deny any citizen's admission to a pool operated by the City of Lynchburg.

"The only way to legally prevent their admission is by closing the pools."

IN THE "SWIM-IN" group were O. C. Thaxton and six boys. They had come with their suits — ready to swim. A local paper identified them as: Herbert Collins Jr., 9, son of Mrs. Susie Collins; Alvin Everett, 13, Mrs. Paige Everett; Conrad Wayne, 14, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Wayne; Frederick Doswell, 13, Mrs. Edgar A. Doswell; Jimmy L. Hunter, 7, Mr. and Mrs. Gene C. Hunter; James E. Hunter, 11, (grandson of) Mrs. Lelia Sandige.

In certifying the pool as closed, the city manager said: "I'm awfully sorry this situation came about because I know it will deprive a lot of children of good, wholesome fun."

Much further south in Ft. Lauderdale, Fla., seven colored youths swam at a public beach where previously only white persons swam. Dr. Von D. Mizell, local NAACP official, led the group of two girls and five boys.

Shortly after they arrived, motorcycle policemen and a paddy wagon parked nearby. There was no disorder and no arrests.

CLOSING POOL — City officials in Lynchburg, Va., close the swimming pool gates as this group of colored boys attempted to enter. Coming up the steps toward camera is Floyd McKenna, director of Parks and Recreation in Lynchburg, and at side is chief of police Major R. O. Brooks.

Close 3 pools to bar mixing

LYNCHBURG, Va.—(ANP) — Lynchburg's three public swimming pools were closed Independence Day when five colored persons tried to gain admittance to a pool reserved for white swimmers.

City Manager Robert Morrison said the action was was taken because "as we saw it, there was a matter of public safety involved."

The closings came at 1:20 p.m. when the colored persons, a man and four youngsters tried to enter the Miller Park Swimming Pool. The pool had opened to the public at 1 p.m. after private swimming lessons had ended.

Also closed were the white Riverside pool and the colored Jefferson Pool.

INTEGRATIONSTS BOARD PLANE, LEAVE BIRMINGHAM AND ALABAMA
. . . Flight left at 10:38 p.m. last night, after delays, bomb scares

Integrationists fly to Orleans

BY DON BROWN, News staff writer

A traveling integrationist group, which found trouble and delay at every turn in Alabama, reached the end of its journey today in New Orleans.

The 17 whites and Negroes left Birmingham ground at 10:38, last night on a shiny airliner—weary, battered, hours behind schedule, but still labeling their mission "successful."

"Our mission was to test the law that Negroes can ride unsegregated in interstate transportation," said Negro B. Elton Cox, spokesman for the group.

"We have proven there is discrimination and that violence can be brought about without protection from the law."

The integrationists—who called themselves "freedom riders"—tried unsuccessfully for eight hours yesterday to get out of town.

Drivers of Greyhound Bus Lines refused to take out a 3 p.m. bus, on which they had planned to ride to Montgomery.

AN EASTERN AIRLINER, due to depart at 6:50 p.m. for Montgomery, was finally canceled about 8:30 p.m., after a bomb scare.

A CAPITAL FLIGHT, scheduled to leave here for New Orleans at 8:55 p.m., was delayed indefinitely. Airline officials reported dense fog covered Mobile, a layover point.

This forced a ticket-switch back to Eastern, which finally got them out.

Another bomb scare also occurred during the last changeover in planes.

More relieved than anyone when they left the ground were police, highway patrolmen, plain clothes officers and FBI agents who guarded the group in the bus and air terminals.

Crowds gathered at both places, but authorities cleared the terminals of anyone who did not have official business there.

THE GROUP—MEMBERS of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE)—landed in New Orleans about midnight. Tomorrow they will observe the anniversary of the May 17, 1954 Supreme Court decision on school desegregation.

This will end their 13-day trip through the South, they said, and they will disband for their homes.

Their arrival in Alabama Sunday, by bus, touched off racial violence in which the bus was burned and many of the CORE members beaten in attacks in Anniston and Birmingham.

THEY WERE TO continue on yesterday to Montgomery, then to Jackson, Miss., and finally to New Orleans.

The 17 persons in the group had been traveling on two buses, integrating the seating wherever possible.

Greyhound drivers, however, refused to drive the bus they were to ride out of the city.

Gov. John Patterson issued a statement saying he would not be responsible for the safety of the group between here and Montgomery—only "to the nearest state line."

Extra police were on alert at Montgomery. The bus station lunch counter also was closed.

It was reported the CORE members had been advised by Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy to by-pass Mississippi. The White Citizens Council there said the move was wise.

PATTERSON'S STATEMENT, issued yesterday, said:

"The citizens of this state are so enraged over the actions of these agitators that it is not safe for them to remain in this state any longer. Crowds are gathering in Montgomery, Wetumpka and other places along the route that the bus will travel, and in my judgment it is not safe for them to travel from Birmingham to Montgomery.

"In view of the tenseness of the situation, it is impossible to guarantee the safety of these agitators. Our advice to them is to get out of Alabama as quickly as possible. We will escort them to the nearest state line; however, we will not escort them to any other cities in Alabama to continue their rabble-rousing.

"As governor, I take full responsibility for the safety of responsible citizens visiting Alabama, but I cannot accept the responsibility for the safety of a group of renegades who are here for the avowed purpose of stirring up trouble."

THE JACKSON CITIZENS COUNCIL sent a telegram to Atty. Gen. Kennedy saying:

"Congratulation on your display of common sense in advising the wandering ministrels of racial friction to stay out of Mississippi."

"Such agitators are neither wanted nor needed here. You are to be commended for your sound advice in this instance. It is refreshing to see the highest legal officer of our federal goevrnment recognizing the plain fact that Mississippi intends to remain segregated.

"With your continued help in keeping agitators away, Mississippi will continue to enjoy peaceful race relations within the historic pattern of our segregated social order."

Kennedy had joined in easing tension in the South and to assist the CORE group without further violence after the Alabama incidents.

An assistant to Kennedy was on the same plane from Birmingham to New Orleans with the integrated group. John Seigenthaler said he had no knowledge of a request to the group to by-pass Mississippi.

The assistant attorney general was quiet but observant as he silently followed the group out of the terminal to waiting cars, apparently watching for further violence.

Birmingham Labeled City Of 'Of Hatred'

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — One of the 17 "Freedom Riders" — nine whites and eight Negroes testing segregation practices in the south — said Tuesday hatred of the Negro "prevails as a spirit" in Birmingham, Ala.

The group, 14 of them, held a press conference in the lobby of a dormitory on the campus of the predominately Negro Xavier University. They said their violence-marked trek through the South had ended and they would leave New Orleans Wednesday night for their homes.

James Peck of New York City, the chief target of attackers at Birmingham Sunday, told newsmen "it is disheartening to see a city engulfed in such a state of hatred."

HOLDS CONFERENCE

Peck had 57 stitches in his head from the melee in Birmingham. He talked to newsmen with his head wrapped in white gauze bandages.

Peck, who is white, termed the trip a success because it proved that "one could not travel freely in this country."

One of the Birmingham attackers, Peck said, taunted the group:

"You dirty Communist. Why don't you go back to Russia? You're ashamed of the white race and you're ashamed of the nigger race."

Peck said he hoped the trip "would have a sobering effect on our country."

PATTERSON BLAMED

"If we are going to live as a Christian nation," said B. Elton Cox, a 29-year-old Negro from High Point, N.C., "we are going to have to clean up our own back yard."

Cox blamed Alabama Gov. John Patterson for the violence in Alabama. He said that Patterson's lack of interest toward the freedom riders and his failure to furnish them protection had the same meaning as "go to it, boys, they're all yours."

Albert Bigelow of Cos Cobb, Conn., the unofficial leader of the junket, told a newsman:

"I was ashamed to be a white man in South Carolina and Alabama."

The group said it would remain in New Orleans until Wednesday night for a celebration of the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in 1954 declaring school segregation unconstitutional. The 7th anniversary celebration will be held in a Negro Baptist Church.

KLANSMAN, FATHER HELD

Three Arrested In Race Fracas

BIRMINGHAM (AP) — A young Ku Klux Klansman, his father and another man were arrested Tuesday on charges growing out of a white mob's beating of a group of integrationists at a Birmingham bus station Sunday.

Jesse Oliver Faggard, 20, operator of a doughnut machine at a Birmingham bakery, was arrested at his house at the nearby Alton community shortly after midnight.

The charges were later reduced to disorderly conduct and young Faggard was released on $300 bond.

His father, Jesse Thomas Faggard, 48, also of Alton, was arrested on a disorderly conduct charge when he appeared at the jail to make bond for his son.

Detective Melvin Bailey said both were identified through a newspaper photograph of the savage brawl in which three persons were severely beaten.

Bailey listed the third man arrested as Howard Thurston Edwards, 22, of Irondale, a Birmingham suburb. He said Edwards is a print shop foreman in Birmingham.

NO CHARGE

He was being held without charge, Bailey added.

The younger Faggard signed a statement admitting participation in the mob action, said Bailey.

Bailey said Faggard identified himself as a Klansman, and said he showed up at a Birmingham bus station Sunday in response to a call from another Klansman promising "action."

Members of a Congress for Racial Equality (CORE) group were attacked by a club-swinging mob of white men when they stepped off a bus at the Trailways station in downtown Birmingham.

Three men — two white and one Negro — were beaten severely. Several others, including some bystanders, also were beaten.

The CORE group, composed of both white persons and Negroes, was touring Dixie on regularly scheduled buses testing racial segregation at bus stations. They abandoned the bus plans and flew out of Alabama Monday night to New Orleans, last stop on their itinerary.

Bailey said Faggard gave this account of events:

A Klansman called him Thursday and told him to be at the Greyhound bus station Sunday if he wanted to see some "action."

Faggard went to the station and joined several other men. They waited until 4 p.m., when they heard the Greyhound bus carrying the CORE people had been set afire outside Anniston.

Then they went to the Trailways bus station, three blocks away, where another bus carrying CORE people was expected.

A few moments after they arrived at the Trailways station, a bus pulled in carrying Negro and white members of the CORE tour.

Faggard said one of the men in front of him grabbed the Negro and told him to "get out of here, the Negro waiting room is over there."

"All at once," Faggard said, "people started pushing, shoving and kicking."

Later he returned to the Greyhound station and witnessed — but didn't take part in — an attack on three bystanders, according to his statement.

The grand larceny portion of the charge against Faggard resulted from the seizure of a camera from a newsman at the Trailways station.

The Montgomery Advertiser

P. 1 Mon. 5-15-61

ANNISTON, Ala. (AP)—A group of angry white persons Sunday attacked two buses carrying Negro and white "Freedom Riders" who are seeking to knock down bus station racial barriers.

A little later, 60 miles to the west, one of the buses ran into another angry crowd of white men at a Birmingham bus station. The integrated group took a brief but bloody beating and fled.

No serious injuries were reported.

Both buses were carrying members of the Congress of Racial Equality — CORE — on a swing through Dixie testing segregated facilities in bus stations. They call themselves "Freedom Riders."

The crusading group of Negroes and whites attacked by mobs at Anniston and Birmingham Sunday is scheduled to arrived in Montgomery at an undisclosed time Monday.

State investigator Ell M. Cowling, acting on a tip of possible trouble, was aboard a Greyhound bus attacked near Anniston. He barred the bus door with his body when the crowd of white men tried to board the bus. Two highway patrolmen fired their pistols into the air to quiet the crowd of about 200 which had followed the bus from Anniston.

THREW FIRE BOMB

Somebody threw a fire bomb through a bus window. Twelve persons were hospitalized, mostly for smoke inhalation. Ten of them later were released.

The bus, stalled about six miles out of Anniston by a flat tire, was destroyed by the blaze.

FBI Agent Thomas J. Jenkins of Birmingham said his agents were making an inquiry into the bus burning to determine if there had been any violation of federal law.

He declined to comment further.

Those who weren't hospitalized were taken back to Anniston and placed on another bus. They completed their ride to Birmingham and arrived at Birmingham's Greyhound station without incident.

The CORE members left Washington 10 days ago with six white and seven Negro "Freedom Riders." The number has fluctuated at various stops. On the Anniston bus the CORE group included five Negroes and four white persons. The number on the Trailways bus which reached Birmingham was not known.

INTO TWO GROUPS

They split into two groups in Atlanta and took separate buses into Alabama. The trouble started when the Greyhound, carrying the nine "Freedom Riders" and five other passengers, reached this northeast Alabama City of about 30,000.

The Trailways bus which later ran into difficulty at Birmingham had its first trouble at Anniston also.

Dr. Walter Bergman, 61, a former Michigan State University professor and a member of the CORE group, said a fight had broken out on the bus.

The Trailways station was closed, but Bergman said he got off, got sandwiches nearby, and was getting back on the bus when a policeman came up.

"The driver said he wasn't going to move until the Negroes moved to the back of the bus," Bergman said. "At that time, about 10 white men attacked Charles Person, a student at Morehouse University, Atlanta.

"And then James Peck stepped forward, then they turned on us. Peck was beaten about the face and got a deep cut on his scalp.

"Then they beat me and were kicking me. And then they threw the Negroes and others over me. There was no other violence until we got to Birmingham."

Bergman said three policemen had stood outside the bus at Anniston while this took place.

ADMITTED TO HOSPITAL

When the bus arrived at Birmingham it met more trouble.

Several white men attacked the group inside the Birmingham station, beating a Negro youth and a white man apparently accompanying them.

The white men obviously waiting for the arrival of the bus, covered telephone booths and exits. They refused to permit a newsman to use a telephone.

The fighting broke out in several areas around the station in downtown Birmingham.

No police were in evidence until several minutes after the outbreak.

HESITATED, WALKED

The Negroes hesitated momentarily, and then walked into a passageway leading into the waiting rooms.

To the left was a sign which designated the Negro waiting room. The other Negroes followed a few feet behind him.

Several white men stopped the young Negro man, and one of them told him: "The Negro waiting room is back that way." They turned him around forcefully, and pushed him.

The Negro group turned back into the passageway, but were met by another group of white men entering from the opposite end of the hall.

The Negro man tried to walk through the men, but a husky white man knocked him against the wall.

'HIT HIM'

Several white men entered the passageway from the white waiting room. They stood behind the young Negro.

"Hit him," one of them said.

A man slammed his fist into the young Negro's face. He fell to the floor, blood spurting from his nose.

As he got up, the white man hit him again. This time, the Negro fell backward into the arms of the white men. They pushed him up again. The white man slammed the Negro in the face again.

A white man who had been riding the bus with the Negroes attempted to interfere. He was beaten in the face until he lay on his back, blood streaming from his nose.

The injured Negro youth and the white man staggered outside through the entrance, and into the bus parking area outside.

The group followed them. The Negroes and white men who accompanied them ran from the bus station with the white attackers behind them.

It was all over in about three minutes.

There was no way to determine the number of attackers. Some apparently had been waiting in the bus station before the incident.

An aged Negro woman who was on the bus stood among the milling crowd, crying: "It started on the bus. It started on the bus."

The "Freedom Rider" group and the attackers had disappeared within 15 minutes after the first outbreak.

Two newsmen were attacked by the crowd outside the bus station. One, Tom Langston of the Birmingham Post-Herald, was hurt painfully, but was not hospitalized.

Clancy Lake, a radio newsman was attacked as he sat in his closed automobile broadcasting an account of the violence. He escaped serious injury.

In an alley behind the bus station, a group of photographers had leaped into their automobile, but were blocked by another crowd of white men. They seized several cameras, smashed some of them and made off with the others.

Police made no arrests immediately.

Battered 'Freedom Riders' Make Talks At Negro Rally

BIRMINGHAM (AP) — About 30 Negroes gathered in a church Sunday night to hear talks by Negroes and white persons beaten up at a Birmingham bus station a few hours earlier.

The meeting was held at Bethel Baptist Church, where the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth is pastor. Shuttlesworth is president of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights, a Negro organization.

The first of the beating victims to speak was Dr. Walter Bergman, a former Michigan State University professor and a member of the Congress of Racial Equality. He said CORE is a coordinated organization of nonviolent action groups that believe in racial equality.

Bergman's left eye was swollen and he had several small cuts on his face, which he said were the results of an attack by white men against his group on the bus.

Six white persons were in the audience, three newsmen and two members of CORE. The sixth was not identified.

Shortly before the meeting started, Shuttlesworth dispatched three cars to Anniston to pick up members of the CORE group who were injured aboard another bus.

Shuttlesworth led off the program telling the group, "when white men and black men are beaten up together, the day is coming when tey will walk together."

He said, "no matter how many times they beat us up, segregation has still got to go. Others may be beaten up, but freedom is worth anything."

Members of the audience shouted "Yeah" and "amen."

Bus Burns, 14 Injured As Race Fights Flare

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — Violence trailed a mixed group of persons testing desegregation at interstate bus stations in the Deep South Sunday.

A Greyhound bus carrying 14 persons, nine of them members of the "Freedom Riders," was stoned and burned outside of Anniston in north Alabama. Ten persons were taken to a hospital where they were treated, mostly for smoke inhalation.

The fighting broke out in several areas around the station in downtown Birmingham.

No police were in evidence until several minutes after the outbreak.

Two newsmen were attacked by the milling crowd outside the bus station. One, Tom Langston of the Birmingham Post-Herald, was hurt painfully, but not hospitalized.

Clancy Lake, a radio newsman, was attacked as he sat in his closed automobile broadcasting an account of the violence.

He was on the air when his windows were smashed.

"I moved to the other side of the car, but they broke the windows on that side, too," Lake said.

One of the men swung a length of pipe at Lake's direction, but he ducked to one side. It glanced off the side of his face, but he was not hurt seriously.

In an alley behind the bus station, a group of photographers had leaped into their automobile, but were blocked by another crowd of white men. They seized several cameras, smashed some of them and made off with the others.

No arrests were made.

The group who sought to break the segregation barrier left Washington several days ago. They split into two groups in Atlanta and took separate buses—a Greyhound bus and a Trailways bus—into Alabama.

TIRES CUT

At Anniston, the bus station was closed, but a crowd of between 150 and 200 persons milled around outside the station.

Joseph Perkins Jr., identified as field sceretary of the "Freedom Riders," told a reporter several windows in the bus station at Anniston had been broken. He said some of the bus tires apparently had been cut, "because I could hear the air hissing."

The Greyhound bus had to stop six miles from Anniston because of a flat tire. Several automobiles filled with white men trailed the bus.

USED FIRE DEVICE

They sought to enter the vehicle, but were prevented from doing so by E. M. Cowling, a state investigator who stood in the doorway while the bus driver attempted to change the tire.

The crowd milled around outside, Cowling said, before an incendiary device was thrown through a broken rear window of the bus.

The passengers did not leave the bus immediately.

But smoke finally forced them to leave. The bus was destroyed by fire.

The Trailways bus which later ran into difficulty at Birmingham had its first trouble at Anniston also.

Dr. Walter Bergman, 61, a former Michigan State University professor and a member of the CORE group, said a fight had broken out on the bus.

"Then they beat me and were kicking me. And then they threw the Negroes and others over me. There was no other violence until we got to Birmingham."

Bergman said three policemen had stood outside the bus at Anniston while this took place.

The bus continued to Birmingham where Peck, a white man of New York City, was admitted to a hospital in fair condition. Peck is editor of the Cordaton, a publication of CORE.

Bus Destroyed By Firebomb, 'Freedom Riders' Clubbed

BIRMINGHAM, Aa. (AP)—A bus was destroyed by a firebomb and several members of a racially-mixed group of "freedom riders" were brutally beaten as they sought to bring their test of color barriers in bus stations into Alabama.

Members, however, vowed to continue their swing which started in Washington 11 days ago.

All told, 13 persons were taken to hospitals Sunday—12 for smoke inhalation suffered when some one in a crowd of angry white men threw a fire bomb into a stalled bus outside Anniston, and one for head cuts suffered at the hands of white men using pipes for clubs at a Birmingham bus station.

Two other persons required medical attention. None was hurt critically.

No arrests were made in Anniston or Birmingham.

The "freedom riders" — eight white persons and eight Negroes —are members of the Congress of Racial Equality. They are riding regularly scheduled buses through the South to test racial segregation.

This was their first encounter with mass violence.

The group divided in Atlanta for the trip through Alabama, nine taking a Greyhound bus and seven boarding a Trailways bus, all headed for Birmingham.

TROUBLE AT ANNISTON

Both buses ran into trouble at Anniston, about 50 miles from the Georgia line.

When the Greyhound bus arrived there, the bus station was closed and an angry crowd of about 200 white persons milled around.

Members of the crowd smashed some bus windows with bars and lengths of pipe.

The driver headed for Birmingham, but six miles outside Anniston the bus had a flat tire. A crowd of white men who had followed in cars sought to board it.

They were blocked by Alabama state investigator, Ell M.. Cowling who had ridden the bus from Atlanta on a tip.

A fire bomb—believed to have been a soft drink bottle containing gasoline—was thrown through a window of the bus.

Highway patrolmen, summoned by a passing motorist, fired pistols into the air to disperse the crowd. The passengers got off before the bus was destroyed by flames.

BOARD BUS

The Trailways bus left Atlanta about an hour after the Greyhound bus. Dr. Walter Bergman, 61, a former Michigan State University professor and a member of the CORE group, said about eight or ten white men had boarded the bus in Atlanta.

He said they beat several members of the group, including himself, at Anniston. When the bus reached Birmingham, 60 miles west of Anniston, a crowd of white men was waiting.

Two members of the CORE group, a Negro and a white man, were beaten when they headed for the white waiting room.

Outside, on the bus docks, white men using lengths of pipe as bludgeons, mauled others, including a Negro bystander.

Tense Group Kept Watch At Terminal

By BOB COHN
Advertiser Staff Writer

BIRMINGHAM — Tensions which disrupted into mob violence Sunday in Birmingham and Montgomery hung heavy in a Birmingham bus station Monday.

Seventeen white and Negro members of CORE (Congress of Racial Equality) were in the Greyhound terminal's white waiting room preparing to board a bus scheduled to take them to Montgomery. Bus drivers refused to take the bus out, however, and they boarded a 6:50 p.m. plane for New Orleans. A bomb threat emptied the plane.

The Rev. Martin Luther King, reportedly in Atlanta Monday, was to have addressed the group at a large rally in the capital city at 7:30 p.m. Monday.

2:45 ARRIVAL

The group which was attacked at the Trailways terminal Sunday arrived at the Greyhound station at 2:45 p.m. Monday 15 minutes prior to the scheduled departure for Montgomery.

James Peck, 46-year-old white journalist, who was attacked Sunday, said, "It's been rough, but I'm getting on that bus to Montgomery." A copy of a local newspaper was folded under Peck's arm. It contained pictures of the mob beating him and another re-photograph of him lying on an emergency operating table.

Tension mounted in the now-integrated bus station until it became evident that the bus was not going to carry the CORE group to Montgomery. Everyone at the station, including newsmen, sightseers and officials, continually peered over his shoulder waiting for trouble. It never arrived.

LONE DRUNK

A lone drunk wandered into the station, and after offering to take on all the CORE members by himself, was promptly arrested.

Bus drivers who voted not to drive under any circumstances stood firm and the integrated group finally huddled with the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, Birmingham integration leader.

"There are two ways to handle a strike," Shuttlesworth said of the drivers' refusal to drive. "We can either abide by it, or break it."

When asked what he meant by "break it," Shuttlesworth replied, "Now that the station is integrated, we can stay here and wait them out. They are bound to put a bus through sooner or later." Shuttlesworth added that the decision as to what to do was up to the CORE people themselves. Shuttlesworth was not traveling with the group.

CARS RULED OUT

Albert Bigelow, an architect from Connecticut who was traveling with the group, decided that car transportation to Montgomery was not feasible. Still determined, however, to meet King in Montgomery, Bigelow asked the counter clerk on arrival at the airport if it was possible to get his group on a flight to Montgomery. She said the flight was filled.

Just before leaving the bus station, Bigelow remarked, "The Klan is gathering in the area. I think we had better get out."

The Negroes appeared undisturbed by the situation in the bus station, and sat and read magazines awaiting some decision. Cameramen had a field day, taking pictures of the integrated proceedings.

There were 10 uniformed policemen in the station, along with plainclothesmen, including FBI agents, men from the attorney general's office and two Montgomery detectives who were going to follow the group to Montgomery.

BIRMINGHAM JAILS RACIAL TEAM

Birmingham,Ala.(AP)-A racially mixed group of college students from Tennessee,trying to crack bus station segregation, were taken to jail Wednesday after a tense four hours at the Greyhound teminal here.
The small number of white persons allowed on the loading docks by police sent up a cheer and a round of hand-clapping as officers loaded the group into patrol wagons. As the wagons pulled away, the students sang.
Police Chief Jamie Moore said the eight students-seven Negroes and a white girl- were taken into protective custody.
"It is dangerous for you and for others to stay here," Moore told the students.
All told 16 persons were taken into custody- 14 Negroes, a white man and the white girl.
Ten of them-including the two white persons were on the bus coming into town.
Of the 16, all but three were held in protective custody.
Two were charged with failing to obey an officer, and held on $25 bond each.
The Rev F.L. Shuttlesworth, Birmingham Negro minister and president of the pro-integration Alabama Christian Council on Human Relations, was charged with infering with an officer and refusing to obey an officer. His bond was set at $25 on each count.
As the students were loaded into patrol wagons small knots of people stood on the sidewalks and in a parking lot next to the bus station.
As the groups broke up and reformed, police used two police dogs to help disperse them.
The bus station arrests came shortly after the group found it self stymied in an effort to board a bus for Montgomery.
During the four hours the students spent at the bus station,police said they received a bomb warning, but the danger time expired without incident.
The students rode into Birmingham on a bus from Nashville,Tenn., then found themselves stranded when drivers refused to take them out of town.
Police boarded the incoming bus on the outskirts of Birmingham, arested a white man and a Negro - for refusing to change seats, and put two officers on the bus for the remainder of the ride to the bus station.
This is the same station in which 17 members of a racially mixed Congress of Racial Equality group found themselves bottled up for more than two hours Monday when drivers refused to move the bus. The group finally went to the airport in cars and flew to New Orleans.
The station is in downtown Birmingham, three blocks from the Trailways station where a white mob attacked a racially mixed group arriving on a bus Sunday.
Meanwhile, a fourth man has been arrested in connection with the disturbance at the Trailways station last Sunday.

FBI Investigating Attack On Group Riding In South

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (UPI) — A group of whites and Negroes touring the South in a methodical test of segregation in bus terminals said Monday it would continue despite two incidents Sunday of overt violence. Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy asked the state to provide police protection.

The Rev. Fred L. Shuttlesworth, Baptist minister and Birmingham leader, said the group met at his home Monday morning and voted unanimously to continue the trip. Some members of the group were beaten by angry segregationists Sunday at a Trailways bus station in Birmingham and a Greyhound bus carrying other members was burned Sunday, apparently by a fire bomb, near Anniston, Ala.

"The group, sponsored by the Congress on Racial Equality (CORE), did not disclose its specific travel plans but previous plans called for the tour to go from Alabama into Mississippi and Louisiana, ending in New Orleans. One source said the "freedom riders" would leave Monday afternoon for Montgomery where Ku Klux Klansmen have said they would intercept the buses.

FBI INVESTIGATING

The FBI said it was looking into the violence and was expecting a preliminary report Monday.

Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the NAACP, sent a telegram to the attorney general urging an investigation and pointing out that the Birmingham outbreak occurred at an interstate bus terminal, constituting a violation of a ruling by the Supreme Court.

Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy asked state officials to give the integrationists safe conduct to New Orleans but Alabama Gov. John Patterson turned him down, saying "The citizens of the state are outraged I cannot guarantee protection for this bunch of rabble-rousers."

Earlier reports had said Alabama and Louisiana authorities had granted Kennedy the guarantee and that Kennedy had suggested the riders whisk through Mississippi via a coastal route, avoiding the arch - segregationist state's capital of Jackson.

But Patterson said he was receiving reports that the group would be met along the way by crowds which the governor said were gathering along the route.

Patterson said "I refuse to take the responsibility to guarantee their safe passage from Birmingham to Montgomery due to the tenseness of the situation." Patterson said he would give them protection "only to the nearest state line."

But late Monday afternoon it appeared the group would not be able to continue by bus. Shortly after 6:30 p. m. EDT the bi-racial group took its bags off the bus and the Greyhound Bus Company said "we're having some difficulty getting a driver."

A shouting mob greeted the Greyhound bus at Anniston Sunday, shouting and slashing at the tires. Police refused to let anyone leave the bus.

The vehicle left town but one of the tires went flat just outside the city. At this point the segregationists who had been following in automobiles closed in and began throwing stones at the windows. A fire bomb was thrown through broken window and the bus caught fire.

FELLED BY FUMES

Several passengers were felled by the fumes but all got out before the bus was completely burned out.

FREEDOM RIDERS PASS THROUGH ATLANTA — This group of "Freedom Riders," though victimes of verbal insults, were nevertheless happy and confident as they paused for a photo while stopping off over-night in Atlanta. The front row includes: Joseph Perkins, New York City; W. G. Bergman, Detroit, Mich.; Herman Harris, Englewood, N.J.; Jim Peck, New York City; James Farmer (group spokesman), New York City; Albert Bigelow of Cos Cob, Conn. On the back row are: Charles Person, Atlanta; Jimmy McDonald, Washington, D.C.; Henry Thomas, Washington; Ocharwe Hugke, New York City; Isaac Reynolds, Detroit, Mich.; Mae Frances Moultrie, South Carolina; Frances Burgman, Detroit, Mich.; and Ivan G. Moore, Morris, S.C. (Photo by Perry)

The tour, which began in Washington earlier this month, is a conscious attempt to test the racial statuts of bus station waiting rooms. Federal courts have ruled that such waiting rooms dealing in interstate commerce — and hence a subject to federal laws — may not be segregated.

The group generally has met little difficulties on the tour although one integrationist was punched by whites when he tried to enter an all - white waiting room at Rock Hill, S. C. and two of the group were arrested in Winnsboro, S. C.

2d Group Of Integrationists Attacked In Birmingham Station

By The Associated Press

Birmingham, Ala., May 14.—Violence trailed a mixed group testing desegregation at interstate bus stations in the Deep South Sunday.

A Greyhound bus carrying 14 persons, nine of them members of the "Freedom Riders," was stoned and burned outside Anniston in north Alabama. Ten persons were taken to a hospital and treated, mostly for smoke inhalation.

Cameras Smashed

In an alley behind the bus station a group of photographers had leaped into their automobile but were blocked by another crowd of white men. Several cameras were smashed and others taken.

The group who sought to break the segregation barrier left Washington several days ago. They split into two groups in Atlanta and took separate buses into Alabama.

At Anniston the bus station was closed, but a crowd of 150 to 200 milled around outside the station.

Joseph Perkins, Jr., identified as field secretary of the "Freedom Riders," told a reporter several windows in the bus station at Anniston had been broken. He said some of the bus tires apparently had been cut "because I could hear the air hissing."

Whites Trail Bus

The Greyhound bus had to stop six miles from Anniston because of a flat tire. Several automobiles filled with white men trailed the bus.

They sought to enter the vehicle but were stopped by Eli M. Cowling, a State investigator who stood in the doorway while the bus driver attempted to change the tire.

He walked about 10 feet into the white waiting room. The other Negroes followed.

They turned the Negro around forcefully and pushed him.

The Negro group turned back into the passageway but were met by another group of white men entering from the opposite end of the hall.

"Where do you think you are?" one of them asked.

The Negro man tried to walk through the group of men, but a husky white man, chewing on a cigar, knocked him against the wall.

Negro Felled

Several white men entered the passageway from the white waiting room. They stood behind the young Negro.

"Hit him," one of them said.

The man with the cigar slammed his fist into the young Negro's face. He fell to the floor, blood spurting from his nose.

As he got up the white man hit him again. This time the Negro fell backward into the arms of the white men. They pushed him up.

The man with the cigar hit him in the face again.

A white man who had been on the bus with the Negroes attempted to interfere.

The man with the cigar beat him until he lay on his back, blood streaming from his nose.

The injured Negro youth and the white man staggered outside into the bus parking area outside.

The group followed. The Negroes and white men who accompanied them ran from the bus station with the white attackers behind them.

The "Freedom Rider" group and the attachers had disappeared within 15 minutes after the outbreak.

Bus Integrationists Forced Off Airliner by Bomb Scare

By The Associated Press

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP)—Battered integrationists abandoned their bus trip through Alabama Monday night, only to be forced from an airplane by a bomb scare as they sought to reach New Orleans.

The 17 members of the Congress of Racial Equality and other passengers, were forced to leave an Eastern Air Lines plane after the FBI said it had received a telephone call a bomb had been concealed aboard the plane.

The plane was searched, no bomb was found, but an Eastern employe told the passengers the flight was canceled because of the bomb scare.

There was no immediate indication as to what move the integrationists would make next.

Alabama's Gov. John Patterson announced that the state could not guarantee their safety and he urged them to leave Alabama as quickly as possible.

The "Freedom Riders," many of whom suffered severe beatings at Anniston, where a bus was burned, and Birmingham Sunday, were stymied when Greyhound bus drivers refused to drive them to Montgomery.

Plans originally included stops at Montgomery and either Mobile, Ala., or at Meridian, Miss.

MADE CALLS

Representatives of the group made frequent telephone calls to their New York offices and to Washington, where one of them talked with U.S. Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy.

An administrative assistant to the attorney general, John Siegenthaler, was en route to Birmingham from Washington.

The Rev. B. Elton Cox, 29, Negro minister of High Point, N.C., and a member of the CORE group, said the trip into Alabama was successful "because it proves that citizens of this country can't ride as citizens despite Supreme Court rulings on interstate passengers."

The integrationists had planned to leave Birmingham by bus at 2 p.m. Monday, but waited at the Greyhound station until about 5 p.m. when it became evident the Greyhound drivers were'nt going to drive.

Private automobiles drove the group to the airport without incident.

Patterson issued a statement in Montgomery which said:

"In view of the tenseness of the situation, it is impossible to guarantee the safety of the agitators. Our advice to them is to get out of Alabama as quickly as possible.

NEAREST STATE LINE

We will escort them to the nearest state line; however we will not escort them to any other cities in Alabama to continue their rabble-rousing."

The CORE group is on a Southwide swing that started in Washington 11 days ago. They were scheduled to reach New Orleans in time to attend a mass rally of integrationists Wednesday night.

Minor incidents dotted their rides aboard regularly scheduled buses, but the first mass violence happened in Alabama Sunday.

two days of violence and race tension in Alabama.

They were forced to leave an Eastern Air Lines plane after the FBI said it had received a telephone call a bomb had been concealed aboard the plane.

Eastern said later the flight was canceled, although no bomb was found.

A later call to a public insurance booth in the airport waiting room told a woman clerk that a bomb had been concealed in the air terminal itself.

SET TO GO OFF

A man's voice told Miss Jean Taylor the bomb was set to go off within 18 minutes. At the end of this time, however, there was no explosion.

The integrationists earlier had purchased tickets aboard a Capital Airlines plane, but were shunted back to an Eastern plane when Capital reported the weather at Mobile would prohibit the plane leaving immediately.

The Mobile Weather Bureau said the weather there was clear.

They left aboard an Eastern plane at 10:38 p.m. It was due to arrive in New Orleans at 11:33 p.m.

An administrative assistant to the attorney general, John Siegenthaler, was en route to Birmingham from Washington Monday night.

The Rev. B. Elton Cox, 29-year-old Negro minister of High Point, N.C., and a member of the CORE group, said the trip into Alabama was successful "because it proves that citizens of this country can't ride as citizens despite Supreme Court rulings on interstate passengers."

He said Alabama was the place they expected the most violence, and added: "I wrote my will before I left home."

The integrationists had planned to leave Birmingham by bus at 2 p.m. Monday, but waited at the Greyhound station until about 5 p.m. when it became evident Greyhound drivers weren't going to drive.

PRIVATE AUTOS

Private automobiles drove the group to the airport without incident.

Patterson issued a statement in Montgomery which said:

"In view of the tenseness of the situation, it is impossible to guarantee the safety of the agitators. Our advice to them is to get out of Alabama as quickly as possible.

"We will escort them to the nearest state line; however, we will not escort them to any other cities in Alabama to continue their rabble-rousing."

Public Safety Director Floyd Mann said earlier that a highway patrol escort for the bus had been planned after talking with the U.S. attorney general.

In Washington, Kennedy aides said the attorney general had asked the State of Alabama to provide local police protection for the group.

The CORE group is on a southwide swing that started in Washington 11 days ago. They were scheduled to reach New Orleans in time to attend a mass rally of integrationists Wednesday night.

Minor incidents dotted their rides aboard regularly scheduled buses, but the first mass violence happened in Alabama Sunday.

Aboard a Trailways bus, white men attacked one CORE group at Anniston. They ran into further violence at Birmingham, where two were beaten severely. Others were beaten less severely.

A Greyhound bus, carrying the other CORE group, also ran into trouble at Anniston.

A firebomb was thrown through a window, filling the bus with smoke.

State Investigator Ell M. Cowling kept the crowd from surging onto the bus. He boarded the bus at Atlanta after a tip of possible violence.

Highway patrolmen, halted by a passing motorist, fired their pistols into the air to quiet the crowd, and the passengers got off. None was hurt seriously but 12 were treated for smoke inhalation.

There were no arrests at Birmingham or Anniston.

JAVITS URGES FEDERAL ACTION

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Jacob K. Javits, R-N.Y., Monday made public a telegram to Atty. Gen. Kennedy saying "I hope no effort will be spared to bring to justice those who took part in these incidents." He asked for a report on any action the justice department may plan.

The telegram said Javits was "shocked by reports of violence, injury to persons and destruction of property involving the burning of an interstate bus and attacks on persons in the Birmingham Bus Terminal."

Javits called the incidents clear violation of Americans' civil rights, and violation also of federal laws against conspiracy and destruction of interstate motor vehicles. He suggested the incidents might show a need for action of some sort by Congress.

Lawmen On Alert Here To Halt Troublemakers

By STUART CULPEPPER

Local law enforcement authorities remained on the alert for trouble stemming from the anticipated visit of the "Freedom Riders" here from early Monday morning until long after dark, concentrating most of their attention on the bus terminals.

Restless crowds moved through and around the two terminals here, waiting for the scheduled bus to arrive. Most of them said they had heard the news of the group's inability to get out of Birmingham, but they thought that it was a trick to sneak the group into the city undercover.

SMALL CROWD WAITED

The crowd gathered around the Greyhound Station here never reached a mass of more than 50, and that was around 5:45 p.m. The group was scattered from the dry cleaning building above the station on Court street, to the front of the Post Office below the station. Several stood across the street. At least half of the crowd was teen-agers.

In front of the Trailways Station a small crowd of people stood around and waited, but the group was not as excited as the one around the Greyhound Station. They began dwindling away from the stations around 6:15

After a stern warning against violence by Police Commissioner L. B. Sullivan, city police took strong measures to insure the peace. Detectives and burly patrolmen in plain clothes rode around the city for most of the day, concentrating on the bus station areas. By 4 p.m. most of the patrols had disbanded and the patrolmen were back in uniform. Two detectives were sent to Birmingham Saturday night to see how the police there would handle the situation, and to watch for the kind of trouble that might develop here.

Sullivan had said earlier that "we do not intend to permit outside forces to create, provoke, or otherwise incite any racial incident in our city." He added that "violators would be dealt with according to law."

The Alabama Association of Citizens Councils urged Montgomerians Sunday night to stay away from the bus stations and not give the CORE group the publicity they were seeking.

COUNTERS CLOSED

Both bus stations closed their lunch counters early Monday morning. It was after noon before the group decided to come in on a Greyhound, but the Trailways counter remained closed anyway.

After 12 noon, the two stations put up signs on the closed off counters saying that they were shut down because of fire department orders. Asst. Fire Chief Rufus Talley, head of the Fire Prevention Bureau, said a "routine inspection" of the two buildings showed hazardous conditions at the eating places.

Talley said the decision to close the counters was based on an inspection May 11, and a follow-up visit Monday. He denied any connection between the expected arrival of the CORE group and the closing of the lunch room facilities. Blamed for the closing at the stations were "improper electrical fuses, accumulated grease in [illegible] places and unapproved exits" at the Trailways Station.

At the Greyhound station, the cause was attributed to faulty fire extinguishers, unapproved exits, and an accumulation of lint, dust, and grease.

MOUNTED PATROL

At closed Kiwanis Park on Columbus street a group of mounted sheriff's deputies were standng by most of the day to prevent any major disorder, but they never put in an appearance downtown. The horsemen have been used to help put down disturbances here in the past.

Earlier, Public Safety Director Floyd H. Mann here had assigned a highway patrol car to escort the bus to the Montgomery city limits. He said he ordered the escort because of the destruction of a bus Sunday afternoon by a mob outside of Anniston. Mann said he acted for "the safety of the people of Alabama as well as those on the bus."

When the bus was unable to leave Birmingham on schedule, Gov. John Patterson called off the highway patrol guard and said that the only escort the "Freedom Riders" would get would be to the state line, with no stops in between.

Montgomery Improvement Association President Ralph Abernathy wired President Kennedy and asked him to come down and investigate the state personally.

The MIA called the recent attacks on the buses, "vicious and brutal attacks," and invited the President to come and see "first hand just how the Negro people, who have always been loyal to this nation, are being treated."

Earlier, the MIA had wired Gov. Patterson a protest against Sunday's violence and said the incidents happened "because of the failure of law enforcement agencies to assume their responsibilities." Abernathy, in the wire, asked the governor to speak out "firmly for human rights."

City police remained vigilant through the early part of the evening for any incidents which might arise from the day's tensions or another change in plans by CORE.

Bus Is Burned, Young Negro Beaten In Separate Alabama Race Clashes

ANNISTON, Ala., May 14 (AP)—An integrated group calling themselves the "Freedom Riders" ran into violence today at Anniston.

The Greyhound bus they were riding was attacked and finally burned by demonstrators.

No serious injuries were reported.

The group, under the sponsorship of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE), is making a bus trip through the deep South to test desegregation policies at bus stations serving interstate passengers.

The bus, on a regular run rather than special charter, reportedly carried 14 passengers, nine of whom were "Freedom Riders."

In Birmingham, white men and Negroes battled at the downtown Trailways bus station. The fighting broke out as a group of Negro and white persons entered the white waiting room. Several white men stood in front of a young Negro.

The Negro hesitated and turned and slowly walked toward the door.

As he reached the door the white crowd in the waiting room pushed him into a hallway. Several other white men coming through the hall from the opposite direction pushed him against the wall, knocked him down, and beat him.

A white man who got off the bus with the group of Negroes protested. He also was pushed and struck in the face. His face was covered with blood.

In the Anniston incident, the bus stopped only briefly but the rear window and two side windows were broken. Tires also apparently were slashed.

A tire went flat about five miles out of Anniston, on the Birmingham highway. About 50 carloads of demonstrators and spectators trailed the bus out of the city and were on the scene.

State investigator E. M. Cowling said he was standing at the door when a smoking incendiary device was hurled through a broken window. The bus smoked for a few minutes, then burst into flames.

Radio station WDNG said the bus passengers clambered through windows to escape the fire. One Negro rider was hit on the head with a chain by an unknown person, the station said.

ANNISTON, Ala.—Seven Freedom Riders went through two hours of "blazing hell" here Sunday when an angry mob waylaid and burned the $49,000 Greyhound bus on which they were passengers six miles west of this community.

The mean-looking, shirt-sleeved ruffians attempted to take the Freedom Riders off the vehicle at Anniston when they began breaking out windows and cursing obscenties.

Only the cool-headed action of two Alabama state investigators in plain clothes forestalled what was obviously a planned lynching.

SOME OF THE bus passengers escaped by jumping out of the windows, while others attempted to protect themselves by crouching beneath seats.

As the bus neared Anniston about 2:10 p.m. another Greyhound leaving Anniston stopped it. A man in plain-clothes came aboard and warned passengers that 16 to 20 hoodlums were crowding around the Anniston station and to be careful.

He said it looked like it might be a nasty situation. He also reported that the bus station had been closed.

At the intersection of 10th and Noble streets, two cars fell behind the bus. As it pulled up to the station, the ugly hoodlums began crowding around.

"This is Alabama, you black bastards. Come on out and integrate," shouted one bull-voiced mobster.

THEY CALLED the Freedom Riders yellow cowards, Communists and other such names.

Then they began breaking out windows with sections of lead pipe and pieces of chain.

Two plain-clothes officers, Eli Cowlin and Harry Sims with drawn pistols held the mob at bay and prevented them from taking the Freedom Riders off as they threatened to do.

As the bus with the Freedom Riders still aboard left the city, one of the cars that had approached the bus at 10th and Noble Sts., got in front of the bus.

The driver kept slowing down almost bringing the bus to a halt, but he refused to let the bus driver pass.

IT WAS LATER learned that the mob had slashed the bus tires and the car driver was apparently waiting for the air to seep out.

A line of cars followed the bus out to the area where it was brought to a halt.

The mob again started breaking out windows and hurling threats.

Later some one pushed a fire bomb through a broken window.

In a matter of seconds the bus was enveloped in a fog of thick, black, stiffling smoke. Women started screaming and children were crying.

JUST AS the bomb burst into a thousand rivlets of liquid flame, one of the Freedom Riders, Genevieve Hughes leaped through a window.

A free-lance reporter traveling with the group, also a white woman, went out of the window. Larry Hoppe, a passenger, who boarded at Atlanta, attempted to hide on the floor.

Mrs. Roberta Holmes, 68, of Birmingham, who was returning from Atlanta where she had buried her sister, was cut by the flying glass.

Outside the bus Highway Patrolmen and other officers protected the Freedom Riders while most of them were down on the ground coughing, gagging and vomiting.

* * *

MRS. ALMA BAKER of Anniston, who lived across the street from the incident, pushed through the mob of hoodlums with a pitcher of water with which she bathed the faces of the women and gave what relief she could.

Later, suffering from numerous cuts and abrasions, the Freedom Riders were taken to the Anniston Memorial Hospital for treatment. None seemed to be in critical condition.

* * *

NO ARRESTS had been made as late as 6 p.m. Sunday, the AFRO was told.

Freedom Riders who went through the experience were Edward Blankenheim, Albert Bigalow, Mae Frances Moultrie, Genevieve Hughes, Henry Thomas, Joseph Perkins and Jimmy McDonald.

Greyhound officials promished another bus would pick the group up at the hospital to continue the journey into Birmingham.

FREEDOM RIDER — Moses Newson, AFRO city editor, whose by - line is remembered for his brilliant coverage of the Emmett Till, Little Rock School and Florida A. and M. rape cases, is on tour through the South with CORE Freedom Riders testing unsegregated use of bus terminal waiting rooms, cafes and rest-room facilities.

'Freedom Riders' Attacked In Bus

The News and Courier

ANNISTON, Ala., (AP) — Violence trailed a group of Negro and white persons testing desegregation at interstate bus stations in the Deep South Sunday.

A Greyhound bus carrying 14 persons, nine of them members of the "Freedom Riders," was stoned and burned outside of Anniston in Northern Alabama. Ten persons were taken to a hospital where they were treated, mostly for smoke inhalation. 1A

At the Trailways bus station in Birmingham, violence erupted after a group of "Freedom Riders" arrived from Atlanta.

The group who sought to break the segregation barrier left Washington 10 days ago. They split into two groups in Atlanta and took separate buses—a Greyhound bus station was closed, but a crowd of between 150 and 200 persons milled around outside the station.

Joseph Perkins Jr., identified as field secretary of the self-styled "Freedom Riders," told a reporter several windows in the bus station at Anniston had been broken. He said some of the bus tires apparently had been cut, "because I could hear the air hissing."

The Greyhound bus had to stop six miles from Anniston because of a flat tire. Several automobiles filled with white men trailed the bus.

They sought to enter the vehicles, but were prevented from doing so by Ell M. Cowling, a state investigator who stood in the doorway while the bus driver attempted to change the tire.

The crowd milled around outside, Cowling said, before an incendiary evice was thrown through a broken rear window of the bus.

The passengers did not leave the bus immediately.

But smoke finally forced them to leave. The bus was destroyed by fire.

There was some scuffling among passengers and the white group before highway patrolmen arrived.

Floyd Mann, Alabama director of public safety, said two state highway patrolmen fired shots into the air to disperse the crowd around the blazing bus.

"I think quick action by the patrolmen may have saved some lives," he said when reached by telephone at Montgomery.

Somebody in a nearby house called patrolmen at the Anniston post, Mann said, and when they reached the scene they had to push through the crowd around the bus to help the people out.

The group, under the sponsorship of the Congress of Racial Equality — CORE — started the journey from Washington with six white and seven Negro "Freedom Riders." Spokesmen said the number has fluctuated at various stops. The News & Courier

On the Anniston bus the CORE group included five Negroes and four white persons. The number on the bus which reached Birmingham, 50 miles west of Anniston, was not known.

Several white men attacked the group inside the Birmingham station, beating a Negro youth and a white man apparently accompanying them.

The white men obviously waiting for the arrival of the bus, covered telephone booths and exits. They refused to permit a newsman to use a telephone.

The fighting broke out in several areas around the station in several minutes after the outbreak. Charleston, S.C.

No police were in evidence until downtown Birmingham.

The Negroes hesitated momentarily, and then walked into a passageway leading into the waiting rooms. Mon. 5-15-61

To the left was a sign which designated the Negro waiting room. The other Negroes followed a few feet behind him.

Several white men stopped the young Negro man, and one of them told him: "The Negro waiting room is back that way." They turned him around forcefully, and pushed him.

The Negro group turned back into the passageway, but were met by another group of white men entering from the opposite end of the hall.

The Negro man tried to walk through the men, but a husky white man knocked him against the wall.

Several white men entered the passageway from the white waiting room. They stood behind the young Negro.

"Hit him," one of them said.

A man slammed his fist into the young Negro's face. He fell to the floor, blood spurting from his nose.

As he got up, the white man hit him again. This time, the Negro fell backward into the arms of the white men. They pushed him up again. The white man slammed the Negro in the face again.

A white man who had been riding the bus with the Negroes attempted to interfere. He was beaten in the face until he lay on his back, blood streaming from his nose.

The injured Negro youth and the white man staggered outside, through the entrance, and into the bus parking area outside.

The group followed them. The Negroes and white men who accompanied them ran from the bus station with the white attackers behind them.

It was all over in about three minutes.

There was no way to determine the number of attackers. Some apparently had been waiting in the bus station before the incident.

An aged Negro woman who was on the bus stood among the milling crowd, crying: "It started on the bus. It started on the bus."

The "Freedom Rider" group and the attackers had disappeared within 15 minutes after the first outbreak.

Two newsmen were attacked by the crowd outside the bus station. One, Tom Langston of the Birmingham Post-Herald, was hurt painfully, but was not hospitalized.

Clancy Lake, a radio newsman, was attacked as he sat in his closed automobile broadcasting an account of the violence. He escaped serious injury.

In an alley behind the bus station, a group of photographers had leaped into their automobile, but were blocked by another crowd of white men. They seized several cameras, smashed some of them and made off with the others.

Police made no arrests immediately.

Knowledge of stone tossing denied by Anniston leaders

The Birmingham News 5/15 Birmingham Ala.

ANNISTON, Ala., May 16—Police Commissioner W. S. Weatherly and Mayor George T. Morris issued statements today in which they disclaimed knowledge of the actions of racially tense crowds in Anniston Sunday night.

Weatherly said he had not received any complaints from Negro motorists that their automobiles were stoned.

The stonings occurred a block from the city police station. Men armed themselves with rocks and pelted the automobiles of Negro motorists as they passed in front of the Greyhound bus station.

ALTHOUGH POLICE CARS cruised past the crowd several times, no attempt was made to break it up.

Weatherly said today Anniston police were under orders not to permit any large assemblies on the streets. He said he was unaware of the incident.

Mayor Morris said no special instructions were given after the bus burning Sunday afternoon "because there were none to give." He said he was not at the bus station Sunday night.

Federal Aid Sought

Marvin Rich, the C. O. R. E. community relations director in New York, reported last night that James Farmer, national director, was trying to reach Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy "to protest the assaults and to ask for guarantees of freedom on the public highways."

There are nineteen persons now engaged in the freedom ride, he said, seeking to test segregation on bus company vehicles, restaurants and rest rooms on trips due to end in New Orleans on May 17.

Previously, Mr. Rich said, the only violence had occurred last Tuesday in Rock Hill, S. C., when two riders—one white and one Negro—were beaten up in a waiting room. The day before, he said, a Negro participant had been arrested and acquitted in Charlotte, N. C., on a charge of trespassing made while he was waiting to get his shoes shined.

According to Mr. Rich, the Trailways group—six Negroes an dthree whites—met its first trouble in Anniston, on its way to Birmingham. As it was about to leave a rest stop, he said, the bus driver announced that the Greyhound bus has just been burned. The driver said he would not leave until the Negroes sat in the rear of the bus, in accordance with Alabama law.

When the Negroes in the party remained in various places in the bus, eight white passengers assaulted them, Mr. Rich said. Jim Peck, 47 years old, of Riverside Drive, New York, and Walter Bergman, 61, of Detroit, white C. O. R. E. passengers, were also beaten for protesting before all the Negroes were eventually bodily lifted into the rear of the bus, Mr. Rich said.

In Birmingham, Mr. Peck was injured so badly that he was hospitalized, Mr. Rich said. Mrs. Bergman was the third white C. O. R. E. passenger in the Trailways group.

MOB STONES, BURNS BUS IN RACIAL ROW

Negro Struck on Head by Chain

Chicago, Ill.

Anniston, Ala., May 14 (UPI)—A bus carrying a bi-racial group testing bus segregation laws in the south was stoned and burned by a mob of white men today and its 22 occupants were rushed to a hospital for treament.

None of the 15 white and 7 Negro riders was believed to be seriously injured.

Witnesses reported that one Negro was struck on the head with a chain as the occupants fled from the burning bus, but the arrival of state highway patrolment prevented further violence.

On "Freedom Ride"

Most of the passengers aboard the Greyhound bus, which was en route from Atlanta to Birmingham, were members of the so-called "freedom ride" of the Congress on Racial Equality. The group is traveling thru southern states in an attempt to integrate bus station facilities.

The bus station here was closed around noon, before the bus arrived, in an attempt to avoid violence. About 100 white men were at the station when the bus arrived.

Witnesses said the mob began yelling for the riders to get out of the bus. But a state policeman in plain clothes barred the door and kept the bus passengers inside.

Follow in 50 Cars

The men then began stoning the bus and slashing the tires. The bus left the station but about three miles outside Anniston, two of the tires went flat.

The white men, following in 50 cars, stopped around the bus and yelled for the passengers to alight.

A fire then started in the bus. Police were not certain whether a fire bomb or flare was tossed into the vehicle or whether the fire started inside the bus.

Negro Hit with Chain

The occupants began pouring from the bus. They were met by the mob. Witnesses reported some blows struck and one Negro was struck by a man wielding a chain. State highway patrolmen arrived and prevented further violence.

The bus occupants were rushed to the emergency room of the Anniston hospital for treatment of burns and lacerations, apparently received when some of them had to climb thru the bus windows to escape.

Two face hearing in bus burning

The Birmingham News P-4
Mon. 5-29-61

ANNISTON, Ala., May 29—(AP)—A hearing was scheduled in U. S. District Court here today for two of four men arrested on charges of setting fire to an interstate passenger bus near here May 14.

A Greyhound bus carrying a group of "freedom" riders was stoned and burned by a mob outside Anniston en route from Atlanta to Birmingham.

The violence was among the first instances that set off a chain reaction of race clashes in Alabama.

Facing a hearing today were Frank B. Johnson, 43, a maintenance man, and Robert Dale Couch, 19, unemployed.

Jerry Ronald Eason, 22, a flower shop employe, and Daleford Leonard Roberts, 42, a cab driver, waived preliminary hearing when they were arrested last Monday.

THEIR ARRESTS were announced in Washington by U. S. Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy.

The FBI has been making extensive investigations of the bus burning and other violence involving interstate bus travel in Alabama.

Birmingham, Ala.

The Justice Department would reveal nothing concerning the arrest of the four, and said nothing else would be disclosed until their trial.

Federal authorities said they did not know whether the four men were members of the Ku Klux Klan.

The government has obtained a federal court injunction against KKK interference with interstate passenger buses.

If convicted, the men could be sentenced to as much as 20 years in prison and fined up to $10,000. They were held under $5000 bond.

Driver Spurns Integration Bus

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., May 15 (AP). A battered team of integrationists testing bus station color barriers in the South was stymied today when a Greyhound bus driver refused to drive them from Birmingham to Montgomery.

The bus was due to depart at 3 p.m., but no passengers were allowed to board it.

An unidentified driver told a reporter, "We aren't going to drive it. That's final."

D. J. Owens, manager of the Greyhound terminal here, said, "Our dispatcher is seeking to solve the difficulty."

Next Move Uncertain

A spokesman for the group of integrationists said, "It may be necessary for us to wait here until Greyhound decides its service will be restored. We don't know what our next move will be."

The members of the Congress of Racial Equality — eight Negroes and eight white persons — were attacked at Anniston, Ala., and at Birmingham on the two buses they rode into Alabama from Atlanta yesterday.

At the request of Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy today, following conversations with him by telephone, the CORE leaders decided to put all their people on one bus, "because it would be easier to protect than two buses," a spokesman said.

At Montgomery, Police Commissioner L. B. Sullivan said officers would "take whatever action is necessary to suppress agitation and prevent violence."

The Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, a Birmingham Negro integration leader, said he talked this morning by telephone with Kennedy.

Promised Protection

"Mr. Kennedy told me we would have some kind of protection," Shuttlesworth said.

He didn't say what kind of protection the attorney general promised for the 100-mile trip.

But at Washington, Kennedy aides said the attorney general has asked the State of Alabama to provide local police protection for the group.

His office said Kennedy has been in telephone contact with Alabama officials "and others" on the matter of protection.

Shuttlesworth is not a member of the team making the trip, but headed up a rally where the CORE people appeared last night, and the meeting today was held at his house.

'Freedom Riders' Buy Plane Tickets After Violence Disrupts Plans

By The Associated Press

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., May 15. —A group of integrationists testing bus station racial barriers in the South planned to leave Alabama Monday night by plane for New Orleans after outbreaks of violence in Anniston and Birmingham Sunday.

Alabama's Gov. John Patterson said earlier that the state could not guarantee their safety. He urged them to leave the state as quickly as possible.

It was shortly after Governor Patterson's announcement in Montgomery that the group picked up their luggage at a Greyhound bus loading ramp in Birmingham and returned to the white waiting room inside the bus terminal.

Tickets Purchased

A representative of the group purchased 17 tickets on a plane to New Orleans.

The battered team of integrationists was stymied at Birmingham when Greyhound bus drivers refused to drive them to Montgomery.

Governor Patterson issued a statement in Montgomery in which he agreed to have them escorted to the nearest state line. He said they would not be escorted to another city in Alabama.

Jackson Bypassed

In Washington, aides to Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy said the attorney general had asked the State of Alabama to provide local police protection for the group.

It was also understood that he advised the group to bypass Jackson, Miss., which had been a scheduled stop of the so-called "Freedom Riders."

The group ran into its first violence on the trip through the South Sunday when a bus was burned near Anniston, Ala., and a group of white men attacked other members of the group in Birmingham.

Violence Erupts As Racial Group Tours Alabama

Bus Is Stoned And Burned, Several 'Freedom Riders' And Newsmen Injured

By The Associated Press

BIRMINGHAM, May 14. — Violence trailed a mixed group of persons testing desegregation at interstate bus stations in the Deep South Sunday.

A Greyhound bus carrying 14 persons, nine of them members of the "Freedom Riders," was stoned and burned outside of Anniston in North Alabama. Ten persons were taken to a hospital where they were treated, mostly for smoke inhalation.

At the Trailways station in Birmingham, violence erupted after a group of "Freedom Riders" arrived from Atlanta and sought to enter the white waiting room.

Several white men attacked the group inside the Birmingham station, beating a Negro youth and a white man apparently accompanying them.

Two Newsmen Attacked

The white men, obviously waiting for arrival of the bus, covered phone booths and exits. They refused to permit a newsman to use a phone.

The fighting broke out in several areas around the station in downtown Birmingham.

No police were in evidence until several minutes after the outbreak.

Two newsmen were attacked by the milling crowd outside the bus station. Tom Langston of the Birmingham Post-Herald, was hurt painfully, but was not hospitalized.

Clancy Lake, a radio newsman, was attacked as he sat in his closed auto broadcasting an account of the violence.

He was on the air when his windows were smashed. He was hit in the face by a length of pipe, but was not hurt seriously.

In an alley behind the bus station, a group of photographers had leaped into their automobile, but were blocked by another crowd of white men. They seized several cameras, smashed some and made off with the others.

The group which sought to break the segregation barrier left Washington several days ago. They split into two groups in Atlanta and took separate buses—a Greyhound and a Trailways—into Alabama.

200 Mill Outside Station

At Anniston, the bus station was closed, but 200 persons milled around outside the station.

Joseph Perkins Jr., identified as field secretary of the "Freedom Riders," said several windows in the bus station at Anniston had been broken. He said some of the bus tires apparently had been cut.

The Greyhound bus had to stop six miles from Anniston because of a flat tire. Several automobiles filled with white men trailed the bus.

They sought to enter the vehicle, but were prevented from doing so by Ell M. Cowling, a state investigator who stood in the doorway while the bus driver attempted to change the tire.

The crowd milled around outside, Cowling said, before an incendiary device was thrown through a broken rear window.

The passengers did not leave the bus immediately.

But smoke finally forced them to leave. The bus was destroyed by fire. There evidently had been some fighting on the Trailways bus, but it was not determined whether it occurred after it left Atlanta.

Bomb Scare Grounds Integrationist Group

Forces 17 Off Airliner At Birmingham; Were First Stymied At Bus Station

By The Associated Press

Birmingham, May 15.—A bomb scare forced a group of integrationists and other passengers off an Eastern Air Lines plane Monday night.

Seventeen members of the Congress of Racial Equality, forced to take a plane to New Orleans instead of a bus as planned, boarded the plane, which was due to leave the airport at 6:50 p.m.

Gordon Cary, a field representative of C.O.R.E. from New York City, said passengers then were asked to leave the plane because a bomb supposedly had been planted aboard the aircraft.

Caller Gives Warning

The plane was being searched.

Jeff Dishongh, district sales manager for Eastern, said the F.B.I. called Eastern a few moments before the plane was scheduled to depart and said a telephone caller warned that a bomb was aboard.

F.B.I. agents were sent to the airport. The search was expected to take about an hour.

The integrationists' plans for leaving Birmingham followed outbreaks of violence in Anniston and Birmingham Sunday.

The battered integrationists were first stymied at Birmingham when Greyhound Bus drivers refused to drive them to Montgomery.

About 2 hours after their bus was scheduled to leave, they got into several private automobiles and were driven to the airport without incident.

The bus was due to depart at 3 p.m., but no passengers were allowed to board it.

An unidentified driver told a reporter:

"We aren't going to drive it. That's final."

D. J. Owens, manager of the Greyhound terminal here, said, "Our dispatcher is seeking to solve the difficulty."

Alabama Public Safety Director Floyd Mann said he had assigned a highway-patrol car to escort the bus from Birmingham to Montgomery.

A little later, however, Governor Patterson canceled the escort order. The Governor said feelings are so high in Alabama that it is unsafe for the integrationists to remain in the state.

He said he would provide a patrol escort to the nearest State line but "we will not escort them to any other cities in Alabama to continue their rabble-rousing."

The members of C.O.R.E.—eight Negroes and eight white persons—were attacked at Anniston and at Birmingham on the two buses they rode into Alabama from Atlanta Sunday.

At the request of United States Attorney General Kennedy, after conversations with him by telephone, the C.O.R.E. leaders had decided to put all their people on one bus, "because it would be easier to protect than two buses," a spokesman said.

The Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, a Birmingham Negro integration leader, said he talked Monday morning by telephone with Kennedy. He said:

"Mr. Kennedy told me we would have some kind of protection," Shuttlesworth said.

At Washington, Kennedy aides said the Attorney General had asked the State of Alabama to provide local police protection for the group.

F.B.I. To Investigate

His office said Kennedy has been in contact with Alabama officials and others on the matter of protection. And the Justice Department said the F.B.I. has been directed to determine if any federal laws have been violated.

The C.O.R.E. group is on a South-wide swing aboard regularly scheduled buses. It started in Washington 11 days ago and was scheduled to end in New Orleans Wednesday. They met their first mass violence in Alabama Sunday.

Aboard a Trailways Bus, white men attacked the C.O.-R.E. people at Anniston when they refused to move to the back of the bus.

Another group of white men jumped them when they arrived at Birmingham a couple of hours later.

No arrests have been made in Anniston or Birmingham.

Atlanta, Ga.

ROME, Ga. (UPI) — Alabama and Georgia detectives late Friday arrested a man at a paper mill here on a charge of "intent to murder" a Birmingham, Ala., television news director during a racial disturbance in Birmingham.

The Floyd County sheriff with detectives from Birmingham and Rome arrested Hershell W. Acker. He was later picked from a lineup here by three witnesses, including the victim of the attack.

The Alabama warrant specifically charged Acker, 30, with beating with "intent to murder" TV news director Clancey Lake, of Birmingham, in the vicinity of the Greyhound bus station May 14.

P-10

The charge resulted from racial violence at the bus station which broke out when so-called mixed Negro and white "Freedom Riders" arrived in the city from Atlanta en route to Montgomery.

Acker was arrested by Birmingham detectives A. M. Bailey and V. T. Hart, Rome detectives Bill Terhune and Oscar Williams, and Floyd County Sheriff Joe Adams.

He was being held in city jail here facing extradition to Alabama on the charges.

BAILEY SAID ACKER first denied he was in Birmingham that Sunday, but later admitted he was in the city, after being told two witnesses had taken down his license number as he drove away from the bus terminal.

"He denied taking any part in the mob violence," said Bailey. "He said he came to Birmingham to visit a girl."

Bailey quoted Acker as saying he lied to an FBI agent several days ago when he told the agent he "went fishing" on Mother's Day.

BAILEY SAID HE and Det. V. T. Hart will call on Georgia Gov. Ernest Vandiver Monday and ask that Acker be extadited to Birmingham for trial.

U.S. Sues To Integrate Airport at Montgomery

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP)—The Justice department brought a suit in U.S. District Court here Wednesday to end what it called racial segregation practices at Dannelly Field, the Montgomery municipal airport.

The action brought immediate criticism from the city attorney who accused the Justice Department of seeking publicity by commenting on the suit before the defendants have been served with first papers.

The civil suit charges that the airport's present operation violates provisions of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958.

Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy said he acted at the request of the Civil Aeronautics Board and the Federal Aviation Agency.

He said the suit raises the issue that segregation at Dannelly Field imposed "an unlawful and unconstitutional burden upon and interference with interstate and foreign commerce."

"We have taken this case to court only after being unable to work out a voluntary solution with local authorities," the attorney general said.

Montgomery City Atty. Calvin Whitesell said no city ordinance requires racial segregation at the airport. He noted that there are separate water fountains and rest rooms, and waiting rooms partitioned off, for those who want to keep to themselves. But he said signs read "colored may use" or "white may use" the different facilities, but no signs indicate compulsory racial separation.

UNLAWFUL BURDEN"

ALABAMA

Bobby's Sky Hook

THE Justice Department's suit against waiting room facilities at Dannelly was hardly unexpected. But the legal questions involved are not identical with those in bus and railroad terminal cases.

Burke Marshall, assistant attorney general for civil rights, seemed in fact to take a dim view of the government's airport case in an interview published in The New York Times June 12.

Most people assume, Marshall said then, that segregation at federally subsidized airports should be the easiest to end: "They have the impression the federal government can just snap its fingers and end it at the airports," he told Times reporter David Halberstam. "But it's not as simple as buses and railroads."

Little, if any, federal money has been spent by southern communities on airport waiting rooms, rest rooms and restaurants. Under a policy begun under the Eisenhower Administration, federal money has been used almost entirely for runways, hangers and other airport improvements of this kind.

Waiting rooms and restaurants were built with municipal funds in almost every southern city accepting the money. This, Marshall said, is his problem. The Justice Department must define the interest of the United States in the situation as it exists. If the facilities had been constructed with federal funds, the interest would have been clear, he said.

The Federal Aviation Agency is not a regulatory agency in the sense that the Interstate Commerce Commission is, nor does it have the broad powers under the Motor Carrier Act.

Charles J. Lowen, administrator of aeronautics, issued the directive which has Marshall worried. Known as "Memo 41," it said that if part of an airport project is to be segregated it must be excluded from participation in the program of federal aid to airport. If separate but equal facilities were planned, the memo continued, neither separate facility would qualify for federal aid.

Had this directive not been issued—inviting, as it did, Southern communities to avoid segregation-strings—Marshall would have had his "legal hook," as he called it June 12. (It need scarcely be added that federal school construction money would also provide the same hook for Justice Department intervention.)

As it is, the Justice Department must proceed on the weaker contention that the permissive signs and local customs practiced at Dannelly constitute an undue burden on interstate and foreign commerce. Obviously, Marshall is not overconfident that the courts will buy this argument, but it's the only hook handy and Bobby said try it.

AIRPORT MONTGOMERY
DANNALLY FIELD, MONTGOMERY MUNICIPAL AIRPORT

Justice Dept. Files Airport Suit In Ala,

MONTGOMERY, Ala.) — (UPI) — The Justice Department filed suit Wednesday in Federal Court here demanding that Negroes be allowed to use all facilities of Montgomery's municipal airport including restaurant and drinking fountains.

Gov. John Patterson immediately accused U. S. Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy of "picking on" Alabama.

Patterson has been fueding with Kennedy since the attorney general ordered 600 U. S. marshals to Montgomery May 20 to control racial violence which erupted when white and Negro "freedom riders" challenged segregation barriers at a local bus station. Patterson said sending the marshals was a "fit of youthful temper" on Kennedy's part.

The government complaint charges segregation on the terminal restaurant, waiting and rest rooms facilities and water fountains at Dannelly Field is unconstitutional and violates the Federal Aviation Act of 1958.

Kennedy said the Justice Department brought the action at the request of the Civil Aeronautics Board and the Federal Aviation Agency. He said the government has received numerous complaints about segregation at the municipally-operated airport from local citizens, travelers and foreign visitors to Tuskegee Institute located 35 miles east of here.

The government argued a Dec. 5, 1960 Supreme Court decision prohibiting bus terminal segregation is applicable to air terminals. It has also cited the Federal Aviation Act forbidding discrimination in air transportation.

Feds Press Integration Of Dannelly

The Justice Department is asking the local U.S. District Court to put an end to segregation at Dannelly Field, the city's airport.

The suit, filed Wednesday, attacks the maintenance of separate restrooms for whites and Negroes. It also charges that Negroes are refused service in the Sky Ranch Restaurant.

The city and the thee city commissioners, Earl James, Frank Parks, and L. B. Sullivan, are named as defendants, along with Ranch Enterprises, Inc., the operators of the restaurant.

VOLUNTARY SOLUTION

In Washington, Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy said the suit was brought when the Justice Department was "unable to work out a voluntry solution with local authorities."

Kennedy also said the government has received more complaints about segregation at the Montgomery airport than at any other airport in the country.

Besides local residents, complainants include interstate travelers who include a number of foreign visitors to Tuskegee Institute, he said.

The suit says it was filed at the request of the Civil Aeronautics Board and the Federal Aviation Agency.

RACE, COLOR

The defendants are charged with "refusing table service and dining facilities to Negro interstate and foreign travelers solely on account of their race and color."

The suit continues to say that Negroes are refused service in the restaurant even though they are entitled to it by food checks for vouchers issued in case of flight delay.

Along with the separate rest rooms, the government maintains the restaurant segregation constitutes an "unreasonable preference" for whites, and "undue and unreasonable prejudice" against Negroes.

NO DATE SET

The defendants will continue to maintain segregated facilities unless ordered to desist by order of the court, the suit holds.

Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. was reported out of town at the time the suit was filed and no hearing date has been set.

Calvin Whitesell, a city attorney, said Wednesday that there is no compulsory segregaion at the airport, but there are separate facilities for those "who want to keep to themselves."

Signs say "White May Use," and "Colored May Use," he said.

Four Negroes petitioned the Civil Aeronautic Board in February 1960 to order integrated facilities at Dannelly Field. Three Montgomery ministers and a Baltimore, Md., man, all Negroes, complained that service was refused Negroes in the airport restaurant.

The CAB in May 1960 declined to take any action in the case, ruling that the board lacked jurisdiction over the city and its officials, or over the terminal facilities in question.

Following an appeal by the four Negroes, the complaint was officially dismissed last September, with the suggestion by the board that the Negroes seek "a much more direct, and apprently efficacious, remedy through resort to judicial action."

Beaten Champions Of Civil Rights Denied Bus Seats

Sixteen embattled "freedom riders" waited in a Greyhound station in Birmingham, Ala., last night for a bus to take them to Montgomery.

Greyhound bus drivers refused to drive the group of seven whites and nine Negroes who were ambushed and assaulted Sunday by white hoodlums in a bus near Anniston, Ala., and in the station at Birmingham. Efforts were being made to put the group aboard a plane for the trip to Montgomery.

Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy called on Alabama State officials to provide police protection for the group which has been touring the deep South to test compliance with Supreme Court decisions outlawing segregation in interstate transportation.

Left Capital May 4

The group sponsored by the Congress of Racial Equality left Washington May 4 and planned to be in New Orleans May 17.

Kennedy said he had been assured that the State of Alabama would provide police protection to prevent further outbreaks of violence. In Birmingham, Alabama Safety Director Floyd Mann said he had assigned a highway patrol car to accompany the bus.

The Associated Press reported that the escort order was canceled later by Gov. John Paterson. He was quoted as saying that feelings were so high in the State that it would be unsafe for the 16 men and women ot remain in Alabama.

The Governor said he would provide a patrol to the nearest State line but "we will not escort them to any other cities in Alabama to continue their rabble-rousing."

Can't Guarantee Safety

Patterson declared that he could not guarantee their safety because of crowds at Wetumpka and Montgomery, the capital of the State.

The group was scheduled to go from Montgomery through the heart of Mississippi to Jackson and then to New Orleans. Kennedy suggested that the route be changed to take a coastal route through Mississippi avoiding the Mississippi capital at aJckson.

The Justice Department said that the Federal Bureau of Investigation is looking into the two instances of violence that erupted Sunday to determine if there was a violation of Federal law.

A Greyhound bus with seven "freedom riders" and two reporters aboard was stoned and burned outside Anniston, Ala. Passengers suffered from smoke inhalation and one of the "freedom riders" said he was struck by a club while tryin gto escape.

Second Group eBaten

A second group was met by a gang of toughs in the Trailways bus terminal in Birmingham. An eyewitness account of the brutal beating of both whites and Negroes was furnished by Howard K. Smith, CBS chief Washington correspondent, on a special assignment in Birmingham.

Smith was alerted to watch Birmingham's bus terminals by a man who said he was close to the Ku Klux Klan. The CBS correspondent said he alternately watched the two bus stations which are a few blocks apart. A large number of heavyset men in sports shirts were loitering about both terminals. They were identified to him as Klansmen without robes.

Late in the afternoon, the men starting drifting over to one of the terminals. Smith followed.

Receive Word

They had received owrd, I learned, that the passengers left over from a bus which similar hoodlums set on fire outside Birmingham earlier . . . were about to arrive there," Smith related.

"As the bus arrived and the doors opened, about 30 of the toughs grabbed the passengers and dragged them into alleys and corridors beating them with key rings and sticks and bare fists. About 12 of the attackers knocked down one passenger at my feet and kicked and beat him until his face was a bloody red pulp."

"At that moment, a man behind me whispered in my ear, 'They have identified you from having seen you on television, they say they're hunting for you. You'd better get out.'

I left the terminal and stood on the street corner opposite. All of this happened near police headquarters at City Hall, near the office of the extreme segregationist Police Commissioner Eugene Connor. But no police showed up until exactly 10 minutes later, by which time the attackers had gone to waiting cars and had disappeared as if on signal from someone in the know.

"Birmingham is today," Smith declared, "as it has been described, a city of stark terror and lawlessness."

The Associated Press reported that two newsmen were attacked in the assault.

Tommy Langston, a Birmingham Post-Herald photographer was cornered by a group of white men, beaten painfully and his camera smashed. He was treated at a hospital and released.

Clancy Lake, a radio newsman, was attacked as he sat in a closed automobile a block away broadcasting an account of the violence. TheA ssociated Press said he was on the air when the white men smashed the car windows. Listeners reported his last words on the air were "Help, Help."

They seized his equipment and dragged him out of the car, he said later. One swung at him with a pipe but missed and he broke loose. He escaped with minor cuts.

Police Were Alerted

The wire service reported that the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, Negro leader of the desegregation movement in Birmingham, said that Police Commissioner Connor and Police Chief Jamie Moore had been alerted of possible trouble by telegram. Moore confirmed that the telegrams had been received.

The Associated Press quoted Connor as declaring that he had been saying for 20 years that "these out-of-town meddlers were going to cause bloodshed if they kept meddling in the South's business."

Racial Tension In Alabama Stalls Buses

Drivers Won't Go As Crowd Swells; Kennedy Phones

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., May 20 (AP).—A band of young Negroes and white persons today renewed efforts to crack racial barriers on buses in Alabama but drivers continued to refuse to carry them.

"I have only one life to give and I don't intend to give it for CORE (Congress of Racial Equality) or the NAACP," Joe Cavanaugh, a Greyhound bus driver, told the group as they tried to board his bus for Montgomery.

The bus did not leave as the integrationists stood around the loading platform, following their pattern of waiting.

Mr. Cavanaugh said he had heard of "a big caravan" waiting down the road to stop any attempt at integrated bus riding in Alabama.

Large crowds which gathered at the Greyhound terminal here late last night had dwindled to small groups of onlookers early today.

The prospects of the youths riding integrated out of here aboard a regularly-scheduled bus appeared dim as this city entered its seventh straight day of mounting racial tension.

Three Tries Yesterday

They tried to board three buses and ride integrated yesterday, but none of the buses left the station.

Then they settled down in the white waiting room until daylight. They made no effort to board buses leaving late last night and early today.

The youths entered the station, carrying tickets to Montgomery, Ala., at 2:45 p.m., yesterday. They said they intended to stay "until we get a bus to Montgomery."

Drivers refused to take out buses. Buses for Montgomery weren't cancelled—they just didn't leave the station—when the group tried to board them.

The threat of violence remained, as it has since a white mob jumped the so-called "freedom riders" of the Congress of Racial Equality last Sunday, and beat some of them. The integrated CORE group was testing bus station segregation in the South.

A crowd, building up to several thousand at one time, gathered in the area around the station last night but it thinned out as the night wore on.

Kennedy Calls Governor

President Kennedy reportedly tried—and failed—to reach Alabama Gov. John Patterson, then settle for talking with Lt. Gov. Albert Bountwell about the explosive stalemate at the bus station.

What was said wasn't revealed.

The Birmingham Post-Herald reported that a Justice Department spokesman said Gov. Patterson had told a presidential aide that he has the "will and force and equipment" to give full protection to all travelers in Alabama.

The governor couldn't be reached for comment.

The statement was contrary to what he said earlier this week—that he couldn't guarantee the "freedom riders" safe conduct on their segregation-testing tour in Alabama.

At Montgomery, State Court Judge Walter S. Jones issued an injunction prohibiting "freedom riders" or their supporters from "entry into and travel within the State of Alabama, and engaging in the so-called 'freedom ride' and other acts of conduct calculated to provoke breaches of the peace."

Jail Terms Possible

The injunction, requested by Alabama Attorney General MacDonald Gallion, could mean five days in jail and a fine for the riders.

One of the integration leaders, the Rev. F. L. Shuttleworth, Birmingham Negro minister, was arrested on charges growing out of the Sunday and Wednesday incidents. He was charged with conspiring to cause a mob to gather. He was freed on $2,000 bond.

The crowd last night, kept away from the bus station about a block in all directions by policemen working with dogs, grew to about 3,000 shortly before midnight, police estimated.

Then their numbers began to thin out.

Inside the station, in the early hours, the 19 Negroes and three white persons, most of them college students from Nashville, Tenn., tried to slep in the white waiting room—leaning back in seats, or resting their head in their hands, or putting their head on a companion's shoulder.

Students From Nashville

The group is composed of Tenn., tried to sleep in the white students from several colleges at Nashville, Tenn.—Fisk, Seminary, Tennessee A&I and Peabody Teachers College—along with two who said they were not students.

Policemen carrying billy sticks walked around the large waiting room, asking people without tickets to get out.

At least a half a dozen times during the night they forcibly removed white men after minor disturbances — arguments, sharp remarks, and one door-shoving incident.

One white man objected to a Negro sitting down near him.

"I can't do anything about it," the policeman replied.

But Local Situation Unchanged

By ARTHUR OSGOODE

Montgomery bus terminals were officially desegregated Wednesday, by order of both U.S. District Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. and the Interstate Commerce commission.

But no effects were apparent at either the Greyhound or Trailways terminals, where segregation continued on an apparently voluntary basis.

Numerous checks throughout the day found small numbers of whites, usually a dozen or less, occupying the white waiting rooms.

In the smaller colored waiting rooms, a handful of Negroes awaited their buses.

UNDECIDED AIRMAN

Once a Negro airman paused at the door of the white waiting room at the Trailways station, seemingly undecided on whether to enter, then turned away.

Signs were posted in both stations. In the Trailways station it was placed above the rear exit, so high that the words "Public Notice" were all that could be easily read.

The smaller letters in the body of the notice could not be made out. The notice said, in effect, that the ICC was outlawing bus terminal segregation.

In the Greyhound station, the notice was placed at eye level at the door opening from the white waiting room to the loading area. A few people paused to glance at it briefly.

There were no reported incidents at either station throughout the day.

Johnson's order forbidding bus station segregation was aimed at three bus companies, the city commissioners and police chief of Montgomery, the Alabama Public Service Commission, and the state attorney general.

Gov. John Patterson declared Wednesday that Alabama would defend itself against any moves to tear down the color line in this state.

Thurs. 11-2-61 p. 1 Montgomery, Ala.

Patterson's strongly worded statement was issued shortly after a federal judge enjoined three bus companies and several local and state officials from maintaining segregated facilities at terminals serving interstate passengers.

Declaring the suit was an "insult to every citizen of Alabama," Patterson said the federal government is "trying to put the bus companies out of business."

"Some day they will learn that they cannot force people to associate with others, against their will," Patterson said. "A person has the right to choose his own associates and will; the action of the federal government notwithstanding."

Turning his attention to a possibile renewal of "Freedom Riders" in Alabama, Patterson said he hoped such groups "will not come into our state and cause any more riots."

"They can all better serve their country by staying at home and minding their own business," he added. "If they continue to invade our state and continue to try to run over us, we want to serve notice that we are going to defend ourselves and we are not going to take it lying down."

The Greyhound Corp., Capital Motor Lines, and Continental Crescent Lines were forbidden to maintain separate facilities for whites and Negroes.

The city commissioners, police chief, and PSC members were enjoined from enforcing segregation, or arresting, threatening, or intimidating Negroes who challenged the custom of segregated bus terminal facilities. Conversely, the same order would protect whites who chose to use facilities previously set aside for Negroes.

Thurs. 11-2-61

Alabama Atty. Gen. MacDonald Gallion was also enjoined from acting to enforce segregation, "directly or indirectly."

One defendant, Sheriff Mac Sim Butler, was not enjoined.

ARRESTS ORDERED

In an opinion accompanying his order, Johnson observed that Butler had arrested a group of "Freedom Riders" because he was ordered to do so by the commander of the National Guard contingent enforcing limited martial law in Montgomery last May.

"There is nothing in the record to indicate that Sheriff Butler will make arrests to enforce segregation in the future," said Johnson.

He noted that "none of the defendants specifically denies the existence of such policy and practice (of segregation)." He specifically noted that the three bus companies admitted to maintaining separate facilities for white and colored, and posting signs indicating such separation, though they denied enforcing segregation.

He termed their denial that they are enforcing segregation as "not a sufficient answer," pointing to court and ICC rulings to the effect that the maintenance of segregated facilities in itself amounts to "unjust discrimination."

GIVES EXCEPTIONS

But he made it clear that his order did not apply to "every independently operated roadside restaurant at which a bus stops solely to pick up or discharge occasional passengers . . ."

The test, said Johnson, is whether the bus company provides waiting rooms, rest rooms, a restaurant, or other services as a part of its terminal facilities.

The Public Service Commission, Johnson observed, has never rescinded a 1958 order requiring signs designating separate facilities for whites and Negroes at bus and rail terminals.

"The conclusion is inescapable," he said, "that the policy of racial segregation in bus terminals in Alabama is the official policy of the state . . ."

Atty. Gen. Gallion, Johnson asserted, has enforced segregation "contrary to the federal law, a law he was duty bound to uphold."

He brushed aside Gallion's contention that he had sought a state court injunction against "Freedom Riders" solely to maintain public "peace, safety, and tranquility."

He further observed that Gallion "has never considered it his duty to advise local prosecutors or local law enforcement officers" that interstate passengers could not be enforced to segregate.

Johnson had noted previously in his opinion, in connection with the injunction against "Freedom Riders" issued by Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones, that Gallion "went to the bus station and 'served' a copy of the state court injunction on one of the plaintiffs who had already been beaten by the members of the mob."

Johnson said that City Commissioners Earl James, L. B. Sullivan, and Frank Parks have used city firemen and policemen to maintain bus station segregation. When a local bus station was closed on a day of an expected challenge to segregation customs here, he said, it was for "trivial" reasons and "not justified."

MIDDLE DISTRICT

Johnson therefore enjoined the city officials from using "fire safety regulations, breach of the peace, disorderly conduct or other statutes for the purpose of enforcing segregation . . ."

His order applies to counties in the Middle District of Alabama, over which his court has jurisdiction. These are Montgomery, Autauga, Lowndes, Macon, Barbour, Bullock, Butler, Chilton, Crenshaw, Elmore, Russell, Tallapoosa, Randolph, Lee, Covington, Coosa, Pike, Coffee, Dale, Geneva, Henry, Houston, and Chambers.

It grew out of the May 20 bus station riot here, which was followed by an injunction against Ku Klux Klan groups from Johnson, who also ruled that Montgomery police and city officials must provide protection to interstate passengers.

The suit was brought May 25 by the Rev. Ralph Abernathy of Montgomery and a number of Negro students, most of them from Fisk University in Nashville.

Gallion, commenting on Johnson's opinion Wednesday, said:

"Judge Johnson has made a finding in his court order that I am a segregationist. This is a fact that I do not deny." He said he plans no appeal of the order.

PROSPECTIVE CANDIDATE

Gallion is a prospective candidate for governor of Alabama.

Intervening in the case was another "Freedom Rider" group, headed by the chaplain of Yale University, William S. Coffin, who is also the son-in-law of pianist Artur Rubinstein. Coffin was arrested here May 26 as he sought to get service at the Trailways lunch counter.

With him were three white college faculty members: the Rev. Gaylord Noice, assistant professor at the Yale Divinity School; Dr. David Swift, religion professor at Wesleyan College; and Dr. John D. Maguire, assistant religion professor at Wesleyan and a native of Montgomery.

Also in the group were several Negroes, including Abernathy and the Rev. Fred Shuttlesworth of Birmingham.

Appeal Is Denied To Shuttlesworth

(Courier Press Service)

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Appeals by Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth and 13 other Birmingham Negroes from their convictions arising from a bus desegregation effort in October, 1958, were turned down last week by the Alabama Court of Appeals.

The convictions carried fines and/or jail sentences, imposed in Birmingham City Court.

A Federal District Court later ruled in the same situation that city police had no lawful right to arrest the Negroes for seating themselves in the front of the bus and refusing to move when asked to do so.

There were indications that Rev. Shuttlesworth and his associates would try to get the present case into a Federal Court.

The minister was fined $100 and given 90 days. Rev. J. S. Phifer drew a $100 fine and 60 days. The other 12 were given 180 days in jail.

Rail Station Segregation Temporary?

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (AP) — A federal court of appeals has ordered a halt to segregation practices at the Terminal train station in Birmingham, Ala., in a ruling that could affect the pattern of Negro travel in many parts of the South.

The order by the U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals was announced in Montgomery. It overturned a 1959 action by the U.S. District Court in Birmingham, which dismissed the suit, and returned the case to that court.

Mayor James. W. Morgan of Birmingham, one of the defendants in the suit filed by Mr. and Mrs. Carl T. Baldwin, Birmingham Negroes, indicated the ruling might be appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court.

The three judge appellate panel ordered the lower court to "obliterate the supposed distinction between interstate and intrastate passengers as well as the use of race or color as the basis of occupancy of either one or both of the waiting rooms in the terminal."

The ruling said records indicated that the police of Birmingham consider that the right to remain in the white waiting room requires one of two things: "That the person be white, or if colored, he be an interstate traveler."

"The obverse is just as obvious," the ruling said. "If not white, or colored with an interstate status, the person must move. Negroes are entitled to be free of that discrimination at the hands of state, city and police officials."

Court Orders End Of All Race Bias at Birmingham Station

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Feb. 18 (UPI). — All methods of racial segregation in Birmingham's terminal station have been ordered "obliterated" by a three-judge panel of the 5th U.S. District Court of Appeals, it was learned Saturday.

The court reversed a District judge's ruling Friday which had upheld the Birmingham terminal's practice of allowing Negroes in interstate travel to occupy a white waiting room but segregating Negroes' traveling within the State.

JUDGE GETS COPY

The new ruling, made in New Orleans, was disclosed by the office of Judge Richard T. Rives, a member of the Appellate court, who lives in Montgomery. His office received a copy of the decision by mail from New Orleans.

The Appellate judges took note of an Alabama Public Service Commission ruling of 1956 which required the posting of visible signs segregating Negroes in intrastate travel.

ACTION ORDERED

They held the terminal is "a public utility and an arm of the State in the execution of State policy."

The ruling directed the District court to take appropriate action "that will obliterate the supposed distinction between interstate and intrastate passengers, as well as the use of race or color as the basis of occupancy of either one or both of the waiting rooms in the terminal."

The appeal arose out of a suit by two Negroes, Carl T. Baldwin and Alexina Baldwin, who were ordered out of the white waiting room after Birmingham police examined their train tickets and found they were not traveling across State lines.

The suit was brought against Birmingham Mayor James W. Morgan and others.

Terminal Station Is Desegregated By Court Order

Birmingham Terminal Co. was ordered to desegregate its waiting rooms yesterday by U. S. Dist. Judge Seybourn H. Lynne, who stated that the action was the result of "the mandate of the U. S. Court of Appeals, Fifth Circuit."

Desegregation of the terminal came after four years and three months of court litigation, during which Judge Lynne twice dismissed the suit and twice had his ruling reversed by the Court of Appeals.

Yesterday's ruling enjoined members of all three defendant organizations, Birmingham City Commission, Alabama Public Service Commission, and Birmingham Terminal Co. from requiring terminal waiting rooms to be marked for exclusive use of one race, or "from compelling, either directly or indirectly, segregation on the basis of race."

The defendants have 90 days from the date of the Court of Appeals order (March 22), to appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court. There has been no indication that an appeal would be made.

Court costs in the four-year-old lawsuit were taxed against the defendants.

State Atty. Gen. MacDonald Gallion had requested earlier that the Alabama Public Service Commission not be enjoined along with the other defendants because a PSC directive last week had made PSC general orders on separate waiting room facilities inapplicable to the Birmingham Terminal.

Judge Lynne noted the change in rules, but said in his ruling that "to deny . . . relief on the basis of this order would, in the opinion of the court, require an amendment of the mandate of the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit."

Judge Lynne first dismissed the siut in 1957, saying the issues were hypothetical. In 1959 he rejected it again, saying none of the defendants "is denying or threatening to deny Negroes equal privileges."

On the third appeal, a three-judge panel of the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals directed U. S. District Court here to remedy practices "which we find to be in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment and the civil rights act."

Birmingham Told To Lift Race Barrier

BIRMINGHAM (AP) — U. S. District Judge Seyborn H. Lynne Monday followed the mandate of a higher court and ruled that segregated seating in Birmingham Terminal Co.'s train station waiting room is unconstitutional.

The action formalized a directive issue by U. S. 5th Circuit Court of appeals two months ago.

And, in effect, it did nothing more than give legal backing to integrated seating, which Birmingham Terminal Co. says has been its practice for several years.

THROWN OUT TWICE

The drawn-out case was thrown out of court twice by Linne, and reached an apparent conclusion only after three appeals.

The action grew out of a suit filed by Mr. and Mrs. Carl Baldwin, Birmingham Negroes.

The Baldwins filed suit in 1956 after they were ordered out of the white waiting room by policemen although they held interstate tickets for a train to Milwaukee. Charges of disorderly conduct against the couple later were dismissed.

Defendants in the original suit were the City of Birmingham, the Birmingham Terminal Co., and the Alabama Public Service Commission.

Birmingham City Atty. J. M. Breckenridge declined to say immediately whether the city would appeal the ruling.

The defendants have until mid-May to file an appeal.

Judge Lynne first dissmissed the suit in 1957 saying the issues were hypothetical. In 1959 he rejected it again, saying none of the defendants "is denying or threatening to deny Negroes equal privileges."

On the third appeal, a three-judge panel of the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals directed U. S. District Court here to remedy practices "which we find to be in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment and the Civil Rights Act."

Judge Considers Suit To Forbid Bus Segregation In Capital

MONTGOMERY, Sept. 6 (AP)—A Federal judge today took under consideration a "freedom rider" suit seeking to forbid enforced segregation in buses and bus stations and attacking Alabama's breach of the peace laws.

A day and a half of testimony was completed after Asst. Fire Chief R. C. Talley told the court fire hazards led the closing of bus station lunch counters during racial tension here last May.

Talley testified that the cafes in the Greyhound and Trailways depots were closed May 15 and reopened several days later.

Earlier today, Adj. Gen. Henry V. Graham said 11 "freedom riders" were arrested as they sat together at a Montgomery bus station May 25 because he had "become exasperated with the situation." He said he "was tired of those people flaunting their sense of Christian ethics in my face."

Why Arrested

U. S. Dist. Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. asked Graham why the group was arrested when, the day before, two other groups of freedom riders were given a military escort to the Mississippi line.

Graham said he felt that the group of 11 was merely "trying to stir up turmoil." He said he had understood that those escorted to Mississippi would be the last freedom riders to come to Montgomery until the situation was cleared. He considered the integration effort the very next day to amount to a "breach of contract," the major general said.

The 11 tried to get service at a Trailways Bus Station counter customarily patronized by white persons only. Graham said the attempt under the circumstances was "immoral and was definitely calculated to provoke a breach of the peace."

Another witness was Capt. Roland Sevigny of Montgomery, Graham's liaison officer with the sheriff's office during the period of martial rule last May.

'Explosive'

Sevigny said the bus station situation May 25 was "definitely explosive . . . the only reason we arrested the freedom riders that day was to prevent bloodshed."

Johnson in the first day of the hearing Tuesday dismissed the complaint against Circuit Solicitor William Thetford, thus permitting him to continue prosecution of the 11 on breach of the peace charges.

But the judge declined to dismiss the case against the other defendants—the Greyhound Corp., Trailways Motor Lines, Alabama Atty. Gen. MacDonald Gallion, Montgomery County Sheriff Mac Sim Butler, the Montgomery City Commission, Police Chief G. J. Ruppenthal and the Alabama Public Service Commission.

Birmingham Enjoined In Bus Dispute

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — A federal judge has enjoined Birmingham Transit Co. from requiring segregated seating on its intracity buses.

The ruling of U.S. Dist. Judge H. Hobart Grooms also prohibits the bus company from displaying signs that would direct white persons to seat from the front and Negroes to seat from the rear.

Grooms ruled that such practices are a violation of the 14th Amendment of the U.S. Constitution.

A spokesman for the bus company said signs started coming down several months ago and no longer were being used when Grooms' injunction was issued Nov. 8.

The injunction complies with a ruling of U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which overturned Grooms' earlier refusal to grant an injunction on the plea of a group of Birmingham Negroes.

Injunction bars bus signs here

U. S. District Judge H. H. Grooms has granted an injunction prohibiting birmingham Transit Co. from displaying signs separating white and Negro passenges on buses here.

His order followed a Fifth U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruling overturning a previous order by Judge Grooms in which he excluded the transit company from the suit.

The order said there would be need for further evidence to be taken since the transit company has removed the signs.

Judge Grooms' order said, in part, the transit company and employes are "restrained and enjoined from further or continued display or maintenance of the signs . . . and from promulgating and enforcing any rule or regulation on the basis of race or color requiring white passengers to seat themselves from the front and colored from the rear."

The bus company had displayed signs requiring white passengers to seat from the front and Negroes from the rear.

Judge Grooms held that display of such signs is forbidden by the 14th amendment to the U. S. Constitution.

The injunction proceeding was brought about two years ago by a group of Birmingham Negroes.

Mixing will close bus stations—

The Birmingham News

BY CHARLIE GRAINGER
News staff writer

ALEXANDER CITY, Ala., Nov. 3—Forced integration of interstate buses will serve only to close the doors of Alabama's small city bus stations, Gov. John Patterson declared here Thursday night.

The chief executive, returning to his native Tallapoosa County to kickoff a week-long series of "Appreciation Days" told The News: "The people in outlying communities will not tolerate integrated facilities.

GRAINGER

"What they will do is cancel the bus companies' contracts. The reason we have bus stations is for the convenience of the passengers.

"But this will inconvenience the passenger—meaning severely restricted restroom and eating facilities in the South."

FOR THE SECOND day after U. S. Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. enjoined three bus companies and several state and local officials from maintaining segregated facilities in terminals serving interstate passengers, the governor strongly warned against more freedom rider movements into the state.

"As far as we are concerned we will enforce the laws of the State of Alabama," he said. "If one (freedom rider) comes in and breaks our laws we'll put him in jail.

"I imagine if one of them comes in looking for a fight he might find that, too."

THE CHIEF executive spoke briefly Thursday afternoon downtown, then again Thursday night at a square dance.

"It feels just like campaign time again," he said.

Music was provided by Rebe Gosdin and his Sunny Valley Boys, the guitar-twanging troupe that accompanied him in his bid for the governorship in 1958.

Patterson and the First Lady joined right in, too, in doe-see-doeing.

HE SAID HE was among "home folks," for he lived near here as a youth and most of the early years of his life.

In a tour of the city, led by Mayor Billy Radney and civic leaders Charlie Davis and J. C. Henderson, he stopped by a white frame house at 313 Semmes St.

"I used to live here when I was a kid," he told the resident, Mrs. Wilmer Dean.

Then he saw a sparking $150,000 recreational center bought through $1-a-month donations by townspeople, and stopped at Benjamin Russell High School, another local point of pride.

ACCOMPANYING the governor were Public Safety Director Floyd Mann, a former Alex Citian; State Rep. Billy Vickers of Tallapoosa, assistant Alcoholic Beverage Control administrator, and their wives; Robert Bradley, the governor's legal adviser; Bob Harper, director of publicity and information; Press Secretary Harry Cook, photographer Tommy Giles, and others.

Of the new court order, the governor said, "I don't construe the federal court order as prohibiting us from maintaining peace and order. And if it does do that certainly it's not legal."

He pointed out that "they are having trouble with these freedom riders in Maryland and other states. The Department of Justice is encouraging these agitators to violate the law."

SEGREGATION HIT

State Replies Vary To ICC Bus Ruling

By VAN SAVELL

There were varied reactions in south Alabama Wednesday to an Interstate Commerce Commission order outlawing segregation in bus terminals. One bus stop service was closed and others refused to comply to the ICC ruling.

Bus terminals throughout the county were ordered to remove all signs declaring segregated facilities by midnight Tuesday night. In addition, they were told to display ICC notices of the action.

A survey of 17 Greyhound and Trailways bus stations revealed only eight displaying the signs ordered by the ICC. Seven others including five private enterprises —continued "operation as usual" and refused to comply to ICC orders. Two are closed.

Only one of the checkpoints refused to answer queries posed by The Advertiser. A man identifying himself as manager of the Opelika Greyhound bus terminal said simply:

"Go jump in the lake. I ain't telling nothing."

ALL QUIET HERE

In Montgomery, all was quiet at both the Greyhound and Trailways bus terminals.

Severe action was taken at Prattville where bus stop service was suspended at midnight Tuesday. The Trailways service had been operated through a local service station.

Greyhound service at Prattmont was suspended several months ago, again because of the integration situation.

RUNNING SMOOTH

Reports from Andalusia, Alexander City, two stations in Dothan, Greyhound in Mobile and Tuskegee were almost identical.

"Everything's running smooth," station managers said. "We've had no complaints. All (ICC) signs are posted and have been for three or four days."

Enterprise, Troy and Union Springs Greyhound stations and the Trailways bus depot in Troy all had reports similar to the operator of the combined Auburn bus station, which operates from a service station.

"I'm operating like I always do," the station owner reported. "No changes here. It's my place of business."

Trailways in Mobile, said normal operations carried on Wednesday. There were no disturbances. But when asked whether ICC signs were posted, the station manager balked, and said the regional office in Jackson, Miss., could answer that question.

A later check by a Mobile newsman revealed no ICC signs could be found, but that all signs designating white and colored waiting rooms had been removed as the law requested.

So far no attempts at testing the ICC desegregation ruling have been reported in Alabama and no arrests.

GOVERNOR JOHN PATTERSON

Gov. Patterson Is Critical Of ICC Order

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) —Alabama Gov. John Patterson said Monday that the Interstate Commerce Commission order to desegregate bus stations may force buses to let passengers "out on the highways under the trees" in his state.

He told a news conference the order was "politically-inspired and not based on logic or reason." He said it would lead to serious consequences.

The governor said rural stores which serve as bus stops would not comply with such an order.

Patterson renewed his criticism of Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy, and said that resentment in his state against Kennedy's efforts to force integration in Alabama have the people so "sore" at his brother, the President, that he couldn't possibly carry Alabama if he runs in 1964.

He had said earlier the President "couldn't get enough votes to wad a shotgun."

GOVERNOR PATTERSON SIGNS BILL AUTHORIZING CHANGES IN ALABAMA'S VOTER REGISTRATION SYSTEM.

CREATES EXAMINERS BOARD

Patterson Signs Bill OKing Voter Registration Changes

the Montgomery Advertiser

P 7B

By KARL PORTERA

A bill authorizing sweeping changes in Alabama's voter registration system was signed into law Monday by Gov. John Patterson.

This bill creates a state board of examiners for voter registration to compose and change at frequent intervals the voter application and examination forms.

Operation of the act is contingent upon approval of a constitutional amendment next May by the people of Alabama.

"This bill is far reaching and is perhaps the most important piece of legislation passed in Alabama in many, many years," said Sen. E. K. Andrews of Bullock.

Montgomery Ala

Andrews sponsored the constitutional amendment and enabling act during the special session of the Legislature recently and is one of the last important measures to be endorsed by the governor.

Under this act, applications and examinations for prospective voters would be prepared by the state board, composed of three members of the Alabama Legislative Council.

Andrews says the new method of voter registration would serve a two-fold purpose:

—As a "foil" against federal charges of voter discrimination at the local level.

—To provide for more intelligent electorate in Alabama.

"Everybody will be treated equal under these bills," Andrews said, "and there couldn't be any possible charge of discrimintion because the tests will be graded at the state level by a number rather than a name."

The senator said that there would be no way for any board member to know whose test he is grading.

Federal suits stemming from possible discrimination in voter registrations are presently pending against Bullock, Macon and Dallas counties' registration boards.

Surveys to determine if discrimination is being practiced in registrations in Elmore, Autauga, Lowndes and Wilcox counties are now being made.

NEW METHOD

"The new method will make the state, as well as the county, a party to federal suit on the basis of discrimination and at the same time will stop registration of illiterate Negroes, the only race the federal government says is discriminated against in Alabama," Andrews said.

"Of course, in being completely impartial in voter registration, some whites will be eliminated," he claimed, "but the ultimate conclusion rests in the relative intelligence of the two races."

The Union Springs attorney, who has been very active in cases involving registration suits, says this program will also serve as a shield in protecting local board members from personal financial losses involved in these suits.

GRADE TEST

County board would still determine from the application and examination whether or not the applicant is entitled to vote. But the state board would grade the citizenship examination and determine what constitutes a passing mark.

The name, sex or race of the applicant will not appear on the papers when forwarded to the state board, only a number will designate the individual tests.

The examination must be uniform in all cases, with no discrimination between applicants as to race, creed or color.

The state board will construct new examinations from time to time so that no person may pass by memorizing the answers to a specific set of questions.

TAKE TEST

"An applicant will be allowed to take the tests only once every 12 months," the senator said, "to emphasize the importance of the examination and to limit the number of voter applicants who in all probability would not pass anyway."

He said any state has the right to determine how voters would be registered, but at the same time pointed out that Alabama is the first state to try this system. He also claimed that if the federal government were to attack this system, then they would be attacking, in effect, the systems of all 50 states as well.

PATTERSON SAYS ICC EDICT MAY FORCE STATE BUSES TO 'UNLOAD UNDER TREES'

The Montgomery Advertiser

f 7B ✓

NASHVILLE, Tenn., (AP) — Alabama Gov. John Patterson said today that the Interstate Commerce Commission order to desegregate bus stations may force buses to let passengers "out on the highways under the trees" in his state.

He told a news conference the order was "politically-inspired and not based on logic or reason." He said it would lead to "serious consequences."

Jun - 9-26-61

The governor said rural stores which serve as bus stops would not comply with such an order.

Patterson renewed his criticisms of Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy, and said that resentment in his state against Kennedy's efforts to force integration in Alabama have the people so "sore" that his brother, the President, couldn't possibly carry Alabama if he runs in 1964.

He had said earlier the President "couldn't get enough votes to wad a shotgun."

Atty. Gen. Kennedy's suits against Alabama officials, Patterson said, "have hurt the Democratic party."

"He has done more to hurt race relations in the last six months than anything that has happened in my lifetime."

"He planned the routes of the freedom riders and arranged their transportation," the governor charged.

As for President Kennedy's address to the United Nations, Patterson called it "splendid."

But, on domestic matters, he said the President "is getting some bad advice" from his brother and others.

12 Injured In Outbreak At Anniston

ANNISTON (AP) — Twelve persons were injured in a racial outbreak here Sunday. Two members of the Congress of Racial Equality were hospitalized; the others were treated and released.

Hospitalized were Genevieve Hughes, 28, a white woman of Chevy Chase, Md., and Edward Blackenheim, 28, a white man of Tucson, Ariz.

They were reported in good condition at an Anniston hospital where they were being treated after inhaling smoke.

Alabama Court To Try Negro Girl's Bus Suit

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP)—A $9-million damage suit against Southeastern Greyhound Lines by the daughter of a Birmingham Negro has been moved to U.S. District Court in Birmingham.

The suit originally was filed in Atlanta by Patricia Shuttlesworth, daughter of the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, who is active in integration efforts.

Southeastern Greyhound requested the transfer on grounds that all the principals in the case are in Alabama and the incident as outlined in the suit occurred in Alabama.

The girl contends in the suit that she was arrested at Gadsden, Ala., after refusing to move to the rear of a bus in which she was riding from Tennessee to Birmingham in August. No date for the trial was set.

BIRMINGHAM GIRL

Negro Demands $9 Million Damages From Greyhound

ATLANTA (AP) — A young Negro girl Tuesday filed a $9 million dollar damage suit against Southeastern Greyhound Lines Inc., claiming she was arrested after refusing to sit in the back of a bus.

Negro leaders announced the federal suit was the first step in a drive to eliminate segregation in Greyhound's rest stops and terminals throughout the South.

The suit was filed in the name of Patricia Ann Shuttlesworth, 17-year-old daughter of the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, Birmingham Negro integration leader.

The girl and two other Shuttlesworth children were involved in the arrest incident at Gadsden, Ala., last April 16 while returning to Birmingham from Chattanooga, Tenn.

The suit alleges the driver of the bus requested police at Gadsden to have the Negro girl move to the back of the bus and that when she refused, she was arrested.

The Southern Christian Leadership Conference said the suit was "the first step in a proposed program to eliminate racial segregation in the many terminals and rest stops throughout the South."

Shuttlesworth is secretary of the conference, an anti-segregation organization headquartered in Atlanta and headed by Rev. Martin Luther King Jr.

The statement said the second step would be to call for a nationwide boycott against all Greyhound buses. "The objectives of the boycott would be to give equal opportunity of employment to competent drivers who are members of minority groups such as Negroes, Mexican-Americans, Chinese - Americans, etc.," it added.

The Christian Leadership Conference said another aim of the boycott would be "to arouse the conscience of the Greyhound bus company so that they will direct those employes who agree with the principles of the White Citizens Councils, the Ku Klux Klan and other racial hate organizations, to keep them from enforcing their personal views as to where Negroes should sit and eat when using the Greyhound facilities."

Shuttlesworth was quoted in the statement as saying "this may be one of the most important steps taken in public transportation where racial segregation is involved.

"Poor people mostly use the buses. On a train or plane today, Negroes are not forced to accept Jim Crowism."

TALLAHASSEE AIRPORT ORDERED TO INTEGRATE

'Car Pool' Ruled Not A Violation

TALLAHASSEE — (UPI) — Leon Circuit Judge Hugh Taylor ruled Thursday that a car pool operated during a racial boycott of city buses here four years ago did not violate city ordinances.

Judge Taylor threw out the convictions of 21 Negro leaders who set up the car pool when Tallahassee Negroes boycotted Cities Transit Inc., in the summer of 1956 to protest segregated seating.

The group, including the Rev. C. K. Steele, president of the local branch of NAACP were each fined $500 by City Judge John Rudd on convicting of operating a public transportation system without a city license.

Reversing Rudd, Taylor upheld validity of the city ordinance requiring a license for engaging in the business of operating vehicles for hire, but said it did not apply to the Negro inter - civic council car pool.

The car pool, which ran as 65 private vehicles, operated at times on fixed schedules but no one was paid to drive or charged to ride, although the council provided the gasolone and riders were asked to contribute to the council to help maintain it.

Only one who benefited financially, Taylor said, was a woman who was paid a salary to serve as dispatcher.

It was not operated as a means of livelihood or with the idea of making a profit, Taylor said.

Bus boycotters of Fla. get $11,000 in fines refunded

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Fines totalling $11,000 assessed against members of the Inter - Civic Council which conducted a bus boycott here in 1596 were ordered refunded Thursday by Circuit Judge Hugh Taylor.

The fines had been levied by City Judge John Rudd who found the boycotters guilty of transporting passengers for hire without a city license in connection with a car pool they were operating.

Since passengers were not charged for the service, Judge Taylor held that the car pool did not violate any city ordinance and therefore was legal.

Airport Is Ordered To Integrate

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Oct. 17 (UPI) — Federal District Judge G. Harrold Carswell today ordered an end to racially-segregated facilities at the Tallahassee Municipal Airport.

Judge Carswell gave the city three days to tear down "white" and "colored" signs over waiting rooms and rest rooms.

The ruling was a victory for three Negro ministers who went to court after they were refused service at the airport restaurant operated by American News Co. under lease from the city.

The judge refused an injunction against the news company on the basis of its "unequivocal averments" that it will serve customers on a non-racial basis at the fancy glassed-in restaurant overlooking the landing field.

Company officials testified that it was its policy to serve all persons regardless of race or color.

The company maintained that the person who turned away the Revs. David H. Brooks and A. Joseph Reddick, Tallahassee, and Theodore Gibson, Miami, last April was a brother-in-law of the manager and had no authority or orders to do so.

The restaurant served several Negroes earlier this month without incident.

Judge Carswell put the full blame for segregation at the airport on the city.

He said signs designating use of facilities on a basis of race were erected and maintained by the city and the American News Co. had no voice in the decision.

Such signs are a violation of law, Carswell said.

CORE To Test Bus Bias In 'Freedom Ride' May 2 To 17

The Louisiana Weekly

New Orleans 2-17-61

NEW YORK CITY -- Freedom Ride, 1961, a dramatic move by the Congress of Equality (CORE) to complete the integration of bus service and related public accommodations in the Deep South, was announced by CORE National Director James Farmer.

"The ride will begin in Washington, D. C. on May 2nd and end in New Orleans on May 17. Participants will challenge every form of segregation met by the bus passenger: in the buses themselves, in restaurants and in rest rooms."

Farmer added, "Whites will sit and eat in 'Colored Sections' and Negroes will sit and eat in the 'White Sections. They will refuse to accept segregation in any form: if need be they will accept threats, violence and jail sentences."

SPECIALLY TRAINED

All participants will be selected from a group of volunteers who have been active in nonviolent demonstrations in their own communities. They will then be specially trained for the difficulties they will meet on the journey.

Replacements may be available to take the places of any participants arrested so that some will be able to complete the trip. Women will travel on one bus and men on another.

FARMER WILL LEAD

Mr. Farmer, a pioneer in the use of nonviolence to eliminate the color line, will lead the interracial group. The itinerary will include cities in Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana.

Arrangements are being made for mass meetings and rallies in the cities and colleges along the route. "At these stops we hope to inspire local nonviolent action to remove the sin of segregation from our society" continued Farmer.

In 1947, CORE and the Fellowship of Reconciliation sponsored a similar "Journey of Reconciliation" through the upper South to test enforcement of the Irene Morgan decision barring discrimination in interstate travel. Several members served 30-day chain gang sentences as a result of that trip.

Racial Discrimination Charged on Northern Buses

The Miami Herald

By ROBERT S. BOYD
Of Our Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The Justice Department is getting complaints of racial discrimination on buses in the North as well as the South. P-12A

At least one of the alleged incidents happened a month after the "freedom riders" launched their attack on Southern bus segregation practices.

According to the complaint, passengers were segregated on an all-reserved-seat express coach from New York to Washington June 13.

Negroes are assigned seats in the rear, whites up front, it was charged. The bus company says it must have been a coincidence.

Another complaint sent to the Justice Department accused a bus driver of ordering a Negro passenger to take a rear seat on a bus leaving Philadelphia May 3.

A third complaint involved a similar order to a Negro riding from Perryville, Md., to Philadelphia, in May.

Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy listed these three incidents — and 36 others in Southern or border states— in a request to the Interstate Commerce Commission for rules specifically barring segregation in interstate buses and terminals.

Kennedy also said an FBI survey last month showed that 97 out of 294 Southern bus terminals still carry signs steering white and Negro passengers to separate waiting rooms, rest rooms and restaurants.

In addition to this "blatant and open discrimination," Kennedy said he assumed segregation goes on in other terminals which is not "broadcast to the world through printed signs."

The Justice Department is taking eight bus discrimination cases to court, the attorney general said.

One bus driver and his company have already been fined $100 a piece.

Nevertheless, Kennedy said, the law which he is acting is so broad and vague that it is hard to enforce.

Clear, detailed rules from the ICC, which has authority over all interstate bus service, are needed, he said.

The attorney general suggested a set of rules which would:

Forbid segregated seating on interstate buses.

Forbid discrimination in waiting rooms, rest rooms, ticket counters, eating and drinking places.

Forbid any kind of "white" and "colored" signs in terminals.

Require signs in buses and terminals stating that facilities are available on a non-discriminatory basis.

Require a bus company to report to the ICC within 15 days if anyone interferes with these rules and say what the company is doing about the interference.

The ICC will hold a public hearing on Kennedy's proposed rules in Washington Aug. 15.

Chairman Everett Hutchinson has said, however, that there is some doubt that the ICC has the legal power to issue them.

Meanwhile, pleas and arguments from friends and foes of the Kennedy plan are piling up in ICC files.

Secretary of State Dean Rusk and Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara, for example, submitted letters vowing their full support.

Rusk said racial incidents in the United States create "embarrassment and difficulty in foreign relations."

McNamara said they hurt the morale of Negro servicemen.

Other typical comments from supporters of the rules are:

A. Philip Randolph, president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, says "the time has come for the ICC to declare unequivocally that Negro passengers are free to travel the length and breadth of this country in the same manner as any other passengers."

Benjamin Mays, president of Morehouse College, Atlanta, says the rules "would make a contribution to better human relations."

Sen. Jacob Javits (R., N.Y.) says "the basic law of the United States, is being flouted."

Then there's the other side.

Alabama's Atty. Gen. McDonald Gallion, for example, calls Kennedy's plan an effort "to further encroach on the . . . rights of citizens of this state."

"Without question, the vast majority of the citizens of both the white and colored race prefer to enjoy mutually voluntary separation in the use of facilities," he said.

Gallion said the requirement that bus companies report and try to stop "interference" with the rules would "make an informer, a law enforcement official and judicial officer" out of every bus company and employe.

This is an "unwarranted, unwanted, undesirable . . . wholly impossible task," Gallion said.

The Greyhound bus company also opposes the rules.

Executive Vice President Clifford D. Cherry said they would "only add additional burdens and further cause for vexation."

"Ample remedies exist already," Cherry said. If the administration wants more "remedies," it should ask Congress, not the ICC, he said.

Terminal Restaurants, Inc., of Tuscaloosa, Ala., says its chain of 13 small town restaurants will be put out of business if they are forced to integrate.

An Ocala, Fla. man says he won't use the buses if he has to share facilities with Negroes.

A Jacksonville woman opposes the rules "in the name of decency, morality, and sanitation."

An Alabama woman asks the ICC to "please bear in mind that the Negro is not the only race of people in the United States."

Under the rules, the department suggested that the sign to be displayed on buses say that "seating aboard this vehicle is without regard to race, color, creed or national origin."

It had originally proposed that the sign declare that "all seats aboard this vehicle are by law available at all times to any passenger without regard to race, color, creed or national origin."

The department said the origin language might mislead a passenger to believe that he has an absolute right to any seat at any time regardless of his personal comportment or the convenience of other passengers.

"This is not the purpose of the regulation," the department said. "Its purpose is merely to prevent racial considerations."

The department suggested a rewording of the definition of "terminal facilities" to make it apply to those "available to interstate passengers of motor carriers as a regular part of their transportation."

NEW BUS MIXING PLANS REVISED

The Times

Justice Dept. Changes Proposed Regulations

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Justice Department Friday revised the proposed regulations it is asking the Interstate Commerce Commission to adopt to bar segregation in interstate bus transportation. Dat. 8-12-61

Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy petitioned the ICC last May 29 to issue the regulations. Oral argument on the petition is to begin Aug. 15.

Major revisions were in the language of a sign it is proposed that interstate buses be required to display and in a proposed definition of terminal facilities.

ICC Orders End to Bus Segregation

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Interstate Commerce Commission Friday barred racial discrimination on interstate buses or in their terminal facilities.

Acting on a petition filed May 29 by Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy, the commission published rules which:

Issues Rules.

1. Forbid interstate bus operators from segregating seating on the basis of race, color, creed or national origin.

2. Prohibit interstate buses from segregating seating on the basis of race, color, creed or national origin.

3. Prohibit interstate buses from using terminals where waiting rooms, rest rooms, lunch counters and other facilities are segregated on such a basis.

In its report adopting the rules, the commission said: "We find that in a substantial part of the United States many Negro interstate passengers are subjected to racial segregation in several forms.

"On vehicles, they continue to be subjected to segregated seating based upon race.

"In many motor passenger terminals, Negro interstate passengers are compelled to use eating, rest room and other terminal facilities which are segregated."

Kennedy Proposal.

Kennedy's proposal was submitted to the ICC 15 days after a fire bomb was thrown into a busload of "Freedom Riders" on May 14 near Anniston, Ala.

The "Freedom Rides" were protests by Negroes and some white sympathizers against racial discrimination in travel facilities. Scores of the riders have been arrested in the South.

Under the ICC rules, beginning Nov. 1, interstate buses and terminal facilities must display signs declaring that their use will be without regard to race, color, creed, or national origin "by order of the Interstate Commerce Commission."

An ICC spokesman indicated the rules would not be applied strictly to "every independently operated corner drugstore which sells a few tickets for a motor carrier."

Part of Facility.

But he added that if an agent offers or provides travel and terminal facilities for interstate passengers, such as a public waiting room or eating facilities, "it would appear that the premises where these services and facilities are made available should be considered as part of the carrier's terminal facility."

The commission also will require interstate bus operators to report to the ICC within 15 days any interference by any person or groups—including a political subdivision such as a state or county—with the carrier's observance of the regulations. The report must also include a statement of what action the carrier may have taken to eliminate the interference.

"Obviously, we cannot anticipate the precise effect of application of the regulations to each and every factual situation that may arise," the commission said, "but the regulations should make clear . . . the rights of passengers under the Interstate Commerce Act."

ICC Forbids Segregated Bus Seating

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Interstate Commerce Commission Friday barred racial discrimination on interstate buses or in their terminal facilities.

Acting on a petition filed May 29 by Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy, the commission published rules which:

1. Forbid interstate bus operators from segregating seating on the basis of race, color, creed or national origin.

2. Prohibit interstate buses from using terminals where waiting rooms, rest rooms, lunch counters and other facilities are segregated on such a basis.

In its report adopting the rules, the commission said: "We find that in a substantial part of the United States many Negro interstate passengers are subjected to racial segregation in several forms."

Segregation In Buses Barred

ICC Issues New Rulings

WASHINGTON — (UPI) — The Interstate Commerce Commission Friday issued rules barring racial segregation in interstate bus transportation.

Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy had asked the ICC to promulgate rules to bar racial segregation in buses and bus terminal facilities following last spring's tests of racial barriers by freedom riders.

The rules laid down Friday prohibit motor carriers from segregating buses or utilizing segregated terminal facilities.

The regulations were opposed by the Southern states and by the motor carriers themselves in a hearing before the ICC Aug. 15.

The commission said in its report that "many Negro interstate passengers are subjected to racial segregation in several forms in a substantial part of the United States."

It said Negroes "continue to be subjected to segregated seating based on race" and in many bus stations they are "compelled to use eating, rest room and other terminal facilities which are segregated."

Beginning Nov. 1 buses in interstate travel will be required to display a sign stating: "Seating aboard this vehicle is without regard to race, color, creed or national origin by order of the Interstate Commerce Commission."

Beginning Jan. 1, 1963, interstate bus tickets must carry a similar statement, the ICC said. This later date was because tickets are printed in advance.

Under the new ICC rules, terminal facilities may not be utilized by interstate buses unless there is a posted sign stating: "Public notice — regulations applicable to vehicles and terminal facilities of interstate motor common carriers of passengers by order of the Interstate Commerce Commission."

ICC ORDERS END TO RACIAL BARS

Bans Any Segregation in Buses, Depot Facilities

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Interstate Commerce Commission Friday barred racial discrimination on interstate buses or in their terminal facilities.

Acting on a petition filed May 29 by Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy, the commission published rules which:

1. Forbid interstate bus operators from segregating seating on the basis of race, color, creed or national origin.

2. Prohibit interstate buses from using terminals where waiting rooms, rest rooms, lunch counters and other facilities are segregated on such a basis.

In its report adopting the rules, the commission said: "We find that in a substantial part of the United States many Negro interstate passengers are subjected to racial segregation in several forms.

NO EATING SEGREGATION

"On vehicles, they continue to be subjected to segregated seating based upon race.

"In many motor passenger terminals, Negro interstate passengers are compelled to use eating, rest room and other terminal facilities which are segregated."

Kennedy's proposal was submitted to the ICC 15 days after a fire bomb was thrown into a busload of "Freedom Riders" on May 14 near Anniston, Ala.

The "Freedom Rides" were protests by Negroes and some white sympathizers against racial discrimination in travel facilities. Scores of the riders have been arrested in the South.

Under the ICC rules, beginning Nov. 1, interstate buses and terminal facilities must display signs declaring that their use will be without regard to race, color, creed, or national origin "by order of the Interstate Commerce Commission."

An ICC spokesman indicated the rules would not be applied strictly to "every independently operated corner drugstore which sells a few tickets for a motor carrier."

WAITING ROOM FOR ALL

But he added that if an agent offers or provides travel and terminal facilities for interstate passengers, such as a public waiting room or eating facilities, "it would appear that the premises where these services and facilities are made available should be considered as part of the carrier's terminal facility."

The commission also will require interstate bus operators to report to the ICC within 15 days any interference by any person or groups—including a political subdivision such as a state or county—with the carrier's observance of the regulations. The report must also include a statement of what action the carrier may have taken to eliminate the interference.

"Obviously, we cannot anticipate the precise effect of application of the regulations to each and every factual situation that may arise," the commission said, "but the regulations should make clear . . . the rights of passengers under the Interstate Commerce Act."

Comment Declined on Order by ICC

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Mississippi officials generally declined comment Friday on an Interstate Commerce commission order forbidding interstate buses to segregate passengers by race or operate out of terminals where racial segregation is practiced.

The order, issued in Washington on a petition filed May 29 by Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy, also requires terminals to erect signs attesting to he nonsegregation of buses and facilities and adding "by order of the Interstate Commerce commission."

After a similar ICC desegregation order several years ago, the Jackson railroad and bus terminals removed the signs designating segregated waiting rooms.

A few days later, the city erected its own segregation signs on the sidewalks fronting the waiting rooms and in the terminals to resignate segregated lunchrooms.

Gov. Ross Barnett was out of the city and unavailable for comment. Both Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson and Jackson Chief of comment.

Carriers Forbidden to Use Segregated Stations — Small Depots Exempted

Text of I. C. C. regulations appears on Page 10.

By JOSEPH A. LOFTUS
Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 22—The Interstate Commerce Commission prescribed rules today forbidding racial discrimination in interstate bus transportation. The rules cover terminal facilities as well as buses.

The commission thus granted a petition filed on May 29 by Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy.

"The time has come for this commission," Mr. Kennedy then asserted, "to declare unequivocally by regulation that a Negro passenger is free to travel the length and breadth of this country in the same manner as any other passenger."

The Attorney General's petition followed incidents involving Freedom Riders in several Southern states last spring.

Display of Signs Required

Beginning Nov. 1, buses holding common carrier certificates issued by the I. C. C. must display signs saying.

"Seating aboard this vehicle is without regard to race, color, creed, or national origin, by order of the Interstate Commerce Commission."

The signs will be required until Jan. 1, 1963, unless the time is further extended by the commission.

On and after Jan. 1, 1963, a similar notice must be printed on all tickets sold for transportation in interstate or foreign commerce. The effective date of this regulation was put off until 1963 because tickets for the intervening period probably have been printed.

Beginning Nov. 1, interstate carriers will be forbidden to use terminal facilities that segregate travelers by race.

"We find," the commission said, "that in a substantial part of the United States many Negro interstate passengers are subjected to racial segregation in several forms. On vehicles, they continue to be subjected to segregated seating based upon race.

"In many motor passenger terminals, Negro interstate passengers are compelled to use eating, restroom and other terminal facilities which are segregated."

In considering terminals and facilities, the commission said that the rule "would not be applicable, for example, to every independently operated roadside restaurant at which a bus stops soley to pick up or discharge occasional passengers, or to every independently operated corner drug store which sells tickets for a motor carrier."

"Where a carrier's ticket agent does nothing more for the benefit of the carrier's passengers than sell tickets and post schedules," the commission said, "we would not consider his place of business to be a terminal facility."

The rules would apply, however, where the agent "offers or provides facilities for the comfort and convenience of passengers, such as a public waiting room, rest room, or eating facilities."

Interstate passengers using common facilities may not be subjected to any inquiry as to whether they are traveling in intrastate or interstate commerce, the commission said.

The rules will require interstate bus operators to report to the commission any interference with the observance of the regulations.

GENERAL

Interstate rules include terminals

New regulations are result of Freedom Rides in south

WASHINGTON

The Freedom Rides have paid off.

Bus companies doing business in the south have received orders from the Interstate Commerce Commission not to use facilities in any terminal that has segregated waiting rooms, rest rooms, eating facilities, drinking fountains or ticket counters.

Any attempt to interfere with a passenger's right to unsegregated use of such facilities is to be reported immediately to the Interstate Commerce Committee which will turn the matter over to the Justice Department.

The ICC ruling is the direct result of a request for such a ruling by Attorney General Robert Kennedy. His request, in turn, was a direct result of the violence, harassment and jailing of Freedom Riders as they tested segregation in, principally, Alabama and Mississippi.

* * *

ACTUALLY, SEGREGATION of buses and facilities has been illegal for some time. However, most Deep South states set up an elaborate system of desegregated facilites for interstate passengers and segregated facilities for intra-state passengers.

Despite these signs, however, many southern communities still practiced wholesale segregation in buses and facilities. The Freedom Rides were designed to point out this violation of the regulations.

For the 300-plus Riders who were charged by Jackson, Miss. officials with breach of peace and similar offenses, the officials were careful to make no charges that would lead to challenges of the state's method of continuing segregation.

NEW SIGNS FOR THE SOUTH will appear Nov. 1 when the ICC order becomes effective. Replacing the old "for white" and "for colored" signs on buses will be the following legend:

"Seating aboard this vehicle is without regard to race, color, creed, or national origin by order of the Interstate Commerce Commission."

The signs will remain posted until Jan. 1, 1963 when the statement will be printed on tickets. (Tickets for use up until that time had already been printed before the order was issued.)

IN HANDING DOWN the decision, the ICC said:

"We find that in a substantial part of the United States, many colored interstate passengers are subjected to racial segregation in several forms.

"On vehicles, they continue to be subjected to segregated seating based upon race.

"In many motor passenger terminals, colored interstate passengers are compelled to use eating, restroom and other terminal facilities which are segregated."

AS IS USUAL in such orders, the south had some area of comfort. The new order does not apply "to every independently operated roadside restaurant at which a bus stops solely to pick up or discharge occasional passengers or to every independently operated corner drug store which sells tickets for a motor carrier.

"Where a carrier's ticket agent does nothing more for the benefit of the carrier's passengers then sell tickets and post schedules, we would not consider his place to be a terminal facility."

The rule does apply, however, where the agent "offers or provides facilities for the comfort and convenience of passengers, such as a public waiting room, rest room or eating facilities."

This covers the larger percentage of ticket agents since even roadside restaurants where the buses stop depend primarily on bus passengers for patronage.

* * *

THE NEW REGULATION also forbids the harassing of colored passengers. They cannot be subjected to any inquiry as to whether they are traveling in intrastate or interstate commerce.

Any infractions of the ruling are to be reported by the interstate bus operators to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

To escape desegregation, the south has only one alternative: stop interstate bus travel.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

Leaders Hail ICC Ruling On Bus, Depot Segregation

The National director of the Congress on Racial Equality hailed the federal Interstate Commerce Commission ruling against segregation on buses, but he warned it must be enforced.

James Farmer, New York, director of the organization which has sponsored most of the "freedom rides" in the south, spoke before the Chicago Committee on Racial Equality.

He quoted a wartime statement of Sir Winston Churchill following the bombing of Berlin: "The biter is bit."

Farmer said, "the U.S. attorney general is to be congratulated for requesting and getting this ruling from the ICC. The ICC is to be commended for issuing it. The federal government now must insure its prompt and firm enforcement.

To make sure the ruling will be enforced, Farmer and officials of the Chicago committee announced they will sponsor another series of freedom rides in November to "test" bus facilities in southern states.

FACES LOSS

"Mississippi has gone all out to persecute and prosecute over 300 freedom riders who have tried to use terminal facilities without segregating themselves. The ICC's ruling means if the state of Mississippi insists on maintaining the evil practice of segregation, then that state must do without interstate bus service," Farmer said.

"This ruling is the freedom riders' vindication," he said.

The Interstate Commerce Commission held that segregation is illegal in interstate buses and the terminals they use.

The ICC handed down rules Saturday that go into effect Nov. 1.

Beginning on that date, buses in interstate travel must display a sign saying "seating aboard this vehicle is without regard to race, color, creed or national origin by order of the Interstate Commerce Commission."

On Jan. 1, 1963, the same statement will be printed on interstate bus tickets. The later date was issued because tickets are printed in advance.

The ICC said interstate buses cannot use terminals unless there is a sign in the terminal saying "public notice — regulations applicable to vehicles and terminal facilities of interstate motor common carriers of passengers by order of the Interstate Commerce Commission."

TOTAL EFFECT

The ICC does not regulate bus travel within states, but the new rules will have the effect of making it illegal to segregate intrastate passengers in a terminal used by interstate buses.

But the ICC indicated that the rules would not apply to every independently operated, small-town drug store that sells a few tickets for a bus line.

However, it said agents which provide terminal facilities for the convenience of interstate passengers would be considered a part of the bus line's terminal facilities.

The commission said that "many Negro interstate passengers are subjected to racial segregation in several forms in a substantial part of the United States."

In many bus stations, it said, they are "compelled to use eating, rest room and other terminal facilities which are segregated."

Bus drivers will be required to report any intreference with the regulations, the ICC said.

"Obviously, we cannot anticipate the precise effect of application of the regulations to each and every factual situation that may arise" it said. "But the regulations should make it clear to respondents and others the rights of passengers under thei Interstate Commerce Act."

In New York, Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, called the rules a "gratifying amplification of the ICC ruling handed down in 1955 in response to a petition by the NAACP . . . it means there will be no East and West Berlins in our country."

I.C.C. Ban On Segregation In Bus Travel Defied In 3 States

Some Terminals Remove Signs

By The United Press

A new federal ruling banning segregation in interstate bus travel went into effect yesterday and met with opposition in Mississippi, Louisiana, and Georgia.

Four Negroes were arrested in Atlanta when they sought service at a bus-terminal restaurant and three others were taken into custody in Jackson, Miss., when they attempted to use white waiting rooms.

Police at Albany, Ga., advised a young Negro to get out of town immediately after he tried to enter a white waiting room at an Trailways bus terminal where segregation signs were still in evidence.

Authorities said the youth, who identified himself as Blanton Hall of Athens, Ga., took the advice and left in a taxicab driven by another Negro.

Terminal Manager Held

In Louisiana, police at Shreveport arrested the manager of a Trailways bus terminal for taking down segregation signs in compliance with the federal order.

Shortly after the manager, H. B. Walmsley, was taken into custody the Congress of Racial Equality announced it would put the new federal desegregation order to a major test by attempting to integrate terminals throughout the state.

Sheriff J. Howell Flournoy declared he would enforce Louisiana segregation laws, not the new I.C.C. regulations.

"We don't care about the I.C.C.; It is not a lawmaking body," Flournoy said.

U. S. Attorney General Kennedy requested the new rulings last spring when integrationists were making "freedom rides" across the South.

Terminals throughout Mississippi appeared to be generally complying with the order to remove segregation signs, but local officials left no doubt that they intended to enforce State and City segregation laws.

Two north-central Mississippi cities—Winona and Grenada—announced Tuesday that they planned to integrate their Trailways bus stations. Such a clamor was raised that the boards of aldermen in the two towns met yesterday morning and later announced that segregation would be maintained after all.

Some in South Defy ICC Order On Depot Signs

By James E. Clayton

A bus station manager in Shreveport, La., was arrested yesterday for doing what the Interstate Commerce Commission ordered him to do.

The manager, H. B. Walmsley, took down signs segregating his terminal and put up one saying the terminal was desegregated. He was promptly arrested for violating a Louisiana law requiring segregation of the races.

That was the sharpest indication that some Southern states do not intend to recognize or abide by the ICC's new rules, which went into effect yesterday. The rules require interstate bus lines to use only termnials which are desegregated.

Walmsley said he was acting on orders from the Trailways Bus Co., which told him to follow the ICC directives. United Press International quoted Shreveport Mayor Clyde Fant as saying, "We are going to enforce the (local) law here. We don't care anything about the ICC. It is not a law-making body."

Two other Southern states, Mississippi and Georgia, have already begun court tests of the ICC rules. And, in a counter move, the Justice Department has asked a Federal court in Mississippi to declare the local segregation laws unconstitutional.

In some Mississippi towns, bus terminals were desegregated without incident yesterday. But in Jackson, three Negroes, including the dean of religion at Campbell College, were arrested when they refusd to lave a "whit" waiting room.

Four Negroes who tested the rules in Atlanta, Ga., were refused service in a restaurant at the Trailways terminal. The operator of the restaurant said it was private and two of the Negroes were arrested when they refused to lav.

In Alabama, however, Attorney General MacDonald Gallion was quoted by UPI as saying he plans no challenge of the ICC rules. And in Montgomery, Federal Judge Frank M. Johnson entered an order restraining local officials from enforcing segregation laws in bus and train terminals. He said such laws are unconstitutional. His order grew out of last spring's Freedom Rides and not the ICC action.

The ICC entered its desegregation orders two months ago at the request of Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy. Kennedy had no comment on yesterday's activities, but the Justice Department is expected to do battle with every state and every police official who attempts to keep bus terminals segregated.

The ICC orders are based on its power to regulate interstate commerce and on the Federal Constitution. Under decisions of the Supreme Court going back many years, state laws which require segregation violate the 14th Amendment. That Amendment requires that States give all citizens "equal protection of the laws."

CORE to Test ICC's Bus Ruling

Sept-10-2-61

CHICAGO — Early tests will be made to make sure that the Interstate Commerce Commission's ruling on full use of interstate bus transportation facilities are being enforced, the Congress of Racial Equality has announced.

• Making the announcement of another series of "freedom rides" in Southern States has been CORE'S James Farmer of the organization's New York office. They will begin in November.

Pittsburgh Sa.

The ruling, issued last week by ICC at the request of Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy, outlaws racial segregation in buses and bus terminal facilities in interstate travel.

Motor carrier representatives and Southern states officials strongly opposed the ruling at a hearing on Aug. 15.

ICC WAS PARTICULAR to point out, however, that the ruling does not apply to every small drugstore and lunch counter that sells a few tickets. Only actual terminals and stations known as such, will be affected.

Speaking before an audience here last week, Farmer said that Attorney General Kennedy should be strongly commended for requesting the ruling from ICC, and that the commission also should be commended. CORE sponsored most of the Freedom Rides in the South where some 300 riders were jailed.

Aim of the Freedom Rides has been to win unrestricted use of waiting rooms and eating facilities in the bus terminals themselves. Said Farmer, "The Federal Government now must insure its (the ruling) prompt and firm enforcement in Southern states.

"Mississippi is one of the Southern states which has gone all out to persecute and prosecute more than 300 Freedom Riders," Farmer pointed out.

His interpretation of the ICC ruling implies that "if the state of Mississippi insists on maintaining practice of segregation, then that state must do without interstate bus service."

ICC Racial Order Extended Into Effect Across Nation

An Interstate Commerce Commission order outlawing separate travel facilities for Negroes and whites goes into nationwide effect Wednesday.

The rules prohibit interstate buses from using terminals which have racially segregated restaurants, waiting rooms or other facilities. Each bus and terminal must display signs proclaiming that bus seats and station facilities are available to travelers without regard to race, creed, color or national origin.

PROMISES MADE

In Washington, ICC chairman Everett Hutchinson has promised prompt and efficient enforcement of the new rules. He said the ICC Bureau of Motor Carriers' field office in the areas involved will investigate reports that rules are not being carried out.

Bus operators will be required to report to the ICC any interference with their efforts to observe these rules.

If investigation indicates a need for court action, the case will be referred to the U.S. district attorney in the area, who may then seek court orders prohibiting continued violation.

Criminal prosecution, which would result in a $100-$500 fine for the first offense and a $200-$500 fine for each later offense, also may be recommended.

If any area wishes to block the ICC order they will run into a U.S. Supreme Court ruling the ICC has authority to prohibit racial discrimination in carriers and terminals, plus a battery of federal laws put into effect since the 1954 school desegregation ruling.

The ICC rules were requested by Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy and were issued by the commission Sept. 22.

Bus Rules Take Effect Wednesday

United Press International

Interstate Commerce Commission Chairman Everett Hutchinson reminded the public yesterday that new ICC rules barring race discrimination in interstate bus travel go into effect Wednesday.

Hutchinson said in a statement that "we expect to achieve prompt and efficient handling of complains of racial discrimination."

The ICC issued rules on Sept. 22 forbidding segregation in interstate bus travel. They applied to bus terminal restaurants and other facilities as well as the buses themselves.

Hutchinson said the bus companies will be responsible for reporting any violation of the rules to the Commission. As of Nov. 1, both buses and bus stations serving interstate traffic must display signs banning segregation.

Reports of violations received by the ICC will be handled in the same manner as other motor carrier infractions, Hutchinson said. Each complaint will be investigated by its Bureau of Motor Carriers' field office in the area involved.

After that, two avenues are open to the Commission. It may either seek a court injunction or it may present its case to the appropriate Federal District Attorney with a recommendation for criminal prosecution.

New Bus Rules Go In Effect Tomorrow

Interstate Regulations Ban All Segregation

From The Commercial Appeal Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, Oct. 30. — The Interstate Commerce Commission reminded interstate bus companies Monday that new rules against discrimination go into effect Wednesday.

The new rules prohibit interstate motor common carriers of passengers from utilizing segregated terminal facilities or operating buses on which seating is based on race, color, creed or national origin. Buses and terminals must display specific signs banning segregation.

ICC Chairman Everett Hutchinson said bus operators will be required to report to the commission any interference with observance of the rules. Such reports, as well as notification of possible violations received from commission investigators or any other source, will be administered in the same manner as other motor carrier infractions. Each notice or complaint will be investigated by the ICC's field office in the area.

If court action is warranted, Mr. Hutchinson said an injunctive type of proceeding may be instituted or the case may be presented to a United States attorney with a recommendation for criminal prosecution.

"Through this arrangement, we expect to achieve prompt and efficient handling of complaints," he said.

The ICC issued its new rules Sept. 22 after Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy, brother of President Kennedy, had strongly urged the action.

ICC Orders Interstate Bus, Terminal Mixing

Agency Acts On Petition From Bobby

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Interstate Commerce Commission Friday barred racial discrimination on interstate buses or in their terminal facilities.

Acting on a petition filed May 4 by Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy, the commission published rules which:

1. Forbid interstate bus operators from segregating seating on the basis of race, color, creed or national origin.

2. Prohibit interstate buses from using terminals where waiting rooms, rest rooms, lunch counters and other facilities are segregated on such a basis.

SEVERAL FORMS

In its report adopting the rules, the commission said: "We find that in a substantial part of the United States many Negro interstate passengers are subjected to racial segregation in several forms.

"On vehicles, they continue to be subjected to segregated seating based upon race.

"In many motor passenger terminals, Negro interstate passengers are compelled to use eating, rest room and other terminal facilities which are segregated."

Kennedy's proposal was submitted to the ICC 15 days after a fire bomb was thrown into a busload of "Freedom Riders" on May 14 near Anniston, Ala.

DISPLAY SIGNS

The "Freedom Rides" were protests by Negroes and some white sympathizers against racial discrimination in travel facilities. Scores of the riders have been arrested in the South.

Under the ICC rules, beginning Nov. 1, interstate buses and terminal facilities must display signs declaring that their use will be without regard to race, color, creed, or national origin "by order of the Interstate Commerce Commission."

An ICC spokesman indicated the rules would not be applied strictly to "every independently operated corner drugstore which sells a few tickets for a motor carrier."

REPORT INTERFERENCE

But he added that if an agent offers or provides travel and terminal facilities for interstate passengers, such as a public waiting room or eating facilities, "it would appear that the premises where these services and facilities are made available should be considered as part of the carrier's terminal facility."

The commission also will require interstate bus operators to report to the ICC within 15 days any interference by any person or groups—including a political subdivision such as a state or county with the carrier's observance of the regulations. The report must also include a statement of what action the carrier may have taken to eliminate the interference.

"Obviously, we cannot anticipate the precise effect of application of the regulations to each and every factual situation that may arise," the commission said, "but the regulations should make clear . . . the rights of passengers under the Interstate Commerce Act."

In New York, Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, commented happily: "This is a gratifying amplification of the ICC ruling handed down in 1955 in response to a petition filed by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

"It means that American citizens may now travel freely among their states without being penalized and persecuted because of their color. It means there will be no East and West Berlins in our country."

Friday's unanimous ruling by the 11-man commission dealt only with buses under an act which gives the ICC much wider power over motor carriers than it has over railroads, regulated under the original Interstate Commerce Act.

The Justice Department asked the ICC to take administrative action in regard to buses because it felt the commission had clear powers in that field. In addition, the "Freedom Rider" troubles revolved almost entirely around buses and bus terminals.

Under court and ICC rulings, segregated seating on trains and buses has been forbidden in specific cases. But Friday's ruling clarified and extended the ICC position on buses. It is understood, unofficially, that the government is carrying on quiet negotiations with railroads seeking voluntary desegregation in their terminal facilities as well as in seating on trains which is largely desegregated now.

In the field of plane travel, which does not come under the ICC, the Justice Department now has court suits pending at New Orleans, La., and Montgomery, Ala., to bring about desegregation of airport facilities at those cities. It had prepared similar action at Columbus, Ga., but dropped it when voluntary desegregation was worked out.

A spokesman for the Congress of Racial Equality in New York said, "We are pleased with the ruling and shall, of course, work in local communities throughout the country to implement the decision."

There was little immediate comment from officials in Southern states.

Mix Order Follows Trend, Gallion Says

Atty. Gen. MacDonald Gallion said Friday an Interstate Commerce Commission ruling forbidding racial discrimination on interstate buses "followed the trend of federal action."

"It is just another step by the federal government in putting its heel on the necks of us here in the South," the Alabama official said.

"The ruling certainly comes as no sprprise," Gallion added. "I had been expecting it for some time. It followed the trend of federal action on such issues."

Gov. John Patterson and Public Service Commission officials could not be reached for comment.

STARTS NOV. 1

Bus Mandate Draws Bobby's Full Support

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy said Saturday the Justice Department "will cooperate fully" in enforcing the new Interstate Commerce Commission order outlawing segregation in interstate bus travel.

He said the order, issued Friday and effective Nov. 1, was the "most far-reaching administrative action ever taken by the federal government" in the field of racial discrimination.

"I am gratified that the commission has taken this important step," the President's brother added in a statement.

In promising his department's full cooperation in enforcing the order, Kennedy said the unanimity of the ICC "reflects the determination of the American people as a whole to make progress in the civil rights field."

"If the new regulations are accepted and applied with good will and wisdom," he added, "the results will be a credit to our country."

In a reference to the "freedom riders," the Attorney General recalled that federal and state authorities found it necessary last May "to take extraordinary steps to protect the safety of interstate travelers."

He said the violence and threats of violence which marked such challenges grew out of racially discriminatory practices in interstate travel.

As a result, Kennedy said, the ICC was requested to issue new regulations "in order that these practices of segregation be terminated in the courts, rather than fought out in the streets." He said this was "consistent with the American tradition of living under the rule of law."

Kennedy also noted that the ICC held hearings last August and the department urged then that segregation in bus travel be outlawed in line with previous court rulings.

An ICC spokesman said violation of the regulations would be a criminal offense punishable by fines. Under the order, he said, bus companies are required to notify the commission of any violation of the regulations.

The ICC then investigates to see if there is a case. If it decides there is a basis for the charges, the case is turned over to a U.S. Attorney for prosecution.

Penalty for conviction for a first offense is a minimum fine of $100 and a maximum of $500. Fines for second offenses run from $200 to $500.

If a civil rights violation is involved, the case is referred to the Justice Department for investigation and prosecution.

The commission spokesman said responsibility for reporting such incidents lies with the interstate bus companies over which the ICC has jurisdiction. If someone tears down a sign, for example, the bus company is supposed to report the fact to the ICC, he said.

ICC Orders Integration In Interstate Buses Nov. 1

From Press Dispatches

WASHINGTON—The Interstate Commerce Commission Friday ordered a halt to racial segregation in interstate bus travel.

The rules, which go in effect Nov. 1, will require all interstate buses and all major terminals to post signs to the effect that seating and service are to be provided without regard to race, creed or color.

Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy requested such action after the so-called "freedom riders" toured the South last spring testing racial barriers. There were several cases of violence, and numbers of the riders were arrested on disorderly conduct charges.

The commission said in a statement that it will require bus operators to report any interference with the new regulations.

Motor carriers found guilty of violating the rules could be fined a maximum of $500 for each offense. The ICC would investigate complaints and present evidence to the U.S. attorney for the district where the incident occurred.

(In Atlanta, officials of Greyhound and Trailways lines said they could not speak on behalf of their companies about effects of the ruling on other terminals in Georgia.

(But both men said the order would present no problem here, where facilities already are desegregated.)

(Gov. Ernest Vandiver said, "I havent' read the ruling. I wouldn't comment until I have read it.")

OPERATORS PROTEST

The new rules in effect make it illegal to maintain separate facilities for intrastate passengers in any terminal serving interstate buses. Many Southern cities maintain segregated facilities for intrastate passengers, since ICC does not regulate bus travel within states.

During a commission hearing on the new regulations, the Justice department contended that the Interstate Commerce Commission clearly bars discrimination on the part of interstate bus operators. The operators themselves, along with spokesmen for several Southern states, argued against any new rules.

The commission said in its report that "many Negro interstate passengers are subjected to racial segregation in several forms in a substantial part of the United States."

It said Negroes "continue to be subjected to segregated seating based on race" and in many bus stations they are "compelled to use eating, rest room and other terminal facilities which are segregated."

Beginning Nov. 1 buses in interstate travel will be required to display a sign stating: "Seating aboard this vehicle is without regard to race, color, creed or national origin by order of the Interstate Commerce Commission."

STARTS NOV. 1

Beginning Jan. 1, 1963, interstate bus tickets must carry a similar statement, the ICC said. This later date was because tickets are printed in advance.

Under the new ICC rules, terminal facilities may not be utilized by interstate buses unless there is a posted sign stating: "Public notice — regulations applicable to vehicles and terminal facilities of interstate motor common carriers of passengers by order of the Interstate Commerce Commission."

SOME EXCEPTIONS

The ICC indicated, however, that the rules would not apply to every independently operated corner drug store which sells a few tickets for a motor carrier.

But it said that agents which provide terminal facilities for the convenience of passengers in interstate travel should be considered a part of the carrier's terminal facilities.

The commission will require bus operators to report any interference with its regulations.

"Obviously, we cannot anticipate the precise effect of application of the regulations to each and every factual situation that may arise," the report said. "But the regulations should make clear to respondents and others the rights of passengers under the Interstate Commerce Act."

There was little comment from officials in Southern states.

Gov. Ross Barnett was reported out of Jackson, the Mississippi capital, and unavailable for comment.

Jackson has been a target of "freedom riders" seeking to desegregate transportation facilities. Since May 24, 306 "freedom riders" have been arrested and convicted on breach of peace charges there.

Jackson railroad and bus terminals removed signs designating segregated waiting rooms after an ICC ruling several years ago. However, a few days later the city erected its own segregation signs on sidewalks fronting the waiting rooms and in terminals which had lunch rooms.

ALABAMA PROTESTS

Atty. Gen. MacDonald Gallion of Alabama said at Montgomery the ICC decision "is just another sttep by the federal government in putting its heels on the necks of us here in the South."

"The ruling certainly comes as no surprise," he said. "I had been expecting it for some time. It followed the trend of federal action on such issues."

In New York, Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, commented happily: "This is a gratifying amplification of the ICC ruling handed down in 1955 in response to a petition filed by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

ICC To Enforce Segregation Ban

The News and Courier
Charleston

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission said Monday there would be prompt and efficient enforcement of new ICC rules against racial segregation in bus transportation facilities.

Chairman Everett Hutchinson said any violation of the order, which goes into effect Wednesday, will be treated in the same manner as infractions of other ICC rules.

Pres. 10-31-61

The new regulations forbid buses from using terminals which have segregated facilities of any kind. Each bus and terminal must display signs declaring that bus seats and station facilities are available to all travelers without regard to race, creed, color or national origin.

P. 3A

Hutchinson said bus operators will be required to report any interference with their efforts to comply with the rules. The ICC Bureau of Motor Carriers field offices will investigate such reports.

If there is a need for court action, the field office may refer the case to the U.S. District Attorney in the area involved, who can seek a court order prohibiting continued violation.

A U.S. attorney also could prosecute under criminal laws. First offenders could receive a $100 to $500 fine, with fines of $200 to $500 for each offense after the initial one.

"Through this arrangement," Hutchinson said, "we expect to achieve prompt and efficient handling of complaints of racial discrimination."

Interstate Rules Effective Nov. 1; Loophole Is Left

Washington Bur

By James E. Clayton
Staff Reporter

The Interstate Commerce Commission yesterday issued rules designed to end race discrimination on interstate buses and in the terminals at which they stop.

Under the rules, interstate bus companies are forbidden after Nov. 1. to use the facilities of any terminal that segregates its waiting room, restroom, eating, drinking or ticket sales facilities. The rules will not apply to bus stations that offer no more than ticket sales facilities or to bus systems that operate entirely within one state.

The practical effect of the rules, if they are enforced in literal terms, will be to give bus companies two alternatives. They may use desegregated terminals or they may try to fit into the exception in the rules.

That exception says that the ICC will not require desegregation by a ticket agent who does no more than sell tickets and post schedules. But, the Commission added, it will require desegregation of agents and terminals that offer more than that.

The only other way for Southern cities to avoid desegregation of interstate bus terminals under the rules is to give up interstate buses.

The ICC's decision is a major victory for Attorney eGneral Robert F. Kennedy. He had requested the regulations in the aftermath of last spring's Freedom Rides across the South and had argued for them in face of resistance from both the ICC and the bus companies.

Kennedy's position, with which the 11-man Commission agreed, was that the case-by-case method of enforcing desegregation on interstatebuses was ineffective. It has been illegal for some time for interstate bus companies to discriminate, but the ICC has levied fines only in occasional cases when complaints were filed.

The ICC had complained that it could not take action in some cases because local authorities insisted that bus companies continue to segregate. Built into the new rules is a provision to take care of that situation.

The bus companies are reqired to report to the ICC any interference they receive from private citizens or public officials in desegregations efforts. Presumably, such complaints will be turned over to the Department of Justice for legal action.

The new rules also require bus companies to put up signs in buses and terminals advising the public of its legal rights. The signs in buses can come down on Jan. 1, 1963, but after that date the same information must be printed on bus tickets.

ATLANTA, Ga., Nov. 1 (AP). —Police in Georgia and Mississippi arrested Negroes who tried to use interstate bus facilities Wednesday despite a Federal agency order banning segregation of passengers.

Four Negroes were jailed in Atlanta and three in Jackson, Miss., as a rule issued by the Interstate Commerce Commission against bus terminal segregation went into effect.

A Shreveport, La., bus station manager, who refused Wednesday to remove such a sign, was charged with violating Louisiana's segregation laws and placed under bond of $250. Shreveport officials said Tuesday the city would not comply with the CC order.

In Monroe, La., the Continental Southern Lines removed segregation signs from its bus station but a district judge issued a temporary restraining order directing the bus company to replace them.

COURT BACKS ICC BAN ON BUS SEGREGATION

But 2 States Continue Arrests of Negroes

Atlanta, Nov. 1 (AP)—A federal judge in Alabama today backed an Interstate Commerce commission order with a court decree outlawing segregated buses and terminals in his district covering 24 counties.

The court action in Alabama came as Mississippi and Georgia police arrested Negroes who entered waiting rooms reserved for white persons or sought service in restaurants previously used only by white passengers at bus terminals.

Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. issued an order in Montgomery prohibiting Alabama authorities from enforcing racial barriers. His order was the result of race riots involving freedom riders in Montgomery last May. It coincided with the effective date of an ICC ruling outlawing segregation practices on buses and in terminals over the nation.

Refuses to Hear Appeal

The Florida Supreme court refused to hear an appeal by 10 freedom riders who rode buses from Washington to Tallahassee, Fla., last June and were convicted in city court of unlawful assembly when they staged a sit-in demonstration at the airport terminal after finding the restaurant closed there. The Supreme court transferred the appeal to the Leon county Circuit court.

A Shreveport, La., bus station manager who tried to comply with the ICC ruling was called in by the sheriff's office for violating Louisiana's segregation laws. W. R. Warmsley, who said he was acting on orders of his company's headquarters, was released on $250 bond.

Four Negroes were arrested by Atlanta police who charged them with treaspassing on private property after they asked for service in a restaurant adjoining the Trailways bus terminal.

Georgia Challenges ICC

Three Negroes testing the strength of the ICC order were arrested at a Jackson, Miss., bus terminal.

Georgia state officials asked the United States District court in Atlanta to set aside the ICC order on the ground it encroaches on the right of the state to regulate intrastate commerce and exceeds the powers given the ICC by Congress. Assistant Atty. Gen. Paul Rodgers said Georgia would take the case to the United States Supreme court if necessary.

The eight men are charged with interfering with a bus traveling in interstate commerce and conspiring to commit an offense against the United States.

Joseph M. Postiglone, a photographer in Anniston, testified that he saw Frank B. # ICC Urged To Reject Merger Of Railroads

Wed 11-1-61

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department asked the Interstate Commerce Commission Tuesday to reject a proposed merger of Seaboard Air Line Railroad Co. and the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Co.

Asst. Atty. Gen. Lee Loevinger, in a brief filed with the ICC, said the merger would be contrary to the policy of the antitrust laws, the interstate commerce act, and the national transporation act.

The brief said a merger of the railroads would:

1. "Destroy the vigorous competition which now exists" between the lines, which are two of the principal railroads in the Southeast.

2. Jeopardize the existence of several small railroads that "are vitally important to the Southeast."

3. Impose unnecessary hardships on communities and shippers.

4. Impair adequate transportation.

Loevinger said the department realizes that a railroad merger approved by the ICC is "insulated from" the antitrust laws.

But this exemption should not be granted merely because a merger would enable two financially sound and competing railroads to increase their revenues where the records show that there are no overriding reasons for nullification of the national policy expressed in the antitrust laws, Loevinger said.

Under the ICC ruling each bus and terminal must display signs stating that bus seats and station facilities are available to all travelers.

A Shreveport, La., bus station manager, who refused Wednesday to remove such a sign, was charged with violating Louisiana's segregation laws and placed under bond of $250. Shreveport officials said Tuesday the city would not comply with the ICC order.

In Monroe, La., the Continental Southern Lines removed segregation signs from its bus station but a district judge issued a temporary restraining order directing the bus company to replace them.

Three Negroes who challenged bus terminal segregation in Jackson, were charged with breach of the peace and released on bond of $250 each.

The four Negroes arrested in Atlanta were charged with trespassing on private property and placed under bond of $100 each. They had asked to be served in a restaurant that adjoins the bus terminal and is used by white bus passengers.

I.C.C. Ruling Forbids Race Discrimination In Buses, Terminals

$100-$500 Fines Set For Violation

From Wire Dispatches

Washington, Sept. 22.—The Interstate Commerce Commission Friday established rules forbidding racial discrimination on interstate buses or in their terminal facilities, thus handing a fresh legal weapon to antisegregationists.

The I.C.C. in effect, gave Attorney General Kennedy what he asked in a petition filed May 29. It set up two basic rules which:

1. Forbid interstate bus operators from segregating seating on the basis of race, color, creed, or national origin.

2. Prohibit interstate buses from using terminals where waiting rooms, rest rooms, lunch counters, or other facilities are segregated.

Has Sweeping Powers

The I.C.C. which has sweeping regulatory powers over all commercial interstate surface transportation, said the first violation of the new rules would call for a fine of $100 to $500. The penalty for a second violation could range from $200 to $500.

In its report on adoption of the new rules, the I.C.C. said it has found that "many Negro passengers are subjected to racial segregation in several forms." It went on to specify seating on buses and use of eating, rest-room, and other terminal facilities.

Must Display Signs

Beginning November 1, buses holding common-carrier certificates issued by the I.C.C. must display signs saying:

"Seating aboard this vehicle is without regard to race, color, creed, or national origin, by order of the Interstate Commerce Commission."

The signs will be required until January 1, 1963, unless the time is extended by the commission.

On and after January 1, 1963, a similar notice must be printed on all tickets sold for transportation in interstate or foreign commerce.

Tickets Probably Printed

The effective date of this regulation was put off until 1963 because tickets for the intervening period probably have been printed.

Operators of interstate buses were directed to report to the I.C.C. within 15 days any interference with enforcement of these rules—whether the interference came from an individual, a private group, or a political subdivision such as a state or a city. Such reports also would have to include a statement on action taken by the carrier to halt the interference.

There was little immediate comment from officials in Southern states.

Governor Ross Barnett was reported out of Jackson, the Mississippi capital, and unavailable for comment.

City Erected Own Signs

Jackson has been a target of "freedom riders" seeking to desegregate transportation facilities. Three hundred six "freedom riders" have been arrested and convicted on breach-of-peace charges there since May 24.

Jackson railroad and bus terminals removed signs designating segregated waiting rooms after an I.C.C. ruling several years ago. However, a few days later the City erected its own segregation signs on sidewalks fronting the waiting rooms and in terminals which had lunchrooms.

Attorney General MacDonald Gallion of Alabama said at Montgomery the I.C.C. decision "is just another step by the Federal Government in putting its heels on the necks of us here in the South."

"The ruling certainly comes as no surprise," he said. "I had been expecting it for some time. It followed the trend of federal action on such issues."

Exemption Limited

An I.C.C. spokesman indicated the rules will not be strictly applied to "every independently operated corner drugstore which sells a few tickets for a motor carrier."

However, the commission made plain that it would not grant exemptions from the rules on a plea that terminals and their facilities are not owned and operated by the carrier.

If a place offers facilities, such as food and rest rooms, for interstate travelers, the I.C.C. said, "It would appear that premises where these services and facilities are made available should be considered as part of the carrier's terminal facility."

Cites Many Complaints

The I.C.C. explained that, for practical purposes, the desegregating of terminal facilities for interstate travelers means desegregrating for intrastate travelers as well as unless intrastate carriers wish to establish their own terminals, which the commission does not regard as a likely development.

While Kennedy's petition formed the basis for the hearings which led to Friday's decision, the I.C.C. said it had received many complaints about discrimination before the Attorney General asked for a clear ruling.

Wilkins Hails Ruling

In New York, Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the N.A.A.C.P., commented:

"This is a gratifying amplification of the I.C.C. ruling handed down in 1955 in response to a petition filed by the National Association for The Advancement of Colored People.

"It means that American citizens may now travel freely among their states without being penalized and persecuted because of their color. It means there will be no East and West Berlins in our country."

Given Wider Power

Friday's unanimous ruling by the 11-man commission dealt only with buses under an act which gives the I.C.C. much wider power over motor carriers than it has over railroads, regulated under the original Interstate Commerce Act.

The Justice Department asked the I.C.C. to take administrative action in regard to buses because it felt the commission had clear powers in that field. In addition, the "freedom-rider" troubles revolved almost entirely around buses and bus terminals.

Under court and I.C.C. rulings, segregated seating on trains and buses has been forbidden in specific cases. But Friday's ruling clarified and extended the I.C.C. position on buses.

It is understood, unofficially, that the Government is carrying on quiet negotiations with railroads seeking voluntary desegregation in their terminal facilities as well as in seating on trains which is largely desegregated now.

In the field of plane travel, which does not come under the I.C.C., the Justice Department now has court suits pending at New Orleans and Montgomery, Ala., to bring about desegregation of airport facilities at those cities. It had prepared similar action at Columbus, Ga., but dropped it when voluntary desegregation was worked out.

ICC Acts To End Bus Segregation

Interstate Travel And Terminal Service Are Affected Nov. 1

By United Press International

WASHINGTON, Sept. 22.—The Interstate Commerce Commission Friday ordered a halt to racial segregation in interstate bus travel.

The rules, which go in effect Nov. 1, will require all interstate buses and all major terminals to post signs saying seating and service are to be provided without regard to race, creed or color.

Kennedy Requested Step

Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy requested such action after the so-called "freedom riders" toured the South last spring testing racial barriers. There were several cases of violence and many riders were arrested on disorderly conduct charges.

The commission said it will require bus operators to report any interference with the new regulations.

Motor carriers found guilty of violating the rules could be fined a maximum of $500 for each offense. The ICC would investigate complaints and present evidence to the United States attorney for the district where the incident occurred.

The new rules in effect make it illegal to maintain separate facilities for intra-state passengers in any terminal serving interstate buses. Many Southern cities maintain segregated facilities for intra-state passengers, since the ICC does not regulate bus travel within states.

Rest Rooms Cited

The commission said "many Negro interstate passengers are subjected to racial segregation in several forms in a substantial part of the United States."

It said Negroes "continued to be subjected to segregated seating based on race" and in many bus stations they are "compelled to use eating, rest room and other terminal facilities which are segregated."

Bus Segregation Illegal Starting Tomorrow

Washington, Oct. 30 (AP)—Interstate Commerce Commission Chairman Everett Hutchinson reminded the public today that new ICC rules barring racial discrimination in interstate bus travel go into effect Wednesday.

Hutchinson said, "We expect to achieve prompt and efficient handling of complaints of racial discrimination."

The ICC issued rules last September 22 forbidding segregation in interstate bus travel. They applied to bus terminal restaurants and other facilities as well as the buses themselves.

Companies Responsible

Hutchinson said the bus companies will be responsible for reporting any violation to the commission. As of November 1, both buses and bus stations serving interstate traffic must display signs banning segregation.

Reports of violations will be handled in the same manner as other motor-carrier infractions, Hutchinson said. Each complaint will be investigated by the ICC's bureau of motor carriers' field office in the area involved.

After that, two avenues are open to the commission. It may seek a court injunction. Or it may present its case to the appropriate federal district attorney with a recommendation for criminal prosecution.

Fine Is $500 A Day

The Interstate Commerce Commission Act carries a maximum penalty of $500 a day for each continuing offense. The antisegregation rules were requested by Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy last spring as an aftermath of the test of Southern racial barriers by "freedom riders."

The ICC has received no petitions for reconsideration of its new rules, which were opposed by many bus companies and by the States of Alabama and Mississippi. Consequently, they will go into effect on the dates originally set.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION
LOCAL SEGREGATION LAWS COVERING
BUS, RAIL, AIRPORT FACILITIES

U. S. seeks to outflank Dixie on local race laws

'Peace breach' maneuvers under attack

BY JAMES FREE
News Washington correspondent

WASHINGTON, July 11—Local segregation laws covering bus, rail and airport facilities are by no means the only target of federal court suits now pending in Alabama and Mississippi.

A key aim, it is now clear, is to stop the police arrest of persons breaking local segregation laws on other charges such as "breach of the peace." Such arrests have had the effect of preventing direct legal challenge of the segregation statutes.

AT MONTGOMERY, ALA., and Jackson, Miss., the Justice Department has filed friend-of-the-court briefs in suits brought in federal court by Negroes.

In the Mississippi brief filed yesterday, the department hit at nine state segregation laws covering travel facilities. Alabama has has no state laws comparable to those under attack in Mississippi, but police practices in both states have been challenged as discriminating against Negro travellers.

FREE

This challenged was spelled out in more detail in the Jackson brief. Noting the claim that Negroes have been arrested in Jackson for doing nothing more than entering white facilities in bus and rail terminals, the brief said.

"Since a Negro has a consitutional right to the use of non-segregated facilities, his use of the white portion of the facilities cannot be taken into account to support the legality of his arrest of conviction" (on other charged). If such of the white facilities constitutes the sole evidene against him on a breech of the peace or similar charge—then it following that there is no competent evidence to sustain either arrest or conviction and both are invalid . . ."

Should punish mob

The Jackson Zionspace struck at a claim that has been made by a number of Southern officials, including Govs. Orval Faubus of Arkansas and John Patterson of Alabama and Police Commissioner Eugene Connor of Birmingham. That claim is the arrest of anti-seregation demonstrators has been necessary to prevent breaches of the peace or possible violence.

On this score, the Jackson brief said:

"Nor can arrests of those who lawfully exercise their consitutional rights be supported on the theory that others, unwilling to respect the law of the land and the rights of their fellow citizens, might riot, and that breaches of the peace and violence might ensue. The obligation of the state in such a situation is not to vitiate the constutition by arresting those who act act under it, but to punish those who would interfere.

". . . constitutional rights would be frail indeed if the courts were to cease protecting them because a mob willed it so. Such rights depend neither on the mercy of the mob nor on any possible lack of sympathy of law enforcement with the objectives of those who assert the rights."

Cites Birmingham case

As one of the precedents for the departments claim that a civil rights suit is proper when a citizen's constitutional rights are taken away by illegal use of an otherwise valid statute (such as that on breach of the peace), the Jackson brief cited the case of "Boman vs. Birmingham Transit Co."

"In the case," the brief said, "suit was brought to enjoin the bus company from enforcing segregated seating; and the city commissioners, including the police commissioner, were joined as defendants. The city had repealed its segregated seating ordinance and enacted another which authorized carriers to promulgate their own seating rules and provided that willful refusal to obey a reasonable request of an operator or driver of such a public conveyance in relation to the seating of passengers thereon shall constitute a breach of the peace.

District court reversed

"THE DISTRICT COURT," the brief continued, "held that a deprivation of civil rights had occurred but dismissed on the ground that no state action was involved. The Court of Appeals reversed. The court quoted with approval from the lower court's decision that:

"A charge of breach of the peace is that one of broad import and may cover many kinds of misconduct. However, the court is of the opinion that the mere refusal to obey a request to move from the front to the rear of a bus, unaccompanied by other acts constituting a breach o fthe peace, is not a breach of the peace."

'On right track'

SINCE THE INITIAL stage in Birmingham and in Montgomery n permitting mob violence, Alabama authorities—in the private view of Justice Department officials—have been handling "freedom riders" and such with more wisdom than Mississippi, which was smart enough to prevent any violence.

In Alabama, and particularly in Montgomery, recent stress has been on permitting the riders to go through unmolested even if this involved overlooking, for instance, Negro use of a lunch counter marked "for whites."

In Jackson, some of these same riders have been jailed for refusing to obey a police order to "move on" from white travel facilities. The charge has been breach of the peace.

One Justice Department official put it this way: "Numerous court decisions have made it plain that segregation in common carriers—buses, trains and airplanes—must end. The sooner states and cities adjust to this inevitable fact, the better off they will be. As Montgomery has discovered, the simplest way to handle travelers who want to make an issue of local segregation, is to ignore them and send them on their way—so long as they do not commit a genuine breach of the peace."

Hearing set Aug. 15 on travel edict

(Freedom Rider Story on Page 3)

WASHINGTON

The Interstate Commerce Commission on Aug. 15 is due to begin public hearings on the proposal by U.S. Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy that the agency ban racial discrimination in interstate bus travel and terminals.

The Attorney General made the request on May 29 as a result of violence against Freedom Riders in Anniston, Ala., May 14, and in Montgomery, Ala., May 20.

Acting on Kennedy's request, the ICC decided June 19 to consider issuing new regulations to ban such discrimination.

* * *

BUS COMPANIES, operators of terminals and other parties interested in interstate travels are due to submit written statements to the agency by July 20.

The ICC, under authority of the Interstate Commerce Act, has jurisdiction over all interstate travel.

In his request for new regulation, the Attorney General said, "the lack of rules has given rise to confusion on part of motor carriers as to their duty to their passengers and has contributed, and will continue to contribute to unrest and civil disorder."

In urging the ICC to act quickly, the Attorney General declared it is the unquestioned right of all persons to travel between states without being subjected to racial discrimination.

THE ICC action is urged on basis of the Interstate Commerce Act which states:

"It will be unlawful for any common carrier by motor vehicle engaged in interstate commerce to make, give or cause any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person...in any respect whatsoever; or to subject any particular person...to any undue or unreasonable prejudice, or disadvantage in any respect whatsoever."

The Justice Department's brief supporting the Attorney General's request is being prepared by Assistant Attorney General Burke Marshall who is in charge of the Civil Rights Division.

* * *

THE PRECEDENT which indicates the ICC will ban discrimination in interstate travel is as follows:

In 1955, the ICC ruled segregated facilities in railroad stations violated the Interstate Commerce Act.

The same year the agency issued a similar ruling regarding bus transportation, but not including bus terminals.

IN DECEMBER, 1960, the Supreme Court ruled in the Boynton Case that if a bus company makes restaurant facilities available to passengers, such service must be provided without discrimination.

Earlier this year, the ICC obtained a conviction against a Georgia bus company and one of its drivers for violation of the 1955 order against segregated seating. Both were fined $100 each.

Federal Court Asked To Halt Miss. Vote Ban

Hearing set Aug. 7 on 2 cases

By LOUIS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON (NNPA)—The Federal Government moved Thursday for the first time against the State of Mississippi to compel the registration of colored citizens to vote.

The Justice Department filed suits, under the 1957 and 1960 Civil Rights Acts, asking the Federal District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi to find that the registration practices of the State and the voting registrars of counties are racially discriminatory and constitute deprivation of voting rights pursuant to a "pattern and practice."

If the court finds a pattern of discrimination to exist, it is authorized by the 1960 Civil Rights Act to appoint a referee to register qualified colored persons who had been refused registration by the county registrar.

THE COURT also is asked to enjoin the State and the two registrars from engaging in any act which would deprive any citizen in Clarke and Forrest counties of the right to vote, or engaging in any act which "prevent, hinder or discourage" qualified colored citizens from applying for and becoming registered voters, on account of race or color.

The Justice Department also asks that the state and two county registrars be enjoined from failing to register any colored applicant who possesses the same or similar qualifications of the least qualified white person who has been registered.

The State of Mississippi was named as a defendant under authority of the 1960 Civil Rights Act. The other defendants are A. L. Ramsey, circuit court clerk and registrar of Clarke County and Theron C. Lynd, circuit clerk and registrar of Forrest County.

THE TWO REGISTRARS receive and pass upon applications for registration to vote and determine whether an applicant is qualified to register and vote in their respective counties.

According to the complaint, there are approximately 7,495 colored persons and 22,431 white persons of voting age in Forrest County. A substantial majority of the white persons of voting age in Forrest County are registered to vote, the Government alleges, while only 25 colored persons are registered to vote.

The complaint also states that there are approximately 6,072 white persons and 2,988 colored persons of voting age in Clarke County. A substantial majority of the white persons of voting age are registered to vote in the county, the complaint asserts, while no colored person is registered.

THE GOVERNMENT charges that the State of Mississippi and the two registrars have arbitrarily denied colored persons the opportunity to register, and rejected or took no action on the applications of qualified colored persons.

It also charges the defendants with failing and refusing to afford to colored applicants for registration the same or equal opportunity to vote as is afforded to white applicants, unreasonably delaying the receipt of applications for registration from colored persons and arbitrarily denying colored persons the opportunity to register to vote.

Federal Judge Sidney C. Mize has set Aug. 7 for a hearing on the Government's motions for preliminary injunctions in these two cases.

MEANWHILE, A spokesman for the Justice Department indicated that more voting rights suits are to follow in Mississippi. He said the Department is presently engaged in the investigation of more than 12 other cases in Mississippi.

Commenting upon the two suits, Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy said:

"These are the first cases brought in Mississippi seeking the fair, equal and nondiscriminatory registration of voters.

FBI Asked to Kill Bibb Bus Seat Cases

Constitution State News Service

MACON—The father of one of 18 Negro teen-agers arrested under an old state bus seating law here requested the FBI Monday to step in and halt proceedings against the youths.

FBI officials in Atlanta said the bureau has no jurisdiction in the case but said the Department of Justice might be concerned and "we are pressing Washington to pursue that end."

Agents said the bus law was overturned in an Atlanta court decision two years ago.

A Negro group later telegraphed U.S. Attorney General Robert Kennedy asking him to order the Justice department to intervene under the Civil Rights Act. There also are reports that U.S. court action may be filed soon to enjoin prosecution and that damages for false arrest may be sought.

The Negroes were arrested in various downtown locations Saturday when they took seats in front sections of buses in defiance of the old law requiring them to seat from the rear. They entered Bibb Transit Co. buses in groups of three to five and refused driver requests that they move to the rear.

Officers repeated the requests. When the Negroes—mainly teen-agers—again refused to move, they were arrested.

They sang hymns in jail while awaiting fingerprinting and photographing.

U.S. District Court Judge Frank Hooper ruled segregated bus seating unconstitutional in Atlanta early in 1959. Since then, some Negroes have made a point of sitting up front in the Atlanta buses although many still sit toward the rear. There have been only scattered incidents following the invalidation of old seating laws and ordinances.

Some of the younger Negroes arrested here were turned over to Juvenile Court authorities. Others were released under $200 bond each.

15 Negroes Seized On Macon Buses

MACON (AP)—Fifteen young Macon Negroes were arrested when they took seats in front sections of buses at four downtown locations and refused to move to rear sections, police said Sunday.

Police said 13 teen-agers and two persons in their twenties were charged with violating a state law requiring persons to sit where they are assigned in buses.

The incidents occurred at four separate locations at about the same time, officers said.

In each case, between three and five Negroes entered a Bibb Transit Co. bus and took seats in the front. The driver asked them to move to the rear and called police after they refused to do so.

Officers said they repeated the request and then arrested the Negroes when they refused to take rear seats.

The Negroes sang hymns in jail while awaiting fingerprinting and photographing.

Suit to mix cabs dismissed

ATLANTA, Ga. — Because the plaintiffs were late in filing additional information in their suit to desegregate cabs in the city, U.S. District Judge Frank A. Hooper dismissed the suit.

The plaintiffs were the Rev. Wyatt Tee Walker, executive director of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, and Dex Holt, a representative of CORE.

The suit was dismissed "without prejudice" — meaning that it can be re-instituted. When the suit was first filed, the judge gave the two plaintiffs 20 days to file additional information. The plaintiffs were four days late with it.

Augusta Bus Suit Snares PSC

The Georgia Public Service Commission has been made a party to a bus desegregation suit in Augusta in an attempt to strike down a PSC regulation requiring segregation of bus passengers.

PSC members were served with a copy of an order signed by U.S. District Judge F. M. Scarlett of the Southern District making the commission a party to the suit.

5 PLAINTIFFS

The suit was filed in Augusta by five Negro college students who claim they were ordered to move to the rear of an Augusta Coach Co. bus on May 2, 1960, by a city policeman after they refused a similar request from the driver.

Besides attacking Augusta bus-seating ordinances and similar state laws, the suit also seeks a declaratory judgment to invalidate a June 1, 1948, regulation of the PSC requiring motor carriers to segregate white and Negro passengers.

TEXT OF REGULATION

The regulation says motor carriers may either confine themselves to carrying only white or Negro passengers or may carry both white and Negro passengers in the same vehicles "under such conditions as will provide a separation of the races in the most practicable manner."

The plaintiffs, Henry Taylor, Thomas Snowden, William Chambers, Jimmy Dukes and Silas Norman, sued for themselves and on behalf of all other Negroes similarly situated to prevent enforcement of laws which deprive them of their choice of seating they select.

The suit originally was brought against the bus company, the City of Augusta, Mayor Mallard Beckum and Police Chief F. B. Green. The amendment allowed by Judge Scarlett also makes the PSC and the Civil Service Commission of Augusta parties to the action.

Hollowell Says Case Is Made

Kids in Macon Blitz Segregation on Buses

By Trezzvant W. Anderson

MACON, Ga. — How to write this story created a dilemma! It was to have told of the drastic change in the attitude of Negro Maconites during the past year since the grand jury probe of alleged Negro bloc voting — the apathy, the loss of that sparkle of pride over Negro political weight, and juvenile delinquency.

All that! And then came these 15 wonderful Negro boys and girls, dressed "sharp as a tack," neat, good-looking, well-mannered and knowing exactly what they were doing! They changed the whole picture—and story!

It was at 4 P. M., on Feb. 25 when the youngsters in four groups went aboard four downtown Macon city buses and sat in front seats. They were orderly—silent. They said nothing when the driver told 'em to move back. They said nothing when he called police and asked them again to move. They said nothing when the police asked them to move. They said nothing when they were carted off to jail at City Hall to await transfer to Bibb County Jail.

NO WORDS were necessary. They had completed their mission when they were put in jail and later moved to the County Jail. There, several of their elders awaited them — with bond money to keep them out of the cells. All but three—three 13-year-olds who were taken to juvenile detention quarters—were bailed out. They were charged with violating a state law requiring segregated seating on public buses.

They had done their job, regardless of what may happen now, even if the charges are dropped. They were the liberty platoons making the initial attack on bus segregation in Macon.

Said Atty. Donald L. Hollowell to The Courier in Atlanta last Wednesday: "They have made their case now and we shall move. There is nothing that can stop us."

And since the state law has already been declared unconstitutional by Federal District Judge Frank A. Hooper in Atlanta, there will be no choice for Federal District Judge William A. Bootle except to follow the law and declare the Macon statute also unconstitutional and order non-segregated seating on Macon City buses, thanks to those wonderful kids.

It was not one of those things that "just happened." It was carefully planned, and the kids were carefully trained in what they had to do and how. For over two years, local Negro civic leaders, among them Frank J. Hutchings, the indefatiguable mortician, F. J. Mosley, J. A. Jenkins, T. B. Hooper and others had entreated and sought to get desegregation on the buses from Linton D. Baggs, president of the Bibb Transit Company, but in vain.

MR. HUTCHINGS said his group even wrote Mr. Baggs two weeks ago about their plans to seek integration on the buses, but had not received a reply. This left the Negro leaders with no alternative but to act. So, last Saturday their liberty platoons moved into the front lines.

Now, it is obvious that the bus desegregation battle will be won. Then will come action on other fronts, Attorney Hollowell will take the case and he will file a Federal suit and the city cannot win.

Here are the wonderful kids of the liberty platoons: Julia Lofton, 17; Barbara Johnson, Herschell Randall, 20; Annie Dell Randall, 19; Carl Brantley, 21; William Randall, 17; Harold B. Carswell, 18; Oressa Glover, 17; Cheryl Lickett, 17; Shirley Randall, 17; Harold Wilson, and John E. Glover. The three 13-year-olds cannot be named under Georgia laws. There are several honor students in this list.

City Solicitor Clarence Clay says if the cases are handled routinely they will be heard in April.

Events Hint Macon Faces Chance of Racial Problems

The Atlanta Constitution
Atlanta, Ga.
Mar 26 1961

By DOUGLAS KIKER
Atlanta Journal Staff Writer

MACON, Ga., March 25—Will Macon be the next Georgia city to experience the prolonged social tension of racial protest and conflict?

Atlanta has come to know it only too well. The port city of Savannah has had its troubles for over a year now. Athens got a quick but strong taste of it in January, when the University of Georgia was integrated under a federal court order.

Now, some observers believe that Macon, this mid-Georgia town that sits almost as perfectly in the middle of the state as a hub in a wheel, will come in for its share of it too before too much longer.

THE FIRST definite move made by Macon Negroes protesting the city's long-standing segregated way of public life came just about a month ago, in late February, when 15 Negro youths boarded a city bus without warning and took seats up front, in the white section.

They were immediately arrested by city police, on orders by transit company officials, when they refused to move. They have been charged with violating the state law prohibiting mixed seating on buses—a law already declared unconstitutional by Federal Judge Frank Hooper in the Atlanta bus desegregation case. And the matter has been turned over to the Macon City Court (really a county court) for trials tentatively scheduled for mid-April.

SINCE THAT incident——which apparently was staged with a court test case in mind—sizable audiences of Macon Negroes have attended a series of mass protest meetings where speakers have emphasized that it will take struggle and determination to gain an end to bus desegregation.

Also in late February, the Macon Council on Human Relations, a bi-racial organization, mailed copies of a statement to city and county political leaders urging them to "re-examine" the local racial situation in light of "the new realism in Georgia's official approach to the constitutional prohibition against racial discrimination."

The council said that this was "imperative to the continued well being and to the preservation of the traditional racial harmony of our community."

* * *

THE STATEMENT went on to point out that, with the exception of the bus incident, there have been no other Negro demonstrations—yet.

"Some of Macon's Negro citizens and some of their more dedicated white friends react with shame to this fact, believing they should have acted to secure these rights," the report says, adding: Now, "with the full backing of federal authority, some change is bound to come. . . . That our Negro citizens soon will make new demands for compliance locally with rules of law . . . is beyond question."

City and county officials must "begin now to plan for an orderly transition," the council said; otherwise, it warned, federal courts will eventually do the job for them.

* * *

THE COUNTY board of education appointed a committee to look into the "problems" this remarkably candid and forthright statement of intent presented.

But for the most part, city and county officials largely passed it by.

It was thunder scarcely heard, lightning barely seen, but positive, electric evidence, nonetheless, of a gathering storm.

MACON HAS a large, healthy upper-middle class community, and colleges, but it is for the most part a working-man's town. It is also the hometown of Lee Davidson, a major Ku Klux Klan leader.

About 40 per cent of the town's population is Negro, according to Mayor Edgar Wilson. A growing portion of these—professional men, Warner Robins employes — lead middle-class lives. But most of the Macon Negro population is working class, too. There are no Negro colleges here.

Woman Fined In Controversy Over Seat On Atlanta Bus

An Atlanta woman told the Atlanta Daily World Thursday that she was fined $15 for taking a seat on the Oglethorpe trolley Tuesday beside a white woman passenger, "after a pushing scuffle ensued."

Mrs. Pearl Watts, 40, of 248 Wellington St., SW, was fined by Judge James Webb in Municipal Court for disorderly conduct -disturbance, when a similar charge against the white rider was dismissed.

Mrs. Watts stated that she boarded the bus and sat down in the vacant seat beside the white woman and began to read her newspaper when the lady identified as Miss Patsy Barron, 26, of 1640 May Ave., SE., started pushing her and she pushed back. Miss Barron told police that she was "saving a seat for a friend", it was stated.

Judge Webb was quoted during the trial hearing as saying that "It was not unusual "for someone to save a seat for someone else on a trolley, and that the Negro woman should have stepped back and found another seat."

Mrs. Watts said that, "I told the judge, if sitting on a seat beside a white woman makes me disorderly then I am guilty." She stated further that a bus supervisor, two policemen and other witnesses testified for the white woman.

Macon Bus Cases Charge 15 Negroes

Constitution State News Service

MACON—City court solicitor Clarence Clay Friday filed formal accusations in the cases of 15 young negroes arrested by police Feb. 25 in connection with a city bus integration attempt.

The 15 Negroes were arrested after they occupied seats on several Bibb transit buses normally reserved for white passengers. They were taken to city jail and later transferred to the Bibb County jail and city court.

Clay said the cases, to be tried simultaneously, have been included on an appearance calendar for the week of April 17. He said that if at that time a jury trial is requested, the cases will be scheduled for trial the week of May 22.

Clay referred to a similar bus integration case in Atlanta in which Atlanta Federal District Judge Frank A. Hooper ruled in favor of the Negroes. But he said the Federal Court decision in Atlanta has no bearing on any other court in the state.

Since that decision has been made, an appellate court ruling is necessary before a lower court decision becomes binding on other courts, Clay explained.

He added that he had received notification from Negro attorney D. L. Hollowell in Atlanta, that he will defend the Negroes when their case is tried.

Ga. Bus Law Is Studied

MACON, Ga. — (UPI) — Judge Andrew W. McKenna Thursday took under study the question of Georgia's bus segregation law in an effort to determine whether it would be held constitutional.

The action was taken on the request of defense attorneys for 12 Negro students charged with violating the segregation law in an effort to have charges against the students dismissed on grounds it was unconstitutional.

The city court judge asked several questions of lawyers on both sides Thursday during a hearing in his chambers.

Solicitor Clarence H. Clay, Jr., conceded in answer to questions by McKenna that the U. S. Supreme Court probably would rule the state statute under which the students were charged unconstitutional.

Donald L. Hollowell, Atlanta attorney representing the students, was asked by the judge what he thought the Supreme Court of Georgia would rule on the question.

Hollowell replied: "I like to think in terms of the Supreme Court of Georgia following the law of the land. There is no question in my mind the law of the land as spelled out in numerous federal rulings up to and including the Supreme Court makes the state statutes unconstitutional."

The students were arrested Feb. 25 after trying to desegregate the Bibb Transit Company buses here.

Arrest Four In Test Of ICC Ruling

By United Press International

Four Negroes who asked for service at a Trailways bus station restaurant in Atlanta were arrested three hours after a federal ban against segregation in interstate buses and terminals went into effect Wednesday.

The four men were members of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating committee, a desegregation group active in the south.

The Negroes bought tickets to Anniston, Ala., where the trial of eight men charged with burning a passenger bus in the first "Freedom Rider" incident in Alabama was scheduled to start Wednesday morning.

They then walked into a restaurant at the station which is leased to an operator by Trailways. They told the proprietor they were interstate passengers and showed him their tickets to Anniston.

"We don't serve Negroes," the proprietor told them. "You'll have to leave."

The Negroes were arrested and taken to jail by two policemen at the request of the restaurant operator.

They were arrested under a trespass law passed by the Georgia legislature just after the "sit-in" demonstrations began in the South in 1960. The law makes it a felony punishable by fines and imprisonment up to five years for refusing to leave the premises of an establishment after being asked to do so by the owner or operator.

The only states in the South offering resistance to the federal decree appeared to be Georgia and Mississippi.

Police officers stood ready in Mississippi to arrest any violators of the state's segregation laws on breach of peace charges that landed more than 300 "Freedom Riders" in jail last summer.

Officials at two north central Mississppi cities said Tuesday their Trailways bus terminals would be integrated Wednesday. But one of them, Winona, Miss., later decided to remove all seats from the terminal's waiting room, preventing anything but "vertical" integration, generally acceptable by Deep South standards. Mayor John Murray of Grenada, Miss., said planned integration of the terminal in his city might be called off later Wednesday in a meeting of the board of aldermen.

Georgia asked a U.S. District court Tuesday for a temporary restraining order against the new Interstate Commerce Commission regulation. The request was denied by Judge Lewis R. Morgan of Newnan, Ga. But a preliminary hearing on the issue will be held by a three-judge federal court when two other jurists are appointed to sit with Morgan.

Elsewhere in the South, those states which haven't eliminated segregated facilities at transportation terminals indicated they would not fight the new ruling. A Louisiana public service commission spokesman said Tuesday his state still has a law requiring segregation in travel facilities but that U. S. Supreme Court rulings have made it unenforceable.

Alabama Attorney General MacDonald Gallion said the ICC ban did not conflict with any Alabama laws and compliance with it was "strictly up to the companies involved and the federal government."

Segregation barriers have been listed for some time in most interstate travel facilities in Florida, South Carolina, Virginia and Tennessee. Some cities in Georgia, like Atlanta and Columbus, also have quietly integrated their facilities.

Many of the localities have closed restaurant facilities in transportation terminals, and others have removed seats and resorted to stand-up service at counters. Some states also have maintained separate facilities for intrastate Negro passengers.

Georgia, in its injunction request, said the ICC ban was designed to interfere with the regulation of intrastate commerce by the states and is therefore unconstitutional.

State Asks U.S. Halt Bus Integration

The Atlanta Constitution

Wed. 11-1-61

By ACHSAH POSEY

Georgia asked the U.S. District Court in Atlanta Tuesday to set aside an Interstate Commerce Commission order banning segregation in interstate buses and terminals.

Atlanta, Ga.

This was the first legal action challenging the ICC's Sept. 22 order that will go into effect Wednesday.

The state's attack on the ICC order included a request for a temporary restraining order. This was denied Monday in Newnan by Northern District Judge Lewis R. Morgan.

A preliminary hearing will be held by a three-judge court when two additional judges are appointed by the chief judge of the U. S. Court of Appeals to hear the case.

If a temporary injunction is granted at the preliminary hearing, the order will be suspended in all 50 states.

The state petition claims the order encroaches on the right of the state to regulate intrastate commerce and exceeds the powers given the ICC by Congress.

The request Monday for a temporary retaining order, which would have been effective immediately and until the preliminary hearing, was made on the grounds that if the order went into effect damage to the state would be irreparable.

Wed. 11-1-61

The ICC order resulted from a request by U. S. Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy following so-called "Freedom Rides" into the South to test segregation laws in Southern cities.

Discriminatory practices based on race, color, creed or nationality have been banned in interstate carriers for years. The ICC order claims implementation in motor carriers was necessary because of the "regular" practice of segregation in some areas, which made court action in individual cases an "inadequate remedy."

Georgia contends that implementation is unnecessary and that the order is designed to interfere with the regulation of intrastate commerce by the state, which is forbidden by the Constitution.

FILE FOR STATE

Assistant state Atty. Gen. Paul Rodgers and Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook filed the petition for the state. Rodgers said the action would have no effect on suits filed by individuals under the 14th Amendment concerning segregated practices. ICC officials in Atlanta said they were not aware of the petition and would make no comment.

The ICC order requires that no segregated facilities or buses be used for interstate passengers. The state claims this effectively regulates intrastate commerce since the same buses and terminals are used for both interstate and intrastate passengers.

Atlanta bus terminal officials said at the time of the order that they would not be affected because they were not segregated. Many Southern cities have maintained separate facilities for colored intrastate passengers.

PRIVATE STORES

Other provisions of the order require that signs stating that seating aboard the vehicle is without regard to race be prominently displayed on buses, and that all signs indicating segregated facilities be removed.

The order does not apply to privately owned drug stores and other ticket sellers in small towns which do not provide regular terminal services. It does apply to independently operated concerns that are considered a part of the bus lines terminal facilities.

Summonses were issued Tuesday to Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy and the ICC in Washington.

If relief is not granted by this court, Rodgers said the state would take it to the U.S. Supreme Court.

4 Arrested Here In Terminal Sit-Ins

The Atlanta Constitution

P. 17 Atlanta, Ga., Thurs. 11-2-61

Refuse to Leave Restaurant; Integration Order Takes Effect

A flurry of legal opposition, including four arrests in Atlanta, accompanied Wednesday's effective date of a federal agency order banning bus terminal segregation.

Four leaders of a Negro student integration organization were arrested in the early hours Wednesday when they refused to leave a restaurant at the Trailways station here.

$100 BONDS

Their case was tried in Municipal Court, and they were bound over on $100 bonds each for superior court trials under the state's anti-trespass law.

Three Negroes who tested terminal segregation in Jackson, Miss., were charged with breach of the peace and released under bonds of $250 each.

In Shreveport, La., a bus station manager who posted an anti-discrimination sign required by the Interstate Commerce Commission was arrested for violating a state segregation law and released under $250 bond.

Continental Southern Lines removed segregation signs from its bus terminal in Monroe, La., but replaced them under a temporary restraining order.

ICC BACKED UP

In Montgomery, Ala., however, Federal Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. backed up the ICC in an order prohibiting state officials from enforcing segregation. The order applies in the 24-county Middle District.

The Negroes arrested here were officers and staff members of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, a southwide confederation of Negro student sit-in groups.

They were listed as James Forman, 33; J. Charles Jones, 24; James Luther Bevel, 25, and Bernard LaFayette, 21.

The Atlanta action surprised the students. They had planned no test of the Atlanta terminal. They said they understood its restaurant had been desegregated for some time.

But when two of the four were seeing two other SNCC members off for a ruling-testing trip to Florida, they were refused service at Jake's Fine Foods, a privately operated restaurant leased from Trailways.

The first refusal, made in the presence of Patrolman R. E. Auld, was made about 2:20 a.m. They left. The same two students and two others returned about 3:15 a.m., bought tickets to Anniston, Ala., and again sought service at the restaurant.

Manager Alfred M. Holley asked the four to leave in the presence of Auld and Patrolman G. G. Wheless. The Negroes were arrested when they refused.

Attorney D. L. Hollowell represented the students at the court hearing later Wednesday morning. Hollowell argued that the restaurant was covered by the ICC ruling, and that the cases should be dropped.

TRESPASS LAW CITED

Judge Luke Arnold said Georgia's trespass law was designed "to protect a person who pays taxes to protect his business." He bound the four over to Fulton Superior Court.

The arrests prompted telegrams of protest from Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.'s Southern Christian Leadership Conference to U. S. Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy, to ICC chairman. Everett Hutchinson and to Atlanta Mayor William B. Hartsfield.

GEORGIA

The wire to Kennedy called for "swift and decisive action by your department." Hutchinson was asked to enforce the anti-discrimination ruling.

In the message to Hartsfield, SCLC said it was "distressed that our city, after having moved forward so creatively in race relations has today taken a step backward." It asked the mayor to use his influence to help resolve the matter.

The ICC ruling, announced in September, went into effect Wednesday. It requires station managers to post signs stating that all facilities are available to all interstate passengers.

Atlanta Trailways manager W. H. Rockwell said at the time the ICC ruling was announced that it presented no problem here because facilities already were desegregated.

Rockwell said Wednesday that signs had been posted as required. He declined to comment specifically on the restaurant situation.

A state civic and political leader charged Friday that the Central of Georgia Railroad is practicing segregation on its Atlanta-Savannah train, the Nancy Hanks.

J. H. Calhoun, co-chairman of the Georgia Voters League and vice - president of the Georgia Conference of NAACP Branches, said he was threatened with bodily removal from a Nancy Hanks coach after he refused to move up to the number one car, reserved for Negro passengers.

Calhoun said the diner was closed down three times inorder to keep him from eating breakfast.

The Atlanta civic leader, who is a former president of the Atlanta NAACP, said he was returning to Atlanta after a Thanksgiving Day in Savannah. He declared that the circumstances surrounding his "hit-in" were not planned.

He said that he was late boarding the train and rushed to get on a coach when a Negro porter told him he had to go to the first car. He said he insisted on boarding the car where he stood, and did so.

A few minutes later the conductor came to him and told him the last three cars were "reserved seat cars" and that he could not stay there. Only five of the seats were occupied, Calhoun said. After he refused to move, Calhoun said the conductor threatened to take him out bodily, and a train flagman sitting in the rear of the car said loudly, "Go ahead, I'll help you."

Calhoun declared he remained seated and later when breakfast was announced he went to the diner. The diner was immediately announced as closed and all of the persons seated were asked out. He said he went to the diner three times during the trip in an attempt to get something to eat, but each time all of the occupants were asked to leave.

Calhoun stated he planned to take some action in the case after conferring with his attorneys.

6 Columbus Negroes Held in Bus Seat Push

The Atlanta Constitution

COLUMBUS (UPI)—At least six Negroes were arrested here Monday in an attempt to integrate Columbus Transit System buses.

Tues. 2-28-61

The Negroes, some of them students, were arrested at two different locations by police after they allegedly refused the orders of drivers to move to the rear of the buses. They were charged with violating the state's bus seating law.

Atlanta, Ga.

A Negro attorney said bond of $100 was posted for each of the defendants. Seven Negroes were taken into custody but one was released without any charges being filed.

The bus integration attempt followed a warning by a Negro spokesman who informed the Columbus City Commission Monday afternoon that attempts would be made by Negroes to integrate city buses.

The Rev. E. B. Bryson told the commission, "There is another group of impatient citizens who will be riding your buses today as a protest against segregation."

Bryson made the statement after Columbus Mayor B. Ed. Johnson told Bryson the commissioners still had under study a request that the city voluntarily end segregated seating on city buses.

Hollowell Readies Legal Assault

Macon Braces for Segregation Blitz

By Trezzvant W. Anderson

MACON, Ga.—"April will not pass without action of some sort," was the firm and prophetic pronouncement given The Courier last week in Atlanta by Atty. Donald L. Hollowell, who is representing 15 Negro youths who staged a segregation blitz on bus segregation here a few weeks ago.

The Courier learned that Macon City Solicitor Clarence Clay has completed the accusations against the 15 and they were due to be served on Mr. Hollowell this week. Hearing scheduled for Macon City Court is the week of April 17. At that time court action will begin.

Whether Mr. Hollowell and his partner, Atty. Horace Ward, choose to let the cases remain in Macon City Court for determination, or file an independent action in the court of Federal District Judge W. A. Bootle remains to be seen.

THE ATTORNEYS are challenging the constitutionality of the Georgia state law under which the 15 were arrested.

It has already been ruled so by Federal District Judge Frank A. Hooper Jr., in the Atlanta bus desegregation case, and could be so held by a Macon City Court judge. Otherwise, there is always resort to the Federal courts. But Mr. Hollowell has promised that April will be the month of action.

It may well be that this legal attack on bias in Macon may restore the lagging spark of civic pride in Macon Negroes. Not long ago this town was aglow with pride in the solidarity of the Negro vote, without which no politician could get elected. Then came a grand jury probe into Negro bloc voting and a scare was thrown into Negroes.

Several who had been active in politics, to this reporter's knowledge, quit cold. The town became apathetic, there was a loss of civic pride. This shot in the arm, sparked by the wonderful youngsters who provided the case may well be just what is needed to revive in Macon Negroes the stimulus to renewed civic and racial pride in their strength and ability.

Non-Segregated Taxi Service Is Proposed

The possible international aspects and non-segregated setup of the new Atlanta Municipal Airport may bring an end to a long standing rule of complete segregation in the city taxicabs.

The Atlanta Aldermanic Board will soon be handed a measure seeking to eliminate cab segregation for the city. If approved, it would bring an end to segregation for taxi drivers or passengers.

The measure was introduced Tuesday night before the Police Committee of the Aldermanic Board. It sought to change the city ordnance in order to make taxis available to all passengers regardless of race. It further sought to allow either Negro or white drivers to transport passengers regardless of race.

The standing law forces Atlanta taxis to be identified in writing on the surface of the vehicle which race the transport is for. At present no white person can be carried in a Negro cab, nor a Negro in a white cab.

Many Georgia cities with less liberal policies, have had integrated taxi policies for years. Columbus where far more race discord exists a taxi can carry Negro or white passengers.

The prevailing idea at the committee meeting was apparently that the new multi-million dollar airport will not have any segregation policies, and is designed to bring more traffic through the city from virtually all points of the globe With the growth of size and importance of the city, visitors and dignitaries of every race may be stopping in the city. The segregated cab rule can hamper transportation, and possibly hurt the chance of urban growth.

The committee also heard proposals that Washington Street be made a two way until the expressway is completed. A proposal was also presented to remove an old law against riding on running boards of cars. The reason, modern cars have no running boards, rendering the law useless.

Integrated Buses Called Health Peril

AUGUSTA (AP)—The Augusta Coach Co. Monday asked Federal District Court to uphold a Georgia Public Service Commission rule which provides for segregation of races on public convevances for reasons of public health.

In an amendment to the coach company's answer filed with the U.S. District Court here, attorneys for the public transit firm claimed that segregation is necessary for the public's health.

The attorneys cited the State Department of Public Health's figures showing 96 per cent of infectious syphilis cases reported in 1960 were among Negroes.

Judge Frank M. Scarlett was scheduled to rule on a motion by the PSC to continue the case for at least 30 days.

The commission recently was made a party to the suit brought last year against the coach firm, the City of Augusta, Mayor Millard A. Beckum, and Augusta Police Chief F. B. Green by a group of Paine College students, following attempted integration of city buses here.

The PSC seeks a 30-day continuance of the case on the grounds it has just been made a party to the suit and has not had a chance to make necessary preparations, according to a motion filed by A. V. Conlin, assistant state attorney general.

Roy V. Harris and Henry T. Chance, attorneys for the coach company, pointed out this is the first time in the volume of integration cases filed that public health has been used as grounds.

Georgia nabs 15 on 'dead bus' law

MACON, Ga. — The Civil Right Division of the Justice Department has been asked to investigate the arrest, Feb. 27, of 15 persons arrested for refusing to observe segregated seating on city buses.

The 15, 13 of whom are teenagers, were arrested on charges of violating the state law which requires bus patrons to sit where directed.

While the law itself does not specifically require that riders be seated according to race, it delegates such authority to the bus company which requires colored passengers to be seated from the rear and whites from the front.

POLICE ARE called upon to inforce the racial seating policy of the bus company, a private firm.

A similar law in Birmingham, Ala., has been ruled unconstitutional.

FBI officials in Atlanta have referred the case to the Justice Department. The accused youths also sent a telegram to U.S. Attorney General Robert Kennedy asking the Department of Justice to intervene in the case.

Segregation by Law Is Dead, Duckworth Says

By BRUCE GALPHIN

Constitutional or statutory provisions for segregation "won't hold up any more," Georgia Supreme Court Chief Justice W. H. Duckworth stated from the bench Monday.

The jurist's observation was made during a hearing on the appeal of a Negro arrested after he sat in the front section of a Macon bus.

The chief justice made it clear that he was not passing on the particular case.

The Negro, John E. Glover, was arrested not under a segregation statute but a law empowering a bus conductor or driver to assign seats to passengers.

Unless it can be proved the assignment law was used solely to enforce segregation, Duckworth told attorney D. L. Hollowell, then the conviction will be sustained.

But the chief justice said, that "If you have a good constitutional case, we'll sustain you.

"We know we have had segregation—both constitutional and statutory—through the years, and that won't hold up any more. . . .

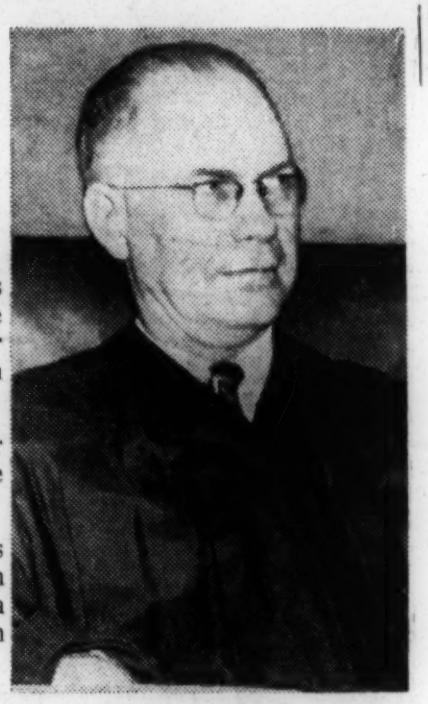
"We bow to the (U.S.) Supreme Court. We can't maintain segregation in violation of their decisions," Duckworth stated.

The chief justice spiritedly questioned both Hollowell and Clarence Clay, solicitor of the Macon City Court, about the facts and the constitutional principles of the case.

Duckworth said although segregation laws as such might be dead letters, the Georgia court was not going to overturn the conviction "just because some colored man objects to it" or allow itself to be "stampeded" into striking down other laws.

Hollowell maintained the conviction was illegal on two grounds:

1. That the seat assignment law was unconstitutional because it was part of an 1890 package of laws including one requiring separation of the races on common carriers.



"WON'T HOLD UP"
Chief Justice Duckworth

2. That even if constitutional on its face, the law was unconstitutionally applied because it was used solely to maintain segregation; that the arrest had "no reasonable basis."

Clay, however, argued the equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment did not pertain because the seating law applied equally to white and colored.

In another segregation case, Savannah Negro attorney E. H. Gadsden attacked the conviction of six adult Negroes arrested in Daffin Park playing basketball.

Slyvan A. Garfunkel, chief assistant solicitor general of the Eastern Judicial Circuit, however, contended that the park was supposed to be used by children and that Negro children had in the past played there. The Negroes, he said, were wearing shirts, coats and hard shoes.

The arresting officer did state that one reason he arrested the six was that they were Negroes, though, Garfunkel's brief said.

ICC mix order takes effect; Negroes testing it in Atlanta

The Birmingham News Wed. 11-1-61

P 1 Birmingham Ala

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

An Interstate Commerce Commission order outlawing segregation of public interstate bus travel went into effect today and Negroes quickly began testing the order's strength in Dixie.

Shortly after midnight, a group of Negroes sought service in a restaurant in the Trailways bus terminal in Atlanta. They were refused service by the manager and complied with a policeman's order to leave. There was no disorder.

In Jackson, Miss., city police quickly thwarted the first two challenges to segregation under the new ban on separated transportation terminal facilities.

A lone Negro made the first attempt at dawn and an hour later two Louisiana Negroes arrived by bus for another attempt.

Both groups ignored police department signs directing the races to separate waiting rooms.

THE REV. CHARLES A. Jones of Jackson, dean of Campbell College, entered the white waiting room of the Trailways bus terminal at dawn, carrying a suitcase. Two policemen ordered him to leave and he refused. The order and refusal were repeated and he was arrested without resistance or incident.

About 20 people in the terminal witnessed the arrest.

An hour later, two members of the Congress of Racial Equality from Shreveport, La., arrived by bus and walked into the white waiting room.

Officer W. L. Copeland told them, "You'll have to move on." Levert Taylor, 20, a CORE official, looked at the officer and said:

"Your order is in violation of the ICC ruling."

The order and reply were twice repeated and Copeland arrested Taylor and his companion, Glenda Jackson, also of Shreveport.

A spokesman for the Negroes, Charles Jones, a staff member of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee, indicated other tests will be made throughout the South.

Jones said a report of the incident in Atlanta will be made to the ICC and the Justice Department.

Alfred M. Holley, manager of the restaurant, said it is privately leased and has no connection with Trailways.

OFFICIALS IN three Southern states have said they will resist the ICC order.

The Birmingham News 11-1-61

Mississippi is expected to lead the Dixie battle against the tearing down of century-old laws and traditions requiring back-of-the-bus seating for Negroes and separate waiting rooms, rest rooms, drinking fountains and cafes.

The main weapon in the Mississippi segregation arsenal is a breach of peace statute which is not racial by nature, but which has been used effectively against invading "freedom riders" seeking to desegregate bus, train and airline facilities.

Another Deep South state, Georgia, has filed suit in U. S. Dist. Court seeking an injunction to invalidate the order. The Georgia Public Service Commission contends the order encroaches on the right of the state to regulate intrastate travel because interstate and intrastate travelers use the same facilities.

City officials in Shreveport, La., told management of the Continental Trailways bus terminal that passengers who violate Louisiana segregation laws will be arrested. Mayor Clyde E. Fant said the ICC directive conflicts with municipal and state statutes.

IN WASHINGTON, the Justice Department filed suit seeking to prevent Mississippi officials from enforcing its segregation law. The suit also seeks court orders prohibiting state and local officials throughout Mississippi from interfering with any motor carrier's efforts to observe the new ICC regulations.

A spokesman for the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) said in New York that Southern communities can expect a second wave of desegregationists. He said Montgomery, Ala., and Jackson, Miss., are on the list of communities scheduled for further tests.

Other racial developments:

Several lunch counters in Macon, Ga., were quietly desegregated.

Fourteen Negroes and one white man who demonstrated before the McComb, Miss., city hall earlier this month, were convinced of disturbing the peace. They received sentences ranging up to six months in jail and $500 fines.

Gov. Elbert N. Carvel of Delaware said he has never received a single report of racial discrimination along U. S. 40 in his state. "Most of the trouble, it seems to me, is in Maryland," he said.

A Negro electronics technician at Columbia University, brought suit in Superior Court at Bridgeport, Conn., accusing an integrated development of 52 homes in Norwalk of blocking sale of a house to him because of his race. The association denied the charge.

In Austin, Tex., a student integrationist group has hired an attorney to file a suit which would force the University of Texas to desegregate women's dormitories

Georgia Suit Attacks ICC Buses Order

The Birmingham News Wed. 11-1-61

ATLANTA, Oct. 31 (AP)—The Georgia Public Service Commission asked U.S. District Court today to set aside an Interstate Commerce Commission order banning segregation in interstate buses and terminals. The order goes into effect tomorrow.

The PSC claims the order encroaches on the right of the state to regulate intrastate commerce and exceeds powers given the ICC by Congress.

Regulations require that three judges must hear suits challenging such ICC orders. A preliminary hearing on the PSC petition will be held by a three-judge court after two additional judges are appointed by the chief judge of the U.S. Court of Appeals.

The ICC order requires that no segregated facilities or buses be used for interstate passengers. The state claims this effectively regulates intrastate commerce since the same buses and terminals are used for both interstate and intrastate passengers.

Court Refuses To Review Mixing Case

ATLANTA (AP)—Holding that constitutionality of a bus seating law was not properly challenged, the Georgia Supreme Court has declined to review the conviction of 12 Negroes arrested while testing segregated seating on Macon city buses.

The defendants filed a demurrer (motion to dismiss) in Macon City Court, attacking validity of a 1933 code section. But the supreme Court said when the demurrer was overruled, no exception was taken to the ruling and it thus amounts to an adjudication that the due process clause was not violated.

The supreme court, which accepts direct appeals from lower courts in criminal cases only when a constitutional question is raised or a capital offense is invoved, transferred the case tc the Court of Appeals.

The law involved makes it a penal offense for a passenger tc remain in any car, compartment or seat of a train, street car or bus other than one assigned tc him as a passenger by the conductor or operator.

The Negroes were convicted or a charge of refusing to move tc the rear of the bus when ordered to do so by the operator.

Court Moves $9 Million Bus Case Trial To Ala.

Journal and Guide
Norfolk, Va.

ATLANTA — (ANP) — A Federal Court judge in Atlanta has ordered transfer of a $9 million damage suit filed here against an interstate bus company to the United States District Court in Alabama.

The order, on file in the clerk's office was signed by U. S. District Judge Frank Hooper in connection with the damage action filed against the Southeastern Greyhound Lines Inc., by Miss Patricia Ann Shuttlesworth, a 17 - year-old college coed. She is the daughter of the Rev. Fred Shuttlesworth of Birmingham.

THE SUIT, filed last Nov. 15, alleged that Miss Shuttlesworth, while en route from Chattanooga to her home in Birmingham, was "illegally detained and abused" in Gadsden, Ala., after refusing a demand that she move to the rear of an interstate bus.

In a subsequent action, the defendant bus company asked for a change of venue.

The defendant's motions for a trial in another area went unopposed by Miss Shuttlesworth's attorneys.

Complainant in the case is Miss Patricia Ann Shuttlesworth, daughter of the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth of Birmingham, Ala.

Miss Shuttleworth filed the suit last Nov 15. She contends she was illegally detained and abused after refusing to move to the rear of an interstate bus. The incident occurred at Gasden, Ala.

Speed up of travel order is pledged

By LOUIS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON (NNPA) — The Interstate Commerce Commission Friday pledged that its long - awaited new regulations banning racial segregation in interstate travel will be issued promptly.

The pledge was made by Rubert L. Murphy, vice chairman, after listening to the pleas of seven clergymen Freedom Riders who flew to Washington after their arrests for trying to get a cup of coffee in the Jackson, Miss., airport.

Serving as spokesman for the interracial group of ministers was the Rev. Richard Byfield, assistant to the Episcopal Bishop of California. After their appeal to the ICC for a speed up of its order, the group visited Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy.

MR. KENNEDY agreed with the ministers that "religious leaders have not spoken out with as clear a voice as they might have in helping to bring about an end to segregation in the South without too many people being hurt."

Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., who has been urging the President to issue an executive order abolishing segregation, was to have joined the ministerial group in Washington but was detained in Philadelphia where he had gone to visit his ailing father.

MEANWHILE THE Department of Justice filed a support of the attorney general's May 29 request for a new regulation covering nondiscrimination in waiting rooms, rest rooms and restaurants of bus terminals.

The commission has scheduled a hearing on the proposed new order for August 15.

The Justice Department's brief points out in recent months efforts by American citizens to use the facilities of interstate bus transportation without racial discrimination, have dramatized a sharp cleavage between the federal law and local practice.

"Although the law clearly provides that persons traveling on buses in interstate commerce shall be free from racial discrimination while using the facilities of such commerce," the brief states, "many travelers have been frustrated in their efforts to do so.

"In terminal facilities they have faced refusal of service, the closing of facilities, physical violence, and even arrest by local police.

"These conditions cannot be tolerated. Not only are rights involved, but respect for law itself."

* * *

THE BRIEF REVEALS that the files of the Justice Department contains complaints of 39 incidents of racial discrimination in interstate bus transportation, in the past three years. Of these incidents, 17 involved discrimination in terminal facilities and 22 involved segregated seating aboard buses.

Alabama led with seven complaints, and Florida and Georgia were tied for second place with six complaints each.

An FBI survey of bus terminals in southern states was made in the cities in which the FBI has offices to determine whether signs were posted at bus terminals designating separate facilities for colored and white people.

The results of the survey show that of 20 terminals observed in Alabama, 11 have racial designated facilities. Of 14 terminals in Arkansas, six have signs posted. In two cities in Delaware, no signs were posted at the bus terminals.

OF 30 TERMINALS in Florida, 12 have signs posted. Of 24 terminals in Georgia, nine have signs posted. Of 13 in Kentucky, one has signs posted. Of 10 in Louisiana, seven have signs posted. There are no signs posted in the bus terminals in 10 cities in Maryland.

Of 18 terminals observed in Mississippi, 18 have signs posted. Of 20 terminals observed in Missouri, none has signs posted. Of 15 terminals in North Carolina, two have signs posted. There are no sigs posted in terminals in 12 Oklahoma cities.

Of 10 terminals in South Carolina, three have signs posted. Of 31 terminals in Tennessee, 13 have signs posted. Of 39 terminals in Texas, 13 have signs posted. Of the terminals in 14 cities in Virginia, two have signs posted. There are no signs posted in the terminals in 12 cities in West Virginia.

* * *

ALL OF THE terminals observed by FBI agents are being used by interstate carriers. A number of them, although not posted with racial signs, the Justice Department said, had duplicate facilities.

FBI agents photographed some of the racial signs. The photographs, which were included in the brief with the ICC, showed an apparent effort to distinguish between intrastate and interstate passengers.

Signs discriminating passengers, the Justice Department said, appear in Louisiana, Georgia, Arkansas, Mississippi, North Carolina, and South Carolina.

Certain of the segregation signs posted in terminals in Mississippi bear the words "By order of the Police," or some similar legend.

* * *

THE BRIEF DECLARES that the results of the FBI survey "confirm the persistence of racial discrimination in interstate bus transportation in a number of states.

"Inasmuch as the survey was limited to an observation of posted signs, it reveals only such discrimination as is blatant and open.

"It is reasonabe to assume that racial discrimination extends to at least some terminals where the racial distinctions are not broadcast to the world through printed signs."

Attorney General Kennedy asked Secretary of State Dean Rusk and Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara their opinion of the effect of racial discrimination in interstate bus travel upon United States foreign relations and the defense establishment. Mr. Kennedy filed with the Commission the replies from the two Cabinet officers.

SECRETARY RUSK emphasized the difficulty occasioned his Department in the conduct of foreign relations by incidents of racial discrimination within this country.

Secretary McNamara expressed the full support of the Defense Department for the adoption of the rules proposed by the Justice Department. In his letter Mr. McNamara described some of the devices used by the military to avoid subjecting their pesonnel to racial discrimination while traveling.

"That such devices need be used is eloquent testimony to this Nation's failure to eliminate racial discrimination in a field in which there is clear federal jurisdiction," the brief asserts.

In addition to the Attorney General, the brief is signed by Burke Marshall, Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Civil Rights Division; St. John Barrett, John L. Murphy and Irving N. Tranen, Justice Department attorneys.

IN A LETTER to the ICC, July 19, 1961, Robert L. Carter, NAACP general counsel, calls upon the ICC to "promulgate rules and regulations to insure the right of interstate passengers to use the facilities of carriers, subject to the jurisdiction of the ICC without discrimination based upon race and color."

This right, the letter points out, has been firmly "established since 1955 when the Commission decided NAACP St. Louis and San Francisco Ry. Co. and Keys v. Another NAACP case, Boynton v. Virginia, "would seem to require all such restaurants to adopt a policy of equal treatment," the letter asserts.

Nevertheless, Mr. Carter told the ICC, the NAACP has continued to receive complaints "that some railroad carriers were still assigning cars throughout the South and, for example, that the Illinois Central Railroad was still directing passengers to segregated cars at Chicago, the point of origin, for trips into the South.

"WE HAVE also received complaints of persons being threatened and subjected to violence for attempting to exercise their right to use interstate motor bus facilities without discrimination in many areas in the South, particularly on trips that traversed Mississippi."

It is the view of the NAACP, the Association's general counsel said, "that by promulgating the rules and regulations as suggested by the Department of Justice that the commission will make unmistakably clear to all carriers and their employees that they are under a duty and an obligation to enforce a policy of non-discrimination in the use of their facilities."

Mr. Carter indicated a desire to present oral argument before the Commission in support of the Attorney General's proposals.

'Already mixed,' railroads say

BY HARRY KELLY

WASHINGTON, Oct. 17—(AP)—Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy has announced that three major railroads have ordered racial desegregation of all their facilities in the South. But two of the railroads said later they hadn't been practicing segregation.

Kennedy issued the statement after Rev. Martin Luther King told a news conference that the Justice Department had told him of the desegregation orders put out by the railroads—the Illinois Central, Southern and the Louisville & Nashville.

KING, NEGRO integration leader from Atlanta, had conference Monday with both President Kennedy and his brother, the attorney general.

King said he had been advised the railroads had "issued orders, to go into effect immediately, that all facilities, all terminals be desegregated immediately."

As King was making his announcement, Justice Department officials were preparing a statement detailing the plan.

They said the statement was to have been issued today after confirmation that the order had gone into effect in 10 Southern states—Louisiana, Tennessee, Kentucky, Virginia, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, North Carolina and South Carolina.

ATTY. GEN. KENNEDY said Justice Department officials had held several meetings with the railroad operators to work out the voluntary desegregation program.

Kennedy said of the railroads: "Their action represents more than voluntary compliance with the law. It also represents acceptance of a great responsibility to the nation.

Theirs is the kind of acceptance of responsibility which we at the Department of Justic hope will help the nation continue to make progress in guaranteeing equal rights under the law to all Americans . . ."

IN CHICAGO, Illinois Central president Wayne Johnston said his line had done nothing but continue compliance with a 1956 Interstate Commerce Commission ruling banning segregation in interstate transportation.

"All we've done," he added, "is to see it's enforced. We want to be law abiding citizens and do the job we're supposed to do."

Another Illinois Central spokesman said the railroad had no control over concessionaire-operated lunch counters at terminals or where local authorities enforce segregation. He said passengers are loaded strictly by destination and have freedom of movement on all trains.

BUT JOHNSTON said he knew of no meeting between the railroad and the Justice Department on the subject of segregation. And Joseph Wright, the Illinois Central's general manager and vice president, added "there never had been any meeting in Washington" on segregation involving the IC.

Warren A. McNeill, director of public relations for the Louisville & Nashville, said the railroad had maintained no segregation in its stations or passenger cars for the past year and a half.

Edison Thomas, L&N news bureau manager, said the railroad hadn't practiced segregation for years.

There were two qualifications, he said. In Alabama and Mississippi, where state laws require segregated waiting rooms for intrastate passengers, the railroad took down "white" and "colored" signs over its waiting rooms but local and state authorities put them up again.

But the railroad made no effort to enforce observance of the signs, he said, and they have been removed again.

There was no comment from Southern.

KING SAID he had received a sympathetic hearing at the White House where he proposed that the president issue an executive order declaring all segregation unconstitutional under the 14th Amendment. King said it would be sort of a second emancipation proclamation.

Little Effect Seen In RFK Mixing Pact

Southern Railroads Agree To Mix Waiting Room, Eating Facilities

By UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

An agreement by the South's three largest railroads to desegregate their terminal waiting rooms and eating facilities was expected to have little effect today on present customs in Dixie.

Many of the railroad terminals lowered racial barriers some time ago; others are required to maintain them under state and city laws yet to be tested fully in federal courts.

Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy announced in Washington Monday that the Illinois Central, the Louisville & Nashville and the Southern railroads had agreed to eliminate separate facilities for whites and Negroes. Kennedy said these railroads, which operate a majority of train terminals in the South, deserve "great credit" for their action.

SOME NOT COVERED

Kennedy said, however, that travelers probably would encounter racial discrimination in some railroad terminals where lunch counters and restaurants are privately operated and not covered by the agreement.

"Even a sense of responsibility and voluntary compliance with the law cannot guarantee that some travelers may not experience unpleasant incidents," Kennedy said.

The Illinois Central some time ago took down signs segregating white and Negro waiting rooms at its Jackson, Miss., terminal. But the city erected other signs and police enforced them—a move resulting in the arrest of a number of "freedom riders."

The riders were charged with breach of the peace for refusing to obey police orders to "move on." Three Jackson Negroes have filed suit in federal court challenging the city's use of breach of peace laws in making such arrests.

ARREST IN VIRGINIA

A Negro civil rights leader, Lester Banks, was arrested at Lynchburg, Va., Monday for refusing to leave a white restaurant at the Norfolk and Western Railroad terminal. He was charged with violating Virginia's anti-trespass law.

Train terminal desegregation has been accomplished over much of the South without incident or publicity. In many instances Negroes, while permitted to use former "white" waiting rooms, continue the traditional custom of waiting in segregated rooms.

Most Southern Railway terminal facilities in North Carolina have been desegregated. The station master at the L&N station at Nashville, Tenn., said the terminal has had no segregated facilities "for the past five or six years."

At Memphis, an official at Union Station said "white" and "colored" signs had been taken down "three or four years ago."

MIXING ORDERED BY THREE LINES

L&N, Southern, IC End Segregation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy said Monday night three major railroads have ordered racial desegregation of all their facilities in the South.

The railroads are the Illinois Central, Southern, and Louisville & Nashville.

A statement from Kennedy confirmed a news conference announcement by Rev. Martin Luther King, Negro leader from Atlanta who held conferences with both President Kennedy and the attorney general.

Robert Kennedy also announced that two Southern airports — at Columbus, Ga., and Raleigh-Durham, N. C. — have voluntarily desegregated their terminals.

King said he had been very sympathetically received at the White House, where he proposed that the President issue an executive order declaring all segregation in the nation unconstitutional under the 14th amendment. King said such an order would be sort of a second emancipation proclamation.

The attorney general said the three railroads deserve great credit for instructing their employes to desegregate southern terminals.

ALSO ACCEPTANCE

"Their action represents more than voluntary compliance with the law," said Kennedy. "It also represents acceptance of a great responsibility to the nation.

"Theirs is the kind of acceptance of responsibility which we at the department of justice hope will help the nation continue to make progress in guaranteeing equal rights under the law to all Americans.

"We can now count progress in each of the major transportationareas. The Interstate Commerce Commission recently issued desegregation regulations for bus lines. At least two Southern airports have voluntarily desegregated their facilities, and the department has brought action in connection with facilities at two others.

"Travelers still may face racial discrimination in some terminal facilities. Even a sense of responsibility and voluntary compliance with the law cannot guarantee that some travelers may not experience unpleasant incidents. The important thing, however, is that we have made great progress and are continuing to do so."

COURT ACTIONS

Court actions have been brought in New Orleans, La., and Montgomery, Ala. in an effort to force desegregation at air terminals there.

The attorney general said justice department officials had held several meetings with the railroad operators to work out the voluntary desegregation plan. It was understood at least four of these negotiating sessions were held in recent weeks.

At the moment King was announcing the step to White House reporters, justice department officials were preparing a statement detailing the plan.

The statement was to have been issued Tuesday after confirmation that the plan had gone into effect in 10 Southern states —Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Kentucky and Virginia.

King said the action involving the railroad terminals will apply to waiting rooms, restaurants, eating accommodations and all other facilities.

Three Railroads in South Order Full Desegregation

Illinois Central, Southern, L. & N. Act— Attorney General Hails Carriers and Dr. King Voices Gratification

By TOM WICKER

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 16— Three major railroads have agreed to end racial segregation in all their terminal facilities in the South. Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy announced today.

The three are the Illinois Central, the Southern and the Louisville and Nashville.

Their action had been disclosed earlier by the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. as he left an hour-long meeting with President Kennedy at the White House.

"I would imagine that these are the three largest carriers serving the South," Dr. King added. "I would commend the railroads for this very forthright step."

The Attorney General, in his statement, gave the railroads "great credit" for their action.

It meant, Mr. Kennedy said, that "we have made great progress and are continnuing to do so" in ending racial segregation in interstate transportation.

In another action in the racial field, the Supreme Court affirmed today a lower court's decision holding unconstitutional two Louisiana laws designed to block public-school integration.

The Attorney General said of the railroad's order:

"We can now count progress in each of the major transportation areas." He cited an Interstate Commerce Commission order for the desegregation of bus terminals, the voluntary desegregation of two airports, and Federal suits to end segregation at two others.

Those voluntarily desegregated are at Raleigh-Durham, N. C., and Columbus, Ga. Those where suits are pending are at New Orleans and Montgomery, Ala.

Administration sources said representatives of the railroads had met four times with Justice Department officials since early September. The officials were seeking desegregation of thority of the Interstate Commerce Act of 1888.

Last week, the railroad representatives told the Justice officials that instructions had been sent for immediate removal of segregation signs, and for the discontinuance of segregation practices.

Dr. King said his purpose in going to the White House had been to propose that President Kennedy issue "a second Emancipation Proclamation" ending all forms of segregation.

Talked of Segregation

Their conversation, he added, ranged widely over the problems of segregation, which he said persisted 'as a glaring reality in the South and in subtle and hidden forms all over the nation."

In addition to the proclamation he requested, Dr. King said he had urged President Kennedy to issue an Executive order banning segregation in public or federally assisted housing, and to call for an investigation by the Civil Rights Commission of limitations on the right to vote in Mississippi.

Dr. King is a Methodist minister from Atlanta who has become an asknowledged leader of the movement among Negroes for "nonviolent" resistance to segregation. He led the successful Negro boycott of the city bus system in Montgomery, Ala., when he was a minister there.

Dr. King pointed out today that the original Emancipation Proclamation, issued by President Lincoln in 1863, had been in the form of an Executive order. Its effect was to free the slaves in states that were then under the control of the Confederacy.

Now, he said, "almost a hundred years later," Mr. Kennedy should issue an Executive order "declaring all segregated facilities illegal and unconstitutional on the basis of the fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution."

Describes Conversation

The President, Dr. King said, "listened sympathetically" and said he would take the proposal under consideration.

Dr. King said he had requested his meeting with the President because he had been talking about such a "second Emancipation Proclamation" for some time and thought he should present it directly to Mr. Kennedy.

He would follow up the proposal, he said, by submitting a legal justification for such an order, prepared by his attorneys.

Dr. King said he had not discussed the question of interstate travel or the Freedom Riders with the President, but had done so in an earlier conversation with the Attorney General and other officials of the Justice Department.

They informed him that the three railroads were ending segregation at their terminals, including rest rooms, waiting rooms and eating places.

Dr. King described the railroads' action as particularly important, since a recent Interstate Commerce Commission order concerning desegregation in terminals had affected bus companies only.

He said the Justice Department was already investigating alleged violations of the right to vote in Mississippi and that there was "very little that can be done otherwise."

He urged the president to call for a Civil Rights Commission investigatiton in Mississippi, he added, with particular emphasis on events at McComb. There, students have been convicted and imprisoned for conducting sit-ins, and students of the Negro high school have staged protest marches.

The marchers also were arrested, and nineteen of them were charged with breaching the peace.

Dr. King said he had particularly urged President Kennedy to issue an Executive order banning segregation in housing.

"This is one of the most important areas," he said. "As long as there is segregation in housing, there will be segregation in schools, recreation, and all other areas."

Bus Arrest Results In Test Case

The fate of an 18-year-old Fort Hill Negro woman, who may have been illegally arrested, was in doubt this week at city law enforcement officers conferred to rule whether or not women traffic control officers have power of arrest.

Miss Virginia Arthur, of 606 E. Burnett, was arrested on a loaded bus at 4th and W. Chestnut Sts. by Mrs. Dorothy Heltsley, the traffic control officer following an altercation between the two.

Miss Arthur was charged with disorderly conduct. Police Court Judge Hugo Taustine continued the case until April 11 to give time for the city law department to rule if the women officers have authority to arrest.

Atty. James A. Crumlin, counsel for Miss Arthur, argued that Miss Heltsley had no power to arrest Miss Arthur. Police Chief Binder said earlier that he believed the women officers powers to be limited.

Colonel W. G. Matton, director of Safety, ruled it was "no doubt that traffic control officers had powers of arrest. I don't know why there is confusion about it", said Matton, "These women are peace officers with authority to arrest."

Matton explained that Kentucky Statute 95-160 governing the appointment of mounted and special police officers. He said he explained this to Mrs. Heltsley when he swore her in three years ago.

U. S. Court Rules:

Baton Rouge Must Desegregate Buses

By JOHN E. ROUSSEAU

NEW ORLEANS—Public buses in Baton Rouge were ordered desegregated when Federal District Judge Herbert W. Christenberry last Thursday signed a permanent injunction classifying a city ordinance as unconstitutional. The ruling was in the case filed by Rev. Theodore J. Jemison, et al v. the city of Baton Rouge, Jack Christian, individually, et al, acting in concert.

The suit filed in Federal Court in 1957 by Atty. A. P. Tureaud on behalf of the plaintiffs challenged the constitutionality of a city ordinance which required bus passengers to be segregated according to race.

THE RULING signed by Judge Christenberry stated:

". . . The court having considered the pleadings, the record in this cause, oral arguments and the briefs submitted by the parties, and after being fully advised in the premises, having found that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the enforced segregation of Negro passengers solely because of race and/or color, on buses operated by the Baton Rouge Bus Company in the city of Baton Rouge, La., as required by city ordinance of the city of Baton Rouge, violates the constitution and laws of the United States.

• Now, accordingly, it is ordered, adjudged and decreed that Emergency Ordinance No. 251, of the city of Baton Rouge, requiring segregation of the races on buses, is unconstitutional and void, in that it denies and deprives plaintiffs and other Negroes similarly situated of the equal protection of the laws and due process of law secured by the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States and rights and privileges secured by Title 42, United States Code, Sections 1981 and 1983.

"It is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that the defendants, their successors in office, assigns, agents, servants, employes and persons acting on their behalf be, and they are, hereby permanently enjoined and restrained.

"(1) From enforcing the aforesaid ordinance requiring plaintiffs and other Negroes similarly situated to submit to segregation in the use of buses in the city of Baton Rouge, La.

"(2) From doing any act or taking any action which would require any public transportation facility to segregate white and Negro passengers in the operation of buses in the city of Baton Rouge, La.

"It is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that this judgment shall become effective when it shall have become final after exhaustion of appeals . . ."

Bus Segregation In Baton Rouge Ruled Illegal

NEW ORLEANS. — (UPI) — A U.S. district judge last Friday ruled that a Baton Rouge bus segregation ordinance was unconstitutional and enjoined the bus company and city officials from enforcing it.

But Baton Rouge officials said they would appeal Judge Herbert W. Christenberry's judgement, which will not become effective until "exhaustion of appeals."

Judge Christenberry ruled Louisiana's capital city ordinance No. 215 was "unconstitutional and void in that it denies and deprives plaintiffs and other Negroes—equal protection of the laws and due process of law secured by the 14th amendments...."

His judgement permanently enjoined officials of the Baton Rouge Bus Co., the mayor, council, sheriff and police chief from enforcing the 1953 ordinance.

Baton Rouge city-parish attorney Gordon Kean said he would appeal Christenberry's decision. He said the ordinance was unique because it reserved the back seat at the rear of the busses for Negroes and two side seats at the front for whites.

"The rest of the seats," Kean said, "were on a first come, first serve basis. We didn't think it was an attempt to segregate bus passengers."

Christenberry enjoined the Bus company and city officials from "enforcing, the aforesaid ordinance," or "doing any act or taking any action which would require any public transportation facility to segregate white and Negro passengers..."

New Orleans presently is the only city in the state with integrated city buses. An NAACP official said a suit was pending to desegregate buses in Lake Charles.

The Baton Rouge suit was filed in 1957 by the Rev. T. J. Jemison, and five other Negroes. A. P. Tureaud of New Orleans is the principal attorney for the plaintiffs

Ends Bus Jim Crow In N Orleans

NEW ORLEANS—(ANP)—Federal Judge J. Skelly Wright last week issued a permanent injunction ending bus segregation in Baton Rouge. He ruled the city ordinance requiring bus segregation unconstitutional.

U.S. COURT VOIDS BAN ON BUS MIX

Calls Baton Rouge Ordinance Unconstitutional

Baton Rouge bus segregation was declared unconstitutional Thursday by Federal District Judge Herbert W. Christenberry.

He also permanently enjoined city officials and the Baton Rouge Bus Company from enforcing segregated seating as required under a city ordinance and from taking any action which would require any public transportation facility to segregate white and Negro passengers in the city's busses.

In a brief judgment, Judge Christenberry said that he had considered the pleadings, the record, oral arguments and briefs in the case. He stated he found no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the enforced segregation of Negro passengers, because of race as required by the Baton Rouge city ordinance violates the constitution of the United States.

He ruled that the ordinance is unconstitutional and void because it denies the Negro plaintiffs in the case and others similarly situated the equal protection of the laws and due process of law.

The suit to desegregate the Baton Rouge public transit was brought by six Negro plaintiffs in 1957 against city officials and the bus company.

In Baton Rouge, Mayor-President Jack Christian said that although he has not had official word of the court ruling, "we will definitely take an appeal."

Christian said that he had discussed the matter with Gordon Kean, parish attorney. Kean said that the ordinance under attack is unique in that it merely reserved the seat at the rear of the bus for Negroes and two side seats in the front for whites.

"The rest of the seats were on a first come, first served basis, and we didn't think it was an attempt to segregate bus passengers," Kean said.

Baton Rouge 'Barriers' Come Down

By John E. Rousseau

A permanent Federal Court injunction signed last Thursday by Judge Herbert W. Christenberry in the United States District Court here struck down an ordinance under which city bus passengers are segregated according to race in Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

The City of Baton Rouge has announced its intention to appeal the injunction and thus gain a stay of execution of the Federal Court's order.

Judge Christenberry's ruling was given in response to a suit filed by six Baton Rouge Negro citizens on Feb. 4, 1957. They are Rev. T. J. Jemison, Rev. Felton Hitchens, Dupuy H. Anderson, Curtis J. Gilliam and L. J. James. More recently, the plaintiffs asked the court for a summary judgment contending there is no material issue of fact in the case as it then stood.

The injunction signed by Judge Christenberry stated:

"Now, accordingly, it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed that Emergency Ordinance No. 251 of the City of Baton Rouge, requiring segregation of the races on buses, is unconstitutional and void, in that it denies and deprives plaintiffs and other Negroes similarly situated of the equal protection of the laws and due process of law secured by the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States and rights and privileges secured by Title 42, United States

Code, Sections 1981 and 1983.

"It is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that the defendants, their successors in office, assigns, agents, servants, employees and persons acting on their behalf be, and they are, hereby permanently enjoined and restrained (1) from enforcing the aforesaid ordinance requiring plaintiffs and other Negroes similarly situated to submit to segregation in the use of buses in the City of Baton Rouge, La., and (2) from doing any act or taking any action which would require any public transportation facility to segregate white and Negro passengers in the operation of buses in the City of Baton Rouge, La.

"It is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that this judgment shall become effective when it shall have become final after exhaustion of appeals..."

Mayor - President Jack Christian of Baton Rouge said, "We will definitely take an appeal."

Contradictory Orders Confuse Bus Terminals

MONROE, La. — (UPI) — Segregation signs were up again this week in a bus terminal whose managers seemed undecided whether to follow state law or federal non-discrimination regulations.

Wednesday, Nov. 1, when the Interstate Commerce Commission (ICC) rule took effect, Continental Southern Lines had the "white" and "colored" signs removed from waiting rooms and restrooms.

In answer to a state judge's court order restraining the firm from breaking state segregation statues, the firm late Friday put the signs back up over the restrooms only.

"As far as we are concerned," said Terminal Manager Ernest Hall, "anyone can sit anywhere they want. Everything I do in this is on instructions from our company."

The president of Continental Southern, M. W. Walker, indicated from his office in Alexandria, La., that the firm's policy resulted from advice of lawyers.

The Monroe judge's order threatened prosecution for contempt of court if the segregation signs were not replaced.

In Baton Rouge, where some signs have been down for months, two state judges signed separate orders along similar lines against Greyhound and Continental Trailways bus companies, which operate terminals in the state capital.

Louisiana Is Second State Hit

WASHINGTON (NNPA) — The government turned its legal guns against the state of Louisiana Friday as it continued to seek state compliance with federal law and new Interstate Commerce Commission regulations.

Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy said the Justice department, which challenged the constitutionality of Mississippi state segregation statutes in suits filed Oct. 31 and Nov. 2, brought similar action in Louisiana.

He said his department filed a complaint in United States district court in Shreveport, asserting that enforcement of segregation law in Monroe, La., conflicts with federal law and the ICC bus desegregation regulations which went into effect Nov. 1.

Mr. Kennedy also announced the filing of a "certificate of general public importance" on Friday in United States district court in Oxford, Miss., to expedite the case filed there Tuesday. That suit charged obstruction of Greyhound Corporation's compliance with the new regulations in LeFlore County, Miss.

Under the federal transportation code, when such a certificate is filed by the attorney general, the chief judge of the circuit in which the case is filed is required immediately to convene a three-judge court to speed action in the case in every way possible.

"Unless injunctive relief is promptly forthcoming," the certificate said, "the resulting clash between federal and state authority, which these and other public officials, including defendants have percipitated, can not but lead to widespread confusion and disrespect for law and order."

In the Louisiana suit filed Friday, the department asked that sections 1301 to 1305 of the Louisiana statues be declared unconstitutional and that Monroe officials be forbidden to enforce them.

Named as defendants were State Judge Mack Barham and District Attorney Albin Lassiter, both of the state's fourth judicial district, Continental Southern Lines, Inc., of Alexandria, La., a Trailways System member, and Ernest Hall, Continental's Monroe terminal manager.

On Oct. 31, the complaint said, Continental took down racial signs in its Monroe terminal, in compliance with the regulations.

The next day, however, Mr Lassiter sought and received from Judge Barham an injunction requiring Continental to restore the signs, in conformity with the state segregation laws and in conflict with the ICC regulations. Continental obeyed the state court injunction on Nov. 2, the government action said.

The Justice department already has challenged the constitutionality of the Louisiana statutes, in a similar suit filed in Baton Rouge, Sept. 1, but, according to the U.S. attorney general, that suit is in pre-trial stages.

Bus, Rail Lines Defend Policies

Deny They Posted Signs Ordering Segregation In Terminals

By KENNETH TOLER
From The Commercial Appeal
Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 25. — Bus and railroad company representatives told a three-judge Federal court Monday that their lines do not require segregation of the races in any of their facilities.

Testifying in a "class action" suit by three Jackson Negro business leaders against enforcement of segregation through use of a state breach of the peace statute were officials of the Greyhound and Trailways bus lines and the Illinois Central Railroad.

They said signs in their facilities were placed there by city officials.

In the case of the Jackson City Lines, also defendant in the suit, its representative said signs in their vehicles were there to preevnt violence by calling patrons' attention to a city ordinance. They said the signs stated that whites were to be seated from the front and Negroes from the rear.

Wider Implication

Although the so-called "Freedom Rider" cases are not directly involved in the action seeking to enjoin officials from enforcing segregation, a decion barring enforcement of the breach of the peace statute in segregated-related instances would prevent future arrests.

However, on that point, Thomas Watkins, attorney for the City of Jackson, where the arrests were made, said they were not for violating segregation statutes but for breach of the peace.

Although the suit names the state attorney general as a defendant on the theory he is the chief law enforcement officer of the state, Judge Richard Rives of the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that the state officials could not be held responsible for the enforcement of the state's criminal laws.

Judge Rives said Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson is not responsible for all criminal prosecutions, as is the case in other states, after counsel for the plaintiffs failed to connect him directly with threatened enforcement of state segregation laws.

Arrests have been made in cases where mixed groups entered segregated facilities and refused to move on when so ordered by police officers.

Hearing the case filed on behalf of the three Negroes by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People are Circuit Judge Rives, District Judge Clause Claude Clayton of Tupelo and District Judge S. C. Mize of Gulfport.

Witnesses who said they had been arrested for entering segregated facilities and charged with breach of the peace testified in the first day's hearing. They denied they had committed any acts which violate the state's breach of the peace statute and that there was no violence or demonstrations.

No Instructions

The manager of the Jackson airport said he had no instructions as to segregation there. He said the only signs there, installed many years ago, were on rest rooms and water fountains. He said a restaurant in the airport terminal was leased to a private individual without any stipulations as to the customers he would serve.

One of those testifying was Medgar Evers, field secretary of NAACP in Mississippi. He related a 1958 incident in which he boarded a bus at Meridian and was beaten by a taxi driver for occupying the front seat. However, he said, he was permitted to occupy the front seat on his journey to Jackson.

The NAACP secretary also said he was denied service in the Jackson airport restaurant that same year and has not returned since "because of the humiliation he would suffer."

Delay in Decision Could Bring Action—Young

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — J. Will Young, attorney for Jackson City Lines, told a three-judge federal court Wednesday his company would be forced to suspend operations before Thursday morning if a decision were delayed in a suit seeking desegregation of transportation facilities.

Young indicated he felt Negroes would break the color barrier, forcing the drivers to obey company instructions to stop buses.

"Because of local custom, tradition and usage which we can't control," he said, "the situation in Jackson is explosive. City Lines drivers have instructions to halt buses if passengers break the seating law.

"By tomorrow morning, there won't be a bus operating in Jackson."

Young made his prediction at the close of three days of testimony in the suit filed by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People for three Jackson Negroes, Joseph Broadwater, Samuel Bailey and Burnett Jacob.

Presiding Judge Richard T. Rives of Montgomery, Ala., from the U.S. fifth circuit court of appeals, told Young he would have to make up his own mind about removing segregated seating signs and the instructions to drivers to halt buses. He said the court would not be able to announce a decision within 10 days.

The three-judge court called for attorneys to file briefs within 20 days, by Oct. 18, and said final arguments would begin at 9:30 a. m. Thursday.

State attorneys sought to show Wednesday that Mississippi avoided "freedom rider" violence by racial separation, the policies under attack by the suit.

Special state assistant attorney general Charles Clark said the state brought out testimony from Alabama officers on rider violence when no effort was made at segregation. He also had testimony to back claims that Mississippi preserved order by enforcing segregation when the riders arrived.

The suit was filed by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People for the three Jackson men. They seek a federal court order to force desegregation of transportation facilities.

R. W. Godwin, Alabama public safety commission captain, testified he advised Mississippi of Alabama violence when the riders reached his state last May. He said no effort was made to segregate the races immediately before or during the violence.

W. Marvin Stanley, assistant police chief at Montgomery, Ala., testified Montgomery was criticized by federal court for not maintaining order.

Mrs. Constance Baker Motley of New York, Negro attorney for the Jackson men who filed the suit, objected to the testimony of the Alabama officials on grounds "violence is no excuse for maintaining segregation."

The defense brought several bus drivers to the stand to combat discrimination charges made earlier in proceedings by Negroes.

Greyhound driver P. E. Lammy told about an incident involving Mrs. Vera Piggee of Clarksdale, a Negro who said she had been made to move aside so two white passengers could board a bus ahead of her. Lammy said race had nothing to do with his order, which was made to permit through passengers to reclaim their seats.

Bobby Ray Burks, a Trailways driver from Shreveport, La., testified he had nothing to do with an incident involving Dr. Jane Ellen McAllister of Vicksburg, a Negro college teacher who said a police officer had taken her off a rear seat after asking her to move to the very back seat, then permitted her to reboard.

Trailways driver Gerald Shelton of Meridian said an incident involving Medgar Evers of Jackson, an NAACP official, occurred before the bus company abandoned its policy of segregating intrastate passengers.

All three drivers said how the policy of their companies is to let passengers choose their own seats.

Three of the eight defendants in the case rested during the morning without introducing witnesses. They were Cicero's airport restaurant, the Jackson airport authority and the Illinois Central railroad.

The other five were the Greyhound, Trailways and City Bus lines, the attorney general of Mississippi and the city of Jackson.

All eight defendants asked the 3-judge court to dismiss the suit for lack of evidence. The judges took the motions under advisement, giving no indication when they would rule, and continued testimony.

Federal Court Studies Suit To Mix Jackson Facilities

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — A three-judge federal court took under consideration Thursday a Negro suit seeking to abolish all forms of racial segregation in bus, rail and air terminals in Mississippi and on Jackson city bus lines.

Presiding Judge Richard T. Rives of Montgomery, Ala., U. S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals judge, said he believed the request should be granted. He added the opinion was his own and that the court would not give a final ruling for another 20 days.

A preliminary injunction could be issued within 10 days, he said, if the court felt segregation laws were unconstitutional and segregation signs should be removed and segregation arrests prohibited.

Rives said he felt that police should be forbidden to arrest people who conduct themselves orderly in breaking segregation barriers.

Jackson police have arrested 312 "Freedom Riders" for breach of the peace after desegregation attempts in transportation terminals since May 24.

The attack upon Mississippi's century-old segregation laws was filed as a class action by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People for three Jackson Negroes, Joseph Broadwater, Samuel Bailey and Burnett Jacob.

In final arguments, attorneys for the Illinois Central Railroad and Greyhound and Trailways bus companies said their companies had no policies or regulations requiring segregation either in terminals or on trains or busses.

They said the only reason they maintained separate waiting room, lunch counter and rest room facilities was because of state laws and city ordinances.

Junior O'Mara, attorney for the two bus companies, said company policy for the last three years has been to let bus passengers seat themselves wherever they wished without regard to the normal pattern of whites to the front and Negroes to the rear.

Watkins, attorney for the city of Jackson, and Asst. Atty. Gen. Dugas Shands argued that the suit was not a proper class action.

Watkins contended that the people of Jackson have lived in peace and harmony for the last century under the traditional practice of segregation.

He added that segregation laws were a valid use of the police powers of the city.

CITY ORDINANCES

J. Will Young, attorney for the Jackson City Lines, did not make a closing argument. Wednesday, he urged the court to reach a decision quickly to prevent forced suspension of city bus service.

He said city ordinances forbidding city buses to operate on a nonsegregated basis, coupled with Mayor Allen Thompson's statement that segregation laws were not being enforced, meant that integration-minded Negroes could stop the buses individually by breaking the color barrier.

Defendants in the suit were the city of Jackson, the state attorney general, Greyhound and Trailways bus companies, Illinois Central Railroad, Jackson City Lines, the Jackson Municipal Airport Authority and Cicero's Airport Restaurant.

Bus Lines Breakdown Is Feared

By BOB PITTMAN
Daily News Staff Writer

A three-judge federal court hears final arguments today in a lawsuit in which Negroes have challenged segregation in Mississippi's public transportation facilities.

One defendant, Jackson City Lines, asked late yesterday for a speedy ruling, with attorney J. Will Young declaring that a delay could cause a "complete breakdown" in local bus service.

The court answered, however, that no decision could be expected for at least 10 days.

Attorneys for the plaintiffs—three Jackson Negroes who brought the suit for the entire Negro race—and the defendants have 20 days after final arguments in which to file written briefs with the court.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People filed the suit for the three Jackson Negroes, Joseph Broadwater, Samuel Bailey and Burnett Jacob.

SEEKS COURT ORDER

The suit asks for a court order desegregating transportation facilities.

Defendants are Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson, the City of Jackson, Illinois Central Railroad, Greyhound and Trailways Bus Cos., Jackson City Lines, Jackson Airport Authority and Cicero Carr, owner of Cicero's Restaurant at the airport.

Young, attorney for Jackson City Lines, asked the panel to issue an injunction immediately against segregation signs placed on city buses under state law if it were going to do so at all.

He pointed out that it had been brought out in the trial that drivers are instructed to halt their buses at any time a Negro takes a front seat.

Since this has been publicized, he said, he fears a "complete breakdown" in the bus operations.

Judge Richard T. Rives of Montgomery, Ala., said the panel could not offer a ruling immediately.

But he referred Young to a federal court decision in which similar signs were ordered removed from buses in Montgomery.

"You can make up your own mind as to what the law is," Judge Rives added.

Young replied that in view of the judge's remark the company might move the signs immediately.

The signs separate Negro and white passengers. They are maintained under a 1956 state law challenged in the lawsuit.

Buses continued to operate without incident today, however, and Negro leaders indicated they would wait for a court decision before making any move.

Yesterday afternoon Greyhound and Trailways bus drivers testified that neither they nor the company took part in incidents involving Negroes who told the court of racial incidents earlier in the case.

All said their companies have policies adopted in the last few years to permit passengers to sit where they wish, regardless of race.

REFUTES NEGRO

Trailways driver M. R. Stallings of Columbus refuted testimony given earlier by John Frazier of Greenville, a Negro youth who said he was taken from a bus and beaten at Winona.

Stallings said only that he saw the youth fighting with the sheriff and a deputy in Winona but saw no one else. The Negro testified the driver blocked his path and several men held him while the sheriff beat him.

In morning testimony yesterday three Alabama officers told the court of violence in their state brought about by invasion of "freedom riders" and said Mississippi officials were informed of that violence.

And a warm exchange of words between Atty. Gen. Patterson and a U.S. Justice Department attorney highlighted the hearing.

The Alabama officers were Ell M. Cowling, a corporal in the Alabama Department of Public Safety; Capt. R. W. Godwin, assistant chief of the identification bureau of the Department of Public Safety; and W. Marvin Stanley, assistant chief of the Montgomery police department.

They told of violence at Anniston, Birmingham and Montgomery as the "freedom riders" entered their state.

All testified that police did not attempt to enforce segregation laws but sought only to maintain law and order.

Information of this violence, they said, was distributed through regular police channels and was sent to Mississippi.

Jackson police officers have testified in the trial, which was initiated after the "riders" were arrested here, that they arrested the "freedom riders" on charges of breach of the peace and not because they violated segregation laws.

Patterson and Justice Department attorney Howard Glickstein exchanged words after Patterson objected to the court because Glickstein was conferring with attorney's for the plaintiffs.

The court replied to the objection that the Justice Department has entered the case as a friend of the court and the conference was not improper.

"I'll be happy to confer with any parties in this hearing," Glickstein told Patterson.

The attorney general replied "We prefer to confer with friendly parties."

"The Justice Department is friendly to anyone interested in justice," Glickstein shot back.

At this point the across-the-room conversation was halted.

2 Trials In Federal Courtroom

BY JOHN HERBERS
United Press International

There were two trials going on at the same time in a federal courtroom this week. One you could hear, the other you could feel.

The first was the overt hearing of a lawsuit in which Negroes are seeking to desegregate travel facilities throughout Mississippi.

The second was a trail of emotions between attorneys and witnesses of the opposing sides, and it was charged by the necessity of restraint.

Only occasionally would suppressed emotions erupt into an exchange of words or an irritated glance.

The state and the city of Jackson were defending the lawsuit on several grounds, one being that no racial policy was involved in the arrest of "freedom riders" and use of state segregation laws.

State Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson and Jackson Mayor Allen Thompson found themselves in a delicate situation. They were called to the stand by an attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Constance Baker Motley.

She asked them if they favored segregation in public travel. To answer yes would have damaged defense of the lawsuit. Obviously, they could not answer no.

Both managed to sidestep the question skillfully— both are lawyers-thompson by by saying "separation, not segregation" had led to peace and prosperity in Jackson. Patterson by saying

EFFORTS TO BAN MIXING VOIDED

U.S. Judges Order End to Terminal Segregation

By W. F. MINOR

(Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

GREENVILLE, Miss. — A three-judge federal court here Monday granted a preliminary injunction ordering removal of racial segregation signs in the Greenwood bus terminal, but declined to make the order statewide.

After a full day of hearings, the court, including two appeal judges, also ordered Leflore county Attorney John Fraiser not to proceed with a state court injunction under which the Greyhound bus terminal had been required to keep racial signs.

The action was filed three weeks ago by the justice department and the interstate commerce commission when circuit Judge Arthur Clark granted a temporary injunction ordering the Greenwood bus station to ignore the Nov. 1 ICC order banning racial signs.

Additional arguments will be heard at a later date on the merits of the injunction petition, which seeks to make the order against bus terminal segregation apply throughout the state.

TEMPORARY INJUNCTION

All three judges on the special court, Judges Elbert P. Tuttle, Atlanta, Ga., and Richard T. Rives, Montgomery, Ala., of the fifth circuit of appeal, and federal district Judge Claude Clayton of Mississippi's northern district, agreed to issuance of the temporary injunction to stop the state action launched by the Leflore county attorney.

But Clayton disagreed with his fellow jurists on the other part of the preliminary injunction, which ordered Greyhound Bus Company and its Greenwood manager, S. M. Courtney to comply with the ICC order rather than the state decree.

Makeup of the three-judge court was strongly protested by attorneys for the state, which contended that it broke a tradition for such courts which normally include two district judges from the state and one appeals judge.

The special panel ruled, however, that for purposes of the temporary injunction it considered that it had proper jurisdiction.

A ruling was reserved on the final arguments later as to the makeup of the court.

During arguments Judge Tuttle intimated that the court was validly constituted. As presiding judge of the fifth circuit he had been responsible for naming the panel.

The petition filed by the government had sought to enjoin the state of Mississippi, state Attorney General Joe T. Patterson and all county and district attorneys as a class from enforcing state statutes relative to racial separation in waiting rooms.

NO PROOF OFFERED

Earlier in the day, however, Judge Tuttle made it clear that the temporary order would not include the state and the other officials as a class since government attorneys offered no proof tying them directly into the case.

Former Gov. J. P. Coleman, who was employed as special counsel for the Leflore county officials, called on the court in his arguments to defer a ruling in order to permit the state injunction to be decided in state courts.

He emphasized that the temporary state injunction granted by Circuit Judge Clark must be heard before chancery Judge E. M. Jackson at Greenwood before it would become permanent.

"Does it add anything to the dignity of the United States or this court to issue an injunction that is unenforcible?" Coleman asked.

"What harm would come if the chancery court is allowed to pass on it?"

The former governor said that "time and time again the state courts of Mississippi have followed the federal constitution."

Unless the court granted a delay, he said, it may be subject to "criticism of riding roughshod" over state courts.

Viewing the state-federal issue involved, Coleman said "as long as two families live in the same house you are going to have arguments."

'DILATORY TACTICS'

At one point in the hearing appeal Judge Rives accused Assistant State Attorney General Dugas Shands of "simply indulging in dilatory tactics" in his questioning of a Greyhound bus official.

Shands, who has been the state specialist in segregation and civil rights matters, repeatedly tangled with Judge Tuttle over procedure and finally agreed on what he called a "running objection" to testimony put on by the government.

Representing the justice department were St. John Barrett and Jerome K. Heilbron, both of Washington, Bernard A. Gould, also of Washington, represented the interstate commerce commission.

Junior O'Mara, Jackson, attorney for Greyhound Bus Company, contended his client was "caught in the middle" by ICC and state court orders.

"I don't see how Greyhound can operate a terminal station and comply with ICC regulations and also comply with the state statutes," he declared.

O'Mara suggested that the court require the Leflore county attorney to dismiss the state court action in view of former Gov. Coleman's observation that the state injunction will still be before a chancery judge.

'STATE INVOLVED'

Barrett charged in his closing arguments that the state of Mississippi was involved in the issue because of the intent it has shown under a state statute enacted following legislative adoption of an interposition resolution in 1956.

The justice department attorney contended that the statute pursuant to the interposition measure ordered all local officers to prohibit implementation of oders by the federal government in the field of raciol segregation.

"It imposes on every officer in the state of Mississippi to do what was done at the Greenwood terminal," Barrett asserted.

Edward F. Rose, Atlanta, Ga., vice president in charge of operations of Greyhound, testified that the company has approximately 80 terminals in Mississippi and that only 20 per cent of the company revenue derived within the state came from intrastate traffic.

Rose, under questioning, said that Greenwood served as a rest or meal stop for six regularly-scheduled busses which operate from New Orleans to Chicago.

Both Tuttle and Rives will sit on another three-judge panel at Jackson Tuesday to hear a justice department petition for removal of segregation signs put up by the city of McComb outside bus terminals since the ICC order became effective.

District Judge Sidney M. Mize of the southern federal district of Mississippi will be the third member of the court.

Says Mixing Trial Improperly Set Up

GREENVILLE, Miss.—Mississippi Atty. Gen. Joe T. Patterson charged here today that a three-judge federal court called to hear a U.S. Justice Department plea for an end to segregated transportation facilities was improperly empaneled.

In a motion due to be argued as the hearing opened today, Patterson asked the court to dissolve iself and its senior member appoint another court composed of Mississippians.

The motion was one of several filed by Assistant Atty. Gen. Dugas Shands, head of Patterson's staff of Civil Rights experts.

It charged that under long-standing federal custom such a court should be composed of two U. S. district judges from Mississippi and one member of the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Court of Appeals Chief Judge Elbert Tuttle of Atlanta has appointed himself, Fifth Circuit Judge Richard Rives of Montgomery, Ala., and District Judge Claude Clayton of Tupelo to hear the case.

A similar lawsuit is scheduled to be heard in Jackson tomorrow. For that case Tuttle named himself, Rives and District Judge Sidney Mize of Gulfport.

The lawsuit underway here sprung from action in Greenwood in which State Circuit Judge Arthur Clark of Indianola enjoined Greyhound bus terminal operators from enforcing integration in intrastate commerce. Leflore County Attorney John B. Frasier sought the injunction on Oct. 30, a day before an Interstate Commerce Commission directive became effective ordering operators son, a defendant in the ca- -ing with Judge Clark, Frasier and District Attorney Tom Williams of Lexington, charged that long-standing custom is that a member of the Court of Appeals from the state in which the case is to be tried should be appointed to hear it along with two district judges from the state.

CUST-

Mississippi is represented on the fifth circuit court by Judge Ben Cameron of Meridian.

Newly appointed District Judge Harold Cox of Jackson was named to hear neither the case here nor the Jackson trial scheduled for tomorrow.

Tuttle named himself, Clayton and Mize to hear an NAACP plea for an injunction halting arrest of "freedom riders" and enforcement of segregation in Jackson last June, but withdrew shortly after Mize and Clayton outvoted him in favor of the state in a preliminary motion.

He named Rives to replace himself as senior member of the court. Last week by a 2-1 majority, the court rejected the NAACP plea with Rives dissenting.

Patterson also charged in an additional motion here today that the three-judge panel should be dissolved on grounds the lawsuit "for the enforcement of and prevention of breaches of any order of the Interstate Commeree Commission" should be heard only by the district judge of the area, who in this case is Clayton.

Patterson also charged that the U.S. attorney general is not authorized to file such a lawsuit without specific authorization by the ICC and claimed that no such order was included in the Justice Department petition.

He asked further for a more definite statement of claims from the Justice Department, for elimination of portions of the petition as "hearsay" and that the court dismiss the state of Mississippi as a defendant. 11-20-61

The justice department asked the three-judge court to declare unconstitutional state laws requiring segregated facilities for intrastate passengers;

Stop enforcement of Judge Clark's injunction prohibiting the Greyhound terminal to comply with ICC integration orders;

Forbid installation of segregation signs in terminals;

Forbid racial discrimination or undue burden on passengers in interstate commerce.

Joining Shands in defense of the lawsuit here today were assistant State Attorneys General Edward L. Cates and Peter M. Stockett Jr.

COLEMAN TAKES HAND

Former Governor J. P. Coleman was retained by the Leflore County Bar Assn., to represent Judge Clark, Williams and Frasier. It was the first time Coleman has publicly opposed the Kennedy administration.

Coleman, an almost certain candidate for governor again in 1963, backed the Kennedy-Johnson ticket in last year's election while many state leaders turned to an Unpledged Elector ticket. The former governor later rejected an offer of a cabinet post in the administration.

U.S. Justice Department Was Asking Injunction Against State Law

Memphis Press-Scimitar

By KENNETH TOLER
Staff Writer

GREENVILLE, Miss., Nov. 20. — A three-judge Federal Court Monday turned down a United States Justice Department petition for a statewide injunction against enforcement of Mississippi's segregation-in-travel statutes.

The decision was a major victory for state Atty Gen. Joe Patterson in the face of earlier expressed positions by two of the judges that the state statutes weer unconstitutional in the face of desegregation laws.

Instead of the sweeping injunction sought by the United States attorney general and the Interstate Commerce Commission, the court, headed by Chief Judge Elbert Tuttle of the United States Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, limited a temporary injunction against enforcement of the segregation statutes to the Greenwood terminal of the Greyhound lines.

Evidence Lacking

Judge Tuttle of Atlanta, sitting with Appeals Court Judge Richard Rives of Montgomery, Ala., and District Judge Claude Clayton of Tupelo, said that the Federal Government had failed to make a case for general application of a temporary injunction.

The court said that the Federal Fovernment had only been able to establish a prima facie case against county Atty. John J. Frazier Jr., who got a state circuit court injunction against removal of the segregation signs, the Greyhound line and S. M. Courtney, operator of the Greenwood bus station.

As a result, the court said the Government had failed to establish the case as a class action applicable to the state, the attorney general, all circuit judges, all district attorneys and all county attorneys. Those officials, named defendents in the case, were eliminated from the case pending trial of the issue on its merits. The hearing was on a motion for an immediate temporary statewide injunction.

State Circuit Judge Arthur Clark Jr. of Indianola was eliminated as a defendent, individually and as a class. The court said that he had no further jurisdiction in the temporary injunction he issued Oct. 27 forbidding removal of segregation signs applicable to intrastate passengers from the Greenwood bus station.

Judge Tuttle pointed out that Judge Clark's injunction is now before Chancellor R. E. Jackson of Cleveland, who was not made a defendant by the Justice Department.

The court, in the case of County Attorney Frazier, enjoined him from proceding further in Chancery Court or seeking enforcement of the temporary injunction he obtained before Circuit Judge Clark.

'Caught In Middle'

In the case of the Greyhound-Courtney injunction, Judge Tuttle said those parties are enjoined from complying with or giving any force or action to Judge Clark's injunction. He said those parties were enjoined "partially to protect them in this stage of the case in their legal obligation under the ICC order to desegregate the Greenwood terminal."

Earlier, Junior O'Mara, attorney representing Greyhound, said his company was "caught in the middle" in that it is regulated by the ICC and feels obligated to obey state segregation laws. That position persuaded the court to issue the injunction as a "protective order" against state prosecution for removal of signs.

Jackson Case

Assisting Attorney General Patterson was special Asst. Atty. Gen. Peter Stackett Jr., while John Throop of Water Valley represented Mr. Courtney.

A similar case involving signs at the Greyhound terminal at McComb is scheduled for a hearing Tuesday at Jackson.

Judge Tuttle and Judge Rives will sit in that case with District Judge S. C. Mize of Gulfport.

Three Mississippi Laws Declared Unconstitutional

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 21 (AP)—A three-judge Federal panel, with one judge dissenting, today declared unconstitutional three state laws requiring segregation in travel terminals and ordered the city of McComb to remove "Jim Crow" signs at bus and train stations.

The laws were the first many segregation statutes enacted since 1954, the year of the Supreme Court's school desegregation decision, to be ruled invalid by the Federal Courts. The others are either under attack or have not been tested.

However, the decision does not effect the breach of the peace statutes under which "freedrom riders" have been arrested for refusing to move from segregated travel terminals. Those are under attack in separate lawsuits.

Judges Elbert P. Tuttle of Atlanta and Richard T. Rives of Montgomery agreed after a hearing to grant the U. S. Justice Dept. an injunction against the city of McComb and to strike down the state laws which the government requested.

U. S. District Judge Sidney Mize of Gulfport dissented. He said he thought the panel should stay a decision until earlier lawsuits challenging the same laws could be decided by the Supreme Court. He also said he believed such statutes should first be tested in the state courts.

The laws invalidate by today's decision were passed in 1956 following a Supreme Court decision that interstate passengers could not be subjected to segregation. They would:

Require all carriers to provide separate waiting rooms for designating "white waiting room, interstate passengers" or "colored waiting room, interstate passengers."

Provide for fine of $1000 and 50 day jail sentence for intrastate passengers for persons who enter the waiting room marked for the other race.

Require all carriers to provide separate toilet facilities for white and Negroes traveling in intrastate commerce and provide a $1000 fine and one-year jail term for violators.

The panel did not invalidate a 1960 trespass law which the government had attacked in its petition for a preliminary injunction. However, the panel said the injunction would be ordered substantially as the government requested and would strike down the three outright segregation statutes which the Justic Dept. had attacked as discriminatory.

While the injunction applies only to the city of McComb, it strikes down state laws under which Jackson and other cities in Mississippi have maintained segregation signs in front of bus and train terminals.

U.S. Court Testing Segregation Signs

Jackson Trial Will Decide McComb's Sidewalk Orders

By W. C. SHOEMAKER
Daily News Staff Writer

The government sought here today to have sidewalk transportation facility segregation signs removed at McComb after only a partial victory yesterday in Greenville in an attack on state baked anti-mix orders.

A three-judge federal court yesterday enjoined the Leflore County attorney from proceeding with a state injunction in which the Greyhound bus terminal was required to keep its segregation signs in place.

Greyhound and its Greenwood manager, S. M. Courtney, were also ordered to comply with Interstate Commerce Commision orders to take down the signs.

But the court refused a Justice Department plea that it make its decision effective against similar situations and officials throughout the state.

The court, composed of Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals Chief Judge Elbert Tuttle of Atlanta, Court of Appeals Judge Richard T. Rives of Montgomery, Ala., and District Judge Claude Clayton of Tupelo, removed the state of Mississippi, Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson, Circuit Judge Arthur Clark of Indianola and Dist. Atty. Tom Williams of Lexington from the government's petition.

Toady in Jackson the Justice Department went after McComb city officials and police and the signs they erected Nov. 1 on sidewalks outside their Greyhound terminal.

The government asked a three-judge panel composed of Tuttle, Rives and District Judge Sidney Mize of Gulfport to enjoin McComb officials and police from keeping their signs in place and from encouraging segregation in the bus terminal.

McComb officials installed their own signs after Greyhound took station signs down Nov. 1 to comply with an ICC order.

The action in Greenville yesterday sprang from efforts to keep Greyhound in Greenwood from complying with the ICC order.

On Oct. 27, three days before the ICC order went into effect, Judge Clark issued a temporary injunction at the request of Frasier which forbade the station to comply with the ICC.

The Justice Department, in its request for a federal court preliminary injunction against Clark's injunciton, sought to halt efforts statewide in opposition of the ICC ruling.

Yesterday, however, the court dropped all but Frasier and Greyhound from the lawsuit and ruled its decision would constitute noer class action, thereby making the decision binding only on the Greenwood issue.

The panel ruled that the government failed to prove that a class action involving all the state's bus terminals and county attorneys should be envoked.

It dropped Judge Clark from the lawsuit after former Gov. J. P. Coleman, who along with Attorney Hardy Lott of Greenwood defended Frasier, Clark and Williams, argued that Clark could act no further regarding the state injunction.

Coleman said Clark issued the temporary order in the absence of Chancellor R. E. Jackson and that the matter for final disposition of Frasier's petition was before Jackson.

Coleman argued that no "harm would come if the chancery court is allowed to pass on it." and suggested that "time and time again the state courts of Mississippi have followed the federal constitution."

Failure of the federal panel to allow a delay until Leflore Chancery Court action was complete may subject it to "criticism of riding roughshod" over state courts.

A hearing will be scheduled later to determine if the government injunction will become permanent.

The court rejected a petition from Assistant State Atty. Gen. Dugas Shands that it was illegally constituted. Shands, in behalf of Patterson, had asked the court to remove itself from the case and name a three-judge panel composed of at least two U.S. district judges from Mississippi to hear the government pleas.

CUTS OFF TESTIMONY

The court cut short government testimony in the case shortly aftr noon when one federal witness had appeared. It said it had heard enough to make out a case against Greyhound, Courtney and Frasier.

The only witness, Edward F. Rose of Atlanta, assistant to the president of Greyhound Southern Lines, testified that Greyhound operated six interstate schedules through Greenwood daily with five of them lingering at the terminal for rest stops.

Mississippi attorneys argued that the signs ordered by the state court applied only to segregation of intrastate passengers, but government attorneys claimed they were effective for all passengers.

Both intrastate and interstate passengers use the same waiting room.

Rose testified Greyhound grossed $3 million in Mississippi during the past 12 months, but 80 per cent of that came from interstate sales.

The court was to sign a formal order enacting its decision in Jackson today.

Meanwhile the Justice Department filed a civil rights suit in Clarksdale yesterday which it charged discriminatory voting practices against Negroes in Tallahatchie county.

It asked the court to enjoin Tallahatchie County Sheriff Ellett Dogan and Circuit Clerk Tom E. Harris from any act which would deprive any citizen of the county the right to vote and sought to insure "fair, equal and non-discriminatory" administration of registration and voting procedures, including payment of poll taxes.

The government charged that since 1946 sheriffs of the county have refused to permit Negroes to pay poll taxes and that Harris has denied Negroes opportunity to register to vote.

'PATTERN' CHARGED

The suit, naming Mississippi as a defendant, charged the practices were "pursuant to a pattern" and said defendants will continue to engage in discriminatory acts.

A hearing was set for Dec. 13 before Judge Clayton at Oxford.

The government's declaration said of the 5,099 whites and 6,483 Negroes in the county, about 4,300 whites are registered voters and no Negroes.

In yesterday's hearing at Greenville, Shands was joined by Assistant Attorneys General Ed Cates and Peter Stockett. Junior O'Mara of Jackson represented Greyhound and John Throup of Greenwood represented Courtney.

Justice Department attorneys were St. John Barrett and Jerome K. Heilbron while Bernard A. Gould represented the ICC. The ICC and the Justice Department jointly brought the lawsuit.

The decision to enjoin Frasier was unanimous. Judge Clayton dissented in the injunctions against the bus company and Courtney.

Another 'Mixing' Suit Will Be Heard Monday

End Of Segregation To Be Asked Here

By BEN McCARTY
Associated Press Staff Writer

GREENVILLE — The Justice Department will ask a three-judge federal court here Monday to order Mississippi to stop enforcing segregation in transportation facilities. The Justice Department filed the suit in an attempt to enforce the Nov. 1 interstate commerce commission ruling that forbids segregation either on common carriers or in terminals.

The government contends that Mississippi statutes and signs calling for segregated facilities for intrastate passengers were unconstitutional because they violated the equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment.

The suit comes on the heels of a 2-1 ruling by a federal court in Jackson that those seeking remedies to segregation in travel facilities must go first through state courts.

Federal Dist. Judges Sidney Mize of Gulfport and Claude Clayton of Tupelo made no decision on the issues involved, but said the principle of routing cases through state courts was supported by U. S. Supreme Court decisions.

Presiding Judge Richard T. Rives of Montgomery, Ala., who is on the U. S. 5th circuit court of appeals, issued a sharply worded dissenting opinion.

He said "There are statutes and ordinances which on their face require segregation of the races in any transportation facilities and they should be declared unconstitutional, null and void."

Tuesday, another three-judge federal court will hear a similar Justice Department suit in Jackson involving segregation at a McComb bus terminal.

Chief Federal Judge Elbert P. Tuttle of the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals has changed from the normal procedure of naming one appeals judge and two district judges for suits before three-judge courts.

Judge Tuttle named himself and Judge Rives to sit on both cases. He appointed Judge Clayton as the third judge at Greenville and Judge Mize for the suit at Jackson.

Many Mississippi lawyers said they thought the change was significant.

The Greenville suit was filed as a class action against Circuit Judge Arthur Clark of Indianola, all county attorneys and district attorneys, the state attorney general and the state of Mississippi.

The action came after Judge Clark granted an injunction prohibiting Greyhound Lines in Greenwood from removing segregation signs for intrastate passengers. Leflore County Attorney John J. Fraiser filed the court order.

Former Gov. J. P. Coleman, who is expected to hit the campaign trail again in 1963, has been retained by the Leflore County Bar Association as a special attorney in the case. The other attorneys will be Fraiser and Hardy Lott of Greenwood.

The Greenville suit asks the federal court to:

1. Declare unconstitutional state laws requiring segregated facilities for Intrastate passengers.

2. Stop enforcement of Judge Clark's injunction forbidding the Greyhound Bus Terminal in Greenwood to comply with the ICC ban on bus terminal segregation.

3. Forbid the installation of segregation signs in terminals.

4. Forbid any type of racial discrimination or undue burden upon passengers in interstate travel.

Mississippi attorneys are expected to take their cue from the decision handed down by Judges Mize and Clayton.

If so, they could argue that the Justice Dept. and the ICC had not exhausted remedies in state courts before going into federal court.

Girl, 13, Stands On Her Ideals

Chooses To Quit School Rather Than Bow To Jackson Law

By The Associated Press

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 17. — Youth Court Judge Carl Guernsey said Friday segregation was not involved in his order that a 13-year-old Negro girl arrested for breaking the color barrier either obey Jackson laws or find a place where she could comply.

The girl, Jessie Lee Divens of McComb, was arrested earlier this month for refusing to obey police orders to move on after she sat in the white section of a city bus.

Commuted On Bus

The child was in Jackson attending junior high school and had to commute to school on the city bus.

Judge Guernsey told Jessie Lee she could remain in Jackson and continue her education if she would promise to comply with existing laws and the local social structure.

"If you mean stop sitting in the front of the bus," she said, "then I won't."

She refused repeatedly to agree to such an arrangement, even after a recess conference with her mother and attorney, Carsie Hall of Jackson.

Regrets Decision

After the conference, Hall told the court the child would return to McComb with her mother.

"In that case," Judge Guernsey said, "I regret this decision because this court is committed to a practice of urging the continued education of every child.

"I hope it will be possible for you to get back into school. If not, I encourage you to find a community where you can comply with the rules."

Judges File Order To Block McComb Segregation Effort

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Two federal judges filed a court order Monday to keep McComb from enforcing racial segregation at its Greyhound Bus Terminal.

The order stemmed from a three-judge court's hearing last week on a justice department request for an injunction to bar McComb from placing signs on the sidewalks near its terminals.

The order, signed by Chief Judge Elmer P. Tuttle of Atlanta and Richard T. Rives of Montgomery, Ala., both from the U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals at New Orleans, banned McComb from:

Placing and maintaining segregation signs at terminal facilities.

Interfering with Greyhound compliance with federal laws and an Interstate Commerce Commission ruling against segregation in interstate commerce.

Otherwise seeking to enforce segregation of the races.

The court also held that three state segregation laws, dealing with separate terminal facilities, were unconstitutional.

The orders and rulings were in line with an announcement by the court last week that it considered the laws unconstitutional and would sign an order to keep McComb from enforcing segregation.

The court decision passed by a 2-1 margin, with District Judge Sidney Mize of Gulfport dissenting.

State Laws Ruled Void

Mississippi officials today awaited a federal court's formal order declaring three of the state's segregation laws unconstitutional.

A three-judge panel, with one member dissenting, outlawed the laws in a preliminary injunction hearing here yesterday.

Their action becomes effective once formal orders are signed and recorded, probably early next week.

Attack on the three statutes passed in 1956 and requiring separate facilities for white and Negro races in public transportation terminals came in a U.S. Justice Department request for an injunction against posting of segregation signs for intrastate passengers at the Greyhound bus and Illinois Central Railroad depots in McComb.

The three statutes are sections 7787.5 which requires passenger terminals to offer separate waiting facilities for "white intrastate passengers" and "colored intrastate passengers"; section 2351.5, requiring railroad bus and other carriers to provide separate restroom facilities for each race in intrastate travel; and 2351.7, requiring intrastate travelers to use only facilities designated for their race.

Violation of 7787.5 could bring a maximum fine of $1,000 per day against the carrier. Fine of $1,000 and a year in jail is maximum penalty for violation of the other two.

MIZE DISSENTS

The panel with District Judge Sidney Mize of Gulfport dissenting from the opinions of Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals Chief Judge Elbert P. Tuttle of Atlanta and Fifth District Judge Richard T. Rives of Montgomery, Ala., also ordered McComb officials to remove Police Department installed signs outside McComb's train and bus depots, "interfering in any way or by any means" with compliance by Greyhound of United States laws and Interstate Commerce Commission regulations prohibiting racial discrimination in vehicles and facilities of interstate commerce, and "otherwise seeking to enforce or encouraging the segregation of the white and Negro races in the use of terminal facilities used in interstate commerce."

The court made no decision on the government's attack on a fourth Mississippi statute, section 2409.7, which Charles Clark, attorney for McComb officials, argued was purely a "trespass" law which forbids persons from remaining on premises or lands of another after being ordered to leave.

Jermone Heilbron, attorney for the Civil Rights division of the Department of Justice and formerly of Fort Smith, Ark., was instructed to write formal orders on the decision and submit them to Tuttle.

The order was expected to be filed with the clerk of the District Court here within a week, making it effective.

Yesterday's decisions stand pending a full hearing on whether to make the injunction permanent. No date has been set for such a hearing.

Judge Mize, in dissenting from the majority opinion, said he could "see where the government will suffer irrepairable injury in the short delay" until another case testing similar Mississippi statutes reaches the U. S. Supreme Court.

STATE COURTS BYPASSED

"Courts of the state should first have the opportunity to pass on their own acts," he argued. Their action might "relieve the federal courts of the duty of passing on them," he continued.

Rives argued that abstention on the constitutionality of the statues "would be an abdication of our judicial functions."

Mize and District Judge Claude Clayton wrote a majority opinion in a similar attack on Mississippi segregation statutes last week in which they declined to act until state courts have examined the laws. Rives dissented in that case and it is currently being appealed to the Supreme Court.

The earlier lawsuit filed by the NAACP in behalf of three Jackson Negroes also attacked constitutionality of state "breach of the peace" statutes under which more than 300 "freedom riders" have been arrested in Jackson.

Two days ago in Greenville a three-judge court composed of Tuttle, Rives and Clayton enjoined the Leflore County attorney from proceeding with a state court injunction which required Greyhound to keep in place signs indicating segregation for intrastate passengers, but declined to consider constitutionality of the law under which the state action was taken.

In yesterday's hearing Clark, a former assistant attorney general here, argued that no "civil rights" was involved in the McComb issue. He said if an injunction was granted as an aid to Greyhound in compliance with ICC requirements such action "could as easily be taken next week on the speed limit as it does the sign outside the door."

LEEWAY ASKED

He argued that McComb police must be allowed "leeway to protect its residents" and that state officials only have control of intrastate commerce.

Three city officials testified the signs were installed to insure racial peace in McComb.

The panel rendered its decisions 10 minutes after arguments ended yesterday afternoon.

Jackson police have for several years maintained signs outside bus and train terminals designating separate facilities for intrastate passengers.

However, none of the "freedom rider" arrests have been for violation of segregation laws.

Three Judge Panel Finds Them Unconstitutional

Atlanta, Ga.

JACKSON, Miss. — (UPI) — A three-judge federal panel, with one judge dissenting, Tuesday ordered desegregation of travel terminals in McCombs, Miss., and declared unconstitutional three state segregation laws.

The three laws were the first of a long series of state segregation statues passed since the 1954 school desegregation decision to be declared unconstitutional in the federal courts.

Judges Elbert P. Tuttle of Atlanta and Richard T. Rives of Montgomery, Ala., members of the U. S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, said the statutes were unconstitutional on their face.

They also agreed to grant an injunction ordering down segregation signs maintained by city authorities in front of bus and train travel terminals in McComb. U. S. District Judge Sidney Mize of Gulfport dissented. He said he thought the panel should stay a decision until after other similar lawsuits now before the courts could be decided. He also said he believed such statutes should first be tested in the state courts.

The judges also granted an injunction sought by the Government to force the city of McComb to remove signs from sidewalks around the Greyhound Bus and Illinois Central Railroad stations that designated separate waiting rooms for whites and Negroes.

Judge Elbert P. Tuttle of Atlanta, chief judge of the United States Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals at New Orleans, said Appellate Judge Richard T. Rives of Montgomery, Ala., had concurred with him in the decisions and that United States District Judge Sidney Mize of Gulfport, Miss., had dissented.

The injunction was sought to force the defendants, Mayor C. H. Douglas, Police Chief George Guy and the City of McComb, to remove the signs. The signs read, "White Waiting Room—Intrastate Passengers," and "Colored Waiting Room—Intrastate Passengers."

Judge Tuttle said the rulings would become effective as soon as Federal attorneys prepared and mailed the order for him to sign and he filed it with the clerk.

Judge Mize, in dissenting said he favored postponing action until the Supreme Court had ruled on several similar cases now pending on appeal.

"I cannot see how the Government would suffer irreparable damages if the decision was postponed," Judge Mize said, "and it would save the cost of the proceedings."

Judge Rives said, in concurring, that the Supreme Court had declared unconstitutional many times laws that required enforced segregation in public places.

One of the laws knocked out today required passenger terminals to have separate waiting facilities for "white intrastate passengers" and "colored intrastate passengers."

The others required railroad, bus and other carriers to provide separate toilet facilities for white and Negroes in intrastate travel, and that intrastate travelers use the facilities designated for their races.

The fine for noncompliance with the first law was $1,000 a day. The other two carried $1,000 fines and a year in jail.

Breach of Peace Stands

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 21 (UPI)—The decision reached today does not affect Mississippies breach of peeace statutes, under which Freedom Riders have been arrested for refusing to move from segregated travel facilities.

Those are under attack in separate suits.

Wash 11-22-61

Suit Held Precedent

When the Justice Department moved to enjoin the McComb police from interfering with bus company efforts to comply with the Interstate Commerce Commission ruling against segregation, lawyers said the case would affect law enforcement officers throughout Mississippi.

The suit contained a specific request for an injunction against the McComb police. It noted that the Greyhound bus station there had removed such signs on its waiting rooms in October. The suit contended that the police had then installed signs on the sidewalk outside marked "white waiting room, intrastate passengers" and "colored waiting room, intrastate passengers."

Mississippi has been one of the major targets for Freedom Riders who have gone South to test segregated laws. More than 300 Freedom Riders have been arrested in Jackson and convicted for breach of the peace since May 24.

Federal Court Orders McComb Signs Down

Jackson, Miss., Nov. 21 (AP)—A three-judge federal panel with one judge dissenting Wednesday ordered desegregation of travel terminals in McComb, Miss. and declared three State segregation laws unconstitutional.

The laws were the first of a long series of State segregation statutes passed since the 1954 school-desegregation decision to be declared unconstitutional in the federal courts.

Judges Elbert P. Tuttle of Atlanta and Richard T. Rives of Montgomery, Ala., members of the United States Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, said the statutes were unconstitutional on their face.

They also agreed to grant an injunction ordering down segregation signs maintained by City authorities in front of bus and train travel terminals in McComb.

U. S. District Judge Sidney Mize of Gulfport dissented. He said he thought the panel should stay a decision until other similar lawsuits now before the courts could be decided. He also said he believed such statutes should first be tested in the State courts.

The laws invalidated required segregation of bus stations and train terminals throughout the state for intrastate passengers. However, the federal courts have held that carrying out such restrictions for intrastate passengers also restricts those traveling in interstate commerce.

Court Bids Mississippians End Segregation Efforts

GREENVILLE, Miss., Nov. 20 (AP) — Three Federal judges Monday ordered John Fraiser, Leflore County attorney, and S. M. Courtney of Greenwood, Greyhound bus manager, to abandon efforts to enforce bus terminal segregation at Greenwood.

Presiding Judge Elbert P. Tuttle of Atlanta said the decision gave Mr. Courtney legal protection from state segregation laws.

The order went against Mr. Fraiser, who had opened state court proceedings for an injunction to keep Greyhound from ermoving segregation signs at the Greenwood terminal.

Greyhound was ordered not to display any segregation signs.

Mississippi Law Attacked In U.S. Suit

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Justice Department Tuesday filed a suit in Mississippi to prevent state officials from enforcing a bus station segregation law which conflicts with new interstate commerce commission regulations.

Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy announced in Washington the filing of a suit scarcely six hours before the Nov. 1 effective date of ICC rules prohibiting racial segregation on interstate buses and in their terminals.

Kennedy said the suit, filed in U. S. district court in Oxford, Miss., also asked that the state segregation law be declared in conflict with the U. S. Constitution.

The attorney general said the court also was asked to issue a temporary restraining order against enforcement of the state law, but a Justice Department spokesman moments later reported this request was denied by U. S. Judge Claude Clayton.

The ICC had joined the department as a plaintiff in the action.

The federal move stemmed from an Oct. 27 state court order requiring the Greyhound Corporation to maintain segregation signs in its terminal at Greenwood, Miss.

The government also asked for court orders prohibiting state and local officials throughout Mississippi from interfering with any motor carrier's efforts to observe the new ICC regulations.

Among other things, the rules prohibit interstate buses from using terminals with racially segregated waiting rooms, restaurants and other facilities.

They also require the posting of signs in buses and terminals proclaiming the availability of all facilities to interstate travelers without regard to race, color, creed or national origin.

Two of the defendants in the suit, Leflore County attorney John J. Fraiser and Parham H. Williams, district attorney of the 4th State Judicial District, were named as representatives of all Mississippi county and district attorneys.

ALSO NAMED

Also named as defendants were Arthur B. Clark Jr., Circuit Judge of the 4th Judicial Circuit, who issued the Oct. 27 injunction; state Atty. Gen. Joe T. Patterson, the state of Mississippi, the Greyhound Corp., and S. M. Courtney, manager of Greyhound's Greenwood terminal.

Kennedy said the bus company and Courtney sought to comply with federal law and the ICC rules. They were named as defendants only to make them clearly subject to the federal court orders requested by the government, Kennedy said.

The Mississippi law which the government once declared unconstitutional requires bus companies to maintain "white" and "colored" signs for travelers. It provides a $1,000 penalty for each day of noncompliance. In its complaint, the government said the purpose of the injunction issued by Judge Clark four days ago is to compel Greyhound and Courtney "to maintain racially segregated facilities in the terminal and to display racial signs in violation of federal law and of the regulations of the interstate commerce commission."

The government asked that a special three-judge federal court be convened to declare the state law invalid.

Tuesday's action was similar to a Sept. 1 suit brought by the department in New Orleans, La. asking that a Louisiana law requiring segregation in bus terminals be declared unconstitutional.

Federal Judge Refuses to Issue an Injunction, but Agrees to a Hearing

New York

By ANTHONY LEWIS
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Oct. 31—The Justice Department moved tonight to head off Mississippi interference with new I. C. C. rules against bus and railroad segregation.

The rules of the Interstate Commerce Commission go into effect at 12:01 A. M. tomorrow. Nevertheless, Mississippi officials have taken public steps to continue enforcing state segregation laws.

This evening the Justice Department filed suit in Oxford, Miss., to strike down the state laws as unconstitutional. The suit asked that the state and its local law-enforcement officials be enjoined from enforcing segregation anywhere in bus or railroad transportation.

The department asked a temporary restraining order to block enforcement of the Mississippi statutes while the case was tried. But Federal District Judge Claude Clayton of Oxford refused to issue such an order.

Signs Are Forbidden

The judge agreed to request a special three-judge court to hear the suit. The hearing will probably be held within a few weeks.

The I. C. C. regulations, adopted Sept. 22 at the request of the Justice Department, bars segregation in waiting rooms, rest rooms and other terminal facilities, as well as on buses and trains. Segregation signs are forbidden.

The regulations prohibit a railroad or bus company from using a segregated terminal. If one does, it is subject to criminal prosecution and a fine of $10 for each violation.

A Mississippi statute requires separate waiting rooms for white and Negro passengers in all transportation. A carrier violating this law is subject to a fine of $1,000 a day.

Today's suit arose from efforts by the Greyhound Corporation, a bus operator, to remove racial signs from the terminals it uses in Mississippi. Greyhound wanted to comply with the I. C. C. regulations.

Last Friday John J. Fraiser Jr., attorney for Lefore County, Miss., asked state courts for an injunction to make Greyhound obey the state segregation laws. Judge Arthur B. Clark Jr. issued the injunction that day.

In its suit the Justice Department asked that the state injunction be declared null and void. It went beyond that to try to freeze the entire state segregation apparatus in the transportation field.

The suit was brought against all county and district attorneys in the state, as a class; the state itself and Joe T. Patterson, Mississippi Attorney General.

The Federal Court was asked to enjoin them from interfering with the I. C. C. regulations, or imposing "any racial distinction" on bus and train passengers.

Memorandum filed along with the complaint said it was clear that all of Mississippi's segregation efforts at issue were invalid.

Those affecting interstate commerce, the Justice Department said, violated the commerce clause of the Constitution and the Interstate Commerce Act.

As for intrastate passengers, the Supreme Court has held that the Fourteenth Amendment protects them from racial discrimination.

The Interstate Commerce Act provides injunctions to help in its enforcement. It was under that provision that the Justice Department moved.

Significantly, the I. C. C. voted to join the department as a plaintif in the case. The commission, which has frequently been criticized for not taking a strong position on the racial question, has now made clear that it will move aggressively to enforce its new regulations.

Justice officials see an important test of racial policy ahead in Mississippi. They are more than confident that, eventually, the I. C. C. regulations will be enforced and all contrary state laws and policies swept aside.

But there may be a period of delay and confusion until enforcement of the Federal policy is assured.

Cities to Obey

JACKSON, Miss., Oct. 31 (UPI) — Spokesmen for the cities of Winona and Grenada said today they would bow to a Federal order and desegregate waiting rooms in their Trailways bus terminals.

Jackson and Vicksburg officials declared, however, that segregation would be maintained despite the I. C. C. regulations.

By the Associated Press

Thee Justice Department has filed a suit seeking to prevent Mississippi officials from enforcng a bus station segregation law which conflicts with new Interstate Commerce Commission regulations.

Wash. Post

Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy announced filing of the suit yesterday just a few hours before the effective date of ICC rules prohigiting racial segregation on interstate buses and in their terminals.

Mr. Kennedy said the suit, filed in United States District Court in Oxford, Miss., also asked that the State segregation law be declared in conflict with the United States Constitution.

The Attorney General said the court also was asked to issue a temporary restraining order against enforcement of the State law, but a Justice Department spokesman later reported this request was denied by United States Judge Claude Clayton.

Joins as Plaintiff

The ICC had joined the department as a plaintiff in the action.

The Federal move stemmed from an October 27 State court order requiring the Greyhound Corp. to maintain segregation signs in its terminal at Greenwood, Miss.

The Federal court was requested to bar enforcement of the State court order.

The Government also asked for court orders prohibiting State and local officials throughout Mississippi from interferring with any motor carrier's efforts to observe the new ICC regulations.

Among other things, the rules prohibit interstate buses from using terminals with racially segregated waiting rooms, restaurants and other facilities.

Sought to Comply

They also require the posting of signs in buses and terminals proclaiming the availability of all facilities to interstate travelers without regard to race, color, creed or national origin.

Mr. Kennedy said the bus company sought to comply with Federal law and the ICC rules. It was named a defendant only to make it clearly subject to the Federal court orders requested by the Government, Mr. Kennedy said.

Yesterday's action was similar to a September 1 suit brought by the department in New Orleans, La., asking that a Louisiana law requiring segregation in bus terminals be declared unconstitutional.

WASHINGTON, D.C. (AP) — The Justice Department filed a bus desegregation suit in Louisiana Friday, and moved to speed action on one of two cases brought previously in Mississippi.

The Louisiana action, filed in U.S. district court at Shreveport, is similar to the suits filed Tuesday and Thursday in federal courts at Oxford, Miss., and Jackson, Miss. It seeks to have Louisiana bus - passenger segregation laws declared unconstitutional.

In an effort to speed the Oxford, Miss., action, Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy announced the filing of a "certificate of general public importance." This requires the chief judge of the federal circuit to convene a three - judge court to expedite a case, Kennedy explained.

COURT ORDER ASKED

In the Oxford case the Justice Department asked for a court order prohibiting state and local officials from enforcing state segregation laws. It said these laws conflict with federal law and with new Interstate Commerce Commission bus desegregation rules, which became effective Wednesday.

"Unless injunctive relief is promptly forthcoming," the government said in the certificate, "the resulting clash between federal and state authority, which these and other public officials including defendants, have precipitated, can but lead to widespread confusion and disrespect for law and order."

In the Louisiana suit, the Justice Department asked the court to prohibit officials from enforcing state segregation laws affecting bus travelers in Monroe, La.

I.C.C.'S BUS ORDER IS DEFIED IN SOUTH

Some Cities Refuse to Meet Desegregation Deadline

By CLAUDE SITTON

Special to The New York Times.

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 1—A Federal order desegregating interstate transportation facilities encountered open defiance today in the Deep South.

Transportation lines were prevented by authorities in some cities from meeting a deadline set by the Interstate Commerce Commission for carrying out its order.

A bus terminal manager was arrested in Shreveport, La., for having removed racially discriminatory signs from waiting rooms. Policemen at Tallulah, La., boarded a bus and forced Negroes to move from seats at the front to the rear.

A number of Negroes seeking to test compliance with the ban were arrested when they entered white waiting rooms or sought service in white restaurants.

Police signs on sidewalks outside terminals in Jackson and some other cities designated the white and Negro facilities, even when the signs inside the terminals had been removed.

These and other official actions defying the commission presented a clear challenge to Federal authority and the Justice Department's determination to eliminate segregation in transportation.

Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy requested the I. C. C. order last summer. He and other department officials hoped it would eliminate the necessity for filing numerous suits to bring Southern practices into line with established Supreme Court precedents.

U. S. Action Planned

Justice Department lawyers were preparing immediate legal action against the police and other state, county and city officials to prevent further acts by them to thwart the I. C. C.

A number of transportation terminals in Florida and the Upper South were desegregated long before the commission's action, some under pressure from the courts and some voluntarily.

Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. issued an injunction today in the Federal District Court at Montgomery, Ala. He barred Greyhound Lines, affiliates of Trailways and a number of state and local officials from enforcing segregation in bus terminals there.

The general pattern of reaction reported from Mississippi and other Deep South states was one of technical compliance with the I. C. C. order. Copies of the order were posted in bus and train terminals before the deadline of 12:01 A. M. "White" and "colored" signs were removed from waiting rooms.

Nevertheless, the local police continued to enforce segregation in most cases.

Clergyman Seized

The Rev. Charles A. Jones, dean of Campbell College, a Negro school here, was seized in the white waiting room of the Jackson Trailways terminal at dawn. He approached the ticket counter and refused a policeman's order to move on.

The first organized test here came at 7:25 A. M. when a large red-trimmed silver bus bound for the East Coast pulled into the dock from Shreveport.

The first passenger off the bus was Leverte Taylor, a Negro youth who is a member of the Congress of Racial Equality chapter in Shreveport. Another Shreveport member of the group, Glenda Jackson, followed him.

They, too, approached the ticket counter in the white waiting room. Patrolman W. L. Copeland met them with the command to "move on." He asked Mr. Taylor repeatedly whether he was going to obey.

"Isn't your order in defiance of the I. C. C. ruling" the Negro youth asked in a low voice. "All right, you're under arrest," the patrolman said.

These three arrests raised the total number of whites and Negroes jailed here since the first Freedom Riders arrived last May to 315. They have received sentences ranging up to four months in the state penitentiary at Parchman.

Only three hours after I. C. C. deadline, four Negroes were arrested at the Trailways terminal the Student Nonviolent Coordinatiing Committee, which was formed in 1960 during the lunch counter sit-in demonstrations.

They were picked up after having refused to leave a privately operated restaurant at the terminal. All were charged with violation of a recently passed state anti-trespass law, which provides fines and imprisonment up to five years.

Columbia, S. C., was a major exception to the pattern elsewhere. Gordon R. Carey, an executive of the Congress of Racial Equality, said members of that organization and other Negroes were using previously white facilities in two bus terminals in the South Carolina capital without interference.

Mr. Carey, who was reached by telephone at the group's New York headquarters, said small teams were "testing" facilities in seven states to determine the extent of compliance. The states are South Carolina, Tennessee, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana.

Five Supervise Test

Five C.O.R.E. field secretaries are supervising the test, he said, which will continue for more than a month.

One of them, B. Elton Cox, left Shreveport this morning by bus for Vicksburg, Miss., according to Mr. Curey. He reported that the police in Shreveport had not permitted him to enter the white waiting room of the Trailways terminal.

The Trailways station manager there, H. B. Walmsley, refused to follow the advice of local officials, who had told him to ignore the I.C.C. order. He removed the racial signs from terminal waiting rooms.

He turned himself in to the Caddo Parish (county) sheriff's office after having been warned that h would be arrested if he did not obey state segregation laws. He was released on $250 bond.

"We are going to enforce the law here," Sheriff J. Howell Flournoy was quoted as having commented. "We don't care anything about the I.C.C. It's not a law-making body."

Mr. Cox was on the bus that was boarded by the police at Tallulah. A newsman confirmed his account of the incident in a telephone call to Chief James Rogan.

"We segregated them," the police official said of the bus passengers.

Another field secretary of the Congress of Racial Equality, Thomas Gaither, reported that the Greyhound bus terminal at Winnsboro, S. C., had removed signs designating it as such and replaced them with a cafe sign. It continued to sell bus tickets, he said.

Officials of two Mississippi cities, Winona and Grenada, indicated yesterday that terminals there would be permitted to comply with the I.C.C. order. However, seats were later removed from the Winona terminal and the Grenada City Board met and voted in a new segregation ordinance today.

U. S. Studies Reports

WASHINGTON, Nov. 1 — Justice Department officials studied reports from the South all day and prepared new enforcement measures.

The officials said the had had some encouraging news from South Carolina, Alabama and Florida. They agreed that things were different in Mississippi and Louisiana.

At the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Justice Department, officials left no doubt that they would take all possible legal action against any persistent ignoring of the new I. C. C. regulations.

Mississippi Statute Is Said To Be In Conflict With Federal Measure

By KENNETH TOLER

From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., Oct. 31. — The Justice Department filed a Federal Court suit in Oxford late Tuesday in an effort to prevent enforcement of state segregation laws which conflict with new Federal regulations barring racial discrimination in bus travel.

Federal Judge Claude Clayton took under consideration a Department of Justice petition for a temporary injunction against enforcement of the state segregation statute.

It was carried over from a later hearing before a three-judge panel.

Injunction Denied

Judge Clayton denied a temporary injunction against enforcement of the state separate facilities laws or interfering with enforcement of the ICC order.

In Jackson, Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson advised city officials that Mississippi's segregation laws for separate racial facilities are "still on the books" and said it is up to them as to what actions are taken Wednesday.

The Oxford filing sought, without notice, applied specifically to Circuit Judge Arthur Clark's order preventing the bus terminal at Greenwood from taking down the segregation signs. It named the district attorney, county attorney and attorney general, and all other similar officials in the state.

Relative to inquires from city officials, Atty. Gen. Patterson said he told them, "Our laws calling for separate facilities, breach of the peace and the right of any business to refuse service to anyone are still on the state statute books."

Law Is Defined

The reference to refusal to serve anyone was applicable to cafes and restaurants operated in connection with bus terminals throughout the state.

Atty. Gen. Patterson said under the law if a person is denied service and refuses to leave the premises, he may be prosecuted for trespass.

A group of interstate passengers were reported planning to test the ICC desegregation order in Jackson early Wednesday morning. Jackson officials said they plan to continue the segregated operation of the terminal and will arrest those refusing to "move on" on breach of the peace charges.

U. S. Names Mississippi In Bus Suit

By James E. Clayton

Staff Reporter

The Justice Department said yesterday that the State of Mississippi is enforcing a state segregation law in an effort to block compliance by interstate bus lines with a Federal order requiring that they use desegregated terminals.

In a suit filed in Greenville, Miss., the Department cited a State court order issued last Friday. That order requires the Greyhound Corp. to maintain segregated waiting rooms in Greenwood, Miss., as long as the rooms are used by intrastate passengers.

The State's action is based on a Mississippi law requiring segregation in instra state bus terminials. The Justice Department says this law is unconstitutional and in direct conflict with the Interstate Commerce Commission order which goes into effect today. That order requires interstate bus lines to stop using segregated terminals.

Bus Company Dilemma

Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy said that the bus line is trying to obey the Federal law but will be prosecuted under the State statute if it does.

He asked Federal Judge Claude Clayton in Oxford, Miss., to temporarily restrain Mississippi officials from enforcing the law, but Judge Clayton denied his request last night.

Kennedy said the effect of the State action is to give the bus line the choice of either violating Federal laws or abandoning the use of the bus terminals for its interstate passengers.

Mississippi Plans

In Mississippi, State Attorney General Joe Patterson was quoted by United Press International as saying that the State will enforce the segregation law. When he was told that at least two cities are prepared to desegregate their terminals, he said he was "surprisd."

Officials in Winona and Grounds, small towns in northern Mississippi, both told UPI that they will not enforce the State laws.

Mayor M. C. Billingsley of Winona was quoted as saying, "We're going along with what Trailways thinks is the best for us. I don't like it, but it looks like it is the best of two evils."

Billingsley said that Mayor Allen Thompson of Jackson, who plans to enforce the segregation law, had advised him that desegregation "wouldn't work."

By W. F. MINOR
(Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

JACKSON, Miss. — Mississippi's first day under an interstate commerce commission order to bus and rail carriers to take down racial signs ended Wednesday with three arrests and no reported violence.

Segregation signs came down in bus terminals in a number of major cities, but that apparently didn't change the traditional pattern of racial separation.

TURNED BACK

The arrests came in Jackson, where tests of the ICC order were made by two Louisiana Negroes arriving by bus and one local Negro educator who sought to buy a bus ticket on the white side of the bus terminal.

At Vicksburg, two other young Negroes alighted from a bus and sought to use the white waiting room, but were turned back by police. They were not arrested when they moved on.

The new ICC public notice declaring non-discrimination of facilities was posted in most of the larger towns, including Jackson, Vicksburg, Gulfport, Hattiesburg and Laurel.

The color signs on the doors of the bus terminals here which formerly desgnated waiting rooms had been erased or painted over by the companies.

But the city continued to keep its own segregation signs, designating waiting rooms by color, on the sidewalk outside the two bus terminals and the Illinois Central station.

At the Trailways bus terminal, the restaurant in the white waiting room had been closed, but the lunch counter in the Negro waiting room remained open. The lunch counter in the white waiting room at the Greyhound terminal was open. The Illinois Central station has no eating facility.

GAVE CONSENT

Mayor Allen Thompson said he gave his consent to the bus and railroad officials to remove any color signs which they had in their facilities, and he also agreed to move city segregation signs on the public sidewalk.

":We didn't want to embarrass the bus and train people," Thompson declared.

A Jackson police ofifcer stationed at the Trailways terminal arrested Leveret Taylor, 20, and Glenda Jackson, 22, both Negroes, from Shreveport, when they entered th white waiting room and did not obey his order to move on.

They were charged under the breach of the peace statute which the city has used against more than 300 "freedom riders" who have descended on the city since last May 24.

An hour earlier another Jackson officer arersted Dr. C. A. Jones, dean of Campbell college for Negroes here, when he came into the white waiting room and sought to buy a ticket.

FOUR IN ATLANTA

At Atlanta police arrested four Negroes who tried to use interstate bus facilities Wednesday.

State officials in Georgia launched federal court action seeking to have the ICC rulings set aside. They contended the orders violate the rights of states to regulate intrastate commerce since bus stations are used by both intrastate and interstate passengers.

The four arrested in Atlanta were charged with trespassing on private property and placed under bond of $100 each. They had asked to be served in a resttaurant that adjoins the bus terminal and is used by white bus passengers.

In Montgomery, Ala., US Dist. Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. issued an order prohibiting authorities from enforcing racial barriers on buses and at terminals. His order came on complaints filed by six Negro "freedom riders" whose appearance in Montgomery last May touched off a race riot.

In Grenada, Miss. officials adopted an ordinance requiring segregation in all public facilities in a move designed to guard against any integration to conform with the ICC order.

The action came after reports the local terminal would have only one waiting room, although reports indicated it would be used only by Negroes and Whites would wait in an adjoining cafe.

The city board said it "wanted the erroneous picture erased."

Present plans call for no waiting room — only a ticket window. The cafe for whites only will continue in operation.

Jackson Arrests Follow ICC Desegregation Order

By The Associated Press

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 1.—The city police arrested three Negroes Wednesday as they challenged bus terminal segregation in the wake of an Interstate Commerce Commission ruling ordering terminals to desegregate.

Rev. Charles A. Jones of Jackson, dean of Campbell College, entered the Trailways Bus Terminal's white waiting room about dawn, refused a police order to move and was arrested or breach of peace charges.

An hour later, two members of the Congress on Racial Equality from Shreveport, La., arrived at the terminal by bus and went into the white waiting room. They were Levert Taylor, 20, a C.O.R.E. official, and Glenda Jackson.

When Policeman W. L. Copeland told them to move, Taylor replied:

"Your order is in violation of the ICC ruling."

The policeman repeated his order and Taylor repeated his reply and the officer arrested both of the Negroes.

All three gained their release before noon on $500 appearance bonds. Their trial in City Court was scheduled for Friday.

Dean Jones is an official of the Jackson chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

New Grenada Ordinance Requires Segregation

GRENADA, Miss., Nov. 1.—(AP)—Grenada adopted an ordinance Wednesday requiring segregation in all public facilities in a move designed to guard against any integration to conform with an Interstate Commerce Commission order to desegregate bus terminals.

The action came after reports the local terminal would have only one waiting room, although reports indicated it would be used only by Negroes and whites would wait in an adjoining cafe.

The City Board said it "wanted the erroneous picture erased."

Present plans call for no waiting room—only a ticket window. The cafe for whites only will continue in operation.

Grenada had planned to integrate the terminal waiting rooms. But authorities revealed Wednesday morning they had reversed the decisions and that segregation would be maintained.

Manager Is Arrested For Removing Signs

SHREVEPORT, La., Nov. 1.—(UPI)—Shreveport and Caddo Parish officials defied the Federal Government Wednesday and arrested the Trailways terminal manager for taking down segregation signs here.

A major test of a new Federal desegregation order seemed in the making throughout the state as the Congress on Racial Equality announced it would attempt to integrate terminals trroughout the state Wednesday and Thursday.

Terminal manager H. B. Walmsley surrendered himself to the sheriff's office after officials warned he would be arrested if he followed the new Interstate Commerce Commission ruling to desegregate the terminal.

Walmsley was reelased on $250 bond shortly after he was arrested. The arrest was based on his removal of terminal segregation signs required by state law.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Nov. 1.—(AP)—A Federal judge ordered a halt to bus and terminal segregation in Central Alabama Wednesday and prohibited city and state officials from trying to keep the races apart.

The order of United States District Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. barred authorities from "arresting, threatening, intimidating or harassing" integrated bus travelers in the Middle District of Alabama, embracing 23 counties.

LITTLE ROCK, Nov. 1. — (UPI)—A Federal ban against segregation in interstate buses and terminals went into effect quietly here Wednesday.

Bus terminals in Little Rock reported that the signs the Interstate Commerce Commission has ordered to be displayed in the stations have gone on the wall without incident.

Negro Fined $100 In Bus Incident

Negro insurance salesman Charles G. Patterson was fined $100 yesterday on charges arising from sitting on the front seat of a city bus here last Friday.

Patterson did not contest the breach of the peace charge in municipal court yesterday.

Acting Judge W. H. Fontaine fined him $100 and added a 30 day suspended jail sentence after the Negro's attorney agreed the case will not be appealed to a higher court.

Patterson was arrested after he took a seat alongside a white man on a city bus in downtown Jackson Friday. His arrest came while the NAACP was defending four Negro college students on similar charges.

Patterson's "sit in" was apparently not sanctioned by the Negro organization. Jack Young, attorney for 13 students arrested in two integration tries in the last month, represented Patterson and agreed to the fine with the stipulation that no appeal would be filed.

Patterson had remained in jail since Friday until court was held yesterday. He posted $100 and left when sentence was passed.

Attorneys appealed $100 fines and 30 day suspended jail sentences levied against nine Tougaloo students accused of "reading in" at the main branch of the Municipal Library here March 27 and similar convictions of four students arrested when they took front seats on a city bus last Wednesday. Both cases will apparently be used as legal tests of two of several segregation laws passed by the 1960 Legislature.

Front-Riding Negroes End Trip In Jail

JACKSON, Miss., April 19 (AP)—Four Negro college students tried today to break through Mississippi segregation by taking the front seats on a city bus. City policemen jailed them.

Officers declined comment and declined to identify the students or give the charges against them.

Medgar Evers of Jackson, field secretary for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said three of the students were from Jackson State College and the fourth was from Campbell College here.

Evers said the group refused to move to the back of the bus when asked by the driver and the call to police followed.

Evers said the three students from Jackson State were George Ann Washington and Doris Bracey, both co-eds, and Walter Jones. He said he did not know their hometowns and did not know the name of the Campbell college man who joined them in their attempt.

Evers said the four were members of the intercollegiate organization of the NAACP and the effort to ride in the front of the bus, where seats are reserved for whites, was their own idea.

4 Arrested In Jackson Bus Incident

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Four Negro college students tried Wednesday to ride in white-only seats on a city bus; city police arrested them on breach of peace charges.

Officers identified the four as George Anne Washington, 20, of Jackson; Doris Ruth Bracey, 19, of Raymond; and Walter H. Jones, 18, of Forest, students at Jackson State College; and Johnny Barbour Jr., 21, Greenwood, a student at Campbell College here.

The two men and two coeds boarded a city bus on Capitol Street in the main part of downtown Jackson. They said later they planned to ride to the Municipal Park Zoo.

Before the bus left, police were summoned and an officer boarded the bus and told everyone to "move on." Some of the white passengers responded but the four Negro students did not move. They were arrested without incident.

Police said they were charged with breach of peace under a 1960 legislative act aimed at preserving segregation. The four will be tried at 4 p.m. Friday under a law carrying a maximum penalty of a $500 fine and six months in jail.

Students Charged With Peace Breach in Jackson, Miss.

JACKSON, Miss. — (ANP) — Four Negro college students last week were arrested on breach of peace charges for their unsuccessful attempt to ride in "white-only" seats on a city bus. This is the second demonstration on the part of Negro students here to end color bars in recent weeks.

Jackson police identified the four as George Anne Washington, 20 of Jackson, Doris Ruth Bracy, 19, of Raymond, and Walter H. Jones, 18, of Forest, students at Jackson State college; and Johnny Barbur Jr., 21, of Greenwood, a student at Campbell college here.

Chief of detectives M. B. Pierce said the students were released on $500 bond each. Bonds were posted by Dr. W. E. Miller and Cornelius Turner, both Negroes.

The two men and two coeds boarded a city bus on Capitol St in the main part of downtown Jackson. They said later they planned to ride to the Municipal Park Zoo.

Before the bus left, police were summoned; and an officer boarded the bus and told everyone to "move on." Some white passengers responded, but the four Negro students did not move. They were arrested without incident.

Mississippi Jails 4 on Bus Seating

JACKSON, Miss., (AP) — Four Negro college students tried unsuccessfully Wednesday to break through Mississippi segregation laws by taking the front seats on a city bus. City policemen arrested and jailed them.

Police declined comment and declined to identify the students or give the charges against them.

Medgar Evers of Jackson, field secretary for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said three of the students are from Jackson (state) College and the fourth from Campbell College here.

Evers said they refused to move to the back of the bus when asked by the driver and the call to police followed.

He said the three students from Jackson State are George Ann Washington, Doris Bracey, and Walter Jones. He said he did not know their hometowns and did not know the name of the Campbell College man who joined them in their attempt.

Evers said the four were members of the intercollegiate organization of the NAACP and the effort to ride in the front of the bus, where seats are reserved for whites, was their own idea. But, he said, "we're behind them 100 per cent."

4 Convicted In Try To Crack Miss. Bus Bias

JACKSON, Miss.--Ci James L. Spencer last convicted four college on breach of the peace for attempting to crack gated seating arrangen Jackson's public buse fined the four $100 e gave them 30-day su jail sentences - the i punishment imposed c Tougaloo College stude cently for sitting in at t municipal library.

Convicted Friday wei rge Anne Washington, Jackson; Doris Ruth I 19, of Raymond, and Wa Jones, 18, Forest, Mi students in Jackson Sta lege; and Johnny Barbo Greenwood, Miss., of bell College here.

There were no demonstrations in or outside the city court building during the trial.

Police officers, remembering the head-beating of Negroes during a demonstration two weeks earlier, patrolled the area and patrol cars carrying officers and the same trained dogs which were unleashed on Negro spectators two weeks earlier, cruised the area.

While the trial was in progress, however, police booked another Negro, Charles Patterson, Jr., for trying to take a seat in the white section of the bus.

Patterson reportedly boarded the bus on Capitol Street, the city's main thoroughfare, not far from where the four were arrested for taking "white-only" seats April 19.

The state's only witness in the trial, Policeman J. D. Hart Jr., testified he ask e four students twice to move before they were placed under arrest.

Hart said if the situation on the bus had been permitted to continue, "it would have caused a disturbance." He said there was no actual disturbance on the bus.

The policeman said about six other persons on the bus besides the defendants appeared "nervous and upset." He said the people told him they were nervous, but he could not testify to their feelings.

Significantly, Hart never once mentioned that the four defendants were Negroes. This, obviously was in keeping with the report that officers involved in such cases have been previously instructed to say nothing which could be construed as a "segregation" fight.

Hart testified the defendants were seated at the front of the bus across the aisle from the driver. He did not mention that the "Negro" section is at the rear of the bus.

Defense Atty. Jack H. Young asked Judge Spencer to dismiss the charges against the students because the city "failed to prove its case and any cause of action" by the defendants. The motion was over-ruled.

The four were tried under one of a series of laws passed by the 1960 Legislature to strengthen the state's segregation system. The maximum penalty under the law is $1,500 fine and six months in jail.

The NAACP, meanwhile, held a mass meeting in the Masonic Temple here last week to protest the students' arrest and also to move its "Operation Mississippi" into high gear.

Medgar Evers, NAACP field secretary for Mississippi, called for the employment of Negroes by all Mississippi firms holding government contracts, in keeping with President Kennedy's order; and by the city police force, the internal revenue bureau and the Veterans Administration hospital.

Dr. Aaron Henry, state NAACP president, wired Gov. Ross Barnett and Mayor Allen Thompson protesting the students' arrest and urging that they be "fully protected" while in custody of Jackson law officials.

Three Negroes deliberately risking arrest to test effectiveness of an Interstate Commerce Commission order prohibiting racially separate facilities in state transportation terminals were promptly taken into custody by police here this morning.

Shortly after 6:30 o'clock, the Rev. Charles A. Jones, 29-year old dean of religion at Campbell College, was arrested for failure to obey an officer when he entered the Trailways Bus terminal. He was charged with a breach of the peace and booked at the police station.

Less than an hour later, Glenda Jackson, Negro woman from Shreveport, and Janet Taylor, also Shreveport Negro, were arrested when they entered the waiting room and proceeded to the ticket counter.

Officer W. L. Copeland approached the man and advised him he would have to "move on," and Taylor answered "isn't your order in defiance of the ICC ruling."

Officer Copeland asked if he understood the order, and when the man reiterated his statement, the policeman placed him under arrest. The woman did not make statement.

Both were booked at the police station on charges of breach of the peace.

The arrests were made in the large waiting room heretofore designated as the white waiting room, where a fairly large crowd of travelers were seated.

Police Capt. J. L. Ray, who has been in charge of repulsing the Freedom Rider desegregation movement aimed at Jackson during the summer, was present at the station but did not take part in the arrest.

He said earlier that the assigned patrolmen would handle all such breach of peace cases, unless there was too great a move.

While all race identifying signs on entrance doors and restroom facilities have been removed at the station, police signs directing white and Negro passengers are placed conspicuously on the side-regulation which went into effect today is posted inside the waiting room door, near the ticket office.

Yesterday, U.S. Dist. Judge Claude Clayton refused to grant a U.S. Justice Department request for an immediate order to stop Mississippi from enforcing segregation law.

The two Shreveport Negroes were obviously members of the Congress for Racial Equality as their arrival here was publicized some hours in advance.

Wed. 11-1-61

Rev. Jones, who is also a minister in the African Methodist Episcopal Church, said he believed his arrest would touch off another influx of riders to challenge the race mixing resistance.

Mayor Allen Thompson said yesterday there would be no change either in the "status or action" of Jackson handling of the race-testing missions.

He said wherever there was a breach of the peace, those involved would be arrested, just as in the past.

Those arrested today were not involved in the summer Freedom Rider activities here.

EX-JACKSON 'RIDER' TRIES TO MIX DEPOT

CORINTH, Miss. (UPI)—Police said today they held a Negro briefly Tuesday for sitting in the white waiting room of the Corinth train station. It was the first "freedom rider" incident reported in Mississippi outside Jackson.

Police said Leslie Word, 28, was questioned and released with no charges filed. "But he will be charged if he tries it again," said an officer.

Word gave police a Corinth address but told a newsman he was from Chicago. He told officers he had been making "freedom rides" for four months.

THREE MAJOR SOUTHERN RAILROADS HAVE AGREED TO END RACIAL SEGREGATION IN ALL THEIR TERMINAL FACILITIES OCTOBER

ILLINOIS CENTRAL - THE SOUTHERN- AND THE LOUISVILLE AND NASHVILLE ( L&N)

L&N, Southern Agree To Integrate Terminals

By TOM WICKER

(Copyright 1961 by the New York Times Co.)

WASHINGTON—Three major Southern railroads have agreed to end racial segregation in all their terminal facilities.

The three are the Illinois Central, the Southern, and the Louisville and Nashville. (Southern and L&N serve Atlanta).

The announcement of their action was made Monday by the Rev. Martin Luther King as he left an hour-long meeting with President John F. Kennedy at the White House. He had met earlier with Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy.

"I would imagine that these are the three largest carriers serving the South," King added. "I would commend the railroads for this very forthright step."

The Atlanta integration leader said he had been informed by Justice department officials that the railroads had acted "effective immediately."

Later, Robert Kennedy issued a statement confirming King's announcement and giving the railroads "great credit" for their action.

It meant, Kennedy said, that "we have made great progress and are continuing to do so" in ending racial segregation in interstate transportation.

"We can now count progress in each of the major transportation areas," he said. He cited an Interstate Commerce Commission order for the desegregation of bus terminals, the voluntary desegregation of two airports, and federal suits to end segregation at two others.

Those voluntarily desegregated are at Raleigh-Durham, N.C., and Columbus, Ga. Those where suits are pending are at New Orleans and Montgomery, Ala.

Administration sources said representatives of the railroads had met four times with Justice department officials since early September. The officials were seeking desegregation of terminal facilities under authority of the Interstate Commerce Act of 1888.

Last week, the railroad representatives told the justice officials that instructions had been sent for immediate removal of segregation signs, and for the discontinuing of segregation practices.

(In Atlanta, an official of the Union Station said all facilities at that station—including the restaurant, waiting rooms and rest rooms—have been desegregated for some 90 days or so.

(At the Terminal Station, a spokesman said desegregation also has been in effect there for some time for inter-state railroad passengers.)

King said his purpose in going to the White House had been to propose that Kennedy issue "a second emancipation proclamation" to end all forms of segregation.

Their conversation, he added, ranged widely over the problems of segregation, which he said persisted "as a clearing reality in the south and in subtle and hidden forms all over the nation."

In addition to the proclamation he requested, King said he had urged Kennedy to issue an executive order banning segregation in public or federally-assisted housing, and to call for an investigation by the Civil Rights Commission of limitations on the signs to vote in Mississippi.

King pointed out that the original Emancipation Proclamation, issued by President Abraham Lincoln in 1863, had been in the form of an executive order. Its effect was to free the slaves in the states that were then under the control of the Confederacy.

Now, he said, "almost 100 years later," Kennedy should issue another executive order "declaring all segregated facilities illegal and unconstitutional on the basis of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution."

Greyhound Quietly Ends Segregation In Columbia, S. C.

The Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa.
Sat. 2-11-61

COLUMBIA, S. C.—The Greyhound Corporation's terminal at Columbia has quietly dropped segregation at the lunch counter, it was learned Monday.

An employe, who asked his name be with-held said the integration has been in effect "for nearly three weeks, on orders from higherups."

He explained that the counter service at the station is operated under contract by private parties but that these had been urged to discard segregation practices, and "It's really worked well."

The terminal, actually, had never practiced racial segregation. It disposed of this matter in the simplest terms: It had no facilities at all of Negro passengers, unlike the case at terminals at Florence, Greenwood, and a few others.

NEGRO PASSENGERS reaching the Columbia terminal had to go outside of the station to the rear door of the kitchen and, if and when cooks decided, place and receive orders which they ate standing in a driveway, or on the street.

Under pressure for several years, the terminal last year was a target of student sit-iners.

Five youths were jailed when they sat at the lunch counter, all having first purchased tickets for short-run trips. However, the station's management had a change of heart and the cases were withdrawn before the cases reached Recorder Court the following morning.

DURING 1960, the Trailways Coach Co. moved out of the Columbia terminal, into a station of their own at Washington and Sumter Sts. There are no segregated facilities such as rest rooms, waiting rooms or the lunch counter in the new Trailway depot, which is believed to have influenced the quiet reform at the Greyhound terminal.

Waiting rooms at the Greyhound terminal remain segregated, however. Or, are they?

Unconfirmed, but reliable, reports are that the bus terminal itself will not oppose use of the large and beautiful waiting room now used exclusively by whites, should Negro passengers prefer it. "I understand that they (bus company) don't care who uses any facilitiy, but they aren't going to announce this," The Courier was told.

FALL OF the race and color bar at Greyhound just about wiped out the last vestige of racial discrimination in public transportation for Columbia.

City buses were integrated under a Federal court case brought by Sarah Mae Flemming in 1954.

City taxicabs which, a decade ago, were governed by ordinances alluding to race and color, have long since been hauling fares without deference to race and color. Both the Union and Seaboard Railway Stations are integrated, although voluntary segregation is often observed at these.

The Columbia Airport has never engaged in segregation, so far as could be determined immediately.

Judge Orders Waiting Rooms Desegregated

The Post + Courier
Charleston, S.C.
Sat. 2-11-61

GREENVILLE (AP) — Waiting rooms at Greenville's muncipal airport have been ordered desegregated in an injunction filed in U. S. Western District court.

But U. S. District Judge George Bell Timmerman, who issued the injunction on instructions from the Fourth District Court of appeals, took exception to the appellate court ruling.

The injunction orders that the defendants, the Greenville airport commission, "pending the final disposition of the case," be restrained "from making distinction based upon color in regard to services at the Greenville Municipal Airport."

The injunction was signed by Judge Timmerman on Friday, shortly after a hearing on the matter had been conducted in his chambers in Columbia. It was filed Saturday in the office of U. S. Western District Clerk of Court Miller C. Foster Jr.

It climaxes two preliminary hearings which have been held on the complaint of Richard B. Henry, a Detroit Negro, against the commission for maintaining separate waiting rooms at the airport.

Twice Judge Timmerman denied the injunction and twice he was reversed by the appeals court. The later reversal included orders to issue the injunction.

The case has still to be heard on it merits.

Bus Company Indicted For Integrating Seats

MEMPHIS (AP) — The Shelby County grand jury this week indicted the Memphis Transit Company — which sold out to the city two days ago — for not enforcing a state law for segregated seating.

The 286-bus system was taken over by the city for $2,333,546 last Sunday. No change was made in the MTC policy of letting customers choose their own seats.

Airport suit sent back to Tenn. courts

MEMPHIS — A three-judge Federal Court panel ruled last week that the suit of a Memphis banker to desegregate eating facilities at the municipal airport must be tried in the state courts.

The decision was made by District Judges Marion S. Boyd of Memphis and William E. Miller of Nashville and Appeals Court Judge John D. Martin of Cincinnati.

They ruled that Jesse Turner, an officer of the Tri-States savings Bank of Memphis, must test a state law in public accommodations before a ruling is made by the Federal Court in his suit against the Dobbs House Restaurant.

Federal Court action on the suit was stayed pending a declaratory judgment suit "to be brought in the courts of Tennessee" to clarify the 1875 state law.

Houston Chambers Jointly Endorse Bus Franchise

The Houston Chamber of Commerce and the Houston Negro Chamber of Commerce have jointly endorsed the bus franchise negotiated by the Mayor and City Council with Rapid Transit Lines, Inc, it was recently announced by P. H. Robinson and A. E. Warner, Presidents of the two Chambers.

The Chambers recognize that an improved public transit system is one of Houston's greatest needs. The proposed franchise will assure for Houston adequate and satisfactory facilities in this regard. It contains a guaranty that new air conditioned transit vehicles will be substituted for the present bus fleet. More favorable standards for extending lines into new areas are included, thus insuring widespread availability of service. The schedule of fares incorporated in the franchise compares favorably with those prevailing in other cities.

Bernard E. Calkins, who heads Rapid Transit Lines, Inc, is a bus operator of proven ability. He has revitalized transit operations in two other major municipalities.

The Houston Chambers of Commerce join with Mayor Cutrer and the City Council in believing that the best interest of Houston and its citizens dictate that all groups give their wholehearted cooperation and support to this project so that our transit problem can be solved effectively and promptly.

Denies HCCO To Withdraw Petition On Bus Franchise

HOUSTON — "Somebody is feeling around and no conclusion has been made," George T. Nelson, prominent civic leader and barber said Wednesday of reports that the Harris County Council of Organizations would withdraw its petition campaign to force an election on the new bus franchise.

Mr Nelson, a spokesman for HCCO, said the group had not taken any actior on the matter. He pointed out that their president, M. L. Ward, was buried Sunday.

Mr Nelson, an easy, but clever person to interview, did indicate that the group, which comprises most Harris County Negro civic clubs, was in direct contact with Bernard Calkins, the Wichita, Kansas bus operator, who is seeking to take over local bus lines.

The organization's intterest in conferring with Mr Calkins is beamed at the hiring of Negro bus drivers.

Mr Calkins has indicated that his eyes are also focused on purchasing bus lines that service predominately Negro surburban areas. These lines employ Negro drivers. City buses have no Negro drivers.

However, speculation is high that Negro patronage is the largest source of revenue of busses operated in the city.

Negro Mayor's Aide Refused Hotel Service

The Pittsburgh Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa.
Sat. 5-13-61

NORFOLK, Va. (ANP)—The vice mayor of Toledo, the city's second ranking officer, was refused a hotel room reserved for him here last week because he is a Negro.

He is James B. Simmons who was sent here to represent the Ohio city at the International Municipal Workshop on Parking.

Hotel reservations had been made for Simmons by the City of Toledo which also sent along a check for $25 as a guarantee.

SIMMONS SAID that when he arrived at the Monticello Hotel the clerk on the registration desk informed him that his reservation made by Toledo officials, had been cancelled.

He asked to see the manager, Jack Armory, who apologized and stated that Virginia law does not permit the hotel to offer lodging to both white and colored guests.

Simmons said he was told the hotel would lose its license if it housed whites and Negroes at the same time.

THE MONTICELLO had sent reservations by mail to Simmons for a room with twin beds and extended a welcome to him and his wife as guests of the hotel and the city of Norfolk. He acknowledged the reservations, but informed the hotel that his wife would not attend the workshop.

Mr. Simmons, stopped at the home of his former Lincoln University (Pa.) classmates, William Mercer and Dr. Edward A. Archer, said he was aware of conditions in the South and did not wish to create an incident.

"However, I felt that as a representative of my city, I should seek the same services that were made available to delegates from other cities," he said.

"I came here to deal with parking problems, and I intend to do my job with dignity," he continued.

Virginia Cafeteria Forced Negroes to Eat in Separate Area

Washington, D.C.

Four Negro Selective Service registrants, traveling on a Government-chartered bus and bearing a ticket entitling them to a meal at Government expense were required to eat in a segregated dining area when the bus stopped at the Natural Bridge (Va.) Cafeteria, one of the four reported yesterday.

He said the incident occurred Oct. 3 when a Greyhound Lines bus, under charter to the Federal Government, was returning a group of Shenandoah Valley residents home following their pre-induction draft physicals in Roanoke.

James Nickens, 23, of Strasburg, Va., identified the other three Negroes as James Shefflett, of Harrisonburg, Va., and James Quigley and Joseph Grayson, both of Strasburg. Nickens gave this account of the incident:

The four were part of a group of 27 prospective draftees from Shenandoah and Rockingham counties who were brought to the Roanoke induction center on the morning of Oct. 3. They boarded the bus to take them home about 6 p. m.

At 7 p. m., the bus stopped at the cafeteria, one of a complex of lodging and tourist services located near the Natural Bridge, a few miles from Lexington, Va. The cafeteria and other services are owned by a private firm, Natural Bridge of Virginia, Inc.

While they were waiting to be seated in the dining room, the bus driver told the four Negroes that the management had informed him they would have to eat in a separate area segregated from the dining room.

Nickens said they then were escorted to a small room that was identified as "the colored help's dining room." He said they were seated and told that the bus driver had a ticket entitling them to order anything on the menu provided the cost did not exceed $1.50.

The four were served by a Negro kitchen boy, Nickens said, and after eating, boarded the bus to return home. He emphasized that everyone at the restaurant was courteous and none of the Negroes protested the segregated-seating arrangement.
